Nogal Hill Accident

Last Saturday morning about 10 o'clock, a truck containing Mrs. Jane Harrison and eight children, turned over on Nogal Hill, when the truck, driven by the oldest boy became uncontrollable.

F. L. Skinner, Water Supt. of the Bonito District happened to be at home and he hastened to the scene of the wreck and brought the people, all injured more or less, to Carrizozo, where they were cared for at the Johnson Hospital until people arranged a vacant house for them, where they are being provided with what they need by generous citizens, as their funds are exhausted.

The mother and two little girls suffered the most, they being injured about their heads with ugly cuts and bruises and were confined to their beds until the middle of this week, but are now able to be about the house. They had left San Angelo, Texas, about ten days ago and were on their way to Phoenix, Arizona, where they hoped to find work for the mother and her two boys who are the oldest of the eight, the ages of the children ranging from 16 years to 18 months.

ANCHO NOTES

The Woman's Club met at the home of Mrs. S. J. Pruett Saturday, Dec. 13, with a good attendance. This was the first business meeting in some time as due to inclement weather a quorum was not present at the last two meetings. After the transaction of regular business, the following officers were elected for the coming year: Pres., Mrs. Florence Pruett; 1st Vice-Pres., Mrs. Ola Drake; 2nd Vice-Pres., Mrs. Elva Wilson; Sec'y, Mrs. Ethel Hightower; Treas., Librarian, Mrs. Myrtle Knight; Parliamentarian, Mrs. H. M. Belknap.

It was decided to purchase the necessary equipment for the school water system and turn the installation of the meter and fountains over to the school directors. A further amount has just been added to that fund by the sale of chances on a Christmas Treasure Box which was made in the form of a large doll house and filled with needle work by the club members. Chances went very rapidly, all being sold within a few days. The winner will be announced at the school entertainment the night of Dec. 19. Special guests of the club were Mrs. Grover Pruett, Misses Lucile Drake and Strawbridge. The hostess served delicious refreshments.

The Bryan Hightower family spent the week-end at the Spance ranch, visiting the Lamb family.

Mmes. T. J. Straley and Knight left for El Paso Sunday morning. Mrs. Knight will return in a few days, but Mrs. Straley will remain away until spring, for the benefit of her health. Little Sally Silvers and Tommy Knight were taken along to see Santa Claus and will remain with their grandmother.

Fur trappers are busy in the hills and seem to be more than ordinarily successful.

Mesars. Rlordan and Davis shipped four more carloads of horses to San Jose, California, for slaughter.

Mrs. Pete Frame spent the week-end in Corona, attending the Corona-Carrizozo basketball games and visiting friends.

Virgil Peters attended the basketball games at Corona last Saturday.

The local school is planning a Christmas tree and program for Friday night, Dec. 19. Much work is being devoted to the preparation of the entertainment, to which both pupils and patrons are looking forward with eager anticipation. Santa Claus has signified his intention to be on hand with candy for everybody.

Mr. and Mrs. Wagner have returned to their home in Tulsa, Okla., after a brief visit with Mrs. Wagner's brothers, Ralph and Fred Sweet.

Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Hall are at Masonic Hospital, El Paso, with a very sick baby.

After the dinner was over the host and hostess and Mr. and Mrs. Benny Sanchez drove the guests to the Malpais for an outing which all enjoyed very much. Miss Aguilar is a popular teacher in the Tularosa schools.

Robert Brady Appointed On Board of Education

The Board of Education for the coming term will be the same, with the exception of Robert Brady, who was appointed in the place of Emilio Miranda. The appointment of Mr. Brady gives the Hondo high school representation, which it justly deserves. The reason for this change, is not on account of any inefficiency of Mr. Miranda, but to give all places where high schools exist over the county, an equal representation. The appointment of Brady adds strength to the board and divides the honors equally. Judge Prenger's appointment to give Hondo its rightful representation, will meet with the approval of the educational interests of the county in general.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AS THE time draws nearer for the observance in 1932 of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, it is worthy of comment that the man, who is to be honored in a nation-wide celebration only a little more than a year hence, was the central figure in two of the most historic Christmas days in all American history.

One of them was in 1777 and the story of it is so familiar to all Americans that it needs retelling here only in the barest outline—how on Christmas eve Washington took supper at General Greene's headquarters and there perfected his plans for crossing the Delaware river the next day and attacking the Hessian outpost at Trenton, N. J., held by a force of approximately 1,000 Hessians under the command of Colonel Rall, because he believed that these Germans, busy with their Christmas feasting and merrymaking, would fall easy victims to a surprise attack.

The crossing of the river began at six o'clock Christmas evening. Washington planned to have his entire army on the Jersey shore by midnight and begin the march to Trenton by one o'clock so that he could attack the Hessians just before dawn. But the ice-filled river threatened to upset all his plans and some of his officers were for calling off the expedition entirely. Washington, however, resolved to carry it through and although the crossing took no less than ten hours, it was finally accomplished and four o'clock in the morning found his army drawn up on the New Jersey side ready for the seven-mile march to Trenton.

So away they went, with wet and snow beating upon their backs, and leaving bloody footprints in the snow as they marched. Two other divisions of Washington's army, which were to cooperate in the attack, had failed to cross the river and his force consisted of between 2,500 and 2,400 men. True, Rall had only about 1,000 Hessians at Trenton, but if his patrols discovered Washington's advance he could fight a defensive engagement with his camp.

Fortunately for the cause of American liberty, however, a patrol went out early in the morning by one of Rall's subordinates (the commander himself was sleeping off his Christmas celebration) did not go far enough and the Americans were at the outskirts of Trenton before the Hessians discovered. Despite the surprise, the Hessians rallied and put up a stubborn defense for a short time, but it was hopeless. Rall was mortally wounded and died the following night. Twenty-two of the Hessians were killed outright, 29 so badly wounded that they were left in Trenton and 66 others carried along with the victorious Americans as they retraced across the river with their 803 prisoners. Washington's loss was four wounded and not a man killed! His spectacular victory was a tonic to the discouraged patriots. Among "Christmas gifts," the achievement at Trenton must be rated among the most splendid of all time.

But if Christmas day of 1776 was a bright one for Washington and his fellow countrymen, the Christmas day of 1777 was correspondingly dark. The British had taken Philadelphia, the Continental army was but a shadow of a fighting force, a plot to remove Washington from command had been narrowly averted, congress was demoralized and the patriot cause was at a low ebb. Both for its defensive value and as a potential threat against Philadelphia, Washington had decided to move his army to Valley Forge from Whitemarsh where it was stationed at the beginning of December 1777. So he took up the 19-mile march and again there were footprints in the snow stained with red. Arriving at Valley Forge on December 19, his army of ragged, half-starved Continentals went into the winter camp which has made the name Valley Forge forever famous as a symbol of suffering and southern devotion to a cause. On Christmas day Washington in his orderly book noted that the army was killed for the winter in some 1,200 cabins

But lest that statement bring up a picture of an army snugly housed in comfortable barracks, let it be recorded that the huts were little more than piles of logs thrown up hastily around holes dug in the ground, the spaces between the logs plastered with mud. The roofs were slabs but they were leaky and water poured in on the heads of their inhabitants as well as seeped through the walls, unless they had had foresight or strength enough to dig drain ditches around the outside.

Add to such a situation the misery of hunger and sickness and you have a picture of the horror that was Valley Forge. For the commissary of the Continental army, neglected by a vacillating and bickering congress, had fallen down on its job entirely. On December 26 the commander in chief wrote to the president of congress that out of about 11,000 men "we have by return this day made, no less than 2,000 men now in camp unfit for duty because they are barefoot and otherwise naked." He also reported that on this same day the army had "not a single hoof of any kind to slaughter and not more than twenty-five barrels of flour." Few men had more than one shirt, "many only the moiety of one and some none at all." Owing to the lack of blankets numbers had to sit up all night by fire.

Under such conditions it is only too easy to imagine what a cheerless Christmas day it was that Washington and his men spent in 1777 at Valley Forge.

The Boyhood of Famous Americans

Vice President Charles Curtis

The Cheyennes were on the warpath. They were out to exterminate the Kaws. Vastly superior in numbers, they attacked their enemy at the Council Grove reservation. The Kaws were in a perilous position. They faced death.

The chiefs met in council. They had to get a messenger through to Topeka for aid if they were to survive. They selected an eight-year-old boy to carry the news of their plight through the lines of the Cheyennes and across 57 miles of prairie that separated them from Topeka.

Charles Curtis was the lad picked for that hazardous errand. He took a supply of dried buffalo meat, and trotted and trugged all the way to Topeka to get the aid that reached the Kaws in time to save them. That was in 1868, when the West was really wild and woolly, when buffalo roamed the plains, when Indians still fought and scalped.

The boy's father was a white man, a New Englander of good birth. His Indian heritage came through his mother, a descendant of White Hair, famous Osage chief. White Hair was the great-great-grandfather of the lad who brought relief to the beleaguered Kaws. The boy was attending school at the Kaw agency, living there with his mother's people, when the Cheyennes took the warpath.

The little fellow, destined to become leader of the United States senate and vice president of the United States, was brought up in the Indian tradition that fortitude, ability to stand hardships, and physical superiority were traits to cultivate from the cradle.

Before his mother died, which was when he was three, he had learned to swim and to ride. His mother had put him on the back of an Indian pony when he was a year old. It was she, also, who taught him to swim. He could follow a trail, catch fish and hunt when he was of the kindergarten age of the present generation.

He was born in 1890 in a log cabin, near the banks of the Kansas river, in what is now North Topeka. The great outdoors of the prairie was his early school room. There he learned the lessons that were of so much help to him in getting his feet on the first rungs of the ladder of success.

After his mother's death he went to live with his Indian relatives, but following the Cheyenne raid he rejoined his father, staying with his father's parents at North Topeka. There he entered the grade schools, attending them during the winters until he was sixteen.

Almost born on the back of a pony, he spent his summers as a jockey, riding in races at the country fairs. He was famous as a jockey all over the state and the frontier country by the time he was ten. He rode the horses of his father and other owners in the sprint races that were such a feature of western fairs those days.

He was riding at a Kansas City track when Jesse James and his gang held up the course in 1872. The bandits were after money only, but the lad thinking they might steal his favorite horse, hid the animal until they rode away.

While he got a bad fall when a horse bolted with him in a race, the marks of which he still carries on his face, he didn't quit racing until his wise Indian grandmother advised him to leave horses alone and study, that he might amount to something in life.

She gave him this advice after he started with her tribe on a migration to Oklahoma, then Indian territory. Persuaded by her to return to Topeka, he resumed his schooling. He drove a hack at night to pay his way through high school. He turned down a fine contract as a jockey so he might follow the advice of his Indian grandmother and get an education.

He was a good student, once his mind was made up to find a career for himself. He made particular strides in elocution, and delivered the commencement address when he was graduated. It so impressed the wife of a lawyer in the audience that she induced her husband to take the youngster into his office.

That is how Charles Curtis began the study of law that was to help him reach such high places. He was admitted to the bar in 1861. He went to congress in 1892, rose rapidly to a commanding position as a legislator, and was his party's successful nominee for vice president of the United States.

Business Revival Held

Back by Hoarded Money
Some years ago an experiment was tried with a new dollar bill. Attached to the bill was a piece of blank paper, with a request to all who possessed it temporarily to write thereon what they had purchased with it. Thus started on its way the dollar made the rounds of stores, shops and industrial concerns, and before long came back to the man who started it on its travels. What is true of one dollar is likewise true of a million. Whoever starts money in motion usually gets back his initial investment, frequently with considerable gain.

The proposal of some of the luncheon clubs for each member to spend $100 in a week stimulates the movement of money. When speculative stocks crashed in Wall Street and dragged down with them shares in the best concerns of the country, no money was destroyed. There is as much currency, gold and silver coins as when the flurry began, but for the last year there has been less disposition to spend. People hoarded their cash, although they know idle money gains no profit and helps make idle the wheels of industry. The buying campaign is an attempt to put money to work. What the public spends now is likely to return. Money in a tin can never did anybody any good, but put in motion will stimulate business, and a dollar now buys more than it has for a good while.—Indianapolis News.

range, except maybe yore sidekick Bob Quantrell. Who jumped pax Shep Sanderson an' devilled him an' finally got yore hired killer to bump off both him an' the Texas Kid? Who tried to stop a posse from doing its duty an' killed Brad Sowers an' shot up three more deputes? Who egged on Wes Steelman to all the deviltry that's been going on all over the range, dry-gulchin' an' what not?"

"That's bally nonsense, you know, Mr. Harvey," Smith-Beresford replied. "O'Hara is as peaceably inclined as I am. Both of us would go a long way to stop the wicked foolishness that has started simply because conflicting interests have not been sensibly adjusted. You know perfectly well that he wanted no trouble with that fellow Sanderson and that neither of us obstructed the posse in its duty. He fought for his life."

"Let that ride, Tom," Ingram spoke up. "Let's hear how these two quiet law-abidin' Christians propose to adjust the conflictin' interests referred to. Knowin' Wes Steelman like I do, I'd say he's perfectly willin' to lie down with the lamb—if it's inside of him."

"The only way to settle this thing is to start from now. If we get to discussing our wrongs our feelings will become involved. Steelman feels he has a good deal to complain of. So do you, I presume. Let us forget all that and come to the actual business questions at issue."

O'Hara named, without argument, the concessions Steelman was willing to make. He would keep his cattle on the range east of the pass. He would leave the San Jacinto market to Ingram and his friends if they would not compete with him at the Indian agency. He would discharge any of his men against whom there was proof of rustling cattle. As to the lawlessness of the past few months, he was willing to let bygones be bygones.

Harvey laughed unpleasantly. "He's sure promisin' a lot. Has our friends shot up by hired killers an' then is willin' to call it off. Offers to keep out the San Jacinto market when he knows Dave has got it corralled, but wants us to leave him lay at the agency where we've been outsellin' him right along. Yes, sir, I'd sure call that a Wes Steelman compromise."

"What about the Jerry Hughes place?" asked Ingram. "Will he quit gunshoelin' around tryin' to euchre me out of it?"

Controversy Ended by "Mason and Dixon" Line

As a boundary division the "Mason and Dixon" line got its name from the two men who surveyed and established it, Charles Mason and John Dixon. It was run by agreement between the Calvert, of Maryland, and William Penn to settle a controversy regarding the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Maryland. Mason and Dixon came from England in 1763 for that express purpose. They were both men of scientific attainments, Mason at one time being assistant at the royal observatory at Greenwich. They ran the line with great care, cutting a space eight feet wide through the forest and setting up a stone at the end of each mile. Every fifth stone was larger than the others and had on the north side the arms of William Penn and on the south those of Lord Baltimore. The smaller, intermediate stones had the letter "P" on the north surface and "M" on the south, for

Shakespeare's Income
Not all of the earlier authors were as badly treated as their legends have led the public to believe. Shakespeare, for example, may have been prodigal but he was not necessarily penniless. He received about 10 pounds—the equivalent of $400 today—for each of his plays, and he produced them at the rate of two a year. He also made $800 a year and more as an actor during most of his active career.—Golden Book.

"He's willing to leave that to the law," O'Hara answered.

"To the slick judge he bought to make him administrator. Not by a jugful. The only compromise I'll discuss is one where he gives up all claim to the Hughes place. Jerry was my friend. He owed me money when he died. I've a right to run the place till I'm paid what he owes. Steelman butted in without any claim whatever, merely because he wanted to devil me. Well, he won't get away with it." Ingram slammed his heavy brown flat down on the table, his eyes gleaming savagely.

O'Hara said, "Tell us the very best you'll do, the concessions you are willing to make. Perhaps we can offer inducements to have you leave the Hughes place."

"No, sir, I'm stayin' right there, an' you can piss the word that he'll rue the day he an' his killers try to drive us out."

O'Hara smiled, the friendly flash of white teeth that made men like him. "I haven't got much yet from you that Steelman will enjoy hearing. Haven't you any compromise in your system at all? We're supposed to be talking peace and not war."

"I'm ready to talk it any time. All I want is my rights. This trouble is none of my startin'. All I've done is defend myself."

"That's so," his partner chimed in. "We're right an' Steelman is wrong all the way. But we're good citizens not lookin' for trouble even with him. If Dave's agreeable I'm willin' to leave him the Indian agency market. He's got no claim to it, but just to show where we stand."

"An' I'll accept his proposition about the pass an' keep my cows on the west side. If he really means business let him fire that bunch of killers he has got hired," Ingram said.

"Will you get rid of yours if he does his, Mr. Ingram?" asked Smith-Beresford.

"I'll meet Steelman half way there, too, an' turn off those I don't need as range riders."

The difficulties between the factions were talked over in detail. When the two Circle S O partners rose to go they felt that as a first conference it had not been entirely unsuccessful. Ingram had made concessions—ungraciously and reluctantly, to be sure, but the fact that he had made them at all was encouraging.

"He talks just like Steelman does," O'Hara said to his friend, laughing ruefully. "You'd think to hear him that he was the most reasonable man in the world and that he never had wanted anything but the barest justice. But we've made a start, Lyulph. If we can keep the fire-eaters quiet long enough to come to an agreement we may succeed."

They rode out of Concho over the same trail O'Hara had followed the day he first saw the place. The valley looked parched and lifeless, as level as a floor, all undulations smoothed away.

As they looked down upon it a rider dashed around the curve of the trail and at sight of them dragged his horse to a halt. He was a Mexican vaquero in a steeple straw hat and earrings. While his horse was still in motion the man flung up a rifle and fired. The horse went up into the air, bucking furiously. The rifle clattered to the ground.

The Mexican was a superb rider, but the trail was narrow. It looked as though the buckler would pitch down the slope. To save himself the man flung his body from the saddle toward the hill, went clambering up a precipitous rocky outcrop of gneiss, lost his footing, and slid down again. Before he could regain his feet a sharp voice gave orders.

"Stick up your hands. No funny business."

O'Hara had slipped from the saddle and run forward, revolver in hand.

Damaged
Potter arrived at his studio one morning and found that during the previous night it had been rained by fire.

He at once telephoned to his insurance agent to come and estimate the damage.

An hour later the man arrived.

"Now, with regard to these canvases?" went on the agent. "You say they cost about $2.50 each."

"About that."

"Were they just plain canvases?" asked the insurance man.

"No, I'd painted 'em most of them," Potter returned.

"Ah," said the agent thoughtfully. "Then supposing we say $1.25 each?"

THE STORY

Garrett O'Hara, young lawyer, on his way to practice at Concho, wild western town, is shot at from ambush by Shep Sanderson, who mistakes him for Judge Warner, whom certain cattle interests wish to prevent holding court. Barbara Steelman, who thought the shot was directed at her, wants Garrett not to go to Concho because of the big cattle war. Steve Worrall tells Garrett about the cattle war between Ingram and Steelman, father of Barbara. Garrett tells Ingram he desires to remain neutral, but the latter declares there can be no neutrality. Bob Quantrell, young killer for Ingram, saves Garrett and an Englishman, Smith-Beresford, from being shot by Sanderson. The three become friends, Garrett accidentally witnesses a meeting between Barbara and Ingram. They are lovers, Garrett and the Englishman buy a ranch with Steelman as silent partner. Fitch, Steelman man, kills an Ingram follower. A posse, including Quantrell and Sanderson, capture and hang Fitch. Sanderson starts a fight at the ranch and Garrett and the Englishman are wounded. Ingram and Barbara appear and put an end to the fight. Quantrell changes sides and joins with the two tenderfeet. A lull in the cattle war follows. Quantrell kills Sanderson and another Ingram gunman.

He could not leave the subject on that note. It was incongruous that all the splendid life of her should be submerged in a shame born of an unhappy experience for which he did not feel her to blame. He looked away at broken line of the silhouetted hills pushing their crests skyward. Presently he said, as though the comment were a casual one, "I wouldn't think much of a man who couldn't do something foolish if—he was fond of—of some one."

"You mean of a girl," she specified.

"Say of a girl," he admitted, and the color came again into his face. Never before had he talked about such things to a woman.

"Yes, but a girl is different. You know that well enough. It's her place to be modest and wait. She mustn't show her feelings. If she's nice she's not supposed to have any—not till—till—"

O'Hara summoned his courage and blurted out what was in his mind. "You couldn't be anything but sweet and good. I wish—I wish you wouldn't talk that way. All you've done is what I'd want you to do if—"

He stopped. The hot blood stained his face from throat to forehead.

Barbara's soft and shining eyes thanked him.

"I'm glad you came here to live," she said softly.

He did not let his eyes meet hers, for he was afraid they might tell too much. She offered him only friendship, and already he knew that he wanted more than that.

The Jefferson County war had become more than a local issue. Both factions were justifying themselves in long letters to the newspapers. The territorial government favored Steelman because of his business connections, and Sheriff Banks had been removed from office on a technicality connected with his bond. Rumors of the feud had even reached Washington and there was talk of national interference.

Ingram's warriors had "jumped" two of Steelman's cowboys while they were branding a calf claimed by the Diamond Tail. There had been a fight and the two Hashknife riders had been left dead beside their fire.

In reprisal the Hashknife forces had captured Houck, a notorious gunman from the Indian territory employed by Ingram, and had left his body in a draw.

Smith-Beresford suggested compromise to Steelman.

"What say Garrett and I ride over and have a cozy little talk with Ingram? Might make the fellow see reason. Eh, what?"

Steelman reflected that it could do no harm. Moreover, it would be a good talking point later to be able to say that he and his partners had tried to arrange a compromise. Also, there was urgent need of peace financially if it could be brought about.

"Bufts me, Lyulph," he said.

"Question is about a compromise. What can we offer him?"

"What had you thought of offering?" Steelman asked, a flicker of cynical humor in his eyes. "He had not faith in the success of this mission. 'He'll think you've come to tell him we've had enough an' want to quit. But have it yore own way, boys. Go talk with him. Make yore proposition an' see what it gets you.'" red rag to a bull as far as Ingram goes. No, we'll leave you at home."

"Some of his warriors are liable to make trouble. Who do you aim to take along with you?"

"Nobody but Lyulph. We want to make it plain that this is to be a peace powwow. Perhaps we'll go absolutely unarmed."

"Hmp! You've still got a lot of those fool notions you brought West with you. There will be a dozen Ingram men in town, every last one of 'em armed. What guarantee you got that Ingram or his pardner Tom Harvey won't sic some of 'em on you, like Harvey did those fellows on me?"

"We'll have to take a chance on that."

But after O'Hara had talked the matter over with his two partners it was decided that the envoys should wear their revolvers, not as a threat but because it was the habit of cowboys and cattle men to carry them.

There was always a chance that the fact they had them in plain sight might save them from attack.

To Ingram and Harvey, sitting in the office of the store, came one of their clerks, a young fellow who had recently moved to the territory for lung trouble. His name was Millikan.

"They're alone," he reported. "Just rode up to the Concho house and have gone inside. They stopped for two-three minutes at the Longhorn corral before they went to the hotel."

"Steelman not with them, then?"

"No, sir."

"Drift out into the street an' make sure none of their men join 'em." After the clerk had gone Ingram turned to his partner. "We'll let 'em wait a while, Tom. Don't want 'em to get the notion we're anxious for a compromise."

Harvey agreed, but added a rider: "Just the same I reckon we better meet 'em halfway. If this war goes on much longer we'll be busted higher than a kite, you an' me."

Ingram looked out of the window at the red hill shoulder dotted with jack pines. Reluctantly he admitted to himself that what Harvey said was true. The expense of maintaining the little army of gunmen had been high. Trade had fallen off. It was a bad year for cattle from the market point of view. He had been forced to carry his allies, the small ranchers in the hills. Moreover, to meet Steelman's encroachments he had borrowed heavily and his short-time notes were falling due. He could borrow no more. The owner of the Hashknife had had business with most of the bankers in the territory and they were friendly to him rather than to his enemies in this feud. Add to all this the fact that there was talk of intervention from Washington. If soldiers came in from the fort there was little doubt that they would support Steelman, for he and Colonel Randolph had fought side by side in the Civil war.

In the field Ingram could hold his own. He was not disturbed about that, providing always that the United States troops did not come in. But he had read of generals who won every battle and lost the war. The thought of compromise was bitter to him, but he knew that if Steelman made a reasonable offer he must accept it.

Yet he was reluctant to admit even the possibility of defeat. "How about Steelman?" he said. "He must be near the end of his rope, too. His expenses are heavier than ours. It hasn't been any better year for cows for him than it has for us. He's borrowed more than we have, don't you reckon?"

"Maybe. But he's got more money backing him than we have. Far as we can see, Dave, we're down to the blanket."

"Well, let's hear what these fellows have got to propose."

Ingram and Harvey walked down the street to the Concho house. The fat hotel keeper, Brad Helm waddled forward and wheezed a greeting.

"The other gents are waitin' for you in the dining room," he added.

The cattle man moved with light strong tread into the dining room. His cool flinty eyes fastened on the two men sitting at the table. Both of them rose to greet the newcomers, though neither of them offered to shake hands.

"Glad to see you, gentlemen," Smith-Beresford said genially. "Make yourselves comfortable. Cigars? Whisky? Beer?"

"Nothing, thanks," Ingram answered brusquely. "You have a proposition to make, I understand."

"About time we have a talk. Eh, what? Sit down gentlemen."

Ingram flung himself carelessly into a chair. "I'm ready to listen," he said.

O'Hara opened the conference. "I don't know what you think, Mr. Ingram, but as law-abiding citizens Mr. Smith-Beresford and I feel that the present conditions are outrageous and deplorable."

"Are you talkin' for yoreselves or for Wes Steelman?" asked Ingram curtly.

"We're talking for him and for ourselves, too. He is ready to patch up a peace if you are."

"Had enough, has he?" jeered Harvey.

O'Hara looked at him. "If that's the spirit in which you are coming to this conference, Mr. Harvey, I'm afraid we won't get far," he said.

"Say, young fellow, you're a sneer bird to come here preachin' to us," Ingram's partner retorted angrily.

"Way, you've done more to make trouble than any other gunman on the

The One-Man Show

Governor-elect Arthur Seligman, according to reports from the inner sanctum, behind the veil, will listen to no advice in making his appointments, but on the other hand, he will first of all, turn out the "barnacles," unless they have resigned by the time he is ready to clean house. Now, just how far he intends to go with this procedure, it is impossible to even try to find out, as he will impart no information to anyone, neither will he seek advice from those who might offer wise council at this acute stage of the political game.

Does he give credit for his victory to the Democrats, pure and simple, or shall someone get him the building blocks so that he may see that New Mexico is a Republican state and without the votes of a large number of these Republicans his elector would have been impossible? Some of the barnacles as he insists on calling them, undoubtedly cast their votes for him, but nevertheless, he still considers them barnacles and anyone, no matter how much that individual might have supported him or how proficient his services might have been, he will go to the garbage can with the balance, if he is considered a Republican.

We do not question the fact that there are as many able men and women in the Democratic party in this state as in the Republican party, but it still remains, that there is a large portion of his party who will not solicit appointments at his hands and moreover, they cannot be drafted as he was to his candidacy for the governorship. Many are now awarming to Santa Fe with the hope of getting their noses into the political trough, who are as unfit for public office as pigs would be for a parlor, but they are not barnacles, according to the governor-elect, but let cuts go as they may, he will show political favors with a total disregard to efficiency or merit. We are anxiously awaiting the "one-man show," for his plan, which it no doubt will be carried out, will plunge him into an ocean of grief and be his undoing in two years hence.

BIGGER AND BETTER
THE GREAT AMERICAN VALUE
Fine-car distinction and quality in the new Chevrolet Six

Again, Chevrolet and General Motors have utilized their combined resources to establish a new and higher standard of value for the American motor car.

The new Chevrolet represents a type of economical transportation that America has long anticipated—a low-priced six styled with such striking talent and good taste, so smartly beautiful and complete in its perfection of detail, so advanced and refined mechanically that you will immediately recognize it as the Great American Value. This great value is the outcome of four basic Chevrolet advantages: (1) The savings of volume production in nineteen immense, modern plants. (2) The economies which result from great purchasing power. (3) The benefits of continuous research in General Motors laboratories and on the General Motors Proving Ground. And (4) the close association with the Fisher Body Corporation who, this year, have surpassed all their previous achievements in developing bodies of outstanding quality, refinement and value.

These basic advantages have made it possible to build a finer car at lower cost. They have enabled Chevrolet to offer a car with a longer wheelbase—greater roominess and comfort—strikingly smarter style—impressive new luxury—more thoroughly satisfactory performance—greater dependability. And to pass on these savings of efficient manufacturing to the buyer in the form of lower prices!

Hoover Asks Congress for $150,000,000 to Provide Work for Unemployed.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONGRESS, in its short session, was asked by President Hoover on Tuesday to appropriate from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 for the acceleration of public works construction in order to provide employment for men out of work. It was asked also to make this emergency fund distributable upon recommendation of a cabinet committee approved by the President.

"Our immediate problem," said the message "is the increase of employment for the next six months, and new plans which do not produce such immediate results, or which extend commitments beyond this period, are not warranted."

The President also urged that an appropriation be made to the Department of Agriculture to be loaned to farmers for the purpose of buying seed and feed for animals. He said congress should complete legislation, already started, in respect to Muscle Shoals, bus regulation, relief of congestion in the courts, reorganization of the border patrol in prevention of smuggling, and law enforcement in the District of Columbia. He said there was need of revision of the immigration laws and that the deportation laws should be strengthened.

Surveying the finances of the country, Mr. Hoover more than intimated the income tax reduction could not be continued on 1930 incomes. The estimated treasury deficit for the present fiscal year is about $180,000,000, and he declared that "most rigid economy is necessary to avoid increase in taxes."

NEXT day President Hoover sent in his annual budget message, in which he warned congress not to undertake any expansion of governmental expenditures other than those required under the proposed unemployment and drought relief programs, and said he regretted he could not recommend a continuance of the income tax reduction. The budget he submitted provides for total expenditures of $4,054,510,200 for the fiscal year 1932, exclusive of postal expenditures paid from postal revenues, as compared with estimated expenditures of $4,014,041,900 in the fiscal year 1931 and actual expenditures of $3,904,182,457 in the fiscal year 1930.

To the senate the President submitted the World court protocols, as he had promised, together with a message urging American ratification. There were indications that the question would not reach final settlement this winter.

Nominations sent to the senate included the name of William N. Doak of Virginia to be secretary of labor in place of James J. Davis; George Utia Smith and Frank H. McIninch as members of the power commission, and a long list of recess nominations made during the summer.

Senator Nye, chairman of the campaign fund investigation committee, believed he had uncovered large unreported expenditures in behalf of the Davis-Brown ticket in Pennsylvania, so he asked the senate to defer the swearing in of Jim Davis as senator. This would have meant that Joe Grandy would continue to occupy the seat, and many senators don't like him, so they voted 53 to 37 to seat Davis. On Wednesday both Davis and Dwight W. Morrow took the oath, and the senate was then complete, with 48 Republicans, 42 Democrats and 1 Farmer-Laborite.

IN HIS message on the state of the Union the President said nothing about prohibition, but in the budget message he made it clear the administration intended to continue its policy of wise enforcement of the law.

laws. He recommended an increase of more than three million dollars in the funds allotted to the prohibition and industrial alcohol bureaus.

This was highly pleasing to the dry members of congress, but it only stirred the wets to more energetic plans for attack on prohibition. These latter decided to try to knock out the bureau of prohibition increase, which Director Woodcock intends to use in employing about five hundred new enforcement agents. The wet leaders also resolved to make a fight on alcohol poisoning and for a vote on a beer modification bill. Senator Bingham and Representative Goss, both of Connecticut, already had introduced 4 per cent beer and medicinal liquor bills.

SENATOR TASKER L. ODDIE of Nevada has introduced a bill that will have considerable support in congress, even if it does not pass. It is designed to bar the entrance of products from Soviet Russia into the United States, especially lumber, pulp wood, wood pulp, matches, glue, coal, manganese ore, etc., which have allegedly been dumped into this country at prices below the cost of production here.

OVERPRODUCTION is the chief threat against American agriculture today, and if the farmers would avoid ruin they must all unite to curb it. So declared Secretary of Agriculture Hyde in his yearly report. He said:

"I want to emphasize the need for equitable, intelligent, systematic and collective action to bring supply into better relationship with demand."

Citing the particular overabundance of wheat, the agriculture secretary said producers of that grain could expect federal help only if they made a practical approach to the task of combining to adjust output to needs.

Lower farm incomes from the production of 1930 as compared with the previous year were predicted by the cabinet officer. He estimated the aggregate gross income from 1930 crops at about $9,950,000,000, or about 10 per cent less than in 1929. He attributed the current slump in agricultural prices to continued overproduction and "the worldwide business depression," resulting in lessened demand.

ESTIMATES put out by the American Federation of Labor set the number of American laboring men out of work in November at 4,900,000. President William Green predicted that at the present rate of increase the jobless would number 7,000,000 by February. Neither figure covered office workers or farm laborers out of employment.

It was announced in New York that John D. Rockefeller and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., had made a joint contribution of $1,000,000 to the local emergency employment committee's fund for the unemployed. This was a handsome gift, but not anywhere near so large, proportionately, as the contribution of any one of many thousands of citizens to the same cause.

"JIMMY," a little black Aberdeen Angus bred by J. F. McKinstry of King City, Mo., was declared the grand champion steer at the International Live Stock show in Chicago. He was sold at auction, bringing only $250 a pound. Herman Trellie, bringing a sample of hard red spring wheat which he grew at Weavely, Alberta, 1,300 miles north of Chicago, was crowned wheat champion; and Herbert C. Watson of Tipton, Ind., won the national corn championship. Purdue, the University of Illinois and Iowa State college took most of the blue ribbons for sheep and swine. Cellynne Clipper Star, a Shorthorn bull owned by F. W. Hubbell of Des Moines which has been winning first prizes all his life, took the senior and grand champion ribbons in his class. Fourteen hundred boys and girls of the 4-H club were guests of the exposition and special awards were given 42 of them for their agricultural achievements. A team from Oklahoma A. and M. college won the trophy for the best live stock judging, entering twenty-two other college teams. The international meat judging contest was won by a team of students from the University of Missouri, individual honors

SCOTLAND'S coal miners all went on strike against the application of the "spread-over" hours arrangement, but the English miners voted 250,000 to 200,000 to reject a proposal for a general strike. The vote represented a triumph for Prime Minister MacDonald and members of the cabinet, who had sat with the delegates' conference for hours, urging all efforts for settlement of the difficulties with the mine operators, including, if necessary, indorsement of the spread-over.

GOVERNMENT agents in Portugal uncovered a big conspiracy to bring on a revolution, part of the plan being to blow up public buildings in Lisbon. The police arrested a number of alleged conspirators and found more than 600 bombs in the homes of some of them. The plotters already were distributing bombs to extremists in taxicabs and motor trucks. Politicians of the Republican-Democratic party and several army officers are involved.

OFFICIAL announcement was made in Rome of the arrest by the Ova, the Fascist secret police, of about thirty men accused of conspiring against the Fascist regime, and the prisoners are said to have confessed their guilt. Some of the culprits are intellectuals and others are just Communists.

GERMANY has caused uneasiness throughout Europe by a protest to the League of Nations over the alleged terrorism against German minorities in Polish Silesia. The accusations made by Foreign Minister Curtius are serious and it is evident the German government intends to force an examination of the matter by the League's council during the meeting which opens January 10. The situation is made more grave by France's attitude, inasmuch as the Paris government is pledged to defend the integrity of Poland with the same determination as the Rhine, and military action between Germany and Poland ipso facto would draw French armed intervention against Germany.

Learning that the German fascists were organizing a frontier force to resist "Polish aggression," the police raided the castle of a baron near the Polish border, arrested 350 fascists all fully armed and in uniform and seized three truck loads of arms and munitions. On neighboring estates were found large caches of rifles, ammunition, barbed wire and other materials of war.

PREMIER TARDIEU of France, who had resisted the attacks of his opponents for months, finally was defeated Thursday when the senate passed a vote of non-confidence, 147 to 130. Of course Tardieu and his cabinet resigned, and the result was described as the most serious governmental crisis in many years. One of the chief factors in the downfall of Tardieu was the fact that several members of his cabinet were involved in a huge financial scandal, the failure of Alfred Oustric. He also was accused of trying to make himself a dictator.

MISSING for several days and given up for lost after she started a flight from Havana to Miami, Mrs. J. M. Keith-Miller of Australia turned up safe and sound on one of the Andros islands of the Bahamas group. She had been driven far out of her course by a gale and made a forced landing on the islet when her gas gave out. A fishing boat took her to Nassau. She planned to return for her plane and fly it to Miami.

ONE definite decision has been made by the Indian round table conference in London. It is that Burma is to be separated from India and set up as a dominion of the British empire at the earliest possible date. Burma has a population of about 15,000,000. Its capital is Rangoon.

Discovery of remains of what was believed to be a hitherto unknown race of giants was disclosed in Tucson by J. E. Coker of Sayopa, Sonora, a mining town, 300 miles south of the Mexican border. Coker, a mining engineer, said laborers clearing ranch land near the Yaqui river in the vicinity of Sayopa dug into an old cemetery where bodies of men averaging eight feet in height were found buried tier on tier.

Tabulation of the November 4 general election vote, as officially canvassed by Arizona's fourteen board of supervisors, gives Democratic Governor-elect George W. P. Hunt a majority of 2,780 over Gov. John C. Phillips, his Republican opponent. The vote is: Hunt, 48,974; Phillips, 46,194.

Twelve per cent of the work on the Middle Rio Grande conservancy district, the ten-million-dollar flood control and reclamation project under way in the Rio Grande river valley, is estimated to have been completed to date, and with 700 men employed, the project is being pushed rapidly.

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad recently served notice upon New Mexico that it will refuse to pay $200,000 taxes in a Federal Court action which will take the entire tax assessment system of New Mexico into court, including the problems of determining actual value and equalization of taxes.

An attempt to restrain New Mexico from collecting its five-cent gasoline tax on gasoline for airplanes was instituted recently in Federal Court at Santa Fe. The complaining company is the Transcontinental and Western Air, Inc., which operates passenger air service over New Mexico, and the suit is against State Comptroller Rupert Asplund.

Reports reached Tucson recently of a gold discovery by Richard Ballas, near Covered Wells, ninety miles west of Tucson. The new find is in the Red Rock claims in the Quitova mining district, near where gold was discovered last February by New Meadows. The gold bearing ore, the report said, is white quartz, tentatively estimated to run 50,000 per ton.

Twenty-five thousand dollars, to be used for the purchase of new books, will be given to the library of the University of New Mexico by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. This announcement was made in Albuquerque by President J. F. Zimmerman, who has just received a letter notifying him of this decision from Robert M. Lester, assistant to the president of the corporation.

Although the contracts have not been awarded officially, the national park service announced in San Francisco, the low bidders on the sinking of an elevator shaft and the installation of an elevator at Carlsbad Cavern, N. M. Charles M. Dunning of Phoenix, Ariz., with a bid of $69,215, was low for the sinking of the shaft. The Pacific Elevator & Equipment Company of San Francisco, with a bid of $18,425, was low for installing the elevator.

McKinley county officials, accompanied by federal prohibition agents, got several pounds of marijuana and quantities of liquor when they raided the home of Marx Torres and Guadalupe Martinez, in Gallup, N. M.
