Labor Has the Right of Way

That Great Canadian Liquor Law In Smith's Acceptance Speech

The great and glorious Canadian Liquor Law recommended by Gov. Al Smith in his speech of acceptance is revealed below, as will be seen by the authority of Daniel A. Polling, who has made a complete investigation of what Gov. Al Smith says is what he realizes would be the best substitute for the Volstead Law. In speaking of an amendment to the Volstead law, Gov. Al Smith says: "Our Canadian neighbors have gone far in this manner to solve this problem by the method of sale by the state itself and not by private individuals." Let us see what follows—just as the Canadian Liquor Law has done for the people of Canada. Let us also note just how far they have gone, according to Gov. Al Smith's way of looking at it—

The Canadian Thrift

(Daniel A. Polling in the Christian Herald)

Friends of Gov. Al Smith are constantly pointing north and exclaiming "Prohibition is a failure; Canada has what we want."

What does Canada have?

What are the facts?

Well, here are some of them:

The Ontario Liquor Board reports liquor sales of a million dollars a week. The Alberta board announces for the second year of "control" the sale of 4,000,000 gallons of intoxicants. The Quebec commission informs us that 1,000,000 more gallons of beer were disposed of this year than last. Seven provincial liquor control boards for a Canadian territory with 10,000,000 inhabitants report an annual booze expenditure of $160,000,000—$16 per capita!

Ah, but you say Canada is drinking beer while we are guzzling hard liquors. Is that so! The reports of these same boards of control state that hard-liquor sales have increased 33% in two years and 50% since the opening of beer parlors.

The Province of Alberta issued 60,000 permits the first year. Two years later 144,000 permits were issued.

What about drunkenness? The Montreal Star informs us that drunkenness among women has increased 53%. Police Commissioner C. F. Burton of Manitoba has written "If all the drunks were arrested, there would be no room for them in the jails," and the Saskatchewan liquor board announces: "Arrests for drunkenness increased 125% in the first 8 months of government control." The Toronto Star continues, "All records for inebriates were broken today when 89 Labor - Day celebrators faced Magistrate Cohen."

But think of what government control has done to the bootlegger! Well, what has it done? "Our greatest problem is moonshine in the country districts," is the wail of the Alberta liquor board.

"As much liquor is sold by bootleggers as is sold in the government stores," adds the Saskatchewan Liquor Board, and British Columbia joins the astounding chorus with "bootleggers increased 111% in the first year."

"Government control" begins to look like "Government controlled." The United States has finished with that. And now let us go to the polls and elect Hoover.

Growing Influence of Labor in Finance Has Curbed Anti-Union Influences

By PETER J. BRADY, President Federation Bank.

Through its entry into the banking field, the labor movement of America has demonstrated to the world in no uncertain degree its ability to administer, use and control its own credit power, and furnish capital directly for the promotion of industry and commerce. In doing this, it has undoubtedly accomplished more for the stability of our government and the progress of humanity than any other organized agency.

Labor banks cannot succeed unless they are conducted as business institutions, conforming in every way to well-established laws and practices. Great deliberation and the exercise of discretion and sound judgment are necessary in the organization and administration of labor banks. Sound banking and business rules must be followed. Any failure to follow this policy would result in disastrous consequences.

Combinations of employers in many lines have seriously hurt our unions, especially those organizations connected with the building trades. Anti-union employers, bankers and financiers in some large cities have, through their power of withholding credits and calling loans, forced upon fair employers a system of blacklisting union men, and have also compelled "agreements" to run only on the un-American "open shop" basis. This abuse of power is being checked by labor banks and will finally be entirely eliminated.

Another important function for which the labor bank is especially equipped is that of saving the wage earner from the swindler and glib stock salesman. Government post office and other statistics show that the manufacturers of "wildcat" stocks, worthless securities, take out of the people's pockets every year. It is from this that the worker can be saved if he will place his money safely out of the way of the swindler by depositing it in the labor bank.

The future of labor banking in the United States is secure for it rests upon the saving ability of American workers who each year receive the vast sum of $30,000,000,000 in wages. Compared to this the $125,000,000 amassed by labor banks is quite insignificant although big by itself. That so much has been gathered in so short a time by labor banks is proof of what can and what will be done. There is as much more invested in corporations sponsored by labor organizations.

After taking into consideration the progress of our banking movement to date, and all the possible difficulties that may lie ahead, I feel confident in predicting that the American labor banks are going to continue to prosper. Eventually organized labor's financial power will be utilized in such a practical business way that it will be in a position to assume its full share in the financial and credit structure of the country.

Labor Day Fit Time for Workers to Rededicate Themselves to the Cause

By JOHN L. LEWIS, President United Mine Workers.

Observance of Labor day as a holiday is a recognition of the justice of those great fundamental principles upon which organized labor rests, principles for the maintenance and defense of which countless thousands of good, earnest, true men and women have devoted their efforts, their intelligence and their lives. Organized labor would lift those who toil from their humble place and elevate them to that dignity which belongs to them by right. It would add to them the better things of life. It seeks to bring to them a greater degree of happiness and prosperity, better homes, better education, greater opportunities. And it is proper that labor should pause on this one great day of each year and meditate on this high ambition. On this day, the men and women of labor may well pause and think, and rededicate themselves and their lives to a continuation of the struggle.

Sacrifice does not weaken the determination of those who are convinced they are making the sacrifice in a righteous cause. No class of labor has endured greater sacrifice and suffering than the coal miners of this country, members of the United Mine Workers of America. Every known instrumentally, brutal and painful, crafty and keen, has been utilized against them for the purpose of breaking down their morale and forcing them to surrender to those who would degrade them. But the United Mine Workers of America cannot and will not submit to any such system. This magnificent union of workmen never has been defeated, and it is not going to be defeated now. This union, like labor in general, is marching on and on, and it will continue to march on and on, bringing fresh sunshine and happiness into the lives and homes of the toilers of America. There shall be no degradation of labor so long as the courage and the spirit and the determination of the United Mine Workers of America continue at today's high pitch.

Let us give thanks that we are workers and that we are again permitted to celebrate another Labor day, which is "Labor's Day," indeed.

Trade Union Movement Ever in the Forefront of Defenders of Liberty

By JOHN F. FREY, President Ohio Labor Federation.

As trade unionists, and as citizens, we are equally interested in the question of home rule. It is a subject which has interested our people from Colonial times, for home rule is the direct application of the American principle of self-government.

Our ancestors were so jealous of their liberties, so fearful of the authority which might be exercised over them by officials who were not a part of the community in which they lived, that immediately after the Revolutionary war the several states, although recognizing the necessity for national unity of purpose, declined to give the federal government sufficient authority to make it function.

The framers of the Constitution, recognizing the danger of centralized power, took great pains to fully protect the right of each state to determine the form and substance of its internal government.

It was because of a sound understanding by the framers of the Constitution of the distinction between home rule and centralized authority that our dual form of government, the state and the federal, was established.

Many states, however, jealous of their own right to unquestioned self-government in state affairs, were negligent in applying the same principle to the municipalities and other political subdivisions with the state. The necessity for self-government in a municipality or political subdivision is as essential to our welfare as the same power exercised by the state within its borders in state affairs.

Where home rule does not exist the people are subject to authorities in whose selection and election they have little, if anything, to say. They are prevented from legislating for themselves, and in many instances are forced to submit to conditions against which they have every reason to object, and which they would immediately change if the right to home rule was enjoyed.

The trade union movement, from the beginning, has been the nation's foremost defender of liberty as defined by the Declaration of Independence, and of rights and government, as set forth in the Federal Constitution. It is because our movement is a firm and unyielding defender of liberty of action, as it has been established in the principles upon which our nation is founded, that we have so thoroughly declared our devotion to the principle of home rule in all local affairs.

EXPANSION IS NOTED IN MANY LINES OF INDUSTRY

Denver—The industrial employment survey report of the Mountain District issued from the office of Quince Record, district director of the U. S. Employment Service of the U. S. Department of Labor, states that expansion and increased activity was noted in many lines of industry throughout Colorado during July, with every indication for a further increase in activity and employment in seasonal lines during August and September. Increase in operations and forces, particularly noted in agriculture, metal mining, building, municipal construction, highway construction, the travel industry, railroad shop and passenger train service activity, canning factories, and in some lines of manufacturing. Haying and cultivation of the sugar beet and vegetable crops, afforded seasonal farm labor with quite steady employment during July. Harvesting of the wheat crop commenced the latter part of July and will extend well into August. All available competent resident and migratory harvesters, will be provided quite steady employment during August, harvesting and miscellaneous seasonal agricultural work. Harvesting of the vine crops is under way and provides a large force of miscellaneous seasonal workers with employment. Harvesting of the cantaloupe crop in the Rocky Ford district will be under way during August. Metal mining continues moderately active in many mining districts of the state. Supply of unskilled metal mine labor is adequate. Coal mines, which have shown a seasonal reduction in operations and forces employed, indicated to resume increased seasonal activity the latter part of August. Oil field prospecting activities are gradually expanding, especially noted in the Florence and Craig oil districts. Manufacturing plant activity in general is gradually expanding. Canning factories have resumed normal seasonal runs in the Northern Colorado, Arkansas Valley and Grand Junction districts the supply of male and female workers is adequate to supply demands for workers at those plants. Supply of competent skilled manufacturing labor is barely equal to the demands. A considerable force of skilled workers has recently commenced the annual overhauling of the eighteen beet sugar factories in the state.

Washington.—Passenger automobiles manufactured in the United States in 1927 totaled 2,973,350, the department of commerce announced here recently. This is a drop of 19.9 per cent below 1926. Byrd's expedition to the South Pole may reach a total cost of $1,000,000, it was revealed at his headquarters in the Biltmore hotel, where final details are being arranged for departure of the last supply ship from the Hoboken base one month from now. "The expedition will cost not less than $850,000 and not more than $1,000,000," the United Press was definitely informed.

Dove and Prairie Chicken Season Opens Sept. 1

Doves and prairie chickens will be in season for hunters during the opening days of Sept. E. L. Perry, state game and fish warden said Tuesday. The dove season will be open from Sept. 1 to 15 with bag limits of twenty for the season, but hunters have only five days in which to get a quota of the state's rapidly declining prairie chickens.

The prairie birds will be in season only from Sept. 1 to the 5th, and the limit is five a day and ten for the season. Prairie chickens, Mr. Perry said, unlike the quail have been unable to adapt themselves to civilization, and the rapid development of the eastern section of the state is rapidly driving the birds from the state. The eastern section of the state is the only quarter of New Mexico in which the birds have thrived.

Peggy-Anne, the Decorator

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright)

JOHN COURTNEY always enjoyed the tag-end of the summer season a lot more than he did the entire three months of hot crowded days when the entire world of holiday seekers seemed to swarm over the beach and clubhouse.

He liked to sit in the old clubhouse lounge with a crackling fire of logs and have the exact chair he liked at the exact angle and in the exact location he liked.

On this particular morning he stretched his long legs luxuriously toward the crackling logs and was selfish enough to hope that no one would enter to interrupt the charm of the hour.

But some one did enter. "Some one staggering under a weight of cretonne so that only a pair of feet and the top of a sunny head were visible.

Courtney was so comfortably slunk into the depths of his chair that the girl was unaware of a presence in the lounge.

She dropped her huge fluff of cretonne in the middle of the room and then Courtney watched her struggling masterfully with a large flowered slip cover which she put on one of the worn sofas.

Next she tackled a great armchair. Courtney wondered how anyone could foresee what a tremendous difference a bit of color could make in a gloomy room.

He stirred and the girl uttered a cry of alarm.

"Oh, I'm so sorry," she said swiftly. "I had no idea I was disturbing anyone. I thought all the guests had gone for the season."

"You're not bothering me in the least," said Courtney. "In fact, it is undoubtedly I who have disturbed you. If you won't continue what you are doing I will leave."

"No, no!" exclaimed Peggy-Anne. "Please don't—I will work as quietly as a mouse. My uncle, who is manager of the club, has given me this room to decorate, but he said I must not disturb any of the guests. I am hoping it will be attractive to—"

"By Jove! I didn't think those whatchamacallits you're putting on could make such a complete change. It's great. I wish my old rooms in town would respond to treatment like this."

"They would," declared Peggy-Anne, and then blushed at her own temerity. She had not been sufficiently long in the decorating business to have acquired that outward expression of confidence in herself. Inwardly she knew it. She knew that all ugly rooms could be made beautiful. "It's just a matter of taste," she added. And a moment later she was climbing a ladder beside the big windows and dragging up with her great lengths of the flowered cretonne.

Courtney sat gazing spellbound. Never had he supposed such a transformation possible. The old room suddenly seemed like a garden of choicest flowers.

"They'll never get me out of this room again," he declared. "I'm always the last of the season's lingerers and now I suppose I will be hopping out of here about the first of February. This room makes home seem awful." And Courtney visualized his green-clad chairs and the buff walls and the dark carpet and the heavy brown hangings at the windows and shuddered.

He came over to where Peggy-Anne was perched on top of the ladder, arranging soft folds of cretonne over the poles and looked up at her.

"I say—you know if you were to be nice to me I could get you hundreds of jobs like this. Every fellow I know who is living in lodgings would jump at a chance to have the place cheered up. I could really be a great help to you—if you wanted me to." And Courtney looked most wistfully up and into Peggy-Anne's bright eyes.

"But what exactly do you mean by 'being nice'?" she questioned.

"Well—I don't just exactly know—for the moment—but first of all I wouldn't want you falling for any of the men I will introduce you to. They're a pretty fine lot, too."

"If they're all such a fine lot I can't see why you should worry. Besides, when I am busy at my decorating a man might just as well be a sofa cushion for all the notice I take of him." And Peggy-Anne went on with the valance.

At the foot of the ladder Courtney pondered.

"If I get you twelve contracts within a week will you promise not to fall in love with any of your clients?"

"Oh, most certainly, I will," laughed Peggy-Anne and in her eyes was a sparkle that was not entirely due to the wonderful success she was stepping into.

At the foot of the ladder Courtney watched his chance, then gently shook the ladder and waited.

Sure enough she tumbled and straight into his arms.

He had been certain of his success, otherwise he would never have risked this precious girl's safety.

"You realize, of course," he said as she looked laughingly back at him, "that I will not be among the first twelve."

"Then thirteen is your lucky number, is it?" questioned Peggy-Anne.

"It's going to be in this case," said Courtney, and knew that their home some day would be even as lovely as the old clubhouse lounge.

Famous Mining Strikes
By THOMAS E. STEWARD

WNU Service

A Gold Mine in France
Few people realize that there is an important gold mine in France. It is a property seldom heard of and probably an unimportant one by comparison with some of the great mines of the American West, of South Africa and Australia, yet it is a real factor in the economics of France.

During the period of the Roman occupation of "Gaul" some gold-bearing quartz veins were discovered in what is now La Vendee, and were worked by the Romans to a depth of about 100 feet. When the Romans withdrew, work ceased and the pits became covered with vegetation.

These mines eventually became the property of a retired French official who lived in a chateau within a stone's throw of the outcrop of the vein and who doubtless walked in his park around the borders of the ancient working without realizing the true nature of the place.

About twenty-five years ago a friend of this official who had made studies of the ancient Phoenician tin workings in England visited him at the chateau and was struck by the similarity between this place and those he had seen. He saw the tree-covered trenches and became convinced that they must have been a mine in times of antiquity. Presently a shaft was sunk, and although some years passed before commercial operation began, a company was finally formed and the Societe des Mines de la Belliere became an established fact. Within ten years the company was making a profit of almost a million francs a year.

Exploratory work has been done in the vicinity of this lucky find with the hope of coming on other veins or ancient workings, but as yet nothing of the sort has materialized. One of the drawbacks to exploration and discovery has been the lack in France of men trained to that type of work. France has many expert metallurgists and miners, but she lacks men of the type of the old western prospector.

Besides the mine at La Belliere there are several other rather small gold mines in France, but none that is so successful or that has a history as romantic as this one.

Improved SAMSON Windmills

With SELF-OILING Boxes

The good qualities of this new device can be readily seen when compared with the old style, noisy, lumbering windmill, which had to be oiled every day in order to run. Now, your oiling troubles are at an end. The self-oiling feature of the new SAMSON wherein all bearings run constantly in a flood of oil, causes the windmill to run easily, make less noise and with less expense than any windmill on the market. As proof of the pudding is in the eating of it, so in the lasting virtues of the Samson windmill, made possible by a trial test. For full information SEE—

PICTORIAL LIFE OF HERBERT HOOVER

No. 2

By Satterfield

1. Herbert Hoover's father, settling in Iowa, wrested a hard-earned living from the soil as a pioneer farmer.

2. His natural bent for machinery asserted itself, and he opened a blacksmith shop, and sold farm machinery.

3. Grandfather Minthorn, on his mother's side, was a bookish farmer, who used to read as he rode horseback.

4. Hoover's mother was a great reader and a serious-minded critic of such literature as reached the farm.

LETTUCE MAY BE COOKED

Many people never think of lettuce as a vegetable that may be cooked. It is, in fact, one of the valuable green-leaf vegetables depended on for vitamins and minerals, and may be eaten hot as well as raw.

1 cup sliced salt pork 2 lbs. vinegar
1 quart cut lettuce Salt
Onion Juice, if desired

Wash the lettuce thoroughly and cut it in pieces about 3 inches long. Cook the salt pork in a heavy skillet until brown and very crisp, and remove it from the fat.

The time of cooking will vary with the lettuce, but do not cook any longer than necessary to wilt the lettuce.

Colorful Blouse Most Liked

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

IN THE reflected glory of the ensemble—flourishes the blouse. Which means that the blouse theme is a most important one, seeing that the mode has declared the supremacy of the ensemble for fall.

The outstanding glory of the blouse for the new season is the materials used in its development. No fabric is too luxurious or too gorgeous for the creation of the blouse in the opinion of the mode.

And here is something else to include in your autumn plans—a blouse of printed satin over a skirt of solid-toned satin finely plaited. Alluring, are they not, the new blouse prospects?

There is a pronounced tendency toward brown tones in the latest velvet prints. All shades are included from light to dark, laying special stress on radiant warm canna tones, rust shades, also russet and old ivory tones.

With crepe prints have lost none of their prestige and for sports and practical wear they will score a new record. The idea of wearing these with the satin skirt is growing in favor, although the plaited crepe skirt is also endorsed.

In styling the new blouse modes such interesting details are employed as monograms, bow treatments, novel yokes, jabots in abundance, and fagoting is also popular.

For a midseason blouse the printed crepe model pictured serves admirably, especially if worn with one of the new satin skirts.

Very charming with the new sheer velvet ensemble is the blouse all of lace. It may be in matching tones or in exquisite pastel tint.

PROFIT IN MAKING CAKES

Profit from the poultry yard, in the case of a farm woman living in Madra county, California, includes the results of selling angel food, sunshine and sponge cakes during the season when eggs are plentiful.

PRUNES ADD TO PUDDING

Prunes lend themselves to use in almost any form of bread pudding. For this purpose it is well to soak them until the stones can be taken out easily, and then chop them, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

Berries With Cereals

In summertime cooked cereals are much more interesting combined with fresh fruit or berries than without. Stir in half a cupful of any kind of berries to every cupful of cooked cereal just a few minutes before serving.

Self-Expression

Receives Recognition From German Univer...

Mr. William E. Weiss.

The University of Cologne, Germany, has just paid to Mr. William E. Weiss, of Wheeling, W. Va., one of the founders and General Manager of Sterling Products (Incorporated), and now Vice-President and General Manager of Drug Incorporated, an unusual distinction by bestowing unanimously upon him the title of Doctor Philologiae Honoris Causa.

Mr. Weiss is the first and only American to be so honored by this world famous German institution. This mark of preferment came to Mr. Weiss in recognition of his efforts to further the industrial relations that have extended over more than a decade between the Directors and Scientific and Chemical staffs of German and American Pharmaceutical firms that are prominent in international industrial affairs.

During the past few years Mr. Weiss has been a frequent visitor to Europe and is a recognized link in strengthening commercial friendship between the old and new continents, a truth emphasized by the action at Cologne.

Children's Bedtime Story

By Mary Graham Bonner

"I was the one," said Mrs. Brown Pig, "who discovered first that the pink pigs were a selfish, conceited lot. Of course you agreed with me, but you haven't given the right answer."

"No, you are far from it. 'You are quite cold.' 'I'm nothing of the sort,' said Mrs. Black Pig. 'I'm quite hot, in fact.'"

"Why, Pray Tell!" Asked Mrs. Black Pig.

"It's warm weather, and why shouldn't I be hot?" "I didn't mean real heat," said Mrs. Brown Pig.

"Whatever did you mean?" asked Mrs. Black Pig. "You're a foolish one, a foolish one."

"No, I'm not," said Mrs. Brown Pig. "You haven't got the brains of a brown pig, that's the trouble with you."

"My dear Mrs. Brown Pig, I won't quarrel with you about such an unimportant thing as brains."

"Now, if you had food around that would be different."

"I agree with you there," said Mrs. Brown Pig. "I really wouldn't quarrel about brains; oh, no, oh, no."

"But what in the world did you mean if you didn't mean real heat?" "What is make-believe heat?" asked Mrs. Black Pig.

"I mean," said Mrs. Brown Pig, "that you're not guessing right."

"When children are playing hunt the thimble or a guessing game, if they're far from the thimble or the right answer, other children tell them they're cold."

"The children who know the answer tell them that."

"And when they're warm it means they're near the place where they'll find it."

"If they're hot they're just about at the place."

"Well, well, well," said Mrs. Black Pig. "what in the world do I care for children and their games?"

"I care for them," said Mrs. Brown Pig. "Dear me," said Mrs. Black Pig. "I never knew you had such an affectionate nature."

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Brown Pig, "that's why I said at the start I was the one to tell this story."

"I like children and they often give us food. But when I say you don't know the right answer to the story, I am right."

"You may know that the pink pigs think too much of themselves and that they have selfish natures."

"But you don't know why. And the reason why is that we are the unselfish pigs, for we are the fine pigs."

"Why, pray tell?" asked Mrs. Black Pig.

"Because we are," said Mrs. Brown Pig. "We don't think that other creatures are not as fine as we are, as the pink pigs do."

"That is selfish and conceited. But we know we're the finest pigs. That's truth, not conceit!"

"Do you see the difference? Do you see why we're proud?"

"Oh, yes, oh yes," grunted Mrs. Black Pig, grinning a pig's grin and twisting her tail.

"Oh yes, you've as much reason for what you say as a creature with no brains, but then it's only because you're a regular selfish pig, all for self, all for self."

"Grunt, grunt," said all the other pigs. (C. 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

Seasonable Good Things

By NELLIE MAXWELL

To walk and live uncooled, within arms length of what is not your own, with nothing between your desire and its gratification but the inevitable law of retribution—this is to be a man—Horace Mann.

During the warm days when hot foods are not appealing to the palate a dish like the following will be enjoyed:

Pecan Nut Loaf.—Add three tablespoons of butter to five sliced potatoes, a little salt and pepper and one-third of a cupful of hot milk. Beat with a fork until creamy and pack into a slightly buttered pan. Set the pan into hot water and let stand in a moderate oven until well heated. Turn onto a hot plate, sprinkle with one-third of a cupful of finely minced pecan meats, pour round a white sauce and garnish with parsley.

Hot Mousse.—Dissolve one tablespoonful of gelatin in one-half cupful of hot water and add two cupfuls of chopped cold-bellied ham which has been pounded in a mortar, season with one teaspoonful of mustard and a few grains of cayenne. Add one-half cupful of heavy cream beaten until stiff and turn into a mold which has been dipped into cold water. Chill, remove from the mold and garnish with parsley.

Sugared Beets.—Cut four hot boiled beets into one-fourth-inch slices, add three tablespoonfuls of butter, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Reheat and serve very hot.

Lobster Dishes.—Lobsters with the big claws, found on the Atlantic coast north of New Jersey, are the choicest of such sea food. The spiny lobster, found on the south Atlantic coast, and the crawfish of the Pacific are all of the same family and have much the same flavor.

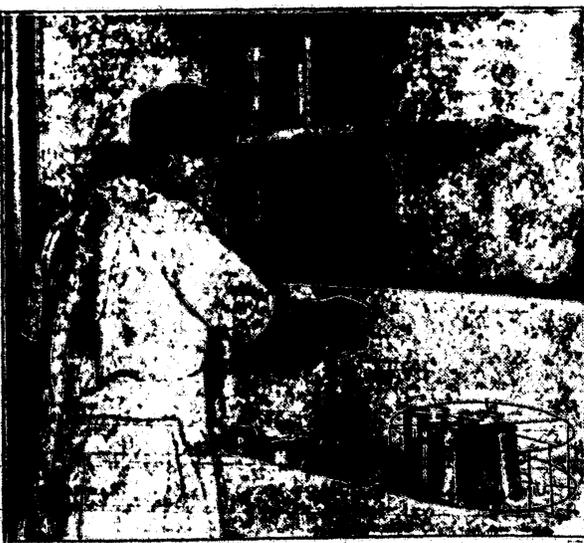

Lobster Salad in Cucumber Jelly.—Peel and chop two large cucumbers and one-half a slice of onion. Put in a mixture with one-half cupful of cold water and simmer until soft. Rub through a sieve, add one and one-fourth tablespoonfuls of gelatin soaked in one-half cupful of cold water and dissolved over hot water, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, a few grains of cayenne and one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper, with enough green vegetable paste to make a delicate shade. Strain through a cheesecloth. Put a thin layer into individual molds, garnish with sliced stuffed olives, add more jelly, then fill with pieces of cooked lobster. Pour in the jelly to fill the molds. Shrimps, crab meat, or chicken may be used in place of lobster.

Wolled Lobster.—Sever the connection between the head and body of the lobster with a sharp knife and drop into boiling water. Cook for half an hour. Remove from the water, wipe dry and then rub the shell with a little olive oil.

Baked Lobster in Shell.—Remove the meat from a two-pound lobster and cut in cubes. Heat in one and one-half cupfuls of seasoned white sauce, adding two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice. Skillet the body and tail shells, cover with buttered crumbs and bake brown. To prevent the shell from curling, insert small wooden skewers of the right length to keep the shell in its original shape. (C. 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

CANS SHOULD BE COOLED QUICKLY

Cooling Canned Stuff With Cold Water.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) If you are canning in tin, be sure to plunge the cans in cold water as they are taken from the canner, to help cool them rapidly. This step would not be possible with glass jars, which must be cooled gradually, away from all drafts.

Before attempting to can at home this summer, send to the United States Department of Agriculture for Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home." There have been various important changes in the methods of home canning during the past few years, and each step requires careful attention to directions, so it is unwise to begin canning without the correct information.

The RETURN of ANTHONY TRENT

By WYNDHAM MARTYN

COPYRIGHT BY BARRS & HOPKINS

WNL SERVICE

It was not easy for him, tonight, to give his attention to the dancing. The hours passed with intolerable slowness. He knew that not until every guest had gone, and those staying in the house were asleep, would the dangerous Pierre Redlich evolve from the somber, square-shouldered detective.

The Bixels did not stay late. In a sense their going broke up the party. They were so socially pre-occupied that the lesser lights did not care to remain. At two the last motor had rolled down the drive. By three there was not a light in any window. The men had become tired and the women knew the value of sleep.

Redlich had abandoned his resemblance to a rugged guardian of the law. He was crafty, creeping and sly. Tonight he was determined to take no risks. He wanted to make certain that Anthony Trent had gone to bed and was not about to patrol the exterior of the house. But he assumed the Yeatman carriage as he knocked upon Trent's door.

After a pause a sleepy voice bade him enter. Redlich saw that Trent had been compelled to rise from his bed, assume a dressing gown and come into the sitting room of his suite. He was not in his customary good temper.

"You are the third," he began crossly, "who has tried to prevent me from sleeping. First, Mr. Gilbert wanted me to share sentry-go with him. Secondly, Payson Grant thought I ought to be out there on the wet grass looking for burglars in every bush. And now you come. What's your special grievance?"

"Merely to suggest that you might desire to patrol the grounds with me," Redlich was smiling amiably. "I am going now."

"Then you go alone," said Anthony Trent irritably. "What's this conspiracy to make me a martyr for another man's house and lot?"

Then he paused as though struck by a sudden perplexing thought.

"What's it to do with you? Why should an accountant figure in a thing like this?"

"The time is come," said the other impressively, "to tell you the truth. I am a detective engaged by Mrs. Grant to protect her guests."

He was gratified at the astonishment he had produced.

Redlich had never liked Trent. He could see that over this young man they thought so bold and debonaire fear was creeping.

"Is there any danger, do you suppose?"

"We hope not," Redlich answered, "but I shall not sleep tonight. I shall watch particularly this floor, because it is here that they will come for the jewels. I shall not ask any lurking creature what his business is. I shall shoot."

It was plain that Anthony Trent did not relish danger so close at hand.

"I'm going to lock my door," he said firmly, "and that's a thing I never do."

When he had closed Trent's door and heard the key turn in the lock, Redlich made a gesture of vulgar derision at the booted door.

On his side of it, Anthony Trent was chuckling softly. What infernal impudence for a crook like Redlich to think he could outwit or outgame the man who had been the master criminal!

He did not waste much time in laughing. Pulling the shades down he took from a locked trunk the second of the bathing suits he had bought that afternoon.

It was a suit of knitted wool, black in color, which covered him from neck to toe. The sleeves were wrist length. On his head he put an aviator's casque; to this he strapped an automatic pistol.

When the lights were put out, the shades raised and the window softly opened, he drew on the same heavy gloves he had used to climb the lightning rod, and lowered himself to the marble terrace. He had noticed from his window that the white mast-head light of the steamer was oscillating far more markedly than on the previous night. It was a symptom of the sea, which was growing rougher.

When he came near the bathing houses Trent could at first detect nothing. Then his straining eyes made out, just beyond the white fringe of surf, a boat rising and falling in the tide. He could see, every now and then, that a man at the oars had to work to keep the boat in the same position. Plainly he was waiting midway between shore and ship. And Trent guessed shrewdly that he was waiting for Pierre Redlich.

Anthony Trent hoped Redlich would succeed. He had two principal accounts against him. The first was his maltreatment of Mademoiselle Dupin. The other was the poisoning of the dogs.

The man in the boat, leaning on his oars and dreaming of the ease Redlich's work would bring him, did not see anything at which to be alarmed during his vigil. He wished his leader would make haste. These summer storms along the Jersey coast had an almost tropical violence at times.

So fixed were his eyes on the spot where the signals would flash that he had no idea a swimmer passed a few yards from him. The men on the tramp were leaning anxiously over the vessel's side when the black-clad swimmer clambered up the anchor chains, got a grip of the hawse-hole opening, and pulled himself on deck. Merging into the black night he crept to the unoccupied bridge and climbed to the top of the little deckhouse. Here, where no light shone on him, none would look for invaders.

Although Redlich's launch was swamped he clambered safely aboard the broad-beamed rowboat and was pulled to the side of La Belle Alliance. The captain, cheered at the news of complete success, took the wheel, signaled his orders, put the vessel into the teeth of the wind and stood out to sea. In the cabin Redlich was describing his exploits.

The sense of achievement led to much boasting. He described, with scornful laughter, the kind of people he had lived among for the past week and had fooled so neatly. And in his jeers he remembered, with special emphasis, Anthony Trent.

The men about him made him repeat how he had won his victories. They laughed particularly at Gilbert, who had finally been beaten and robbed of a diamond of five carats which Redlich flashed before them.

No person in the Grant household had been more puzzled than Thorpe the butler when, during the dancing, Trent drew him aside.

"Thorpe," said Trent, "I'm on the track of the man who poisoned those two dogs. I take it you'd like to be in at the death."

Thorpe breathed heavily. "I hope I'll get the chance."

"I'm going to give it to you. Now pay great attention to what I say."

Thorpe listened wide-eyed with astonishment when he heard.

"It's like a book, sir," said Thorpe, "it's like the sort of book I fancy. Something red-blooded."

"Books don't all have happy endings," Trent reminded him. "I'm not too sure of this. Remember all of you must be armed and all of you must Astronomy is marked by a drama of life and hope that no other human activity has approximated. This shell, beyond the orbit of the planets, they thought, was the visible boundary of the universe.

Now that he was sure of his direction, and knew he was headed for the abandoned harbor, he signaled full-speed-ahead. It was one of the most thrilling moments of his life when he saw La Belle Alliance dart forward and begin to climb the private beach. A wave lifted her so high at the last that her blunt old bow smashed the ornamental bathing-houses and came to a shuddering rest among the splintered wood. It would have been impossible to have a prettier landing. Piled up on a beach, and not for the first time, lay La Belle Alliance.

At least, Trent thought, there need be no loss by drowning through his exploit. Eight men came swarming up on deck having no idea where they were. They wasted no time in cursing an unskillful captain. They saw the shining sands and they heard the breakers behind them, and they leaped ashore.

Thorpe's instructions, while concise, had not been explanatory. He had been bidden gather his six men and keep them hidden in an unlighted garage until the moment came. The particular moment was to be indicated by Mr. Yeatman himself, who would act all unconsciously. The amazing news was that this Yeatman, so far from being a detective, was a burglar, and a dangerous one. Should Yeatman discover Thorpe spying upon him Trent thought he would shoot the butler, unless the butler was quicker with the gun.

It had been a moment of the utmost tenseness when Yeatman passed within five feet of the watching butler, and even stopped for a moment as though hesitating.

Thorpe's six men, denied the little knowledge of the matter he possessed, kept silence admirably. They were conscious of a certain mysterious sense of imminent danger. Crouched on the damp sand they waited for some terror to creep upon them from the deep.

Beds of Clay Reveal the Passage of Time

Geologists can follow the tracks of the sun and tell the time, year by year, in geological ages—no ancient that even by millions of years they are hard to count.

Not far from Stockholm there are some remarkable beds of clay, regularly arranged in alternating bands of sand and clay. These turn out to be the layers deposited by the melting glaciers of the ice age, each one laid down in the spring and summer when the sun was hottest. And as there was a freeze-up each winter and melting each summer, the layers become almost as accurate an index to the antiquity of the ice age as the annual rings of a tree are to the age of the tree.

Moreover, the same system of measuring geological time has now been extended over all Scandinavia, and parts of India and South America. Everywhere the layers appear to correspond so closely in the variations of their thickness, year by year, that there seems no doubt they were laid down in corresponding years.—Baron Gerard de Geer.

have flashlights. There'll possibly be no need to shoot, but every man of the bunch must be captured or I shall be branded as the prize fool. You understand," he said as the music stopped, "that one incautious move on the part of you and your men, the lighting of one match or the smell of tobacco smoke, may rob you of all this fun. As for me, well I don't want to think of what they'll say to me if anything goes wrong."

The captain of the tramp steamer La Belle Alliance was reflecting on the perils of the sea and the unfortunate accidents which often occur and associating Pierre Redlich with some of the most deadly, when he stared into the mouth of a blue-black barrel. Behind the weapon was a most surprising being. In the dim light it looked as though some strange creature of the sea had risen from his kingdom to invade that of man. Tall, dripping wet, and crested in an inhuman manner, this apparition advanced closer until the captain gasped with a certain emotion of relief when he saw he had to do with a man.

But a man with a loaded pistol may not be welcomed as a friend in situations of this sort. There was menace in the eyes that stared into those of the captain.

"I've taken charge," said Anthony Trent, "and if I hear anything from you you go back the way I came."

He made a free and sweeping gesture toward the open sea. Keeping his weapon pointed to the sailor, Trent stooped and picked up a small coil of rope. Hardly realising, the captain was bound hand and foot. Then he was shoved into a corner and Trent took the wheel.

The wind was freshening from the east. The storm long expected was at hand.

Only the captain knew that the madman at the wheel was altering the course of the vessel.

On shore Thorpe, the footman, and the four men from the garage were waiting in states of varying excitement. Thorpe would tell them no more than there was danger ahead, and probably, monetary reward for it.

In his struggle to gain the very position he now occupied, Trent had somewhat lost sight of the ending of the adventure. He was doing a fool-hardy trick, and it might cost him a great deal. Incidentally it might cost him his life. There was no moon to show him the landmarks on which he relied. He signaled half-speed-ahead, and strained his eyes to see. Presently the white line of breakers showed ahead. And then, lifting itself above the waterside mist, he saw the white-Italian palace Guggensohn had built.

Now that he was sure of his direction, and knew he was headed for the abandoned harbor, he signaled full-speed-ahead. Is Marriage a Success?

By RING LARDNER

To the Editor:
One of the big N. Y. newspapers have been running a serious of articles lately on marriage and whether it's a success or vice versa, and every day they been printing letters that was sent in to them by husbands and wives stating their views on the case and the editors seems to think they should be the people that should ought to know, but as far as I been able to make out from their letters the game will go into extra tannings and they will finely half to call it off on acct. of darkness. It looks like what the papers calls a hung jury and it should be.

The trouble with the discussion and why it ain't libel to get us nowhere is on acct. of the big majority of the letters coming from people that has only been married one time. I got a friend of mine that is now running his 5th relay and ought to know what he is talking about so the other night I asked him to give his frank opinion on the subject, thinking my host of readers would be interested and here is what he had to say in part.

"Four marriages out of five or in other words 80 per cent is a howling success. The other 20 per cent is a fiasco of the 1st water. I am at present in the midst of the last named, but as the successes is more pleasant to talk about than the busts, I will start in on the former.

"The 1st gal I married was the daughter of a wealthy real estate man named Ella. The old man gave her a check for $10,000 for a wedding present and us we was waiting for the train to take us to the Falls. I got her to endorse the check on the grounds that maybe we would run short on the trip and half to get some of the porters to cash the check. Well, we got to the Falls and set there looking at them for about 1/2 hr., and finely I asked her how she liked it and she said her ft. hurt her in her going away shoes and besides if she was pleasure to be got out of staring all day at a bunch of running water why not do it in comfort by going back to the hotel and go in the bathroom and turn on all the faucets. She said that as far as she was concerned Niagara was a cheese. So I told her that of course they wasn't no sport in just setting there and gapeing at it, but the real fun was to rent a empty bbl. somewheres and get inside it and leave the stopper out so as some air could get in and shoot the Falls. So she liked the idea and we engaged a bbl. by the hr. and come to find out they wasn't room enough in it for the 2 of us to ride at once, so I said we would slip a coin and if it come heads she was to go 1st and I slipped a coin and sure enough it come heads.

"The next gal I married was name Claire and she didn't have no dowry but she carried $5,000 accident insurance as she use to travel on the road for a vacuum cleaner. It wasn't only about a wk. after the honeymoon that she caught a cold, and it settled in a hollow tooth and for a couple nights she layed and moaned and finely she said she couldn't stand it no more so I lit up the lights and began showing her some of my curios to take her mind off the tooth and one of them was a double bbl. shot gun and before I could say Jack Robertson both blbs. went off right in her eye. The coroner said it was a accident.

"No. 3 was name Eloise and I hadn't never heard the name before and kept forgetting it and calling her Ella and Claire both of which had left me a widower, and she knew it and didn't like it very well but I couldn't seem to get out of the habit and every time I done it she would start a quarrel and it finely got to be a regular mania with her and she says the next time I called her out of her name she would croak herself. So I says don't do that Claire, and next thing I knew she had drank a pt. of wood alcohol thinking it was carbolic acid and when I tried to get our Dr. the line was busy. Eloise left me a chest of silver that her uncle had give her who was in the jewelry business and I sold it for $1,500.

"I was married to the 4th, one name Kate in August and her father give us a house and lot. She had hay fever and a red nose but I loved her and they wasn't a day past when I didn't bring her a bouquet of some kind of flowers. One day the florist didn't have nothing in stock and I was kind of scared to go home without no bouquet so I stopped by the side of the road and picked a nose-gay of golden rods and and tossed it in her lap and the 2d. explosion, blowed her up.

"The lease said about the present incumbents why so much the better. I've done everything I could for her but they don't nothing satisfy her. To make a successful marriage they's got to be a sense of humor on both sides and in our case its all 1 sided. So all in all I claim they's 4 successes to every 1 fliv and as soon as I can get rid of this one I'll marry 4 more and stop on No. 0."

That is what a bird told me that has had some experience and his word should ought to carry weight. Personally I am not in a position to speak as my first wife is still sticking it out on acct. of the kiddies but I suppose if you was to ask the both of us if marriage was a success or failure, the answer would be a life.

Speed of 750 Miles an Hour Foreseen

Following the meeting of scientists in Paris recently to discuss the feasibility of shooting to the moon, or Mars or Venus, learned men of Europe are discussing the limits of speed that may be attained by man. They cite the increase of speed since 1921, when Italy won the Schneider cup with 107 miles an hour, to the nearly 215 miles an hour made at Daytona beach, this year. Some scientists predict that in 1930 the race will attain at least 300 miles in 60 minutes and constantly increase the speed until 750 miles an hour is reached. This is considered to be the rate of air waves and whether man will be able to go faster than this is doubted by some, while others declare that bombs will be able to carry passengers even faster. A bomb recently perfected in England will travel nearly four miles.

Patriotism Not Vanity
Miss Anne Morgan, philanthropist and reformer, said in a Y. W. C. A. address on patriotism in Atlantic City: "Patriotism doesn't mean bragging and vanity, though some patriots seem to think it does. I often say that it is as bad for a patriot to be vain about his country as it is for a woman to be vain about her charms."

"Yes, that kind of patriot is as bad as Mrs. Exe. Her husband, on a visit down here by the sea, watched her primping before the glass one day, and at the end of an hour he said: "Heavens and earth, how vain you are!"

"Without taking her eyes off her reflection in the glass, Mrs. Exe answered: "Indeed, I'm not vain! I don't think I'm half as lovely as I really am."
