Twilight of Fergusonism

Facts and figures now show that Ross Sterling has defeated Ma Ferguson in the Texas run-off by the enormous sum of over 92,000 votes which spells doom to Jim Fergusonism in the Lone Star State. In the general primaries, Ma pulled such a large vote that it was thought by many, that she would win out against Sterling in the run-off, but they were badly mistaken.

Many things contributed to her defeat. Past history in which Jim figured so prominently, wherein graft was exposed and which led to his impeachment was the main contribution to the avalanche of votes hurled against Fergusonism in the run-off. In the battle, Governor Moody took a hand in favor of Sterling and this was a great help, from the fact that Moody's administration had been free from a taint of graft. When he took the stump against the state being again turned over to the Fergusons, it put many people who were on the fence, to sober-minded thinking. They dreaded to think of the many criminals who were pardoned during her administration and turned loose on society, only to be back into prison in a short time on more serious offenses than they were first convicted on. In view of all these things and many more, Texas saw that it must free itself from Fergusonism and dealt it a blow that was so decisive as to end for all time, so they hoped, its reign in the state.

It can no longer be said that Texas will stand for anything, for the result of the run-off shows, as it did the last presidential election that when they put the foot on anything, it stays. We know some Democrats who were not interested in the Texas primary election because of the fact that it went Republican in the last election, but in that the people showed their good judgment as well as in the run-off.

TELEPHONE MEN AND WOMEN UPHOLD TRADITIONS OF THE SERVICE

Show Heroic Spirit in the Face of Danger and Often Save Lives and Property in the Performance of Duty.

By JOHN E. O'BRIEN

Under the caption, "Headlines We Never See," a recent issue of the Editor & Publisher The Fourth Estate, of New York City, a magazine devoted to the newspaper and advertising field, publishes the following imaginary newspaper headlines: PHONE GIRL LEAVES POST AS FLAMES SWEEP INN.

"Let It Burn! Me for Some Cooler Place," Says Hotel Operator.

GUESTS ARE NOT WARNED

It has become almost a tradition that in times of emergency, when extraordinary circumstances make uninterrupted telephone service of particular importance, when human lives and property are at stake, when the need arises to summon aid for the sick and the injured, that telephone employees will display unusual initiative, courage and fidelity. When fire rages with unabated fury, when devastating floods suddenly descend upon a peaceful region, when hurricanes and tornadoes wreak their havoc upon the land, then it is that the men and girls of the telephone world show that the conveying of the spoken word from farm to farm, from village to village, from city to city, across deserts and mountains, is not merely a service, but a public trust.

Telephone Calls Must Go Through

Scarcely a day passes in the Bell System that does not record somewhere some act that strikingly illustrates the devotion to duty and the loyalty of telephone employees, the men who are responsible for the service and its maintenance, and the girls who operate the switchboards and are thus the connecting links with the public. This sense of individual responsibility comes, in part, from the recognition of the vital importance of telephone service in the lives of others, and many are the noteworthy and inspiring examples of devotion to the highest ideals of duty and obligation on the part of those whose task it is to provide the nation with its telephone facilities.

Operators Brave Fire Danger

"Sticks to Post in Midst of Fire," "Phone Girls Are Heroines at Fire," "Phone Heroine Prevents Panic in Hotel Fire," "Phone Girls Stick With Board; Send Out Warnings While Only Chance of Escape Is Cut Off" -- These are the sort of newspaper headlines that so frequently greet the eye on the occasion of a disastrous fire. They do no more than hint, however, of the story to be told, of the efforts made to rouse a sleeping town, of the sounding of the alarm, the securing of immediate aid from neighboring towns and cities, of the scarier approach of the flames, of an exchange room filled with smoke and flying debris, the switchboard covered with tarpaulin, with the means of escape all but cut off, with even the firemen clamoring for the girls to desert while the plucky operators continue at their tasks of sending out the alarm and requesting aid.

Many a town throughout the United States owes its existence today to the fact that some brave telephone girl remained at her post, or some equally brave telephone plant man risked his life to establish proper telephone connection, so that communication could be had with some other place where adequate fire-fighting facilities might be obtained. Such cases are not uncommon. They are familiar to newspaper readers throughout the land.

When Floods Devastate And, then there are those all too frequent occasions when mighty rivers become even mightier, when small streams assume the fury of raging torrents, when a burning dam sweeps an avalanche of on-rushing waters upon the countryside and a swirling flood desolates a region.

The history of the country is replete with incidents where hundreds of lives and millions of dollars in property value have been saved through the heroism of the men and women who are of the telephone family, for there is only one thing that travels faster than a flood--and that is a warning by telephone. There is, for example, the case of Mrs. Mildred Lothrop and her heroism in performing duty at the risk of her life, which led directly to the saving of more than one hundred lives when she warned the people of the village of Homer, Neb., that they were about to be inundated by the rising Omaha Creek on the night of May 31, 1920, due to a cloudburst. There were the Puebla (Colo.) telephone girls who, in 1921, stuck to their posts when the Arkansas River flood devastated the city. There were the heroes and heroines of the great Mississippi River flood of a couple of years ago, and in the flood in New England in 1927, when at Becket, in Western Massachusetts, a dam burst and all the residents of the town fled to the hills, all except Pat McCormick, the telephone agent, who remained at his switchboard, calling nearby towns in the path of the water so as to warn them of the danger that impended. In the same flood, there was H. E. Roby, Superintendent of Traffic in Vermont, whose courage, initiative and resourcefulness in restoring vital telephone service, cleared the only toll line into Montpelier, the Capital of the State.

Warns Community of Flood Peril

These are but a few isolated cases of telephone men and women who remained on duty to warn inhabitants of the approach of danger and who stuck to their posts. The great calamities of the country have, for the most part, nearly always brought to light stories of rare devotion on the part of telephone operators and plant men who have remained on duty for long hours, in order to maintain communication. Besides, there have been many other cases where by intelligent use of telephone facilities to cut off the escape of bandits, operators, by telephoning to various points and warning the authorities to be on the lookout, have aided materially in their capture.

If such emergencies tend to emphasize the public reliance upon the telephone, they also demonstrate that the daily routine involved in providing such service affords many opportunities to aid the public interests and that on such occasions the vast army of telephone workers do not place their personal comfort and safety above those of the people they are trying to serve.

Telephone Topics

Beating Old Jack Frost. Once or twice in a decade, it becomes necessary for the California fruit growers to resort to smudge pots to protect their fruit from frost. Such an occasion arose last winter. Organized with modern weapons, the telephone and radio, the embattled farmers fought a strategic battle against old Jack Frost and saved their crops. In the midst of the orchard country a "general" sits at a desk with a map before him showing every line of defensive smudge pots. In the orchards about him are 350,000 heaters and 1,200 men. At the signal that the frost is approaching, orders go forth by telephone and motorcycle riders to light the fires here and there, according to the point of attack. If the temperature continues to drop, more lines of pots are lit, and the defense continues until the danger is passed and millions of dollars worth of fruit saved. All this successful defense against the onset of the frost king is predicated upon modern methods of communication.

Escaped Custer Massacre. That failure of chemicals, used in photographic work, to arrive on scheduled time was responsible for his father not being a member of the Custer party massacred on June 25, 1876, was told by E. S. Morrow, district manager at Santa Ana, California, for the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, in an address before the Lions Club recently. J. S. Morrow, the father of the district manager, was a photographer in the Civil war and when Custer arrived in Yankton, S. D., the senior Morrow was scheduled to accompany him on his drive against the Indians. The massacre occurred shortly after Custer and his troopers departed from Yankton.

In Police Service. Out in Los Angeles, Mrs. Grace Boyd has won an enviable reputation for coolness and clear thinking as a telephone operator at police headquarters. Asked if she would recommend this field for women she is quoted as saying: "If a woman believes she can meet the exacting requirements of police work and never lose the woman's perspective, I should recommend this vocation. One must enter this work with a sincere purpose and the desire to go far ahead in the study of police procedure and practices."

Operators Good Samaritans. According to the Portland, Ore., Telegram, the telephone operators at the Sollowood Exchange in that city took a family in the neighborhood under their wing at Christmas time. Hearing of the distressing condition in the home, where the family had been quarantined for several weeks, on account of diphtheria, the father unable to go to work and the family without fuel and with little food, the girls took up a collection and bought food and fuel, and continued to aid the family after the quarantine had been lifted.

Miles of Conveyors in Ford Plant

This picture shows two types of conveyors in use in the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company.

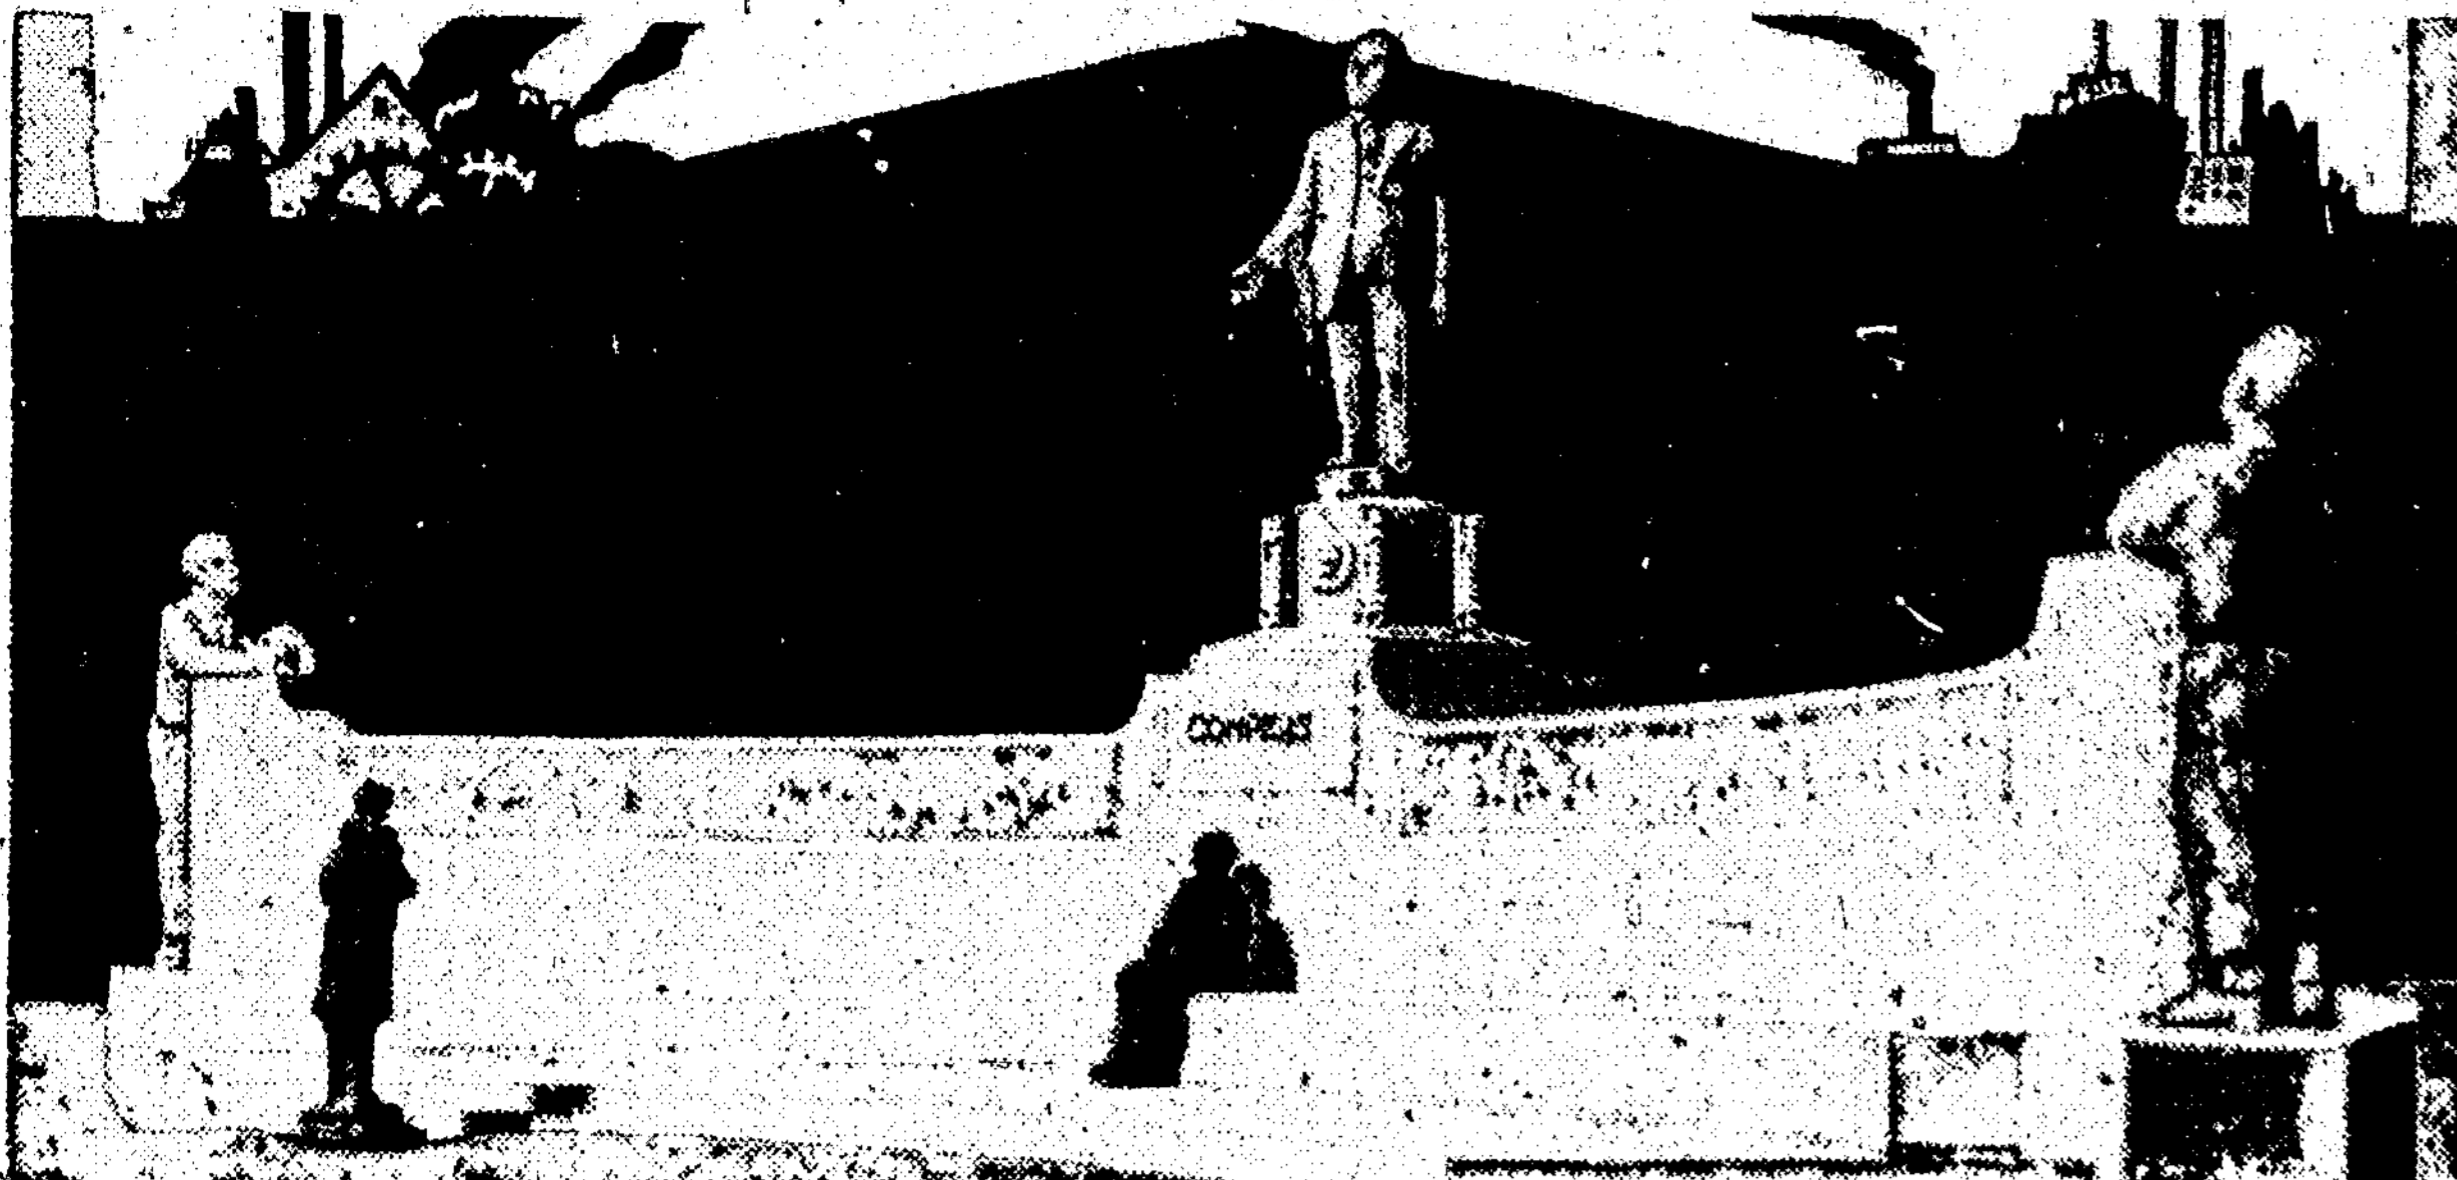

AN ENDLESS chain conveyor, three and a half to four miles long, said to be the longest in the world, has just been completed at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company at Dearborn, Michigan. On it parts of Ford cars in the process of manufacture are transported from one building to another and completed parts are carried direct to railroad cars for shipment to branch assembly plants. The conveyor, which carries its cargo on suspended hooks, has a daily capacity for 300,000 parts weighing over 2,000,000 pounds. It supplants freight cars and trucks which have been used for the transfer of many parts from one point to another in the Ford plant. This longest conveyor of them all is a development of the Ford policy that nothing should be done by manual labor that could better be done by machine. In the early days of his manufacturing career, Mr. Ford devised the assembly line—a moving track on which cars in the process of assembly went to the workmen instead of the workmen carrying parts to the car. The assembly line, perfected in many ways, is now used by automobile manufacturers generally. The value of the conveyor in reducing physical labor, in saving time, in preserving system and in cutting costs soon became apparent and its use was extended to other purposes about the plant. Now there are literally miles of conveyors of various types in the Ford plant. Some of them carry parts from one building to another and are carefully synchronized so that the parts arrive at precisely the right moment and in the exact spot where they are needed. Others transport red hot ingots of steel weighing nearly a ton each. Still others move outgoing shipments. If it were not for the conveyors, according to officials of the Ford Company, mass production would not be possible on its present scale.

Memorial to Labor's Grand Old Man

Model of triangular monument to the late Samuel Gompers, proposed for a Washington site set aside by congress. Labor organizations throughout the country have contributed to the $120,000 building fund.

Showing space on which the monument is to stand, at Massachusetts avenue and Tenth street, in the heart of the National Capital.

Men and women cannot live during working hours under autocratic conditions, and instantly become sons and daughters of freedom as they step outside the shop gates. The experiences of the habits of the shop are indelibly ground into the souls and minds of the workers. Democracy must come in the factory and the shop before it can be realized in the life of the nation. So long as the factory boss has irresponsible power to hire and fire, to dole out the lowest wages for which men and women or children can work, his employees have no rights that must be respected, no sense of self-respect or dignity, no real freedom. Long hours of work, low wages, insanitary conditions of work and waste of human power affect not only the workers, but their home life, their children and their children's children—SAMUEL GOMPERS.

FIGHT FOR PEACE FORCED ON LABOR

By GEORGE L. BERRY, President International Printing Pressmen's Union.

We shall fight in order that peace may prevail. To fight for the purpose of establishing and maintaining peace would appear at first blush to be a paradoxical suggestion, but the fact is that the most vital struggle confronting the workers of America is that which involved permanent peace and the elimination of warfare in industry. The inherent inclinations and ambitions of the workers is for peace because, from the records, we learn that the pain and sacrifice in all of its aspects attendant to wars—Industrial and otherwise—in the past have been absorbed by the workers; hence consciously or unconsciously, the workers seek peace and are gradually evolving a state of mind that will justify their fighting for it. The general public, made up of sympathizers of the organized labor movement in the main, prefers peace in industry. The general public, like all, profits most by peace and loses most by warfare. The great majority of employers in all industries in America, in the judgment of the writer, will indicate with enthusiasm their desire for peace, but the unfortunate part about the attitude of the employers is that they want peace calculated by their own terms and conditions which, of course, is no peace at all because of the utter human impracticabilities attendant to such a plan. The organized workers of America challenge the employers to meet them in a campaign for practical peace, a campaign for the eradication of strikes and lockouts and any other forms of concerted action purposing the stoppage of business upon which we are all dependent. The organized labor movement of America appeals to the public for support in the establishment and maintenance of practical peace to the end that the waste occurring in industrial warfare may be eliminated. But we cannot succeed in doing even the practical, logical and sound thing by merely thinking about it. We must work for it and fight for it, and constitute a platform upon which we can attract and hold the public confidence and challenge without fear of defeat the attention of the employers and investors in industry of America. Finally, to fight for peace is neither paradoxical or unsound, but constitutes, in the judgment of the writer, the very life of industrial prosperity and happiness for all of the elements of the world for the present and for the future.

FORCE OF LABOR UPLIFT IS SHOWN BY ITS PROGRESS

By the Late Samuel Gompers

Down the ages file the crowds of common people, so patiently, so unobtrusively, so submissively that dumb pain catches the heart in response to the human tragedy and pain of the dwarfed lives and suppressed powers. Though the march of the world's toilers hurts with its pain and its pathos, yet it brings cheer, gladness and encouragement. Today, though the common people dig and delve, go down into dark and weary places, do the work necessary to the intricate organizations that supply social needs, yet many of them are able, comfortable and happy past the conception of former ages. And how? The labor movement. In some guise, with varying ideals, the labor movement has existed wherever there has been need and oppression of the workers. It has led them up from slavery to freedom, through the gate of freedom upon the infinite possibilities of free life that stretch far, far away in the unfathomed future. And what is this labor movement? It is a living thing with soul and spirit, and a personality all its own. Those that are weary and heavy-laden cast their burdens upon it, straighten the bent back and ease the aching muscles. In new-found freedom they look up—and see the higher levels and purer heights just beyond. Men and women that hunger and thirst stretch out their hands and receive that which satisfies the present physical needs. As the pangs of distress become less, mind and heart are freed of the burden of existence, ready for things of the spirit. Those made restless and alert by unsatisfied longing turn to this great human movement and there find a response to their craving for something that is true and honest, practical, yet idealistic. To keep full and strong this tide of energy, to rouse the purpose and determination to strive for yet more and more, is the great purpose of Labor day. Let the workers meet together, review the things done, realize the mistakes and the victories, take counsel with each other, to inspire to press onward and upward. Now more than two million strong, the trade union movement of America is a great force in the forward movement for human progress and welfare. Increased members and power bring increased responsibilities. The labor movement will bear the responsibility with dignity and wisdom befitting its high ideals and purposes; it will meet opposition and many obstacles in its struggle for the abolition of wrong, for the attainment of right, for the establishment of human brotherhood. But the organized labor movement will win; it must win, it cannot fail. The triumph of labor for justice and humanity is assured. It is writ not only in the stars, but also in the hearts and minds of the masses.

First National Labor Body
The National Trades Union, formed at New York city in 1834 as a federation of local unions and of the central bodies in different cities, was the first national organization of workers in the United States. It disappeared after the panic of 1834.

Employment Agencies
France had the first public employment agencies or bureaus, it is thought. In 1843 such bureaus were established in Paris. The first private agency of the kind was established in 1886 and the first in this country in Ohio five years later.

LET PUBLIC KNOW STAND OF LABOR

By JOHN J. MANNING, Secretary-Treasurer Union Label Department, A. F. of L.

Labor has more strength than ever. It has a bigger mission than ever. It plays a bigger part in social, industrial and political life. Labor performs a social service as well as the physical service of toil. The heroism and loyalty displayed by the pioneers of the great labor movement for the uplift of humankind are indelibly stamped upon the social, economic and moral progress of our country. Indeed, when the historian of the future writes of the past fifty years, one of the brightest pages will be that of the activities of our movement for human betterment. But great as this service has been and deeply as it is appreciated, we cannot rest content with past achievement, but we should give the best that is in us so that the many pressing problems with which we are now confronted may be satisfactorily solved. Organization, education and publicity are the triad, coupled with real co-operation, which will aid us more than anything else in their solution. Attendance at meetings; securing new members is real organization work; to inculcate a thorough knowledge of what our movement stands for in each and every member, is real education; to let the general public know what we stand for and the service we have rendered society by our accomplishments, is real publicity. The American Labor Movement is the only movement in the world which uses the union label, shop card and working button to designate the product of its members or where they render service. By demanding that these emblems be displayed whenever we make a purchase of goods or service, we will be rendering real co-operation to all who are enrolled in the great army of organized labor. The use of these emblems by any employer indicates that he is in harmony with our demand for industrial democracy. Industrial democracy is founded upon a trade agreement, and it is only through such an agreement, under which the workers have an equal voice with the employer in establishing standards for conditions of labor, that this democracy is secured. Let us, therefore, on the day dedicated to labor, resolve that if we have been negligent in our duty to the great cause in which we are enlisted, we will gladly assume our share of this work in the future, to the end that we will merit the heritage given us by our predecessors.

TIRED WHEN SHE GOT UP

Strengthened by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Paul, Minn.—"I used to be as tired when I got up in the morning as when I went to bed. I had fainting spells and palpitation. Of course it was my age. I read a Lydia E. Pinkham booklet and started taking the Vegetable Compound three times a day. I am now a well woman. Three of my neighbors know what it did for me so they are taking it too. I will write to any woman if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help her—as it did me. I feel like a young woman now and I thank you."

Pigeons Now Photographers
As a result of the important part played by carrier pigeons in the World war, German army officers recently have started extensive training of the birds and experimenting with them, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Some have been taught to carry an automatic camera strapped to their breasts, the apparatus being capable of making six exposures while the birds are on the wing. Dogs are being trained with the birds, the animals bringing the birds in carriers strapped to their sides from the home port of the pigeons to officers whom the dogs have been taught to follow.

DEVELOPED FROM MORE THAN 10 THOUSAND OBSERVATIONS DURING THE PIKE'S PEAK TEST, NOW BECOME YOUR GUIDE WHEN BUYING MOTOR OIL

Technical Report and Certificate of Performance . . .
Certified Test No. 2268
Summary of Results

It should be understood that these statements made herein are applicable only to tests made under the supervision of the American Automobile Association Contest Board between September 6 and October 3, 1929, over the Pike's Peak Automobile Highway and Colorado Springs and Calhan Roads, and the conditions stated, except in so far as the legitimate inferences might be extended.

Free booklet, "Pike's Peak Test Confirms CONOCO'S Challenge!" gives you complete details of above contest, facts, leading facts. Ask for it in any CONOCO station or the nearest CONOCO dealer.

Between September 6 and October 3, 1929, three popular nationally known brands of motor oil were tested side by side with CONOCO GERM-Processed oil over the supervision of the American Automobile Association Contest Board.

The Board's findings have been expressed briefly in the "fourteen points" below.

- That the test procedure was followed accurately and that no deviation therefrom occurred which might seriously affect the soundness of any conclusions based upon the data;
- That a reduction in the rate of wear occurring during the use of CONOCO GERM-Processed Motor Oil over that occurring with the other oils used to the extent of 74.4 per cent was shown during these tests;
- That greater stability of the subject oil during these tests was shown by records of examination of drained oils being nearer the viscosity of the original or fresh oil and by chemical tests of drained oils with the fresh oils;
- That frictional temperatures occurring during the use of the subject oil were lower than temperatures occurring during the use of the comparables;
- That higher compression pressures were obtained with the use of the subject oil during these tests than with the use of other oils. It would be directly inferred that this was caused by better ring seal;
- That using the subject oil and during each test greater gasoline mileage for economy was obtained than during the use of the comparables;
- That less oil consumption as shown by the records of these tests occurred with the use of the subject oil;
- That carbon deposits collected from the combustion chambers and cylinder heads and weighed by the official chemist were shown

RESERVE SYSTEM'S DIVIDENDS ANALYZED

Bankers Find Increased Payments to Member Banks Would Be Small Inducement.

Various proposals that member banks in the Federal Reserve System should participate more largely in its net earnings through an increase in the dividend rate above the present fixed 6 per cent "would be a very small financial inducement" to them, it is declared in a recent study of this subject by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. This is shown, the commission says, by a theoretical forecast, on the basis of the past six years, of additional earnings that would be disbursed to member banks during the next six years under two plans introduced in bills before the United States Senate.

"The Fletcher bill provides that Federal Reserve Bank earnings, after present 6 per cent dividends to members and completion of a 100 per cent surplus, should all be distributed as extra dividends to the stockholder banks," the report says. "If the earnings of each Federal Reserve bank were distributed among its own members there would be no extra dividends in the Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago and San Francisco districts during the next six years, but the other six Federal Reserve Banks would pay annual extras at the following rates: Richmond, 6.08 per cent; Atlanta, 4.09 per cent; St. Louis, 3.50 per cent; Minneapolis, 9.51 per cent; Kansas City, 5.48 per cent; Dallas, 4.83 per cent.

"If the earnings were pooled and paid out to all members in all districts each member would receive an average annual extra dividend of .78 per cent. Under this plan no franchise tax as now would be paid by the Federal Reserve Banks to the Federal Government.

Another Plan Analyzed

"The Glass bill would provide that, after present 6 per cent dividends, one-half the remainder should be paid to member banks as an extra dividend with the residue going to surplus and Federal Government as franchise tax. The average annual extras to members would be as follows: Boston District, 2.51 per cent; New York, .48 per cent; Philadelphia, 2.05 per cent; Cleveland, 2.09 per cent; Richmond, 3.26 per cent; Atlanta, 4.67 per cent; Chicago, 3.20 per cent; St. Louis, 2.03 per cent; Minneapolis, 4.75 per cent; Kansas City, 2.74 per cent; Dallas, 3.31 per cent; San Francisco, 1.87 per cent.

"If these extra funds were pooled the result would be an extra average annual dividend of 1.73 per cent for each member. Under this plan the system would still pay as now an annual franchise tax, amounting to $1,941,996 on the average."

By way of concrete instance, the report says, a member bank having capital and surplus of $200,000, therefore holding Federal Reserve Bank stock amounting to $8,000 on which it is receiving $260 under the present 6 per cent dividend arrangement, would with the addition of each 1 per cent to the dividend rate receive an additional income of $80 a year.

"If each member bank will figure out for itself the dollar-and-cents gain it would enjoy we are confident it will be agreed that the gains are small as against the economic disadvantages which can be pointed out," it concludes.
