Auto Licenses Ready

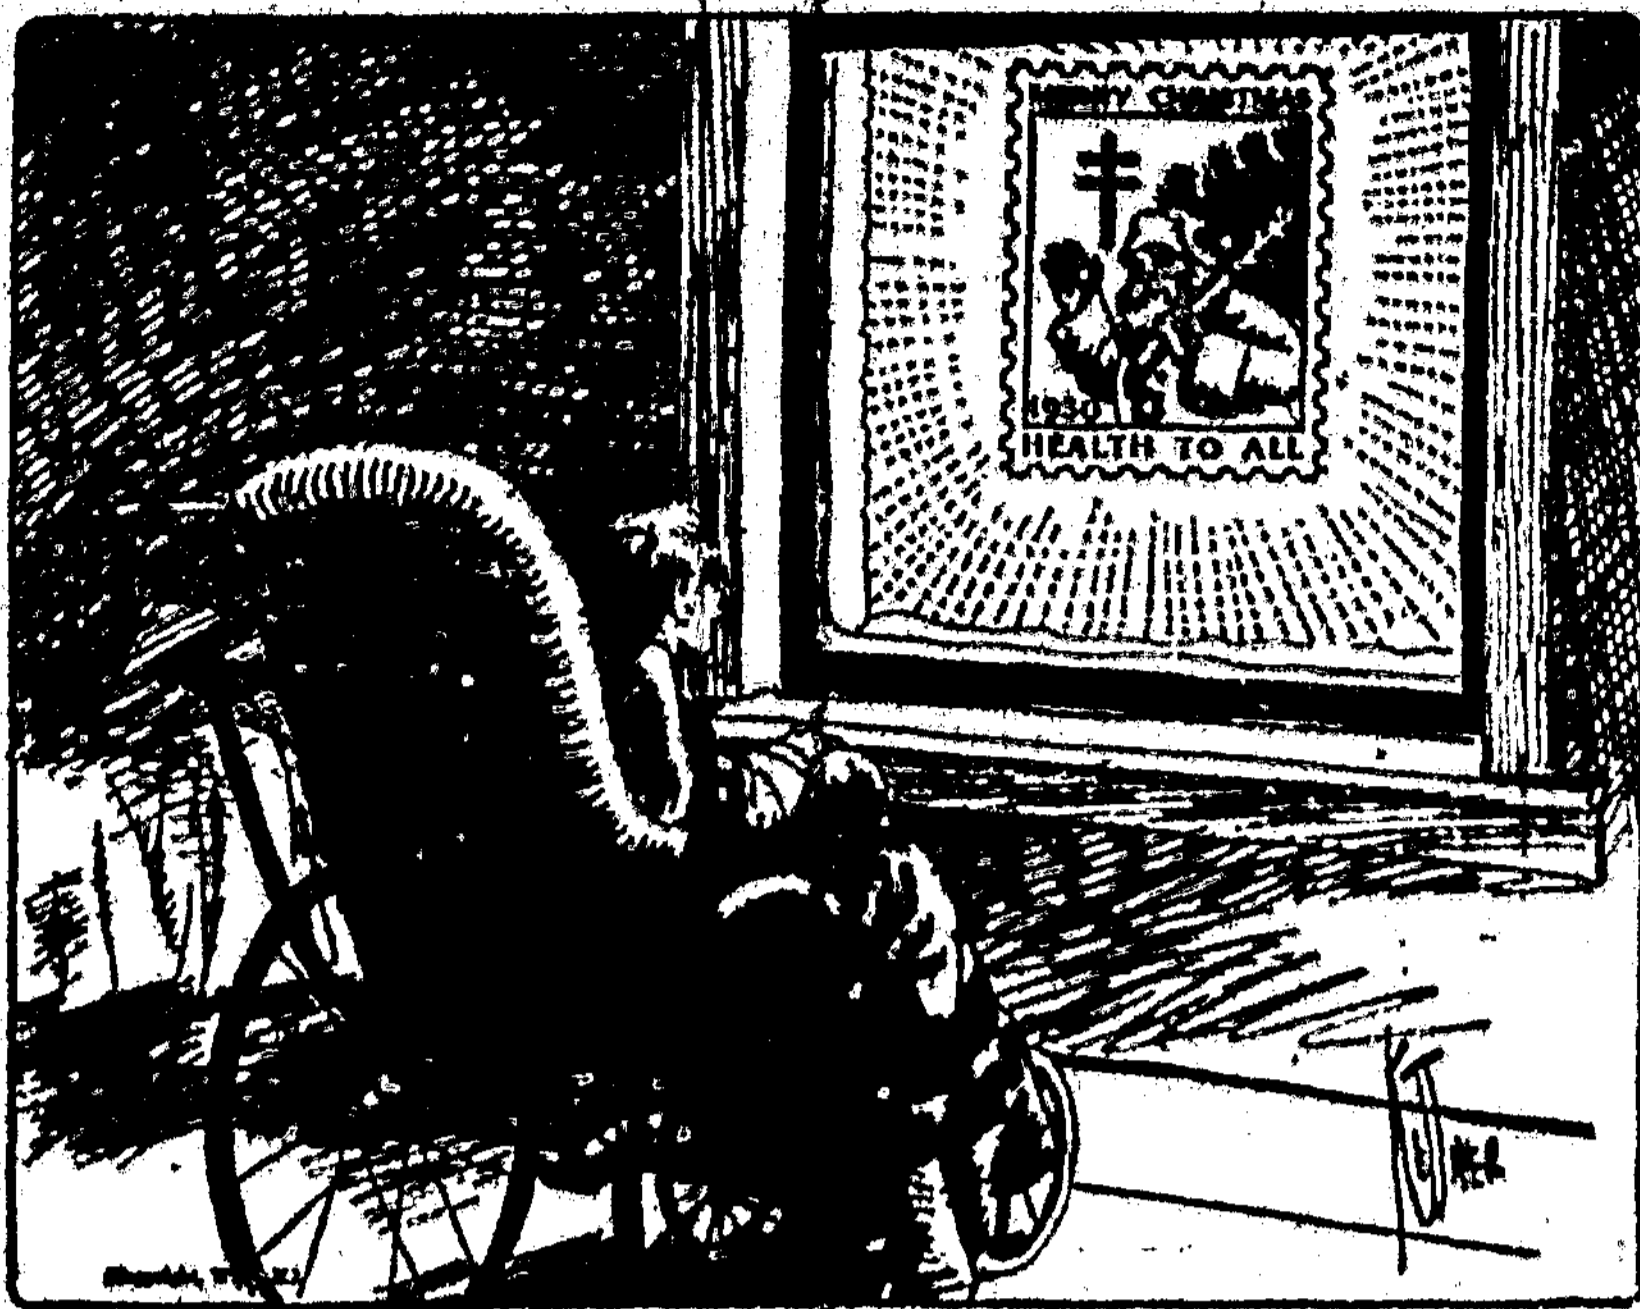

The Motor Vehicle Department announces that automobile owners may now get their 1931 license at the county seats throughout the state. Applications for licenses may also be presented to the department at Santa Fe, either in person or by mail. There are about 80,000 motor vehicle owners to be served during the month of December and we hope that every such owner will apply for a license early. A delay until the last week will overwhelm the organization. It is proposed that every effort will be made to issue licenses to all who apply during the month of December.

December 31st, is the final date, after which a penalty of 25 per cent will be collected and an additional penalty of $5.00 a day is required by law for using a motor vehicle on the highways without a 1931 license. Furthermore, after December 31, local agents will be withdrawn, or if they are continued, a notary fee of 25 cents will be imposed in connection with all licenses issued to provide for the compensation of local agents.

Sunshine

Trouble at the Light Plant

Not only was the snow about 18 inches deep over the pipe line of the power plant this week, but the line sprung a leak and on account of the depth of the snow which made the trouble-hunters' work all the more difficult, it took John E. Wright and his men two days and one night of w-o-r-k before the leak was discovered and repaired.

They shoveled off the snow all the distance up to the mountain, until they came to where the line went over the top of same, and found the trouble just where it had made the bend in going over the top.

After that, the work of repairing was done and service resumed. There was no lack of service at night, but with a small supply of water obtained through the day was only sufficient to run the boilers over night, and through the day, the power had to be cut off in order to obtain another water supply, but it is all right now.

Mr. Wright and his men worked for the period of the trouble as mentioned above with but a small amount of sleep, and those who were in warm beds at night were unaware of the fact that the men were out in the snow and rain, soaking wet—but with some people, charity has no place, and knockers were on the job, as usual. There is nothing but loss connected with a misfortune like this, and the company is more the loser than the public.

Mrs. S. E. Barber

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Daniels, Mrs. L. J. Daniels, sister Mae and brother Daniel, were down from White Oaks Monday, doing some shopping and returning home in the afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Daniels are caring for the interests of Mrs. Barber and L. J. is employed in the mines at White Oaks.

Recount Fails to Disclose But Few Errors

The recount of the vote between Salcido, Republican and Fritz, Democrat, candidates for County Commissioner from the First District, conducted yesterday before Judge Frenger and County Clerk S. E. Greisen, resulted in but a small change from the official count by the Board of County Commissioners.

There were but few errors which cost Salcido 3 votes in Picacho, 2 in Hondo, and 1 in Carrizozo, making a total of 6 votes in all. As Salcido's majority was 16, in the official canvass, leaving Salcido the winner by 10.

The re-count was done in groups of three precincts at the same time and the quick work of the counting clerks in the different precincts, showed that aside from minor errors, which it is only human to make, they were as near accurate as election boards could be. Watchers were in evidence on both sides as the re-count went on, silence being only interrupted at times by orders from the court. After the result was announced, one leading Democrat was heard to remark: "Well, I am glad we got through early," which was about the only piece of consolation they had left.

Mrs. W. E. Renick

was an El Paso visitor this week, returning home Wednesday on No. 12.

Mr. and Mrs. Orion Bixler son Buster and sister, Miss Beulah Bixler of Los Angeles, who have been visiting with relatives in Tucumcari, stopped over here this week on their return trip to their home in Los Angeles. They left this morning after being guests of the Calvin Carl and Chas. E. Smith families for several days.

RADIO RUBE'S RAMBLINGS

F. J. Sager, Town Clerk, likes Floyd Gibbons and his rapid-fire talks over the General Electric hour at 7 p. m., put on the National network on Saturday evenings.

The Damrosch Orchestra gave a superb rendition of Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in C-sharp Minor," one of the favorite piano solos of his daughter, Miss Lorena, who now has a large class of pupils in Denver.

Radio Rube wishes to announce a display of new Majestic radios at the popular Rolland Drug Store. What is a nicer gift for Christmas, to all the family, than a Majestic, "Mighty Monarch of the Air"?

reports having heard this one over the radio last week—

In this country candidates for the Presidency quit running when elected, but in Mexico—they shoot 'em.

Tune in tonight on KNX, 5,000 watts, 1050 kilocycles, and hear the Perfection Doughnut Follies, and the Gillmore Blue - Green Gasoline Circus—"the best show on the air." These two are given in an easy-going manner, no apologies being required or given. They are followed by a nice, cheerful prize-fight broadcast from the Hollywood Legion Stadium. KNX, Paramount Pictures station, 1050 kilocycles.

Senor Sabino Vidaurri, who runs a grocery and general store on the east side, listens in on the Mexican music being given over WFAA, 800 kc., every Wednesday night by the Walker Chili Con Carne players.

"Nothing pleases me more than native music," says Sabino, "and I certainly enjoy the plaintive and expressive strains of 'La Paloma' and 'La Golondrina' given so beautifully by the Gebhart Mexican Players on Friday nights, over station San Antonio, W O A I, 50,000 watts, 1190 Kilocycles.

Amos 'n' Andy seem to be having a great amount of trouble with their new venture in the business world, namely the Lunch Room.

Their cook ate up all of the profits; when Andy inquired as what was made by the lunch room, he was told to ask the cook; Lightin', the waiter, cashed a check for $20, which proved worthless, taking all of the money left in the cash register, and left the lunch room broke; Andy and Crawford met in the early morning, stealing into the lunch room for a bite to eat, thus violating the rule made by the company that whoever eats must pay for it; Andy postponed his marriage to Madame Queen until the New Year, and to make bad matters all the worse for poor Andy, he is called up by the Madame's grandmother, who tells him what the Madame would like for Christmas.

Amos 'n' Andy may not please some, in fact they call them Low - Brow ham and eggs—but to the majority of the men, they're O K.

Radio station K O B at State College, is undergoing some extensive repairs. A new Hertzian antenna is being erected, 470 feet high, and has a two-wire voltage feed; the wire will be 306 feet long, so good reception is bound to be the result.

Iceland Sagas Credited to Gaelic Influences

The Icelandic sagas are the finest of their kind, possessing qualities which are singularly lacking in the native poetry. The explanation offered by the authorities on these matters is that the sagas of Iceland are only native in so far as they are produced by the settlers, otherwise that they are not Icelandic but the poetry of the western islands, of the Gaelic races who made the emigrant stream into the country...

EDITORIAL COLUMN

Young Lincoln County Artist and Sculptor

Everett Sloan, formerly of Corona, has developed into an artist and sculptor of rare ability and merit, according to information reaching this office. A certain Carrizozo man recently visited the Sloan family, now residing at Albuquerque and was most agreeably surprised to find that the young artist, who is just emerging into his twenties, has a number of remarkable paintings, many of which, have found places in the homes of the east and north.

"There is a strength of character in his works, continued our informant, seldom displayed by our western artists." Not only is this young man gifted in this line of art, but he is also proficient in work as an amateur sculptor that is attracting much attention.

Many will readily recall the sad death of Alphonso Sedillo, the boy who froze to death in the bleak regions near Rowe, N. M., on November, 1929, and the fund which was raised to erect a monument suitable to the devotion of his pet dog, which remained with his little master for seven long days, without food or water and fought off wild beasts until help came and restored the body to the boy's mother and saved the life of the little brown dog, which was so weak that it could do nothing but stay by its master and defend the remains.

Everett Sloan was the young sculptor, who carved the image of the little dog on the monument for which, a substantial subscription list was filled for that expressed purpose and the work, according to those who have seen it, is a rare work of art.

We are proud to learn of the achievements of our former Lincoln County boy and he has our best wishes for a great future which is open to him. Everett is a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sloan and a nephew of Brack Sloan of Carrizozo.

Everett Russell

was born near San Angelo, Texas, April 20, 1890, and departed this life Dec. 2, 1930. He was married to Miss Josephine Thompson in 1922. Mr. Russell joined the Methodist Church in Texas while he was a young man. He was well and favorably known in Lincoln County, having made this his home for many years. Funeral services were conducted last Friday by the Rev. Lawson and interment made in the local cemetery.

His wife and a brother of Nara Vies, N. M., wish to thank the people of this community for their many kindnesses and sympathies bestowed on them upon the loss of their beloved husband and brother.

BIGGER AND BETTER
THE NEW CHEVROLET SIX

Strikingly beautiful, fleet and smart - a masterpiece of Fisher styling

In the entire field of modern coachcraft no symbol has come to mean more to the buyer of a motor car than Body by Fisher. And never has Fisher's superiority been more strikingly exemplified than in the beautiful new bodies of the Bigger and Better Chevrolet Six!

Working with the added advantage of a lengthened wheelbase, Fisher designers have been able to achieve in the new Chevrolet a degree of smartness, comfort and impressiveness hitherto considered exclusive to cars far higher in price.

Inside and out, scores of refinements stamp this car as a masterpiece of modern coachwork. Radiator, headlamps and tie-bar are artistically grouped to create an unusually attractive ensemble. Mouldings sweep back in a graceful, unbroken line to blend with the smart new body contours. And new colors lend a new individuality. Interiors, too, are exceptional in every way. The new mohair and broadcloth upholstery is tailored with exceptional smartness. Seats are wider and deeper and more luxuriously cushioned. A deeper windshield and wider windows give better vision for both driver and passengers. And beautiful new hardware, of modern design, lends a final note of charm.

Many mechanical improvements have also been provided in the chassis of this Bigger and Better Six. Among these are a stronger frame; easier steering; a more durable clutch; a smoother transmission; and engine refinements which make the new Chevrolet a car you will be happy to drive—as well as proud to own.

The Bigger and Better Chevrolet Six is now on display in our showrooms. See it. Drive it! Learn for yourself that it is the Great American Value!

What is Christmas Without a Tree?

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHAT is Christmas without a Christmas tree? Not much of a day, every one will agree, for the absence of this emblem of Christmas would mean that something very essential to our Yuletide celebration would be lacking. Yet how many of us give any thought to this very necessary part of our Christmas celebration—how many are used every year, where they come from, who gets them for us, are there different varieties of evergreens, is the cutting of Christmas trees a factor in the depletion of our forests, against which we are constantly being warned, and a dozen other interesting questions which readily come to mind.

Some of these questions can be answered briefly, but others require more extended explanation. As for the number required to fill our Christmas needs, it is in the neighborhood of six million trees annually. The trees which find greatest favor in the East come from Nova Scotia. One-fourth to one-half of the trees used in the North and East come from New England and New York while the Middle West draws small quantities from Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan. Canada, however, is the largest contributor of Christmas trees and supplies well over half the total quantity used.

In common with other Christmas preparations the harvesting of Christmas trees begins long before shoppers have begun their worrying about gifts. Most of the trees sold in the larger cities are cut in the forest depths and hauled forty or fifty miles to the nearest railroad. Operations must be completed before snowdrifts block the forest trails and render them impassable. Hundreds of men labor for almost a month before Christmas eve unloading, sorting and distributing trees to the millions who want them. New York alone requires 400 to 500 carloads of trees annually; Chicago, 200 to 250 carloads and Philadelphia about the same amount. Other large centers like Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Detroit require from 100 to 200 carloads each. A car contains about 1,500 trees.

The annual bill for Christmas trees and other greens such as holly and mistletoe is a tremendous one. Conservatively estimated, at least ten million dollars is spent for the family Christmas tree with its attendant holly wreaths and sprays of mistletoe.

As far as the question of the cut of Christmas trees depleting our forests, let a forestry expert answer, as was done in a recent issue of the Nature Magazine by Albert A. Hansen, thus: "A question that is brought up every Christmas season by the conservative conservationists is the restriction of the use of trees in the interest of forest conservation. It is true that in order to meet the annual demand somewhere in the neighborhood of six million trees are needed, but when the facts are looked at in proper perspective no one need hesitate in celebrating the Christmas season by a custom that has been handed down from generation to generation since the days when our pagan ancestors gathered around the blazing Yule log.

"In the first place, most of our Christmas trees are the result of thinning heavy stands of evergreens that are actually improved by this process. Nature, you know, is so lavish that there are practically always more trees present than can possibly mature.

"Although wise foresters have no sympathy with the joy-killing and ill-informed conservationists who advocate a treeless Christmas, they are heartily in accord with the movement to regulate the trade to prevent the annual waste represented by the wholesale destruction of trees to bolster up the prices on overstocked markets, a waste that has been estimated during some seasons to reach the appalling total of 25 per cent of the entire supply. There should be some way of ascertaining market demands or else of disposing of the surplus to needy families that can ill afford to buy their own trees.

"There must be many families without the cheer of Christmas evergreens, and truly, what is Christmas without the decorated tree in the corner aglow with the lights and gleaming with be-

1. Ex-President and Mrs. Coolidge beside the great living Christmas tree around which the community celebration in the National Capital centers on Christmas eve.

2. Workers tying up bundles of Christmas trees which have been cut down in the Maine forests to prepare for the coming Christmas season.

3. Evan "Old Dobbin" has his Christmas treat Mrs. M. R. Blumenberg, vice president of the Animal Rescue League in Washington, is shown with two "guests" at the annual Christmas party and "dinner" given by the league.

ribboned presents? It is one of the most beautiful symbols of Christmas and every home should have one. Instead of 6,000,000 let us have 30,000,000 Christmas trees—one for every family. Let the season that celebrates the birth of Him who loved little children bring to each house where children dwell the decorated tree that means so much in their lives.

As for the different kinds of evergreens used for Christmas trees, there are many which can be obtained for this purpose, but there are several which are definite favorites for this important annual role. The "aristocrats" are the firs, mainly because of their fine pyramidal shape, beautiful deep green color and soft fragrant needles which do not shed easily after the tree begins to dry.

These trees can usually be recognized by the fact that the flattened leaves are arranged in two rows on the horizontal branches, due to the twisting of the leaf base. Each needle is a shiny dark green above and except for the prominent midrib is silvery white underneath, due to the multitude of breathing pores on the under surfaces.

The species of firs available vary with the locality, but the most popular kind offered in the East is the balsam fir, the bark of which yields the well known Canada balsam used in medicines and perfumes. In the southern states the Fraser fir or the balsam, very similar to the northern balsam fir, is common on the market, while on the Pacific coast the favorite is the handsome white or concolor fir, a species that frequently graces eastern lawns as an ornamental.

Competing with the firs for Christmas popularity in the East are the spruces with their scattered four-sided needles that seem to point in all directions. Spruces are frequently confused with pines, but they are easily distinguished by the fact that pine leaves always occur in groups of from two to five, while spruce leaves grow singly.

On the big city markets of the eastern seaboard the black and red spruces predominate, but these two species to a large extent give way to the less desirable Norway spruce in the Middle West. The black spruce, the wood of which is used in violin making and the twigs, formerly, in spruce beer, has short, thick, pale, bluish-green leaves, while the foliage of the red spruce is slender and of a dark-green or yellowish-green cast.

The firs and spruces comprise the best grades of Christmas trees. The less expensive kinds are usually pines or hemlock. In the East the white pine with its needles in bundles of five, in the South the scrub pine with needles in pairs and in the West the well-known lodgepole pine are the principal species.

Much more used for Christmas trees, if for no other reason than that it is much more widely distributed and much less valuable as lumber, is the small, scrubby jack pine and its numerous related species.

As for the hemlock, it is one of the noblest of the evergreens. Most of the conifers stand on the edges and sides of forest lands, holding territory the furthest north, the highest up the mountains, the deepest into the swamps and bogs, and other marginal lands that the broad-leaved summer forests have no use for. But the hemlock consorts with the finest of the hardwoods; the highest type of northern forest in the world is the beech-maple-hemlock area of Michigan. In Europe, also, where the forest is mostly straight beech instead of beech-maple, the hemlock goes with the beech. The "Tannenbaum" of which German children sing at Christmas is a hemlock.

The German "Tannenbaum" is similar to the English word to "fir," for the bark of the hemlock is one of the best sources of tanning material, and indeed was for many years the thing for which the tree was chiefly valued. The wood of the hemlock, while fairly strong, is rather coarse and harsh, not comparing with pine or spruce; but in the evil days that are upon us now, with timber growing ever scarcer, hemlock is considered a rather valuable lumber tree.

The firs, spruces and pines from the New England forests and the Appalachians in the East, the northern waste lands in the central states and the mountainous regions of the Pacific hinterland supply the bulk of the Christmas demands, but there are a number of minor species of considerable importance that should not be overlooked. It is by no means uncommon to find arbutus, a familiar ornamental species, with flattened, scaly foliage, offering among the better class of trees, and the common red cedar or juniper, source of cedar chests, fence posts and matches, sold among the less expensive offerings.

Another evergreen which is often used for a Christmas tree is deserving of mention. Out in the Pacific Northwest the commonest forest tree is the Douglas fir or Douglas spruce. Botanically, the tree is a sort of orphan. It is not really a fir, though it resembles it in some respects. Neither is it a spruce, though it is called Douglas spruce about as often as it is called Douglas fir. Lumbermen sometimes sell it as "Douglas pine," though its kinship to the pines is much more remote than to the firs and spruces. Even its Latin name, "Pseudotsuga," fails to give it a home, for translated into English it means simply "false hemlock." And the tree is as far from being a hemlock as it is from being a pine. Even its Latin name is not good Latin, for "pseudo" is Greek and "tsuga" is Japanese—a weird combination indeed. But though the tree is hard to place botanically it is easy enough to tell it apart from its relatives. Its leaves place it intermediately between spruces and firs, for the needles are somewhat stiff and prickly, but not so much so as those of the spruce.

It is the cones of the Douglas fir, however, which really identify it. They are unique among cones; there is no confusing them with those of any other tree. They hang downward, as do those of the spruce, but from between each two scales, and projecting over the next scale below it, grows a peculiar three-pointed appendage.

There is an entirely different class of Christmas trees—live specimens purchased from nurseries to be planted in the open as living reminders of the season of good cheer. This is a new and delightful custom, caused by high prices, the rapid growth of the conservation attitude toward wild trees and an increasing desire for beautifying home surroundings. Although wild trees dug out of woods and fields may be used, they are more difficult to handle, less attractive and far more fragile of life than nursery-grown plants. The latter are usually supplied with a ball of earth around the roots on which an overcoat of burlap has been fitted. The burlap-covered ball of earth may be set into a tub or directly on the floor and the burlap hidden with colored crepe paper.

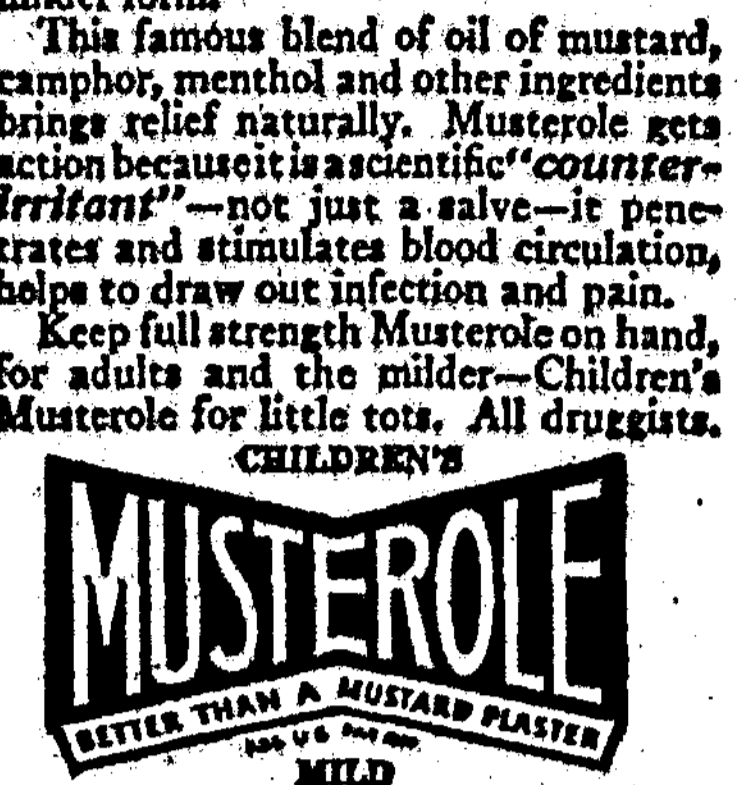

When the festivities are over, the tree may be maintained in a thriving condition by merely keeping the soil moist until the ground has thawed out sufficiently to permit the digging of a hole for its reception. There is no need even to remove the burlap which soon rots and is easily penetrated when root growth is resumed in the spring. The chance for successful transplanting are excellent and the little Christmas tree will soon grow to robust proportions, with its value constantly enhanced by the pleasant memories it inspires and by its ever-increasing beauty.

Can I Learn to Fly?
by William R. Nelson
Spiraling Down
SPIRALING down to earth is another airplane maneuver that looks easy but is found difficult by the embryo pilot. Spiraling is easy, but judging distances when cocked over on one side and slipping earthward, intent upon landing on or just over a given line, is another story.
"To make a spiral spot landing," my instructor explained, "climb to 2,000 feet—that is the altitude generally specified by the Department of Commerce examiner—and cut the motor directly over the spot on which you intend to land. Be headed into the wind.
"Put the nose down in a glide, then bank to whichever side you desire to turn, and hold the turn for one tight revolution. Extend the circumference of the next turn so it will end at the ground on or just over your spot line."
I did as directed but could not tell where we were half of the time. The peculiar "on my side" position and the worry of not judging distance correctly upset me, so my first spiral was hardly recognizable as such.
Being already in a turn and headed down, I kept worrying about the angle of glide. If it were not sufficient, I might stall the plane and slip into a tailspin. My nervousness made me overly cautious and I made the second turn too tight, leaving about 300 feet of altitude still to be lost when the second turn ended.
I roared back to 2,000 feet for another attempt. That time I discovered that by listening to the "sing" of the wind through the brace wires, I could judge the plane's speed fairly well. If the sound decreased I pushed forward on the stick slightly. If it increased I pulled back.
A half-hour of practice gave me the idea, my instructor said, and we called it a day. I was told to practice eight, spirals and spot landings each time I flew until that day of days when the Department of Commerce inspector would be out to give the license examinations.
That quiz included a written "check" of my knowledge of the air traffic rules and the air commerce regulations. There were 20 questions to answer, ten about rules and ten about regulations. The written "exam" was followed by the test flight. A failure in either division meant a 90-day wait before the examination could be taken again.
Passing the Exam.
TWELVE of us took the examination together. We answered such questions as "What navigation lights are required for night flying?" and "Name a number was given grounds for suspension of a pilot's license," and so on. Twenty questions in all. Then came the test flight.
"Take-off, fly around, glide in and land. Take-off, climb to 1,000 feet and do three gentle and three steep figure eights. After that climb to 2,000 feet and do a two-turn spiral glide landing on or within 500 feet of a line between a huge tree and an automobile parked on the field," the examiner ordered.
I was nervous the first time around and believed I was overshooting the line. Opening the throttle, I zoomed up and went around again. That time landing was over the line and easily within the 500-foot distance allotted to it.
The figure eights were easy but there still remained that spiral glide from 2,000 feet. I had practiced the maneuver many times since the last lesson but still was none too certain of my ability to end it "spot."
Directly over the line I cut the motor and coasted down for the glide. The first turn around the spiral was tight and easy. As I eased out of it for the second of loose turns I began to get back fever, fearing that I was misjudging the distance. More than once I wanted to open the throttle and climb up to the starting point. Why I didn't, I'll never know.
The plane rolled out of the spiral as I moved the stick and rudders and slid to the field, barely 50 feet over the line for the best landing of the day for me.
Back in the field office the examiner handed me a temporary license. I had passed both parts of the examination. The regular license is mailed directly from Washington, D. C. and arrives about 30 days after the student successfully passes the test.
Learning to fly was fun. Airplanes are safer than most laymen believe. And they are being made safer each year. I am no super man and I have learned to operate a plane. The experience has "sold" me on aviation.
Private pilot's licenses must be renewed yearly. To do so one has to fly ten hours and pass a physical examination.

Oil for Watches
The oil used in watches—or that which should be used—comes from a cavity in the jawbone of the porpoise or the blackfish. The best quality is rare. Cape Cod porpoises bring in most of it. To be tested, it is taken up late Vermont, where the mercury often goes far below zero. The best grade is that which remains practically unchanged at these low temperatures. A single drop of this oil is enough to lubricate a watch.

Holds That Apologies Are Due Phone Girls

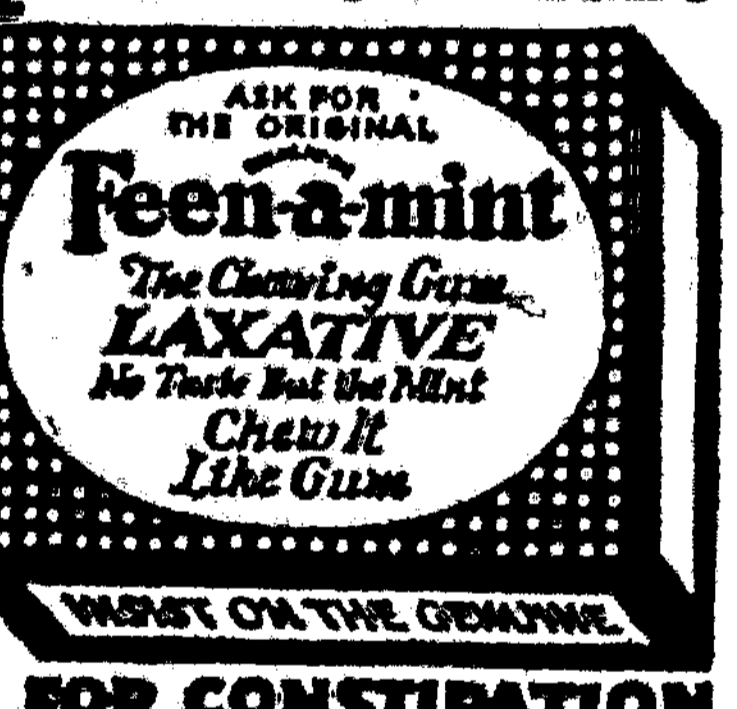

Don't we owe the telephone girls an apology? We used to denounce them for wrong numbers. But who doesn't give himself wrong numbers now when dialing a phone?
When we reflect how often memory slips, even between looking at the book and twirling the dial, how can we blame the girls for their errors at the switchboard in earlier days?

If all the telephone users for the last 50 years who condemned the girls were to pass in review, it would take 60 more years for them to apologize enough for their unjust crankiness. Let us hope they damn themselves now for the same mistakes.—Des Moines Tribune-Capital.
