COMMENCEMENT WEEK

Last Sunday evening at the High School Auditorium, the commencement exercises for the week began with the baccalaureate sermon being preached by Rev. Ludlow, and Tuesday night, the Senior Class Play was given. Wednesday evening, the Eighth Grade Exercises were held and tonight, the Commencement Program for the High School will be held. The program presented by the lower grades last Saturday night was much appreciated and Mrs. J. M. Shelton is to be commended for her patience and efficiency in training the children. Collectively speaking, the programs were carried out in excellent manner and Prof. Helm and his staff of teachers are to be commended on the exactness and perfection with which everything in connection with the different events were carried out. There are 19 graduates in the class of 1929, and 20 Eighth Grade graduates and Carrizozo is proud of them.

Entertained Girl Graduates

On Wednesday of this week, Mrs. Claud Branum entertained the girl graduates of the 1929 class at a 6 o'clock dinner in the dining room of the Carrizozo Eating House. Mrs. Branum had a special dinner prepared for her guests, who were as follows - Elizabeth Green, Ellen Ludlow, Helen Starling, Frances Aguayo, Irene Zumwalt, Esther Dow and Johnnie Townsend. Mrs. Branum was assisted by Mrs. Percy Welch.

Old Offender Caught

Ranchman Merchant, who has a large ranch of 70 sections, all under fence, near Capitan, and where he has a vast amount of cattle and sheep, was being visited by some predatory animal and some of his young lambs were disappearing, but could not locate the thief, until he paid a visit to Harvey Foster of the Wrye & Foster Dairy near Nogal and solicited his aid. Foster took his hounds and quietly entered the Merchant ranch, where the sheep were located and found that traps had been laid and every effort used to try and get the animal that had been killing so many lambs, but nothing was accomplished.

It was not long after the hounds were given their freedom before they struck the trail of something, which afterwards proved to be a coyote. They trailed and finally overtook and killed the animal. The coyote was an old offender and had feasted from the Merchant stock for many moons unmolested, had roamed at his will and fed where he pleased. He had been a victim of the traps for so long, that he became immune to that device, and by some means, had beat the trap every time. He had lost all the toes from one of his hind feet, one of the front feet had been cut off, one ear was gone, he had lost one of his eyes, his tail was only about two inches long and several of his teeth were out, but in spite of all this, he still held the belt for stealing lambs. Harvey claims that he has clean out any ranch in the county of coyotes with his hounds, but it will cost $50 per coyote and $25 per wildcat.

Mrs. J. E. Farley visited with Carrizozo friends from her home in Alamogordo Sunday and Monday.

CRYSTAL THEATRE J. C. Burkett, Mgr.

Saturday Only - Opening night for the summer season under the management of Mr. Burkett - featuring Alan Hale and Renee Adoree in "THE SPIELER," with added attraction, the High School Orchestra will play five new numbers, including two new popular hits. Regular admission prices, 15 and 35c.

Sunday matinee, 2:30 p. m. and 9 p. m. and Monday night - Alice Day and Matt Moore in "PHYLLIS OF THE FOLLIES" and last episode of "THE MYSTERY RIDER."

Tuesday-Wednesday - Marian Davies and Conrad Nagel in "Quality Street."

Thursday-Friday - Ivan Mosjoukine in "THE LOVES OF CASANOVA."

J. C. Burkett Takes Charge of Crystal Theatre

Tomorrow night, J. C. Burkett, former manager of the Crystal Theatre, will again assume charge of the resort and Mr. Pittman, who has been managing the theatre since the first of the year, will operate his theatre at Cloudcroft, which place he has been managing for the past two years.

The Pittman family are now at Cloudcroft, with the exception of the manager, who will remain here for several weeks to complete some business affairs, chief among which is the finishing of the new building to be occupied as office by the Town Trustees and also for the fire equipment.

Attention, Masons

There will be a Special Communication of Carrizozo Lodge No. 41, A. F. & A. M., on Saturday night, June 1, for the purpose of conferring the Entered Apprentice Degree.

All Master Masons are cordially invited.

C. F. Grey, W. M., S. F. Miller, Secretary.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. French and son Miller left for Eagle Creek Wednesday morning, and their daughter, Evelyn, who has been attending the University at Albuquerque, joined them at that place Thursday. The family will return home about Saturday.

Mrs. T. E. Armstrong

of Tucumcari was a guest of her daughter, Mrs. M. B. Paden, for a day this week.

Miller French

returned Tuesday from Albuquerque, where he finished his second term at the University. The government selected 25 young men from the 30 engineering colleges over the United States and Miller was selected as the best junior in civil engineering from the New Mexico University. Miller will be employed with the Federal Reserve Bureau of Roads and will be constantly with the Bureau men in the work of examining Federal Roads and preparing statistics for the government throughout the summer season. In view of the fact that so many students were competing for these honors from the government, Miller is to be congratulated on being the leading junior from the 'U' of New Mexico.

Decoration Day at Ancho

The Ladies of the Ancho Ladies Aid and their friends, assisted by the men of their families, repaired to the local cemetery at an early hour for a general clean up. After hours of strenuous work they stopped at noon for a bounteous dinner served by the ladies at the school house.

Sunken and unmarked graves were re-mounded and marked, all were freed from weeds-flowers were planted and some memorial wreaths placed, with an occasional flag for departed soldiers. When the workers disbanded at 4 o'clock, not one grave had been neglected, and they wearily contemplated the result as a good day well spent, and a good deed well done.

Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Dingwall of Comanche, Texas, are guests at the Bennett Dingwall cabin on the Ruidoso this week.

R. L. Chandler

suffered an injured finger last Saturday while at his work in the local railroad yards. It was of a minor nature and does not prevent him from his usual duties.

Judge J. Y. Hewitt

of White Oaks, who was injured last week, is improving rapidly.

Lute Skinner

R. C. Skinner and Flossie Zumwalt arrived here this morning from Malaga, N. M., Lute and R. C. to stay over until Sunday with their parents, Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Skinner and other relatives, and Flossie to spend a portion of his vacation with the home folks at Nogal. They all look well and say that everything is prosperous in the Pecos valley.

John Gallacher Dies

Word was received this morning just before going to press, that John Gallacher died in El Paso this morning at 6 o'clock.

Mr. Gallacher was born and reared in this county and was one of our most prosperous and highly esteemed stockmen of this region.

The remains will be brought here for interment at White Oaks.

The news being so suddenly and just as we are going to press forbids a more extended account of his life and his good works in this community. The wife, mother, Mrs. Jane Gallacher, brothers, Harry and William and sister, Mrs. William Kelt have the sympathy of the entire county.

The funeral particulars will appear in our next issue.

Miss Hazel Melas

will spend her vacation at Albuquerque with her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Burkett will remain in Carrizozo; Prof. Helm will assist in the summer work at the New Mexico University, and some of our teachers will spend their vacations at home, while others will attend the different State Normal schools for the summer.

Chas. and Gerald Cree spent a portion of the week in Denver and returned yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bogie have been here from Coyote every night since Commencement Week began, and attended all functions.

Wayne Zumwalt

has assumed charge of the City Services Station and is keeping Mr. Rail's books. Mr. and Mrs. Devine are using the rooms formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. D. LaVallee, Mr. LaVallee being now with Western Motors, Inc.

FORT STANTON NEWS

Dr. J. W. Tappan left Wednesday on No. 12 for Atlantic City, N. J., to represent the U.S. Public Health Service at the annual meeting of the National Tuberculosis Association in that city from May 28 to 31. From there he will go to Washington, D. C., for a conference with the Surgeon General of the U. S. Public Health Service. He will return via Johnson City, Tenn., where he will visit his mother for ten days.

Rev. M. J. Swift returned last Saturday night from an extended visit in New York state. While there he visited the Seamen's Church Institute of which he is the Fort representative. On his return trip he visited his sister in Binghamton, N. Y., and returned by way of Washington, Memphis and Sewanee, Tenn., Paducah, Ky., and El Paso. After conference with the Supt. of the Church Inst., Rev. Swift agreed to return to the Fort for duty.

Patient admitted: Hagbard Ekerold. Discharged: Karl R. Lehms.

Sunday afternoon, K. T. Byrne received a long distance phone call from Chicago, talking with 7 or 8 members of his family, who were having a party in honor of his niece. The call was arranged by his aunt, Miss H. Byrne, an official of the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. Byrne said that it was the most enjoyable party he has heard of for several years.

The baseball games with the 82nd Field Artillery last weekend were one-sided affairs in favor of the Army boys, by scores of 13-2 and 12-7 Saturday's game found the visitors playing mighty high class ball. On Sunday the Fort had every chance to win, but let the game slip because of errors. The 82nd will be back one of these days and the boys say they know they can give them a run for their money next meeting. Shorty Miller had better watch out Sunday, when he brings his "Loggers" to the Fort for a return game. The locals are smarting under the defeats of the past week and seek revenge not only for these beatings, but also for the 6-3 game that Shorty's gang hung on us at Alamo early in May.

The baseball dance was a decided success both from the standpoint of a good time and financial receipts. Gus Lemp furnished lots of mighty fine dance music all evening and the crowd showed that they enjoyed it by staying with him to the end. The Ball Club wishes to thank all of those who so kindly assisted in putting the dance across. The cakes that the local ladies baked added a great deal to the evening's entertainment. Gus took his orchestra to Ward 11 before the dance and played for about forty minutes.

The ball team goes to Carlsbad on June 9, to meet that team.

Miss Alene Thompson of Carrizozo was a week-end guest of Mrs. C. H. Boyd.

The 4th of July committee reports that they have booked Gus Lemp's orchestra for the dance here that night, and that the 82nd Field Artillery ball team will be on hand for games the 4th - 5th. Acknowledgement has been received of the order for fireworks and assurance that they will be shipped in sufficient time for our

WOMAN'S CLUB NOTES

The Woman's Club held its last meeting for this club year at the Community Hall, May 17. The following officers were installed for the coming year, with Mrs. Blaney acting as installing officer: Pres., Mrs. R. E. Lemon; Vice - Pres., Mrs. Paul Mayer; Sec'y, Mrs. Oscar Clouse; Treas., Mrs. Zoe Glassmire; Parliamentarian, Mrs. M. L. Blaney.

Our new president's message to the club was most inspiring. Her theme was: "Responsibility of Citizenship." Under her efficient management, we predict a most successful and profitable year. Her motto or slogan, "Every woman in Carrizozo a member of the Carrizozo Woman's Club," holds much promise. She read the following article by James A. Maddox:

"A community is like a bank; people invest in it and take out from it. No man lives in a community without having a responsibility for being there. The idea that we are individually self-made is pure theory. The fact is that anybody is dependent upon the things he takes out of his community. Therefore, he owes a responsibility to it for the things that it has contributed to him.

The community depends for its success upon its ability to produce citizens who will think not simply of self and individual progress and gain, but will also think of the good of the group. Community spirit is to the community what cement is to concrete. It is the power which takes the individual particles of stone, gravel and sand and binds them in permanent relationship. It makes the foundation upon which all the community's progress depends.

Wagner has said, that "Joy is not in things, it is in us," and the greatest joy comes to him who realizes that the life worth living is incidentally the life which helps make it worth while for others to live. No man performs a nobler service than he who never doubts that men and women and towns can be something better than they are; who, clinging to a high ideal, looks forward through the eyes of faith and renders an individual service in community affairs which is all embracing."

Mmes. Glassmire, Lemmon and Nickels, program committee, presented a lovely Mother's Day program, and they wish to thank all those who so kindly took part. Program - "Crowning the Queen," Mrs. Ludlow's Class; "Father and Mother," Jack and Vena Louise Snow; Piano Solo, Helen Frances Huppertz; "Mother," Virginia Charles.

At the close of the meeting delicious refreshments of punch and cake were served by the hostesses, Mmes. C. A. Snow, Stadman, Stimmel, Lemon and Lucky.

Mrs. D. A. Saunders

and daughter Georgia, formerly of this place, but now residents of El Paso, came up Wednesday and will spend the balance of the week with their Carrizozo friends. Mr. Saunders is chief dispatcher on the night shift at the El Paso offices for the Southern Pacific.

celebration. July 4th is certainly a worth while day at Stanton and our many friends are again most cordially invited to come and enjoy themselves. There are few spots as suitable as the Fort for such an occasion.

Children Need Wash Dresses

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

How many wash dresses does a little girl need when warm weather sets in? Much depends, of course, on what sort of garments she wears for school or play—bloomer dresses, rompers, sun suits—and on how many of them are in the wash each week. Suppose she puts on a clean dress every afternoon, as many pre-school children do, and wears it again next morning at play. Or, if she goes to school, pride usually demands a fresh dress every morning, and unless she is an exceptionally careful child, this means a clean dress.

So there will probably be about seven little bloomer dresses or rompers in the weekly wash, barring accidents that may increase the number. There should be seven others to take their places while the first set is being done up, one or more extra ones for emergencies, and possibly one or two "dress-up" dresses for special occasions. Quite an outfit, altogether, and every mother knows. However, all these dresses need not be provided in any one season. Early in the spring all of last year's supply should be gone over, mended, hems let down, and any other necessary alterations made. Perhaps only four or five new garments are required at first. Others can be added as need arises and new fabrics are discovered in the stores. If cotton dresses are worn the year around, the winter outfit probably has long sleeves and high necks, so unless they are being fast outgrown it is a good idea to put them aside for new ones, rather than to alter them for hot weather wear. Obviously all new dresses should be made with a growth allowance in the hems, loose neck, wrist and leg bands, and plenty of fullness across the chest, so they can be worn as many seasons as possible. One consolation is that any of these little dresses can be made very inexpensively from attractive cotton wash prints, ginghams, nateen, broadcloth, and other

Day after day the mice enjoyed the pantry, and at night when everyone in the house was in bed and asleep, the mice would talk about their wonderful home.

"They would frisk about the pantry, behind the shelves and through the drawers which were often left half-open.

"It is so stupid and inconsiderate," said Mr. Mouse, "for people to close all the drawers and lock up their things in tin boxes.

"For my part, I hate tin boxes. They can't be bitten and they are so apt to cut me when I try to get them opened."

"Yes, they're horrid," said Mrs. Mouse. "We can't open them, no matter how much we try.

"I like the little cardboard boxes best that we can nibble through."

"I don't like to eat cardboard," said one of the mice children.

"You're not supposed to eat it, silly," said one of the other mice children.

"You only nibble through it, be-the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture and is made of percale. Small green figures form faint vertical lines in the material. White collar, cuffs, and pocket tops are used as trimming. As the bloomers are white with leg bands of the print, a short remnant might be utilized to make the dress.

The capulet style shoulder is used. Extra front fullness is gathered into the collar band. There is a front opening bound with a bias piece of material and closed with a single button. Care should be taken in cutting and sewing a striped or checked material to set pockets or other decorative features so that they seem to continue the stripes or squares in the design of the fabric, or contrast with it symmetrically, as when they are cut on the bias.

Sliced unpeeled red apples, coring first, spread with Philadelphia cream cheese and peanut butter, well blended; lettuce.

If one can get fresh home churned buttermilk, they have indeed a treasure of good food. As long as cream has been churned and butter made, buttermilk has been enjoyed. It is delicious, refreshing and is regarded by dieticians as one of the best health foods. The lactic acid, which gives it its satisfying sharp taste, is said to prolong life and make people physically stronger. It stimulates digestion, acts as a tonic, is good for the liver, corrects constipation and other disorders. The United States government bulletins tell us that buttermilk is excellent food for young and old, for health and pleasure.

The Fight Against Moths

How a Trunk is Fumigated Against Moths With Carbon Tetrachloride or Carbon Disulphide.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Eternal vigilance" on the part of the housewife is the first, last, and constant control measure to be employed against clothes moths. The bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture says in its Farmers' Bulletin No. 1863-F that it is possible to store the family woolsens and blankets safely in a good light trunk if about one pound of naphthalene or paradichlorobenzene crystals are used in each trunk or plain chest. A red cedar chest is an excellent storage container if used properly. But certain precautions must be observed before the clothes are put away, or you may pack up with them unobserved moth eggs that have been deposited by a parent insect that knows where to hide them so that her offspring will have suitable food later on. The moth does not eat the fabrics; the culprit is the larva that hatches from moth egg.

Every woolen or fur garment you place in store, and also blankets and rugs, should be thoroughly cleaned, to begin with; brushed, beaten, and if possible sunned. Dry cleaning free salts and coats and other articles from infestation, but as soon as they come from the cleaner or have been otherwise prepared, the clothes should be protected by being wrapped in paper or placed in tight trunks or chests or treated closets.

All the little mice thought it a wonderful scheme to have a regular feast.

But the family came home sooner than the mice thought they would, or the mice were so enjoying their feast, that they didn't hear them quickly enough, for they scampered back to their hiding place after they had been seen and heard.

Some of them squeaked in their hurry to get along.

"The pantry is full of mice," said the family.

"We'll have to do something about it," they said. "We've been thinking lately that things were being nibbled at and eaten.

"We'll have to do something about it right away."

Meanwhile the mice were saying: "Oh, how careless were we to get caught. They heard us, and now they know that we are living here. "Well, we'll just have to move—that's all.

"People are very strange, they somehow don't like to have mice as neighbors, or to share their homes with them.

"It's very foolish of them not to like us, but they don't so we can't change their opinions."

"Well," said Mr. Mouse, "we might as well make the best of it. Besides this has been a very nice home and we have had a very pleasant time in it."

"Indeed we have," said Mrs. Mouse. "We've loved it," said the little mice.

"Maybe we'll be lucky and find another just as nice," said Mr. Mouse. "I trust so," said Mrs. Mouse.

"We hope so," said the little mice. So they all followed Mr. Mouse in his search for a new pantry.

"We keep moving," they said. "We're quite a moving mice family, but we've had good luck this far. "Let us hope it will continue!"

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria. At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks, Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you, a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless, Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every drugstore has it.

the same color is a characteristic feature of this season's modes. Marine blue with navy, pale yellow with orange, capricious blended with a harmonious brown, any number of these selected color combinations are observed throughout most recent fashions. It may be a dark coat with a light dress, or the contrast is just as modish in reverse.

Fashion goes even further in this matter of color relation, insisting that the hat itself tune in harmoniously, which accounts for the chapeau accompanying this costume also being in a peach shade. The crown of this becoming model is made of rayon georgette.

It will be noticed that the skirt portion is formed of plaits which are sewed part of the way down. This is a very important styling item, for attached plaits occur in many of the cloth ensemble skirts as well as in frocks.

Apple Float Can Be Prepared in a Hurry

The telephone has rung—you are to have guests for dinner—and your previously planned dessert was just apple sauce. It's hardly "drowsy" enough for those particular people, and besides, there is barely enough to serve the family without any company. You have but little time. What's to be done? Eggs are generally available. Make an apple float. suggests the bureau of home economics, out of 2 cups of apple sauce and 4 egg whites. Here's how:

3 cups thick apple sauce 4 egg whites Sweeten the apple sauce to taste with hot, add a little salt, and set away to cool. Beat the egg whites very stiff, and fold the cold apple sauce into them. If desired add 2 or 3 tablespoons of lemon juice, or sprinkle a little nutmeg or cinnamon on top.

In fashioning summer costumes designers are making generous and clever use of plaiting. The tiny tucks are worked in most delightful ways in frocks, blouses, jackets and the separate coat, showing great skill in the way they are handled. The many lovely solid-tint velvets which have so captivated feminine fancy yield admirably to the popular plait treatments. Study closely the charming frock in this picture and you will discover masses of plaitings about the waistline and also at each side of the blouse. ### NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Explosions, Poison Gas and Fire Kill Scores in a Cleveland Hospital.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ONE of the most terrible and distressing disasters of recent times occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, resulting in the deaths of at least 124 persons and the injury of many others. Fire of undetermined origin broke out in the Cleveland Clinic and soon reached a great quantity of X-ray films stored in the basement. These, exploding, gave off deadly gases that spread through the four-story building. Patients, doctors and nurses were nearly all unable to make their way to the doors and windows, so swiftly did the fumes render them unconscious; and for a time no rescuers could enter the building unless equipped with gas masks. Even outside the structure pedestrians passing at the time of the blasts fell to the ground overcome by the gas and could not be dragged to safety until it had lifted.

Most of the victims were killed by the gas fumes, according to the authorities. Among them were many well-known citizens of Cleveland and vicinity, and a number of nationally known physicians who were in attendance on patients. Members of the clinic staff were credited with the utmost valor in their efforts to save the patients; and many of them gave their lives. The police and firemen and numerous chance passersby were no less valorous. Dr. George W. Crile, noted surgeon, founder and chief owner of the clinic, was foremost in the relief work. Fire Chief James P. Flynn was an outstanding hero. He had his men lower him time after time through the skylight on the roof and he brought out 16 living or dead.

Experts in Cleveland said the poisonous gases were due to the burning of X-ray film in large quantities. The photographic film, which has much the same composition as gun cotton, in addition to exploding with terrific force, threw off three kinds of compounds. These were camphor, carbon monoxide, and the gas of nitric oxide or other nitrogen compounds. Inhalation of the carbon monoxide resulted in death similar to the breathing of exhaust gas from an automobile in a closed garage.

THE senate passed the McNary farm relief bill, including the export debenture feature, by a vote of 54 to 33. Only two Democrats—Wagner of New York and Walsh of Massachusetts—were recorded in the negative. Twenty-one Republicans voted for the bill and 31 against it. The action of many of the latter was in protest against the debenture provision which President Hoover opposed. Leaders of the house at first were disposed to refuse to accept the senate measure on the ground that the debenture clause was revenue legislation, which must originate in the lower house. Then it was decided to send the bill to conference and kill the objectionable feature there. A special rule was adopted, however, setting forth that the house stood on its rights and that its action in this particular case should not be considered a precedent. The rule carried a rebuke to the senate for invading the prerogatives of the house. All the house conferees and three of the five senate conferees were on record as opposed to the export debenture plan.

DEBATE on the tariff bill continued in the house and the expressions of dissatisfaction with its provisions were numerous. Many requests for further increases in duties on farm products were submitted to the ways and means committee. President Hoover showed his good will toward agriculture by signing executive orders, under the operation of the flexible tariff, increasing the rates on milk, cream and lard; he also approved an increase in the duties on window glass as noted by Pennsylvania manufacturers. The increased rates of milk and cream, not as high as provided in the Hawley bill, are aimed against Canadian importation; the higher rate on lard, the same as in the Hawley measure, is directed against imports from Argentina.

Speaker Loggworth said last week the house, after disposing of the farm relief and tariff bills, might recess for six weeks or two months. The senate probably will recess for three weeks or a month while its finance committee struggles with the tariff measure.

DESPITE the earnest fight put up by Southern Democrats and some drys, Senator Vandenberg's bill for the 1930 census and redistricting was made the unfinished business in the senate and given right of way over other measures until disposed of. Its passage was considered certain. Favorable action by the house is a matter of course, for that body passed the reapportionment bill which was killed by a filibuster in the closing days of the last congress. Under the provisions 17 states will lose 23 members of congress and 11 states will gain the same number.

GEN. CHARLES G. DAWES, our new ambassador to Great Britain, spent a few days in Washington last week conferring with President Hoover and Secretary of State Stimson. Reporters swarmed about him asking his views on all sorts of current topics, and he evaded the queries politely until one wanted to know whether he would wear silk knee breeches at the court of St. James.

"Do you want a diplomatic answer," responded Ambassador Dawes, "or the answer that question deserves?" "Shoot," his interrogator replied. "You can go plumb to hell," General Dawes retorted; "that's my business."

IT WAS announced at the White House that President Hoover had offered the post of governor-general of the Philippines to Dwight F. Davis of St. Louis, former secretary of war, and that his early acceptance was expected unless he decided that Mrs. Davis' health precluded it. This appointment was a surprise as Mr. Davis had been prominently mentioned for an ambassadorial position, probably in Paris. However, the Philippines post would be especially acceptable to him because of its good salary—$25,000 a year—and because he has long been deeply interested in the affairs of the islands and desired to visit them. In Washington it is now understood that the place of ambassador to France will be given to Senator Walter Edge of New Jersey after the close of the special session of congress.

THE Washington Post, having recently printed an article predicting the recall of the Belgian ambassador, Prince De Ligne, which brought an apology from the secretary of state, the Philadelphia Record came out with a story of the alleged conduct of Edward McLean, publisher of the Post, during a luncheon at the Belgian embassy, stating he was asked to leave by Prince De Ligne, and implying that this supposed occurrence was the real reason for the attack on the ambassador in the Post. Now Mr. McLean, who is prominent in Washington society, has brought suit against the Record for $1,000,000 damages, denying that paper's story in toto and asserting that as a result of the story he "has been and is greatly injured in his said good name, fame, reputation and credit . . . and is brought into public scandal, scorn, infamy, shame, and disgrace . . . has suffered and endured great mental pain and anguish . . . and is subjected to great humiliation and endured great injury in his feelings, and has otherwise been permanently damaged."

FLIGHTING nobility has been acquiesced by the otherwise rather obscure Des Moines university, a fundamentalist institution conducted by the Baptist Bible Union of North America. Dr. T. T. Shields, chairman of its board of trustees, and Miss Keith Reisman, secretary of the board, didn't seem to be satisfied with the fundamentalism of some of the faculty members, and besides they had been the subjects of an attack concerning moral behavior. The students, or a majority of them, sided with the faculty, so Shields dismissed the entire teaching staff, including President H. C. Wayman, and ordered the university closed. Meanwhile the students indulged in some rioting and drove from their midst a few Canadians whom they blamed as spies, and then the university was reopened under a court injunction. Shields and Miss Reisman carried the case to the annual convention of the Baptist Bible Union which had just opened in Buffalo, and the delegates sought a way to settle the trouble through arbitration.

COMPLAINT comes from Senator Robert M. La Follette of Wisconsin that President Hoover is not enforcing the seamen's act which bears the name of the senator La Follette. Administration of the law is committed mainly to the Department of Commerce and under Mr. Hoover's administration of that department enforcement of the law was relaxed on the plea that strict compliance with it, especially in regard to manning of ships, would make it impossible for American vessels to compete with those of foreign registry.

"I know this is the excuse for non-enforcement of the law," said Senator La Follette. "But it will not hold water. It might be that ships manned with the prescribed crews would make a little less profit, but they would be far safer for passengers and crews. If the President means what he says about law enforcement, I do not see how he can refuse to enforce the seamen's act."

POLICE of Vienna and Budapest have uncovered a plot for another communist revolt in Hungary, and have arrested a number of men on charges of forging passports and promoting political conspiracies. Documents were taken revealing that the prisoners were acting under orders from Moscow; also that Bela Kun, leader of the communist revolution in Hungary during 1919, and who was expelled from Austria last September after spending three months in prison for having entered without permission, has been visiting Vienna since his expulsion in order personally to direct preparations for the Hungarian revolt.

COMPLETELY recovered from his illness, King George of England returned last week to Windsor castle from Bognor, his place of convalescence. All along his route he was greeted by cheering thousands of his affectionate subjects, and at Windsor his motor car was showered with rose petals. The joy of the people was so genuine and sincere that the king and Queen Mary were deeply affected.

It was announced that the king would personally attend to all business connected with the calling of the new parliament and the constitution of the new government after the election. These duties may be fairly heavy if, as seems likely, no party obtains a clear majority and the king is forced to intervene to break a parliamentary deadlock.

GRAF ZEPPELIN, the big German dirigible, started on a trip to the United States last week carrying passengers and freight; but off the east coast of Spain two motors were disabled by broken crank shafts and the airship turned back to Friedrichshafen.

REPEATED earthquake shocks in Khorasan province, Persia, killed more than three thousand persons, wrecked Bujinard and other towns and laid a great expense of territory in waste. The governor of the province called on the government for relief for thousands of injured and sick inhabitants, and supplies were sent by airplanes to regions difficult of access otherwise.

EUGENE GILMORE, acting governor general of the Philippines, has been informed in an official report that graft which may involve several millions of dollars has been uncovered in the bureau of commerce and industry, and he is asked for complete reorganization of the bureau. The director and vice director and maybe a dozen others are mixed up in the matter.

Ugly Knees (in England)
This question, "Why is it that almost every woman has ugly knees?" was put to me, says a writer in the London Chronicle, by a well-known actor; and it set me taking stock of my neighbor's knees in his and tube. Certainly I was forced to acknowledge that there was ground for his remark. The knee, like every other feature (is it a feature?), can be improved with care, and even after a very short time will show results, if treated systematically. Massage and exercise will work wonders with a too-plump knee, and massage with a little cream will turn the thin, bony knee into a plump and dimpled one.

Bars Hunting With Arrows.
A type of publicity seeker who has resorted to hunting big game with the bow and arrow received a jolt in Massachusetts when the state refused to sanction revived use of that weapon. Not only that, but the commonwealth challenged the claim of modern hunters with the long bow that the arrow is more humane than the gun.

The legislative committee which turned down the proposal held that the arrow in the hands of unskilled persons would be too cruel to warrant its indiscriminate use.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Author's Faith in His Book Brought Results
Aspiring to be an author, Jonathan Leonard wrote a story of Cape Cod life and submitted it to a publisher, who promptly returned it, and thereupon he sent it to several other publishers one after the other with the same result, and finally becoming discouraged, at the age of fifty he set about to print the book through his own endeavors and by his own hands. He purchased a small printing press and set the type himself, printing two pages at a time until the work was completed. Then he went out and learned something about bookbinding and bound 100 volumes, mainly for the purpose of observing the foibles of the copyright laws. The accumulation of volumes was distributed among his friends and finally a copy fell into the hands of one of the publishers who had passed upon it before and he saw the merits of the work and immediately arranged for another edition. In the meantime Mr. Leonard had written another book and the same publisher has contracted to handle it also.—Exchange.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

The Advance of Progress Cannot Be Halted

A legal war has just begun at San Francisco between the Musicians' Union and the managers of the theatres where the "talkies" are being used, and the musicians have filed injunction proceedings against the theatres to restrain such houses from further using the "talkies" without also using the musicians, claiming that a certain contract exists and has been violated by the musicians being discharged. If such a contract exists, it would seem that the theatres should carry out the terms of the contract, as much as it might lose for them in order to avoid a clash with the musicians, but there seems to be more to it, according to the managers' side of the case, whereby a contract can be annulled at any time by either party failing to live up to their respective parts in the same.

Be that as it may, the musicians are simply chasing moonbeams if they seek to put the talkies out of business or even interfere with them, from the fact that the talkies occupy an important place in the line of progress and all the kicking the musicians may do will not halt, or even hinder that piece of advancement.

This brings to mind the same attitude and opposition which every new thing that has been produced has had beginning with the ox cart down. When horses took the place of ox teams, there came a storm of protest, which of course amounted to nothing. Next came the bicycle which threatened to do away with the horseback pleasure, and for a time at least, horsemen staged a revolt against the bicycle, but it came into use just the same and did eliminate a great deal of horseback riding, in spite of protests, yet the horse still had its place for pleasure driving and heavy work on farms and in truck work in cities.

Next in line, came the typesetting machines, and the same was met with a storm of protests from the old hand typesetters, who claimed that it never could be done, and many went on strikes to prevent the machines from coming into use, but where did it take them? The machines came on just the same and the printers had to fall in line with progress.

Next came the automobile which began to take the place of the horse and buggy for pleasure driving, and a great storm of disapproval followed from the makers of horse goods everywhere.

They said it would never become practical and conventions were held for the expressed purpose of devising ways and means whereby the use of the automobile might be discouraged so as not to interfere with the sale of pleasure driving harness and the use of the horse - but the fact remains at this time, a horse and buggy is a thing of the past. Then, the flying machine was brought out as a means of transportation and was laughed at, but could not be laughed off. It is here and here to stay with other things in the line of progress, no matter where the ax may fall.

The motion picture industry has eliminated the vaudeville theatre, and even where one exists, there must be pictures in connection with the show, or it is too dull for patronage.

Then, in quick succession came the radio, which has almost done away with opera and all kinds of programs may be enjoyed in the home and can be heard from all parts of the country at one's will.

The movie is threatened with doom from the talkie and the musicians are seeking its destruction because you may now near and see big orchestras on the screen and one can see that it affects the ordinary movie as well as the musicians.

Countless other things might be mentioned which either have, or will be, done away with by new inventions or creations, but past experiences show that it is useless to complain or to try to prevent the onward march of progress - to use a time-honored expression "wonders will never cease" and we might as well make up our minds to prepare for greater things to come.

HOWE ABOUT—

By ED HOWE

(Copyright by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)
I know of a married man who acted so well throughout his life that I like to point to him with pride.

He was a good boy at home and at school.

Went to work as soon as was natural and proper, and prospered.

Married at about the usual time, and was a liberal and respected husband.

Early in life he was useful to his town, as his institution was one of the kind to which citizens pointed with pride; it gave employment to a large number of men at good wages, and his product was a great convenience.

All the time he was accumulating money, and, when he died at thirty-nine, left the best home in the community and the greatest fortune.

The widow is still beautiful at thirty-seven.

I love to tell the story to the ladies, they so enjoy it.

"In my town," a man writes, "there is a famous scandal. The other day one of the parties to it told me all the details. I did not learn a single new thing; gossip had supplied every detail. With all their viciousness the gossips had invented nothing."

A man attacked a woman's devotion to her church. "Yes," she replied, "I attend church entertainments and church services, and I like the women I find there better than those I find elsewhere playing cards, dancing, and smoking cigarettes." I thought the answer very good. There may be objections to church entertainments, but not so many as to affairs where the saxophone, the bottle, cards and cigarettes are exploited. Those of you who do not attend church are invited to try it, and see if I am not right.

The stories told of great men are usually interesting, but I often doubt their truth. It is told of the older Dumas that he always kept in his apartment a bowl filled with gold coins, and invited his friends to help themselves. Most of the big stories are untrue, but what's the difference, so long as they are interesting? Here we wish to be assured, why worry ourselves over a small matter like truth or probability? Nearly everything peddled around to attract attention is invented, or grossly exaggerated.

"And fencing's hard to be got at, by what I can make out."—Silas Marner.

It is hard for us to realize the difficulties that attended fencing a garden or field before the days of wire fencing; yet one does not need to be very old to remember when the first woven-wire fences were put up.

Before the days of wire fencing, the common fencing materials were rails, boards, pickets, stumps, stone and hedges.

The most popular fences for enclosing fields before the days of wire fencing were rail fences; while board fences or picket fences were commonly used for enclosing gardens or lawns.

Building a rail fence was a matter of great skill and no little labor. The trees that were to be used for rails were first cut into logs of the desired length, and the logs were then split into rails. Oak and chestnut were the favorite woods for rails in the country where I grew up, but hickory and walnut and hard maple and the other hardwood trees were also used. Well-bull rail fences would last for a half century or more, increasing in picturesque quality as they became weathered and overgrown with moss and lichen. Old rail fences were a favorite haunt of the striped chipmunk and the lizard and the fence corners of such fences were usually grown up with blackberries, sassafras, sumac and the like.

Up through Michigan, Ontario and other parts of the northern country one often sees stump fences—the weirdest possible objects especially in dim twilight. The stumps are usually great things several feet in diameter and are hauled out of the ground with several feet of root fringing them the whole way around. They are arranged on edge around the field, ordinarily with the bottom of the stump facing the road and the top of the stump facing the field and with the roots interlocking in the air like the tentacles of great octopuses.

Stump fences are commonly found in the hilly and mountainous sections of the eastern and southern states. They were built by farmers who knew of no other way to dispose of the stumps that they picked up when clearing their fields, and grow higher from year to year as each plowing turns up more stumps. They are very often overgrown with grapevines and poison ivy and Virginia creeper and briars and are the most picturesque of all fences when these plants wear their autumn colors.

WHY CAMELS ARE THE BETTER CIGARETTE

Camels contain such tobaccos and such blending as have never been offered in any other cigarette.

They are made of the choicest Turkish and American tobaccos grown.

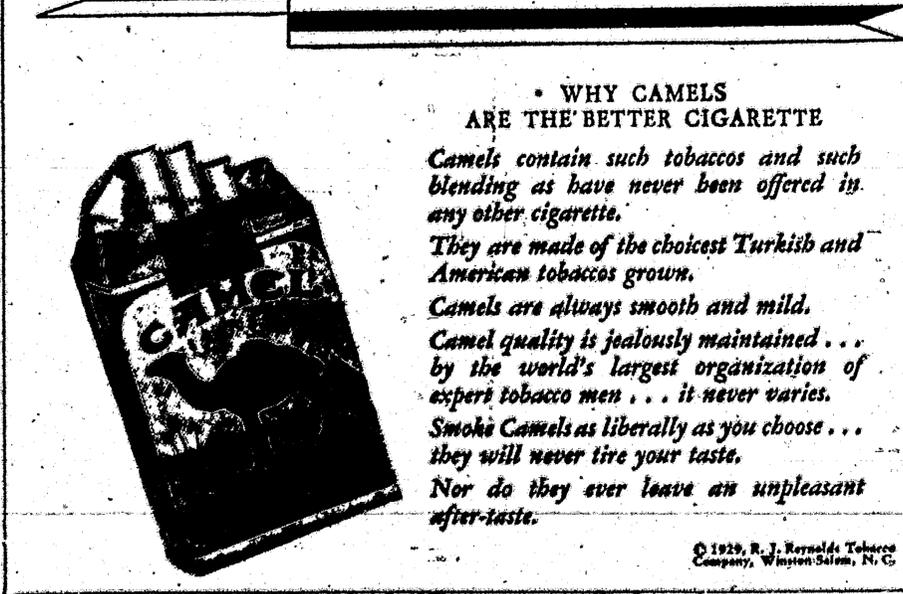

Camels are always smooth and mild.

Camel quality is jealously maintained . . . by the world's largest organization of expert tobacco men . . . it never varies.

Smoke Camels as liberally as you choose . . . they will never tire your taste.

Nor do they ever leave an unpleasant after-taste.

Airplane Aid to Big Business

Industrial organizations have learned by experience that the ownership of passenger airplanes for the use of their executives is of immense benefit, especially in the way of saving time on business trips. One of the pioneers in this line was the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, which put its first plane into operation two years ago. According to announcement by Allan Jackson, vice president, speaking for the directors, that corporation has now replaced the plane with a larger and faster machine supplied by the Stout division of the Ford Motor company. It is an all-metal, tri-motored plane carrying nine passengers; has a total of 1,300 horse power and a high speed of 160 miles. Stanolind II, as it is called, acted as flagship of the St. Paul Association of Commerce's "good will tour" to Winnipeg, carrying members of the city council.

LATER EXPERIENCES OF JEREMIAH

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 20:1-6; 27:11-21; 32:1-15. GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and persecute you, and say, All manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. PRIMARY TOPIC—Being True in a Hard Test.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Being True in a Hard Test. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Standing True in Hard Places. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Forms of Modern Persecution.

I. Jeremiah in Stocks (20:1-6). He had predicted the downfall of Jerusalem because of the disobedience of the people (19:4-14, 15).

Pashur, an officer of the temple, heard him. Pashur gave Jeremiah a cruel beating and placed him in stocks. "Stocks" was an instrument of torture, confining the legs in a cramped position. On being released the next day, Jeremiah predicted the terror which was to be Pashur's portion. His words were literally fulfilled (vv. 4-6).

II. Jeremiah in Prison in Jonathan's House (37:11-21).

He was arrested by Irijah as he was about to leave Jerusalem on an errand. He was charged with deserting to the Chaldeans. While here in prison, King Zedekiah secretly consulted with him and ordered lenient treatment.

III. Jeremiah in the Dungeon (38:1-13). I. He predicts the capture of Jerusalem (vv. 1-3).

(1) To whom (v. 1)? Jeremiah had been taken out of the prison by the king (37:17) and ordered to the court of the prison (37:21). Here the people seem to have had free access to him (32:12). From this place of limited confinement Jeremiah announced to the people their approaching captivity.

2. Counsel given (vv. 2, 3). a. All that remain in the city shall die by the sword, famine and pestilence.

b. He that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live. "He shall have his life for a prey," doubtless means that he shall escape with his life, though losing all else.

2. Jeremiah accused by the princes (vv. 4, 5).

(1) He weakened the hands of the men and all the people (v. 4). From a human standpoint what they said was true, but since Jeremiah was but the interpreter of God to the nation, they ought to have heeded his advice to surrender.

(2) This man seeketh not the welfare of this people, but the hurt (v. 4). This charge was utterly false. Jeremiah was the best friend of the people, for he faithfully proclaimed to them God's judgment and advised them how to make the best of their unfortunate situation.

3. The king's cowardly act (v. 5). The very one whom Jeremiah was trying to help, deserted him. The king was afraid of the Chaldeans, the princes, Jeremiah, and God.

4. Jeremiah cast into the dungeon (v. 6).

This seems to have been a cistern which had been emptied of its water during the siege, leaving only mire. Into this mire he sank, possibly up to his neck. The purpose was to let Jeremiah die there. In this situation he is a type of Christ (Esa. 69). No one ever suffered more unjustly, save Jesus Christ.

5. Jeremiah rescued from the dungeon (vv. 7-13).

(1) By Ebed-Melech, an African servant (vv. 7-9).

The Jewish prophet, whom his own countrymen tried to destroy, is saved by a Gentile. Though Ebed-Melech had a colored skin, he was the whitest man in Jerusalem. He went to the king and boldly declared that the princes had done evil in imprisoning Jeremiah.

(2) The method (vv. 10-13).

The king yielded to his request and furnished a guard to prevent interference with the work of rescue. He let down soft rags and worn-out garments by ropes and instructed Jeremiah to put them under his armbands and under the ropes to prevent injury to him as he was being lifted up. He was lifted out of the dungeon and given the freedom of the prison court.

IV. Jeremiah in Egypt (vv. 43:1-7). His closing years were spent in Egypt. He was taken there by Johanan, where he continued his ministry. He seems to have been unpopular there. Tradition has it that he was stoned to death by the Jews in Egypt.

Nogales was selected as the 1930 meeting place of the Knights of Columbus in annual convention in Yuma. Joseph Geare, Phoenix, was elected state deputy; Fortuna Mason, Nogales, state warden; H. V. Bene, Miami, state secretary.

After two years of preliminary survey work in Greenlee and Graham counties, the Arizona-Edison Company of Douglas, Ariz., with general offices in Chicago, has applied for a preliminary permit for power development on the Gila river.

The major oil companies have taken the lead in the greatest wildcatting oil campaign yet to be staged in the section surrounding Afton, N. M., and more than twenty-five locations for deep test wells were made in Eddy and Lea counties last month.

Advice from Carrizozo states that more than 2,500 visitors registered at the Gran Quivora, and indications are for a larger number during 1930, according to Dr. W. H. Smith, who is custodian of the government property there.

Prescott was selected as the convention city for the Arizona Federation of Federal Employees, in session at Douglas recently. A. M. Phillips, Tucson, elected president; Dr. R. L. Taylor, Tucson, vice president, and H. E. Williams, Nogales, secretary-treasurer.

Collections of the Arizona State Corporation Commission for the last half of April were $6,284.55. The total collections by the commission for the fiscal year, to date, have been $253,976, an increase over the same period during the last fiscal year of $5,700.

Reports received in Las Cruces by fruit growers, indicate that the outlook for the state in general is good for a fruit crop of all kinds. Only slight frost damage was reported on some of the earlier fruits in a few localities, and apples in the various sections are reported as a full crop.

A village of fifty people and several valuable mining properties were threatened as a forest fire swept unabated over the Patagonia mountain range, a few miles from Nogales. More than 3,000 acres of timber had been laid waste before the efforts of 100 men were successful in stopping the conflagration.

The recent industrial employment survey report, issued from the office of Quince Record, district director of the U. S. employment service of the U. S. Department of Labor, states that the volume of business and employment in Arizona, which increased considerably during April, and with every indication for a further increase in activity and employment in all lines during May, is chiefly reflected in copper mining, building, general construction, agriculture, horticulture, and in railroad activities. Notwithstanding increased demand for labor in many lines, the supply of workers is indicated ample to meet requirements during May. There is unusual activity in new land development. The report for New Mexico states that the volume of employment, particularly in agriculture, building, general construction, metal mining, and railroad activities, showed a seasonal increase during April. Several hundred miscellaneous seasonal workers, recently migrated to Colorado and other nearby states for employment during the summer season. While the labor supply is ample to meet demands in all lines during May, forces available are not in any appreciable excess of indicated requirements. Spring farming activities are in full swing. Increased demand for general farm labor has been amply met.

A Sour Stomach

In the same-time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

CHAPTER I

The Cafe Miramon and Anita

As the sun went down behind the towering hills beyond Chapultepec, and the purple haze of evening fell, we went to drag our chairs and our tables out to the sidewalk in front of the Cafe Miramon—which faced the graceful, nodding elms of the Alameda—and to build up a corner of the old Malouin Dorce. Here we gathered: Mironnac, lieutenant in the royal forces of his majesty, Maximilian, a Gascon lad of proved courage, whom we called—because of the simple sweetness of his beardless face—Cupido; Lieutenant Neville, whose shoulders were broad, whose black curly hair lay close against his massive head, whose voice was deep and gentle, and whose smiling eyes were blue and unafraid; Captain Lestrage, military aide to the emperor—heavy, dark, saturnine—a coldly calculating, mental machine of tremendous ability; and, lastly, Alfred Francois, count de Viguy, captain—by grace of the favor of Maximilian—in the French army of occupation in Mexico.

"We were pawns—we four—in the empire-building game of Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, whose long arm had reached across the ocean to plant a bit of old France in the New World. It proved to be a futile, ill-starred gesture after all, for the third Napoleon should never have attempted that which the first Napoleon had tried to do and failed.

Looking back now through Time's perspective I find many things to regret, and few for which to offer gratitude. Habitually we drank too much, temperamentally we talked too much, and the judgment of maturer years tells me that our excesses added nothing to the prestige or to the popularity of Maximilian. But the French are an arrogant race, and Mexico seemed weak and helpless at our feet. So we whiled away the later afternoons, the long twilight, and half the crisp cool nights. And we either started or finished with the one subject that lay nearest us, the only cross-current in the placid stream of Maximilian's reign in the historic city; but a cross-current so potent, so fraught with menace, that to disregard it longer would have been a piece of inexcusable stupidity.

That cross-current we called La Anita. Like Circe of old she had led men to their doom. Of our own crowd there were Besancon and Leroux, who had called to pay their respects, who had followed the lure of beauty—for the Frenchman will follow that lure for ever—and had disappeared as completely as though some Axtel air-god had carried them off. There was Duroc, one of Gascon's favored sons, who had gone to worship at the shrine of love, and whose body we had found floating in the canal. And now Cupido, having brought back a wounded shoulder from that house of mystery, balanced himself precariously—with one foot on the pavement and the other on a chair—and voiced, in wine-mellowed tones, high laudation of this Lorelei.

"Name of G—d," said he, "what a woman! All the little grace of a panther is in the gestures of that exquisite body of hers; she is chilled steel and fire; she is deep glacial lake and laughing mountain rill; she is dignity, regal poise and sweet reserve. Her eyes are a soft and velvety limpid amber, her hair has that mysterious, smoky, purplish brown of sweet twilight, and her—" He waved a left arm in suddenly waned impotence.

"Continue, we pray thee!" Lestrage laughed, but it was a laugh of the lips only, for his eyes remained cold, steadfast. "A murderous thrust from the lady's escort, and he comes back to us with peans of praise of the lady's charms, upon his foaming lips." Lestrage's sardonic face hardened. "Know you not, that many a French officer has followed the lure of a lovely senorita only to find a rendezvous with death?"

"Better a grave of glory," quoth Cupido the dreamer, "than ignoble life. Besides, she kissed me."

"Did you, ask her, Cupido, what has become of Besancon, and of Leroux, and by what evil chance the body of Duroc found its way into the canal, a body with a sword-thrust in the heart; did she tell you what happened to those brave sons of France?"

"She did not," answered Cupido; "I did not ask her. Besides," he continued, and a dreamy look fell like a soft mantle upon his smooth boyish face, "if she kissed them they must have died happy."

"It's murder," said Lestrage, "mysterious, premeditated murder, and his majesty—"

"Not so," said Cupido. "If anything, I was the aggressor. True, I did not like his manner, and, doubtless, no more did he care for mine. He gave me my choice, however, of weapons; pistols across the table, or one of two light rapers that hung—"

"Pistols," gasped Lestrage the unimaginative, "across the table? A sword-blooded murder?"

"Pistols," answered Neville, "across a few feet of shining mahogany! A man of daring—surely." He thought a moment. "Then Besancon and Leroux and Duroc must have chosen the swords."

"The duel was quite to my liking," said Cupido, "for the curved grip of a rapier finds a welcome home in my hand. And to fight before Anita—ah!"

"What is his name?" I questioned.

"What matter a mere name?" said Mironnac. "I had no ears for the man, I wasted no glances on him while I was privileged to look into the amber eyes of La Anita."

"And you got only a thrust in the shoulder," growled Lestrage; "you are fortunate."

"He offered me my life," continued the Gascon, "on conditions."

"I think," said Neville, "I see a light; proceed."

"He said that Benito Juarez needed men of courage; he offered me a commission in the army of the erstwhile President, who has put up so stubborn a resistance against the emperor."

"Sacre!" gasped Lestrage.

"And he promised me immunity and honors when Mexico shall have won its independence from Maximilian and the power of France. I told him that I served one master, and that master is Maximilian."

"Of course," said Neville; "go on."

Cupido continued: "Then he swore a great and potent oath—one of the kind that must have been brewing for centuries—and he built around me a living wall of steel. Such swordsmanship was a thing beyond my dreams; I was a helpless babe before him, and I think La Anita must have been touched, either by the worship she had seen in my eyes, or by my helplessness before this modern Bayard, for she cried out as his rapier quinged my shoulder."

"Humph!" said I.

"He is as tall as you are, Monsieur le Comte, his shoulders are as broad, and his body is even more powerfully muscled. He possesses a wrist of steel, the movements of his body have the quickness of a cat, and the facility of his swordsmanship is second not even to thine own, mon capitaine."

"Ah, so?" said I, with some heat, for he had touched me on a tender spot—and knew it. "Perchance opportunity will offer whereby a test shall be made to find out which of us is the inferior blade. You and Duroc, and Besancon and Leroux have failed; it is high time that some man of France shall prick this paragon who secures himself behind the skirts of a lady. Perhaps the Blade of Picardy—"

"You wouldn't," cried Neville. "The emperor—"

"It is just because of the emperor that I would," said I. "One life is little enough to sacrifice if it means a removal. Besides," I continued, "I fear me that the lady's charms have blinded the eyes of our courageous Gascon, and have brought a palsy to his very efficient wrist."

"Just as her charms might also, mon capitaine," jeered Cupido, "blind thine own, and bring a palsy to that dexterous wrist of thine."

"Her charms shall have that chance," I boasted, "for I shall make opportunity as quickly as possible. Our Bayard shall fight one more fight—his last. Leroux and Besancon and Duroc shall be avenged. We will see if the first sword of Picardy is second to that of this murderer. There will be no pricked shoulders this time; one of us will go out of that house of mystery and death alive, the other—"

"If we permit this mad venture," mused Neville, who knew my gray-haired mother in St. Simon, "and this Bayard swears you as he served Duroc, what his majesty will say to an still-born son to a soldier, and what he might do to us is a thing I shudder to contemplate."

"It is not that you permit," said I. "You can say that I have looked upon the glorious Anita, and that, in spite of your combined protests and objections, I followed the lure of beauty just as the others have done."

"Madness!" cried Neville.

"And entirely unnecessary," added Lestrage, who had smiled at my boastful outburst, "for La Anita shall be summoned tomorrow before the emperor, and the mysterious Bayard will doubtless find a swift and certain death against a wall."

"No," said Cupido, his smooth face transfixed with horror, "the emperor never would!"

"That's his present plan," smiled Lestrage. "I have the summons for La Anita in my pocket even now, and Monsieur Bayard will surely be dealt with soon."

"The execution of the father of La Anita," said Neville, "was, I believe, a grievous blunder, for he was well beloved in Mexico; and if the heavy hand of Maximilian falls upon his daughter, I fear for the cause of France. Even a stupid people will stand only so much, and then—"

"There is not strength in Mexico," averred Lestrage, "to withstand the power of France. The heavy hand is the only hand that can rule."

"For a while," said I, "but the heavy hand is due for certain failure. How much, Captain Lestrage, had you to do with this new purpose of his majesty? A deal—I'll swear."

"He laughed at my question. 'I am thinking of the cause of France,' he said. 'That portion of the plan, Monsieur le Comte, which was not born to my own brain, came from that of Colonel Lopez.'

"And his majesty leans entirely upon Colonel Lopez," said Neville.

"A most able soldier," vowed Lestrage; "and the emperor makes no mistake in the faith he puts in him. A brilliant, far-sighted man."

I arose and extended a hand to Lestrage. "I will relieve you, monsieur, of the unpleasant and possibly dangerous task of presenting that summons to the fair Anita. It offers me an entrée, it gives me every opportunity I require to cross swords with Monsieur Bayard."

Lestrage, grinning, drew the heavy, folded paper from a pocket and handed it to me. "I owe you a drink, Monsieur le Comte, for relieving me of a thankless errand. After you have delivered to the lovely La Anita the summons for her appearance before the emperor, you are free to pursue any mad venture that your quixotic temperament may lead you into. Monsieur le Capitaine, but until that summons is delivered you are on his majesty's mission."

"Trust me," said I; "tomorrow you will see—"

"She comes!" breathed Cupido. He got to his feet in unseemly haste, stepped quickly to the curb, and waited, cap in hand.

She sat, with an elderly lady, in a graceful, open barouche drawn by two magnificent bays, and driven by a broad-shouldered mozo whose dark face held the stony impassivity of the Sphinx.

The Gascon, at the curb, turned and winked an eye at me.

"Your chance," said Lestrage. "Go ahead."

I looked at Neville, who shook his head. "When Monsieur Bayard has finished with you," he said with a smile, "I will take him on."

"Then your chance will never come," said I, stepping from the curb and approaching the carriage, which swayed dory-like with every move of the occupants.

"And your—shoulder, lieutenant," she said. Her rich musical voice carried a note of genuine anxiety; "it is—"

Cupido gulped. Truly the Gascon carries his heart upon his sleeve. I think I have never seen a face so exquisitely lovely, nor a form more graciously fashioned. The clear olive of her skin seemed almost transparent. Her lashes were long and black, and her full red lips belied the thin high arch of eyebrows. Hers was a face of contrasts, for the Gascon had rightly termed her "chilled steel and fire." Some of his mad worship fired my brain. "Name of G—d," he had said, "what a woman! Well! Beautiful! Of a truth she was beautiful. And believe me, I have seen beauty in women, for the courts of Vienna and of Paris know me well."

Cupido's voice came to me from a vague and misty distance; I heard only a portion of what he was saying: " . . . to present my best friend, le Comte de Viguy, Captain—"

I caught the slim fingers, raised them awkwardly to eager lips and I found myself listening—as in a dream—to the music of her voice. The very air seemed suddenly charged with a new and spiritual glory; life, all at once, became very much worth while.

"Lorelei," I whispered, unconscious of the fact that I was speaking; "a dark—"

Red lips parted in a smile, and a light danced in the deep amber eyes.

"But the Lorelei were fair—is it not so, senor?"

Cupido looked at me in blank amazement. He touched my elbow. "The Senorita Arrellanos, mon capitaine," he repeated, for, deaf and dumb and blind to all the world save La Anita, I had not heard him at first. I bowed—and only a Frenchman knows how to bow. "The Lorelei, to the German, senorita," said I, at last in control of myself, "is blonde because the German's ideal is blonde; but the locks of the Lorelei of Picardy would be dark, and wavy—a deep brown with the faintest hint of twilight blue, like desert smoke."

"At last," she cried brightly, "the sleeper wakes!" She turned to Cupido. "Senor Gascon, is this the man you told me about—is this the man whose wit is as keen and as agile as the sword he is reputed to be able to ply with such consummate skill; is this the darling of the courts of Vienna and of Paris?"

"Ah, senorita," I deprecated, "you are unkind; you blind me with the brilliance of divinity, then, while I am thus helpless, you give me a mortal thrust. Still, you do but make artful use of the weapons that God has given you—and, verily, He has favored you in rich abundance."

Now the amber eyes sought mine again, held for half a minute, and dropped to her lap, where slim white hands lay passive. "Tha mia," she said gently, "the duenna who sat beside her, 'this is Senor Viguy, captain in the army of Maximilian.'"

The duenna looked down at me—looked down upon me from vast, illimitable heights. I bowed—and she looked away again.

La Anita smiled a little. "Tha mia," said she in my own tongue, "has not the resiliency of youth."

"It is a golden thing," I answered, "and thrice blessed when beauty plays accompaniment."

She sobered suddenly. "The court of France, senor, has doubtless taught thee many things. Thy tongue—"

"Ah, do not misjudge me, senorita; for each word of praise or compliment that escapes me there are a million others held in check."

She spoke to Cupido, who fumbled the cap with awkward fingers. "Verg thy blade, Senor Mironnac, as deft as the tongue of Captain Viguy I should have lost a worthy cousin. You did not tell me the half."

"He can tell it far better than I," said Cupido, grinning; "the practice has all been his."

Now the mention of her cousin brought back to me the object of my mission: to deliver his majesty's summons and to cross swords with that precious cousin of hers. For the life of me I could not picture this woman with the face of an angel dealing in murder. I could not imagine her in any sort of intrigue, yet the evidence lay all against her. I steeled myself for an ordeal. "The Gascon merely jeers, senorita," said I; "that you and he should have spoken of me at all puts me deeply in your debt, a debt that I find myself ill prepared to repay, for I come to you on an official errand."

"To me, senor?"

"Aye, a message from his majesty; a summons."

Her face went white for an instant and the slim shoulders drooped. "What can the—the—what can Maximilian want with me?" she faltered.

"Better that he should deliver it, senorita," encouraged Cupido, "than Lestrage. Lestrage would have gone to your house with a squad of soldiers, while Captain Francois—"

She reached out a hand for the summons, a hand that trembled a little. To have given it up there would have meant the loss of my rendezvous. "Should a message from his majesty, senorita, be delivered thus on a public thoroughfare?"

The sweet eyes hardened and the tender, childish curves around her mouth took on an iron rigidity. Even the music went out of her voice: "Perhaps an alley would more fittingly meet the methods of your emperor."

"You have no reason, senorita, to love his majesty, for he has done you an evil turn, yet it seems—"

"My father, captain," she broke in passionately, "was a good patriot, and a man greatly beloved in Mexico. He had put no obstacle in the way of Maximilian, yet charges were brought against him, charges which could not, because of their inherent falsity, have been proved; but they found him guilty—and shot him. Must I love him for that?"

"In any government," said I, "grievous wrongs are committed. I believe that his majesty does not approve—"

"The popularity of Maximilian has been lost because of promiscuous executions," she said. "If ambition had not blinded him he should have seen it long ago. He is done in Mexico, and when the great trial comes he will find the world against him. Some day, senor, Maximilian will face a firing squad."

"A thing beyond my powers of foresight," I answered. "I am serving him, and France; opinions are not for me, if I may be permitted to deliver this summons to you at your home—"

"Surely." The smile she gave me had much in it besides a courteous acquiescence. I wondered if she were visualizing that duplicit cousin of hers, and I hoped in my heart that she was. "If it is your desire, Captain Viguy, you may come tonight."

CHAPTER II

The House of Arrellanos

A boy opened the heavy iron gate and directed me to a narrow, curving, gravelled walk that led to the house. I swung the bronze knocker lustily, and the dark, sphinx-faced mozo let me in. If he recognized me he gave no sign. He left me in the library, a huge, deeply carpeted chamber done in walnut, with a ceiling twenty feet high, and heavy purple hangings over the windows and the doorways. Books in magnificent walnut cases ranged the walls—I had time to note that they were Spanish and French and English—and portraits by early Spanish and Mexican artists looked down upon me. There was one, I remember, of Cortes, by Rodrigo de Cifuentes, and a virgin of Juan de Ruz, pupil of Velasquez. Several, I noted, copied the brilliant coloring of Titian, and one—a marvelous reproduction of the smoke-plumed crest of Popocatepetl—held me spellbound.

While I studied this painting a murmur of voices came to me. One seemed vaguely familiar, and I moved toward a closed door behind which the sounds originated. Two men were talking, and although I could not make out the sense of their words, they spoke as men speak who know each other well. There was an understanding—a confidential note. I heard the name of the emperor, followed by a laugh of gentle raillery.

Day of Sea Chanties Belongs to the Past

Music of the sea and true sea-music are not at all the same thing. Songs about the sea and the life of a sailor have been made in every language, but most of them have been written and sung by people who are safe and comfortable on dry land, and it seems natural enough that sailors, when they are aboard ship, should want to sing about almost anything but the sea. There are, as a matter of fact, no sea songs nowadays—none, that is, that are sung by sailors, since there are so few real sailors. Sea songs and chauties are remembered and published and sung by landmen, but there can be no new songs of the kind till some one finds a way of singing to the work that has to be done on a steamship. Stoking would seem to be the most likely work for the purpose, but who could expect singing in a stokehold. And so the music on modern ships is mostly supplied by a band for the enjoyment, or not, of the passengers.

Criminal Hides in Court

A swindler and criminal with a prison record in Vienna whom the police were seeking under a new charge decided that the best place to hide was in the court which had issued the warrant for his arrest. So he forged a diploma and an attorney's license and began practice in the court. During the six months the police sought him he successfully defended a number of cases in the court. Finally the judge became suspicious, started an investigation and learned the truth that set the whole city laughing.

NEW PLAN FOR CREAM BUYING

SHOULD BE GIVEN FAIR TRIAL

Producers of cream have been writing us for information about the deduction of 31 cents being made by cream buyers or station operators for the large creameries on each delivery of cream. This new plan of cream buying started in the Nebraska creameries early in March. It at once met with the approval of the large majority of producers and most well-organized cream stations favored the plan. Beginning April 1 a similar plan was inaugurated in Oklahoma, and beginning April 15, it was put into effect in Colorado. A number of other states are also using this method, which is called a service-at-cost system. Under the old plan the station operator bought cream on commission. Creameries generally tried to hold this commission down to around 3 cents a pound on butterfat, but in some cases they were unable to do this, the station men finding ways to get 4, 5 or 6 cents a pound.

Under the new plan the station operator pays the full direct shippers' price for the butterfat and deducts 31 cents from each delivery. This 31 cents is to pay the actual cost of handling the cream. The operator of the station gets 25 cents for his work of weighing, sampling, testing and computing the check, and the creamery getting the cream the remaining 6 cents for furnishing cans, testing equipment, bottles and other items connected with necessary supplies. The old plan was especially hard on the large producer, in other words, the man who delivered the larger quantities of cream. If his delivery contained 25 pounds of butterfat, for example, he had to stand a commission of from 60 cents to $1.20 to get his cream handled by the cream buyer. Under the new plan, he pays 31 cents for the whole delivery. This uniform charge is based on the fact that it takes no longer to weigh, sample and test a large shipment than a small one. Of course the producer delivering very small quantities might find that the 31-cent charge would be more than the commission he would have stood under the old plan. The man delivering these very small shipments will probably object to the system, although it is more logical and fair than the commission plan.

There are station operators, also, who may not be pleased to see this plan put in operation, since it will cut down the amount they can collect from their cream patrons, with the exception of the ones delivering the very small amounts. The plan is new as yet and will naturally be watched with considerable interest. Producers understanding the intent and purpose of the new plan, namely, to set a large price to them for their product, will be in position to watch the results and should not denounce the method until it has at least been given a fair trial.—From Western Farm Life.
