Away From Home

Purchased Red Lake

Sowder & Blackshire have purchased the Red Lake north of here, the deal being consummated last week. The deal includes 160 acres of fine range land and the lake, which has long been a place for good duck shooting...

The range land will be used for that particular purpose, but the Red Lake will be so enclosed as to completely separate that spot from the balance of the tract. There are no trees on the lake, but the stock firm making the purchase, will plant a sufficient amount of trees to furnish shade; such trees being planted which will insure rapid growth. On the hillside near the lake, there is a nice group of trees, but not near enough to furnish shade near the water, hence the intention of planting nearer the lake.

formerly a resident of Carrizozo, but now of Long Beach, Calif., has always expressed a desire to hear of rainfall in Lincoln County and now that our season for moisture is about over, we beg to report to Mr. Tennis that according to old residents in these regions, there has never been such moisture at this particular time for the past 15 years.

Just think of that statement, D. B., when you are about to be tempted to tell California people of the desert you once lived in, and also we might add, that grass is nearly knee high on the range in this locality.

You might add to this, that a highway across the Malpais, at one time considered an impossibility and would cost over a million dollars, is nearing completion, and it will not be long before there will be a stream of tourists going toward the setting sun, or returning from that direction by the new highway.

Rev. F. C. Rowland

pastor of the local Baptist church has issued two pamphlets containing things of interest to the church cause, the first being 'The Gospel Trumpeter' and the next 'The Clarion.'

The pamphlets come to him printed on the inner pages, the outer being left blank. On these two pages, the minister mimesographs things of interest in our locality, together with reports of church attendance, any revivals that may be on hand, etc. It makes a nice and well arranged folder.

MAJOR VISITS US

Wednesday morning, Maj. Oscar Westover and his mechanic, Lieutenant Sergeant McNeilly, arrived here in a monoplane Tuesday afternoon from Aerial Department of the U. S. Army at Leavenworth, Kansas, remaining over for the rest of the day and night, leaving Wednesday morning at about 9 o'clock. On Friday, June 28, the Outlook made mention of the Major's intention to come to Carrizozo for a short visit with his sister, Sister Mary Eugenia of the Santa Rita School on the East Side; and at that time, we made mention that he would come at some date this summer, but no more was heard about his intended visit until we heard the buzzing of his huge army plane above Carrizozo.

John O. Wells Stars in Picture Here

John O. Wells, known on the screen as Ted Wells, world's champion rider, will be shown as star in the picture, 'Beauty and Bullets,' at the Crystal Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. Mr. Wells now resides on the Coyote Ranch, where he is actively engaged in the cattle business and is a frequent visitor to Carrizozo.

The picture, 'Beauty and Bullets,' is full of thrills and action that calls for athletic ability and good horsemanship. The showing of this picture will give the friends and admirers of Mr. Wells an opportunity to see him taking the leading role in a good western action picture.

VACCINATION NOTICE

The laws of New Mexico require all children of school age to be vaccinated against smallpox before they can be admitted to the public schools of the state. We understand that all rural and municipal schools will begin early in September. I would advise that so far as it is convenient to do so, that parents attend to the vaccination of their children during the month of August, so as to give that important requirement attention before the opening of school.

Dr. F. H. Johnson, County Health Officer, Lincoln County.

Ralph Noble

Travel Representative for the Campbell-Ewald Company, advertising Agency, advertisers for the General Motors Corporation, of Detroit, Michigan, with headquarters at El Paso, was here Tuesday, attending to matters of interest concerning the company he represents and of the General Motors Corporation in particular, more especially that of the Chevrolet motor cars and trucks for which Vincent Reil, proprietor of the City Garage, is the agent. Mr. Noble is an ideal representative. He renders a service to each community in his territory with his courteous manner and well informed methods which gives much valuable assistance to Chevrolet dealers. He has lately returned from a business trip to Detroit, where he was in conference with officials and representatives of his company.

Mrs. Wm. Ferguson

daughters Mora and Bessie, were Carrizozo visitors Wednesday, doing some shopping and returning home in the afternoon.

FORT STANTON NEWS

Tularosa comes to the Fort Sunday for a ball game at 2:30 p. m. Two weeks ago the Fort won from them 5-3 in a pretty game, and it is expected that this game will be close.

The game with Southland, Texas, will be worth seeing, as this team is on a tour and boasts of a smart ball club with plenty of power. They are playing Roswell and Artesia on this trip. All games are called for 2:30.

In the absence of W. C. Hendren, manager of the local team, Leo H. Payman, Secretary-Treasurer of the club, will be in charge.

MAJOR VISITS US

Wednesday morning, Maj. Oscar Westover and his mechanic, Lieutenant Sergeant McNeilly, arrived here in a monoplane Tuesday afternoon from Aerial Department of the U. S. Army at Leavenworth, Kansas, remaining over for the rest of the day and night, leaving Wednesday morning at about 9 o'clock. On Friday, June 28, the Outlook made mention of the Major's intention to come to Carrizozo for a short visit with his sister, Sister Mary Eugenia of the Santa Rita School on the East Side; and at that time, we made mention that he would come at some date this summer, but no more was heard about his intended visit until we heard the buzzing of his huge army plane above Carrizozo.

Major Westover is in high rank in the army, inasmuch as he has the entire department at Leavenworth under his supervision. He lays out plans for the fliers to follow; instructs them in their duties; trains them in the art of flying, and as a superior officer, he stands ace-high with his Uncle Sam. The Major's visit with his sister, whom he had not seen for several years, brought a flood of sunshine to her life and on the other hand, his associations with our people during his brief stay, convinced us that even Majors in the army are just human beings like ourselves and even Princes, among whom Major Westover cannot be excelled. We thank you for your visit to Carrizozo, Major, and hope you will call again.

Paul Mayer

who owns the building occupied by the late attorney George B. Barber, is remodeling the structure for his own use as an office building. He has a large window made in front, the interior will be all remodeled to suit his taste and he will soon be in his new quarters.

Mr. and Mrs. Champ Ferguson were down from their home on the Nogal-Mesa Tuesday, doing some shopping at our local business houses and returning home in the afternoon.

Rainbow Girls Meet

The local Assembly of Rainbow for Girls met at Masonic Hall last Friday evening with a good attendance, several members from out of town being present. At their next regular meeting, two candidates will be initiated into the order. At these meetings, all Masons and members of the Eastern Star are invited.

Home Again

Mrs. George Strauss, daughter, Helen and son, George, Jr., arrived home last Saturday from Watsonville, California, where they visited for about six weeks with Mrs. Strauss' parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Latham. Buddy sustained a badly sprained foot before they left here and it gave him increased trouble on their vacation, to the extent that it caused them to return sooner than they had first intended. Bud is still using his crutches, but will soon lay them down.

Mrs. Floy Skinner and mother, Mrs. Lina Zumwalt were here from the Nogal-Mesa, this week.

CHAPTER IX—Continued

Now her eyes were shining, for she could not foresee the consequences of my act. "You will never regret—senor? I would not have you regret—"

"No." My heart, somehow, had died within me. "My regrets are passed, dear lady; I never look behind me."

The amber eyes searched my face, trying vainly to break through the mask of my smile; and, falling, filled again with the dancing light of youth, of happiness. "I think you spent those weeks at home, senor, in raising a nice luxuriant beard."

"Exactly."

"And you reappeared as Pablo?"

"So much like him, in fact, that Manuel and General Juarez, and your uncle, General Eschobedo, as well as Leroux and Louis Beaumont took me to be your cousin. Every one except Madrella himself."

She thought a moment. "You must have known of his projected journey to the camp of General Juarez. How could you have learned of that?"

"I heard him plan it. It was I, senorita, and not your cousin, who entered Cuernavaca with an ever lagging burro."

She caught her breath. "You—you; senor—it could not have been?"

"I pronounced you frankness."

"And I met you in the library?"

Her voice was deadly calm—the calm that comes before a storm.

"Yes, senorita."

"And—did you kiss me?"

"Yes, senorita; and kissed me, and called me 'Poor Pablo'—and told me that you did not love me; therefore I determined to come back and woo you for myself, but—"

Now she turned away from me, and her shoulders shook with sudden overwhelming soba. "Ah, Dios," she gasped, "Dios, I am ashamed! Does the lieutenant—Novillo—know this?"

I had to admit that he did. I did not realize how much the thing must have hurt her.

"I suppose he—no laughed."

"He may have, senorita." Oh, the history of that hour! "Yet there is, dear lady, in such a situation, a fruitful source of laughter. 'Cannot you—?'"

"No," she gasped. "You—you beast! Had Pablo known this surely he would have killed you—as you deserve!"

She went off into an uncontrollable burst of sobbing, and, seeing how terribly the great paroxysms shook her frail body, I would console her, for I was afraid. I told my hand upon her shoulder. "Senorita."

"Don't touch me! I hope I never look upon your face again!"

"Senorita mia—will you not tell me good-by; must I go thus?"

"Go—go! Ah, leave me—leave me before I die!"

I raced across the city at breakneck speed, seeing nothing, hearing nothing, for the black despair of failure lay in my heart. In my service to my country, in my duty to my emperor, I had failed. I had been an ass, even, to myself—and in the game of love a wretched failure.

In the town that leads to the quarters of Novillo and myself on Avenida Tacayau I delivered the fine horse into the hands of a waiting maza giving orders for his care and feeding, and directions for his return to Cuernavaca on the morrow.

Diffing the suit that Brugiere had borrowed for my use, I bathed shaved, and got into more snugly fitting garments of my own. Now hunger, and a mighty thirst, possessed me, for I had neither eaten nor drunk for many hours. Through the Cafe Alramon did not have for me the lure it once had offered, I knew that kindred souls would be there, so I turned my listless steps in that direction.

At our accustomed table on the sidewalk sat two men habited in the service of his majesty, Maximilian. As I mounted the curb they made for me with a rush.

"Cupido," I cried, "and Nevillo! Nevillo! It is a joy to see you." Their figures wavered suddenly in a sea of tears.

Nevillo, a fine light of happiness in his eyes, put his arms around me, dragging me toward the table. His deep voice rang through the cafe:

"Hey, wook—wui! Bring food for Captain Vigny—and wine! We will drink the best you have; move swiftly!"

We made a deal of noise—we three, for when a Frenchman is happy he lets the wide world know it.

"It is good to see you, Francisco," said Nevillo. "For I feared for you. Juarez would have come you no less than your life. I failed sadly, friend of mine, and since that hour I have charged myself with your death. You have come back to us from the grave."

"I told you, Nevillo," said L. "That he would tax your wit and the power of your intellect."

"I know, I know," he agreed; "but there is a limit even to the requirements of human muscle. I could not vanquish four of them."

"Four?"

"Aye, Agostino did not forget the grip of your fingers on his throat; far from it. He remembered only too well, for he came back and paid me with a mighty thump on the head. Even the sleepy cochero took a night off to celebrate."

"But Madrella, who wore your suit," said L. "told me that the vultures—"

Nevillo laughed. "And so they should have, Francisco, had Madrella's plan gone through without a hitch; but I was not so dead as he imagined. It was all too easy, Francisco. Madrella, for reasons then unknown to me, chose to wear my suit. His motives seem clear to me now. Assuming that I was dead or nearly so, he gave Agostino and his Indian companion—from whom you purchased the horse—twenty pesos each and told them to stick their knives into me a few times ere they left me. After such simple instructions he rode away in the closed cab."

"Left to their own devices, the two Indians, to whom, as you know, torture is a sort of entertainment, decided to bring me back to consciousness so that the process of sticking might be made the more pleasurable. Nevillo's broad shoulders shook with silent laughter. "My awakenings was so swift and so unexpected that they have not, I think, recovered from the shock, for I cracked their two hard heads together with such violence that they doubtless discovered many constellations hitherto unknown."

"So I left them, very much the worse for wear, lying beside the road, and came back to the city, where his majesty was kind enough to receive me, and wise enough, my Francisco, to send the reinforcements you suggested."

"Cuernavaca would have fallen otherwise," said L.

Now Cupido, who knew nothing of all this, clamored for information, so, while I ate and drank, I drew—as a complaint to the lady? With her cousin grievously wounded—"

"Do not you and Colonel Lopez suffer; heed the draw further from the ranks of the Empire?"

His dark eyes gleamed for an instant. "If you are jesting, captain, I find it difficult to laugh; if you are serious—but you aren't, of course, my friend. Cannot one, walking the stern path of duty, reach out to pluck a rose?"

"Not unless one is wary of the thorn, nor if the plucking requires divergence from that path of duty."

He thought a long moment, and Nevillo and Cupido, sensing the definite enmity in the air, waited. I think Lestrange was considering carefully just what might be the extent of my knowledge, and just what use I intended to make of it.

"Would it be deemed apropos if I ask you who furnished the flat that used your face so grievously?"

"Pablo Madrella."

"Impossible!" Lestrange leaped to his feet. "Madrella has been at his home, under guard—"

"Do not excite yourself, Madrella's guard was a nominal thing, as you may know."

"Do you mean—?"

"Zut! Only last Tuesday night Pablo Madrella and a laden burro set out for Cuernavaca—and two Madrellas reached that town."

His face paled and his gleaming eyes wavered. He essayed a puny smile. "Do you mean to tell me, Francisco, that you . . . ?"

"Assuredly, it takes a beard some time to grow, even for a Frenchman." I had nothing to lose by being frank, for I knew that Lestrange's hours were numbered. "You doubtless wonder how I discovered he was going to see Benito Juarez. In fact, Pablo asked me, and I told him, Captain Lestrange, that you had given me the information. Was it not clever?"

Lestrange trembled with suppressed rage. "You let Madrella believe that I had told you?"

"Why not? It explained away so many unexplainable things—and it served my purpose so very well indeed. If you can sow the seeds of discord in the ranks of the enemy—"

Now we stood, eye to eye, with only the table between us. Either rage or fear—or both—impelled him to sudden action. He had grasped an empty bottle with his right hand, and now, as quick as thought, he raised it and swung at my head.

I caught his blow upon my left arm while my right hand reached for his throat, my fingers closing over it. The table with its dishes overturned, and we crashed to the sidewalk, a writhing heap of arms and legs. He swung the bottle in futile desperation, but missed my head at each attempt, for I continued to parry with my left arm, while the fingers of my right hand sank deeper into his throat.

I do not know how long we contended. Probably only a few seconds, for Lieutenant Nevillo, who has the strength of an Andalusian bull, grasped my shoulder and dragged me from my victim. "Are you mad, Francisco; would you kill him?"

"In very truth I would; let me go, Nevillo!"

But I was helpless in the clasp of his mighty arms.

Lestrange got slowly to his feet, his face working with fear and passion, a caressing hand upon his throat, and scaring curses on his lips. "You will pay for this, monster; my arm is longer than you think."

Now, as I considered him, saner thoughts came to me. "I give you this night of freedom, Lestrange," I said; "make the most of it, for I warn you that, before tomorrow's sun has set, Maximilian shall hear the story of your treachery!"

"I think it wise to follow him," said L, studying the sturdy figure of Lestrange as he shouldered his way through the curious crowd.

"You are safer tonight with us, good friend. Forget it, Francisco, and stay with us; we have not had an evening here for a month." There was an earnest pleading in his deep voice: "I fear for thee."

Ah, Mon Dieu—had I listened to him! Yet I had gone too deeply into this thing to hesitate now; so, bidding them adieu, I made off in the direction that Lestrange had taken.

He walked swiftly, halting ever and anon to look back, for he must have suspected that I would follow him. I kept in the gloom of the buildings, however, stopping when he stopped, and moving cautiously on again as he continued his rapid walk. He turned to the left into Avenida Tejon, and, when I, reached the corner, he had disappeared, but a closed cab drawn by a lean white and bay pony took the turn into Avenida Orizaba on two wheels, I heard the creaking of hoof beats and surmised that Lestrange had chosen a faster method of locomotion.

I wasted ten precious minutes hunting another cab, and falling, directed my steps toward the home of Senorita Arrellinos and ran with all the speed at my command.

I was certain that, if Lestrange intended to go to his quarters, he would not have taken so devious a route; neither was this the way to his home. If he contemplated flight—and his guilty conscience must have prompted that—a natural impulse would be to see the senorita first.

I came to the massive iron fence that bounded the vast estate of Arrellinos. I climbed over quickly and hid in the shade of a friendly elm, undecided yet upon a course of action.

I made my way, by eccentric stages from tree to tree, to the dim shadows of the house itself, where I waited, listening. While I stood thus the murmur of voices came to me from a window just above my head. I recognized the grilling with the broken fastening. The library! They were in the library. Now I caught the cadence of her voice, and I trembled like the veriest schoolboy in his first passion. Ah—dear God, I must see her again!

Slowly, and with the silence born of great fear, I climbed to the gracefully fashioned, iron grilling and worked it open. I stood again in the spacious window alcove, with only the heavy draperies between me and the two whose voices came to me so clearly.

With utmost care I parted the curtains barely enough to see. The lamp cast the face of La Anita and Lestrange in profile, and their figures were hardly more than outlines.

Lestrange's harsh voice spoke: "Did not you permit me to assume, senorita, that you might love me?"

Her head was high. "Not at all, senor. When an officer of the Empire forces himself upon me—"

Her head was high. "Not at all, senor. When an officer of the Empire forces himself upon me—"

Her head was high. "Not at all, senor. When an officer of the Empire forces himself upon me—"

"Yet you have used me, senorita. Because of my great love for you, and my desire to serve you, I have been a traitor to my country. This you know."

"I cannot help but believe that, in your desire to serve me, you hoped to serve yourself as well. Besides, you told me, senor, that Mexico was now your country. But why do you come thus to me, captain? Has some new thing befallen?"

"Everything has befallen. Captain Vigny knows all, and tomorrow he goes before the emperor."

"What can he do; what does he know? Is not Pablo out of his reach, and would Maximilian disregard the word of his chief of staff?"

"You do not know Vigny. The emperor makes no mistake when he trusts him, for the man puts his service above his very life."

From the lips of my enemy this praise was sweet indeed.

The lamplight glorified the smile on La Anita's face. "A beautiful thing," she murmured, "to say of any man! Yet Captain Vigny gave to me this day the life of my cousin."

He caught her shoulder roughly. "You have seen Vigny—today?"

She stared into his eyes until he dropped his arm. "Ah—senorita, I see nothing ahead but failure and disgrace. I am desperate, and you—"

"I saw Captain Vigny today, senor, and sent him away forever. He offered my pride so grievous a hurt that forgiveness is impossible. I shall never see him again."

Lestrange came close to her and lifted his arms. His voice trembled. "You—you have done this thing to me! I have been untrue to my country, to my emperor, to myself; the friends who used to love me now despise me. Because of my love for you I face a traitor's death." He caught her in his arms and crushed her frail body against his own, pressing hot kisses upon her hair, her eyes, her lips, while she fought desperately, silently, hopelessly.

I clutched the purple hangings, waiting, and thanking the good God that I had followed, for the man was mad.

Now his rasping voice came on again: "If I cannot have you, neither shall Madrella, nor—nor that emperor-loving double of his!"

He put his fingers around her throat; his face in the lamplight was the face of a fiend. She uttered a surging little cry—a piteous cry for help.

Now the time for action had arrived. I pushed the draperies aside and would have leaped into the room, but, even as I waited, poised, the great door that led to the hall opened and a captain in his majesty's service stood in the doorway.

The newcomer bowed, and I held to the heavy hangings for support, for the face and figure and suit were those of Vigny. I might have been looking into a mirror, or at the ghost of myself.

Lestrange relinquished his hold and turned toward the door; and La Anita, sobbing softly, put her hands upon the table for support.

"Francisco!" Lestrange's whisper bore a tremulous burden of fear.

Now, back again in my hiding place, I could not restrain a smile, for the clever rascal had taken a lent from my own hook—and Madrella had become De Vigny!

"Captain Vigny," cried La Anita; and my ears, attuned to the many modulations of her voice, detected a note of happiness.

Madrella moved to the mantel, over which still hung the crossed small-swords, and jerked them from the wall. He cast one toward Lestrange and swung the other in a whirling circle around his head. "Pick it up!" His voice was harsh, grating, and might just as well have been my own as his. A very neat game indeed, I thought, and I was vastly interested.

"No," said Lestrange; "no, monseigneur."

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless, Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

"Now that's what I call a fine servant." "Yes, he's been in our family for hours."

Lots of worry and trouble is brought on by advice which is supposed to prevent it.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia! When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it. Phillips is the genuine, prescription product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

Draw on All Sources for National Music

National music . . . has to be discovered and clad in beautiful forms. Just as popular myths and legends are brought to light and crystallized into immortal verses by great poets. All that is required is a good ear, a good memory, and a faculty for molding fragments of past generations into a harmonic whole. A few days ago I read that Brahms, according to his own words, took folk-tunes as motives for his new collection of songs and arranged them for piano. Liszt in his rhapsodies did the same, and Schumann in his "Two Grenadiers" used the Marsellaise. The Irishman Balfe had a Hussite choir in his "Bohemian Girl," although nobody knows where he got it from. Thus sooner or later popular music attracts the attention of and finds its way into the works of great composers. . . . I know that the question whether inspiration drawn from some stray melody or folk-song is sufficient to lend higher musical works a national character has not yet been solved. Neither is it certain whether national music as such deserves priority. I for myself believe firmly that that music which is the most characteristic of a nation deserves the greatest recognition.—Dvorak in a Letter Written From America

The Junkman

Consider, sir, the junkman! He is a high-commissioned officer in the war against waste. He even merits a medal with palms, for he is daily assisting in the important work of conserving values and, by preventing waste, makes substantial contributions to the world's store of wealth. In recent years, reclamation of basic materials has been an extensively developed art as he has attained a high peak of economic prominence. Skilled scientists in the employ of our large corporations give their entire time—long hours every day—to the reduction of waste, thereby swelling surplus profits which otherwise would be forfeited. The junkman, in his own way, is serving the same purpose.

Notary Public

This term is ancient. Among the Romans a "vry" was either the one who took notes—a shorthand writer, hence an official whose duty it was to record transactions, certify the authenticity of documents, etc. In English and American law the term now applies to a person of somewhat similar functions who takes acknowledgment of, or otherwise certifies or attests: various writings, usually under his official seal, to their authenticity.

Ask the Blacksmith

In the window of a blacksmith's shop in an Aberdeenshire village a sign is exhibited, reading, "Tooth 'arefully' Extracted." The dentist visits the village once a week and uses the smithy as a surgery. How pleasant to reflect that if the dentist can not quite cope with one's stubbornest molar, the blacksmith is there to lend a hand!

"Pablo Madrella and a Laden Burro Set Out for Cuernavaca."

Frenchman might—vivid pictures of that amazing adventure. In the middle of my account a shadow touched the table and sudden silence fell upon us.

I knew who it was before I raised my eyes, and, getting slowly to my feet, stood ready for any emergency, for I did not know what Lestrange might do. He smiled into my eyes. "Francisco, we have missed you!"

We shook hands across the narrow table, while Cupido glanced and Nevillo, frowning deeply, studied the array of empty dishes.

Lestrange had not yet seen Madrella; of that I was certain. I doubted his ability to explain away his own precarious position as I had sketched it, for Madrella would never have dreamed of my having been in that spacious window; which left only Lopez and Lestrange as my possible sources of information. Jealousy, I knew, would do the rest.

But after all, where was Madrella, and what were his intentions? Now Lestrange was speaking again:

"Except, for your face, Francisco, which seems gratefully marked for amputation, I see no ill effects of that dread malady. You look as strong and as capable—"

"That indisposition, my captain was only a blip; I have no time for amputations. His majesty is in urgent need of every arm and every brain for the cause of revolution grows."

Lestrange sipped his wine. "You bring us disgusting news, Francisco. I wondered just how disgusting he found it. That accounts then, for your absence from the house on Avenida Florida. You have been missed, I assure you."

"I have been there in spirit, my friend," said L, and Nevillo obeyed over his wine.

"Do you think such detestation, Fran-

The Girl's Girl

THE most popular girl at Prep school—that was Peggy's reputation. Every girl in the school adored her—she was chairman of every committee they could invent—she belonged to the best sports, headed the best clubs, almost ran the school.

A plump, pretty little thing was Peggy—good humored, merry, loyal and trustworthy. Her friends adored her—and by the time she'd finished that part of her education and crushed out into the world to see how things were going, Peggy was used to being the center of the stage, although to give her credit, she was pleasantly modest about the whole business.

Well, she got back to New York and her mother gave a couple of dances and a lot of smooth-haired boys came and danced with all Peggy's friends—particularly with little Dolly Weston, who was a perfect cat and simply loathed by all the girls—and Peggy woke up to find that once those two dances were over, her social life was at an end.

It seemed that other girls had been asked by some of the smooth-haired boys to go to other dances—and that their social life was getting ahead great. Peggy was only a human being after all, and her heart ached mightily for a few good times but she couldn't find out how to have them.

All her friends assured her she was just the sweetest, prettiest, dearest thing in the world. To them she was still the queen of everything because they loved her so.

But Peggy couldn't help noticing that the boys on the stage line were apt to look right over her head to gaze at some tall good-looking hussy who never had a real girl friend in her life.

The trouble was, you see, Peggy had got used to cultivating girl friends—she knew just how to make them love her. She was expert in attracting new chums.

But her line for them wouldn't go with the boys.

The danger of too much popularity with girls is that we come too often to depend on girls to push us through everything.

If Peggy continues to play up to girls and rely on them for her fun in life—she won't begin to enjoy herself as she wants to.

Let her keep her sweet good nature and honesty—but for heaven's sake let her learn to add a dash of coquetry to her winning ways.

Lolly Pops

"IF YOU'LL be my lolly, I will be your pop." Maybe you're familiar with the kind of man who says that, or if he doesn't say it, he shows it in his paternal attitude. Paternal? Yes, and then some, for the bald-headed man who pays attention to the flapper is just as often fraternal and philanthropic. He'll stand watching.

When a girl's place was in the home, and when the home was, there wasn't much of a chance for the bald bachelor and near-widower to get next to the damsel of the domicile, but now that girls are out on the job and in on the shows, the old geezer with a meal ticket and a charge account at the florist's is able to get in some fine work. He'll play pop to the lolly-girl every time.

Of course, it's all right when a young girl has a genuine male friend who is of her father's age, and a really nice man can be of value to a youngster just as she can be entertaining to him. But how few there are who are satisfied to be "nice!"

"Forty love" may be all right in lawn tennis, but it doesn't work the same score in life. It's usually "deuce." If a man has dodged the arrows of Cupid until he has reached this age of indiscretion, or worse still, if he has been through so many love battles that he has been fully decorated, he's not a proper companion for the bud to whom life is all novelty and expectations.

Now that men shave daily and use cosmetics, they think they can pull the Ponce de Leon stuff and pass themselves off as boy scouts. Fifty per cent pants for one hundred per cent Americans make the man in knickers think he can play the part of sweet patootie to the girl just out of school.

The dear slayer of these times is found in all our forests. He could be helpful but is usually a nuisance. Now that girls don't think of marrying until they have worked awhile, and so put off The Day for a few years, it seems all right for them to have one of these senile man-friends. We girls are somewhat to blame for the confusion of the seasons whereby, November tries to sit down in the calendar beside May. We may think it smart to have a man of experience get a crush on one of us so that we can get a gray scalp to hang on our belt.

That's no reason, though, why we should run the risk of losing an eligible chap who has marriage before instead of behind him.

There's an age limit for army service, and if a man is too old to fight, he ought to be too old to love. The two things aren't quite the same, but both soldier and sweetie should be fairly youthful.

NEXT WAR TO BE FOUGHT IN AIR

By E. L. JAHNCKE, Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

IF AMERICA ever enters another war, it will be won or lost in the air. The recent maneuvers at the Panama Canal Zone told the story. There the theoretical enemy was known to be planning an air attack and the defense knew the day it would be launched. The defense had as many or more airplanes as the enemy had for attack. Yet the enemy was able to bring his airplane carrier within 150 miles of the Pacific side of the Panama canal and launch his bombers and combat planes into the air before daybreak.

The enemy air fleet was over the Panama canal by the time defenders knew it was coming. The enemy dropped their bombs successfully upon the Pedro Miguel and the Miraflores locks and returned to their carrier out at sea before any kind of defense could become effective. Theoretically the Panama canal is now an impassable wreck.

Take this as an accepted fact in the world's naval circles. When you can get an air craft carrier even 250 miles off your enemy's coast, the majority of your airplanes will reach their objective and drop their bombs with deadly effect. The only answer to an attack like that is an equal or superior force of your own aircraft carriers, protected by both their own armament and an escort of fast cruisers and destroyers, able to put out to sea at top speed and attack the enemy before his air fleet can be launched. A navy limited to the surface of the sea might as well be scrapped.

These are the problems which the navy is studying. The way the navy meets them will mean the difference between victory and defeat.

BANKING SYSTEM'S GREAT NEEDS

By C. E. HAZLEWOOD, President American Bankers' Association.

The greatest need in the banking system in America is for new thinking and sound management. If each of us bankers will recognize the importance of new thinking in the banking business and will encourage the application of sound management practices in our own institutions, what excuse can there be five years from now for the existence of a single unsound and unprofitable banking institution in America? I, for one, believe the upward trend is in full and victorious swing. The lesson learned from the deflation and liquidation that followed inflation and overbanking ten years ago was a realization of the need of more exact and scientific methods. We have found that what our banking system needs today is new thinking, that we must concentrate our attention on the great objectives in banking—sound management and adequate profits.

Management, profits and liquidity are the great key words in successful banking.

I believe that in some of its phases the development of chain or other group banking may be said to be a manifestation of the movement towards better banking methods.

EVIL IN WAR DEBT SETTLEMENT

By JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, Former Illinois Senator.

The International war debt settlement, commonly known as the Young plan, will endanger world peace and will create new enemies for America. The plan is subversive to the best American interests. I believe the plan of issuing bonds through an international bank to be sold to the United States as a method of settling the European war reparations debt will in effect take billions of dollars of American money and will mean the loss of all money paid by Americans for the bonds of the bankrupt nations.

I would suggest a plan whereby all war debts payments be suspended during the life of the generation that fought the World war on the provision that the allied nations suspend for the same length of time Germany's war debts. Future generations, who escaped the ravages of the war but who enjoy its profits, should pay the existing war debts. In this manner the war payments would be adjusted to serve the interest of the nations; not to serve only the international financier.

WAGE EARNERS AND MACHINERY

By WILLIAM GREEN, President A. F. of L.

Labor has an interest in increasing production because only out of increased output can come sustained rises in the standard of living. Trade unions are ready to co-operate in promoting economies in production when there are set up agencies that assure them justice and equity.

The American Federation of Labor recognizes that the interests of wage earners are interdependent upon the interests of all other groups, if industry is to maintain production. If prosperity is to continue for the community and for the nation, wage earners and other groups must have sustained purchasing power.

Business expansion and technical advances have placed a heavier burden on management which must be mainly responsible for eliminating waste in production, for assuring steady employment for those employed, for steadily increasing wages as productivity increases and for planning in advance for workers displaced by machinery and technical change.

CONSERVATION PATRIOTIC DUTY

By CHARLES G. DAWES, U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain.

The conservation movement in the United States today constitutes this country's finest demonstration of pure idealism—of unselfish patriotism. Those who adhere to it solely for the love of the out-of-doors, who comprehend their duty only in terms of planting a tree, purifying a stream, protecting a bird's nest, or otherwise making the out-of-doors a little cleaner, a little more beautiful, and a little more alive with the pulse of nature, have justification enough for their work and reward enough in their accomplishments. On economic grounds alone we may call upon the self-interest of our people and justify all the time and the energy that is expended in a conservative movement.

Why No War?

El Paso Post:

Why isn't the world going to war this week? As it did just 15 years ago? There is just as much cause now to fight—More. There are the same kind of political disputes in Europe. The same piling up of huge armies and munitions, with one nation holding military sway over the continent. There is the same naval rivalry. The names have changed. France instead of Germany is military master. The United States instead of Germany challenges Britain as mistress of the seas.

Under the political armament rivalry are the same economic conflicts. The same struggle for raw materials, for foreign markets, for financial dominance. The same trade and tariff battles.

More—for the conflicts of today are multiplied by the ruins of that war. There are more national minorities now striving for liberation than when the Serbian nationalists murdered the Archduke Ferdinand. Foreign troops now occupy, in the Rhineland—the territory of one of the great powers.

The world's problems are more difficult now, the conflicts wider. And yet we are not going to war about it.

Perhaps it is because the people are war weary. But that is not entirely true. For a new generation is growing up, which does not know what peace glory. Doubtless it the consorts and propagandists who draft boards turned to this afternoon, the end of the week could see a bigger mobilization of the world's patriotic youth than ever before.

Isn't it rather because those who govern and those who mold our thought know—in a way not known 16 years ago—that war doesn't pay, that nobody wins, that all lose?

The difference is, not intention but intelligence. Governments are more idealistic now than then; they are more realistic.

Statesmen and businessmen have discovered that there is more prosperity and profit in peace than in war.

The pacifist of the other day was an occasional preacher. The pacifist of today is the average business man, the efficiency expert, the engineer.

That is why Herbert Hoover is in the White House. That is why he dares to cut the army and navy.

That is why the capitalist in Britain is supporting the socialist MacDonald, why the nationalists in France are supporting Briand, why defeated Germany is supporting Stresemann in their efforts to find a substitute for war.

Human nature does not change, the militarists say; they are right. But human intelligence does. It has already changed enough to keep the world from war this week when there are more causes than 15 years ago.

How Long Distance Blue Bell Sign Became the Emblem of the Bell System

Original Bell Design Adopted in 1889

Designer of the First Blue Bell Sign

The Standard Seal of the Bell System

By W. C. LANGDON
THE appearance of the Blue Bell Emblem on the streets in 1894 marked a significant advance in the development of the Telephone. Alexander Graham Bell invented the Telephone in Boston on June 2, 1875. The next year, 1876, he brought it to such a stage of improvement as to transmit complete sentences intelligibly, thus proving it was a practical and useful invention. In 1877, the Telephone entered upon its commercial career, although at first only over private lines. But it was not long before the demand came and grew into a need for telephone exchanges, and a new and far greater commercial period was ushered in by the opening of regular commercial telephone exchanges in 1878.

Local telephone development grew steadily for six or seven years and spread all over the country before there came the inevitable need and demand for long distance telephony, that is for means for communication between people in different telephone companies, even though distant from each other. This had to wait upon the technical telephone development. But by 1885 the time had come when this would be possible. In that year the American Telephone and Telegraph Company was incorporated to build and maintain the Long Lines and to take care of telephone business between local telephone companies throughout the country.

Long Lines Development
At that time there was only an experimental long distance line between Boston and New York. This had served its purpose of proving that a Long Lines system was practicable and would prove worth while. Thomas B. Doolittle had invented hard drawn copper wire and developed a method of manufacturing it at feasible rates. John J. Carby and others developed the principle of transposition and the great new possibilities of the metallic circuit. The building of Long Lines was begun under Edward J. Hall, Jr. as Vice President and General Manager of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, and Angus S. Hibbard as General Superintendent. The first line built was from New York to Philadelphia; then was built a line from New York up the Hudson River to Albany; then another, a better, a permanent line to Boston. At the same time the engineers in the laboratories were developing better instruments and apparatus, better transmitters and receivers, better methods of using the principle of transposition, better switchboards,—all under the impetus of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, for the purpose of overcoming the difficulties in the way of long distance telephony. By the end of 1888 these technical improvements had been brought to such a stage that the Telephone Company could start upon a program of long distance service to cover the entire United States. Commercially the problem was now that of educating the public to the use of the metallic circuits of the Long Lines of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company. The local telephone service of the Local Companies did not require such special instruments and apparatus for their comparatively short lines. Accordingly special stations were opened where the special instruments and the metallic circuits were available for the use of the public. Therewith some sort of sign was needed to acquaint the public with the fact that here they would find the requisite apparatus for talking to long distances.

The Blue Bell Sign
In these circumstances, in December, 1888, Mr. Hibbard undertook to devise or get a suitable emblem for these signs. None of the designs submitted to him seemed to have the right suggestion. So he tackled the problem himself. It was the Bell Telephone that was being advertised and so a bell was an appropriate symbol. This was particularly a good emphasis to make as the seemingly interminable telephone litigation against infringers was still going on. The Bell Telephone Patents had five years more to run and the distinction between the Bell Telephone and other telephones was an important point. The next distinction to emphasize was that of Long Distance telephony contrasted with Local telephone service. Accordingly he printed the simple words, Long Distance Telephone, on the bell. Blue for a color looked right. Therefore he decided on a blue bell with the words printed on it in white letters. This blue became the typical color of the Telephone. A square frame was adopted for the outer form because these signs were to hang from wrought iron brackets. Done over a couple of times to get the form of the bell and the size and style of the letters just right, and the Blue Bell Emblem of the Telephone had come. A final copy was made by means of the blue-print process and Mr. Hibbard took it to Mr. Hall for his approval. This was on January 5, 1889. On the lower left hand corner Mr. Hall wrote:—Standard Bell. Approved 1/5/89. Use no other form. Edward J. Hall, Jr., Genl. Mgr.

A Long Lines Emblem
At first this was simply the Long Lines emblem. But in five years, by 1894, there were so many stations in the country where the special instruments and apparatus of the Long Lines could be found, that it was deemed advisable to publish a special National Telephone Directory of stations connected with the metallic circuit. The blue bell appeared on its cover. Two, possibly three more editions followed. There ensued a campaign to get the local companies to adopt the metallic circuit. The cost of replacement was a great obstacle in the way, but the necessity of uniformity of equipment gradually won the right of way, as the public steadily learned the habit of long distance telephony. In due time any telephone station became a gate opening to any state or town, to any other telephone station in the country. Then the words, "Local and" were prefixed to the wording on the blue bell emblem. The change was of course somewhat gradual. In fact the first instance was as early as the opening of the new exchange on 35th Street, New York City, in 1890. The use of these words, "Local and Long Distance Telephone," continued until quite recently and more lately came to mean simply Public Station.

A Bell System Symbol
The growing use of the Long Lines by the public resulted inevitably in a national telephone habit. The people of the entire country were in a very practical sense getting closer and closer together. Every year more and more people realized that they could talk to anyone they pleased from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Arctic Circle to the Mexican border. At the same time the telephone organization evolved into the Bell System. Corresponding with this fact the wording on the Blue Bell Emblem has appropriately been changed to express that nationwide fact. Since 1921 it reads: "Bell System," with the words, "American Telephone & Telegraph and Associated Companies" or suitable variations of the phrasing in a circle around the bell. In this form the emblem now guides the man on the street and the woman in her shopping to a public telephone station, and in that form it flies in the Bell System flag from one end of the country to the other.

"And that other child, not on the hearth—he would not forget it; he would see that it was well provided for. That was a father's duty."—Silas Marner.
Just now we have with us many who say it is not the father's duty to see that his children are well provided for, but that it is the state's duty. They would have the state take over the care of the children, as was done in ancient Greece, and leave the parents unhampered, to go about their work or play as they wish.
One thing these people overlook is the fact that the same Greek state which took the children from their parents and reared them, carefully selected the ones that were to live. Delicate and ailing babies were left out in some deserted spot where they would speedily die of exposure. Only the strong and healthy were allowed to live.
Unless some such artificial means of selection is employed, then the only means we have of securing the survival of the fittest is to hold each father responsible for the support of his own children. The law is that if each father must support his own children, then the strongest, ablest, most intelligent fathers will be the ones who can provide for the most children, and so will have the greatest number of children reach adult life.

SHE SAVED MAIL PILOT FROM CRASH

MRS. MABEL HITE ON the night of February 17, 1928, Mrs. Mabel Hite, local agent of the Northwestern Telephone Company at Potter, Nebraska, was on duty alone at the telephone central office. A blizzard was raging at the time, but, nevertheless, she heard overhead the sound of an airplane and as this sound continued for some time, she decided the plane was circling over the town.

It is said that the first international telephone directory, printed in English, German and French, will be issued shortly by a Copenhagen firm.

OPERATOR AVERTS A RAILROAD WRECK

MISS ANNA C. YURECSKO. A WRECKED automobile blocking a railroad track in a deep cut; a train due to reach the scene almost immediately; the need of warning the engineer of the situation, and the lives of scores of passengers depending upon her doing the right thing at the right time—these were the factors which confronted Miss Anna C. Yurecsko, night telephone operator for the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company at Rockaway, N. J., on the night of June 24, 1928.

When Struggle Ended

Kruger's millions are still the subject of much discussion. The latest story is that told by Mr. Horak, who was a commandant in the Boer forces. His story is that: "When the war was nearing its end, General Botha issued a notice ordering all British subjects who had fought for the Boers to proceed to Komatipoort and informed them that they would be given a passage to any country they wished. This was done in order that they would not be tried as traitors. Men to the number of about 2,500 gathered at Komatipoort and then Botha ordered that all bullion and gold in the possession of the state should be taken to Komatipoort and divided among the men as a reward for their services. The bars of gold were cut up and the men were given equal shares. Later the men sailed from Lourenço Marques."

A Modest Aim

Otto H. Kahn, the rich patron of the arts, was talking about art to a Chicago reporter.

"High brow artists," he said, "are content to make a living. The low brows want to make a fortune."

"A high brow wrote a play. It was put on at one of the little theaters, as high brow theaters are always called, in Greenwich Village."

"On the third or fourth night the author turned up and said anxiously to the box office man:

"Well, old horse, how's she going?"

"Oh, very much better," said the box office man. "Fewer and fewer leave now before the end of the show."

"It's no wonder his head is swelled," said the mayor. "Look how wise and successful he is. All great men have swelled heads. Look at Alexander."

"These peace offers, sire, are superb," Parmeno said, "I would accept them if I were Alexander."

"But Alexander gave a scoffing laugh and answered:

"Yes, so would I, if I were Parmeno."

Toy Balloons Traveled Far

A Swedish toy balloon recently made a safe crossing of the North sea, and landed in Yorkshire, in England. It was given away, with many hundred others, by a department store in Malmö, in the southern Swedish province of Scania, and let loose by a youngster there. On the diminutive gas bag was printed the name and address of the store, for advertising purposes. The other day the manager of the store received it in the mail from a person in Yorkshire. It was deflated and wrapped in paper, but undamaged.

Turned Off

The other evening while little Robert, whose home is in Newman street, was getting ready to retire, he suddenly reached toward the top of his head and made a motion as if he were turning a knob. "I can't grow now," he remarked.

"Why not?" questioned his mother.

"Because I'm turned off," he replied.

BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST

Temperance Lesson

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 5:1-31
GOLDEN TEXT—B; not drunk with wine, wherein is excess.
PRIMARY TOPIC—What Wine Leads To.
JUNIOR TOPIC—What Drink Leads To.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Drink Leads To.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Reveling and Ruin.

I. Belshazzar's Impious Feast (vv. 1-4).

1. The attendants (vv. 1, 2), Belshazzar, his wife and concubines and a thousand of his lords.

2. Their behavior (vv. 3, 4).
(1) They drank wine; they engaged in revelry. (2) They committed sacrilege, drinking wine out of the sacred vessels taken from the temple at Jerusalem. (3) They worshipped idols, gods of gold, silver, brass, iron, wood and stone.

II. The Handwriting on the Wall (vv. 5-10).

1. The time of (v. 5). It occurred in the same hour in which they were engaged in their drunken revelry.

2. The effect upon the king (v. 6). He was seized with consternation.

3. The king's behavior (vv. 7-10).
(1) He called forth astrologers and soothsayers, offering rich rewards (vv. 7-9). Their utter inability to interpret the writing left the king even more perplexed.

(2) Daniel brought in at the suggestion of the queen (vv. 10-16). The queen reminded the king of Daniel's service to Nebuchadnezzar. He was sent for and promised great reward.

III. Daniel Interprets the Writing (vv. 17-28).

1. Daniel's address to the king (vv. 17-24).
(1) He brushes aside the promised gifts (v. 17). He would not have his speech limited by the king's gifts.
(2) He reviewed before him the history of Nebuchadnezzar and applied the lesson to the behavior of Belshazzar (vv. 18-24), showing that Belshazzar should have profited by the experience of his father.

2. The interpretation of the writing (vv. 25-29).

(1) "Mene" means "numbered" (v. 26). "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it."
(2) "Tekel" means "weighed" (v. 27). "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."
(3) "Peres" means "divided" (v. 28). "Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians."

IV. The Judgment Executed (vv. 29-31).

In that night was Belshazzar slain and Darius the Median took the kingdom.

The Chaldean dynasty ended with Belshazzar. So we may interpret this whole scene as pointing to the conditions at the close of the times of the Gentiles, and as foreshadowing the prevailing conditions. Let us note:

1. The stupidity of men.
They, like people today, would not learn by example. Nebuchadnezzar's fate should have deterred Belshazzar from such frivolity.

2. The magnificent splendor.
This great feast was characterized by pomp, display, parade. How characteristic of this age!

3. Luxury. The famous hanging gardens of Babylon were a noteworthy example. Signs of luxury today are on every hand.

4. The licentiousness of the king with his wives and concubines. Licentiousness is notoriously prevalent today.

5. Blasphemous sacrilege.

And may not the sacrilege of today be in excess of theirs, expressing itself in (1) a profession of religion for pecuniary gain, social and political preferment; (2) use of the pulpit and of the ministry for display and notoriety, even for the propagation of false doctrine; (3) union with the church, attendance on the communion, so as to cover up secret sins; (4) the use of the Word of God to give point to a joke; (5) denying that the Bible is God's Word, making it a book of errors, myths and legends; (6) sneering at the virgin birth, repudiating Christ's deity and setting aside His vicarious atonement.

6. Drunken carousals. The handwriting is on the wall. God will not endure this forever; His judgment shall fall. Conditions in the world indicate that the time is drawing near. Are you ready?

This Is the Latest Type of Helicopter

The "Maiden Milwaukie," all-metal monoplane which has been purchased from the Hamilton Metalplane company of Milwaukie by the Johnson Aeroplane company of Delray, Fla. Jesse C. Johnson has converted the plane into an experimental helicopter by providing horizontal 18-foot propellers for each wing, in addition to the front prop. The wing props are driven by shafts from a motor in the fuselage and are expected to cause the plane to rise and land almost vertically.

Young Marquess a "Regular Feller"

George John Patrick Dominic Townshend, marquess of Townshend, twelve years old, came to Lynn, Mass., with his mother for the celebration of that city's three hundredth birthday, and turned out to be just one of the boys. Here he is (left) tossing the bat for midgets in a baseball game with casual acquaintances at King's beach, Swampscott.

GIVEN VAIL MEDALS

Scores of people probably owe their lives to Mrs. Althea P. Marks, telephone agent at Satecoy, Calif., who, when the St. Francis dam collapsed a year ago, remained at her switchboard three nights and two days without sleep, at first to warn homes in the path of the flood and later to assist relief. She has been awarded the Vail silver and bronze medals and $250 in cash by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company.

PERSONALS

had her right arm broken last week as a result of riding a burro. The children were amusing themselves with the animal, and Mary, desirous of having a ride on the burro, was assisted on his back, but in making a short turn, threw Mary to the ground, breaking her arm. Notwithstanding her misfortune she was in from the ranch Monday with the folks, smiling and happy as usual, with her arm in a sling, and in the other hand, a pretty bouquet for the Outlook office.

LOST—An overnight bag containing household linens. Finder will be reasonably rewarded by returning to Mrs. W. E. Reynolds, Alamogordo avenue or the Outlook office.

Lon Atkinson
was down to Carrizozo Monday to carry the glad tidings that enough moisture had already fallen in Corona and vicinity to insure the bean crop without any future visitations this fall, and with stock and range in the pink of condition.

Sam Wells
who has some of the best mining claims in these parts and who left here about two weeks ago for parts unknown, has now embarked into the dairy business at Albuquerque and doing fine. Sam never takes a chance on anything that he is uncertain about and in this venture, like others he has made, he will be a winner, unless we miss our guess.

Stock Activity
Last Friday, Sowder & Blackshire sold 1000 fine calves and yearlings, and on Saturday, they bought 1500 steer yearlings from the Three Peaks Cattle Company of Alamogordo. They have contracted their 1930 spring increase of calves, come to be delivered in the fall of 1930 at a good round price. Sowder & Blackshire deal only in the choicest of stock and will not countenance anything of inferior nature, hence, the good prices they have and the good prices they are getting.

Mr. and Mrs. Carricalaree and Miss Mary Carricalaree of Wagon Mound were here Friday and Saturday to attend the funeral of the late Pedro Falxa, leaving for home Sunday.

Rev. and Mrs. Ludlow
returned last Saturday from an extended trip to points of interest such as the petrified forest, Grand Canyon and other places, ending their trip by visiting at principal cities in Colorado, Wyoming and Nebraska. They had a pleasant trip in which they were accompanied by Rev. and Mrs. Houts and family, leaving here after the recent revival closed.

Dual Birthday Party
Tuesday afternoon from 3 to 6, Mrs. C. W. Young entertained 20 little guests in honor of the birthdays of her daughter, Helen Mae Young, and her brother, Lewis Vaughan, at her home in the west part of town. Helen Mae and Lewis have both reached the 7th milestone of their worldly pilgrimage, and falling on the same date, furnished Mrs. Young with a wonderful opportunity to make a combined affair for the pleasure of the little folks. Games of various kinds were played by the little guests whose ages ranged from 2 to 10, after which refreshments were served, Mrs. Young being assisted by Mesdames Shaver, Nickels and Vaughan.

RESOURCES OF 30 N. M. BANKS INCREASED BY $1,109,888.88

Santa Fe, N. M., July 30.—The combined resources of 30 reporting state banks, at the close of business, June 29, 1928, showed an increase of $1,109,888.88 over the call of June 30, 1928, according to a statement made today by Lawrence Tamme, state bank examiner. The resources totaled $12,975,864.97.

Loans and discounts increased $381,612.70, aggregating $7,756,633.53, and the ratio of loans and discounts to total deposits on June 29, 1928 was 66 per cent, as compared with 60 per cent on June 30, 1928.

Investments in United States government securities totaled $2,373,584.86, or an increase of 70,607.13 over the June 30, 1928 call. Investments in other bonds and securities aggregated $1,292,528.12, an increase of $24,053.11 over June 30, 1928.

Time Deposits Increase.
Demand deposits declined $128,016.71, aggregating $7,682,293.42 while time deposits showed an increase of $578,665.21, totaling $2,876,876.12.

The reserve ratio declined from 17 per cent to 16 per cent. Balances due from correspondent banks and cash in vaults totaled $1,872,578.74.

Rediscounts and bills payable totaled $470,749.42, and increase of $372,738.27 over a year ago. Unusual heavy demands for credit and slow liquidation in the wool growing districts due to unsatisfactory prices, accounts for this increase.

Conditions Satisfactory.
Generally speaking, conditions over the entire state are very satisfactory, with the exception of spotty droughts in the extreme western portion of the state. Wheat harvested in the Rio-Tuacumcari, and Clovis districts, indicates a yield of from 12 to 17 bushels an acre. Spring "blowouts" resulted in a loss of approximately 30 per cent however, the large yield will compensate for the initial loss.

Resources of 18 reported building and loan associations aggregated $4,406,931.70, an increase of $119,923.71 over a year ago. Loans increased $462,951 and payments on the installment stock increased $94,360.04, totaling $2,477,255.65.

OF SCIENCE, STILL ELUSIVE PROLONGED LIFE, DREAM MYSTIC ELIXIR IS SAID VAGUE GOAL, AS YET UNFATHOMED.

Portland, Ore., July 18.—Prolonged life that elusive goal of scientists and dreamers for ages, is no nearer at hand today than it was when the question began, Dr. Morris Fishbein, secretary of the American Medical Association and editor of "Hygieia" said there this week. Dr. Fishbein spoke at the association's convention. "The mysterious secret of life, that unknown living force which causes man to survive for three score years and ten, more or less, has been the object of intensive search from almost the beginning of time," the noted physician said. Throughout the ages men have craved and sought miracles that would aid them in living beyond the allotted span, always searching for some elixir of life that would avert their years eternal.

Despite all this, said Fishbein, and despite the advance in knowledge and improvement in facilities for experiment, we are no nearer the coveted prize than man's earliest ancestor.

Challenges Work.
Referring to the work of Professor Voronoff of Paris and Dr. Steinhilber of Vienna in this direction, Dr. Fishbein said:

"Of their claims it can only be said that their work is of scientific interest, but they have not as yet demonstrated that one moment of additional life can be guaranteed to any human being who has submitted to their technic.

"When the cells of the body disintegrate and die there is no magic portion that can raise them from the dead. A tissue that had died can no more be restored to life than can new elasticity be put into a pair of worn out suspenders or carters."

Approximately 5,000 physicians of North America were here for the convention today. An auxiliary of women also was in session. Group meetings occupied most of the time.

Sheriff Johnny Brady

and Janitor Porfirio Chavez, Jr., went rabbit hunting Monday afternoon, we understand. Judging by the odor that came across the courthouse yard from Jailer Farmer's kitchen, we presume that the boys brought in a nice batch. How we wish we had been the sheriff's guests on that evening — But believe us, not on the lower floor "in the jail house."

The plays, "Deberes y Sacrificio" and "Lluvia de Oro," were presented to a packed house at Navarro's Hall, on that night. Taking the participants in these plays and the rest of the program collectively, all did their parts well. The undertaking was a success, both socially and financially, and we wish to thank all who patronized the program and also everyone who so freely helped to arrange the hall and stage.

She drives.
