by Arthur Brisbane Mr. Hughes, Chief Justice Henry Ford's New Plan No Bolshevism Needed A Real Stigma

Mr. Hughes is now chief justice and the people have in their service a man of great ability, profound knowledge of the law and highest integrity.

Henry Ford may spend $100,000,000 establishing schools that will enable students to "fit into life" when they come out at eighteen years of age.

Schools at present are better than they were 50 years ago before racketeering became a science.

Mr. Ford should modify his resolution to "devote the rest of his life to educational undertakings."

In one column you read about a "mob" of 1,200 lile men, fighting police in Cleveland, twenty in the mob injured, officers hurt.

In another column you find comfort, perhaps, in news from Washington that our national banks have resources of over twenty-nine billions of dollars.

Seven thousand four hundred and eight institutions have on deposit more than twenty-two billions.

A country so rich ought not to have so many men who are willing to work and die.

You are told that the mob of rioting unemployed men in Cleveland had been influenced by "Bolshevik propaganda."

It is very easy to say "Bolshevism." But when a man is out of work, worried and perhaps hungry, he needs no help from Lenin to make him dangerously dissatisfied.

Men adrift on a raft in midocean that had never heard of Lenin or Bolshevism have killed and eaten each other.

Five states of the South, highest in illiteracy, are conducting educational campaigns to reduce "the stigma."

Texas has only 1.1 percentage of illiterates, lowest in the nation. Nebraska came first until 1920, and is striving to regain the championship.

However, persuading or forcing hard-working people to study at night when they are tired out, and learn enough about their A B C's to remove the illiteracy stigma is not doing much.

To be able to read and write when you lack leisure to do either, and have no access to books worth while, is no help.

As well teach a man 5,000 miles from Egypt to read hieroglyphics as Egyptian monuments.

Hard, under-paid labor and lack of work are a "stigma" worse than illiteracy.

The world still loves lies. In a Los Angeles lawsuit about money collected for a newly invented religious "cult" you meet a mild-looking gentleman called "The Four Winds of the Wilderness."

"Concordia of stars led the priestesses to various locations, and there the angels did their dictating." Men and women gave tens of thousands of dollars in return for nonsense of this kind, which proves that the human race is largely foolish.

Ogden L. Mills, assistant secretary of the United States treasury, in a few words convinces you that this country has genuine prosperity if prosperity consists in getting more of life's good things than anybody else gets.

The Carrizozo-Socorro Highway Across the Malpais at Carrizozo

We are publishing, with the permission of the State Highway Department, a true picture of the Carrizozo-Socorro Highway as it now appears after completion and shows the enormous task of building the road over the lava beds, the perfect manner in which the same was mapped out and constructed under the supervision of the Highway Engineers, and the upheaval caused by the work in order to complete one of the most difficult pieces of engineering ever done in the southwest.

has been on the job from the beginning, follows with an article which will be of great interest, not only to people of this part of the country, but more especially to tourists who will be looking for a shorter, less dangerous and more scenic route to the coast. On December 7, 1929, Federal Aid, Project 126-A, which extends from one mile east of the Malpais, to the Rentfrow Flats, was accepted by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads and turned over to the State Highway Department for maintenance.

work is progressing nicely. Federal Aid Project 126-B is nearing completion, approximately one mile is yet to be graded. All bridges and drainage structures have been erected. The gravel surfacing of this project is to begin at an early date. Sam P. Fulton, District Engineer at Deming, N. M., is now grading the remaining 12 miles from the end of 126-B, to the present road to Socorro, near the Guy Hill ranch. When completed, this road will be fast, and a through highway from Carrizozo to a point on the Jornada del Muerto. At the present, traffic will be routed via San Antonio to Socorro.

Funeral of Edward Corn

The funeral of Eddie Corn, who died Monday morning at the Johnson Hospital, was held from the Baptist Church Tuesday afternoon, where a large gathering of friends of the family assembled to pay their last respects to the memory of the young man whom they had known so well and esteemed so highly.

Rev. Lawson conducted the services, paid a fitting tribute to the character and life of the deceased, after which the remains were taken to the White Oaks cemetery and there laid to rest, amid floral offerings which were many and beautiful.

Edward Corn, beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Corn, was born, reared, and attended the schools in Lincoln county. After leaving school, he was associated with his father on his ranch until a few years ago when he followed railroading as a fireman, first on the Southern Pacific and afterwards on the Santa Fe, where illness first befell him. He remained in the Santa Fe hospital for a long time, but finally recovered to the extent that he came home and again went on his father's ranch until a short while ago, when he was again taken ill, from which he failed to rally.

Eddie Corn was a model young man, who had hosts of friends and if he ever had an enemy, it was no fault of his, as he would go out of his way to be of some service to his fellow man and was always ready and willing to prove his friendship by acts of kindness. Out of the five children in the Corn family he was the only boy. He leaves his father, mother and four sisters, namely: Mesdames Chas. F. Gray of Carrizozo, Rolla Ward of White Oaks, Cooper Hightown of Ancho and Robert Kiel of Tucson, Arizona, all of whom were present at the funeral and to all of whom, the sympathy of our entire community is extended.

RADIO RUBE'S R-A-M-B-L-I-N-G-S

The latest in radio stations is found by government agents in New York, when the officers raided a supposed rum-running joint along the coast. On raiding the bungalow, they found not only evidences of rum-running, but captured a complete radio station apparatus, which had been used for signaling rum-running vessels on the high seas. They also captured a six-page code book, maps of the Atlantic coast, and arrested one Frank Krebs, the wireless operator. The code contained such phrases as, "How many cases did you get?" "Are your engines working O. K.?" and "Is the little boat loaded yet?" What will they do next?

Collier's Radio Hour, every Sunday evening is full of pep from beginning to end; the principal feature being the interviews of Uncle Henry and the Editor, and some good talks by different prominent individuals--and last but by no means least, comes "Professor" Lucifer C. To hear the "Professor" explain the 'merits' of his invention in broken German, and also to hear the 'smear' number played on trombone at the beginning and finish of the Professor's act, is a "scream."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

W. H. Taft, III, Quits as Chief Justice and Hughes Named to Succeed Him.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, returning to Washington from Asheville a very sick man, sent in his resignation as chief justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. It was at once accepted by President Hoover with expressions of deep regret and of sympathy for Mr. Taft's condition, and Charles Evans Hughes was appointed his successor.

Though the entire matter seemed sudden, it was learned that the President had been informed of Mr. Taft's intention several weeks before and that Mr. Hughes had conferred with Mr. Hoover several times before accepting the appointment.

Mr. Taft's physicians admitted that he was seriously ill, and though toward the close of the week his condition appeared to have improved, they held out little hope for his recovery. They said that for some years he had had very high blood pressure associated with general arteriosclerosis and myocarditis and also had a chronic cystitis. President and Mrs. Hoover called on him the day after his return from the South, and so did several of the Supreme court justices. There was a constant stream of other callers at the Taft residence but of course most of them merely left messages of greeting and cheer. Mr. Taft's retirement closed a public career unparalleled in this country. For nearly fifty years he served the people, in offices ranging from an assistant prosecuting attorney to President of the republic and head of its highest tribunal. He was the first civil governor general of the Philippine Islands and was secretary of war under President Roosevelt. He was appointed by President Wilson as chief justice in 1921. In accordance with a law passed at the last session of congress, he retires with his full salary of $20,500 a year.

Mr. Hughes presumably will take office when the Supreme court reconvenes on February 24. His appointment is the climax of a record in the public service almost as remarkable as that of his predecessor. He has held some of the highest offices within the reach of an American citizen, having fallen short only of the Presidency, for which he was the unsuccessful Republican candidate in 1910 against Woodrow Wilson. To make that campaign he resigned an associate justice of the Supreme court, to which position he had been appointed by President Roosevelt in 1910. About a year ago he was selected as a judge of the world court and spent last summer sitting at The Hague. From March 4, 1921, to March 4, 1923, he was secretary of state in the Harding and Coolidge cabinets, retiring voluntarily.

As a matter of propriety, Charles E. Hughes, Jr., will now resign as solicitor general of the United States, and it has been suggested that President Hoover may select as his successor Mr. Taft's son, Robert A. Taft, who is now district attorney at Cincinnati.

PASCUAL ORTIZ RUBIO was inaugurated president of Mexico Wednesday with simple ceremonies, and as he was leaving the national stadium an attempt was made to assassinate him, which was quite in accord with Mexican tradition. A young man standing behind a file of soldiers at the gate of honor emptied his revolver into the presidential car. Ortiz Rubio was shot through the cheek, the bullet lodging in the left jaw. His wife and niece and his military aide were slightly wounded, as was the chauffeur who nevertheless stopped on the accelerator and carried his passengers swiftly to a Red Cross hospital. A few hours later the surgeons announced that the president was out of danger.

The assassin was seized by the police and said he was Daniel Flores of San Luis Potosi state and was a follower of Jose Vasconcelos, defeated candidate for the presidency. He refused to say why he had tried to kill Ortiz Rubio, but the authorities were satisfied that it was a plot of the "Vasconcelistas." This was the view, also, of Portes Gil, retiring president, who told newspaper men that Senora de Ortiz had received an unsigned letter a few days ago which said her husband would not live to be inaugurated.

Only a week before the shooting the federal district authorities announced they had frustrated one such Vasconcelista plot with the arrest of nineteen persons who allegedly planned to assassinate both Senor Ortiz Rubio and Senor Portes Gil and seize the government. It was the plan in this instance, events did not develop as was hoped, for Mexico City, except for an air of anxiety for the president's safety, was quiet with little or no indication that anything unusual had happened.

PRELIMINARY negotiations among the naval conferences in London did not proceed very smoothly. Prime Minister MacDonald announced that Great Britain sought the abolition of submarines, and immediately thereafter Henry L. Stimson, head of the American delegation, made it known that this position was supported by the United States and that he would propose the abolition of underwater war craft at the plenary session set for February 11. The French delegation at once met and examined the question and then declared flatly that they would not consider the proposal. It was understood that Premier Tardieu at the plenary session would meet it with a speech in which he would say that France considers the submarine as most necessary for the defense of the French coast though France does not want it as an offensive weapon and believes that submarine warfare should be "humanized."

Italy is willing to abolish submarines if France will do so, but it insists that Italians must have submarines if her northern neighbors have them. Thus the Italian action will be governed by the French attitude.

The American delegation made public its plan for reduction and limitation, stating that it provided for immediate parity with Great Britain in every class of ship in the navy. Equality in battleships would be secured by abandonment of five by the British and three by the Americans. Two cruisers would be so apportioned that the British would have an apparent advantage of 12,000 tons, which the Americans could equalize by including the number of their smaller cruisers. Critics of this plan declared it was a surrender to the demands of the British.

Delegates from the British dominions protested to Mr. MacDonald that the conference was making unnecessary slow progress, and he therefore conferred with the other heads of delegations and they decided to speed things up. The first committee, which includes all the delegates, took up on Thursday the matter of the method of limitation, seeking a solution for the controversy between the global and categorical methods. London correspondents, however, said it was not likely any real progress would be made toward fixing tonnage figures until near the end of the month. This is due to the fact that the Japanese have a general election on February 20, and the Japanese are stalling vigorously on the figures until the present government can get settled in the saddle or a new government formed.

WHEN Maj. Gen. Herbert Crosby, chief of cavalry of the United States army, retires on March 21 next, he will undertake the task of making the city of Washington a model for the rest of the country so far as liquor and crime are concerned. He has been selected by President Hoover to direct the police, fire and traffic departments of the District of Columbia, and Mr. Hoover said the appointment "will be a guaranty to both the official and unofficial residents of the district, and especially to the nation at large, that the Capital shall be free of organized crime."

The police affairs of the District of Columbia have been under fire from members of congress for the last year or so. During that time there have been a wide variety of charges, including lax enforcement of the prohibition laws. General Crosby will succeed Proctor L. Dougherty as commissioner.

SAMUEL H. CHURCH, president of the Carnegie Institute, proposed at a dinner of the eastern directors of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment that a new "liberal" party be formed by the wets, and while the idea was not endorsed at the meeting, it was decided that a nationwide convention should be held in Baltimore in the spring. Leaders of the old parties and many prominent wets as well said the foes of prohibition would gain little or nothing by forming a new party. Those wets who are practical politicians believe they can accomplish much more by placing wet candidates in the field in three-cornered contests for the senate or the house. They think this might result in the election of wet Democrats and bring about a change in the policies of the Republican party.

REPRESENTATIVE C. L. BEEDY of Maine offered in the house an amendment to the Volstead act which would make possible the padlocking of places of business by public prosecutors in the absence of their owners, and it was generally accepted as an administration measure.

Beedy's bill provides that a district, state, county, or city attorney, failing to locate the owner of premises alleged to be a nuisance, may issue a "substitute" or dummy subpoena and, without serving it on the owner, may go into court and have his place padlocked. It also provides that the judge may toss up the case if his docket is congested by referring it to a master for proceedings under equity rules.

BY A vote of 43 to 6 the German reichsrath or national council of the states approved the Young plan, which has now gone to the reichstag for final discussions and disposition. The council also gave its approval to the separate German and American debt agreement. Bavaria's premier, Doctor Held, tried everything in his power to prevent the reichsrath from accepting the Young plan. He declared that the Young plan was based on the assumption that Germany was responsible for the war. Foreign Minister Julius Curtius countered by saying that Germany never has and never will sign a pact admitting war guilt.

ITALY greatly strengthened its position in central Europe last week by the signing of a treaty "of friendship, conciliation and judicial regulation" with Austria. This, as a Rome correspondent says, means that post-war Austria's 7,000,000 inhabitants will be added to the circle of friends Italy has been cultivating in the Danubian states, and which, at present, includes Hungary and Bulgaria, plus the diminutive Adriatic monarchy of Albania. It means likewise that, besides burying the hatchet in South Tyrol, Italy extends her range of influence to the border lines of the little estate.

Austria, on the other hand, makes a noteworthy advance from her previous status of a political zero through this Italian alliance.

THROUGH Riga, Latvia, the world has learned that recently nearly five hundred former officers of the old Russian imperial navy have been put to death by the cheka or secret police. This massacre was ordered by Commissar Menshinski, chief of the cheka, and no reasons for his action have been given.

Because of the crisis in diplomatic relations between Moscow and Berlin and Paris, the Soviet foreign trade monopoly is contemplating a trade boycott of Europe and concentrating its European purchases in the United States, according to the Soviet trade delegate in Riga.

CONGRESS authorized the President to send a commission to Haiti to study conditions there, and Mr. Hoover last week was considering the make-up of that body. The commission, the President said, will be charged with the responsibility of recommending when and how the United States is to withdraw its military forces from the negro republic. It will also recommend the policy which this country should follow during the years that will elapse before American occupation ends.

Needless Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. A tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled. For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for immediate relief.

Twelve Years Mayor and Going Strong!

WHEN a man who has been mayor of a big city for twelve years finds out how to live, his words are worth listening to. Ex-Mayor E. N. Kirby of Abilene, Texas, discovered the simple way to health about ten years ago (he is now 64.)

"I am now a new man, and as active as a boy," says Mr. Kirby. "I feel fine all the time and rarely have an ache or a pain, although for twenty-five years I suffered with rheumatism, and sometimes was unable to stand or walk. I would not give up my simple health discovery—no, not for five thousand dollars in gold!" That discovery was Nujol.

That's the wonderful thing about Nujol. Although it is not a medicine and contains absolutely no drugs, its harmless internal lubrication seems to make people feel better and look on the brighter side of life, whether they are old or young.

Of course you can understand why this is so: we all of us have natural poisons in our bodies that make us feel headachy, sick and low in our minds. Nujol, which is as tasteless and colorless as pure water, helps to absorb these and carry them away, easily, regularly as clock work.

Instead of drooping and irritating your body with pills, cathartics, laxatives, and other habit-forming drugs, give your body the internal lubrication which it needs, just as much as any other machine. After a few days you will be surprised at the difference in the way you feel. You can get Nujol in a sealed package in any drug store. Nujol may change your whole outlook on life. Get a bottle today and give yourself a chance to be well!

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Some Light on Our Mining Resources

The following is the substance of a letter written by A. J. McGarry, owner and manager of the Florence, Alabama, Machine Company, to R. E. Davis, at El Paso, Texas, when the latter made inquiries about the ore in this locality:

El Paso, Texas,

Dear Sir:-

Your favor of a recent date was received at my office during my absence, hence the delay in answering. I am sorry you cannot stop over here on your way east, so that we might talk over matters and correct some statements concerning the estimated tonnage of ore in the Capitan mountains.

The estimated tonnage of ore in the district of Lincoln County, is from 40 to 50 million tons, and in regard to mining the ore, as soon as a market is established, there will be no trouble in having that done. In my opinion, up to 10,000 tons daily can be mined, but it will require considerable capital to get things in shape to mine the ore.

In the Capitan mountains, there is quite a quantity of ore exposed which could be mined cheaply—but covering the entire district, the surface ore would not amount to more than 5% of the whole. The balance of the ore is found in the stratified veins, which at one time were broken up by upheavals that brought a portion of it to the surface.

It is practically the same formation as we have in the Alabama district around Birmingham, which they have been mining for the past 40 years. As I have been in the business of mining ore, building furnaces and operating them for over 30 years, I am familiar with every phase of the business and you may say to your people in the east, that they will make no mistake on the mining district in Lincoln County, New Mexico, with everything taken into consideration. You may assure them of this fact when you are in the east. As you can't find time to stop here on your eastern trip, I hope you will do so on your return, as I would like to talk matters over with you in regard to the proposition we have in mind.

Yours very truly,

A. J. McGarry

Florence, Alabama.

Signs of Spring

As you pass the Town Trustees' building, take a look at the new trees and shrubs they have planted. It will not be long before the Chinese Elm will be large enough to afford shade. This will mean much toward helping to beautify the town. The inmates of the jail have been put to work in making the lawn ready for the welcome spring.

Good News For Clothes Buyers

The biggest thing ever attempted by any tailoring house in the world is the new revolutionary selling plan just put into force by the Royal Tailors, Inc., of Chicago. Mr. B. B. Ball authorized resident dealer for Royal in Fort Stanton, says that every man and boy in the county should benefit by this great move. All extra charges have been wiped out, says Mr. Ball and this means that if a man is as big as a house or tall as a skyscraper, a Royal suit won't cost him a penny more than the regular price. Double-breasted suits and overcoats will now be the same price as single-breasted. All extra charges such as fancy cuffs on sleeves, patch pockets, overcoats extra long or made with large collars, have been wiped out by Royal, according to Mr. Ball.

Tuxedos and full dress or Prince Albert, as well as sport clothes, which previously carried extra charges, now cost no more than business suits in the same price range, says the Royal announcement. With this remarkable innovation, comes the additional information that parcel post and express charges are paid by the agent, thus saving this cost to customers. Mr. Ball says he looks forward to the coming spring to bring the best trade he has ever had. It

"Oil-Rite" Windmill illustrating principle of Pump, also location of Four Timken Roller Bearings

The AUTOMATIC OILING SYSTEM and lubrication of the various parts is accomplished as follows: The oil is poured into the gear case, which submerges the lower part of the double gears, including the wrist pins when at the bottom of stroke.
The rotation of the gears carries the oil up and floods the pinions, and the oil running down over the inside of the gears floods the gear shaft. The trough which is part of the hub of wheel head, maintains a level that submerges the lower part of both front and rear Timken bearings, and the surplus oil is returned to the gear case through a passage in the main frame extension. A felt oil retaining washer and paper gasket prevent any oil from working out around the wheel shaft.

AUXILIARY OIL PUMP

One of the outstanding features of the SAMSON "OIL-RITE" is the extreme simplicity, efficiency, and practicability of the pump.

The main frame on the Oil-Rite mills forms a reservoir that holds a sufficient amount of oil to lubricate the mill for one year. A sheet metal helmet completely encloses the reservoir and covers all working parts thus eliminating waste and making it dirt, rain, sleet and snow proof. No water can get in to flood the oil, no dust can blow in to grind out the bearings.
This construction prevents squeaks, rattles and gear howling brought about by insufficient lubrication, all of which is avoided in the automatically oiled "OIL-RITE" mill. The ball bearing turn table, the constant supply of oil always flooding the moving parts and the Timken roller bearings insure the smoothest "OIL-RITE" mill will pump water in the slightest breeze.

PHENOMENAL GAIN IN TRUST SERVICES
By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

SO phenomenal has been the increase of trust business that statisticians are unable to keep a true record of its advancement. There are now something like 3,500 active trust departments in banks in America, while in 1900 only 165 active trust departments had been established.

In becoming the custodians or the guardians of the property of others, bankers as John G. Lonsdale sums what has been fittingly described as one of the "most exalted human relationships ever created by law." They become at once a big brother, a big sister, an advisor, or a confessor, sworn so to conduct themselves that clients will be won to them by their ability and integrity.

Thousands of little children have received an education and have been started off right in life through the trust department's safe keeping and guidance of the family estate, numberless widows have been protected from merciless stock swindlers, many thousands of business men have been relieved of troublesome details in the conduct of their business through the creation of a living trust and still others have safeguarded their business enterprises through life insurance trusts.

The favorable reaction of the public toward trust department service is not accidental. It may be traced jointly to the growing intelligence of the American people in financial affairs and to advertising to the world at large the merits of trust services. Advertising used in a sensible, judicious way is necessary, a power that has accomplished much good for humanity. Among the detailed services rendered by a trust department the one that seems to be winning favor the fastest is the life insurance trust. Life insurance is the quickest known way of creating an estate. In reality it affords the possessor the opportunity of setting up a positive monetary safeguard for his family and then paying for it on the installment plan.

A married man is not fair to his family if he fails to carry life insurance. I would say to the young man, "Buy insurance before you buy the ring," and to the young woman I would say, "Marry no man so thoughtless as to scoff at life insurance."

More interesting is the fact that the well-known gambler, Rothstein, whose murder puzzled New York's police and baffled the district attorney, was probably killed by a man who will never be convicted, for the reason that he himself has since been murdered by Rothstein's friends. # The Desert Moon Mystery

CHAPTER I

The Cannezianos

I knew, that evening in April, when Sam got home from Italtail and came stamping snow into my kitchen, his good old red, white and blue face stretched long and wide in its usual grin, that he had brought some bad news with him.

"I had a letter today," he said, "from the Canneziano twins."

I am like a lot of folks who say that they are not superstitious, who just happen to think that it is bad luck to walk under a ladder. More than likely the shivery, creepy sensation I felt, when Sam said that, was due to the cold he brought in with him, and was not due to the fact that those words of his were the forerunners for all of the grim materics and the tragedies that made the Desert Moon ranch, before the end of July, a place of horror.

"How much do they want?" I questioned.

"No, Mary; they want to come here to live. Danielle wrote the letter. She says they want to come here and rest, indefinitely. She says she longs for it with all her soul, or something like that."

"Danielle," I said, "always was the best of the two. You going to let them come, Sam?"

"Anything else for me to do?"

"Not a thing—for you. There'd be plenty of others. Those girls are no kin of yours. Let me see—eight years old when they were here in 1900, makes them twenty-four years old now, according to my figures. Why a couple of women twins, aggregating forty-eight years, should decide to come here and rest their souls, at your expense, is beyond me."

"I have plenty."

"So has Henry Ford. Why don't they go rest their souls with him? They've got as much claim on him as they have on you. None. Leave those girls rest their souls right there where they are, Sam."

"No—I don't know, Mary. I guess I'll write them a letter and tell them to come along. Lots of room."

I didn't argue any more about it. For twenty-five years I had been housekeeper of the Desert Moon ranchhouse, and I had learned during that time, that there was only one subject, concerning Sam, or the place, on which I could never hope to have any say.

Trying to argue with Sam about anything that had to do, in any way, with Margarita Ditle, when she was Margarita Ditle Stanley, or when she was Margarita Ditle Canneziano, was about as sensible as hoisting a child on parade for protection in the midst of one of our Nevada mountain cloudbursts.

Margarita Ditle was of French-Canadian parentage; a dark-haired, big-eyed beauty. Her father kept a gambling hole in Esmeralda county in the early days. Her mother had run away from a convent, after she had become a nun, to marry him. The girl had some of the nun, some of the runaway, and some of the gambling house proprietor in her. It made a queer combination.

When she was eighteen years old she came from Carson to visit Lily Trooper over on the Three Stars ranch, about sixty miles from here. Sam met her there. She and Sam were married two weeks later. She was a lot younger than Sam; but, even then, he was the richest man in the valley, with every unwedded woman for a hundred miles around setting her cap for him.

Whether Margarita married him for his wealth, or whether it was to spite the other girls who would have liked to marry him, I don't know. All I know is that Margarita never had a wisp of love for him. She stayed with him, though, and acted decently enough for two years, until Dan Canneziano came to the ranch and got a job on it as a cowpuncher.

It was during those two years that Sam built this ranchhouse for her. Sam's lead and silver mine had just come in, and there was not anything, from Italian marble fireplaces to teak-wood floors, that was too grand for what Margarita called the Stanley mansion. She left it, all the elegance and the luxury, and she broke her marriage vows, for love of this cowpuncher. That, I guess, is fair and full enough description of Margarita Canneziano.

I don't blame her. I quit blaming folks for things a good many years ago when, after firing three Chinese cooks in six weeks, I decided that, if we were to live healthy and wholesome, I'd have to take over the job of cooking as well as housekeeping for the Desert Moon ranch, and set about it, and learned to cook. In other words, when I became a creator myself, I got to know creations and so quit blaming all of them.

If I forget to put the soda in the sour milk pancakes, it isn't their fault if they don't rise. They are as I made them. Margarita was as the Lord made her. He, I suppose, either had his own good reasons for turning out such a mess, or else he was tired, or flustered, or maybe, was just experimenting on the road to something better when he did it.

I should explain, I suppose, wishing to be as honest as possible in spite of the fact that I am writing a mystery story, that Canneziano had a good education; he talked poetry, and played the violin. Margarita heard him playing, down in the stable's quarters one day, and had Sam invite him up to the house to play. She accompanied him on the grand piano that Sam had bought for her.

Before long, Dan Canneziano was spending a good part of his time at the ranchhouse. Sam, being nobody's fool, soon saw how the land lay; but he, according to his custom then and now, kept his mouth shut and his eyes open. Sure enough, one evening they tried to slope together. Sam went after them and brought them back. The three of them had about half an hour's talk together. Then Sam herded Canneziano down to the outfit's quarters and, I suppose, told the men to keep him there, for there he stayed until Sam was ready for him again.

The next morning Sam started to the county seat. He reached there that evening. The following morning he got his divorce. He came back to the Desert Moon on the third morning, with his divorce and with a preacher. He sent for Canneziano, and stood by, while the preacher married Margarita Stanley to Daniel Canneziano, decent and regular, according to the laws of Nevada.

There it should have ended. It didn't, because Sam never got over loving Margarita. So when, nine years later, she came back to the Desert Moon, with twin girls, Danielle and Gabrielle, and said that Canneziano had deserted her and the children Sam took them all right in. I don't know, yet, whether or not they took him in.

Certainly he did not show much surprise when, in about ten days, Canneziano put in an appearance. Sam allowed him to get a good start with his threats, and then he took him across his knees and gave him a sound spanking, and passed him over to Margarita to dry his tears, and washed his own hands and went fishing.

That evening he had one of the men hitch up, and take the whole kit and caboodle of Cannezianos to Italtail in time to catch the east-bound train. I am ashamed to say that Sam gave them money. I don't know how much. A tidy sum, I'll be bound, for shortly after we heard that Canneziano had opened the finest gambling house south of the Mason and Dixon line, in New Orleans.

Sam wanted to keep the children. He offered to adopt them. Margarita would not consider it.

When Margarita died, in France, seven years after she had paid us her blackmailing visit, Sam, the mimic, wrote to Canneziano and again offered to adopt the girls and give them a good home on the Desert Moon. He got a few insulting, insinuating lines for an answer. Canneziano had his own plans for his daughters, who had developed into rare beauties.

But, if Sam was soft with the women, he was not soft with Canneziano. He had showed up here, beaming and broke, about three years ago. He had left, suddenly, after having seen Sam and no one else, less beaming but quite as broke as he had been when he had come. I thought, maybe, Sam was forgetting that side of the family, and that this might be a good time to remind him.

"Is Canneziano planning to come on later, too, and rest?" I asked.

"Just at present he is in San Quentin, serving a three years' term. Danielle didn't say for what dolevity. His term's up this summer. Poor little girl," Sam went on, "I reckon we haven't any idea of what they've been through, all these years."

"I reckon not," I agreed. "But they aren't little girls any more. Seems queer to me, with all the beauty their father was bragging about, that neither of them has married. Twenty-four is getting along."

"I'll bet," Sam answered, "it is because they have never had any decent opportunities. Considering the life that they've had to lead, and all, I think it speaks pretty well for them that they have come through straight and clean."

Instead of asking him how he knew that, I said, "You'd be willing, then, to have John marry one of them?"

John, Sam's adopted son, was the apple of Sam's eye. He would have the ranch, and Sam's fortune, other dependents provided for, when Sam died. Whether or not the girl he married would be contented to live on the ranch, and help John carry it on and keep up its traditions, making it one of the proudest spots in Nevada, was a mighty important thing to Sam.

He waited so long before answering my question that I was sure I had hit the nail on the head.

"John," he finally said, "is old enough to take care of himself."

With that he turned and went out of my kitchen, not giving me a chance to say that, though I had lived through fifty-six years, I had never yet seen a man at the age he had just mentioned. I know that if these Canneziano girls came to the Desert Moon, they would bring trouble with them. I was right. A merciful Providence be thanked that, for a time at least, the knowledge of how terribly right I was, was spared me.

I am not an admirer of men. Looking at most any man, I feel myself thinking what a pity it was he had to grow up, since as a little, helpless child he would have made a complete success.

Sam Stanley is different. There is some of the child left in Sam, just as there is, I think, in any good man at woman—a little seasoning of simplicity, really, is all it amounts to—but there is a quality about Sam that makes a person feel that he set out, early in life, to follow the recipe for being a man, and that he has made a thorough job of it.

Why he, as a young man, with a pretty fair education and a tidy sum of money left him by his father, who had been a well-thought-of lawyer in Massachusetts, should come out here to Nevada, take up his homestead land, and settle content for the rest of his life, has always been more or less of a mystery to me, unless you take Sam's explanation of it.

He says that, when his father died, it left him without a relative, whom he knew of, in the world. He was twenty-years old, and he owned a set of roving toes and an imagination. So he went to California, seeking romance and gold. Finding neither, he came down here to Nevada.

He staked out his hundred and sixty acres with Boulder creek tumbling and roaring through them. He built his cabin. He hired help, and built fences, and dug ditches, and planted crops, and bought stock. He bought more land. He hired more help, dug more ditches, planted bigger crops, bought more stock. He has been doing that regularly ever since. And, of course, he located the lead and silver mine, on his property, that made him millions if it made him a cent, before it played out. But, in spite of the money that "Old Lady Luck," as he called his mine, made for him, Sam never gave his heart to it. It was the Desert Moon ranch that he loved, and the money he made from it that he was proud of. That was why, when the honor of the ranch went under, during those terrible weeks last summer, Sam all but went under with it.

After Margarita left the place for her visit of 1900, taking the twins with her, Sam went around for a week or two, with his head cocked to one side as if he was listening for something. I knew what he was missing, and I was not surprised when, one day, he told me he had decided to send to San Francisco and get a couple of children and adopt them.

He wrote to a big hospital in San Francisco and got in touch with a trained nurse who would be willing to come up and live on the ranch and take care of the two children. He had her go to an orphan's home and select the children and bring them with her when she came.

The nurse came early in September with two brown-eyed children, named Vera and Alvin. Sam at once re-named them. John, he said, was the only name for a boy, and Mary the only name for a girl. But since my name was Mary, he would let the little girl have Martha, which meant, according to Sam, "Boss of the Ranch."

The nurse's name was Mrs. Olive Ricker. I don't know how old she was then. I don't know how old she is now. She never talked, I do not mean that she never chatted, or gossiped. I mean that she never said one word if she could possibly avoid it. At the end of sixteen years of daily association with Mrs. Ricker, that is, up to the time of the second murder on the Desert Moon, I knew exactly as much about her past life as you know at this minute.

John, at that time, was nine years old. He was as bright, and as up-standing, and as handsome, as any little fellow to be found anywhere. I may as well say, now, that this description of John, at nine years old, is as good a description as I can give of John at twenty-five, if you will draw his height up to six feet, and put on weight accordingly.

The papers from the orphanage gave Martha's age as five years; but even I, who know less about children than it was decent for any woman to know, soon saw that something was wrong. She walked well enough, but she could scarcely talk at all. Her ways and her habits were those of a two-year-old infant, yet she was far too large for that age. Before she had been with us a week I knew that Martha was not quite right in her mind.

Mrs. Ricker knew it, too. Her excuse was, that she had chosen Martha because she was so pretty; that she had had no opportunity to judge her other characteristics. She insisted that she thought, with proper care, Martha would develop normally.

I knew better. Sam knew it, too. But, when I begged and besought him not to adopt her, he brought out an argument good and conclusive for him.

"If I don't adopt her, and take care of her," said Sam, "who the heck would?"

So adopt her he did. And he spent a small fortune on doctors, specialists, for her. None of them could do anything. It was, they said, a hopeless case of retarded development. So, at twenty-one years of age, Martha, though the care and doctoring had given her a fine healthy body, had the mind of a child of five or six years—not too bright a child, either. That was at best. At worst—Well, no matter. Entirely harmless, the doctors said; but I always had my doubts.

CHAPTER II

Arrivals at the Ranch

It was three years after Mrs. Ricker came to the ranch, bringing John and Martha, that Hubert Hand put in his appearance. He had got Mr. Indian Chat Chiu, as everybody called him, to bring him up from Rattail to his old surrey.

Mr. Indian Chat Chiu stopped his old nag at the entrance to the driveway, and Hubert Hand climbed carefully down and came up the road, swinging a walking cane like he was leading a parade.

Sam and I, as was our custom, went walking down to meet him.

He took off his hat to me, and said to Sam, "I wish to see the owner of this ranch."

"Nobody ever mistook me for a fairy before," Sam said. "But go ahead. Your first wish is granted. What are the other two?"

Hubert Hand got out his card then. Besides his name it had "Clover-blossom Creamery," and the San Francisco address printed on it.

Hubert Hand explained that he had an up-and-coming creamery business in San Francisco, but that his physician had told him, that he had to live in a high, dry climate with plenty of sunshine and no fog. He had, after inquiries and investigations, decided that the Desert Moon ranch, altitude seven thousand feet, sunshine three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, to say nothing of the marvelous view of the Garnet mountains, the hunting, the fishing, and the pure snow water, would fill all his requirements.

His proposition was that he start a creamery, on the Desert Moon ranch, and supply the valley with ice cream, butter, and other dairy products. Sam had the ranch, the cows, the big ice plant, Mr. Hubert Hand had the knowledge and the equipment. They could divide the profits.

Next to sleep men, I guess there is nothing that cow men hold in lower contempt than they hold dairy farms. Sam was too much disgusted to swear very long.

"Listen, stranger," he said. "I wouldn't turn the Desert Moon into a place to slop milk around in; if the entire valley had to depend on Hong-kong, China, for its ice cream cones, forget it, and come in now and have some supper."

To my knowledge, Hubert Hand, from that day to this, has never again mentioned, on the Desert Moon, anything that had to do with creameries. Neither, from that day to this, has he been off the ranch for more than a couple of weeks at a time.

"By the way," he began, trying to make it sound unimportant, when we had finished supper, "I heard, in Telko, that you were something of a chess player."

"I am, when I can get a game," Sam said. "But chess players, in these parts, are as scarce as hen's teeth."

"I play a little," Hubert Hand produced, right modestly.

Sam jumped up and got out his chess table.

Hubert Hand beat him the first game in about half an hour. They set up their men again. It took Hubert Hand over an hour that time to beat Sam, but he did it.

"Heck!" Sam said, at the end of that game. "You're hired."

"Hired for what?"

"For whatever you want to call it, except the slopping of milk around. Send for your trunk and name your pay. Why didn't you say, in the first place, that you were a blankety blank crack chess player?"

Hubert Hand accepted Sam's offer, then and there. The next day he titled himself assistant ranch manager, and named his salary at two hundred and fifty dollars a month. Sam paid it without blinking; and kept right on managing the ranch, and everything on it, except, perhaps, myself, without any assistance, the same as he had always done.

Chadwick Caulfield, the other member of our household, who was present on the Desert Moon ranch at the time of the first murder, came only two years ago last October.

He was wearing white corduroy trousers, a long yellow rubber rain-coat, and a straw hat tethered to its buttonhole with a string. He was carrying a ukulele under his arm and a camera in his hand. He took off his hat, displaying a head full of pretty yellow curls. He smiled, displaying a sweet, gentle disposition. (If there is any better index to character than the way a person smiles, I have never found it.)

"How do you do?" he said. "I have come to visit you."

By the time Sam got his pipe picked up, John had got down the forty-foot length of living room and had Chad by both hands, and was introducing him as the friend he had told us about, the friend he had made at Mather's field, during the war.

The way of that was, John had saved his life for him down there, and had never since been able to get out from under the responsibility of it. John had found a job for him, after the armistice, and when Chad lost it, John had loaned him money to start out in a vaudeville act. He did fine with that for three years, and was making good money, when he got into an automobile accident in Kansas City and was laid up for months in the hospital there. John had wired money to him, and had asked him to come for a visit to the Desert Moon. But, since he had had a standing invitation for years, and since he had sent so word that he was coming, John was as much surprised as any of us that evening.

Chad was a little, plodding fellow. Around Sam and John and Hubert Hand he looked about as jainty and trifling as the garnish around the plate of the Thanksgiving turkey. He seemed kind of like that, too; like the extra bit of garnishing that makes life's picture prettier and nicer—absolutely useless, maybe, but never cluttery.

Phrase "Stone Age" Not Literal in Application

The Stone age is a term commonly used to denote the earliest recognized stage in the development of human culture as defined by the materials used by man for weapons, utensils, etc. The phrase is somewhat misleading, since it is probable that primitive man made use of wood and other perishable materials to a far greater extent than of stone, and consequently the stage is defined by the prevailing material of the relics, not by that of actual implements in common use. The term "Stone age" represents in no sense a chronological division of human progress; but is a loose equivalent for a stage of cultural development varying widely in duration in different parts of the world. There are, a tribes still in the Stone age, while, on the other hand, some groups had outgrown it before the dawn of history. It is also worth noting that some tribes commonly classed as belonging to the Stone age produced objects of a superior artistic and industrial merit to those who had advanced to the use of metals. The evidence for the existence of such an age in most parts of the world is conclusive, but it is from the prevalence and character of the relics in certain parts of Europe rather than in America that the idea and term have come into general use.

Famous Song Not Burns'

Although the words of the song "Auld Lang Syne" appear in Burns' works, he himself, admits that he wrote only the second and third stanzas. A song of the same title can be traced to the latter part of 1800. In a letter to George Thomson, September, 1788, Burns says "One song more I have done, 'Auld Lang Syne.' The air is but mediocre but the following song, the old song of the elder times, and which has never been in print nor even in manuscript until I took it down from an old man's singing, is enough to recommend any air."

Don't eat too much breakfast. 7. Refuse to rush. 8. Walk part way to work. 9. Don't worry while in your office. 10. Rest before your dinner and don't work evenings."

Goose Got Revenge

A gun battle was staged in California between a wild goose and W. J. Speedy, of Pittsburgh. Speedy killed the goose, but the goose, with strength ebbing shot the hunter. With others, Speedy was hiding in blinds when a flock of geese appeared overhead. The hunter picked the leader and shot. The goose dropped into an adjoining blind. In its death throes it kicked over a shotgun of one of Speedy's neighbors and the charge struck Speedy in the hand.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion, to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Glacier Finally Gives

Up Body It Long Held
After 83 years the Grader glacier, in East Tyrol, has delivered up one of its dead. The body of the man, a gamekeeper called Matternstorn, was brought to light like that of a dead Rip Van Winkle, in almost the state in which life left it 83 years ago. The upper part of the body was well preserved, the features were recognizable, the sporting rifle of a pattern long obsolete, and the telescope and hunting knife of the dead man were unimpaired. His watch marked the hour at which it is recorded that he fell into a deep crevasse. The body was laid to rest in a cave, in East Tyrol, after its journey of fourscore years to near the melting point of the glacier, by the dead man's great-grandson, who had for a moment the uncanny experience of looking on the features of his ancestor.

Satisfied on the Farm

According to the results of a survey conducted by one of the largest mail-order houses in the United States through its department of home economics, farm boys and girls are more satisfied with their lot than are any other young people in the world. Three-quarters of a million young persons residing on farms were questioned as to their future plans. Ninety-three per cent of the girls replied that they intended to remain in the country and more than 80 per cent of the boys had made plans for careers in the rural districts.

PRISON SYSTEM WORKS REFORM

By LEWIS E. LAWES, Warden Sing Sing Prison.

STATISTICS will show that 73 per cent of the men leaving prison on parole make good. Three out of four never come back to Sing Sing. For all the criticism, and some of it is justified, that is leveled at New York state's prisons, I will venture to say that the prisons today are 1,000 per cent better than they were twenty-five years ago. I was first trained, for three years, under the hard-boiled system or iron discipline then in Elmira, Clinton and Auburn prisons.

But my mind changed about methods after that. I've learned that the administration of any prison is a matter of judgment. In a way the public is to blame for the uncertainties in prison management. The public attitude toward prisons and prisoners is very fickle. First the people will clamor for punishment of lawbreakers in prison and then again they will decry it. They want either hatred or pity. I try to avoid both.

I believe in fair play for inmates and that is all. I introduced some concessions. I was the first warden to ever let inmates give a show to the outside public at which an admission fee was charged. I allow this to let the Mutual Welfare League raise funds for useful, reasonable welfare work for all the prisoners.

I haven't lost confidence in human nature and thank the Lord I have a sense of humor.

NEVER TOO OLD TO LEARN

By PROF. HERBERT SORENSON, University of Minnesota.

Results of exhaustive tests have demonstrated that one is never too old to learn. At thirty-five or forty, and even later, the ability to acquire new knowledge through study is evident provided only that the break with youthful study habits is not too old.

The acquisition, association and retention of facts and symbols atrophies only with disuse, not necessarily with increasing age. Those who have been active in study show no age handicap. The ordinary learning curve would show a steady rise from eight to sixteen years, and probably to twenty or later, remaining then parallel to its base line until the age of twenty-five, dropping slowly to thirty-five and then, somewhat more rapidly, decreasing to forty-five or later.

Explanations for this decrease may be due to an inner degeneration of the nervous system, to disuse or long absence from systematic study, to lessened enthusiasm with increasing age or to lessened opportunity for study caused by heavier vocational demands.

Just as exercise will improve muscles and pep up a physique that has been allowed to grow soft, so continued study will probably more than make up for any deterioration that has set in. So far as we know, the brain does not suffer changes with advancing age. If one wishes to keep his mind unimpaired he should keep it active. Atrophy is the product of disuse.

WORLD PEACE BROUGHT NEARER

By PROF. CHARLES KINGSLEY WEBSTER, Harvard University.

The new kind of friendship and of understanding between the nations of the world since statesmen have been meeting around a common council table to discuss problems and adjust differences is an outgrowth of the League of Nations, one of its greatest contributions to world peace, and an enduring tribute to the vision of Woodrow Wilson.

President Wilson once said that friendship must have a machinery through which it can find expression, so that troubles may be taken in hand when they are little and not allowed to wait to grow big. That machinery has been provided by the League.

The advances toward peace which all admit have been made within the last three or four years have been largely because statesmen have had an opportunity to know one another, as they would have had no chance to do in any other way. Admitting that the League is not yet functioning properly throughout the entire world, it is nevertheless true that European statesmen, through their many meetings face to face, at last have come to know one another.

VICTORY MOOD CHURCH'S NEED

By REV. S. M. SHOEMAKER, JR., (Episcopal) New York.

There is a mood of faith with which none of us are sufficiently familiar, and it is the mood of victory. It is a mood that cannot be simulated, but which must come with faith in God and, when it is realized, is the spiritual counterpart to the glow of physical well-being.

Most of us think today, and most preachers preach, in the mood of effort. There are times when we need to be lifted out of the grind of struggle and reminded of our spiritual possibilities.

Have you ever said that such and such a person could not be changed, or at any rate, that you could not be the person to help him? How do you know? How dare you put limits to Christ's power? Some of you are unconscious spiritual millionaires, with vast gifts to give others, gifts of sympathy and honesty and shared Christian experience that might completely change their whole lives if only you expected spiritual achievement.

There is too much plodding and scrambling in your spiritual experience and not enough graceful and royal progress. If you expected more, God could do more for you.

SENILITY HALTED BY CHEMIST

By DR. H. C. SHERMAN, Columbia University.

Modern chemistry is capable of prolonging an adult's life and can ward off senility effectively. In the last quarter of a century chemistry has not only co-operated with biology and medicine in the preservation of young lives but can also do what many biologists and medical men have been inclined to regard beyond the powers of science, namely, to so improve the normal life process as to induce a well-marked, positive extension of the average adult life span.

The discovery of the vitamins is only the beginning of the efforts of chemists to improve normal life. In the majority of individuals more time is needed for altruistic development, and in this respect the chemical research of the last twenty-five years has advanced human understanding of this world.
