Apprehended at Fabens

On Thursday, Feb. 28, J. D. Ellis and wife, who were employed by Drew Pruitt, in a Garage at Picacho, took French Leave and incidently took with them a quantity of tools, a gun and other articles too numerous to mention. Mr. Pruitt notified Sheriff Kelsey and upon an alarm being sent out, the fugitives were picked up at Fabens, Tex., by members of the Border Patrol. Ellis and wife, were brought back to Carrizozo and placed in the "County Bastille" to await the action of the District Court. No charge being made against Mrs. Ellis, she was released.

Jesse Atkinson Sustains Badly Burned Hand

Last Saturday morning, at his garage in Corona, Jess Atkinson prepared to start a fire in his shop stove and in order to get a quick fire, threw in a can of gasoline, not thinking to see that there was no live coals in the bottom of the stove. As he dashed the gasoline in the stove, there was an explosion which burned the skin from his right hand from the wrist to the fingertips. Fortunately for Jess, Ed English had his Chrysler car in the garage, ready to come to Carrizozo and he put the suffering man in and made haste for here, where the hand was treated by Dr. Johnson. While the burn is a bad one, Dr. Johnson said there was no danger of it becoming stiff when it heals. Mrs. Atkinson was at Hot Springs at the time of the accident and on receipt of the bad news, she made the run in her Chevrolet a distance of 154 miles, in four hours.

Community Hall Meeting

At a meeting called for last Tuesday evening at the Community Hall, for the purpose of financing the indebtedness and other matters pertinent to the conduct of the building, an interested crowd of twenty-five took these matters up and a committee of nine, with Mr. T. E. Kelley as chairman have charge of this feature.

Mr. Kelsey, who has had active charge of the building, since the project was started about one year ago, resigned from what ever position he may have held, and pending a general reorganization, no further dates will be reserved for use of the hall.

Reservations already made, which include Friday 25, date of meeting of maintenance of way men of the S. P.; Saturday, 26, dance and basketball; March 19, dance by B. R. T.; a date in March for the N. M. M. I. band and a date to be selected by the Chamber of Commerce, will be carried out.

The affairs of this hall are in excellent shape. It is only a question whether the community wishes to practice constructive co-operation or destructive criticism.

At an early date, after report of Mr. Kelley's committee, another meeting of those who donated will be called, at which time, final action will be taken. For the information of a Good Citizen—? who is saying that there is no way of knowing how the money has been spent, we will say that Mr. Brickley, acting treasurer, uses the same excellent bookkeeping that he uses in his bank and we are glad to say that every 5 cents of receipts as well as expenditures, is itemized and filed with bill attached. A detailed financial report will be submitted at next general meeting.

Morgan—Tully

Last Saturday evening between the hours of 8 and 9, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. French, Murray Morgan of Alamogordo and Miss Geraldine Tully of Glencoe, were united in marriage with the Rev. Ira Young of the Episcopal Church performing the ceremony. The attendants were: Gerald Tully, brother of the bride and members of the J. B. French family.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Tully of Glencoe and the groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Morgan of the Alamogordo News, in which office the groom is one of the staff with his father, and brother, Ralph.

The former Miss Tully was a teacher in the school at Alamogordo, where she has made many friends, who are now offering fondest congratulations to the newlyweds. The new Mrs. Morgan also has many friends over Lincoln County, who will join with those of her home town and Alamogordo in extending best wishes. As Murray is a printer, this office extends the professional hand of good will and may every blessing attend the future undertakings of the new Morgans.

Body of C. C. Hunter Shipped to Hurdland, Mo.

The body of C. C. Hunter, who was found dead about two weeks ago near Red Lake, was shipped to Hurdland, Mo., last Wednesday on advice of relatives from that point. This ends an affair that means little to the world at large, but is, doubtless, a tragedy to friends and relatives in the old home at Missouri.

Gambel or Valley Quail Released in this Valley

Albuquerque, N. M., Feb. 19—J. Stokes Liggett, game expert for the New Mexico Game Commission, was here Saturday and Sunday, with an assistant. They had a large number of Gambel (valley) quail to be released on the west and the east side of the Sacramento mountains. He was rendered every assistance here by Lou Leadinghaus, president of the Otero County Game Protective Association, and Messrs. Arthur. Salton, Strickland, of the Lincoln Forest, and others.

The valley quail is distinct from our mountain, or blue quail here, and are inclined to keep close to settlements and water courses. They are quite hardy and prolific, although the game expert did not advance the idea that they were hardier than the native quail here.

About 20 pair were released at various places this side of the mountains, as follows: Horse camp (Grapvine Canyon, in valley) 8 pair; Highrolls, (Bell Ranch) 6 pairs; La Luz canyon (6 miles east of La Luz) 6 pairs; McKinley ranch adjoining Alamogordo, 3 pairs; Alamo springs, 6 pairs; Tularosa canyon about eight miles east of Tularosa, 6 pairs.

Lemon, a saxophone duet by Don Lemmon and Max Shaver, with Miss Alene Thompson at the piano, a recitation by Master Fred English in which he was forced by applause to respond to an encore, a piano solo by Miss Thompson who also responded to an encore, three addresses, the first by Rev. Ludlow on community interest, the second by Miss Sundt, on the Sheppard-Towner work, third by County Commissioner Chas. F. Grey, on road matters of interest to the county.

The meeting was well attended when other gatherings over town kept many away. Every number on the program was deservedly applauded and in consideration of his age, 6 years, and the manner in which he delivered his recitations, two in number, Master English was the idol of the evening. A keen, lively interest was expressed and more meetings of this nature are being arranged for the future.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrews of Roswell called on friends at the Fort Sunday and presented a beautiful wrought-iron lamp to the O. T. Department.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams and Mr. Page of Tinnie were here just Monday.

W. Wunsch attended the Grand Masonic Lodge at Las Cruces.

Mrs. O. I. Nesbit entertained the following guests at a Washington Bridge Party: Dr. and Mrs. Tappan, Dr. and Mrs. Reed, Mr. and Mrs. Kincheloe, Mr. and Mrs. Howson, Mrs. Gensler and Mr. Shannon.

The Trowel club gave the following—Washington's birthday entertainment to the patients:

In ward II (eleven) at 6:30, McNeill and his orchestra gave several song numbers. The operetta, "The Pirates" was given in parts. The leading chorus gave several numbers. Refreshments consisted of Red, White and Blue ice cream and home made cake. At 7:30 in the Amusement Hall, the musical show, "The Pirates" was very well presented. This consisted of a large chorus, beautiful costumes and plenty of action. The operetta was directed by Miss Helen Rice and Mrs. Burleson of Lincoln exclusively for the Trowel club. The beautiful Hawaiian screen was arranged and presented by the Fine Arts Club through Mrs. Gensler and Mrs. Berry. Miss Shulda of Carrizozo accompanied McNeill's orchestra during the evening, and all present report a nice time. Thanks are extended to all who gave time to make the program possible for the Trowel club.

Mr. and Mrs. Kincheloe were over to Carrizozo Tuesday.

Young May in Trouble

Walter May, a young son of Albert May, decided last Sunday night that "walking was all taken up" and so appropriated an Overland Sedan belonging to Prof. Helm and left for "points hence." He was stopped at Capitan by Deputy Sheriff Billy Savier and brought back to Carrizozo. The car was considerably damaged by having been run without any water.

Young May was implicated in two similar cases last year and was sentenced to serve a term in the State Reformatory at Springer until he was 21 years of age, but the sentence was suspended during good behavior. This last escapade automatically enforces the suspended sentence. He will be taken to the school at an early date by the Sheriff.

Woman's Club Notes

The regular meeting of the Carrizozo Woman's Club was held at the Wetmore Hall Friday, Feb. 17. The regular business was attended to and several bills pending in the legislature were discussed and a few were indorsed and the Secretary instructed to write our Senator and Representatives asking their support in securing the passage of these bills.

Mrs. M. I. Hunt had charge of the program which consisted of patriotic music and papers. It was unusual in that the Americanization of the foreigner with in our gates was stressed and an idea was given as to our preparation for the reception of those from other lands.

After the conclusion of the program dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mesdames Allen, Wetmore, Spencer and French.

The next regular meeting of the Club will be held at the home of Mrs. T. E. Kelley, with Mrs. Blaney, assistants as hostesses. Mrs. L. J. Adams will have charge of the program. All members are expected, and visitors are always welcome.

Gives Quart of Blood To Save Lady's Life

B. F. Brumfield, a red blooded Southern Pacific Train Dispatcher, gave a quart of his blood to save the life of Mrs. C. D. Mast, wife of C. D. Mast, a Southern Pacific Conductor.

Mr. Brumfield is employed on the New Mexico, while Mr. Mast is on the Rio Grande Division. All concerned live in El Paso.

This blood transfusion took place in Hotel Dieu at El Paso Saturday afternoon, February 12, and Dr. E. A. Duncan, the attending physician, states that at the present time Mrs. Mast is doing as well as could be expected.

With morale of this kind amongst men, it is no wonder the Southern Pacific is such a great transportation machine.

When spoken to after this remarkable affair, Mr. Brumfield laughed at the idea of it being considered that he did anything extraordinary, saying that a number of times he had lost more blood than this in cutting himself with a safety razor.

Patriotic Program

The Second and Third grades gave the following patriotic program in the second grade room Tuesday afternoon:

- Concert Recitation, "Our Flag," Second Grade; Song, "There are Many Flags in Many Lands;" Recitation, "George Washington, the Boy," Earl Stadman; Recitation, "Who Knows?" Ruth Barnett; "Flag Exercise," Eliza Hobbie, Dixie Harmon, Vevia Ellen McClane, Agnes Degner, Ruth Barnett, Ramona Guiles; Song, "Little Hatchet," Second Grade Boys; Recitation, "If He Had Known," Wilma Lorene Snow; "Patriotic Characters," Johnnie May, Margie Bell, Bradley Smith, Mary Nell Loughrey, Loyd Leslie, Yvonne Brown; Play—"George Washington and the Cherry Tree"—Mr. Washington, Rex McClane; George Washington, George Strauss; Gardner, W. F. Clark; Song, "Star Spangled Banner;" Play, "Our Sewing Class One Day in February," Third Grade; Song, "America."

The Sheppard-Towner Work

National recognition of the need for the health protection of motherhood and infancy became a reality in November, 1921, with the enactment of the Sheppard-Towner Act, known as an act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

The Legislative history of this measure which is so noteworthy for its brevity and is so well known to the reading public that it needs no comment.

When the bill was finally passed, a time limit of five years was placed and the same, which began to function on July 1, 1922 and would have terminated on the 30th of June, 1927 had not an amendment been passed in January, 1927 to continue the work and the appropriation another two years. Starting with the year 1922 the authorized annual expenditure has been $5,000 unmatched to each state and, matched dollar for dollar, an additional $5,000 plus a pro-rated amount of the remaining $710,000 of the additional $1,000,000 after a maximum of $50,000 has been deducted for Federal administration.

In our state this Sheppard-Towner program is at present being carried out by a personal; Chief of the Divisions of Child Hygiene and Public Health Nursing; Two Sheppard-Towner Field Nurses; Seven county nurses doing part-time and Sheppard-Towner work; Chief of the Division of Vital Statistics; Volunteer workers, as Doctors, Nurses, Teachers, County Official and other laymen. Last year we also had a Midwife Instructor, loaned us by the Children's Bureau.

In Lincoln county the program I plan to carry out is as follows: Organize and conduct health conferences and Little Mothers Classes, give instruction in prenatal, infant and child care, in home and at conferences; give demonstrations in infant and child care; prepare and give exhibits in prenatal, infant and child care; give health lectures to clubs, special groups, and to parents; secure better birth and death registration, instruct sub-registrars to report any contagious diseases in the community; make out and report names of women practicing as midwives; organize local committees to carry on child health activities.

It is apparent that the protection of maternity and infancy is not the function of one isolated group, but is dependent on the obstetrician, the pediatrician, the general practitioner, the public health nurse, and the social worker in co-operation with the public health authorities. In addition, it is dependent on the co-operation of an enlightened public. All who are interested I invite to help me put on a working health program.

She shook her head. "It isn't that," she sobbed at last.

"Then what is it?"

"I've brought you here. And—I—I think it was a horrible thing to do. I—I can't forgive myself."

Laurie groped vaguely amidst sensations of relief and the mental confusion with which, somehow, she always filled him.

"You're—all right, aren't you? And you expected me, didn't you?"

"Yes, but—Oh, don't make me talk! Let me cry."

She was crying as she spoke, racking, and every sob tore his heart. Again, as so often before, he felt dazed and helpless before the puzzle she presented. Yet, as always, there seemed nothing to do but obey her, since she, and not he, invariably held the key to the strange situations in which she placed him. Her tears made him feel desperate, yet he dared not continue to hold her hands, and he did not know what to say. Rising, but keeping his position beside her, he waited for her to grow calmer, and as he waited he subconsciously took in the room.

It was a big front chamber, furnished as a sitting-room. Its broad windows, with their cushioned window-seats, faced east. Besides the window, it had two exits, the door by which he had entered, and another door, half open, apparently leading into a bedroom. Its comfortable easy-chairs were covered with gay cloths, its curtains were of the same material, its reading-table held books and newspapers, and in its big open fireplace fat logs were blazing. Shaw "did" his prisoners well. Laurie remembered the cigarettes, matches and blankets so thoughtfully provided for himself. Like Shaw's own room, the chamber breathed simple comfort. It was impossible to take in the thought of anything sinister in connection with it until one observed the gagged woman in the corner, and remembered the locked door.

"Well, princess," he said at last, still trying to speak lightly, "this isn't much of a donjon tower, is it?"

Her sobs, hysterical and due to overwrought nerves, had given place to occasional sharp catches of the breath, like those uttered by a little child whose "crying spell" is almost over. She did not speak, but put out her hand to him, and he took it and held it closely, conscious of a deep thrill as the small palm touched his.

"I want to talk to you," he said gently, "but I'd feel a lot more comfortable if our chaperon were a little more remote. Can we put her into this inner room?"

Doris nodded, and he waved the woman across the threshold of the bedroom. She would be safe there. He had observed that the windows of the inner room were still barred and shuttered. Seemingly, in all the big house, this upstairs sitting-room alone had opened its heart to the sun.

"Are you really alone in the house?" he asked.

"Yes; I think so; I'm almost sure of it."

"Then there's no mad rush about leaving?"

"No—I—I think not."

He observed her hesitation but ignored it. He drew two big chairs close to the open fire, and, leading Doris to sleep last night, and that he expected to get some today."

Laurie rose.

"I'll take a look around and see where he is," he suggested. "We can't have him catching on to my little visit and telephoning to Shaw, you know."

As he spoke he was walking toward the door that led into the hall, and now he confidently put out his hand and turned the knob. His expression changed. He gave the knob a violent twist, then, setting his shoulder against the jamb, tried to wrench the door open. It did not yield. Doris watching him wide-eyed, was the first to speak.

"Locked?" she whispered.

"Locked," corroborated Laurie. He nodded thoughtfully. Several things, small in themselves, which had puzzled him, were clearing up. Among others, the housekeeper's persistent efforts to gain time were now explained. Shaw had not been so careless as he had seemed. The meek blond secretary with the pursing eyes and the chloroforming habit was certainly in the house.

CHAPTER XIII

Laurie Checks a Revelation

Laurie shook his head.

"That was rather stupid of him," he remarked, mildly. "It's almost as easy to force open a locked door from the inside as from the outside."

"I know," Doris was again breathless. "But in the meantime he's telephoning to Shaw."

"I don't think so," Laurie, his hands in his pockets, was making a characteristic turn around the room. "What has he to gain by telephoning? Shaw's coming back anyway in a few hours; and in the meantime the secretary has got me safely rocketed, or thinks he has. I have an idea he'll stand pat. You see, he doesn't know about my talent for opening locked doors."

He strolled back to the door as he spoke and examined the lock. Then, appreciatively, he drew from his pocket the screw-driver he had thoughtfully brought from the garage.

"I fancied this might be useful. It will take me just about four minutes to open that door," he announced. "So get on your things and be ready to start in a hurry."

"Do you imagine that we can get away now, in broad daylight?" She seemed dazed by the suggestion.

"Why not? You want to get out of here, don't you?"

"Yes—I—of course I do!"

"You don't seem very sure of it."

Laurie was smiling down at her with his hands still in his pockets, but there was an expression keen, cold, almost but not quite suspicious.

"Yes, but—you don't understand. Shaw has other men on watch, two of them."

"Where?"

"In the grounds. One in the front and the other in the back."

The newcomer mentally digested this unwelcome information.

"If we wait till it's dark," said the girl, "we'll have a better chance."

"Unless Shaw gets back in the meantime." He was still watching her with that new look in his eyes. Then, briskly, he returned to his interest in the doorlock.

"In any case," he casually remarked, "we don't want to be jalled here."

She said no more, but sat watching him as he worked, deftly and stealthily. In little more than the time he had predicted he opened the door and held it wide.

"Any time you would like to pass out," he invited, then checked himself and vanished in the dimness of the hall. The girl left behind heard the sounds of running feet, of a sharp scuffle, of a few words spoken in a high, excited voice. Then Laurie re-entered the room, pushing the secretary before him. At present the youth looked anything but meek. His blond hair was on end, his tie was under one ear, his pale eyes were bright with anger, and he moved spasmodically, prepped by jerks from behind.

"I don't like this young man," said Laurie, conversationally. "I never have. So I'm going to put him where for a few hours he can't annoy us. Is there a good roomy closet on this floor? If there is, kindly lead us to it."

"Say, hold on!" cried the blond youth, in outraged tones. "I'm sick of this."

"Shut up," Laurie shook him gently. "And cheer up. You're going to have a change. Lead on, please."

Thus urged, and further impelled, the secretary obediently led the way to a closet at the far end of the upper hall. It was fairly commodious, and full of garments hanging on pegs and smelling oppressively of camphor. It afforded an electric-light fixture, and Laurie, switching on the light, emphasized this advantage to the reluctant new occupant, who wisely put up a brief and losing fight on its threshold.

"You may read if you like," Laurie affably suggested, when this had been suppressed. "I'll bring you some magazines. You may even smoke. Mr. Shaw and I always treat our prisoners with the utmost courtesy. You don't smoke? Excellent! Safer for the closet, and a fine stand for a worthy young man to take. Now, I'll get the magazines for you."

He did so, and the blond secretary accepted them with a black scowl.

"I'm afraid," observed Laurie regretfully, "he has an ungrateful nature."

He locked the door on the infuriated youth, pocketed the key, and faced Doris, who had followed the brief procession. The little encounter had restored his poise.

"What next?" he asked, placidly.

Her reply was in the nature of a shock.

"I'd like to have you wash up."

He raised his eyebrows.

"And spoil my admirable disguise? However, if you insist, I suppose I can get most of the effect again with ashes, if I have to. Where's a bathroom?"

She indicated a door, and returned to her room. He made his ablutions slowly and very thoughtfully. There were elements in this new twist of the situation which did not tally with any of his former hypotheses. Doris, too, was doing some thinking on her own account. When he returned to the sitting-room she wore the air of one who has pondered deeply and has come to a conclusion.

"What do your friends call you?" she abruptly asked.

"All kinds of things," admitted the young man. "I wouldn't dare to repeat some of them." Under the thoughtful regard of her red-brown eyes his manner changed. "My sister calls me Laurie," he added soberly.

"By all means, if you'll promise not to be a sister to me."

"Then—Laurie—"

"I like that," he interrupted. "So do I, Laurie—I—I'm going to tell you something."

"Yes," he said.

"Please smoke." Again she was playing for time. "And—and don't look at me," she added, almost harshly. "I—I think I can get it out better if you don't."

His answer was to swing his chair around beside her, facing the blazing logs, and to take out his case and light a cigarette.

"I'm going to tell you everything," she said in a low tone.

"I'm glad of that."

"I know," she muttered, almost inaudibly. "It's all—horrible. It's infinitely worse than you suspect. And that's why I'm going to tell you the truth, big as the cost may be to me."

"Wait a minute," he interrupted. "Let's get this straight. You're telling me, aren't you, that any revelation you make now will react on you. Is that it?"

"Yes."

"You will be the chief sufferer by it?"

"Yes."

"Will it help you any to have me understand? Will it straighten out the trouble you're in?"

She considered her answer.

"The only help it will give me will be to know that you do understand."

She wiped her eyes and looked into his, more serious in that moment than she had ever seen them.

"I will stop," she promised, with a little catch in her voice. "But please don't think I'm a hysterical fool. I'm not crying because I'm frightened, but because—because—Laurie, you're so splendid!"

"I told you you'd find all sorts of unexpected virtues in me," he lightly announced; and it was the familiar Laurie who smiled down at her. "There are dozens more you don't dream of. I'll reveal them to you guardedly. They're rather overwhelming."

She smiled vaguely at his chatter, but it was plain that she was following her own thoughts.

"The most wonderful thing about you," she said, "is that through this whole experience you've never, for one single instant, been 'heroic.' You're not the kind to 'smoke!'"

"Great Scott!" gasped Laurie, startled. "I should hope not!"

He could look at her now, and he did, his heart filled with the satisfying beauty of her. She was still leaning forward a little in the low chair, with her hands unconventionally clasped around one knee, and her eyes staring into the fire. A painter, he reflected, would go mad over the picture she made; and why not? He himself was going mad over it, was even a little light-headed.

She wore again the gown she had worn the first day he saw her, and the memory of that poignant hour intensified the emotion of this one. Taking her in, from the superb masses of hair on her small head to the glittering beaded on her low-hung shoes, Laurie knew at last that whatever she was, and whatever the girl might be, she was the one whose composition, through life his hungry heart demanded. He loved her. He would trust her, blindly if he must, but whatever happened fully and for all time.

she said at last; "to know that—that—you're not suspecting things about me."

"And it will make things hard for you, otherwise, to have me know?" he persisted.

"Yes." This time her answer was prompt. "It will end everything I am trying to do, and destroy what I have already done."

Laurie threw his half-burned cigarette into the fire, as if to lend greater emphasis to his next words.

"That settles it," he announced. "I won't listen to you."

She turned to look at him.

"But you must," she faltered. "I'm all ready to tell you. I've been working myself up to it ever since you came."

"I know. I've watched the process, and I won't have another word." He lit a second cigarette, drew in a mouthful of smoke, and sent it forth again in a series of widening rings. "Your conversation is extremely uninteresting," he explained; "and look at the setting we've got for something romantic and worth while. This cozy room, this roaring fire—I interrupted myself to glance through the nearest window—a rippling old snow-storm outside, that's getting worse every minute, and the exhilarating sense that though we're prisoners, we've already taken two perfectly good prisoners of our own; what more could one ask to make an afternoon in the country really pleasant?"

He stopped, for she was crying again, and the sight, which had taxed his strength an hour earlier, overtaxed it now. She overwhelmed him like a breaker. Her face, and going close to her, knelt beside her chair.

"Doris," he begged, brokenly. "Don't, don't cry! I can't tell you how it makes me feel. I—I can stand anything but that." He seized her hands and tried to pull them away from her face. "Look at me," he urged. "I've got all sorts of things to say to you, but I won't say them now. This isn't the time or the place. But one thing, at least, I want you to know. I do trust you. I trust you absolutely. And whatever happens, whatever all this incredible tangle may mean, I shall always trust you."

She wiped her eyes and looked into his, more serious in that moment than she had ever seen them.

"I will stop," she promised, with a little catch in her voice. "But please don't think I'm a hysterical fool. I'm not crying because I'm frightened, but because—because—Laurie, you're so splendid!"

"I told you you'd find all sorts of unexpected virtues in me," he lightly announced; and it was the familiar Laurie who smiled down at her. "There are dozens more you don't dream of. I'll reveal them to you guardedly. They're rather overwhelming."

she said at last; "to know that—that—you're not suspecting things about me."

"And it will make things hard for you, otherwise, to have me know?" he persisted.

"Yes." This time her answer was prompt. "It will end everything I am trying to do, and destroy what I have already done."

Laurie threw his half-burned cigarette into the fire, as if to lend greater emphasis to his next words.

"That settles it," he announced. "I won't listen to you."

She turned to look at him.

"But you must," she faltered. "I'm all ready to tell you. I've been working myself up to it ever since you came."

"I know. I've watched the process, and I won't have another word." He lit a second cigarette, drew in a mouthful of smoke, and sent it forth again in a series of widening rings. "Your conversation is extremely uninteresting," he explained; "and look at the setting we've got for something romantic and worth while. This cozy room, this roaring fire—I interrupted myself to glance through the nearest window—a rippling old snow-storm outside, that's getting worse every minute, and the exhilarating sense that though we're prisoners, we've already taken two perfectly good prisoners of our own; what more could one ask to make an afternoon in the country really pleasant?"

He stopped, for she was crying again, and the sight, which had taxed his strength an hour earlier, overtaxed it now. She overwhelmed him like a breaker. Her face, and going close to her, knelt beside her chair.

"Doris," he begged, brokenly. "Don't, don't cry! I can't tell you how it makes me feel. I—I can stand anything but that." He seized her hands and tried to pull them away from her face. "Look at me," he urged. "I've got all sorts of things to say to you, but I won't say them now. This isn't the time or the place. But one thing, at least, I want you to know. I do trust you. I trust you absolutely. And whatever happens, whatever all this incredible tangle may mean, I shall always trust you."

She wiped her eyes and looked into his, more serious in that moment than she had ever seen them.

"I will stop," she promised, with a little catch in her voice. "But please don't think I'm a hysterical fool. I'm not crying because I'm frightened, but because—because—Laurie, you're so splendid!"

"I told you you'd find all sorts of unexpected virtues in me," he lightly announced; and it was the familiar Laurie who smiled down at her. "There are dozens more you don't dream of. I'll reveal them to you guardedly. They're rather overwhelming."

She smiled vaguely at his chatter, but it was plain that she was following her own thoughts.

"The most wonderful thing about you," she said, "is that through this whole experience you've never, for one single instant, been 'heroic.' You're not the kind to 'smoke!'"

"Great Scott!" gasped Laurie, startled. "I should hope not!"

He could look at her now, and he did, his heart filled with the satisfying beauty of her. She was still leaning forward a little in the low chair, with her hands unconventionally clasped around one knee, and her eyes staring into the fire. A painter, he reflected, would go mad over the picture she made; and why not? He himself was going mad over it, was even a little light-headed.

She wore again the gown she had worn the first day he saw her, and the memory of that poignant hour intensified the emotion of this one. Taking her in, from the superb masses of hair on her small head to the glittering beaded on her low-hung shoes, Laurie knew at last that whatever she was, and whatever the girl might be, she was the one whose composition, through life his hungry heart demanded. He loved her. He would trust her, blindly if he must, but whatever happened fully and for all time.

Boston Had the First Fire Engine in America

The first fire engine introduced into America was received at Boston from England about 247 years ago.

It was a strong cylinder of oak placed on wheels, furnished with pumps, air chambers and a section pipe of strong leather. In case the section could not be used the water was supplied by the container by buckets passed from hand to hand.

It required three men to work the pump and direct the nozzle. Few improvements were made in the methods of fighting fire until the middle of the last century, when steam fire engines were introduced, the first successful one being used in Cincinnati in 1808, and in a few years most of the larger cities had one or more of these.

It was about this time that the present department system of fire fighting was introduced. But there need be no doubt that the Boston small boys of 1670 took an inch of light in running after the engine at once the modern successor—only at course, he did not have to run so fast—nor so far.

Cincinnati seems to have led in the organization of paid departments, as in 1838 that city had 100 firemen on its payroll, who each received a salary of $60 per month.

The Agile Pianist

In playing Chopin's Etude in E Minor the pianist had to interpret 2,800 musical signs in two and one-half minutes. That means that his eye has to catch correctly and his brain to comprehend clearly more than 1,800 signs a minute, and his fingers have to execute accurately more than 2,800 movements a minute. Since it requires at least a touch of a second to recognize a letter of print, the musician must have marvellously quick mentality and senses to perceive and understand his more complicated typographical characters and to translate them into manual motion of rock & rats.—Collier's Magazine.

TAFFETA POPULAR FOR SPRING; WASHABLE DRESSES FOR TOTS

LOTS of taffeta, says the style fore-caster. For the young girl plaid taffetas for daytime wear, with "delicious" tones and hints for evening wear are foreseen. For every age and complexion, from flapper to younger, the mode prescribes black taffetas, also blue in every conceivable degree from navy, which is outstanding in this season's style program, to palest tints. Flowered taffetas, too, "they say," are coming in.

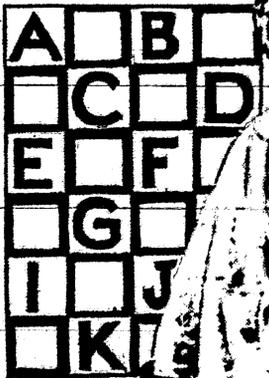

latter to be worn with coats of solid-colored taffeta. According to the arithmetic of the mode, either for adults or wee tots, a plain white or solid-colored wash-goods fabric added to fancy printed or otherwise figured dimity, linen, voile, percale or gingham equals the latest style combination. parable to the well-known Kelly; monkeykin, which is a delicate pink; mother goose, an ivory tint, and astringe, a lovely light blue—and so the list continues from one adorable tone to another. Taffeta lends itself delightfully to the compose theme, which is, perhaps, the mode's greatest hobby at present. Just now it is the proper thing to combine plaid taffeta with solid-colored crepe. A glance at the picture will leave no doubt in the mind as to the tremendous vogue awaiting a compose such as this. In this model the blouse is navy crepe, the skirt taffeta plaided and plaited to perfection. The plaid ties at the wrist are just too cunning for words. As to the handsome necktie, it's the sort youth adores. And the pockets! Have you noticed that they are of a conical shape and that they

Little girls' gingham and English prints are being collared, cuffed and pocketed with white pique or linen while their flowered volles, swisses and organies have sheer white embellishments of every whimsical sort. That is how it happens that the cunning little blue-checked percale dress in the picture has pockets of white pique with matching collar and wrist bands. With the aid of a wee bit of hand embroidery the pockets are made to resemble little baskets with handles. It is just such clever touches as these novel basket-pockets which distinguish the new spring and summer frocks for tots. A wash-goods material exciting keen interest this season is printed

Leading States in Cooperation

Increase Seen in Every Section of Country With Few Exceptions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) Although agricultural co-operative marketing in the United States from 1915 to 1925 increased considerably more in some parts of the country than in others, ten states that were well in the lead at the beginning of the period held approximately the same positions at its close. These states were Minnesota, Iowa, California, Wisconsin, Illinois, North Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, New York and Michigan.

Increase in Associations.

In the ten-year period the ten states had an average of 63 per cent of the number of active associations in the country. Their association membership averaged 49 per cent of the national total. About 70 per cent of the co-operative business done by farmers in the decade was done by associations in these states. This appears the more remarkable in view of the great increase that took place from 1915 to 1925 in co-operative activity in the South. Eight South Central states, where comparatively little co-operative marketing was done in 1915, increased their association membership more than 700 per cent in the ten-year period.

In the ten years ending with 1925 agricultural co-operation increased in every section of the country except in a few remote corners, says the United States Department of Agriculture, which has assembled the foregoing information. In nine groups of states co-operative association membership more than doubled, the greatest gain being recorded in the South Central states and the least in the Pacific Coast states. Approximately 31 per cent of the country's co-operative membership at the close of 1925 was in the West North Central states, 21 per cent was in the East North Central states, 11 per cent in the East South Central states, and 10 per cent in the South Atlantic states.

Business Increased.

Volume of business, as measured in dollars, increased even more than membership. Business handled co-operatively for farmers in 1925 in the West South Central states, the East South Central states and the New England states, was more than 1,000 per cent greater than in 1915. For the East North Central states, the recorded business gain was 520 per cent, and for the Rocky mountain states 240 per cent.

Grain marketing associations were the most important commodity group in 1915 and still held that rank in 1925, although their relative dominance was less. Their volume of business increased 153 per cent in ten years. Associations marketing dairy products handled 500 per cent more business at the end of the ten years than at the beginning. There was an increase for the ten-year period of more than 1,000 per cent in the number of active live stock shipping associations.

Although there were fewer cotton and fewer tobacco co-operative associations in 1925 than in 1915, the membership and business of these organizations increased enormously. Each of the two groups had a gain in membership of more than 1,500 per cent. Business handled by cotton co-operatives increased 9,557 per cent in the ten-year period, and that of tobacco marketing associations increased nearly 1,800 per cent.

United States Leading Road-Building Nation

Highway engineers in foreign nations are eager and conscientious students of the current engineering literature that is published in the United States. It was stated by Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads.

According to Mr. MacDonald, foreign engineers generally regard what is published in this country as final authority. This is probably due to some extent, he says, to the fact that the United States, as the leading road-building nation in the world, does extensive research work into highway engineering problems.

Lamb Is Easily Killed

A young lamb is very easily killed. Exposure to cold, especially cold rains, is nearly sure to prove fatal. Another frequent cause of loss is the failure of the lamb to get milk. The lamb may be too weak to stand and suck; there may be wool on the udder or belly that prevents sucking; or sometimes the mother does not want to own her lamb. All of these difficulties may be easily overcome if someone gives just a little more attention to the flock.

Ducks Easy to Raise

Ducks are not more difficult to raise than chickens. Expensive buildings and equipment are unnecessary. They do just as well in the cheaply constructed, low buildings, the main feature being that they have a comfortable place in which to stay during cold and stormy weather. Plenty of dry litter should be provided. No roosts are required and no nests. The eggs are dropped anywhere on the litter, and generally just before dry-light.

Proper Hitch Will Save Tractor Power

Much of Trouble Is Due to Incorrect Attachment.

Many farmers experience serious difficulty when they begin the operation of tractor plow outfits. Perhaps 75 per cent of this trouble may be laid to incorrect hitching of the plow to the tractor. If the plow does not run straight, level, and cut at uniform depths and widths, an entire season's plowing may be ruined and the machinery itself quickly worn out.

The plow should be adjusted to have proper "suction," and "land." The weight due to cutting, lifting and pulverizing the soil must be equally distributed on all the wheels in order that undue wear will not come on any part, and to give the wheel which operates the power lift sufficient traction to cause positive action in removing the plow bottoms from the ground. The hitch should be made so that the center line of the pull of the tractor coincides with the center line of draft of the plow. The center line of draft of a 14-inch plow comes about 2 inches from the land side of the bottom. On a 2-bottom plow it comes about 19 inches from the edge of the furrow wall. If the plow cannot be hitched so that these lines coincide, the plow should be favored. This means that the hitch should be made half-way between the two lines or else nearer to the center line of draft of the plow than to the center line of pull of the tractor.

A high hitch is bad because it tends to lift the plow out of the ground and take the weight off the wheels. This slows up the lift and thereby causes poor plowing. A hitch which is too low causes the plow to run "on its nose," and creates unnecessary wear on the share, increasing draft and doing poor work. Proper hitching considerably reduces the power necessary for plowing.

Time to Plan for Next Winter's Egg Supply

Culling the flock, early hatching and proper feeding and care will put pullets in the best condition for laying in October, November and December, months of rising prices for eggs, says Cora Cooke, poultry specialist with the agricultural extension division of the University of Minnesota. In December, 1921, she says, eggs were worth 40 to 60 cents a dozen. In January they had dropped to 25 and 30 cents, with the feed cost about the same.

Urging immediate planning for next year's egg production, Miss Cooke advocates hatching of all heavy breeds by April 15 and light breeds by May 15. Culling through the fall and winter will help to raise the stock average and lower the feed bill. "The person who secures eggs in October, November and December makes the profit," she says.

Protection for Bees in Winter Very Important

On many farms where a few stands of bees are kept to furnish a home supply of honey, considerable losses are experienced during the winter months on account of failure to understand the habits of this insect. When going by a hive of bees in the winter time we often note the incessant humming and buzzing of the bees. The colder it is the faster they hum. They do this in order to keep up the temperature sufficiently to keep them alive. The harder they have to work the more likely they are to exhaust their vitality and be unable to gather honey the following summer. Wind-breaks around the hives, together with other protection in the way of making the hive close and free from all drafts, will pay back returns.

Recommend That Mash Be Handy at All Times

In addition to the scratch grain and the green feed, it is recommended that a mash be kept before the birds at all times. The following ones are economical and effective: (1) 200 pounds of ground oats, 100 pounds of ground corn and 60 pounds of a pack-meal and bone; (2) 100 pounds of ground corn, 100 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds bran, 100 pounds of middlings and 80 pounds of the meat and bone feed; (3) 100 pounds of ground corn, 200 pounds of ground oats, 100 pounds of middlings, 100 pounds of gluten feed and 100 pounds of the meat and bone product.

Farm Hints

Substantial and convenient farm buildings save feed and labor.

Egg white is a good remedy for slight burns or scalds. It excludes the air and gives instant relief.

The four horsemen of better farming are soil building, balanced cropping, quality production and orderly marketing.

Working with the head indoors in bad weather will make working with the hands outdoors in good weather more profitable.

A hydraulic ram will operate if the water delivered to it has a fall of 25 feet three feet and flows at a rate of 10 to six gallons a minute.

CORN CHOWDER HANDY FOR WINTER DAYS

Preparing a Dish of Corn Chowder.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) A hot dish made with milk and substantial enough for lunch or supper is corn chowder. The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following ingredients and suggests that when celery is obtainable a half cup or more of chopped celery is an excellent addition, and a few bits of chopped green pepper.

- 1 pint milk
- 1 pint boiling water
- 2 cupsfuls canned corn
- 2 tablespoonfuls salt pork diced
- 1 onion or more if desired
- 1 quart of potatoes, diced
- Salt, pepper

Cut the pork into small pieces and chop the onion. Boil the diced potatoes in the pint of boiling water for 15 minutes. Fry the salt pork and onion for 2 minutes and add these and the corn to the potatoes. Cook until the potatoes are done. Add the milk, and season to taste with salt and pepper, and bring the mixture to the boiling point. Serve very hot in soup dishes, and place two or three crackers in each dish before pouring in the hot chowder.

APPETIZING WAYS TO COOK RABBITS

Sausage Fat Gives a Particularly Fine Flavor.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Before cooking, a rabbit should be washed carefully in cold water and patted dry with a clean towel, says the United States Department of Agriculture. It may then be stuffed and trussed if it is to be cooked whole, or cut into eight or ten pieces. Young tender rabbits may be simply dredged with flour, salt and pepper and fried in fat, like fried chicken. Sausage fat gives a particularly good flavor to fried rabbit. The flavor of bacon also combines well with rabbit. A cream or brown gravy may be made, using the fat in which the rabbit was fried.

Another excellent way to cook a tender rabbit is to bake it in cream or white sauce. Split the rabbit into two halves along the backbone, dredge with flour, lay six slices of bacon across it, and pour three cupfuls of white sauce or three cupfuls of cream over it. Bake for one and one-half hours, basting frequently. The rabbit liver, boiled till tender and chopped, may be added to the gravy. Smothered rabbit is stuffed, and braised slowly with very little water in a covered pan.

Many dishes may be prepared after stewing rabbit till tender. For a rabbit pie the meat may be cut from the bones in large pieces, the broth thickened and the whole served with either a pastry or biscuit crust. Any broth not used makes excellent soup. For rabbit salad the meat may be mixed with celery in the same proportions as chicken salad—two parts of diced cold cooked meat to one part of chopped celery and one half part of salad dressing. Boiled rabbit may be served as a stew by adding potatoes, carrots, and onions when the meat is partly cooked. The liquid in which the stew is cooked should be thickened.

A spiced rabbit stew appeals to many persons. The seasonings consist of six slices of bacon (chopped), a minced onion, medium size, two teaspoonfuls of salt, one quarter teaspoonful of pepper, and one tablespoonful of whole cloves in a bag, all covered with boiling water and stewed slowly together till the rabbit is tender. A brown sauce is made separately and poured over the rabbit, which is then simmered two hours.

Scalloped Parsnips Are Particularly Delicious

Many persons who have never liked parsnips before have changed their minds when they tasted delicate scalloped parsnips. They may be prepared early in the day and reheated in a baking dish. When you are buying your parsnips, select the heaviest ones, suggests the United States Department of Agriculture. Those of light weight may be pithy. Scrub the parsnips clean, cook them until tender in lightly salted water; 20 to 30 minutes will be enough for medium-sized ones. Drain them and scrape off the outer skin, split them lengthwise, pull out the woody cores, place in a shallow baking dish, and cover them with a white sauce made with butter, flour and milk. Or if preferred the liquid for the sauce may be top milk or cream, and less butter will then be needed. After this sauce is poured over the parsnips, cover the top with bread crumbs which have been mixed with melted butter. Then bake in a moderate oven until the parsnips are thoroughly heated and the buttered crumbs are golden brown.

Oranges and Grapefruit Fit Into Every Course

Oranges and grapefruit, like many other fruits, fit into every course from the first at breakfast to the last at dinner. There are other reasons, too, besides their delicious flavor and juicy texture for eating these citrus fruits early and often. Oranges, especially a rare rich in vitamins and minerals. A glass of orange juice and a graham cracker is an ideal between-meal lunch for a child because it satisfies him and yet whets his appetite for the next-regular meal at the table. Now is the time to indulge the rest of the family, too, in orange juice. This small once can be used to advan-ago for juice. Oranges and grapefruit make delicious salad, especially with a low fat meats and French dressing. Add a few sprigs of cress, too, if you like. Now when these fruits are cheap is also a good time to put up a supply of marmalade. Write to the Bureau of Home Economics for directions for making amber marmalade. You will find it a quick and easy method. The bureau will also tell you how to make delicious candied grapefruit peel, so soft and tender that it almost melts in your mouth.

Salad Dressing to Suit Those Who Dislike Oil

Here's a salad dressing to suit those who do not care for oil. It can be used on any preferred salad, but is particularly good with cabbage, mixed raw vegetables, fruits or other salads where mayonnaise dressing is ordinarily used. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture gives these proportions:

- 1/2 teaspoonful must- 1/2 tablespoonful sugar.
- 1/2 teaspoonful salt. 1 egg.
- 1/2 teaspoonful pap- 1/2 cupful vinegar.
- 1/2 cupful sour cream.

Beat the egg until very light, add the other ingredients, and cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until thickened. Remove from the fire and beat well. If this dressing is cooked properly it will have the consistency of thick mayonnaise and need not be strained.

High Value of Proteins

Both chemical analyses and actual feeding experiments have shown that the protein of the walnut, almond, Brazil nut, coconut and cashew, have high food values. The proteins of the almond, however, were found to be not so satisfactory as those of the other nuts.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

Its All Right Going Up—
But its H—Coming Down

The Tucumcari American reprints from a paper which like many others, fails to give to the exchange where that paper obtained it, the proper professional credit. It is a good one and furnishes food for careful thought. Here it is:

"I shot an arrow into the air, it fell into the distance, I knew not where, till a neighbor said that it killed his calf, and I had to pay him six and a half ($6.50) I bought some poison to slay some rats, and a neighbor swore that it killed his cats; and, rather than argue across the fence, I paid him four dollars and fifty cents ($4.50). One night I was sailing a toy balloon, and hoped it would soar till it reached the moon, but the candle fell out on a farmer's straw, and he said I must settle or go to law. And that is the way with the random shot: it never hits in the proper spot; and the joke you spring that you thought so smart, may leave a wound in some fellow's heart."

How many times we would have gladly recalled the word lightly spoken—the act hastily performed—the dart cast adrift which pierced some poor fellow's heart, all of this and more perhaps, have we done when care and forethought would have avoided it all.

We once knew a jolly crowd of students, whose pranks and tricks caused much embarrassment to their parents, and in many cases, sorrow—where a little forethought would have saved them, and those who were the victims, much discomfort and trouble, for which they had to settle up in due time—with interest. The name of the 'foolish' club or society was "The Skyrockets," and the slogan was "Its all right going up—but its hell coming down." Going up was fine, but coming down was where they had to settle up.

To guard against unjust criticism, the sting of censure, making merry over the misfortunes of others who are less fortunate than we, makes wounds on the heart and leaves scars thereon, which can never be obliterated. Here in the foregoing paragraph, we see the results of things done without forethought and for which we must settle up—and with interest too.

Starbeams

From the Kansas City Star:

One good thing about a search for gangsters in Chicago or Detroit is that one is almost certain of catching all he needs and perhaps enough for another mess tomorrow.

"Until last month," says Dr. D. L. H., "I regarded Texas as our outstanding state, but on travelling through that section found a number of cafeteria-groceries operating under the name of 'Helpy-Selfy' Stores."

Those who are looking for a simple, easy way to reduce, might use the plan of the Iowa woman, who was arrested and jumped her bail so many times that when captured the last time, she had lost 88 pounds.

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen Will Run a Big 'Special' March 19

Two days after St. Patrick's Day which will be March 19, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen will give a big dance at the Community Hall, for the benefit of the fund which is used for the purpose of caring for the sick and disabled of its members.

This organization keeps constantly in touch with those of its number, who have suffered from misfortune and sees that they do not become objects of cruel so-called charity. To add to a fund for this commendable purpose, the entertainment is to be given. The Trainmen enjoy an enviable reputation as royal entertainers and those who attend will have the satisfaction of knowing that besides a 'run' for their 'fars,' they will be lending a helping hand to a worthy cause. An El Paso orchestra will furnish the music, Edwin McCarty and Maxine Hoffman, two former Carrizozo school students being among the number.

The Brotherhood never "backs up," "slows down," or "gets off the track," when it comes to entertaining, but, "With two sharp whistles And down the track, You can always see the smoke Come rolling back."

There was a tradition in ancient times that onions thrived better when stolen from a neighbor's garden and transplanted. This is valuable information as spring approaches.

Corona vs Lincoln at Community Hall tomorrow night. Come!

Oriental Magnificence Motif for New Palace

The great wall of China, undoubtedly the greatest of all human structures and the ornate palaces of the Chinese emperors who prevailed in a civilization that was old long before Columbus discovered America, are architectural inspiration of a new motion picture palace of national distinction that is soon to be completed. It is Grauman's Chinese Theatre and is being built at Hollywood Boulevard and Orchid street, the very center of the film capital of the world. It will have two entrances, one to the forecourt and one to the theatre proper. The forecourt entrance will be through a gate in walls that are forty-five feet high. And the entire forecourt is surrounded by these walls. The lower part of the walls will be lined with tanks built in replica of tropical seas and will be filled with varicolored fishes from the Southern waters. Inside, the theatre will have an aisle which entirely surrounds the seats. It will be separated from the seats by columns of onyx seven feet in diameter and reaching from floor to high ceiling. Chinese rugs, porcelain, tapestries and other ornate objects from the Orient will complete the decorative scheme and it all will be completed with the most recent developments of the theatre. The theatre is designed to give the premier performances and runs to each of the two or three greatest pictures of the year. The showman who is building it distinguished himself in the entire world of entertainment when he showed "The Covered Wagon," he three-quarters of a million persons in Los Angeles, a city of a million. Thousands of the patrons were from all over the United States and the world.

ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"Long Ben," Hero of a Play

NEXT to Captain Kidd, perhaps no other pirate leader ever caught the popular fancy so much as Capt. John Avery, alias Henry Every, alias Captain Bridgeman, variously known as "Long Ben," and the "Arch-Pirate."

A large part of this was due, no doubt, to the fact that he was the hero of Charles Johnson's play called "The Successful Pirate," which was acted at the Theater Royal in Drury Lane.

Avery was born about 1605, the son of a Plymouth innkeeper, and from the beginning he had a turbulent career. As a youth he shipped as a cabin boy and soon proved himself an accomplished young desperado. He first came into prominence as first officer on an armed privateer, The Duke, whose commander, Captain Gibson, the Spaniards had engaged to fight French pirates in the West Indies. Avery led a mutiny on board the ship while it lay at anchor in Cadiz harbor, put the captain ashore and was himself elected captain. Then he renamed the vessel the Charles the Second and set out.

At the Isle of May he seized the Portuguese governor and held him for ransom until a supply of provisions were sent aboard; then he sailed away to the coast of Guinea to engage in the slave trade, capturing two or three English vessels en route. Near the Island of Princes he captured two Danish ships, and then set out for Madagascar, from which base he operated in the Red sea.

At Aden Avery's ship was joined by two English pirate ships and three from America, all bent upon the same quest. An incident which took place a short time before this was typical of Avery's capacity for devilry in general. He had sailed into the harbor of a town named Meut with the intention of selling some of his stolen merchandise to the natives. But they were suspicious of Avery's villainous-looking "traders" and refused to do any business with them. In order to punish them the pirates burnt their town.

Although the pirate ships kept a vigilant watch for the Mocha fleet it managed to elude the freebooters in the night. But Avery was hot in pursuit the next morning and, singling out the biggest vessel, captured it after a two-hour battle. It turned out to be the Gunway, owned by the Great Mogul himself, and one of his daughters was aboard. From this ship the pirates took a vast lot—300,000 pieces of light and the same number of chequins. The Great Mogul was furious at this outrage and indifferent as to whether innocent or guilty should pay for it. He threatened to lay waste to all the East India company's settlements in revenge. Whether or not he made good on his threat is not recorded, but he never made Avery suffer for it.

Glencoe Woman's Club

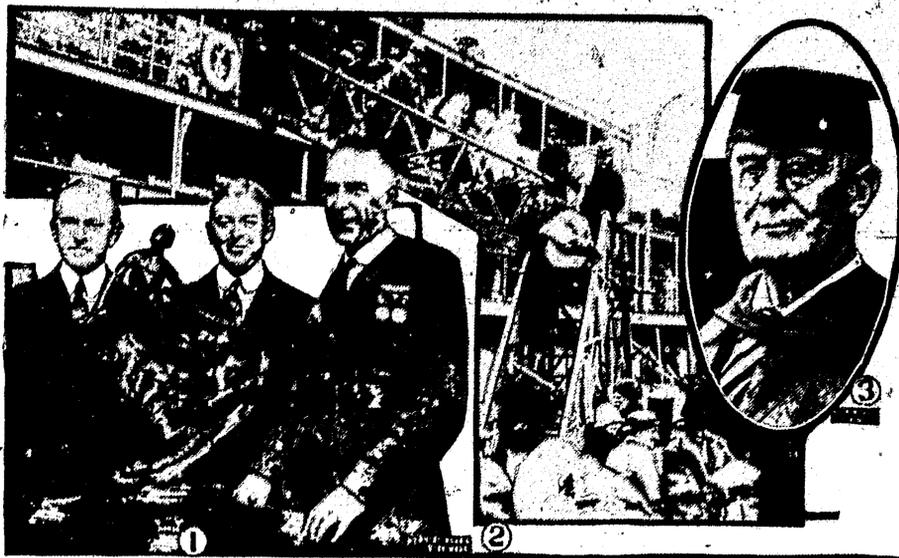

Mrs. D. N. Bonnell was hostess to the Glencoe Woman's Club, on Feb. 19. Mrs. J. V. Tully led the program instead of Miss Eva Rose, who was the regular leader for the day, but was unable to attend. The program was as follows:

"February's Contribution to America"—Subject: "Longfellow as our household Poet and what he has meant to me," Mrs. Geo. Dixon; "The important part Washington has in history," Mrs. D. N. Bonnell; "What I think is the most interesting thing in Washington's life," Mrs. J. R. Werner; "Thomas Edison and what he has meant to the industrial life of America," Mrs. J. V. Tully; "The reason I think we should observe St. Valentine's Day," Mrs. A. E. Roselle.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. J. H. Jackson, when all the ladies will bring sewing to work on. The Glencoe Club is now in the Fourth District instead of Third.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Asks Powers to Agree on Further Cut in Naval Armament.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ON INSTRUCTION from President Coolidge, the American ambassadors at London, Paris, Rome and Tokyo presented last Thursday to the governments of Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan a memorandum suggesting that they "empower their delegates at the forthcoming meeting of the preparatory commission for the disarmament conference at Geneva to negotiate and conclude at an early date an agreement further limiting naval armament, supplementing the Washington treaty on that subject, and covering the classes of vessels not covered by that treaty."

The President in a special message to congress explained the considerations that moved him to take this action, and included the text of the note to the powers. In this he said the American delegates at Geneva would have "full powers to negotiate definitely regarding measures for further naval limitation, and, if they are able to reach an agreement with the representatives of the other signatories of the Washington treaty, to conclude a convention embodying such agreement, in tentative or final form as may be found practicable."

The American government and people, the President said, "are convinced that competitive armament constitutes one of the most dangerous contributing causes of international suspicion and discord, and is calculated eventually to lead to war."

Despite the hope of the United States to complete the work of the Washington treaty and extend limiting treaties to cover cruisers, destroyers and submarines, the message continued, "far-reaching building programs have been laid down by certain powers, and there has appeared in our own country, as well as abroad, a sentiment urging naval construction on the ground that such construction is taking place elsewhere."

PRESIDENTIAL campaign politics and the third term problem came out into the open last week, and probably will stay there for some time to come. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, a wet Republican and for long a potential candidate, started things with an address in New York in the course of which he asserted that in his judgment Calvin Coolidge would refrain from injecting the third term issue into the campaign of 1923 and would not be a candidate to succeed himself. He declared that other Republican leaders throughout the country felt as he did and that Mr. Coolidge's common sense would keep him from seeking a re-nomination. Doctor Butler's speech dealt with issues he believes will have to be met in 1923 and told the Republicans that the party would face the fight of its life and that victory would go to that party which stood squarely on three issues—prohibition, farm relief and foreign policy.

The lid thus being taken off, Beck of Wisconsin, insurgent Republican, introduced a resolution in the house, declaring it to be "the sense" of that body that congress is opposed to a third presidential term. Speaker Nicholas Longworth, who is supposed to have presidential ambitions, in an address before the women's patriotic conference on national defense in Washington, caustically criticized the administration's economy program, especially as it affected the navy.

"The leading argument of those in the house who opposed any appropriation for the cruisers was that another limitation of armament conference might be held in the comparatively near future, and that, under the circumstances, we should proceed with no new actual building program," said Mr. Longworth. "To my mind, that argument refutes itself. I have not the slightest doubt that it was our commanding strength and generous willingness to make great sacrifices that brought about the successful results of the Washington conference. "Today we are in no such position of superiority, but rather in a position of inferiority. We must then take up the question of a new conference on the limitation of armament, not as a nation willing to make great sacrifices in the cause of peace, but as a nation begging others to make sacrifices themselves."

Senator Borah responded to Doctor Butler's challenge concerning prohibition by admitting that was a proper issue in the coming campaign and asserting that the Republican party declare itself unmistakably on that question. He said this would be done by the voters themselves and therefore the issue should be presented in the states and districts prior to the election of delegates so that the delegates might be chosen in accordance with the popular view. This proposal sent shivers down the spines of many Republican leaders.

Henry Ford contributed his bit by visiting the White House and then informing the correspondents that he had told the President that the country generally is "sold as a rock" and that existing prosperity will not only continue but increase. He added that he considered the President "more popular with the people of the United States than ever before," but he refused to discuss the President's chances for re-nomination.

AT THIS writing it appears likely that the McNary-Haugen farm relief measure will be passed by congress and that it will be vetoed by President Coolidge because he still considers it a price-fixing measure and therefore economically unsound. The President was said to favor rather the Curtis-Crisp bill, which contains no equalization fee provision and which Frank O. Lowden condemns for that reason as "wholly missing the point of legislation which we have been advocating." Farm bloc leaders in Washington said if Mr. Coolidge vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill, the corn belt would rally to Lowden for the Presidential nomination.

One emergency agricultural relief bill was passed by congress and signed by the President. It appropriates $10,000,000 to be expended in co-operation with the states in the eradication of the corn borer.

IN ALL likelihood the world court has ceased to be a political issue and the United States is definitely out of that tribunal. Last week the State department received from Great Britain and two other major powers, not named, notification that they were not prepared to accept the American reservations unconditionally. President Coolidge announced in his Kansas City speech that unless all the nations adhering to the court protocol accepted the American reservations without change he would not again submit the matter to the senate and the United States would remain outside the court. It was stated at the White House last week that Mr. Coolidge had not changed his mind in regard to this.

MEMBERS of the senate committee on privileges and elections again failed to agree on a report in the case of Frank L. Smith, senator-designate from Illinois. A majority of the committee seemed to be in favor of recommending the sealing of Smith, but several, including the Democrats, thought that evidence as to the facts in the case should be presented before a report was made to the senate. One may repeat the prediction, made several weeks ago, that the matter will not be settled before the present congress comes to an end on March 4.

PORTUGAL enjoyed one of its periodic revolutionary movements last week. The revolt started with the military in Oporto and spread to Lisbon, the capital. There was fighting in both cities and considerable bloodshed, and before the week ended it was announced that the affair was practically over, the government having suppressed the rebellion. During the fighting in Lisbon the American legation was riddled by bullets and Minister Fred M. Dearing was forced to abandon it. The revolt was directed primarily against General Carmona, the president-dictator.

UNDETERRED by protests from both the Cantonese and the northern Chinese, Great Britain went ahead with her preparations for the defense of the international concession at Shanghai, and the Gloucestershire and Durham regiments, having reached Hongkong, proceeded to Shanghai as did a number of British warships. Dispatches from Hankow, headquarters of the Cantonese, said Eugene Chen, nationalist foreign minister, had resumed conversations with Owen O'Malley, the British charge d'affaires, and that an amicable agreement might result. One reason for this may have been the reported reverses suffered by the Cantonese troops in Chekiang province, which halted their progress toward Shanghai. Marshal Sun Chuanfang, allied with the northerners, was said to have captured Chuchow.

Much of the speech from the throne at the reopening of the British parliament was devoted to the Chinese tangle, and while both the king and Prime Minister Baldwin gave assurance that Great Britain desired a peaceful settlement by negotiation, the latter made it plain the government was determined to protect its nationals in China and would land troops at Shanghai if this was made advisable by local conditions, regardless of any protests.

Secretary of State Kellogg made an effort to solve the problem of Shanghai by proposing that that city be excluded from the zone of warfare between the Chinese factions, but this was not considered favorably by either the nationalists or the northerners, and of foreign nations only Japan gave it approval. Premier Mussolini announced that Italy would support Great Britain's program and sent a warship and marines to the scene of action. The transport Chaumont, carrying 1,200 American marines from San Diego, arrived at Honolulu and proceeded eastward, for either Guam or China. About six hundred American missionaries have taken refuge in Shanghai and more arrive from the interior daily.

THERE was heavy fighting in and about Chinandega between the Nicaraguan government forces and the rebels. The latter occupied the city but were driven out after Lee-Mason and William Brooks, American aviators in the service of President Diaz, had raided and bombed them. The city was practically destroyed by bombardment and flames. A dispatch from Managua said Doctor Sacasa, leader of the liberals, was preparing to accept the government's peace terms or withdraw from the country.

FOR some two months following March 1 President Coolidge and his personal and official household will occupy the Patterson mansion on Dupont Circle, that residence having been selected as the temporary White House while the executive mansion is undergoing repairs. The house is one of the show places of Washington and is now owned by Mrs. Elmer Schlesinger, the daughter of the late Robert W. Patterson, editor of the Chicago Tribune.

YOSHIMITO, the late emperor of Japan, was buried last week with all the prescribed ancient rites, lasting for several days. A million and a half persons gathered in Tokyo to see the funeral procession, and in the crush two were killed and hundreds injured. After the ceremonies in a specially constructed pavilion, the body was taken by rail to Asakawa and placed in the tomb at the foot of a nearby hill.

POULTRY FACTS

WATCH DETAILS TO OBTAIN EGGS

Attention to a few details is often the deciding factor in making profits in the poultry business.

"For instance," continues L. M. Black, New Jersey extension specialist in poultry, "if good results in egg production are to be expected during cold weather, it is quite important that the pullets be confined to the laying houses. Cold wintry blasts and frozen ground are not conducive to high egg yields.

"Allow each bird four square feet of floor space in a well-ventilated house, and furnish a good ration containing plenty of green feed. The birds will respond by filling the egg basket with a high-priced product.

"Another detail is the buying of baby chicks for next spring's delivery. 'Do it early' is a good slogan, and its observance may save a disappointment. Many a poultryman has been forced to accept chicks hatched later than he desired just because he did not place his order with his hatchery man at an early date.

"The thoughtful poultrymen also determine now whether or not their incubators and brooder-stoves are in readiness for the coming hatching season. Now is the time to inspect this equipment carefully and order any necessary parts that will increase the possibilities of a successful season. Thermometers and control wafers should be tested to see that they record varying temperatures accurately. It may even be advisable to set up the machines and brooders and run a short test on them. Above all, do not neglect them until the last moment and awake to find yourself unprepared to start off at the opening of the hatching season."

Success in Incubating Duck and Turkey Eggs

To get the best possible success in incubating duck and turkey eggs, secure a hygrometer. Keep it in the egg chamber during the entire hatch, the same as you do with the thermometer. By examining the eggs occasionally to determine the size of the air cell you will be able to know whether or not the moisture content is running about the right degree. If the eggs dry down too fast, it is an indication that too much moisture is being evaporated from the egg content. On the other hand, if the air cell remains small without much of a detectable change such often indicates too much moisture. A hygrometer can be purchased from most any incubator manufacturer or poultry supply house.

Egg-Laying Period May Be Profitably Prolonged

The fact that hens lay heavily in March and April as a result of nature's urge, causes many poultrymen to overlook giving the hens the sort of feed and care that will prolong the laying period. Nature has been preparing the hen for laying in the spring, and her body has a store of protein—the scarce egg-making element. But a hen that lays five eggs a week will lay eggs in two months to equal one-half her own weight, and unless her feed has replaced this protein, she will lay little after May 15 or June 1. To avoid the slump, feed her heavily with rich protein feed at this time, and she will have the necessary egg elements to go right ahead during the summer.

Mothers for Guinea Chicks

Ordinary hens make the best mothers for guinea chicks. Given warm, dry weather, and plenty of range, turkey and guinea hens can be used successfully, but should a rain or heavy dew occur the mother turkey or guinea hen is apt to drag the chicks through the wet grass, and many are lost from becoming wet and chilled. Neither turkey nor guinea hens can be induced to seek the shelter of the coop at night and during storms, but will remain out in the fields to hover their broods.

Potatoes for Ducks

Bolled potatoes are good food for ducks and should be mashed and mixed in the damp mash to make about 25 per cent of the total. The rest of the mash should remain the same as if the potatoes were not used. It is best to put the roofing on the outside of the building, both on the sides and roof, because it then keeps the moisture out. On a single wall house we would put two or three thicknesses of tar paper between the boards and the roofing.

Reduce Winter Mortality

One of the best ways to reduce the per cent of mortality in a poultry flock is to cull out all undersized late-hatched pullets. They are the type of birds most subject to colds and roup, and will seldom lay many eggs until the late winter production begins to reduce the prices. The remedy is to buy enough chicks, or hatch enough at home, so the pullet flock can be thoroughly culled, and yet leave enough to fill the capacity of the plant.

GEORGE'S GENEROSITY

Now it wasn't that George was greedy. He was simply anxious to be generous to himself. He did not quite know how he could be as generous as he wanted to be, but certainly he knew that he wanted to be.

You may think he merely wanted to own many fine possessions, to be envied by others, to be able to show his friends how much better off he was in all that he owned than they.

Oh, no, George had got beyond that stage. He wanted to be able to reach for more food at the table, to be able to get further than anyone else in adventuring, to be able to see more, and to discover just where the best strawberries were to be found and the wild cherries, to have twice as many thoughts as he now had for thinking up more things that he desired.

He was actually ambitious about his wish to be generous to himself.

He had all kinds of wild and wonderful imaginings as it now was, but when you are ambitious you are never quite satisfied and George was not even satisfied with the number of wishes that he had. He wished he could think of more things for which to wish.

Now, George was a very sound sleeper. You would have said so, I know, if you could have seen the trouble all the other members of the family had in getting him up in the morning.

They used to take turns in trying to awaken him. They would begin quite early.

In fact they had to get up earlier than they otherwise would have done in order to start the procession of human alarm clocks which they made.

First his mother would begin. She would speak to him several times. He would murmur a sleepy something which no one could quite understand.

Then his sister would try her luck, then his older brother, then his very, very little sister, then his father.

Sometimes they would take their turn a second time before George was actually up. He was generous about wanting himself to have plenty of sleep. He would like to be able to have twice the amount of sleep that he had in addition to twice the amount of wide-awake time.

But one night right in the middle of George's sound sleeping he was awakened. It was the sound of trumpets that awoke him. And they were playing a tune and singing these words:

We've no time to wait, we've no time to wait, it's the truth that we state, the truth that we state.

There before him were three wonderful little men with shiny brass trumpets and they grinned at George as he bounded out of bed.

Well, he was willing to be generous to himself and let himself have an adventure.

And it was certainly an adventure to be awakened by three little men with shiny brass trumpets.

Without a word George was off with them, and a fine gay time he had for the three little men were all for giving George a wonderful time adventuring.

Where Do Starved Girls Go?

Little Cora Ann had been told that she must always wait patiently until she was served at meals and not to cry across the table or grab for her food. One day, while dining at a neighbor's with her mother, the little girl was accidentally overlooked. She was very patient for a time, but at last she could bear the strain no longer, seeing everybody feeding but herself. So, leaning quietly across to her mother she said in a loud whisper: "Mother, do little girls who starve to death go to heaven?"

Could Watch Pony Grow

English Women Enter Domain of Business

England is following the lead of the United States in the matter of educating its daughters to enter some business or profession, according to Rosita Forbes, well-known English explorer and writer, in an article in Liberty. Pointing out that English girls until recently had been educated to a life of decorative uselessness, the writer says: "America was the first to realize that every parent owes a profession-to-a-daughter as well as a son. In the states, each college-trained girl has the chance of a career. If she chooses marriage, it is up to her to make it as successful as any other job she undertakes. She realizes, even though she be the daughter of Park Avenue and an industrial king, that marriage is a choice, not a necessity."

"England, following suit," the writer continues, "has sent her daughters into offices and studios, factories and agencies, and they are setting an example to Mayfair."

MARCHING

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

TAKE THE SUNNY-SIDE

AS YOU journey along the road of life, you may observe as you push your way in and out, elbowing the crowds and perhaps studying faces, that it is worth while to take the sunny-side.

On the sunny-side we find better health, good fortune, inspiration and innumerable uplifting thoughts which ennoble the soul.

And we get them in abundance, for they are always there, delectable and lovely as gardens of new-born roses. The kindly face of the old lady you just brushed by in your eagerness to get ahead, bears testimony to the mystic magnetism of the sunny-side.

There is a lingering boyishness in his demeanor and in his vigorous step as he wends his way, lifts his hat and smiles with serene contentment.

For years, let us suppose, you were morose, moodish, sullen, ill-humored, churlish and sulky, then one day, an impulse seized you and led you to the sunny-side.

In a little while you were transformed, flushed with fervor, enthusiasm, tender passion and rapturous adoration.

You saw with new eyes, felt with new sensibility, heard with new delight. You were a changed being, due entirely to taking the sunny-side, where you could discern the bright and beautiful things in life which all the while had been close about you, but hidden in the dark.

BUILD YOUR HOUSE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

MEN hurry home before the approaching storm; When day turns dark, they think of hearths and fires. Some bed to lie in, and a house to warm—

When day turns dark these are the heart's desires. When that hour comes, when rolling clouds arise, When men go hurrying homeward ways, Home will not fall like manna from the skies—

They must have built it in their better days. No clap of hand will raise a fairy house, No shelter open by some magic deed; To have a roof when winter winds caress—

A man must build in time of little need, The fool will say, "I'll build a house in time, But now the summer blossoms everywhere." But who would have a house to which to climb

Must build it in the days when days are fair. So folly thinks of faith. When all is well Why heed the solemn summons of the church? "When I have sorrow, I have woe to tell, Then for her consolation I shall search."

But faith is builded as all shelters are, And who would pray must also learn to praise. A faith to hide us when the tempests roar We must have builded in our better days.

THE WHY OF SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

VAMPIRES

THIS is an ancient Slavic superstition which spread to many lands but flourished chiefly among peoples who buried their dead instead of cremating them. Though much less common than formerly the vampire superstition is by no means extinct.

A vampire is supposed to be a dead person who comes forth from his grave to suck the blood of the living at night. The superstition is a bit hazy as to the form in which the vampire comes, whether as a ghost or in the actual, buried body.

This superstition doubtless originated in the gloomy imagination of Slavs who saw their loved ones dying from some wasting disease for which they were unable to account.
