

AMBUSHED AND SHOT

Last Saturday afternoon, at the Kingston ranch near Ancho, Claude Wilson, 48, was shot from ambush, while riding a horse not far from the Kingston residence. He was brought to Carrizozo by Mr. Hale of the Ancho Filling Station, taken to the Johnson Hospital, where with all pains taken to save his life, he died at about 3:30 Monday afternoon.

Mr. Wilson was a brother to Mrs. R. D. Kingston and came here with his wife a short time ago and had been living at the Kingston home. The parties have not been in the best of terms for some time, it is said, and about two weeks ago, Robert Kingston and Clyde Wilson engaged in a fight. In the melee, Kingston received a cut over the right eye which he claimed Wilson had done by shooting him, but others in positions to know, claim that Kingston attacked Wilson with a knife and in turn, Wilson struck Kingston over the eye with a heavy stick of wood.

This altercation caused bad blood to boil over, it is said, and the shooting of Saturday was the outcome of the foregoing trouble. Be that as it may, one man is dead and two men, Robert D. Kingston and son Paul are here in jail, where they are held to answer to the district court to the charge of murder.

Facts of the shooting, according to the dying statement of the dead man are as follows: He was riding a horse, when someone in ambush fired a shot, striking him in the back. He fell from the horse and as he lay on the ground, Robert D. Kingston came out from a covering with a gun in his hands and was accompanied by his son Paul, who was unarmed, Kingston, according to the statement, pointed the gun at the prostrate man, but the victim presumed that Kingston thought his work was accomplished, and did not fire the second shot. The case is of a very serious nature, as evidenced by the fact that Justice Harvey ordered both men returned to jail without bonds.

Mrs. Geo. L. Dillard

Miss Alene Thompson

left yesterday for Alvarado, Texas, to spend the remainder of the vacation period with the home folks.

The Vandals

Carrizozo-Socorro Highway Project — Outline of Work Accomplished

Federal Aid Project 126 - A, Lincoln County, is nearing completion, with but one more mile remaining to be graded, to be followed by the finishing up of the entire project. The entire piece of work is going ahead at a rapid rate of speed. During the last month, a 210 foot bridge at the east side of the Malpais has been finished and the 125 foot bridge on the west side, is almost completed. The structure crew is now building two concrete spillways near the end of the project.

The last mile of the project is very heavy mountain work, it being composed entirely of rocks but in spite of this, fair progress is being made with the work. When completed, this project will be one of the most scenic drives in New Mexico, due to the wonderful views at different points on the road. At one place more especially, a view may be had of the entire Malpais, north or south, besides a magnificent view of the Oscura mountain range.

As this is being written, a big 10-ton Mack truck, loaded with rock, went over a 52-foot fill, rolling over nine times before reaching the bottom, but due to the rigid construction of these heavy duty-trucks, the fall failed to injure or in any manner harm its running capacity. The driver jumped in time to escape injury. The writer witnessed another fall about a month ago, when a team of mules fell over one of these high embankments and landed, among the heavy cakes of charred lava at the bottom. In order to get the mules back to the works, a derrick was erected, hooks attached to heavy ropes, made fast around their bodies, in which condition the mules were drawn to the top. It will not be long, now, before Carrizozo can see and experience the good effects of this remarkable piece of engineering.

'The Lion and the Mouse'

Warner Bros.' extended run production, comes to the Crystal Theatre next Saturday for a run of 3 days:

This is an adaption of the famous Chas. Kleins play, which was the dominating stage success of its time, following the long Metropolitan run by the tremendous success of the road show. The screen version has caught all the verve of the original and has the added attraction of setting which is one of the advantages of the cinema.

The all-star cast is headed by tiny, captivating Mae McAvoy and Lionel Barrymore, acknowledged as one of the greatest actors of the generation.

Alec Francis, affectionately remembered for his work in "The Music Master" and "The Return of Peter Grimm," is prominently cast. Willie Collier's talented son plays juvenile, and the veteran of many hits, Emmett Corrigan, has a sympathetic role. All who saw comical Jack Akroyd as Alf in "The Better 'Ole," will welcome him in "The Lion and the Mouse."

Mr. and Mrs. E. Belio

were here from their ranch about 40 miles from Carrizozo and about 16 miles from Gran Quivira National Monument. Mr. Belio, like all other stockmen of our locality, has had a prosperous lambing season, his wool crop is the best for years and he is now sparring with the wool buyers for better prices.

Drowned in Big Flood

During the big flood in the Capitan district Monday, Marcelino Carabajal, sheep man of Jicarilla, was drowned. The way the news came here, was that Carabajal and a chum of his had been to Capitan and were returning to the Tucson mountains. On nearing a canyon filled with swift running water, Carabajal's companion was the first to attempt to cross, which he did with difficulty, but Carabajal making the attempt, was carried away with the flood. His body was found a few hours after the flood subsided, out on the Merchant pasture, two miles from where he attempted the crossing. The body was taken to the home of his father at the ranch, where burial was made Tuesday.

A Big Deal

was consummated the first of this week, whereby William Gallacher purchased the ranch and stock belonging to Mrs. Elizabeth Gallacher. Word reached here last week that such a deal had been made, but such was not the case. The news happened to be turned in before the deal was made and the papers were not made out, neither was there a transaction of any kind until Tuesday of this week at the First National Bank, with H. B. Hamilton acting as attorney for the administratrix.

FORT STANTON NEWS

Mrs. Boyd, the Misses Kane and Converse motored to Roswell last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Norton of El Paso were visitors Sunday, Mrs. Norton remaining over this week.

Dr. and Mrs. Reid returned from a very successful fishing trip to Elephant Butte dam.

Dr. and Mrs. Kunkel entertained Bill Clark and niece, Miss Litty, at dinner Friday evening. The two ladies visited the Carlsbad Cavern last week. Harry Litty and daughter are here from Memphis visiting Mr. Clark, who took them to Mescalero to witness the Indian dances last week.

Dr. and Mrs. Gallacher of El Paso were July 4th visitors.

Miss Kane, our chief nurse, will soon leave us, as she has been transferred to Boston. Her friends will miss her and all unite in wishing her success.

One of the largest crowds to witness a celebration here was on hand last Thursday for probably the best and most complete 4th of July programs ever offered in this vicinity. The crowd began streaming in at 9 a. m. and by the time the 8th Cavalry band started their concert at 10, the grounds were well filled. It was an appreciative and good-natured crowd, enjoying the enjoyable at every turn. The committee has asked the Outlook to express its thanks to the many friends who helped make this celebration a success. Some sent horses for the 75th anniversary; riders appeared to help in running them off, while others assisted in different ways. The Cavalry team took the first game 14-4, and also the second, 8-4. This was very exciting throughout. A new diamond was made out at the picnic grounds in order to save the long trip to the old lot for the games. The personnel, employees and patients all turned out and soon had the diamond in excellent shape. The Cavalry band was feature entertainment and these boys were on the job all day long. Alamogordo comes to the Fort for a game Sunday, 2:30 p. m., on the old diamond.

LOST—A bass with shoestring in his mouth. Finder please notify W.W.N., Ft. Stanton, N. M.

As a result of a cloudburst in the mountains, the bridge over the Bonito at Fort Stanton was washed out Monday night. Several bridges between here and Capitan were also carried away, inconveniencing traffic between these two places.

Sherwood Corn

came in from his ranch about 50 miles northeast of here last Sunday and returned, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Robt. Kiel and sons, Teddy and Jimmy, who are here from Tucson, Ariz., to spend the hot months with the Corn family. Mrs. Kiel says that there is no relief from the heat at night, as there is here, but on the contrary, nights are as hot there as in the daytime.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Burkett returned Tuesday from Abilene, Tex., where they spent the 4th among relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Hamilton

Wayne and Mrs. Hamilton of El Paso, spent Sunday in Carrizozo with relatives, returning to the border city Sunday evening.

ROMANTIC SOCORRO

(By Harry Carr)

In the Socorro Chieftain

One of the most interesting old places I have ever seen is Socorro, N. M. Motorists on the transcontinental trail pass through it. It is so old that nobody knows when it was started. Cabeza de Vaca stopped here about 1500. De Castilli and Estavanco, the negro, were here in 1536. Alvarado, Ibarro and De Vargas —

Coronado was here in his long search for the Seven Golden Cities of Cibola. De Vargas occupied one of the rooms of what is now the Mt. Carmel Convent.

Its name comes from the days of the Spanish conquest. One of the old conquistadores, fighting his way up the dreadful valley called "Journey of Death," found help and succor here from the attacks of wild Indians. Hence the name, Socorro.

There have been battles here almost without number. The soil is drenched with blood. It lies drowsing in its memories. Adobe houses with walls four feet thick. Peaceful old patios with old, old roses. Sighing cottonwoods, planted by long stilled hands. The old church of San Miguel, rebuilt in 1750 and founded no one knows how long before.

You can go through these old towns of New Mexico and see the passage of time registered in their walls. Old thick walls of the time of the Conquest—houses dating from the days of the gold rush—brick walls with a lot of gingerbread fixings to mark the Victorian age. The history of America began in these old towns. They were very old when the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth Rock.

Cows Didn't Bother Them

Saturday night about nine o'clock, three men were driving from the Ancho country towards Carrizozo at a break-neck speed and disregarded the presence of a cow which happened to be in the road ahead of them. The car struck the cow, threw her to one side with such terrific force, that it turned the car completely over, spilling the trio and bruising them up pretty badly; enough so, that they were brought to Dr. Johnson, who soon fixed them up and they went on their way rejoicing in the fact that they escaped with their lives. (But they still have a cow to pay for.)

Big Flood at Capitan

Something closely resembling a cloudburst occurred at Capitan Monday. The flood tore away the bridge north of the depot and the one about 200 yards east of the Titsworth store. Capitan people say it was the heaviest fall of rain they had seen for years. It was in this same downpour that Marcelino Carabajal lost his life, the particulars of which appear in another article. Later reports are to the effect that the torrent washed into the Titsworth warehouses, doing damage estimated at about $5,000. The water filled the warehouses to a depth of over 3 feet, soaking and ruining the goods. The upper warehouse was moved a distance of 12 feet by the force of the water. The country was flooded for miles around Capitan.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Dawes Making a Fine Start in London—Progress of Disarmament Plans.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GENERAL DAWES, our ambassador to Great Britain, is hitting it off admirably well in London so far, conducting himself and the affairs of his high office with the dignity and good sense that would be expected of him. Wednesday the ambassador and Mrs. Dawes attended their first court in Buckingham palace, and the former settled the "knee breeches" question by appearing in full dress evening attire with long trousers, abandoning the precedent set by his immediate predecessors and reverting to what is truly the correct court dress for American diplomats. Mrs. Arthur Henderson, wife of the new secretary for foreign affairs, presented Mrs. Dawes to Queen Mary, who was escorted by the prince of Wales because of the illness of King George. The ambassador's wife in turn presented a number of American women to her majesty.

In another matter that may seem trivial Ambassador Dawes has done what practically all Americans will admit is the correct thing. He has announced that during his incumbency the American embassy in London will be dry, this being the rule in his own home since long before prohibition, although he does not claim to be a teetotaler. In many of the American missions abroad liquor is still served, but the State department does not permit it to be included in expense bills. Otherwise the department does not interfere in the matter.

General Dawes was the guest of the British Empire Service League at a banquet, being entertained as a representative of America's soldiers and of the American Legion. He said he found in the league's constitution, "named as one of the fundamental objects for its formation, a statement of purpose which I trust is uppermost today in the hearts and consciences of the peoples of the world. It is to further the ideal of comradeship as opposed to force as the arbiter between nations. Let me say that that phrase expresses my chief instruction received from the President of the United States as I left for London to take up duties as American ambassador and enter into official relations with two great English-speaking nations. That phrase expresses the intent of the Kellogg treaty."

Hugh Gibson, American ambassador to Belgium, held a long conference with Ambassador Dawes in London, on order of the State department, and then both of them called on Prime Minister MacDonald. The subject of the talks was the progress of disarmament negotiations, the next move in which must come from Europe. Mr. MacDonald was busy all week preparing the speech from the throne which, it was expected, would announce the place and time for the proposed meeting of the powers for consideration of the disarmament question. In Washington it was believed the naval reduction conference would be held in London in the fall and that the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, would participate. The Italians, it is reported, are ready to enter the party, and this fact will force France to come in, although the French have been clinging to the idea that all disarmament deals should be managed by the League of Nations.

MAJ. RAMON FRANCO and three companions, who started from Spain on a projected flight to the United States with a stop at the Azores, disappeared immediately after leaving Carrizozo and were missing for a week. They had been practically given up for lost when an airplane from the British airplane carrier Hugs spotted them floating in their big Dornier seaplane near the Azores. The aviators were picked up alive and well and taken to Gibraltar. Their plane, slightly damaged, was hoisted aboard the carrier. News of the rescue was received in Spain with wild jubilation for hope for the men had almost been abandoned. The ships and airplanes of four nations had been seeking for them all the week.

DEBATES on the ratification of the French debt agreements will begin in the French parliament about July 14 and will keep Premier Poincare in Paris, to the meeting of the allies and Germany for adoption of the Young reparations plan, arrangement of evacuation of the Rhineland and cleaning up of other war matters is likely to be postponed until late in July. The United States will be invited to the conference, but so far as the proposed international bank of settlement and its operations are concerned, America will keep hands off. This is the decision of Secretary of State Stimson. He said there were no recent developments to change the government's position, which he stated on May 16 was that it does not desire to have any American official participate in the collection of German reparations through the bank or any other agency. Foreign Minister Stresemann of Germany, in an eloquent speech in the Reichstag, made it fairly certain that Germany will accept the Young plan if the allies agree to an early evacuation of the Rhineland, despite the hot opposition of the Nationalists.

RESUMPTION of diplomatic and trade relations with Soviet Russia will be one of the first acts of the Labor government of Great Britain. The Soviet regime was formally recognized by the former MacDonald government, but relations were broken off by the raid on Arcos house, headquarters in London of the Russian commercial mission, made by the "conservative" government in May, 1927. MacDonald and his cabinet are seeking the co-operation of all other parts of the British empire in their Russian policy, though their approval is not technically necessary. It was said the cabinet would not renew the trade agreement by which Russia is allowed to maintain a trading organization in London with diplomatic immunities.

FORMAL approval of the Kellogg peace pact was given by the Japanese privy council, but politics entered into the affair to such an extent that the downfall of Premier Tanaka and his government may follow. The expression used by the original signers of the treaty, "to the peoples of their respective peoples," was explained by the privy council as not interfering with the supreme power of the emperor to make treaties, but Count Uchida, who signed the pact for Japan last August, resigned from the council, asserting he had initiated it thinking that the phrase meant merely "for the sake of their respective peoples." All of which is rather obscure to Americans. The fact is that the enemies of Baron Tanaka are using the treaty as a weapon to force his resignation.

NEWS of the accord between Mexico and the Catholic church was spread all over Mexico, by mail, airplane, radio and every other means, and was greeted with rejoicing by the people. Bells were rung, prisoners released and a general holiday enjoyed. Mgr. Pascual Diaz, who had just been made archbishop of Mexico, and Archbishop Ruiz of Michoacan conferred with the government officials and tried to make arrangements for the reopening of all churches on Sunday, the day of St. Peter and St. Paul. However the department of the interior said it would be impossible to complete the necessary formalities before about July 10 and that resumption of the normal functioning of the Catholic church throughout the country would not take place fully before that date. On Friday services were resumed at the shrine of the Virgin of Guadalupe, near Mexico City, the ceremonies being extremely impressive and magnificent. Priests who had across the border during the troubles are fast returning.

HENRY F. FLETCHER, American ambassador to Italy, has sent his resignation to the President and it has been accepted. Mr. Fletcher, who will sail for home on August 2, has been in the diplomatic service for thirty-one years and has been our representative in Rome for five years. He says he will spend some months in his home in Greensville, Pa., and that he has no other plans for the future. But it is thought in Washington he will be a candidate for the senate to fill the seat which so far has been denied to William S. Vare. Whatever motion the senate takes in the Vare case, a successor to Vare will be elected not later than November, 1932, and maybe sooner if the seat becomes vacant. Mr. Fletcher accompanied Mr. Hoover on his South American trip and many thought he would be selected for secretary of state. It is said he wanted either that place or the ambassadorship to London or Paris. His work as a diplomat has been notable.

REPUBLICANS of Virginia seem to put themselves entirely in the hands of Bishop James Cannon, Jr. and his cohorts of dry Democrats. They met in state convention last week in Richmond and appointed for governor the name Dr. William M. Brown of Washington and Lee university who was selected by the anti-Smith Democratic convention at Roanoke. Not only that, but they also named the entire state slate put up by the Cannon meeting.

Virginia's reorganized form of government, as put into effect under the administration of Gov. Harry Byrd, was denounced by Col. Henry W. Anderson of the Hoover law enforcement commission, the convention keynote. The speaker urged the repeal of many laws, especially the ones dealing with elections and Democratic primaries. Professor Brown was put in nomination by C. Bascom Slomp.

IF PLANS submitted to stockholders are accepted, as it is not doubted America is to have a great merger of aviation companies with assets of more than $70,000,000. The concerns to be amalgamated are the Wright Aeronautical corporation, the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor company, the Keystone Aircraft company and three or more affiliated concerns. The new company, which will be known as the Curtiss-Wright corporation, will embrace two separate groups of manufacturing companies, the Curtiss group, headed by C. M. Keys, and the Wright group, headed by Richard F. Hoyt, vice president of Hayden, Stone and company and chairman of the Wright Aeronautical corporation. Mr. Hoyt will be chairman of the board of the new company, and Mr. Keys will be president.

The company will have an authorized capitalization of twelve million shares of no par value stock of which two million shares will be class A stock, entitled to a preferential payment of $2 a share annually, and which will be convertible, share for share, into common stock and callable by the company at $40 a share. The remaining 10,000,000 shares will be common stock.

PRESIDENT HOOVER approved the promotion of Brig. Gen. Ralph H. Van Deman to a major general to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of Maj. Gen. Harry A. Smith, commander of the Seventh corps area. Brig. Gen. Frank T. McCoy will be appointed a major general upon the retirement of Van Deman, September 3, at the statutory age of sixty-four. Col. George C. Shaw will fill the vacancy in the brigadier general list.

GOLD medals have been awarded to fifteen Boy Scouts who risked their lives to save the lives of others, according to announcement by the National Court of Honor of which Daniel C. Beard is chairman. The lads thus honored are:

- Sidney Hershowitz, Washington, D. C.; Lawrence Bee, Provo, Utah; William Beant, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.; William G. Holford, Jr., Portland Ore.; Willie Evans, Rockford, Tenn.; Thom as Messinger, Brookline, N. Y.; Marlow White, Pensacola, Fla.; Larry Ribak, Sharon, Pa.; Ted Derrick, Rockwood, Tenn.; William David Johnson, Park Ridge, Ill.; J. A. Acuff, Mid dleboro, Ky.; William J. Martin, Brookfield, Mo.; James Lucas, Macon Ga., and Wilson Schooley, Mercer, Wis.
- A gold honor medal was sent to the parents of Scoutmaster James T. Water Wright of Rockwood, Tenn., who gave his own life to save boys in his troop from drowning during the Tennessee and Alabama floods.

South West PARAGRAPHS

Births in Arizona exceeded deaths by 312 during April, according to figures released in Phoenix from the office of Dr. R. J. Stroud, state superintendent of public health. Births during the month numbered 780 and deaths were given as 468.

Ernest McCray, formerly of Fort Defiance, recently arrived in Rice, Ariz., to take over the duties of superintendent of the United States Indian school there. He succeeds Wm. E. Snook, who has been transferred to the Hopi Indian school in northern Arizona.

Construction work will start soon on the new $40-acre municipal airport at Clayton, N. M., which will be constructed under the bill of the last New Mexico legislature which permits municipalities in New Mexico to lease state lands for airport purposes for a period of twenty-five years.

James Black, convicted of manslaughter in the shooting of Charles B. Otey at Morimor Lake last July, was given a suspended sentence of from nine to ten years in state penitentiary. Judge Crosby of Flagstaff suspended sentence as long as Black was on "good behavior."

In an attempt to curb accidents, the Arizona state corporation commission has amended state aviation laws so that in the future planes in Arizona carrying passengers or freight for hire, shall be federal licensed and all pilots of such planes must carry federal licenses.

Call for the summer meeting of the sheep and goat raisers of Arizona has been sent out by A. A. Johns, president of the Arizona Wool Growers association. This year's meeting will be held in Flagstaff on July 9 and 10. Flagstaff has been the summer convention city for state sheep owners for many years.

The new $15,000 dairy building at the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts, in Las Cruces, is practically ready for occupancy. It will house the offices of the dairy husbandry department, a dairy manufacturing laboratory and a farm dairy laboratory in addition to testing rooms for all dairy products.

KOB, radio broadcasting station of the New Mexico State college, has been granted permission to increase its sending power from 10,000 to 30,000 watts. The increased power permit makes KOB by far the most powerful educational station in the United States and places it among the strongest stations in the country.

The Phoenix street car system, rebuilt at a cost of three-fourths million dollars, is reported on a paying basis, even at the present 5-cent fare. The average daily income is $763, compared with $549 last year. Service frequency has been almost doubled since the start of operation of modern one-man steel cars and the lines are much more popular than before.

Callup, N. M., is all set for the 1929 Inter-Tribal Indian Ceremonial, August 23, 24 and 25. The big show is unique in that it is put on by the Indians themselves, twenty-two tribes usually being represented. Being the "Indian capital" the aborigines gather in Gallup from all the nearby reservations and pueblos of the southwest to display their arts, crafts, ceremonies and sports.

Tourists and vacationists as well as operators and residents of the more permanent automobile camps in Arizona are included in a campaign of cleanliness as a safeguard to the public health, inaugurated by R. J. Stroud, superintendent of the public health department of Arizona. The appeal is to keep all camps, whether temporary or otherwise, clean and sanitary, and free from litter.

The New Mexico winter wheat crop should more than double that of last year according to forecasts just issued from the office of R. F. Hare, agricultural statistician, in Las Cruces. The condition of the crop in the state, he says, is 84 per cent as compared with 65 per cent on June 1, 1928. This would indicate a production of 3,612,000 bushels, which compares with 3,785,000 indicated by May 1 condition.

The graves of Indian fighters, early day prospectors and other pioneers of the southwest, which are found in the Lincoln National Forest, are to receive special markings under present plans of the forest service. O. Fred Arthur, supervisor, has asked that parties knowing of early day burials within the Lincoln National Forest report them to the forestry office, together with location of the grave and a short sketch of the man's life. The movement for the marking of the graves of pioneers was started through a resolution adopted by the Historical Society of Arizona for the marking of graves throughout the southwest.

A fund of $2,000 is now available for the construction of the swimming pool at the New Mexico State college following an intensive campaign among students and faculty.

Vandals are taking away specimens from Chalcedony petrified forest by the carload. Sam G. Ballie told members of Phoenix Rotary at a luncheon of the club. Mr. Ballie said that on a recent visit to Heberbrook he learned that four carloads of the wood had been shipped to San Diego. He added that arrangements had been made to ship sixteen carloads of the wood.

Athenian Vase Prized

Possession of Museum

An Athenian red-figured krater, a large ornamented vase used for mixing wine and water, of special importance owing to the fact that it is signed by the maker, is among the recent accessions to the collections of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. The wine jar bears in Greek the inscription, "Pollon painted it," and is the only known one signed by this artist.

The piece stands two feet in height and is of about 420 B. C. The vase, unfortunately, had been broken and has had to be put together again with restorations of missing parts, but this has been accomplished without serious disfigurement to the decoration, which is in unusually fine style. Four, possibly five, other vases have been attributed to Pollon—one in Naples, one in Bonn, one, with satyrs painted on it and another with athletes, at the Metropolitan museum.

Chinese Marital Troubles

Chinese women, eagerly striking out for freedom, have hit a snag. Divorces have appeared as a phase of the emancipation of women. Now that the sexes, among educated classes, have been mingling socially and professionally, it is inevitable that men who married under the old system of childhood betrothals should meet women who make them forget their wives. Divorces are easy to obtain in China, but second husbands are not. A discarded wife, therefore, travels a solitary, hopeless path.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1876, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were dramatic phylax and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings. The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who need it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. As your doctor writes "Syrup Pepsin" Dept. 211, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

SYNOPSIS

Capt. Francois de Vigny, serving with Maximilian's army in Mexico, tells the story. A roystering group of officers is discussing La Anita, who, rumor says, has lured French officers to death or desertion. Summoned by Maximilian to make explanation, De Vigny undertakes to deliver the message to La Anita. At La Anita's home De Vigny meets Colonel Lopez, Mexican officer and the girl's cousin, Pablo-Madrella, who bears a wonderful resemblance to De Vigny, except that he wears a beard. Answered that Anita should be called before the emperor, Madrella forces a duel on De Vigny, in which the Mexican is wounded. Assisting Madrella to his carriage, De Vigny picks up a paper that falls from his pocket. It proves to be a pass, granting Madrella passage through the Mexican lines. Laid before Maximilian, it is, of course, Madrella's death warrant, since it proves him a spy. Questioned by Maximilian, La Anita denies luring French officers to danger, and is given her freedom. De Vigny secures leave of absence, planning, while Madrella is grounded and under guard, to grow a beard and impersonate him, with the idea of securing information of Juarez' movements. Dressed as Madrella, he enters La Anita's home by stealth and overhears a conversation between Madrella and Lopez which proves the latter a traitor to Maximilian. Lopez has secured Madrella's release and the latter is leaving at once for Juarez' camp. He reaches Cuernavaca about the same time as the real Madrella. An unsuccessful attempt is made by Madrella to kill De Vigny. Believing him to be Madrella, De Vigny is welcomed by Juarez.

General Escobedo studied a lean black cigar. "I have always believed, excellency," said he, "that Miguel Lopez is a broken reed. He was a traitor first to the Republic when because of the glamour of court, he cast his allegiance over to Maximilian; he was a traitor to the Empire when he came back to us, and now . . . Once a traitor, always a traitor."

The face of Benito Juarez was as a thunder-cloud. "There will come a time when I shall deal with Lopez; sufficient unto that time. You have served us well, Pablo—as you have always served—and Mexico will reward you." He spoke to General Escobedo: "The attack on Cuernavaca will be deferred at least for the few days necessary to check up our capable Pablo's persistence."

In such manner had my frail fabric of lies taken root, and, flowering swiftly in my apparent sincerity, borne fruit. I breathed a silent prayer of thanks to the god of luck.

"You will want to see your disciples—eh Pablo?" Juarez questioned.

"My—"

"Your pupils, Leroux and the Alcatraz lad, Besancon. I have sent for them."

I laughed. "Of course, excellency; I had forgotten them."

Now my heart stood still. Were they for me, or against me? Knowing me so well, would they recognize Captain de Vigny behind the bruises and the whiskers; and if they did, what would be their attitude? My own safety, and the fate of Cuernavaca, rested on this issue.

They appeared almost before I had drawn myself for the shock, and, like twin automatons, came forward, taking each a hand. "Senor-Madrella," cried Leroux, "how did you leave the city?"

Juarez laughed. "Ever youth is looking toward the city?"

"Each day," I said, studying the face of the young man who had come from St. Simon, and whose people were my people, "Mexico becomes less of the Empire and more of the Republic. The gilt on the emperor's crown grows thin." As Madrella had already said this I had the right—being also Madrella—to repeat it without any sense of plagiarism.

"And—and glorious La Anita?" ventured Besancon.

"Always she grows more lovely," said I, with fine enthusiasm, "if such be possible. Now that the beautiful Empress Carlotta has gone to Europe I look to see the emperor—"

Laughter drowned out my sentence, and I was glad, for even as a jest the thing was unbecoming because his majesty loved me.

"These two young men," said Juarez, "must have been a grievous loss to the Empire."

"It is the type that we require, excellency," I said; and, as Leroux smiled happily, my rage was so great I could have struck him dead. How could this fair boy of Picardy have fallen so low? Had the love of La Anita done this? I could not believe it. In spite of all the evidence before me I could not picture that lovely lady guilty of a conscious wrong.

"You will tell us—won't you?" asked Besancon eagerly; and, gaining permission from the President the three of us—arm in arm—went out, making our way to the two-room adobe house that served as the temporary abode of Captains Leroux and Besancon.

There we found food and wine, wine of a pleasing richness.

"But I found in the gray depths of the eyes of Rene Leroux a new and ominous light. He searched my face with a steady questioning look. A sudden chill of menace filled the room. I could not fail to feel it, and doubt and a little fear possessed me. Had he recognized me; and if so, what might I expect? When he spoke there was a calculating enmity in his voice:

"How like the Count de Vigny you are, senior!"

"Others have noticed it," said I.

"Without the beard and—bruises, my dear Madrella, you are Captain Francois, a man high in the estimation of Maximilian. No one knows him better than I. We were raised in St. Simon—he and I—and I should know him anywhere."

I finished my wine and set the empty glass upon the table. Leroux knew me; in my mind there was no doubt of that. He faced me across the heavy table, and Besancon sat on my right.

That a fight impended I was certain, and that I was no match for the two of them was a thing of equal certainty. I knew little of Besancon, and had, therefore, no set opinion concerning him, but I had harbored a healthy hope that Rene Leroux, a clever and resourceful rascal, and an old and tried friend of mine, might be engaged in some crafty game to aid the emperor. But my hope died when I studied him, for his eyes were cold and his smile was one of evil satisfaction.

"Do you imagine, senior," said he, "what General Juarez will do when he suspects that you are not Madrella? If it is shown that, instead of Madrella, you are really the favorite of Maximilian—"

"In that case," said I, "Captain de Vigny, because of the defection of his dearest friend, will stand before a firing squad."

In the deep silence that followed this speech of mine Leroux, sitting long in thought, plucked his lip with thumb and forefinger. My appeal seemed to move him not at all.

A red rage overwhelmed me. I forgot my own danger in the bitter discouragement that the treachery of this, my friend, had brought upon me. France, in all her glorious history, has had few traitors. I knew that, brought before Benito Juarez with the finger of suspicion pointing toward me, I was doomed; besides, there was Cuernavaca, and the tragic consequences of its fall. Much, aside from my own life, depended upon me. I could go down fighting, at least.

Taking a page from the book of Don Felix Perez, I thrust the table suddenly away from me. Overturning it, I pinned Leroux underneath; so, for a few seconds, I had but one man to vanquish. Him I found to be a serious problem, for, even as I leaped to my feet, dragging forth Madrella's pistol, Besancon threw himself upon me.

The shock of contact buried us to the floor. Struggling free, I regained my feet again, and, with gun extended, faced Leroux, who, having extricated himself from the table, came at me with the light of high adventure in his eyes. He must have known that death was imminent, yet I found no flicker of fear in his dancing gray eyes; and I was glad, at that moment of peril, glad that this French lad would go to his death with a smile on his handsome face.

Even as my finger tightened Besancon was on me again. The gun, knocked from my hand, clattered to the floor, where it lay undisturbed while the three of us—locked in at-lent, desperate embrace—fought in the gathering gloom.

I struck out blindly, my fist meeting yielding flesh. An arm, encircling my head, tightened in a suffocating grip. I sank my teeth in the tensed muscle of a forearm, drawing a yell of pain and anger from Leroux. A hard flat added other bruises to those my face already bore.

We stumbled over a chair and went down in a scrambling heap, only to rise again, like a six-armed, six-legged monster in some grotesque convulsion.

"Sacred name of a pig," cried Besancon, "what a powerful brute he is!"

I laughed aloud. My clutching fingers found his throat, closed and held on. I would show them.

Gasping, he tore at my wrists, he kicked; he screamed in a muffled, choking, agonized voice: "Rene—Rene!"

Now Leroux tried without avail to break my hold. The three of us went down again, with the limp form of Besancon underneath. I would hold on until he ceased to struggle, then I would reach for the throat of the other traitor.

Leroux, having striven desperately and vainly to pull me from my victim, stepped clear and swung a heavy chair. I tried to dodge that blow and failed; I tried to take the force of it upon my shoulder, and only half succeeded.

I saw the flashing lights of spearing stars, and I heard the thunder of a thousand seas; my nerveless fingers, groping blindly, found only emptiness, and, falling immeasurable distances, I came finally to utter silence, darkness, and a great and abiding peace.

Voices aroused me, voices very faint at first, but clearing gradually as the roaring in my head abated.

"No," said the other; "we cannot kill him. He is De Vigny; and when Juarez sees him, and we explain to the general how well known the captain is to us, a firing squad . . ."

I opened my eyes slowly. A huge oil lamp, hanging from a cross-beam, lighted the meager room. I sat, bound and helpless, in a spacious chair, and Leroux and Besancon faced each other across the table under the light.

My head ached, and the bonds cut me cruelly; my body was the abiding place of all the pains in the world.

Plant Seizes On and Digests Animal Food

At Kew gardens, the ancient horticultural center of Great Britain, a new house has been recently erected for the accommodation of an extensive and interesting collection of insect-eating or carnivorous plants which includes specimens from all parts of the world. What is called "sun-dews" from Australia and South Africa have a very remarkable facility for discriminating between morsels of food and one which is worthless for its purposes. If a fragment of meat or of hard-boiled egg is placed on a leaf, the tentacles gradually bend over, the edges of the leaf smothering in curling, until presently the morsel is completely enveloped and the process of digestion begins.

When this is over the leaf flattens out to its old position, the tentacles regain their erectness, the tips become globular with the "dew," and the trap is ready for the next victim.

But if a particle of sand or any other inorganic substance is placed on the leaf the plant pays no attention to the intrusion.

Blankets From India

The finest blankets ever made are those produced in Mysore, India. Though three yards square, one of these blankets when rolled up can be passed through a bamboo rod.

Real Navajo blankets are made of all wool, taken from the flocks of sheep tended by the Navajo Indians in New Mexico and spun and woven by them entirely by hand. These blankets are as durable as they are attractive.

Laugh for the Bride

It must be hard for a bride to keep from laughing right out loud during the ceremony when she thinks how she has let the groom believe he has had to drag her up to the altar when he didn't have any more chance than a rabbit of getting away.—(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

My fate now was a thing of minor importance. I had failed; after an effort which had so nearly approached success, I had failed. The defection of these two soldiers of France hurt me—a hurt that seemed to reach my very soul. And the Senorita Arrellano! Never again would I look upon her lovely face, nor hear the music of her voice! I sighed, and Leroux, hearing me, approached.

"Does my disposition include torture?" I asked.

He apologized, untying my bonds while Besancon stood back, gub held ready. Freed, I lifted my shoulders, stretched my arms and legs, breathed deeply.

My face, somehow, had an unfamiliar feel. I raised a hand and cried out in dismay. My beard was gone! "We have done our best," said Leroux, pride and deprecation in his voice. "For swift and secret burbling we may not have done so badly."

Now I held to my chin, horror doubtless showing in my eyes.

"Be not downcast," sympathized Leroux; "what is a mere beard? Cheer up; the loss of your beard can only anticipate that of your life by a few paltry hours. There will scarce be time to mourn; and the beard, friend of ours, would have been a serious hindrance to our plans. We take you before Benito Juarez, and we say to him: 'This man is not Madrella, he is Captain de Vigny; do not we, excellency, know De Vigny, have we not served three years with him under the Empire, could any one be better known to us?'"

"And you will do this, Leroux—for what reason?"

His gray eyes studied me. I found in them a gentle raillery, as well as a smoldering light of hatred. "We will do this because, primarily, we would have his excellency march on Cuernavaca, and because, senior, we have waited—Louis Besancon and I—"

"But Cuernavaca," I cried, "will—"

"Yes," Besancon interrupted harshly, "Cuernavaca. We heard you tell Benito Juarez about the defending forces of Cuernavaca, about the trap that Maximilian has laid; and when we prove you De Vigny we will have proved your story false." He gave a short hard laugh, and, snatching the gun under my very nose, continued: "We have waited for this hour, Pablo, weary weeks we have waited; and, when you have said 'Good morning' to the firing squad, and 'Good-by' to this beautiful earth, and General Juarez has led his interdemolition army into the trap that our emperor has set for him, then the true story of our treachery may be told."

"Wait," I said, "wait—wait!" My brain was seething.

"Did you imagine, amigo mio," said Leroux, a deep and vibrant tenderness in his voice, "that we, who have served France, would ever offer service to her enemies? Did you think that we, whom the emperor has honored with his love, could ever turn our faces from him?"

"Ah—Rene!" I gasped, "verily hast thou delivered me into the hands of my enemies; yet, because of what thou hast told me, I am glad—glad!"

"He speaks to us in French—in French—Louise; and he says 'Rene.'"

Leroux caught hold of my shoulder, looking deep into my eyes, a hungry eagerness in his fine face. I tried to smile, but the bruises doubtless made of it a sorry caricature. Finally he spoke in a gasping whisper: "Mon Dieu—it is Francois!"

"No—no!" said Besancon.

"None other, my infant."

Now they were upon me, with arms around my shoulders and voices soft and rich with tenderness and sympathy. "Had we not been so sure you were Madrella we would have recognized you out of hand."

And I nearly killed you with the chair! But why do you thus impersonate Madrella, and put your precious life in jeopardy?"

"First," said I, "to block the attack on Cuernavaca—which is pitifully undermined—and last, to see two noble sons of France."

"While we," exclaimed Rene Leroux, "were planning what we deemed a clever trick upon Madrella. How the god of chance must laugh at us!"

"Where then, is your twin—the estimable Pablo?" questioned Besancon.

"I left him and the fat Manuel studying the cracks in the floor of my room at the Hotel Montezuma, for the head of each had stopped the flight of a heavy stool."

"Name of a name," cried Leroux, "will wonders never cease!"

"If, perchance, he comes back to life—of which there is a serious doubt—and elects to follow me, he will find, barring his progress, Pasquet, a worthy man who has served me well. I think, however, that because of the possibilities he has doubtless seen already in the duplication of Madrella, he will return with all speed to the city. But I must know why two good officers of the Empire have cast their lot with the forces of revolution."

Leroux grinned. "It was an opportunity, Francois, whereby a soldier of France might work from within the enemies' lines; and, biding his time, turn a victory to defeat. That time, as yet, has not arrived, though our hopes are high."

"Some day," said Besancon, "a great battle between the Empire and the Republic will hang in the balance; then will come our opportunity—and the Republic will lose!"

"Win or lose, my friends, your lives are forfeit."

"A small payment, in very truth, Francois, if we but save the Empire, which totters even now; but you must tell us all that has befallen. We are hungry for tidings of the city."

So I spoke of my meeting with La Anita, and, though I strove desperately for control, my voice trembled.

Besancon laughed. "Another sacrifice upon the altar of love!"

"Aye," said I frankly; "the Senorita Arrellano is the one great love of my life!"

I described the duel, and the sorry figure that Madrella had made; I touched lightly upon the Senorita's appearance before his majesty, on the growth of De Vigny's beard, and I gave with great detail an account of my secret visit to the house on Avenida Flores. I spoke of the encounter with the Indian mozo, Agostino, and of La Anita's farewell to the pseudo Madrella.

"Even a proxy kiss is better than no kiss at all," said Leroux.

I told them of the failure of Neville, and I pictured him, silent and still, beside the road. I explained Pasquet, and I described the defeat of Manuel and Madrella in Cuernavaca. And, lastly, I carried them through my experience with Don Felix Perez, the gargoyle of Trelonta.

"It is sad," said Besancon, "about Neville; a fine soldier and a good friend. Yet you, Francois, have followed a lucky star, though I fear you have added nothing to your prestige with the lady, for your efforts have been all for the emperor."

"My worship for La Anita," said I, "is, I know, quite hopeless; yet it makes of me none the less a soldier of the Empire. One must have a goal. It is something to love her, something to have known her. The fact of her existence is a constant incitement to endeavor."

Leroux filled a glass and raised it high, Besancon doing likewise. "May your star ever shine, and the god of luck keep his smiling face toward you; and, Francois, may the Senorita—"

Rene Leroux never finished that sentence; had he done so I think this tale of mine would never have been written. He must have seen in my face the sudden dismay and horror that possessed me, for he stopped, and for ten interminable seconds the silence of a tomb descended upon us. His voice had drowned the slight sound of an opening door, and Benito Juarez, silhouetted against the brilliant moonlit night, stood in the doorway.

I stared, frozen into futile motionlessness. Leroux turned his head, and, seeing the general, set the brimming glass of wine—with a dreary deliberation of gesture—upon the table. His hand was so steady that not a drop was spilled, and I marveled at the control of the man, for this was the end. Beardless, I was De Vigny—and Rene had called me Francois!

Juarez came slowly into the room and stopped beside the table. He looked questionably at each of us, while we stood helpless, waiting for the world to fall. "Is this a—barber, senores; and if so, who, may I ask, is the barber?"

I found my voice. "It is a sort of—game, excellency," said I, searching my very soul for a saving thought.

"Yes," added Besancon, "a—kind of game." His right hand had sought the pocket of his blouse, wherein rested the pistol; and I felt that General Benito Juarez, at that moment, was closer to his death than I have ever been, which is very near indeed.

The general's smile was not a pleasant thing to see. "Is this game, senior, something that your general—"

I thought, for an instant, that Rene Leroux had gone mad with the strain of the thing, for he broke out into uncontrollable laughter. He leaned over the table in an ecstasy of mirth; and, as we waited, Juarez's face grew ominous.

"Your pardon, excellency," gasped Leroux, "I will explain—in a moment." He stopped and drew a long breath. He pointed toward me. "This beardless man is Captain de Vigny!"

"Mad!" I said. . . . Mad!

"Indeed," Juarez urged; "what is the next move in your—game?"

"Pablo Madrella," continued Rene, "and Francois de Vigny look very much alike. We, who have seen them, know; and upon this fact we build a plan that shall enable your excellency to be advised in advance of the moves of Maximilian."

"Your explanation does not explain, Captain Leroux; proceed!" The general's eyes had never left my face.

"Some time in the distant past, excellency, the families of Captain de Vigny and Pablo Madrella must have come in contact, for the resemblance between them is so startling that—beardless and attired in the service of the emperor—our Pablo might walk the streets of Mexico City and those who are acquainted with Francois de Vigny would accept him as their friend. So, we shave him, and, in the city, he will be in touch with the forces of the Empire. Is it not an excellent plan?"

The general smiled.

"I was proud of Leroux. How nicely had he brought us through this impasse!"

EZEKIEL TEACHES PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 33:1-26.
GOLDEN TEXT—Every one of us shall give an account of himself to God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Ezekiel's Message of Warning.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Ezekiel's Message of Warning.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Does God Take Note of My Life? YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Individual Accountability to God.

I, Ezekiel's Responsibility (vv. 1-9).
The commission of the prophet is now reviewed. Hitherto his utterances were mainly of a threatening character, having as their objective the turning of the people from their wicked ways. They refused to heed the prophet's words, the result of which was the falling of God's judgment upon them. In their complete captivity and the destruction of Jerusalem. When it became clear that the people would not heed God's warnings through the prophet, the prophet was to be silent—dumb. This tragic situation was portrayed through the death of Ezekiel's wife. Awful as this blow was, he was to desist from weeping, showing that even natural sorrow was not to be expressed at the time of God's awful judgment.

After the renewal of the prophet's commission, his messages were mainly consolatory. His responsibility is set forth under the figure of a watchman. God gave him this position. Every minister and Sunday School teacher is a watchman. Indeed, upon every believer has been imposed certain responsibilities. Two things are required of a watchman,

1. To hear the word at God's mouth (v. 7).

The source of the message of every minister and Sunday school teacher is God's Holy Word. As the prophet did not originate his message but received it at God's mouth, so should it be with every minister.

2. To sound the warning (v. 7).

After hearing God's message he was to proclaim it to the people. The watchman's duty is both to hear and to speak. The people are to be warned of the impending danger. Failure to sound the alarm makes the watchman guilty of the blood of the sinner (v. 8). After the warning the sinner carries his own guilt (v. 9).

11. God's Attitude Toward the Sinner (vv. 10, 11).

God had declared in His word that unfaithfulness on the part of His people would cause them to "perish among the heathen," to "pine away in their iniquity" (Lev. 26:33, 39).

In view of this pronouncement, some were disposed to say that their case was hopeless. To meet this attitude of despair, the prophet assured them that God had no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that His sincere desire was for the wicked to turn from his way and live. Regardless of what their past had been He assured them that the future was bright, but God's command and plea is, "Turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

111. The Sinner's Personal Responsibility (vv. 12-20).

God had created the members of the race as volitional beings, possessing freedom of choice. They have moral discernment, enabling them to distinguish between right and wrong. The following principles govern the sinner and the watchman:

1. Past righteousness will not avail for present sins (v. 12).

When a righteous man turns to do iniquity, his past seeming righteousness will be of no avail.

2. Past sins do not make impossible present acceptance with God (vv. 12-14).

By virtue of the law of habit, every sinful act makes it harder for the sinner to repent, but God's mercy and enabling grace are such that if the sinner repents, God will restore.

3. Restitution required (vv. 15, 16).

The proof of penitence is that so far as possible the sinner make amends for wrongs done. There is no merit in the act of restitution, but such act helps the individual to overcome his besetting sin.

4. God's ways are equal (vv. 17, 20).

God holds man responsible for his own deeds. The child is not condemned because of the deeds of its father. This does not do away with the law of heredity. Regardless of what one's past life has been, God's grace in Jesus Christ blots out his record and he stands accepted in the Beloved.

On the Job

While Moses was caring for the sheep God's great commission came to him. If God has any great thing for us to do, we need not fear that He will miss us because we are busy with our common tasks.

Belief in Jesus Christ

The condition of salvation is that kind of belief in Jesus Christ which authenticates itself in repentance for the past and in amendments of life for the future.—L. L. Noble.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

The Mark of the Beast

Governor Franklin Roosevelt of New York in a 4th of July speech at Tammany Hall, took occasion to score the government, or in other words, the Republican administration, for, as he termed it, slipping away from the constitution, and said that some 'Moses' should be nominated—and of course elected—on the Democratic ticket who would make some radical changes so that the country would not go to hell entirely.

He also said that a complete change in the constitution was also needed, and that must be left to the Democrats to do. He didn't say that the Governor of the great state of New York should be the next nominee, but he modestly left that to the Tammanyites to broadcast to the people, which they did.

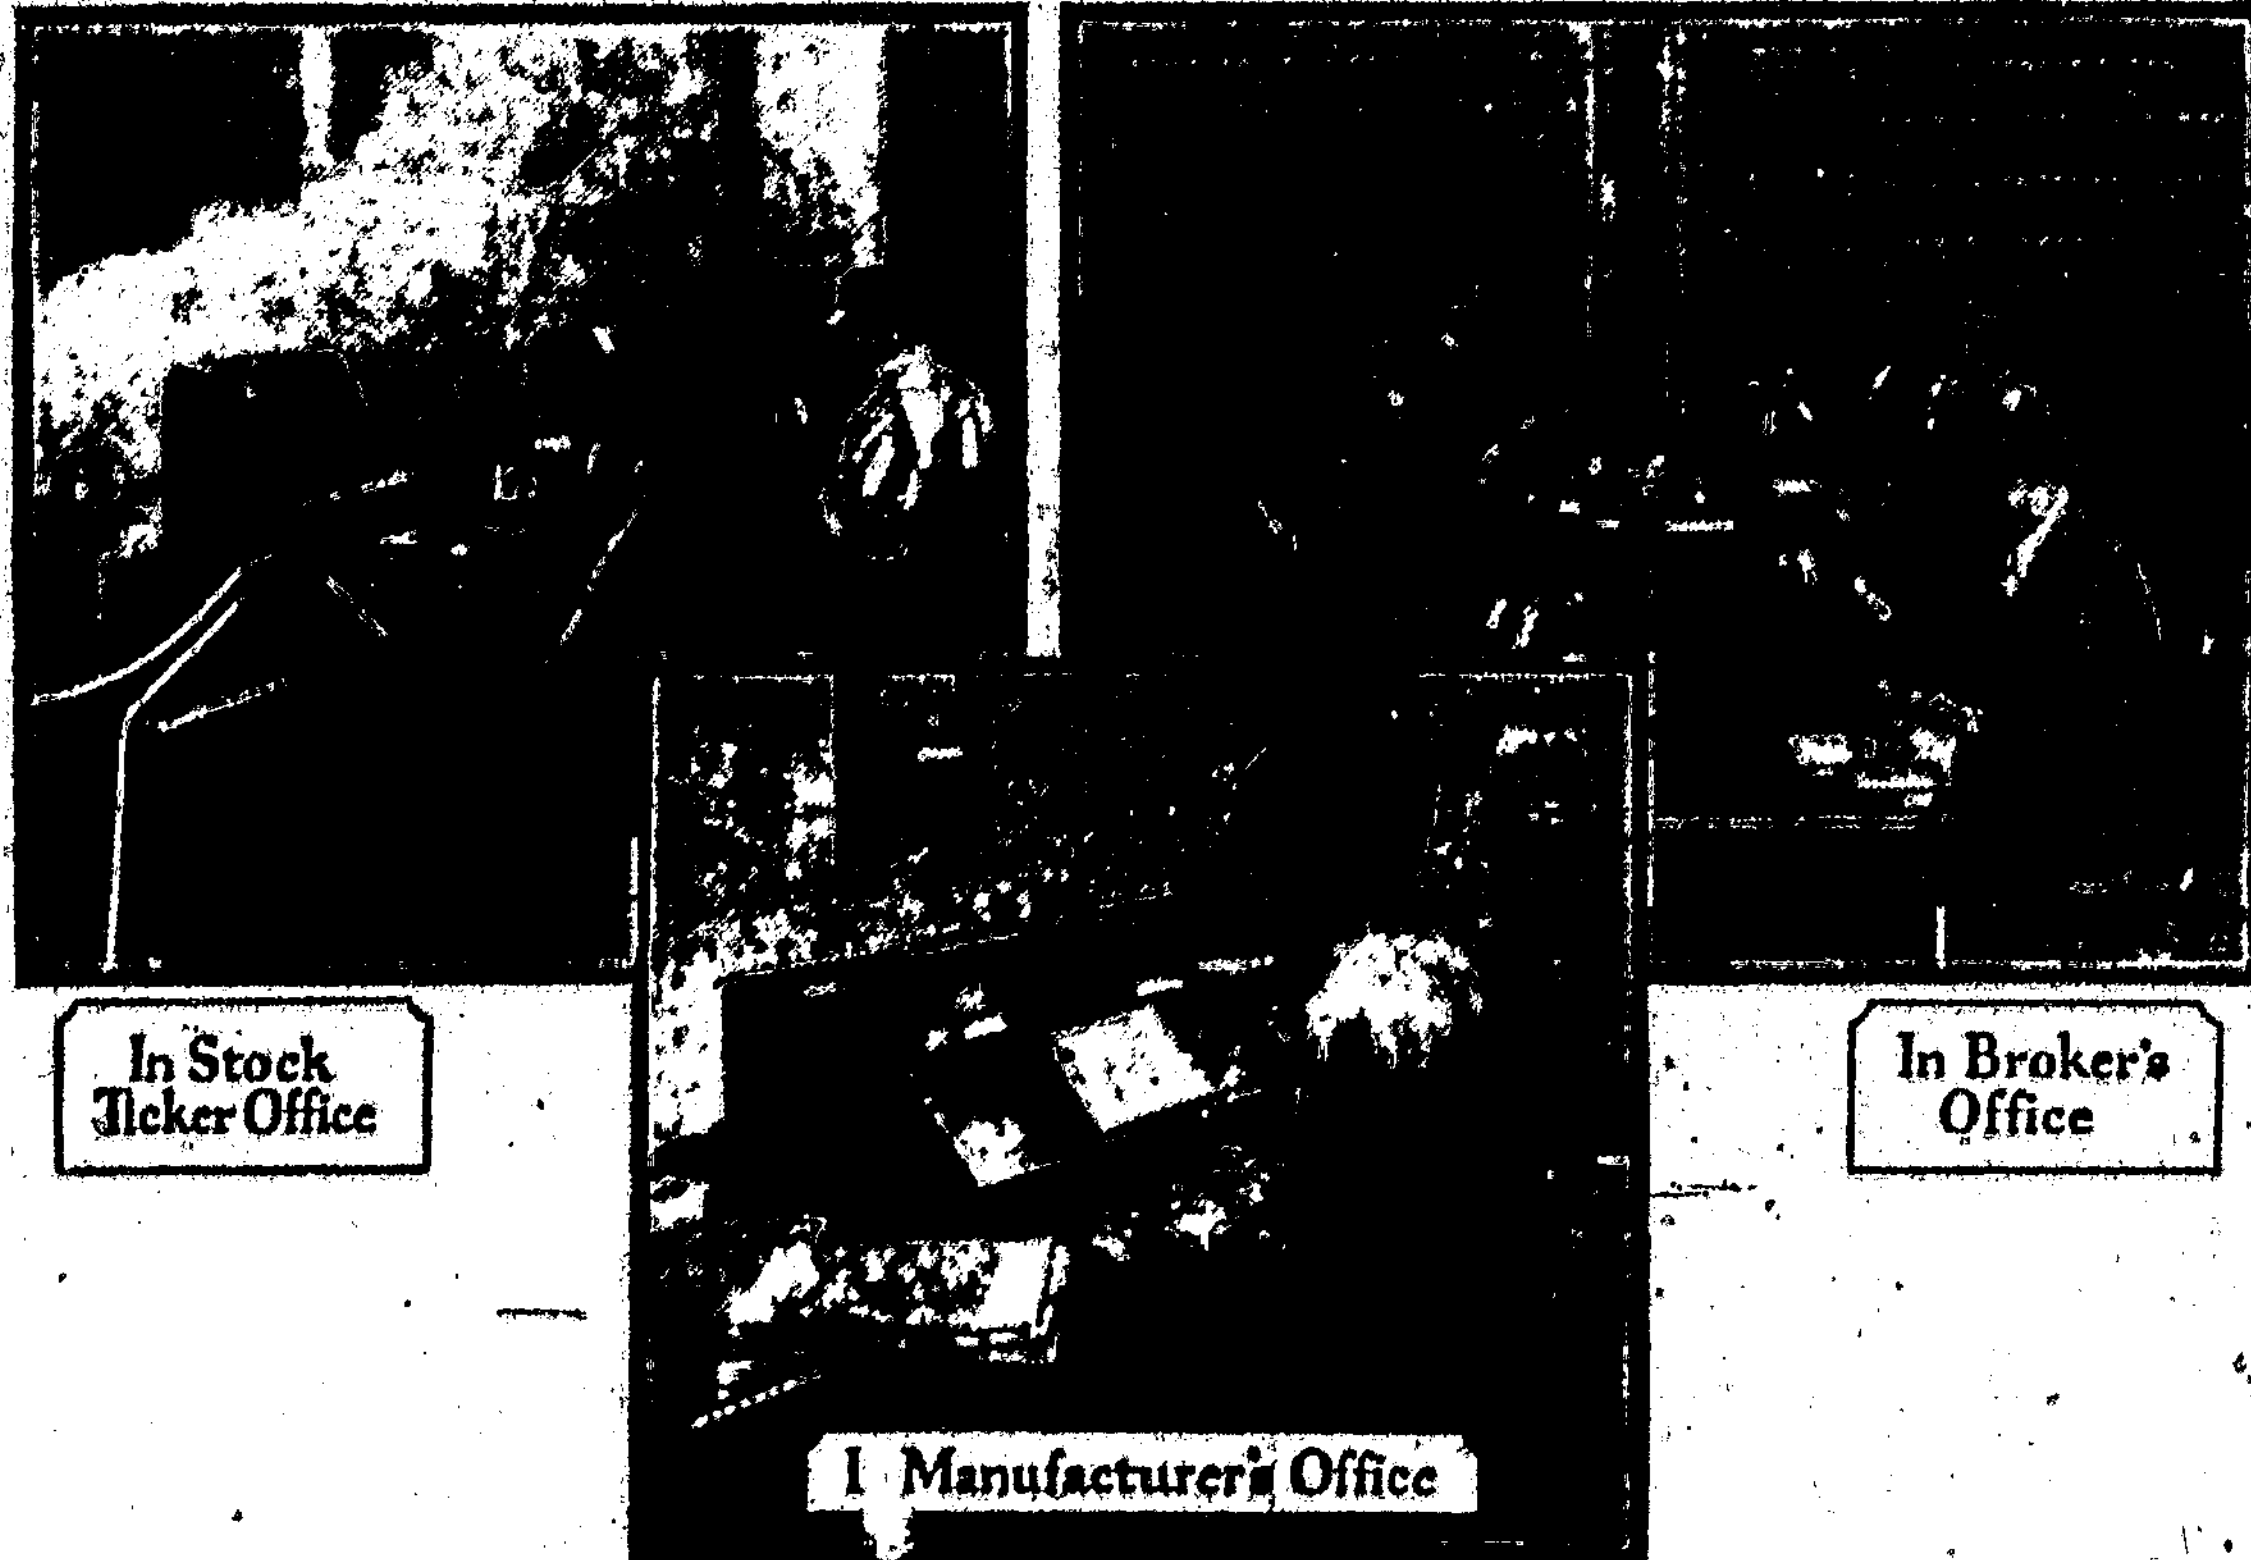

If we will look back for a period of two years, we will see the then Governor of the same big state, Alfred E. Smith, made pretty much the same speech on the national holiday, any more than he said that he would be this self-same 'Moses,' etc., who would lead the people out into green pastures and beside running streams of a liquid nature, other than water.

After the Roosevelt speech, Tammany that great political organization that has been the undoing of more candidates for the Presidency than all other organizations or issues in the land, broadcasts his speech and at the same time, hails him as the next candidate on the Democratic ticket for President and said he would win with hands down. They said his appeal to the progressive element in the Republican party would draw toward him and split that party pretty much the same as did the Bull Moose propaganda that made Wilson president by accident.

Following this, it might be truthfully said, that to the well-informed student of our political history, every Democratic President has gone to the White House as a result of some accident in the Republican ranks.

Tammany says, "look, Roosevelt is governor of New York and can be elected for president." Then what about Smith, he was also governor of the same state, but lost it and the same organization that elected both himself and Roosevelt, was largely the means of defeating Smith as a presidential candidate and it will do the same for Roosevelt, because he is a child of Tammany and the people will not stand for it. He is allied with Tammany and bears the mark of the beast. We would welcome the nomination of Roosevelt the same as we welcomed Smith's nomination, for the reason that the brand of Tammany will be the millstone about his neck that will drag him or any other candidate down to defeat. The Republican administration is causing too much prosperity in this country and the Democrats do not like this, so Tammany is seeking again as of old, to cram one of its children down the

Telephone Typewriter Apparatus Used in Many Lines of Business

Scope of This Method of Communication Includes a Variety of Applications Which is Constantly Increasing

THE increasing tempo of modern business, operating over constantly widening areas, has created an unprecedented demand for means of communication that will provide the close contact necessary between the scattered units of a commercial or industrial organization. Whether they are across the street from each other, or across a continent, the various units of a modern business enterprise require a medium of communication that will permit a degree of coordination approaching that of an organization housed in a single building.

To meet this demand the telephone typewriter has been adapted to business uses. This device has for many years been the principal channel of the Press for collecting and distributing the nation's news stories.

The telephone typewriter is a device which typewrites by wire, combining the features of two major accessories of modern business—the telephone and the typewriter. It is similar to the ordinary typewriter and any typist can operate it. It prints either on a page of standard size or on a narrow tape, and has a high speed capacity of about 60 words a minute.

Remarkable Growth Shown
In the brief period since its adoption by business, telephone typewriter service has had a remarkable growth. While the nation-wide networks used by the Press are still the largest in operation, a total of approximately 80,000 miles of Bell System wire now provides service for business enterprises of all kinds. The growth in this new field is indicated by the fact that in the past year new services installed have added roughly 47,000 miles of wire.

Among the most important users of telephone typewriter service are the financial institutions. Nearly 8,000 miles of wire are used by banks, while brokerage houses require more than 10,000 miles. One of the brokerage firms maintains a network linking offices in nineteen cities scattered from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

With keen competition in the banking old and with the public transferring their savings from the corner cupboard to securities of all kinds, the business of these companies keeps the wires loaded to capacity.

Useful to Manufacturers

One of the first manufacturing groups to adopt the telephone typewriter as a major communication channel was the textile industry. With mills located at points that were generally remote from the principal markets, these companies required a communication system of large capacity. In all, this group now employs circuits totalling approximately 5,000 miles in length. These link general and sales offices in New York or elsewhere with mills in New England or the South.

Manufacturers of metal products of all kinds have also taken up the telephone typewriter. The principal factor here has been the need for a communication service that would facilitate unified control of separate plants and speed up turnover in a highly competitive market. One of the largest groups in this class of users is the makers of automobiles and accessories. This class uses a total of more than 3,500 miles of wire.

In other process industries involving the use of large quantities of raw materials the plants are generally located at less accessible points, while the sales and general offices must, of course, be in the large center, near the distributor, the exporter or the consumer. This has influenced the adoption of telephone typewriter service by paper companies, makers of flour and other food stuffs and lumber companies. Nearly 5,000 miles of wire are used to provide communication facilities for these organizations.

Besides these types of business, there are numerous other groups, including hotels, department stores, insurance companies, police departments and railroads which use the telephone typewriter as a means of communication between various units.

Wide Range of Service

The flexibility of the telephone typewriter has adapted it to a wide variety of uses in the business world. Among the financial houses it handles sales and purchases of securities, market information and numerous administrative matters where speed means a widened scope of activity.

The commercial or industrial enterprise has adapted it to an equally wide range of uses. The main office transmits specifications and orders for production and quickly obtains answers to inquiries by customers. The plant sends stock lists, information regarding shipments and requests for material.

The headquarters of a company is also able to inform branch offices quickly of price changes and special conditions which require concerted action. Through the close contact established by this channel of communication, the branch office can conduct its business in much the same way as if it were located in another room of the same building. It has access to the same information available at headquarters and is able, in large measure, to dispense with duplicate files and to carry on a much larger volume of business without increasing the office personnel.

One of the principal features of this service is the fact that it provides, at both sending and receiving stations, a written record—in plain English—of every message. There is no chance of inaccuracies or misunderstandings. This fact has induced many organizations using telephone typewriters to employ them for conferences between executives. The conversation is conducted with almost the same ease as if they were face to face, and at the conclusion each has a printed record, obviating misunderstandings and serving as a reminder of the points agreed upon.

A most significant feature of the telephone typewriter is the new and speedier service which the user is able, through close contact between plant, headquarters and branch office, to give his customers. When orders are placed the date on which they will be filled can be learned immediately from the plant. The manufacturing work can be followed closely thereafter until delivery is made. It is the same personal service which the customer gets at the shoe repair shop around the corner, where the same man takes his order and carries it out on the spot.

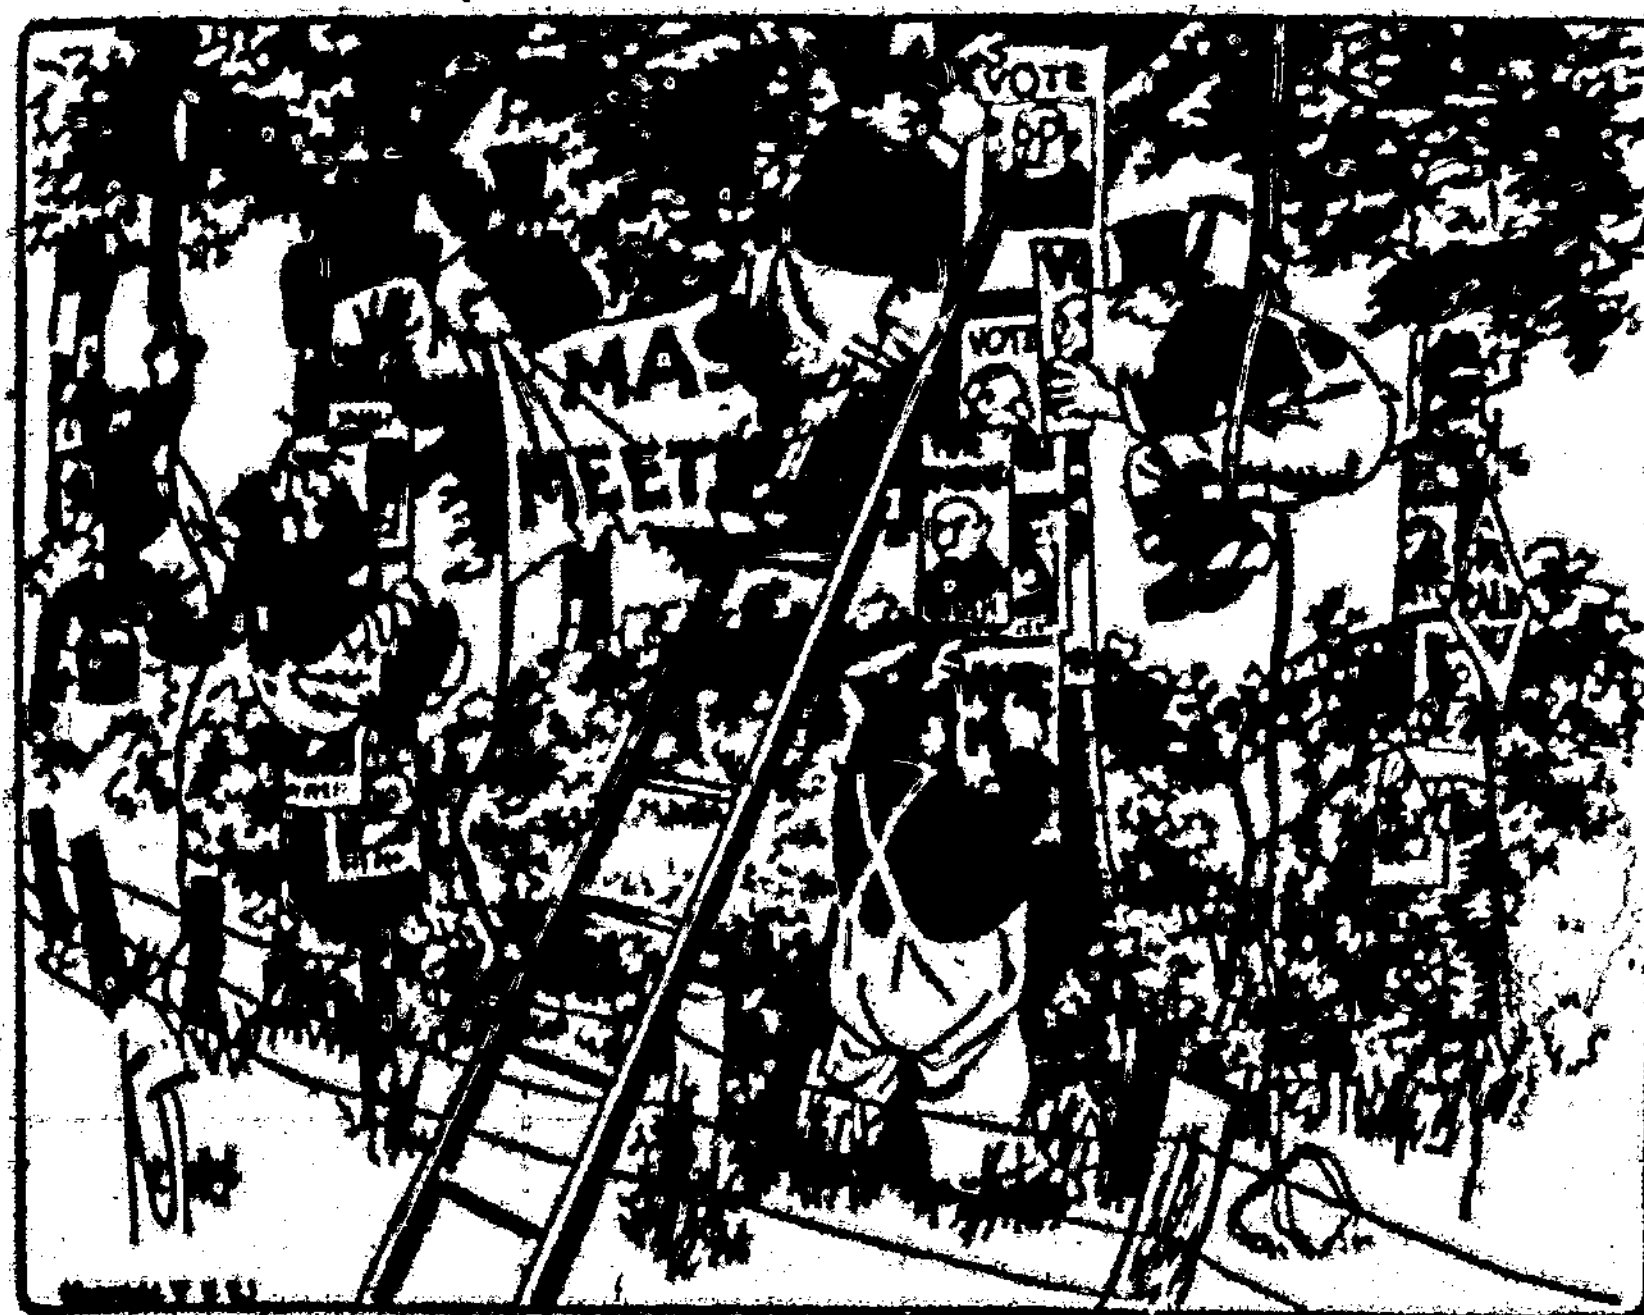

throats of the American people—but it won't go.

Governor Roosevelt also says that the huge corporations of the country are so strong that they are challenging the very government itself and this calls for a new declaration of independence.

In this he seeks to follow the late Theodore Roosevelt, who with his 'big stick,' made some violent attempts to bust the trusts, but in spite of all this cheap thunder, they still survived and grew stronger and stronger. The trusts and corporations of this country are not challenging the power of the government, but as their strength increases, they become more and more humane and on every side do we see the good effects of price reductions to the people for commodities. The trust is more humane in its dealings with the working classes than ever the individual enterprise could be, if it wished.

It is true that men oftentimes misuse certain privileges, but this occurs less with the big corporations than with the smaller fellows. Every day we hear of the big corporations increasing wages and making working conditions more satisfactory for the laboring classes and cheapening their products on the markets.

Roosevelt can't make the "Moses" racket work, for the people are becoming more and more acquainted with the political tricks of the ringmasters, and well do they know that such men as he, do not lose any sleep in bewailing the conditions of the country. They spoke in meaning terms at the last presidential election, and they will continue to speak as long as prosperity, which the big corporations are greatly responsible for, continue.

HOWE ABOUT

By ED HOWE (Copyright by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.) Plenty of capable leaders have appeared; the masses will not follow them. It is the herd that is running away, not the best individuals. The middle-class people have done very well and have honored the world somewhat, but the proletarians have disgraced it.

Marriage isn't a solace; it's another problem to work out.

In a town near where I live, a man was shot and killed by an assassin unknown. The newspapers were full of it at the time. I visited the town not long after the tragedy and heard the men talk about it: They said the murdered man was a decent fellow, and as certainly a martyr to his family as a good many women were before suffrage. They said he was a hard worker and well behaved in all respects, but that he had a worthless wife and children. The men of the town do not doubt that some of his family killed him and are still looking around in the hope of finding the culprit.

A pastor is an attorney for his church and makes out as good a case as is possible, as attorneys do for clients. His criticism of antagonists is seldom fair.

The main idea, of course, is to be a good and capable man; not to claim such distinction while acting like the devil.

In literature we often hear of "style." That's all there is to literature. As a man has it, or lacks it, he is genius or dullard, but neither of them have new ideas.

You claim certain people are fools. The only way to prove your contention is to get along better than those you condemn. If you succeed in doing it, you will prosper well enough; the punishment will go to others.

$82,000,000 FUND TO EXTEND LONG DISTANCE LINES

Bell System's Parent Company Announces Big Increase in Building Program

Nearly $82,000,000 is to be spent by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company during 1929 on new Long Distance telephone facilities in the United States, an increase of 67 per cent over 1928.

The cable line built southward from New York to Greensboro, N. C. will be continued this year as far as Greenville, S. C. The cable line stretching west from Chicago towards Omaha will be extended from Davenport, Ia., to Evans of the same state, while new cable lines will be constructed linking Springfield, Mass., with Albany, N. Y., and Harrisburg, Pa., with Baltimore.

The Long Lines construction program includes supplying a million loading coils and about 24,000 telephone repeaters to be used in connection with new and existing cable lines, the stringing of 74,000 miles of new aerial wire through less populated areas, and new pole lines, calling for an expenditure of $10,000,000; the installation of 55 carrier current telephone systems and 24 carrier current telegraph systems which enable several messages to travel simultaneously over one set of wires; aerial wire construction on each of the three transcontinental telephone lines, with the addition of several new circuits; the building of a tie-line connecting the central and northern transcontinental routes from Salt Lake City to Helena, Mont., via Pocatello, Idaho, and Butte; special telephone circuits for transmitting radio broadcasting programs from studios to distant stations; land and buildings to house the equipment needed to operate and maintain such facilities; the construction of three additional short wave transoceanic telephone systems to supplement the present telephone facilities to Europe, needed because of the increased volume of overseas telephone calls, and finally, one additional short wave system to be used for telephone service with South America via Buenos Aires.

Coats for Vacation Wear

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Unlike the vacationist who starts on a pleasure trip without a practical top coat. Not too heavy in weight yet not too heavy should it be.

Preparedness of this sort brings its own reward. For cool breezes even in summertime sometimes hold sway. Then, too, there are motor trips, hours of travel by train and boat to consider, which emphasize the advisability of acquiring a smart coat such as the exceedingly handsome and distinguished model pictured.

This is just such a coat as the best shops are advocating for summer wear. Its medium is a loose light-weight woolen fabric, in a smart diagonal design. The model is featured with an ever important self-fabric scarf. Sun-ray tucking while it ornaments also achieves a perfect fit for this coat about the shoulders.

Patel woollens bring a charming phase of fashion into play. It adds zest to sports and town modes, that so many are developed in lovely yellow, pale greens and blues, likewise

DIRECTIONS FOR MAKING "NOODLE RING"

A somewhat novel and dainty lunch dish is a "noodle ring" filled with creamed meat or stew, such as creamed chicken, minced lamb in gravy, chicken, or cooked fish in white sauce. The bureau of home economics gives directions for making a noodle ring.

- 4 pound noodles
- 3/4 quart boiling water
- 1 1/2 tsp salt
- 1 tsp onion
- 1/2 lb butter
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup milk
- 1 or 2 drops tarragon

Cook the noodles for about 20 minutes in the water to which 1 teaspoonful of salt has been added. Drain well, add the onion, butter, tarragon sauce, and remaining three fourths teaspoonful of salt. Beat the eggs, add the milk, then the seasoned noodles, and stir until well mixed. Butter a ring mold, pour in the mixture, place in a pan with water surrounding the mold, and bake in a moderate oven until the mixture has set. Turn into a heated platter and fill the center with any kind of a creamed meat.

Clothes for Stout Women

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A woman who is of medium stout build must choose her summer wardrobe with especial care if she wishes both to feel comfortable and look well. Fortunately there is now such wide variety in washable cotton fabrics suitable for street or office wear that she can easily find a sufficient number to supply her needs and permit frequent changes of costume. In planning the design of her summer dresses, however, it may be that details which would look well in silk or other fabrics would not be practical in those intended for tubbing. The simpler and less trimmed the garment, as a rule, the more successfully can it be laundered and the cooler it is on a scorching summer day.

Here is a particularly good summer dress for the women inclined to weight. It was photographed by the bureau of home economics to show what could be done with blue dotted swiss, trimmed with valencienne edging. The dress is made in two pieces, with the tucked, lace-trimmed vest made on the bodice from which the skirt is hung. The blouse is fastened by a belt which lies in front and gives the dress the appearance of a one-piece dress. A long rolling fitted collar edged with lace completes the blouse. Cuffs of tucks and lace are attached to half the bottom of the skirt and the other half is hemmed and allowed to hang out from the arm.

Fullness for the knees is provided by several large inverted box plaits

Attractive Two-Piece Dress of Dotted Swiss for Medium Stout Women.

In the skirt. On a woman of somewhat large figure skirts should not be too tight or too short if they are to look graceful.

weight woolen coats and ensembles. In almost every instance these colorful costumes are topped with matching hats either felt or straw and the accessories through and through carry related colors. In mentioning fashionable shades, the new eggshell tint must not be omitted. Woolens in this smart tone are irresistible. Increasing favor for gray is noted. Coats or ensemble suits in this color call for perfectly matched accessories.

In fashioning practical coats of lovely colored woolens, style creators have done a commendable thing. Transforming the utility coats into a "thing of beauty" without sacrificing its practicality, has added zest not only to town and travel coats, but the new rain coats revel in color and charm.

Good Food for the Family

By NELLIE MAXWELL

When the grilling day is over, and the sun is going down, when the shades of night are falling

In the country and the town; when the whippoorwill is calling, and the wolf begins to roam, when the mocking bird is doing, then I want to be at home. —Morris Olson.

When making a layer cake of two layers, if the family is small, use one layer cut into halves and put together with sweetened whipped cream lightly flavored. The other layer fill with the following filling:

Orange Filling.—Mix one-half cupful of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of flour, and the grated rind of one-half an orange; when well blended add one-fourth cupful of orange juice, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, the yolks of two eggs, and cook until smooth and thick over water. Add a teaspoonful of butter and spread on the cake. Ice with confectioner's sugar moistened with orange juice.

A nice sauce to serve with steak or hot fish is: Parsley Butter.—Take three tablespoonfuls of butter, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and add one tablespoonful of finely minced parsley. Work the butter until creamy, then add lemon juice and parsley.

A delicacy.—Take two large oranges, three cupfuls of diced rhubarb, two cupfuls of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of mace, one-fourth teaspoonful of cinnamon, twelve whole cloves. Place all the ingredients together in a casserole adding the grated orange rind and cook with rhubarb until tender.

The mother who feeds her children green vegetables, plenty of milk, coarse cereals and breads, need have no fear of an undernourished child. The coarse foods, hard to masticate, make the teeth strong, by exercise. The gums which carry the blood that nourishes the teeth, need this coarse food also to keep them firm and healthy.

In recent investigations of school children in the East, the results are most interesting. The poorer children, coming often from very poor homes, averaged a better percentage than the children from wealthy homes. This shows that intelligence and not wealth is the important factor in well nourished children.

The custom of giving everybody a glass of orange juice daily is a good one and most important for the child. It contains lime in small amount, furnishes excellent iron salt, is well supplied with vitamins especially C, which prevents rickets, and is free from possible contamination, which is not true of milk (always). Orange juice stimulates the retention of lime in the teeth, bone tissues and the body fluids. Alternate the orange juice with milk—it will be found most helpful. In many schools they are using oranges instead of milk for the lunch time.

Date and Chocolate Cake.—Take two tablespoonfuls of butter, cream with one cupful of sugar, add a bit of flavoring, lemon, almond, or vanilla, or a mixture of all; add two well-beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls of cocoa, or a square of chocolate melted; add one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add the flour alternately with one-half cupful of milk. Bake in a square tin and when cool cover with the following: One cupful of dates

Play Clothes for the Little Tots

Shade Hats Are Desirable for Summer Play.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Shade hats are desirable for children during any periods of the summer day when there is glare. If the hats are chosen with a small brim in front but a short one or none in back, they will be cool and comfortable. These two little girls are dressed in a very satisfactory way for the first hot days. Their print dresses are designed with loose neck, sleeves, and leg finishes, in style that depend on simplicity for their charm.

One child wears a short-sleeved collarless dress, but the other is almost as cool and free from unnecessary restraint of motion because the collar is made to set well away from the neck, and the sleeves are loose, although reaching to the wrist. Straight bands are used on the legs of the bloomers in each case. These are recommended by the bureau of home economics in preference to elastics, which impede circulation. The bands are wide enough to slide up the leg when the child bends over, but the bloomers are kept short on the sides to prevent the bands from slipping down over the knees.

cut fine, one cupful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, with a bit of the grated rind. When thick add a tablespoonful of butter and cool. After the date covering has been added, cover with icing, to which a little lemon juice has been added.

Fruity Custard.—Beat the egg yolks, add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of flour, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of milk, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla added at the last, five tablespoonfuls of sugar. Beat the egg yolks, add the sugar, salt and mix well. Add the milk and cook until thick enough to coat the spoon. Cool, add the vanilla and turn into a serving dish containing four sliced oranges. Beat the egg whites, add the five tablespoonfuls of sugar, heap on top of the custard.

The reason toast is given to those of weak digestion is that the starch, by the heat, is partly changed to sugar and is quickly acted upon by the juices of the stomach and ready to be absorbed in the intestine.

Fairy Tale for the Children

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"We just saw two people go by," said the bird of paradise, "and as they went by one said:

"Oh, don't you wish you could have that bird of paradise for your hat?"

"Either of them would do beautifully,"

"Oh," continued the bird of paradise, "it made me sad. But I was thankful that I was in the zoo. I love the air and I love freedom and I love my wild home and everything that goes with it, but here at least I am safe, safe, and oh, how people have gone after my family of late."

"They've always gone after my family," said Mrs. Heron, sadly.

"That's so, wick, waw, wick, waw, waw, waw," shrieked the bird of paradise, and the lesser bird of paradise nodded.

"You see," the bird of paradise continued, "we've become fashionable lately."

"In fact, we've become very scarce because so many of us have been killed."

"Of course, we don't get our long and perfect plumage until we are five years old."

"But we are beautiful birds and we have beautiful feathers. We can't help but admit it, though we're sometimes very, very sad that we are so beautiful."

"We have wonderful feathers—brownish, reddish, fawnish feathers. Our throats are of soft black and green feathers, our eyes are soft and yellow and our heads and backs are yellow, though our backs are edged with black and also shaded with blue and gray."

"But it's our long plume feathers, our wavy beautiful feathers that people like—fadies like to wear them in their hats, and while my neighbor, the lesser bird of paradise, isn't so perfectly marked as are the members of my family, they've often been killed for their feathers, too."

"Oh," said Mrs. Heron, "that is too dreadful. But do they go after you at any special time?"

"Is there some month perhaps when you're not so much on your guard and they can get you more easily?"

"Yes," said the bird of paradise, "there is. When we're mating, when we're dancing in the trees, dancing and chirping and shrieking with delight, then the men with their arrows shoot up at us because we're not paying any attention to dangers."

"We're gay then, gay and glad, but alas! they kill us then for ladies' hats."

"They take us when we are joyful and merry and happy for trimming for hats which can't talk and which can't have little birdlings. Oh, it's terrible."

"I should say it is," said the lesser bird of paradise. "They wait until we're really happy and gay, when we have our mates and are having happy dancing parties in the trees and when we're chirping and whispering secrets to each other about the little birdlings we're going to have later on—then it is that they shoot us down!"

"And all for hats?" said the bird of paradise. "Yes, at least we're safe in the zoo, but oh, the people who go by and say that they would like to have us on their hats!"

"But the keeper is telling every one no hears make such speeches about the sorrow that comes to our families because of fashions. And if they don't look out there'll be nothing left of us. We'll be all gone."

"It's something I can't understand," said Mrs. Heron. "You know I'm of the family known as the Snowy Herons."

"That is because my feathers are white, and they're called albatross."

"People like to wear them on their hats; women, yes, mothers of boys and girls, for listen, birds of paradise."

"There was a hush in the birdhouse of the zoo and the heron began to speak."

"They go after you when you're mating, but they go after me and my family when our little ones are born and when they can't even feed themselves."

"They wait until then—as they we're not noticing danger but only thinking of our little ones. Oh, we do wish people would change—that we do so wish!"

Two Friends

ETHEL'S two friends, Caroline and June cause her a lot of perplexity. She's known them both for years and in her heart of hearts, June stands first with her. Yet other people criticize June constantly, while they unite in loving admiration to the fair Caroline.

"Why on earth do you run around with June so much?" demands Nancy. "She's known them both for years and in her heart of hearts, June stands first with her. Yet other people criticize June constantly, while they unite in loving admiration to the fair Caroline."

Ethel sighs. She doesn't know herself why she sticks to June. Certainly that young lady is difficult enough—a creature of eternal changing moods and ideas—a maiden of violent likes and dislikes.

And why does she seek June's society in preference to Caroline's, Caroline, sunny-haired, unimaginative, quiet, precise, stands for quiet security. She has no moods. She is always the same. Here is a quiet self-satisfied calm which brings peace to the lives of her more turbulent friends.

Yet Ethel's natural shrinking from her is a perfect case of intuition without reason. For of her two friends, June is the one to be counted on the final analysis—and Caroline the one to be avoided.

It is so very often the case that the girl characterized as moody, irritable and flighty has the true stuff in her—while the calm phlegmatic bundle of self-satisfaction who wins praise and admiration—is not to be counted on in an emergency.

June you see is passing through a difficult phase.

Her opinions are of no value, but her friendship is. Her very attitude shows that she is not seeking popularity—that her idea of a perfect existence does not necessitate her being the center of an admiring group of friends.

Now she makes enemies oftener than friends. Yet the friends she makes should trust her, for she is to be depended on.

While Caroline, calm, competent, sunnily smiling is on the way to make every moment—striving to attract new friends—doing her best always to be the one girl everybody loves. Now you know, no girl in the world can achieve that. She must either take a stand on one side or the other.

Is There a Chance?

"HAVE I got a chance of happiness with Nat?" asks Isabel pathetically. "He wants me to marry him and it seems to me I love him, but there are so many drawbacks. He is much older than I am, and I'm sure that he won't want to dance or go out at all in a few years' time and I'm too young to give up parties. Also isn't really interested in the things which interest me. And he's nearing middle age and he isn't a real success in life. Am I taking too big a chance marrying a man who has no really brilliant future and who may be old before I'm thirty? I would love to marry him if only I could set my fears at rest."

Well, dearie, your fears are doomed to remain wandering restless spirits, if you want them lulled by me.

You haven't the slightest chance of success in marriage with anybody if you go into the proposition in the frame of mind indicated by your question.

Success in marriage as you may have heard some four hundred thousand times before this—means compromise. And do I hear a word about compromise from your ruby-red lips? I do not.

The only thing makes itself clear to me is this: That Isabel wants to have a good time even after a few years' of settling down—that she resents Nat's not being interested in her hobbies—that she wants to have enough money to live comfortably and Nat ought to supply the internal revenue. That's all she wants.

Not a word about whether you're willing to do your part, child. Not a word about wanting to help Nat to make the success which has eluded him through a rather dismal business career.

Just the plain statement that you want cash and a successful husband—and will Nat do?

No, he certainly won't do for you, nor will any other poor mortal man who needs a wife's comfort and sympathy and understanding and companionship—not her imperious demands for mental and financial satisfaction.

You've got the best chance in the world of being happy with a man if you're willing to take the bad breaks with the good. With that spirit in your heart you could stumble into any one of half a dozen marriages and make a success of things.

But if you're the wide-awake young self-settler, eager hands outstretched to take everything, eager lips forming the immortal word "Gimme," you're bound to bump into a few snags even though you marry the most perfect specimen in the world.

Learn to think about what YOU can do to make your marriage a success. (© by the Nell Bradtons, Inc.)

Family Reunion

On July 4th the D.D. Dingwall family held a reunion at the Bennett Dingwall summer home near Ruidoso. A big family dinner was served and those present of the immediate family were: Mr. and Mrs. Dingwall, father and mother; sons, George and wife; Bennett, wife and son Bennett, Jr.; Donald and wife; Mrs. Mary King and husband, Ernest, Collins and Wm.

Other relatives of the Dingwalls were: Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Crawford, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Johnson, Frank Leant and daughters Nadine and Georgia, and Buster Anderson. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. D.D. Dingwall, reside at Commanche, Texas; George and Mrs. Dingwall, Bennett and family and William at El Paso; Donald and wife at Los Angeles; the Kings at Commanche, Texas, and Ernest at Carrizozo. The daughters of Mr. Frank Leant are from Wichita, Kansas; Mr. and Mrs. Allan Johnson reside at El Paso, and the Crawfords and son Buster and Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Lovelace at Carrizozo, Mrs. Lovelace being a sister to Mrs. D.D. Dingwall; also a cousin, Mrs. William Brown of Roswell, accompanied by her husband and son; also Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Prude of Mescalero.

There are six boys in the Dingwall family and one girl; Mrs. Mary King and it is worthy of note, that the entire family were present at this reunion. The parents came here several weeks ago to spend the summer at their son's summer home on the Ruidoso and it was after their coming that arrangements were made for the above event, which was carried out much to the pleasure of all concerned.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Rolland came home Sunday morning from their extended trip through the east. During their absence, they visited relatives at Fenton and other points in Michigan, thence to the east where they took in New York, Buffalo, Philadelphia and other places of interest including Niagara Falls. They returned by way of Chicago, Denver and thence to Carrizozo. They had a pleasant trip, but like others who make these trips, they were glad to be home.

Mrs. Louis Vidaurri and son Rito came in last Saturday from Los Angeles and will visit with the Sabino Vidaurri, Juan Osorio and Amado Jauregui families for a week or so. The Vidaurris are former residents of Carrizozo, Louie being day chef at the Eating House for many years when the late Mrs. Julia Gurney was manager of that place.

Bert Paxton and family came through here last Friday evening from Roswell, on their way to the Jicarilla mountains, to spend their vacation of several weeks as guests of the Haskins family.

PERSONALS

John Rolland

who handled the interests of the Rolland Drug Store so accurately during the absence of the proprietor and wife, while on their vacation, left for his home in Alamogordo Monday evening. For the past five weeks, John has been so diligent in managing the affairs of the store, that to one not knowing that he was here but temporarily, would think he was the proprietor in fact. In filling prescriptions, John is G. O., as his papers indicate in his examination for proficiency as a pharmacist. He stood 96 on the average, almost 100 percent perfect, in which he ranked with the highest in the test. His accuracy and rapidity in filling prescriptions, his polite and courteous treatment of patrons of the big store, will long be remembered by the many people who never fail to stop at this cool retreat for the tired and thirsty. John Rolland will always be kindly remembered in Carrizozo.

Broke His Arm

Last Saturday afternoon, a flock of boys, all under 10 years of age were riding a pair of burros on the east side of the track, and after being subjected to all torture imaginable in the hands of the little tots, one of asses became impatient and began to buck, throwing off Manuel, the son of Mrs. Perfecta Herrera and then when he lay on the ground, kicked him on the arm, breaking it above the elbow.

A Correction

We wish to correct an item which appeared in our last issue, one of personal mention in which we stated that Mr. and Mrs. William Gallacher and brother Harry had attended the celebration at Fort Stanton and had stayed over for the dance. This was a mistake, as they left before even the fireworks took place and besides, did not engage in, or witness any events of a sporting nature. This was an innocent mistake and we hasten to correct the same.

S. W. Wells

and son Willis, who have been in Carrizozo with Mr. Wells' sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Gallacher for the past 5 weeks, left Wednesday for their home in Palmdale, California.

Mrs. Beulah Gokey

was an El Paso visitor for the week-end, returning home Sunday evening.

Gene and Julia Lee

son and daughter of Engineer E. N. Robertson, came in from Chicago the latter part of last week and will spend the remainder of the vacation period with Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, returning to Chicago in time for the opening of school. They will be taken up to spend a portion of their stay on the Bonito, Eagle Creek, Ruidoso and other places of our mountain resorts, near the 'Rainbow's End.'

Mrs. S. H. Nickels

was driving towards Carrizozo from Oscura Monday afternoon when at the nine-mile hill she was met by a large car. The driver paid no attention to the approaching Ford, but ran straight into it, smashing the front wheels and nearly turning it over. The collision gave Mrs. Nickels a bad shock, but the driver assured her that he would pay all damages as soon as he reached Alamogordo, to which place he was hastening to see his wife, who was ill. With this assurance, he left the lady to be picked up by some passing car, which soon came along and she was assisted to Carrizozo.

Arriving here, she notified Sheriff Brady, who phoned Tulare authorities to hold the man, after which the sheriff, accompanied by deputy county clerk Ernest Key, went to Tulare and obtained the proper amount with which to reimburse Mrs. Nickels, but not until the sheriff was certain that his check was good.

Esteban Medina

stepfather of Joe and Alex Chavez of this place went through here yesterday morning on No. 1, enroute to the S. P. Hospital at San Francisco for treatment to an injury received a short time ago while in the service of the company at Tusamcari.

William Kelt

was down from White Oaks Monday and during the course of conversation Bill told the following good one: Two Scotchmen were in swimming and after a time, they agreed to dive and the one remaining the longest under the water would win a wager of one dollar. They posted their bets, but neither came to the surface to collect his bet—both drowned. Doc Bell was present and said he believed he had heard that story before, but the other three hadn't.
