ONE state election and a bunch of primaries served to keep up the interest in politics.

In the Maine election the Republicans were victorious, putting their candidates in every major office.

Of the primaries, those of the Republicans in Michigan were the most interesting.

Briefly, here are results in other primaries:

South Carolina—Democrats nominated James Byrnes, a dry, for the senate, defeating Senator Cole Blease.

Colorado—Republicans chose George H. Shaw, opposed by the Anti-Saloon League, for the Phipps seat in the senate, turning down W. V. Hodges, endorsed by the dry organization.

Louisiana—Gov. Huey Long defeated Senator Ransdell for the Democratic senatorial nomination after a acrimonious campaign.

New Hampshire—Republicans nominated John G. Winant for governor.

Delaware—Republicans renominated Senator Hastings and Congressman R. O. Houston, both dry; Ireneus DuPont, Republican leader, announced he would support former Senator Thomas F. Bayard, wet, whom the Democrats nominated for the senate.

Washington—John F. Miller, veteran dry congressman from Seattle, defeated for renomination by Republicans by Ralph A. Hoff, an active wet.

Georgia—Democrats renominated Senator W. J. Harris and chose G. H. Caraway for governor.

Arizona—George W. P. Hunt won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination for the eighth time.

He hurried out—to return within a minute or two with Mr. Elphinstone. And for the first time since the beginning of his acquaintanceship with him, Maythorne showed evidence of something close akin to excitement.

"Here's a new development!" he exclaimed as he came into the room. "Mr. Elphinstone has been to my office and followed me here to tell me that Mrs. Elphinstone has disappeared!"

We all turned on Mr. Elphinstone. He was shaken out of his usual dreaminess; he looked perturbed, dismayed, puzzled, wholly at a loss. Standing there a little within the doorway, blinking at us as if unable to make us out or reckon us up, he nodded automatically at Maythorne's announcement. But he was sufficiently master of himself to confirm it, in words.

"Since last night!" he said. "Disappeared—completely! Most extraordinary—and unpleasant—and embarrassing—I really do not know what to think—or do!"

Crole, who had given the two policemen a sharp glance on hearing the news, pushed a chair toward the newcomer.

"Sit down, Mr. Elphinstone," he said. "Perhaps we can help you a bit. When did Mrs. Elphinstone disappear?"

Mr. Elphinstone dropped into the chair, and looked round us again. "Just so!" he said. "The fact is, the whole thing is really most confusing. Last night, of course, I went to Short's hotel. We had dinner on our arrival, in our own private sitting room. It was some little time after that that Sheila came. She—"

"Oh!—Miss Merckison came there, did she?" interrupted Maythorne.

"Miss Merckison—Sheila—my step-daughter—yes. She came. She and her mother went into the adjoining bedroom—to talk. I heard them talking. I—I went away—downstairs, you know—I thought I'd smoke a cigar in the smoking room. I was down there perhaps an hour. I foregathered with a man who turned out to be something of an archeologist—interesting conversation. Perhaps I was a little longer away. Then I went up to our rooms again. There was nobody there—nobody at all! I thought perhaps Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila had gone into the drawing room, and I went there, but they were not to be seen. I waited some time. Then, as they didn't come, I made some inquiry. And I found—really most astonishing!—I found, from the hall porter, that Mrs. Elphinstone and Sheila, and Alison Murdoch had all gone out of the hotel some time before, evidently soon after I had gone down to the smoking room. And—"

"Pardon me, Mr. Elphinstone," broke in Maythorne, "but—who is Alison Murdoch?"

Mr. Elphinstone looked at his questioner pretty much as a man looks who wonders that anybody shouldn't know as much as himself.

"Alison Murdoch?" he answered. "Oh, ah!—you're not a Marseilles man, of course. Alison Murdoch is a sort of foster-sister of my wife's. Brought up together, as children, you know. Then at one time she was for many years my wife's maid—still acts in that capacity when we go traveling, as in this instance. But for some few years she has lived in a little house at Marseilles—Birsade, really—on her own means—little competency, you know. An active woman, though—in the tourist season, for instance, she helps them at the Woodcock with their cooking—clever, bustling woman!"

"And she went out last night with Mrs. Elphinstone and Miss Merckison?" asked Maythorne.

"So I learned from the hall porter. He said that Mrs. Elphinstone and her maid—they know them both well enough at Short's for we are always up, all three of us, two or three times a year, and Miss Merckison, whom, of course, they also know well, all went out together about—I think he said half past nine."

"Did he call a cab for them?" demanded Maythorne.

"No—he said they turned to the left, down the street—walking," replied Mr. Elphinstone. "Dear me!—I really can't think why they should go walking at that hour of the evening!"

"But the point is—did they, or any one of them, return?" inquired Crole.

"None returned!" said Mr. Elphinstone. "I waited up till midnight—eventually I retired—very much puzzled. And—I was so fatigued I fell asleep at once, and slept soundly until morning. To my great amazement, I found that neither Mrs. Elphinstone nor Alison Murdoch had come back—"

"Sheila, of course, I supposed to be at Miss Apperley's. So, after getting a little breakfast, I drove to Miss Apperley's, and just caught that young lady as she was leaving for her classes. To my still greater amazement she knew nothing whatever about Sheila. Sheila, she said, had suddenly remarked, after sitting in silence for a long time the previous evening, that she would go to Short's hotel, and have things out with her mother, and had set off then and there—and had never returned! She—"

"concluded Mr. Elphinstone, waving his silver-mounted cane. "There it is! All three have vanished!—in London! I thought of Mr. Maythorne and went to his office—and was brought along here to him. And I was going to ask you, Mr. Maythorne—do you think it possible they have been kidnaped?"

No one laughed. Mr. Elphinstone's simplicity was too apparent. He was very grave, too, in his simplicity, and Crole was equally grave in replying to his ingenuous question.

"No, Mr. Elphinstone, no, I don't think it possible for three women to be kidnaped, even in London," he answered. "I think you'll find that they went out on some business of their own, and that they had good reasons—again of their own—for not returning. But let me ask you for a little more information—when your wife and her daughter went into the bedroom to talk in private, where was Alison Murdoch?"

Mr. Elphinstone considered this for a moment.

"Probably," he replied at last, "probably in the next room to that—a dressing room, which she used as a bedroom. We always have the same as if in surprise. "To be sure—it belongs to my wife!"

Maythorne bent over the table toward Manners and Corkerdale and for a moment or two spoke to them in a whisper: I gathered that he was telling them how and when he found the brooch which he had just exhibited. Again he turned to Mr. Elphinstone.

"You've no doubt that this is your wife's brooch?" he asked. "After all, I suppose that one of these things is very like another."

"That's my wife's property!" affirmed Mr. Elphinstone with more decision of will and manner than he usually showed. "I bought it for her myself, years ago, in Inverness. It is one of two—they are precisely alike. The stones are of a rather uncommon sort of calngorm; the silver mountings are old. I bought the pair in a sort of odd-and-ends shop in Inverness—I remember the circumstances very well. But to be sure—I haven't seen either brooch for years."

"Mrs. Elphinstone didn't wear them, then?" suggested Maythorne.

"She thought them old-fashioned and rather too heavy," replied Mr. Elphinstone. "She looked on them, I think, as curiosities—she said they'd been used, originally, for fastening plaids—men's plaids, you know, at the shoulders—and she put them away. I don't remember that she ever did wear them—but I have no doubt whatever that what you show me is one of the pair. Now, where did you get it?"

"Let it suffice for the moment, Mr. Elphinstone, to say that I found it, accidentally," answered Maythorne. "Picked it up, you know—when I was at Marseilles. Never mind more, just now."

He replaced the brooch in his pocket and rose, looking round at the rest of us. "Well?" he said. "What next?"

Nobody made any suggestion. The next words came from Mr. Elphinstone. "I wish I knew what has become of my wife!" he said, plaintively. "Can no one think of anything to do?"

"She'll have to be sought for, sir," said Corkerdale. He nudged Manners. "We'd better be doing something, I think," he murmured. "The hotel first, eh?"

Maythorne turned to Eccleshare. "I suppose you're on the telephone?" he said. "Just so!—let us ring up Short's and find out if Mrs. Elphinstone has returned there."

He went out into the hall with Eccleshare; the rest of us waited until their return a few minutes later. Maythorne shook his head.

"No news!" he answered. "They haven't been back there—up to now. But—as they set out from there I suppose that's the best base from which to conduct operations?"

"We're going there, anyway," said Corkerdale. "Mrs. Elphinstone's got to be found! Perhaps Mr. Elphinstone will come with us—we may hit on some clue from something that's been left."

We left the house. Outside, across the street, Johnson was still looting about. He caught Maythorne's eye; what Maythorne did in the way of signaling to him I did not make out, but Johnson loafed away, and still further away, and faded out of sight.

"No need to keep that chap hanging round," observed Maythorne. "Now for Cottingley—I think I shall put Cottingley onto the track of Mrs. Elphinstone—he'll find her a lot quicker than any professional police will."

"Where's he going to pick up a daw?" inquired Crole, sarcastically. "Leave that to Cottingley!" retorted Maythorne. "He'll see a clew where no one else would. All he wants is clear—and concise—instructions to start out on."

We found Cottingley at the top of the street. He was eating an apple, in supplement to his lunch of bread and cheese. Phlegmatic as ever, he turned with us toward the nearest cab-rank, Maythorne talking to him as we went along.

"What next?" asked Crole as we reached Edgware road again.

"I'm just going round by Short's hotel," answered Maythorne, "to hear

If those chaps have made anything out, and to give Cottingley a start. Better come, both of you."

"I won't," said Crole. "I must get back to my office. I can do no good at Short's, and you can ring me up if you've any news. Oh, by-the-by," he added, as Maythorne signaled to a taxicab driver, "I forget to mention it before, Holt, Armistrade's check duly arrived this morning. So that's all right, and I suppose we've finished with his part in all these mysteries."

"Finished with nothing, Crole!" exclaimed Maythorne. "The curtain is still up—well up!—on everything. Coming, Holt—you'd better."

I went with him. I was not so much concerned about Mrs. Elphinstone as about Sheila. That some new and very serious situation had arisen when Sheila called on her mother the previous evening there could be no doubt—nothing else, I was sure, could have occasioned the strange departure and disappearance of which Mr. Elphinstone had told us. What was it?

It took little time to run round to Short's, a famous, if somewhat old-fashioned hotel in the West end, greatly in favor with country family people. While we rode there Maythorne occupied himself in posting up Cottingley in all our doings that morning, and especially about the disappearance of Mrs. Elphinstone. Cottingley soaked it all in without saying a word; he was still eating apples, and he munched them steadily while his employer talked. But as Maythorne made an end Cottingley also finished his last apple, and tossing the core out of the cab window, rapped out a word or two.

"Steamship offices!" he said. "Likeliest place, first."

"Good!" assented Maythorne. "There may be something in that. All right—you get on to it. But first, we'll see if anything's turned up here."

We left the cab a little way from Short's, and walked along towards the principal entrance. Manners and Corkerdale were just coming out as we reached it—I thought I saw in their manner that they had heard something.

"Well?" asked Maythorne as we joined them. "Any news?"

"Nobody's returned," replied Corkerdale, "and there's nothing in Mrs. Elphinstone's or the maid's rooms to suggest why they ever went away. But we have heard a bit that the old gentleman hadn't found out when he set off to you this morning."

"What's that?" asked Maythorne.

"Odd circumstance, to be sure!" answered the detective. "I'd like to know what it means. Got it from the under hall porter. He says that some little time after Mr. and Mrs. Elphinstone and the maid arrived last night—he knows all three well enough, he says, as they come there two or three times a year—a man came into the entrance hall and asked him if they—naming them—were stopping there? He said they were, and he believed they were then having dinner. The man went away. But this under hall porter also says that he noticed the same man hanging about the hotel front after that, and that he was there, as if watching when Mrs. Elphinstone and her daughter and the maid went out—in fact, he's positive that the man followed them down the street and round the first corner. And—that's all!"

"And a good lot!" remarked Maythorne. "Could he describe the man?"

"Oh, yes! A little, thin man, about thirty or so; slight brown mustache, wore spectacles; very respectably dressed; wore a Trilby hat—looked like a clerk or commercial traveler—something of that sort," replied Corkerdale.

"Did he say anything to the under hall porter as to why he wanted the Elphinstones?" asked Maythorne.

"No—the man asked him if he could take up any message," said Corkerdale. "He replied no—it didn't matter; he wouldn't disturb them if they were at dinner; he'd look in again."

"And he didn't look in again?"

"No—the last the under hall porter saw of him, he was following the three women down the street."

Maythorne remained silent for a minute or two.

"Well," he said at last. "I suppose you'll follow things up in your own way. If I can be of any help, let me know. If I hear anything, I'll let you know, Corkerdale. May as well help each other." He turned away, Cottingley and I following him. After going a short distance, he motioned to the clerk.

"Try your line—the shipping offices, Cottingley," he said. "May be some good."

Cottingley went off, and Maythorne and I walked on in silence for a while. "This is a queer business, Holt!" he said after some time. "That Mrs. Elphinstone is either guilty or is privy to somebody else's guilt seems dead certain! But—where on earth has she disappeared to? And when and where are we going to get news of her?"

POULTRY

DRESSED TURKEYS SWELL PROFITS

Co-Operative Project in Nebraska Is Successful

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Increased profits from turkey growing as the result of co-operative marketing of the dressed fowls has proved an incentive to farmers in the North Platte irrigation district in western Nebraska. "Marketing dressed turkeys—'in car lots,'" says D. H. Propps, of the bureau of agricultural economics in the Yearbook of the United States Department of Agriculture. "is one of the most practical of co-operative marketing projects."

"The growers in a county or district," Mr. Propps explains, "determine approximately the number of turkeys available for sale. Representatives of the growers get in touch with prospective buyers and receive from them sealed bids which are opened at a stated time. The entire number is then sold to the highest bidder, who then fixes the dates on which he wishes the dressed birds to be delivered. The farmers dress the turkeys the day before delivery and cool them overnight on the farms. The birds are weighed, graded and paid for as they are delivered. The purchaser bears all expenses and assumes all responsibility after the birds are received."

Turkey growers realize from 50 cents to $1 for the labor of dressing. This represents from 15 to 20 per cent of the value of the turkey, and is fully three-fifths as much as the entire feed cost of raising and fattening the birds in the North Platte district. In 1927 the growers sold nearly 25,000 birds, and netted about $18,000 for the work of dressing. At turkey-dressing time neighbors often change work, and if one grower is inexperienced he can usually get a neighbor to show him the best method of dressing the birds. Farm dressing is usually better done than in commercial establishments and buyers consider this when bidding for the turkey crop. The fact that turkeys move to market so largely just in advance of Thanksgiving and Christmas is a point favoring the co-operating sellers.

Before Winter Sets In Clean Up Poultry House

Before winter sets in the poultry house should be given a thorough cleaning. All the old silt should be removed, the walls, etc., brushed down, and the place made as clean as physically possible. This should then be followed with a drenching with a good disinfectant. In fact if mites were present the house should be sprayed with kerosene oil emulsion and the roosts and parts adjacent should be painted with crank case oil or a similar product. Thorough treatment now may prevent the mites hibernating and causing trouble next spring and summer. The cleaning and disinfecting process should not be confined to the walls and roof but also to the floor. One advantage of the concrete floor is that it can be easily cleaned. If the poultry house has not had its fall clean up it should be done at once. To put pullets into unclean quarters and to needlessly expose them to disease is to court trouble. It's another case of the ounce of prevention.

Insulation of Curtains to Keep Out Icy Winds

All that can be done to the farm poultry house in the way of insulation or storm curtains or banking around the outside, will tend to keep out the icy winds and hold in the bird heat to make the pullets more comfortable. But ventilation must not be reduced to a point that makes the house damp. A damp poultry house always seems colder than a dry ventilated house at the same temperature. Dampness seems to be a cause of colds and low vitality and both conditions may cause roup or at least a low per cent of egg production.

Helps Avoid Worms

One authority has stated that worms have very little chance of obtaining a foothold in chickens that have a gizzard well filled with insoluble grit. This authority claims that all eggs and cysts of the worms are ground and damaged so much by a gizzard full of grinding material that no worm infestation results. At any rate, it wouldn't hurt to see that the young growing stock is given plenty of coarse, insoluble grit and pure, fresh water.

Cooping One Rooster

The practice of cooping one male bird in a pen of, say, twenty fowls, and letting the alternate bird run with the flock day and day about, is better perhaps than allowing the two birds to run together. It has been found, however, that the cooping of the male in the pen excites it so much that, instead of resting and gaining strength, the opposite effect is noted. The "resting" bird should be cooped out of sight of the pen. It will feed better.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is expelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take. Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Red Hot Mamma

Ellnor Glyn at a Los Angeles tea was condemning modern morals. "For these morals," she said, "it isn't our young folks, but their parents, who are to blame."

"A young chap was sitting beside a pretty girl in the moonlight.

"If I kiss you," he said, "will you call your mother?"

"The girl laughed rather bitterly. "Gee," she said, "ma comes without calling if there's any kissing on the boards."

Glass Pictures Produced

Stained glass of different colors may be fused into one picture by a process just invented by Basil H. Bayne, an artist of Gerrard's Cross, England. The invention is regarded in England as the greatest development in the technique of stained glass since the earliest days of the art. It is claimed that the use of leadwork and enamels is eliminated, and that the new glass can be produced more cheaply than other forms of pictures in glass.

rooms when we stay at Short's. There's a sitting room, a bedroom, and a dressing room; Alison Murdoch always has the dressing room. I should say she'd be in there when my wife and Sheila went into the bedroom."

"Did you find out from the hall porter if they took anything away with them?" inquired Crole. "Any light baggage—anything of that sort. As if they, or one or other of them, meant to stay away for the night?"

"I didn't inquire," replied Mr. Elphinstone. "But I'm sure they didn't. The hall porter—an intelligent man whom I've known for many years—told me this morning that his own opinion, when they went out was—well, in short, one that would never have occurred to me."

"And that was—what?" asked Crole.

"He said he thought the ladies were going to have what he called an hour at the pictures," answered Mr. Elphinstone. "Of course, I didn't understand him. He explained that just round the corner from Short's, in the direction they took, is one of these new-fangled cinema theaters, where, I am told, moving pictures are shown. But I can't think—"

"I think we may take it that they didn't go there," remarked Maythorne. He glanced significantly at the two policemen. "This'll have to be gone into carefully," he murmured. "Your line!"

"We don't know that Mrs. Elphinstone wasn't found at Short's—when Mr. Elphinstone goes back there," said Crole, glancing at his watch. "It's now noon, and—"

"We don't," interrupted Maythorne. Then, in an undertone, he muttered: "But I guess he won't! Mr. Elphinstone!" he continued, raising his voice. "I want to show you something—something that I have in my pocket. Here it is." He went on, producing the calngorm brooch, and laying it on the table. "Tell me!—have you ever seen that article before?"

Mr. Elphinstone peered carefully at the brooch and then looked up, quickly. "Where did you get this?" he asked.

Desolation in Wake of Gigantic Gold Dredges

Automobile tourists through the northern part of California are liable to have their attention attracted to mountains of cobblestones frequently seen. Sometimes these piles are 50 or 60 feet high and several hundred feet long. They are never beautiful and they add nothing to the landscape. In fact, they are eyesores, but there is little prospect of their removal. These piles are the accumulation of the gold dredges, gigantic constructions which eat their way through the land and leave a trail of desolation. Farm lands and orchards are brought up by the operators and left in ruins, for the land is useless for any purpose whatever after the passage of the dredger. These machines cost about a quarter of a million dollars, but the cost of operation is very small. A large quantity of the earth must be treated to recover a small quantity of the yellow metal, but at that the business is very profitable. The stones taken from the soil are useful only to grind up for cement, but the piles standing today will offer crushed stone sufficient for the demands of the entire country for many years.—Washington Star.

Chestnut Trees

There is a Chinese hairy chestnut and a Japanese chestnut, but no Japanese hairy chestnut. The Chinese hairy chestnuts are being brought to this country in the hope that they will replace our chestnut trees which were destroyed by a blight. While the trees grow slowly and do not bear a good crop for about ten years, they are believed to be sturdier than the Japanese chestnuts, which bear in two or three years.

NEW RELICS OF PUEBLO INDIANS EXTEND DATA ON EXTINCT TRIBE

Smithsonian Institution Scientists Say Recent Discoveries Will Reveal Important Facts on Life and Culture of Aborigines

New knowledge of life and habits of Pueblo Indians living centuries ago in New Mexico has been assured by discovery of valuable relics in the Chetro Kettle ruins of Chaco Canon. It was stated orally Sept. 5 by Dr. J. P. Harrington, ethnologist of the Bureau of American Ethnology at the Smithsonian Institution.

"The discovery marks the outstanding advances recently obtained in study of the Chaco Canon ruins," Dr. Harrington said, "and will open a wide new field in research regarding Indian culture and mores of the period before the advent of the white man in North America."

Scientists of the University of New Mexico, headed by Dr. E. L. Hewett, in co-operation with representatives of the Smithsonian Institution, believe that the discovery constitutes a fitting climax to a summer of intensified research and excavation in these ruins, it was stated.

"The relics were found in a hitherto unexplored section of the ruins," Dr. Harrington pointed out, "in secret, hiding places under what has until now been considered as the bottom floor in certain structures."

Four towers, each four stories high, stand in the corners of the Chetro Kettle village, he explained, and it was under these towers that the valuables were found. The towers, it was thought, had been thoroughly explored and excavated, but further investigation revealed secret rooms under the lowest floor, and it was in these rooms that the Pueblo Indians of this village left records of their life.

"It was generally considered that the depth to which the excavations had been carried was the lowest point in the towers," Dr. Harrington said, "but discovery of the lower rooms disputed this theory. When Indians leave a village they usually take all their valuables with them, but in this case it seems that they buried them beneath the towers."

Among the relics discovered are Indian sandals, beads, tapestry, and stone idols. Dr. Harrington pointed out, stating that further study of these valuable relics would undoubtedly reveal much new knowledge of life, habits, and culture of the Indians who made them.

"It is believed that the Indians of Chaco Canon, which are as a tribe or class now extinct, may have living relatives in America today. For several years there have been studies to determine which of the several tribes now living are directly related to these extinct Pueblos in Chetro Kettle. The extinct tribe evidently spoke an entirely different language than that of any living tribes, and it is probable that their customs and habits were different."

"It is because of this that the discovery becomes doubly valuable, for through study of the relics, descendants of the extinct tribe may be identified."

Until the recent discovery, little has been found which would indicate much of the life of these Indians, he stated, pointing out that no records were left, except in the form of dwellings, to reveal much of their habits of living.

"Excavations will be continued in these ruins," Dr. Harrington concluded, "with the hope that still further discoveries may be made. It is here materializing the Chaco Canon ruins, which are now the outstanding ones in the southwest, will be known as one of the most productive sources of Indian history in the United States."

THE AUTOMOBILE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR INCREASE IN ACCIDENTS

In spite of the fact that 31,000 people were killed last year by automobiles, the general accident situation affords grounds for optimism.

Accidents among children of school age have increased less than one-half of one per cent in the last seven years. Less than 100 passengers were killed while traveling on all the American railroads in 1930. Hundreds of our large industrial concerns have made remarkable records in reducing their accident rates—both in frequency and severity. A multitude of records. Had it not been for the tragic increase of deaths and injuries due to the automobile, the national accident rate would now be 30 per cent lower than it was 17 years ago.

The crux of the entire matter is that we have made good progress in preventing all kinds of accidents except those for which motor cars are responsible. Safety work and instruction in schools and industries, fostered and encouraged by security insurance companies, has been the means of saving thousands of lives in the last decade. This work is being carried on with increasing intensity and great progress will be recorded in the future.

The automobile accident record will not be reduced until we take definite means to keep the roads, the irresponsible, and both the monetary and physically incompetent from the public highways, where their presence

Mr. John E. Wright then submitted two proposed ordinances for the furnishing of electric current to the inhabitants and to the Village of Carrizozo. Said proposal of the New Mexico Light & Power Company was discussed and considered, whereupon Trustee Albert Ziegler offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

REVIEW—THE GREATNESS OF THE GOD-FEARING

GOLDEN TEXT—The fear of Jehovah is the beginning of wisdom; a good understanding have all they that do his commandments: his praise endureth forever.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What Makes People Great.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Makes People Great.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes Men and Women Great?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—An Estimate of the Characters Studied During the Quarter.

Lesson for July 6.
When called to go out from his own country and kindred, Abraham believed God and obeyed his command. True faith is proved by unquestioned obedience.

Lesson for July 13.
Jacob, a crafty schemer, through discipline at God's hands, became Israel, a prince with God. Before he could enter the Promised Land a change must take place. Self-will must be broken before there can be confidence in God.

Lesson for July 20.
Moses, educated first at his mother's knee and then at Pharaoh's court, was forced to flee from Egypt because of a premature effort to deliver the enslaved people. Forty years of training in the wilderness was necessary before he was ready to hear God's call.

Lesson for July 27.
In the time of national emergency, there being no man to judge Israel, Deborah was called to take this place. God bestows his grace upon whomsoever he will, regardless of sex.

Lesson for August 3.
Ruth chose to cast her lot with God's people. This choice brought her not only salvation but earthly blessings. Ruth's relationship to Naomi shows the vital fellowship centered in the God of Israel. National prejudices, hatred, and strife disappear on the part of those who are united in Jesus Christ.

Lesson for August 10.
Hannah asked God to give her a son, promising to dedicate him to God's service. God heard her prayer and she named her son Samuel, which means "asked of God." Samuel in his tender years was given to God, and he rendered a distinguished service for many years.

Lesson for August 17.
Saul was a man of fine gifts and had a great opportunity, but made a dismal failure because his heart was not right toward God. He had more concern for his own honor and welfare than for the glory of God. God is more concerned with having his commands obeyed than he is with the offering of sacrifices.

Lesson for August 24.
Friendship between David and Jonathan has been immortalized. This friendship was unique in that it took place between two men of rival interests. Jonathan was the natural heir to the throne, but David was God's choice. Jonathan knew this and magnanimously waived his rights.

Lesson for August 31.
Amos, a humble herdsman, was called from his life as God's prophet to stand before the king. He was not a prophet by succession nor was he trained in the schools. God selects his servants from even the humblest walks of life.

Lesson for September 7.
Josiah, the young king, was loyal to God. Two wicked kings had preceded him, during whose reigns God's law was lost. God put it into his heart to inaugurate a reformation, and in the process of restoring the temple, the law was found. When it was read before him, the king rent his clothes, and proceeded to institute his reforms on the basis of God's word.

Lesson for September 14.
Jeremiah, having heard God's call in his early years, zealously carried on his ministry. He called upon individuals to face their responsibility before God, assuring them that they would not be judged on the basis of racial heritage. Every man shall give an account of himself to God.

Lesson for September 21.
Jonah, a Jew, was called to preach repentance to a Gentile city. He sought to escape his responsibility by fleeing to Tarshish. God prepared a fish to swallow him. This was the means of his chastisement and return to his own land. After chastisement he was recommissioned. At his preaching the city repented, putting on their sackcloth and ashes. God is not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance.

Can I Learn to Fly?

by William R. Nelson

How to Enroll

"CAN I learn to fly?"
To answer that question I decided to take a course in piloting an airplane. That decision led me to some unusual experiences. And it prickled several bubbles regarding flying machines, flyers, and flying itself. Uncle Sam's Department of Commerce is interested in commercial aviation, I learned first, "that department's aviation section 'lays down the law' governing commercial flying, flyers, airplanes and flying schools. It says who can and who cannot fly. How, when, and where they may do so. In what types of planes. And how and what students must be taught.

To enroll for a pilot's course at a school approved by the Department of Commerce, one must first pass a rigid physical examination given by a physician designated by the department. Two examinations are offered. That for the student who plans to make flying his or her business, being more complete, costs $15. The other, for the private flyer, costs $10. The fees are standard.

The examinations, too, are standard and are similar to insurance examinations plus unusual tests of the sense of balance, ability to judge distance and for color-blindness.

Flying courses are of three standard lengths, each training the student for a particular pilot's license. Costs vary, of course, but do not exceed these: Private pilot's license, $500; limited commercial pilot's license, $1,300; transport pilot's license $3,500.

These prices include all costs except board and room. The student is insured against personal injury and death and against liability for damage to the plane or other property.

The course for the private pilot's license generally calls for twenty hours of flying—ten of instruction and ten of solo or flight alone. The limited commercial license requires fifty hours in the air. And the transport license stipulates two hundred hours of flying time.

Department of Commerce rules governing approved schools require students and instructors to wear parachutes, but no jumps in them are stipulated.

The license tests include both flying and written examinations, the written portion covering studies taught to ground school classes. Such courses can be taken ahead of the flying lessons or concurrently with them.

First Instructions

LEARNING to fly starts with advice about the correct mental and physical attitude the student should assume.

"Be yourself," cautioned my instructor. "Be natural, and, above all else, be relaxed. We instructors will excuse everything else you do if you will remember to be light on the controls."

I was loaned a helmet that had speaking tubes connected to it. Next a parachute was explained and put on. "The rule with the 'chute is: jump, count five, then pull this handle," my instructor explained.

The handle protrudes from a pocket that opens vertically, just over the heart. One quick jerk on it releases the "pilot" or small, umbrella-like "chute" which pulls the big "chute" out of the pack.

My instructor next drew a map of the airport and its surrounding landmarks, explaining he would show them to me from above. "This is 'home' and it is important that you recognize it readily from the air," he explained.

Next I was shown how to climb into the rear seat of the two-seater, dual-controlled, plane. Seated, with my parachute pack as a cushion, the seat strap clamped tightly across my lap, the instruments and controls were pointed out, named, and their uses explained.

"The control 'stick'—a rubber handled vertical lever that stands between the knees—is moved backward to make the plane climb, pushed forward to go down, inclined to the right to turn right and to the left to turn left," he said.

The rudder, also used in turning, is operated with the feet. To turn right, push the right foot; to turn left, push the left foot.

I was cautioned to familiarize myself with the altimeter which tells the altitude, the air-speed indicator, the oil pressure gauge, and the tachometer which tells the revolutions per minute the motor is turning; and to learn to read them at a glance.

My instructor climbed into the seat ahead of me, connected the speaking tube to my helmet, opened the throttle to "rev up" the motor to check its functioning, ordered the blocks taken from in front of the wheels and we were off.

Restless CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine. That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there's need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A coated lozenge calls for just a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure, palatable preparation is usually all that's needed.

TAPPING THE HOUSE BUDGET BOX

By ETTA WEBB

(By D. J. Walsh.)

HELLEN REID stared into the box, surprise and dismay delineated on her charming young blond countenance. Yesterday the little compartment labeled "Incidentals" had contained money. This morning it was empty. And the man was waiting for his pay for the cute bridge lamp she had ordered sent home from Kent's. Joe had simply rifled every cent out of "Incidentals." No, she could not say rifled, for when they agreed to run their finances according to the budget system they had placed no restrictions on each other. Economy was their watchword. Helen felt she had practiced economy faithfully. But she just had to have that bridge lamp. It was a bargain at $2.50.

Just one thing to do under the circumstances, and with a sigh she did it. She took $2.50 out of the house payment till. That was the only till that still was left untouched. She could replace the money later. With a smile that bewitched the errand man from Kent's into believing that this pretty young housekeeper was untroubled by care, she paid for her lamp.

Connected up with the floor socket nearest the library table, the lamp was warranted to throw just the right light on the pages of Joe's book as he sat hunched up in his favorite chair reading. Other times it would serve to illuminate the cunning new bridge table which had been another of her recent purchases. Julie and May and Peggy were coming in for a game that afternoon and she would for once have her lighting just right. That was another thing; she'd have to get some candy; you can't play bridge all afternoon without something to chew on. That meant another 60 cents. Helen took 60 cents out of the fuel till. In place of the money used she wrote a couple of I. O. U.'s. All the tills contained I. O. U.'s. And pay day was not yet. The budget box seemed to be in a muddle.

Helen put on her hat and coat and went out to do a bit of marketing. As the food till was practically empty and the contents of her purse low, she took a bill for the meat and vegetables. She paid for the candy, selecting it with a view to what the girls liked—chocolates for Peg, mints for Julie, Jordan almonds for May. On the way home she ran in to see Aunt Alice for a moment.

"Well, how's the budget behaving?" asked her aunt.

Helen colored. "Rather unruly sometimes, I'm afraid," she confessed.

"You'll need a firm hand and a steady head," Aunt Alice, stout, gray and calm, looked at the girl while her capable hands continued to keep her crochet hook flying. "I never tried the budget system myself. I just take whatever your uncle Ed sees fit to hand out to me when Saturday night comes. And I make it do. You've had a fine business education, Helen, and two years of practical experience in an office. Figures shouldn't bother you any. Or Joe, either. While we're talking of money, I wonder if you want to give something toward Mr. and Mrs. Warren's anniversary present. They're going to celebrate their golden wedding. The friends are going to put together and get them a radio set."

"How much shall I give, Aunt Alice?"

"That's just as you feel. Most everybody gives a dollar at least. But less will do."

Helen opened her purse. She had known the old couple all her life. She did not want to seem stingy. Her purse contained just two one-dollar bills. She took them both out and laid them on the table. "One is from Joe and one from me," she said, smiling.

She returned home very thoughtful. When pay day came and they again replenished the budget box, she would put her foot down hard on such casual expenditures as she had been making. And she'd see that Joe did likewise.

By the way, what had Joe wanted extra money for this morning? He had already taken out a sum sufficient to cover the expense of downtown lunches and a haircut. Her brows knotted as she pondered this question.

The little cankering doubt stayed with Helen all afternoon. She played bridge badly. And afterward, when the girls had gone home and she was cooking dinner, she scorched the meat. Her mind was on that budget box every minute. Where did the money go? Joe earned a comfortable salary; they were keeping up the payments on their home and insurance, but still something was wrong. The money apportioned to the tills of the box vanished like dew before the sun. By the time all those I. O. U.'s were paid up the pay day check was going to shrink like everything.

Joe was flummoxed at dinner. The scorched steak did not taste so awfully good. But the pie was delicious. Afterward, when he sat down in his comfy chair and took up his book, Helen snapped on the new bridge lamp.

"How's that, dear?"

"Fine." He looked up at it and her.

"A new lamp, eh? Where did that come from? A present from somebody?"

"No, I got it at Kent's. A bargain. Only $2.50."

"Just the other day you bought a bridge table. The luxury till in our budget box must be empty. By the way, bring that budget box here. I want to see it."

Helen brought the box. She set it down on the arm of Joe's chair. She stood looking on while he examined the various tills of the rather clumsily arranged, homemade affair.

"Somebody's been spending a lot of money, seems to me," he said, studying the tiny slips of paper which represented promissory notes made to the budget box.

Helen flushed. The thing was getting on her nerves.

"I'm always careful to put in my I. O. U.'s. You aren't," she said.

"Last night there was $3.23 in incidentals. This morning it was gone. And nothing to show for it."

"I—I needed a little extra." Joe looked confused.

"What for?" Helen's demand was sharp and swift. Joe's reply matched it. "Say! What's the matter with you? Don't you think I can be trusted with money I earn?" Blue eyes challenged gray ones.

Suddenly Helen felt limp. Nothing like this had ever happened between them before. It wasn't, going to now. She grabbed up the budget box and planted herself in its place on the arm of Joe's chair.

"Dear! You're mad. I don't blame you. That was a nasty question for me to put to you. I'm sorry. Will that make it all right?"

Joe's face cleared. He put his arm around her.

"I don't mind telling you what I did with that money—"

Helen put her hand over his mouth.

"You shan't. I don't want to know. We'll blame the budget box."

"The darn thing is getting to be a nuisance," Joe admitted.

The cloud had dissolved in the blue ether.

Next morning Helen took the budget box out to the kitchen table and sat down to put it in the strictest order. The postman had brought her a letter which contained a small check from her far-distant brother. Until she saw the check she had forgotten that today was her twenty-second birthday. That check would pay up all her I. O. U.'s to the budget box. She wanted it dreadfully for something else, but the budget box must be looked after.

She was busily figuring when there came a knock at the door. Helen sprang up and opened the door. A forlorn man stood there. He made the usual request: a bite to eat? "Or a little change, lady?" Helen was so sorry for him that she turned away without hooking the screen door and ran to the ice box. When she came back with a hunk of cake the man was gone. Likewise the budget box.

She stared at the empty table in dismay. Her check was there and Bob's letter. Penell and pad where she had been figuring. Nothing else. Her first thought was to run out and try to overtake the man. Her next was one of distinct relief. There wasn't much more money in the budget box than she would have given him out of compassion anyway. She had her check safe. And today was pay day.

She had made the remnant of beef-steak into a stew, disguising the slightly scorched taste with tomato and onion, when Joe came home to dinner. He sild in, trying to hide something behind him. Her birthday present. Flowers? Candy? Helen in the kitchen heard the rustling of paper. When she came in bearing the dish of stew she found her gift upon the table waiting for her. A box, not large but substantial, with lock and key. A budget box. Just for an instant she felt queer. Then she set down the stew and put her arms about Joe's neck.

"You adorable boy! Nothing was ever more opportune. The old budget box walked away this morning. With a man. Such a forlorn old fellow!"

"How much did he get?" Joe grinned.

"Ninety-seven cents."

They both laughed.

"We'll run this different, eh?" Joe said. "It cost $3.23 to begin with. But I can make that up. Boss told me there'd be an extra five in my pay envelope every week after this. How do you like your birthday present, darling?"

"I love it!" Helen's eyes were misty. She bent down and touched her fresh lips to the new budget box.

Front-Yard Planting

The front entrance of the average home should never be entirely blotted out by trees and shrubs. All front-yard plantings should be subordinate to the house entrance, lending support to the structure and stressing the importance of the final objective for which streets were created.

If every one would give more thought to at least some planting and consistent maintenance of their front yards, the effect on the community would more than repay them for their efforts. One method of improving a community as a desirable and attractive place in which to live, is for each individual concerned to devote time and interest to the proposition and perhaps do a little work in the yard at home. This will bring more real results than all the propaganda ever sponsored by luncheon clubs or other restricted organizations.—Exchange.

Debt That World Owes to English Naturalist

The first man to dream of treating the sea as a gigantic food farm was the famous English naturalist Frank Buckland, who was born in 1829 and died in 1890. During the last 20 years of his life he never tired of impressing upon his countrymen the importance of the fisheries and the need for wider knowledge of the habits of fish. He was the first to look ahead and conceive the idea of fish culture.

Though it is usually caught in rivers, the salmon is really a sea fish. It ascends the rivers to spawn, and the young salmon spends two years of its life in fresh water before going down to the sea. Buckland found that nature's methods in the breeding of salmon were extraordinarily wasteful, not more than perhaps one egg in 10,000 ever producing a fish that grew to maturity. By introducing a scientific system he was able to bring about a wonderful increase in many of our great fisheries, and it is largely due to his early work that the salmon has been introduced successfully into such distant countries as New Zealand—London Tit-Bits.

CHEMISTS DEVELOP METHOD TO GET 100% GALLONS OF GASOLINE FROM 100 GALLONS OF CRUDE OIL

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 9.—The Standard Oil Company has found a way to get 100% gallons of gasoline out of 100 gallons petroleum. The process converts 100 per cent of oil into more than 100 per cent of gasoline.

This development in the recently announced high pressure hydrogenation process of the Standard Oil Co., of New Jersey was reported to the American Chemical society meeting here today.

Discovery by two Western Reserve university scientists of an electrical method of unlocking the world's vast stores of heavy oil, a metal so rare it has qualified in the jewel class, also was reported.

R. T. Haslam and R. P. Russell, of New York, explained five recent developments of hydrogenation, the process invented by Friedrich Bergius, of Germany, whereby crude oil is squeezed in a highly heated atmosphere of hydrogen at about 3,000 pounds a square inch. Some of the hydrogen combines with carbon in the oil to produce more hydrocarbons—and so make gasoline.

When more than 100 per cent gasoline is obtained, the addition of the hydrogen accounts for the extra.

It is not proposed to use the process at present and the report said the time may never come when it is economical to convert oil wholly into gasoline. But the thing has been done and stands in the background ready to use if necessary to make the world petroleum supply last longer.

The great value now is to make high quality products from petroleum regardless of its quality as it comes from the ground.

NEW MEXICO EXHIBIT SMASHING SUCCESS AT CALIFORNIA FAIR

Santa Fe, N. M., Sept. 4.—Advisers from California State Fair state that the New Mexico Exhibit has made the front page of the Sacramento newspapers four times, since the opening of the Fair on August 30. Clippings on the papers show the exhibit to be one of the largest drawing cards at the exposition with 321,000 people ready as visitors to the New Mexico show.

The exhibit designed and operated by the Highway Service Bureau is featuring an Indian display as the lead point of this showing at the request of the California Fair officials. The curios were gathered from both business houses and private collections, the largest single donation coming from Julius Gans of Santa Fe who lent a fifteen hundred dollar collection to the exhibit.

Requests for the New Mexico exhibit have been received by the Service bureau from all parts of the country, the most recent being to show in Boston and Oklahoma City. The next scheduled showing is at the Tri-State Fair in Amarillo, Texas which will immediately follow the California show.

Billy the Kid

The motion picture of the life and activities of Billy the Kid will be shown at the Crystal Theatre, some time during November.

Only two towns in this section will have the showing of this All-Talking production, and arrangements will be made for day and night shows during the three days that the picture will be here, in order to take care of the many hundreds of people that are expected to attend from outside territory.

The picture is in the Special class and produced on an elaborate scale, with King Vidor, the man who has made more big pictures than any other director.

The largest town ever reconstructed for a picture, was built for this picture. The town of Lincoln, as it was in the days of Billy the Kid, was reconstructed, and in detail.
