RAILROAD RUMBLINGS

Trainman W. E. Reynolds is in the S. P. hospital at San Francisco, receiving treatment for an injury sustained a short time ago by having one of his legs badly bruised. In a letter to Mrs. Reynolds this week, Bill said he was getting along nicely and expected to be home soon.

Melons are now moving along at a good clip. There are 14 crews working from Tucumcari to Carrizozo and 12 are working out of El Paso to Carrizozo.

Mrs. Rufus Hughes and children left for El Paso Wednesday to meet fireman Hughes, who is running from that city to Carrizozo and where they will make their future home. The reason for the change in residence arises from the fact that both engineers and trainmen have their longest rest periods at El Paso, that now being the home terminal.

A switching crew has been put in service in the local yards. This crew also makes the trips to Capitan.

L. P. McClintock, former section foreman at Coyote, is now stationed at Carrizozo.

The Carrizozo local is now running between here and Santa Rosa.

Yardmaster A. V. Swearingen was in El Paso Tuesday on business.

Mrs. Ira Greer and sons left Wednesday for Tucumcari to make that place their home on account of the change which allows but a short rest period at this end of the division. Fireman Greer has secured a residence there for them to enter as soon as they arrive.

Engineer and Mrs. E. N. Robinson left yesterday for Tucumcari to make that place their future home.

The spirit of the Old West with all its glamour and picturesqueness will again be revived when the California Rodeo stages its eighteenth annual "Big Week" at Salinas from July 17 to 21 inclusive. With more than $40,000 in purses and an array of valuable prizes, the event is expected to draw the greatest attendance in its history, according to F. S. McGinnis, passenger traffic manager for the Southern Pacific, who has announced that special round-trip excursion fares will be in effect on the company's lines for the notable spectacles. There will be horse races, roping, riding and everything in connection to make a rodeo complete. The Colopado del Rodeo to be staged July 20, will be the most colorful, and special floats, electrically lighted and a complete program of pageantry will mark this event. Dancing in the streets will continue all night.

Ford Kellar, former roundhouse clerk at Tucumcari, is the new trainmaster's clerk at the local station. Mrs. Kellar, who is still at Tucumcari, will be here in a short time and the family will become permanent residents of Carrizozo and we extend to them, the hand of welcome.

Engineer Henry Hoffman was here from El Paso this week.

Mrs. S. H. Nickels

entertained 25 of the little friends of her daughter, Marjorie, Wednesday afternoon on her eleventh birthday. The affair was in the manner of a lawn party and the children amused themselves with games of various kinds from 6:30 to 8:30. Refreshments were served, Mrs. Nickels being assisted by Mrs. G. E. Freeman.

Shower at Luna

Under the guise of a regular business meeting, the ladies of the Ladies' Aid met at the Straley home at Luna on June 13, where Miss Lavona Drake was surprised with a heavy shower of exquisite needle work for the new home to which she went as Mrs. Price Miller on June 15. Tiny Tommy Knight and his wee cousin, Sara Allen Silvers, dressed as groom and bride, drove in a miniature auto and attracted to themselves quite as much attention as did the gifts with which the car was laden. After an expression of appreciation from Miss Drake, she was handed a beautiful bridal cake, containing mirth-producing tokens of prophecy. Refreshments of ice cream and angel cake were served; snapshots of the little bride and groom and groups of the guests were taken, and all departed with many good wishes for the future of the prospective bride and appreciation of the delightful hospitality of the Straley family.

looking after some of his land in this location. Henry is running a switch engine at the border.

Fireman Louis Adams is in El Paso this week, taking another examination. After his return, Mr. and Mrs. will move to Tucumcari, we understand.

New Excavations

Chaco Canyon, N. M., June 18.—Students of the University Field school, located in Chaco canyon started work Wednesday morning on the excavation of the ancient pueblo site of Chetro Kell. They expect to uncover buildings even larger and more important than Pueblo Bonito, a mile down the canyon. Dr. Edgar L. Hewett of the State University and the School of American Research is in charge of the work.

Miss Anna Shephard of the San Diego museum is superintending a complete physical and chemical study of the potsherds. Miss Florence Hawley of the University of Arizona is recording all material as it comes from the trenches.

The camp is located in Chaco canyon, 60 miles from the railroad at Thoreau. Twenty-two people, including the faculty, are registered.

Dr. J. P. Harrington, linguistic expert of the Smithsonian institution, Washington, D. C., arrived at the camp of the University Field School in Chaco canyon Wednesday afternoon, June 12, to take charge of the work in linguistic research being done by the school.

During his two weeks' stay in the camp Mr. Harrington will demonstrate the most advanced methods of recording and studying the Indian languages, using in the field the laboratory apparatus for making records, such as the kymograph, the phonograph and the dictaphone. The languages of the Zuni, the Taos and the Jemez pueblos will be studied.

Dr. Harrington is regarded as the most accomplished linguist in the country, being proficient not only in the native American languages, but also a master of all modern European languages and many oriental tongues. Before his appointment as ethnologist at the Smithsonian institute, Dr. Harrington was connected with the School of American Research at Santa Fe.

"Rainbow Carnival"

The Rainbow Girls of Carrizozo Assembly No. 7 will hold a Carnival at the Community Hall Thursday, June 27, 1929, at 2:30 p. m. and continuing during the evening.

Attractions new and old will be found at this meeting. Sandwiches, cake, pie, lemonade, and coffee will be served. It will cost no more to eat here than at home. The proceeds will be used for the benefit of the Assembly.

was a business visitor at Mountainair on Monday of this week, returning home Tuesday morning. He reports that the country around Mountainair is in good condition and with a little more moisture in July, the bean crop is assured. In that locality they have no assurance of rain in May, so the farmers planted too deep and the beans decayed. They have re-planted and the new growth is healthy and vigorous.

The Misses

Stella Vaughan, Lorene Stimmel and Ethel Johnson, who are attending the State Normal at Las Vegas, are enjoying their work, according to a letter received by Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Stimmel this week, from their daughter. The young ladies are stopping at the home of Mr. Pate Mackel, Mrs. Stimmel's brother, where they are made to feel at home and have good old home cooking.

T. E. Kelley

The act for Monday night will be entirely different and will include new snappy popular music by the orchestra, also jokes, singing and dancing. The picture in connection will be Reginald Denry in "The Night Bird," a delightful feature.

ATTEMPTS ROBBERY; CAUGHT IN ACT

Sunday night near the midnight hour, night watchman Gardenhire, who sleeps in the Titsworth General Store at Capitan, was awakened by a strange noise and by keeping quiet, soon realized that someone was in the store for no good purpose. He grabbed his shotgun, loaded with buckshot and cautiously began the work of trying to locate the intruder.

He had but a short time to wait before he saw a small light moving from one place to another and finally stopped in the office, where the safe and money of the firm was located. The thief was preparing to blow open the safe when he was surprised by a shot from Gardenhire's gun, the load of buckshot barely missing him and striking a post a few inches from the intruder, who seeing he was caught, surrendered. Gardenhire telephoned to Sheriff Brady, who accompanied by deputy Pete Johnson, hurried to Capitan and returned here with the prisoner. No gun was found on him, but he had a money sack which he intended to use, had he been successful in his venture.

He gave his name as Wm. Nutt. Some claim that there was another man in waiting on the outside, but this could not be substantiated. The flashlight he carried was found to have a paper neatly pasted over the glass and only a small opening in the center about the size of the end of a lead pencil which afforded him sufficient light to examine a keyhole and yet avoid attracting much attention from the outside. He had been in many states as evidenced by the different licenses his car bore. Mr. Titsworth is fortunate in having a watchman like Mr. Gardenhire in his employ, for had it not been for him, the thief would have been successful in his attempt to rob the store and get away with it. He had already relieved the cash register of $30 when nabbed.

Later reports from the attempted robbery, reveals the facts that there must have been an accomplice in the case, as the car was found to be tightly locked, which the officers presumed was done for the purpose of preventing the shadow from escaping with the car and leaving his partner in the lurch. Another evidence is that there was blood found on the window casing where the entrance was made, and as the prisoner had no cuts on his hands, they think the accomplice left this evidence after trying to either get in or in getting out, and the car being locked, he made his escape on foot.

Another arrest was made at Hondo Tuesday, but while claiming that he left Ruidoso with Nutt, he was not with him at Capitan, but Nutt stated he was. He gave his name as Lowery and said he was from Comanche, Texas.

He had two cuts on one of his hands, which might account for blood on the window casing. The pair were arraigned before Justice Harvey, where both men had their bonds fixed at $2500, which they could not raise, and Lowery was taken to the Alamogordo jail and Nutt left here to keep the men apart. Nutt had a wife at Ruidoso and she is being held here to see if she will talk, which up to the present time she has failed to do.

FORT STANTON NEWS

The local ball team split even with the 82nd Field Artillery in the games Saturday and Sunday, losing the first 16-4 in a wild exhibition of baseball, and winning the Sunday game 7-2 in a pretty exhibition, with the Fort hitting when men were on bases.

The 82nd boys, who had hoped to be here again July 4, will be unable to come for these games and efforts are being made to get the 7th Cavalry for games over the 4th. Definite announcement will be made later.

The Fort team goes to Fort Bliss Friday for a two game series with the 82nd on June 22-23. The boys are expecting to even the games to three-all by bringing both games home in the bag.

Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Fagan and children left Wednesday for the Grand Canyon, Petrified Forest and other points of interest in the states of Arizona, Colorado and Utah. They also plan to visit the Yellowstone Park before their return.

Nurses Lettie Gunn and Helen Hilligas and Leo H. Payman were visitors at Carrizozo Wednesday, returning to the Fort in the afternoon.

The plans for the 4th of July celebration are developing nicely. The affair will be under the supervision of the Trowal Club and nothing will be left undone to make this the biggest and best entertainment we have ever had on this National holiday. There will be one and perhaps 2 baseball games, Rodeo, horse racing, foot racing and other games of interest to take up the time, besides a big barbecue at the noon hour. An Army band, presumably the 7th Cavalry band, will furnish music during the festivities through the day. At night there will be a big array of fireworks, the same to set off from the hill behind the Fort, so that all may have a good view of it. After the fireworks, a dance will be held with the famous "Night Owls" of Roswell. Come and help us celebrate; you will be treated with courtesy and we guarantee a good time.

Injured by Explosion

Monday morning, Paul Ludlow and Ansel Swearingen decided to take a hike to the old Vera Cruz mine east of here. In exploring the old mine, they came across a powder can partly full, so they poured it out and touched a match to it to see it run as it appears in the motion pictures, when an explosion took place. Ansel sustained severe burns on his arms and face, but Paul smothered the flames and prevented further trouble. They came in to Dr. Johnson, who soon relieved his suffering. Fortunately no scars to speak of, will result from the accident. This should be a lesson to boys prowling around deserted mines, especially where there is powder and another thing is, damps are likely to arise in deserted mines and will cause suffocation.

The Girl Scouts

will meet at the home of Mary Elma and Ellen Ludlow Tuesday evening, June 25, at 7:30 o'clock. All scouts are urged to be present, as plans for the summer will be made.

Their cases will be brought up before the District Court at the October term.

Army Nurses in Graduation Ceremonies

Grieves, one of the graduates, was presented with the Mrs. Henry H. Rea medal which is given annually to the graduate who shows the greatest natural aptitude for her work.

London Gets Photoradiogram From San Francisco

The transmission of the first commercial photoradiogram from San Francisco to London, utilizing the new transcontinental radio circuit which Mayor Walker of New York opened, was announced by R. C. A. Communications, Inc. The picture, shown above, was posed and developed in the Hollywood studios of Radio Pictures, the motion picture producing organization of R-K-O, rushed by airplane to San Francisco, and there filed for transmission to London, via New York. This feat marked the first time that a photograph has traversed a distance of approximately 6,000 miles to its destination, in commercial radio transmission. The photograph shows Henry Diddot, French consul at Los Angeles, and Henry Baheroff-Livingston, English vice consul of the same city, with Bebe Daniels and Betty Compson grouped around a representation of the northern hemisphere topped by a radiogram.

Britain Renounces Oak as Too Slow of Growth

Reforestation plans in Great Britain fall for very few oak saplings. Oak grows so slowly that it does not pay and it is being superseded by larch. An oak at fifteen years is worth nothing, but a larch of that age will make good fence posts which will last in the open for at least twelve years. Oak is the best for heavy gate posts but larch is almost as good. Elm is best known for the making of coffins, but it is useful for all inside work and makes fine rafters. Unfortunately it rots when exposed to the weather. Beech, poplar and sycamore are all quite useless for fence making, for they rot quickly in the open. Spruce and silver fir are not much better. Both will decay within five years. Oddly enough horse chestnut, though quite a soft wood, withstands bad weather better than a number of other trees.

A Cruel Thing

Paul Polret, the Paris dressmaker, said one day to a reporter in New York:

"Cruel things happen sometimes in dressmakers' shops. In my shop a mannequin was once displaying dinner gowns to a middle-aged couple. The mannequin was about nineteen, tall and supple, with gorgeous eyes. She put on dinner gown after dinner gown, and she certainly was beautiful in them.

"As she posed in her eighth or ninth gown, a rather daring creation, the middle-aged wife nudged her husband and hissed:

"George, you never look at me like that."

"Well," mumbled George, "you never look like that."

Not Guilty

Robert, five years old, came into the house with the seat of his play overalls torn away. His mother had forbidden him to climb trees, fences, or anything else.

"Now Robert!" she scolded. "You have been climbing again! You've torn your pants while climbing!"

"No, mamma, I didn't," said Robert.

"Robert! You certainly tore these pants climbing somewhere."

"Indeed and indeed I didn't, mamma," pleaded Robert.

"How did you tear them then?"

"I tore 'em coming down!" sobbed Robert.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

Resistance to the Majority

Less than eight months ago, Herbert Hoover was elected President by an overwhelming plurality. His election represented a vote of confidence in his leadership, and a popular mandate for the program he stood for. Yet within four months of President Hoover's inauguration we find a tremendous resistance developed on Capitol Hill — especially in the Senate of the United States — to the carrying out of his program, and an organized effort to resist and discredit his leadership; an effort to render barren of results the session of Congress called for the purpose of fulfilling the pledges of the majority party of the voters.

At the bottom of this resistance is a studied defiance of public opinion as expressed at the last general election. It is a deliberate flouting of the will of the American people, clearly expressed at the polls.

It is true that the executive department of the government is not the legislative department. But the President is made a partner in legislation through veto power. It was well known by the Senators who thrust the debtore provision into the farm bill that they were deadlocking the Senate with the House of Representatives and with the President. They very well knew that the adoption of amendment meant the delay or defeat of farm relief.

The proposal was a new one not discussed by anyone in the last campaign. It is certain that some members of the Senate adopted this policy of opposition merely to embarrass the President and the administration.

It was Senator Copeland of New York who frankly admitted that he 'held his nose' as he voted for a proposal he believed would put President Hoover 'in the hole.'

Putting Presidents 'in the hole' may be a safe policy when that President does not have public opinion behind him. The people are still with President Hoover, and those who are busy baiting the President are at the same time baiting that public opinion which makes and un-makes Senators as well as Presidents.

It is unfortunate that at this time we cannot have co-operation between the Senate and the President for the general good of the country.

The fault for that lack of team work clearly rests, not with the President, but with a partisan and factional coalition in the Senate.

It is about time that Statesmen, no matter what labels they wear, should co-operate to solve public problems, rather than to spectacularly perform for factional, personal and partisan advantage.—National Republic.

SYNOPSIS

Capt. Francois de Vigny, serving with Maximilian's army in Mexico, tells the story. A roving group of officers is discussing La Anita, who, rumor says, has lured French officers to death or desertion. Summoned by Maximilian to make explanation, De Vigny undertakes to deliver the message to La Anita. At La Anita's home De Vigny meets Colonel Lopez, Mexican officer and the girl's cousin, Pablo Madralla, who bears a wonderful resemblance to De Vigny, except that he wears a beard. Anxious that Anita should be called before the emperor, Madralla forces a duel on De Vigny, in which the Mexican is wounded. Assisting Madralla to his carriage, De Vigny picks up a paper that falls from his pocket. It proves to be a pass, granting Madralla passage through the Mexican lines. La Anita, however, is, of course, Madralla's death warrant, since it proves him a spy. Questioned by Maximilian, La Anita denies luring French officers to danger, and is given her freedom.

I told them nothing of Lopez, and as little as possible concerning the glorious La Anita. Of the potent pass made out by Benito Juarez—the certain death warrant of Madralla—which rested even now in my pocket, I said not a word, for my plan was to use that pass myself.

"Ah, Francois," cried the empress, when I had done, "we would be devastated without thee!"

"A pity," murmured Maximilian, "that more men such as Francois do not surround me."

"And yet, even now, your majesty, I come to ask you for leave."

"Thou also, Francois?" said he. "This week the empress leaves me—leaves me to go to France and to crave more favors of Louis Napoleon."

I did not know until then that the third Napoleon had refused to send more troops and funds to Maximilian. And I pictured the army of Benito Juarez a scarce hundred miles to the southwest, of Escobedo—full of his successes at Matamoros—moving in from the east, and of other Liberal forces encamped not so many leagues to the east of the historic city. Truly Mexico was an armed camp. Yet I was sure that the emperor—with the Austrian and Belgian legations—had power enough and to spare to hold his empire.

"But this leave, your majesty, is required because of the necessities of your service; it is the work of the Empire that I do. This day, by your majesty's leave, I shall go to bed in my quarters on Avenida Tuxtepec with a dangerous case of smallpox, and Lieutenant Neville, who has had smallpox, will wait upon me. No one else will be permitted to approach me. Lieutenant Neville, who comes from St. Simon, will I trust with my life."

"How long, Francois?" questioned the emperor, still smiling, "will this dread malady possess thee?"

"Two or three weeks, sire; or until such time as a luxuriant growth of beard shall mar the smoothness of my countenance." I had not told them of my resemblance to Madralla.

"In a sickness so serious, you will, perchance, require the services of a physician—a trustworthy man. My own, Francois—Doctor Bartsch—shall serve thee."

Now I was filled with confusion. "Ah, your majesty!" I cried.

"Indeed he shall," said Maximilian; "he has earned a holiday. Besides, he has often commented on your skill at chess, and he will doubtless find it convenient to take a lesson or two. Is there anything else that I can do?"

"The activities of Senor Madralla y Gutierrez, sire, should be curtailed. A summons delivered to his home demanding his appearance before your majesty as soon as his wound shall enable him to be out will, I dare say, have a strong tendency toward keeping him in bed. I do not know how serious is his hurt; yet, abroad, he is a menace."

"The summons, Francois, shall be sent, and a guard placed at his home."

So Captain Vigny, of the staff of his majesty, Maximilian, was stricken suddenly with the great Mexican scourge, smallpox; and, was Lieutenant Neville—who was immune—and Doctor Bartsch, no one entered the modest quarters on Avenida Tuxtepec.

One day I heard, through the barred window of my darkened chamber, a clatter of hoofs on the cobblestones and the faint crunch of carriage wheels that slowed gradually to a fatal halt. And a voice reached my ears—deep and rich and musical—and I looked again at the hand that she had touched that day before the emperor. I listened—listened with my very soul.

She asked about Monsieur le Comte and Neville's deep voice told her that he was doing very well indeed. She expressed regret at his indisposition, and voiced the hope—just before the departing hoofbeats began again—that "the patient would soon be out."

"Ah, that was a day!" Neville came in and sat upon a bench. "How do you do, my friend?" he greeted, "giving that stupid beard—which makes you look indeed, just like a brunette hedgehog—the beard, the curls and what about you? What news comes in for us to-day?"

"The news you bring me, friend of mine," I cried, "fills me with happiness!"

"Don't let excitement raise thy fever, Francois. The loves of La Anita are legion, yet she regrets the defection of one. It is the way of a woman. There is Lopez, and Cupido, and her estimable cousin, your own foolish self—and now Lestrange?"

"Impossible! Not Lestrange?"

"Of a surety."

Truly he brought me disturbing news. Lestrange had gone to the home of Senorita Arrellano! Lestrange, who boasted that he never "talked woman with his business." He had gone there—so said Neville—first with Colonel Lopez, and every day thereafter by himself.

I knew instinctively that no good could come to us from the activities of Colonel Lopez, and I feared also that to approach his majesty with my suspicions would be worse than useless, for he trusted Lopez above all men. And now Lestrange—

I studied my face in a small mirror. My beard was black and silken and of a pleasing luxuriance. Whereupon I sent out Neville for clothes; for a peaked sombrero similar in shape and color to that worn by Madralla, for a long coat of a cut and shade that I described with infinite detail, for black trousers that flared at the ankles—as his had done—and for boots like unto his own. From Doctor Bartsch I had procured a wash which, when applied to my face and neck and arms, had given to me that deep, olive tan that was the color of Madralla's skin.

While the lieutenant was gone I took scissors and trimmed my new-found beard with the greatest care, and when I had donned the habiliments that Neville brought back, I doubt if my own mother would have

"Has not Senor Madralla entree to the home of his cousin?"

"Assuredly, but there is a distant chance of meeting my double."

Neville gasped. "Do you look like him, Francois?"

"So much like him, in fact, my friend, that tonight I scarce know whether I am he or myself. If one should place me beside Madralla one might note at a glance many things unlike between us; yet, with this new complexion of mine, with this beard, and these clothes, and the possible aid of a light nose too searching, there is an excellent chance that I may be taken for him. If I enter, wait for me here."

The lock of the grilling over the third window that I examined had been broken, and a temporary fastening of wire had been made, which, when I removed it, permitted the grilling to open to my touch. The window itself was open, and beyond the casement hung heavy purple draperies. I smiled to myself in the gloom. The library! The room, wherein we had fought our duel.

The walls of this house were three feet thick, and between the purple hangings and the window-wall was a space sufficiently large for me to stand, or even to sit. The sound of voices came to me, the clear lilt of a woman's laugh. "He's funny, captain," she said; "Colonel Lopez has an inexhaustible fund of wondrous stories."

"Captain who?" I wondered, but I wasn't left long in doubt, for the dispassionate voice of Captain Lestrange broke: "He saves them for you, senorita; he never wastes them on us."

I heard the tinkle of a bell in the distance, and the Senorita Arrellano and the two men came through the arched way into the library, where they stood, waiting.

While they waited thus the front door opened and closed, and Madralla stood before them.

"My cousin!" said La Anita. "Just out—eh?" questioned Lopez.

Senor Madralla took both the slim hands of his cousin in his own, made a move as though to kiss her, but she turned her head—whether unconsciously or not, I could not tell—and he dropped her hands, laughing ruefully. Now he turned to Lestrange, and a cold rage shook me, for the two men struck hands as friends are wont to do.

"We gain," said Lopez; "is it not so?"

"We do," answered Madralla; "the gilt on the emperor's crown grows thin!"

The laugh of Colonel Lopez was the loudest of all, and had I possessed a sword, I should have dashed from my hiding place and run him through, for treachery has ever been—with me—a crime beyond forgiving. That Lestrange should have sunk to such depths filled me with horror, and I marveled that love could have done such a thing to him.

"But there were guards at your home, Pablo mio," said La Anita; "how did you evade them; and has your wound—"

"My wound, dear cousin, was never more than a scratch; a rib, deflected by his thrust. It was painful, but not serious, and in three weeks it has healed almost entirely. As for the guards, Anita mia, Captain Lestrange, here, is master of the guards, so I come and go as I choose."

Now, dismay took possession of me, for my plan was to be abroad as Pablo Madralla while that worthy lay wounded and under guard of the emperor's soldiers. This new situation required more care and anticipated more danger, yet danger has never been a stranger to me.

"There is much to do," continued Madralla, who, by the way, was dressed exactly as I—hiding behind the purple draperies—was dressed. "The affairs of men will never wait. Benito Juarez seeks counsel; he plans this week to march on Cuernavaca."

"And Cuernavaca," said Lopez, "is the back door to Mexico City."

"And when Cuernavaca falls Mexico City is doomed!"

"But, Pablo," questioned the senorita, "how will you penetrate the lines of the French, that lay beyond the city to the south, and the Belgian legion, which, according to Captain Lestrange, waits even now at Cuernavaca?"

"Ah, Anita mio," said Madralla, "there is, in all of us, the Latin knack of seeing. Browning in the front yard of Juan Ortega, who, as you know, lives just outside the city on the road to Cuernavaca, is a friendly burro, all packed and ready for travel. Within the hour I shall be on my way, and tomorrow, people along the broad road that leads to Cuernavaca will never recognize Senor Madralla y Gutierrez in the barefoot, wrapped, half-dressed peon, with his worn, high-peaked sombrero, his brown, ragged clothes, and his beard all gray with alkali dust, who leans an ever lax guard burro and his overwhetting load."

"So, I come to Cuernavaca, where the fat and apocryphal Manuel, proprietor of the Hotel Montezuma will take good care of me, will furnish me with a fine horse, so that I may approach General Juarez in a manner more befitting to my station. To

"Are you crazy?" cried Neville. "Aye, friend of my youth," said I; "crazy with my dreams. We win Mexico first, and then La Anita—but Mexico first."

We climbed the iron fence and made our way by a path shaded from the gloom of one tree to that of another until we stood within the deep shadow of the house itself.

"What do we do now?" whispered Neville.

"We enter the house by a window; or, rather, I enter it."

Benito Juarez I will say that less than five thousand Belgian soldiers hold Cuernavaca, and that Maximilian has no more to spare, for the wise and selfish Louis Napoleon refuses further aid. Will that that not be welcome news for the President?"

"It is, at least," agreed Lopez, "worth drinking over."

Preceded by the dusky Agostino they went again through the arched way into the dining room, whence came later the clink of glasses and the sounds of high laughter.

I pushed recklessly through the heavy hangings that had furnished so secure a shelter. I must know all—or nothing. I stood, for a space, in the darkened end of the library, waiting. Slowly, carefully, I moved across the silent carpet toward the dining room. I had gone too deeply into this thing to back out now.

Even as I reached out my hand to touch the purities, which might serve me as a shield, I heard a gasp behind me, and, looking around, I beheld the dark-faced mozo standing beside the walnut table. His heavy lips—half parted—showed yellow teeth, and his black eyes held an evil gleam. There was fear, and startled surprise, and a sort of animal delicacy, in his face.

"As we stood—tensed, alert, poised—the deep laugh of Madralla came to our ears. In a harsh, sibilant whisper Agostino voiced one word, a Mexican oath: "Carraca!" Then his lithe body took the air in a long swift lunge toward me, and a knife, appearing magically in his right hand, glittered in the lamplight.

I had no weapon, but, by good fortune, my outspread fingers found his wrist, and closed upon it; and, because I saw that he would cry out for help, the fingers of my left hand gripped his throat. Across the heavily-carpeted floor we contended desperately.

I do not know how long we fought. I was taller than he, and, doubtless, somewhat stronger. I paid no heed to his kicking, my right hand held the long, evil knife away from me, and the fingers of my left hand closed ever tighter on his throat.

It couldn't long continue, and it didn't, for soon the knife dropped from his nervous fingers, striking the carpet with a light soft thud, and the kicking ceased to become the spasmodic jerking of a man dying for lack of breath. He relaxed, and as I loosened my hold, he slipped limply to the floor, where he lay, silent, with the knife beside him.

Acting upon an impulse born of necessity, I dragged him toward the draperies behind which I had hidden, and tumbled him out of the window into the garden. His leg or his neck, it was all the same to me; besides, Neville was there. If he was dead, well and good; if he was not dead, Neville would see to it that he didn't get away; Neville would know that I had sent this message to him.

Now I turned back toward the library. As I peered again between the curtains Anita walked through the library toward the front hall. I held my breath when she approached the knife, but she failed to notice it. Then I strode boldly into the room and, having kicked the weapon under the table, waited for her.

I had no more than ten seconds to wait.

"Pablo," she said, in some surprise, then: "I thought I heard the door."

"The thunder, perchance," said I in a whisper, for I knew that a whisper does not carry the recognizable timbre of the voice. I reached out a hand. "Anita!" I cried. Ah, the glorious privilege of calling her that—counterfeit though it was—gave me great joy.

A little line of worry showed between the arched brows. "Why, Pablo?" She extended a hand, and I reverently lifted the fingers to my lips. That much, at least, would I have. She drew it quickly away.

"I never saw anything like it! It was wonderful! Such color! It seemed to stand on a wall of taupe, fading away to a dim olive eero in the distance, while on my left was a cathedral of golden arabesque, touched with ajama, antique, and ames of roses with just a suggestion of bamboo and beaver. And in the distance walls upon walls of blonde, brick-dust, heater and brunette reflected the dying sun in a thousand flits of nutria, gamboge, honeydew and horse-chestnut!"

"And always the colors seemed to change and blend. Kit fox faded to wild honey and died away into van-dyke; Spanish gold blushed and became tungstene; the sun kissed it and it became sherry deepening into

Good Story Unverified The British war office has been unable to find any evidence supporting the legend that the original Thomas Atkins was a private soldier whose name became familiar because he fell dead of wounds while in the act of delivering a message to the duke of Wellington during the Waterloo campaign.

Now, looking at her, I fancied that her chin trembled and tears showed in the wondrous eyes. I forgot the murmur of voices in the next room, I forgot the deadly danger that lay so close to me, forgot everything save the evident unhappiness that bore upon Anita's heart. I tilted the pointed chin until she had to look into my face. "What is it, Anita mia?"

"I cannot tell," she whispered; "things seem not as they were, Pablo, I—I cannot kiss thee!"

"Is it then," said I, a wild tumult of joy surging through me, "that you do not love me any more?"

She nodded, "I am afraid, Pablo mio, that such is the—the—"

She didn't love him! Name of G—what a thing! And I must look sad, and downcast—heartbroken. I must pull my face into lines of agony, while the strings of my heart were singing a psalm of joy. Was ever a lover in such a manner tried?

Now she was watching my face, and in her eyes a sort of wonder-grew. Horror seized me, for the look in her eyes was new, and strange. Had she seen that I was not Madralla, had she discovered—?

"Pablo," she whispered, "it does not seem to hurt thee overmuch—that I do not love thee."

Now I put on a sad, sweet smile. "We are actors," said I in a tone of resignation, "we Latina, is it not so?"

"Ah—poor Pablo," she murmured, and raising swiftly on tiptoe, kissed me. Then she drew away, and while I stood, trembling like an aspen leaf in the fall, the great knocker clanged on the front door.

As she disappeared into the front hallway I went hastily between the purple draperies, out through the opened window, and dropped to the grass beside Neville, who stood over the recumbent form of Agostino.

"What is it?" Neville questioned. "She kissed me!" I whispered.

"Name of G—!" he gasped. "All this—for that? You break into the home of your inamorata, choke one man near unto death and cast him from a window with no concern for the safety of his neck—nor for the neck of some one who might be waiting below—kill or maim countless others in that peaceful home, and then come tumbling forth into the night with an insane song of kissing on your lips? He stopped for breath, and surrendering to his curiosity, continued: "Who was in there?"

"Lestrange," said I. "Of course; go on."

"And La Anita."

"You intrigue me, Francois; I had no thought that you might have kissed the coquina. Pray proceed."

"Lopez."

"Ah!"

"And Madralla. Does not the news of Lestrange and Madralla being in there together give you food for thought?"

Lesson for June 30

REVIEW: PROPHETS AND KINGS OF JUDAH'S DECLINE

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

PRIMARY TOPIC.—Stories Retold. JUNIOR TOPIC.—Learning to Serve God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC.—True and False Leaders. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC.—God's True Prophets.

The quarterly review always brings its problems. No set method can be prescribed. The grade, the aptitude of the pupils and the genius of the teacher are determining factors of the problem. For seniors and adults, two methods are suggested.

I. Character Study of the Kings and Prophets of the Period.

Biography is always fascinating and profitable. In the use of this method, assignments should be made a week ahead. As to the kings of this period, a study should be made of their strong and weak points, and suitable lessons be drawn from them. As to the prophets, the nature of the ministry of each should be studied.

II. The Summary Method.

This method involves the terse statement of the salient facts of each lesson with its central teaching. This method, to be effective, calls for assignments to be made a week in advance. Different minds will greatly vary. The following statements are offered as suggestions:

Lesson for April 7. Either at the beginning of Isalah's ministry or later when called to a deeper experience, he had a vision of the majesty and holiness of the living God. The leading lesson is that a real sight of the living God discloses the sinfulness of man.

Lesson for April 14. In leading the people back to Göt Hezekiah proclaimed a passover. The passover was a memorial of the nation's deliverance through the shedding of the blood of a sacrificial lamb. The lamb typified Christ. The only way for a sinning and divided people to get back to God and be united is around the crucified Lord.

Lesson for April 21. Isalah sought to comfort the people by assuring them that the Lord God as the Messiah was coming to reign over the earth, and deliver them from bondage, and shepherd them. The only possible deliverance from the world is the coming of Jesus Christ and the establishment of His Kingdom.

Lesson for April 28. Salvation of God's people was to be accomplished through the suffering of their Messiah. At Christ's first coming He suffered the penalty of our sin. His suffering resulted in a spiritual progeny. Life out of death is the law governing the universe—natural and spiritual.

Lesson for May 5. While the temple was in process of renovation, the law of God was found and read to the king. This brought great disturbance to his mind as he realized the enormity of the nation's sins. God's Word has power to convict of sin and effect a revival.

Lesson for May 12. God called Jeremiah before he was born, overcame his timidity, and sent him to warn his people of coming judgment. Though violently opposed and persecuted, God delivered him.

Lesson for May 19. Jeremiah called the people to obedience to God's Word. The only way to avert God's judgment is to return unto Him and render obedience.

Lesson for May 26. God will restore Israel to Palestine. Israel will return and possess the land. Jesus Christ will then come and enter into a new covenant, writing the law of God in their hearts.

Lesson for June 2. Because Jeremiah faithfully declared God's law, he was hated and cast into a dungeon. Those who faithfully declare God's law shall suffer.

Lesson for June 9. The Rechabites out of filial loyalty to their father obtained from the use of wine. Jeremiah gave them a public test as an example to Judah. Obedience to earthly fathers brings blessings, but obedience to God brings greater blessings.

Lesson for June 16. Judah went into captivity according to God's Word, which cannot fail. Lesson 108 is entirely devoted to praise to God. Those who have experienced the life of God in the soul will bless Him with all their being.

God Knows All I will govern my life and thoughts as if the whole world were to see the one and to read the other, for what does it signify to make anything a secret to my neighbor, when to God, who is the searcher of our hearts, all our privacies are open.—Seneca.

Religion is Necessary Education without religion is worth very little. Just as character without character is very barren.—Ald. Lee Lee Ows.

Heard About Town

The wind was blowing at a terrible rate one day last week and a stranger from Texas was having his annual hair cut, this being his custom every summer, whether it needs it or not. The dust was blowing down El Paso avenue like smoke from an engine. The stranger, in order to poke a little fun at our locality, said: "Land must be pretty high out here, ain't it?" "Yes," said Clyde Crowe, the barber, who was performing the operation, "it is, but this you see going down the street comes from Texas and you may have all of it you can stop as a gift." The boys all laughed, but the Texas man failed to see the joke.

At Snow's shop, the boys were telling fishing stories and Oscar told this one: "A farmer down in Texas was plowing and the horses becoming unruly, ran away, going through a pond of water. On arriving at the other side and getting the horses stopped, he discovered a big bunch of fine catfish which the plow had pushed ahead of it, and the bundle was carefully tied with a water moccasin snake." Someone said that it must have been at Lubbock, which leaves Oscar still studying as to just why he should have said "Lubbock."

A boy working on the Malpais road came to town on pay day and after spending all of his money, went back to work in a very wick condition. On next Saturday night he was in Snow's shop telling that he had seen a lizard jumping on the rocks about a quarter of a mile away from him and that it measured from 6 to 7 feet in length. After listening very attentively, a certain prominent business man of the town, substantiated the lad's story.—We are still wondering if he, too, had spent all of his money at the time and what the brand was.
