Lutz Funeral One of Biggest In the History of Roswell

All that was mortal of Charles H. Lutz was tenderly laid away yesterday afternoon at South Park, the remains being consigned back to earth with full military honors.

Following a service at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Talmage Chapel, conducted by Rev. LeRoy Thompson, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, the members of the Charles M. deBremond Post of the American Legion took charge of the service.

Members of the American Legion, Woman's Auxiliary of the Legion and Disabled American Veterans attended the service in a body and the large crowd present at the service and burial testified to the love, esteem and respect in which Charles H. Lutz was held by all who knew him.

Casket bearers were E. L. Brown, T. J. Pearson, Jr., Car

McNally, Reed Mulkey, Tom McClure, and Eddie Weist.

Immediately following the chapel service, the American Legion assumed charge of the ceremony and at South Park, eight members of the Legion fired a final volley over the grave, after which taps was sounded.

The New Mexico Military Institute battalion attended the service yesterday standing in open ranks as the funeral procession passed. The service was one of the most dignified and most impressive ever held in this city.

Music at the Talmage-Chapel was furnished by the choir of the First Presbyterian church.

Floral tributes mutely, but eloquently testified to the popularity of Charles H. Lutz, who died at the age of 35 years, in the prime of life, while serving his first term as postmaster of the city of Roswell.—Roswell Record, sent from there at the proper time.

Also to make a selection of 12 books for the Library, to be ordered at once.

Mrs. Bonnell served delicious refreshments of cocoa, cake and home-made candy. — Publicity Chairman.

50,000 Watt Power Radio Stations Numerous

With so many high-powered radio broadcasting stations of 50,000 watt power, namely: WOAI, San Antonio; KMOX, St. Louis; KNX, Hollywood; WENR and WLS, Chicago; WFAA, Dallas and WBAF, Ft. Worth; and KFI, Los Angeles, finding a suitable program now becomes an easy matter.

We have long since stopped trying to get far distant stations, as we find that all good programs are broadcast over the National and Columbia chain systems—all the rest are mainly phonograph records. We like to tune in on a high-powered station, because you get practically no static disturbances. With the National and Columbia chain broadcasts coming over any one of these very powerful radio stations, it surely is excellent. KRLD, a 10,000 watt station in Dallas seems to come in clearly; they broadcast mainly Columbia network features.

Are Young People Religious?

Come and see. The young people of Mrs. Spencer's Sunday School class will have charge of the services in the Methodist Church next Sunday evening at 7:30. The services will consist principally of vocal and instrumental music given by the young people. They have chosen the text for a short sermon on Three Abiding Things and the Greatest Thing.—Nothing jazzy, nothing sensational; just a serious-minded group of Carrizozo's own young people gathered to worship God. Let him who does not love and believe in our young people, stay away. Let him, who does love and believe in them, come. The church should be full. You may be assured, they will have something good for us. This is a fine group of young people, both interested and interesting. Just lay aside the lesser things—come and worship with the young people.

High School Notes

By High School Reporter:

Last Thursday's assembly period was elevated to entertainment by two of the boys of the Post Graduate Class. These two (may I say gentlemen) expounded and illustrated some of the theories of that great public benefactor and defender, Harry Houdini. The main event, however, was Miss Melara's partaking of the so-called beauty-giving fluid, which was afterwards found to contain all manner of reptiles, varmints and what-have-you.

Mr. Gillette is making fine progress with his class in College Bookkeeping and Accounting, and all those enrolled report an interesting and very instructive course.

The School Board held a meeting Monday night and decided many important questions, chief among which was the decision, with which Mr. Groce undoubtedly had a great deal to do, to grant us a vacation of eleven days, beginning on Wednesday, December 23, and lasting until Monday, January 4. We are very grateful to the Board for this long respite from the stren-

Changing Styles in Christmas Toys

Santa Claus Assistants

The ToyMaker

By LOUISE M. COMSTOCK

TIME was when the job of Santa Claus was a snap. Twelve months supervising the fulfillment of orders in the manufacture of a standardized line of toys, and then a romantic evening whirling a picturesque whip over willing Dancer and Hiltzer, visiting friendly cottages with wide, welcoming chimneys and capacious fireplaces, stuffing sturdy, hand-knit stockings with wooden dolls, rubber balls and sugar plums to fill in too, heel and extra corners. A mere nothing in those golden days, even the responsibility of distinguishing between the neatly darned sock of good brother Hon and the ragged one of that rascally Willie—very few little boys but were good, and deserving of sugar plums, and easily pleased, when father was a boy!

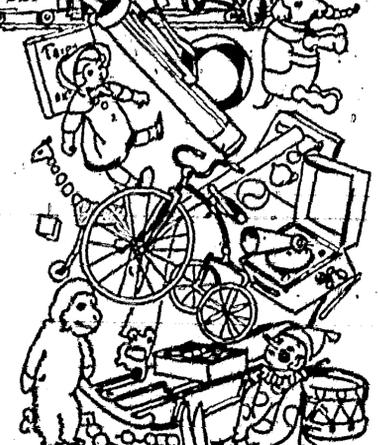

But changing times, ushering in steam heat, kitchenettes with only two windows on a courtyard and a ventilator on the corridor to accommodate the rotund Babel, chiffon lines and a universal slouch to the great god Style, have put Santa in the big business executive class. Today we make him annually responsible for designing, constructing and distributing some $400,000,000 worth of toys, all with a nice discrimination between the good and the poor, a careful consideration for childish tastes, and correct application of changing styles.

Children's playthings, always imitating the possessions and tools of their elders, have thus naturally from the very earliest times followed closely upon mankind's changing whims and fancies. The dolls unearthed in Egyptian tombs are made of wood and sometimes have movable arms and legs, but they all show that stiffness and emphasis upon the profile view characteristic of Egyptian art. Early African dolls without heads were given to children of the Mohammedan faith, for their religion forbade the reproduction of the human features. Among the toys of early Persian children we are not surprised to find many animals, tigers with movable heads, crocodiles whose lower jaws work up and down, lions of limestone on wooden wagons for the owner to pull about, or a carved hedgehog on wheels. Roman children played with two-wheeled carts like the chariots in which their public heroes raced. Toys during the Middle Ages, if we are to judge from the few preserved for us, included knights mounted on horses modeled in clay, and slender ladies of terra cotta modeled in the elaborate costumes of the period painted in gold and brightest hues.

It is the mechanical toy, perhaps, which shows most emphatically the influence of present-day tendencies on children's playthings. From the tinest tin automobile that winds up and darts furiously a few feet across the floor, to the $1,000 mechanical wonder which succeeds by means of springs and electricity to simulate exactly a real cat or a whole circus parade in action—the purchase, usually, so toy dealers tell us, of rich grandparents and uncles who wish to wind up the cat and watch the circus themselves—these toys employ every invention of modern science, and they keep pace also with current interests.

Toy counters today are crowded with miniature motion picture cameras and projectors, some of them capable of carrying 500 feet of film and all of them, so they are advertised, easily managed by a twelve-year old. A few seasons ago, when a transatlantic flight was still novel enough to command a streamer headline in all the newspapers, the mechanical airplane was in high demand, and toy golf equipment or indoor golf games dominated in the toy store at the same time that miniature golf greens began appearing in every vacant lot. Today mechanical racing automobiles and toy airplanes are supplanting the airplane in popularity, and automobile or horse racing games, and football, are crowding out golf in indoor games. Carry-car trucks with a detachable trailer capable of transporting four small models, and delivery wagons stocked with popular trademark wares keep this type of toy up-to-date.

While real mothers must be content with babies upon whom current styles in curly or straight hair, blue eyes or brown, have no influence, one to ten-year-old mothers can be much more particular. For styles in dolls change yearly it seems. In grandmother's day all dolls were quite grown up, the youngest of them being prim young ladies in pantaloons and artificial curls. The baby-doll, simulating a real baby, is a comparatively newcomer, and even it has suffered periods of more and less popularity with changing juvenile tastes. In 1928 the Marxes gained beauty with the baby face languished unwanted on the toy counter, while the "Mopper" doll, with dark bobbed hair, natty clothes and a complexion of crimson medially sun-tanned found a happy home. This year, thanks to the Empress Dowager or whoever it was who revived in us a taste for things old-fashioned and sweetly feminine, curls, dimples, long lashes and flilly wardrobes are in again. And baby dolls! Little daughter has apparently given up dreams of a career and requests of Santa Claus for this Christmas—nothing more modern than a doll's house to keep in order and a realistic baby doll to be loved and nursed and dressed and redressed. Her dreams of miniature domesticity are also, it seems, more elaborate and thoroughgoing than those of grandmother, to whom the doll itself was all-sufficient. They include a ready-made wardrobe, for what up-to-date little girl is going to slave over a toy sewing machine, even an electric one, or prick her fingers with a grown-up needle, what with the grand styles and the bargain prices of read-to-wear dolls' clothes. And they include also electric ranges that really cook, carpet sweepers, or better yet, vacuum cleaners that really clean.

A very different type of doll, but one also indicating the influence of current tastes even on children's toys, is the caricature doll, stuffed and painted to represent characters already familiar through the talking pictures, popular juvenile books, or widely read comic strips and

SOMEbody's COMING
 Kris Kringle is coming,
 Kris Kringle is coming,
 Kris Kringle is coming to town
 He wears a big sack
 On the top of his back,
 And loads like a funny old clown.
 Now wait just a minute:
 I'll tell what is in it.
 Then won't your eyes sparkle with joy!
 There's something with curls
 For good little girls,
 And something for nice for each boy.
 There are famous hand-dolls
 And all sorts of dolls
 To please little folks Christmas day!
 There are gay horses prancing,
 And Dandy Jacky dancing,
 And everything fitted for play.
 From Kris Kringle's chin
 Hangs a plenty of things—
 Tin trumpets and watches and drums;
 Noah's ark painted red,
 A little girl's bed,
 And soldiers with very big drums.
 From out of his pockets
 He'll take sugar biscuits
 And candies, all red, white and blue;
 And there will be kisses
 For nice little misses,
 And sweetmeats in plenty for you.

today supplement "funnies" Mickey Mouse, a foot high and true to the original to the last whisker, may not inspire a young owner with spasms of mother-love, but who would refuse a celebrated movie star warm welcome into the doll family circle? Thus Mickey Mouse, and Kraky Kat, and the rollicking Jimbo, as well as the entire Asop's Fables gang, come up neatly in black velvet, and nice members of Our Gang, modeled in bisque and waiting for their owner to paint them as they should be painted, are important newcomers in the doll world. Orphan Annie and Skeezix and Beulah are among a number of comic strip celebrities reproduced as dolls this year. Ross O'Neill's "Kewpie" comes up in pink plaid plush, make a cuddly companion for baby's crib; and from juvenile literature have been borrowed A. A. Milne's funny little bear, Winnie the Pooh, featured in a number of toys this year, and the whole Raggedy family, from Raggedy Ann down.
 Ask anybody who has outgrown childhood just which toy he remembers with the greatest satisfaction, and you will find, like most out of ten, that it was something very simple, a set of blocks, a rag doll, or even something which he made himself, out of spoils, or tin cans. The real pleasure afforded by this type of toy persists in spite of mechanical wonders and layettes in which everything from nursing bottle to safety-pin is provided. Psychologists, however, have brought it up to date, and now present us with the term "activity toys," and point out anew the eternal value of the plaything which makes the child the actor rather than the spectator, which demands youthful ingenuity, calls forth infant imagination, exercises childish brains and muscle.

Thus we find always in style all outdoor games and playthings, from the good old bat and ball to a mechanical see-saw so constructed that it takes only one child to operate it and teeter deliciously up and down without the peril of a sudden bump when the partner at the other end disembarks. Thus also the permanent appeal of tool boxes, paints and blocks of clean paper, pencil boxes, modeling clay, building blocks or any of the elaborate construction outfits by which the youthful engineer may build bridges and skyscrapers to his heart's content. And thus the demand predicted this Christmas for cowboy boots, or toy revolvers in a holster on a wide belt, by which the small boy is suddenly metamorphosed from the terror of the fifth grade to a hero of the western plains.

Modern child psychologists have also added impetus this year to the sale of toys classed as "educational." Instruction cloaked as amusement, like a sugar-coated pill, may now be pleasantly administered in any number of playthings. When the instruction is for the very young, the educator moreover prescribed toys that are durable under normal handling, and above all, absolutely hygienic. No more fragile dolls which the lusty infant will more than likely crush with its first ecstatic hug. No more blocks from which the bright colors may be sucked by any aggressive baby, or metal toys with sharp corners or cutting edges. There is, of course, some educational advantage in giving a delicate piece of mechanism to an older child, especially if care be taken to impress upon him its proper care and use.

For the child whose tastes are already sufficiently developed to be evicted, the Christmas shopper may choose from cut-out puzzles, composed of hundreds of fascinating colored blocks cut out with a jig-saw, which one labors to fit together and is rewarded by a lovely map, or a famous masterpiece of painting! There are sets of chemicals done up in small vials and boxes, with directions for combining them to produce some of our commonest chemical phenomena; and construction sets by which the boy is taught the principles of the cantilever bridge or of modern step-back architecture; and electric transformers which urge their possessor to make his own electric toys.

Games, whether they profess, as many of the newer games do, to be of educational value, or merely claim to amuse, all nevertheless have a certain tendency to quicken the mind and eye, to train the muscles in automatic response. Moreover, games have this year attained a certain definite style appeal through the present popularity of "adult games." The fact that grown-ups are playing them has this year lent new attraction to many of the simplest of children's games, and made game-playing, in itself a sophisticated and interesting thing to do.

Just when and why the current rage for adult games commenced nobody seems to know. Some say it is the result of the vast interest people as a whole take today in outdoor sports; when the baseball and football season is over and it is impossible to take the weekly work-out at golf or tennis, what more natural than that people should resort to their own indoor games, in their own homes? Perhaps officials of the large steamship companies, who have popularized their cruises by filling in the long days of "water, water everywhere" with deck tennis, shuffleboard and table games in the smoking rooms, are responsible. At any rate, last winter people in search of amusement broke away from standard auction bridge through contract, backgammon because a dangerous rival, and, first thing we knew, pool tables appeared in the basement, tennis tables in the attic, guests were given their choice between bridge and club parachead, and the larger department and sporting goods stores installed flourishing adult game sections. This consequently will be a Christmas of many games. Children and elders alike will drag out such old-time favorites as Flipch and Authors, or amuse themselves with the familiar electric questioner. They will familiarize themselves with famous events in history by a new game based on the History of Mankind of Van Loon, and go into convulsions, excellent to offset a heavy Christmas dinner, over an imported game called Jerry.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Runaway Stage
 JUST as modern railroads sometimes are wrecked, shaking up or even killing passengers, so the stage coaches that were the chief mode of transportation between the Atlantic coast and the Middle West along the old National road a century ago, had their mishaps, sometimes fatal.

Runaways were infrequent, but several are recorded. In three or four there was loss of life, but more often the passengers suffered only minor injuries when the stages overturned. David Gordon, who was driving for James Reeside's "June Bug" line—so named by Reeside's rival, Lucius W. Stockton, who said the line would last only until the June bugs came—was driving west from Claysville, Pa., soon after he had started handling the reins, when his horses ran off.

The coach carried a full load of passengers, and young Gordon, seeing that the flying horses could not be checked by ordinary methods, pulled the coach off the road and turned it over against a high bank. The passengers were badly frightened, but none was hurt. They attributed their escape from death or injury to the skillfulness of the driver. After righting the coach, which was little damaged, Gordon proceeded to Roney's Point.

This incident, or accident, gave Gordon a wide reputation as a cool and skillful driver and he rapidly advanced to the front rank of his calling. When the "June Bug" line was withdrawn from the road, as Stockton had predicted, Gordon took service with the "Good Intent" line and continued with it until all through lines of stage coaches were taken from the road.

Gordon was a very strong man. He was 6 feet tall and weighed 200 pounds, and there was not an ounce of fat on his body. It was said that he could fight, but was not quarrelsome.

On one occasion he was compelled to engage in a knockdown, in self defense. That was at Triadelphia, Va. Three toughs fell upon him at that place, declaring their intention of "joking him up," as the phrase then was. They failed ignominiously. Gordon routed all three completely and decisively, and they never again sought an encounter with him. And the example of their fate rendered others with pugnaclous proclivities to be shy about encountering him.

David Gordon was one of a class of quiet, well-mannered, soft-spoken stage drivers who did much to keep the reputation of all coach drivers of his time on a high plane before the public.

According to A. J. Endsley, who was born and reared along the old National road, the old time stage coach drivers, as a class, were better morally than the old wagoners who drove the huge freight wagons along the highway.

When the great road was opened, these wagoners immediately took possession, usurping all rights, and kept to the middle of the highway with their long trains of brightly painted covered gondolas filled with the farm products of the West, or the manufactured goods and staples of the East, forcing other vehicles to turn around them.

The stage drivers resented this autocracy, and decided to put a stop to it. They armed themselves with long poles, at the ends of which they placed spikes. On a given day, they started out, and as they met the wagon trains, refused to turn out, driving into the wagon trains with their make-shift lances and completely raking them. The hardy wagoners knew when they were beaten, and the fast stages thereafter were given the right of way.

Endsley says that some of the old stage drivers were given to blasphemy and heavy drinking, but that the worst of the stage drivers could be beaten in those respects by most of the wagoners.

He named, besides Gordon and "Red" Bunting, as well behaved stage drivers Thomas Gray, Alex Thompson, John Mills, Charley Howell, John High, William Robinson, Isaac Frazee, Isaac Denny, James A. Carroll, Samuel Haldet, William White, Samuel Jacob, Thomas Moore, William Bishop and John Bunting.

Two of the old stage drivers, William Robinson and Fate Side, were among the most noted penmen in the country.

"Bond" and "Stock" Holders
 The primary distinction between a bondholder and a stockholder is that the former is a creditor and the latter a part-owner. This is a general distinction only, and does not take into account the various finer legal distinctions. The bondholder lends his money to the company, and is promised interest at a stated amount, as well as repayment of the principal sum at a future date. The stockholder, on the other hand, has a certain undivided share in the property of the company, the right to participate in profits, and generally voting privileges.

Biddy Outwits Weasel
 How a laying hen outwitted a weasel is reported from Carnwath, England. The biddy had been in the habit of laying an egg daily on the doorstep of a farmhouse, and just as regularly a weasel sucked the offering dry. Apparently the hen discovered the theft, for it now takes the precaution of laying its daily contribution on the farmer's easy chair in the kitchen. And the weasel is too timid to enter the house.

New Chevrolets Now Displayed Aid Employment Throughout U. S.

Chevrolet's new car for 1932, embodying silent Syncro-Mesh transmission in combination with selective free wheeling as standard equipment at no extra cost, and practically every proven automotive advance of recent years, is now displayed at dealer showrooms throughout the country. While remaining in the price class in which it won world leadership this year, the new 1932 models offer features heretofore considered exclusive to the high price field, as well as a new front end mounting never before shown on any car. Called "The Great American Value for 1932," the line offers in support of this slogan a twenty per cent increase in power, faster acceleration, top speeds of 65 to 70 miles an hour, new Fisher bodies with a modern streamline styling, down-draft carburetion, counter-balanced crankshaft, finger-touch front seat adjustment and many other refinements over the 1931 models, which, from the standpoint of public acceptance, were the most successful in the history of the company. Twenty standard and de luxe models are in the new line, of which the Special Sedan, pictured above, is the aristocrat. The lower view shows the new front end and the massive, powerful appearing hood enclosing the improved engine. In addition to interest centering on the cars themselves, the announcement at this time has national significance in that activity brought on by production of the new cars is expected, at conservative estimates, to add materially to the earnings of 200,000 people throughout the country just before the holiday season and before the severe winter season sets in. The company's 21 domestic plants all are busy producing cars as fast as precision manufacturing limits will permit so that deliveries may be made with the least possible delay. More than 30,000 of the new cars already have been built for dealers everywhere, and more than that quantity are expected to roll off the assembly lines during the present month. The new car is the first in the low-price field to offer the combination of silent Syncro-Mesh transmission with selective free wheeling as standard equipment at no extra cost. A control button on the instrument panel enables the driver to use the free wheeling device only when he desires, and he is thus able to utilize the full braking power of the engine when desired. The front end offers a radically changed appearance, with a new radiator, a radiator grille built integral on all models, a double tie-bar arching gracefully between the fenders, on which are mounted bullet-shaped headlamps and a trumpet-type horn just beneath the left headlamp. All models have adjustable hood ports chrome plated on all the sport and de luxe models, and oil have cowling ventilators controlled from the driver's seat. With the new streamlined bodies, the external view has been eliminated, and its purpose is now served by an internal vane adjustable to any position in front of the driver. The left front window also has an equalizer built in so that the driver may adjust the window with little effort. On the top rail of the instrument panel is a removable ash tray for the convenience of front seat passengers. Cigarettes, silk assist cords, window shades, arm rests and ash trays on both sides of the rear seat, dome light, foot rests, large door pockets and many other big car refinements are standard with various models in the new line.

IT'S a high-sounding name, Marie-Louise-Eugenie-Augustine de Montijo, Empress of the French, wife of Napoleon III, but few people know her mother was the daughter of William Kirpatrick, American Consul at Malaga, Spain. The great ladies who attended social functions in France's magnificent palaces didn't like the little upstart. Finally Eugenie complained of an insult from the wife of a high official at a New Year's Eve ball at the Tuilleries Palace in Paris. The Emperor heard of the insult and calmly said to Eugenie, "I will avenge you." Three days later he proposed. Eugenie's beauty and charm set the style in the gay French capital. Sixty years later she is again setting the style, for Eugenie hats are sweeping the country. Eugenie smoked cigarettes and broke down many ancient prejudices just as the American woman taking advantage of the removal of certain harmful irritants from cigarettes by such modern methods as the toasting process including the use of ultra violet rays has broken down the prejudice against smoking by women. Modern science has achieved many wonders and the creative mind is always at work to devise such aids to smokers as the notched-tab cellophane package which allows one to open the moisture-proof package by simply holding down one tab and tearing off one corner by pulling on the other tab.

The etelude dates back to the Fifth century when it was occupied by the Visigoths, while its cathedral of St. Nazaire is of the Eighth century. The city is so old that Julius Caesar saw it 2,000 years ago. It is one of the 12 great sights of the world, and by itself is worth crossing the Atlantic to see.

Had to Leave That At Waterloo station an American, arriving by the boat train, engaged a taxi to drive him to his hotel. Steamer trunks, hat boxes, dispatch cases, overcoats, and walking sticks were piled on the taxi. The driver peered out through a crack in the mountain. "Is that all?" he asked. "Yes," said the American, "that's the lot." "Well, well," replied the driver, as he let in the clutch. "I suppose they wouldn't let you bring the Statue of Liberty." -London Tit-Bits.

A Candle in the Wilderness

THE STORY

Robert Heathers and William Heydon, to escape secular and religious tyranny, leave England in 1634 for the New World. They are welcomed at Boston by Rev. Doctor Cotton and make acquaintance with Amos Todkill, veteran soldier and woodman. Heydon falls in love with Elizabeth Brade. The young men settle down to the life of the colonists. Adverse comment forces them to disperse with their pretty cook, Mabel Hartley. Robert is smitten with Peggy Weld, who is engaged to James Roswell. Mabel Hartley and a youth, whom she says was Heydon, are accused of adultery. Heydon and Heathers disappear. Heydon is apprehended and brought into court.

Winthrop proclaimed the will of the court, saying:

"William Heydon, the evidence of a grave violation of the law is conclusive. You have offered no defense. Therefore, your guilt is not in question, although you have not as yet pleaded. Before the court takes further action it has decided to await the return of a material witness. Meanwhile you will be confined in the prison house until the court sends for you. I warn you to prepare yourself to suffer the extreme penalty of the law within a month from this day."

Mabel Hartley was ill in bed and unable to stand on her feet.

Severe as were the words of the governor, the Brades and all other good people—save Dudley and Endicott, who had voted for immediate death—were relieved by the respite.

That evening Peggy Weld and her lover had their first quarrel. Roswell was a young engineer who had come that year from Cambridge and gone to work in the growing colony. He was a big, brawny, handsome youth of twenty-three, with dark hair and eyes. Unlike Peggy he was of a proud and serious temper. He had joined the church and won the respect and confidence of all the great men. His sense of humor was undeveloped. Her free, untried, original opinions often shocked him. "She is young," he said to himself. "I can change her course with a little steering." It was the splendid physical endowment of Peggy Weld that chiefly attracted him. They had been discussing the case of William Heydon. This was her query:

"Do you think that anyone would enjoy a sinless world? Doctor Cotton would have to stop preaching and you would have no more fortifications to build. The rich would give to the poor and the only ones who worried would be the men who had something. Is a little while no one would have anything. Even virtue would be spineless. We are human beings, and if we were perfect we would not be here."

"Would you have us wink at adultery?" Roswell asked.

"No, but the Roundheads should be at least as merciful as the Lord. We are not ancient Hebrews living three thousand years ago. I hate your court. Those men should be left alone here to sing psalms and preach sermons to one another until they were dead."

"You're a rebel cynic," said Roswell with a frown.

"I'm just an English human being and I claim the right to speak my mind."

"Your talk is indiscreet. Things are different in New England."

With some feeling she continued: "I demand the right to be sincere even in New England. I am as I am and if you do not like me I could be content."

Roswell, who was rather fond of himself, was out of patience. His answer came quickly:

"I hope that you could not be content with Robert Heathers of whom you have had so much to say."

"With Robert Heathers? Indeed I think that I could. He is a gentleman and I like him in spite of all the gossip."

In a temper he picked up his hat, bowed and left her.

Peggy and her brother went to the Brades. While they were doing what they could to comfort the stricken family, Sir Harry arrived with important news. The night of the crime Todkill had left the town in his canoe. The tavern ship was in the harbor. It was going out with the tide at midnight and up the coast among the fishermen. Men passing the ship in a pinnace about eleven-thirty saw a canoe, with two men aboard, coming alongside the anchored ship. In the moonlight they were clearly visible.

"Robert Heathers and his friend Todkill!" Bess exclaimed. "We must find them and get the rope on the right neck."

Peggy Weld went to Bess and kissed her and said: "We both have a bit of old eye in us. Let us not say hard things of either boy. Whether it was one or the other who did it, I have a heart full of sympathy for him."

Bess answered: "But Robert ran away like a coward and left the woman and my lover to suffer disgrace and death alone."

"It is time that some one spoke up for Robert Heathers," said Peggy. "He is my friend and I cannot any longer be silent. It is easy to convict him when he cannot speak for himself. But there is not a feather's weight of evidence against him. Why did he run away? I think that this theory is as reasonable as any. If William had some home in a panic and confessed that he had been caught with a pretty wench, what would Robert have done? Well, he would have had to witness against his friend or commit perjury. Would he not have run away to escape the call of the court? Dear Bess, it is easy for one's judgment to be warped in the heat of her affection. I have been thinking of what William said to you. When he said that he was no coward did he not wish to have you remember that he would take his punishment like a man? In his wish that you would understand, does it mean anything more than his hope that a great truth would temper your thought of him, namely, that after all he is only human and that yielding to temptation, as he had done, began in the Garden of Eden and has continued ever since."

A Tale of the Beginning of New England

By IRVING BACHELLER

These arguments had no effect on the opinions of Bess. She said: "I know William as you do not—as you never could know him. He has a great soul."

"William Heydon, the Evidence of a Grave Violation of the Law is Conclusive."

"Well, great souls have yielded to temptation," Peggy answered.

Harry Vane had listened with interest to these arguments. He said:

"I have more news and I think that you should both hear it. I sat for an hour by the bedside of Mabel Hartley. She admitted that she might have been in error in the identification of her paramour. She did not see his face even by the light of the constable's lantern."

"But she must have had an appointment," said Peggy.

"She says that she had no appointment."

"Poor woman!" Peggy exclaimed. "I am not so sinless that I have no sympathy for her. Women always get the worst of it. We have moved to a strange world where laws are made for saints and not for human beings. Enforced sanctity is a fright to me."

"It's only because you are accustomed to be favored by the law," said Sir Harry. "In England we hang for stealing. That catches the poor man. Here they hang for offenses that catch the rich as well as the poor. In America the gentleman is on the same footing as the fishmonger. In England adultery increases as you ascend the social scale. It has become a matter of grave concern in all the Old world."

Roswell Brade said: "We shall know the truth soon. The court is sending for Robert Heathers. As soon as he comes we shall see our way."

Young Sir Harry took the hand of the Lady Bess, saying:

"This deep trouble gives to your face a radiance curious and yet beautiful. I have never seen a face more fair to look upon. It should not be spotted with too much grieving. Before you leave us here is more hopeful news for you. I have had a long talk with the constable, Mr. Hachallah Grout. He, too, has admitted that he might have erred in his identification, in view of the fact that the young men are alike in height, weight and color. He admits that his judgment as to the identity of the man had been more or less influenced by the discovery of the coat. I have put the court in a quandary. Nothing will be done until Robert returns. They are sending an officer to find him."

"Thank you," said Bess. "You will know in time that my William is not the guilty man."

With that the girl left them. Her mother followed her to her room. The Lady Bess was depressed and in need of comfort. It may be that some "horseless courier of the air" had come to her from the lonely William on his bed of straw in the prison house.

CHAPTER V

Mr. John Samp, Constable, Finds Amos Todkill

Next day a constable with an able seaman set out in a shallop to find Robert Heathers. The colony had a long wait for news of them. They found the tavern ship at anchor in a little harbor far up the coast. More than a score of fishermen, including the infamous Thomas Wannerton and the pirate Dixie Bull, thronged its taproom and decks in a wild spree. They traded fish and furs for beer and bread and meal and clothing and kill-devil, a local name for strong water.

The constable was a fat blustering Englishman of the name of John Samp, with red hair and mutton-chop whiskers and the paunch of an ox. His large weathered face had the lusty redness of raw beef. His belt was like the middle hoop on a hoghead. He had a thick bovine neck, bare to his breast, and a shrewd intelligence. He was able to read and write.

Amos Todkill saw and recognized him as he neared the ship when night was falling. He ran to Robert, saying: "Go over the starboard side into our canoe and pull off a bit and lie to within hail till ye hear my whistle."

The two were prepared for all emergencies. Amos went to the landing stair and met Mr. Samp upon after his climb.

He took the hand of the constable and said:

"John, my eyes are glad. What news have you?"

Samp answered: "News! Must I bring news to you? Well, then, there are fewer fish in the sea than when I set sail on it."

"Good luck is fond o' good company," said Todkill.

"Also my belly is full o' emptiness. There's news for you."

"Come, let us drain a cup or two." They could scarcely hear each other among the noisy, jolly scamen who were singing and shouting and arguing on the deck. Some were engaged in feats of strength.

"What side o' hell is this?" Samp asked as they made their way to the taproom. His face bore a look of overwhelming gravity.

"The north side! Not often as hot as now. 'They're a lot o' roysterin' good fellows. Be sociable and rolly-polly with 'em and ye have no trouble. They're in the midst o' a plenty that they see none too frequent."

Samp looked around him. In a moment he said:

"They're like cattle in a cornfield. It puts me in mind o' Morton's Merry-mound. As the Lord's my savior I never had such a thifst on me! Our beer give out yesterday and our water today."

"It's a leaky keg that goes to sea," said Amos. "Here's to fair winds!"

They drained three cups and then another. The last had a baptism of strong water.

"My heart is in the little town," said Amos. "Tell me what has happened there."

The constable was growing dignified and philosophical. His native cunning was now a bit diluted. His gravity deepened as he answered:

"I reckon you know as well as I 'bout that woman trouble in the pine thicket."

"As God's my witness—not a quiltain."

"You can lie like Satan and look like a lamb just dropped. The woman swore it to Will Heydon. A coat found in the briars had a letter o' his in its pocket. The hue and cry come on him hiding in the wood. He is in prison. It's likely he'll wear the rope necktie. They have sent me here to get Robert Heathers. The case is stout agin' young Heydon. Robert has nothin' to fear. Why should he break his neck runnin' away? If he's got any sense in his mazzard he'll go back with me. The court needs his testimony."

Quaint Rental Payment for English Freeholds

The ancient ceremony of rendering quit-rent services by the city of London took place before the king's remembrancer, Sir G. A. Bonner, at the Law Courts building recently. One of the services is in respect of a piece of land—the location of which cannot today be identified—called "The Moor," near Bridgnorth, Shropshire. The other is by the tenants and occupiers of a tenement called "The Forge,"—on a piece of land once used by the Knights Templar for their tournaments and now covered by the Law Courts building. The ceremony dates back more than 700 years, when rents were paid in kind instead of in cash. The city solicitor rendered service in respect of "The Moor" by cutting two small bundles of faggots with a hatchet and a bill-hook. Thereafter, he counted out, one by one, six horse shoes and 61 nails in respect of "The Forge."

Good Library System

A novel system for promoting student reading of good literature is used by the Portland (Maine) public library. Books are sent to every school in the city, one book to each pupil, and interchanged until every pupil has read every book. Last year more than 900 books had a circulation of 75,000.

There are many who detect being in authority. They dislike to drive others.

POULTRY

BRIGHTER OUTLOOK FOR POULTRYMEN

Price of Eggs Everywhere on Increase.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.)

With the price of corn and wheat lower than it has been for several years and the price of eggs on the increase, the outlook for the poultry industry appears brighter. In the opinion of Dr. M. A. Jull, poultry specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Another point in favor of the poultry man is that heavy culling of farm flocks reduced the number of laying hens by about 20,000,000. Ordinarily these hens would not be culled out until the fall, but last spring farmers were interested more than usual in saving feed bills.

Still another factor which makes the future look brighter for the poultry industry is the fact that there were fewer chicks hatched last spring than usual. This is particularly true of early-hatched chicks, so that the early fall production of eggs fell short of last year's supply, with increases in prices.

Doctor Jull believes the immediate future of the poultry industry to be fairly good, particularly for those who produce eggs and high-quality poultry for market, for hatcherymen who produce high-quality chicks, and for farmers and commercial poultrymen who give their flocks the best management and who practice efficient culling.

Good Laying Hen Makes Money for Her Owner

Take 84 pounds of grain plus one good-laying hen and you have 12 dozen eggs. With grain selling at one and a half cents per pound and eggs selling 30 cents per dozen this means a value of $3.60 for the grain, or a profit of $2.32 over the cost of the feed; or, selling grain at a price of $1.23 per hundredweight. Here are some more figures. The hen which lays only 25 eggs causes a loss of 64 cents over the cost of feed for one year; the hen which lays 50 eggs causes a loss of one cent; the hen which lays 100 eggs creates a profit of $1.25; the hen which lays 150 eggs produces a profit of $2.40; while the hen which lays 200 eggs brings profit of $3.74. Watch the danger line and get rid of the boarders.

Wrong Time to Water

Unscrupulous poultry dealers have been known to feed chickens sand and gravel to increase their weight, but here's a new one. An agent of the federal food and drug administration visited a wholesale poultry house and found that dressed chickens were being given hypodermic injections—of water. A hose terminating in a hollow needle was used. Each bird received several ounces of water, which was gradually absorbed. This increased the weight and made the scrawny birds look plumper. Though federal agents could not interfere, since the chickens were not shipped interstate, state officials later seized the profit-making hose and fined the dealer.

Poultry Notes

The loss sustained by poultrymen because of poor egg quality is enormous.

A good way to combat poultry lice is to dip the entire flock on a warm day in a solution of one ounce of sodium fluoride to each gallon of water.

Mites in the hen house are easily eliminated by the use of carbollinuum. Spray or paint the entire inside with the substance, after thoroughly cleaning the place. Ask your druggist.

Tuberculosis is rarely found in fowls less than six months old. Most farm flocks are infected with this disease. An effective preventive step is to get rid of all birds before they are two years old.

Several of the diseases that attack growing chicks are definitely traced to a lack of vitamins in their rations.

Hens lay best in April and May when the days are from 13 to 14 hours long. Artificial illumination is used to imitate the best working day for hens.

Figuring the cost of feed and price of eggs, a poultry expert in New York state says that a hen must lay an egg two days out of three in order to pay profits this year.

A recent official survey of a large number of New Jersey poultry farms shows an average production of 118 eggs per hen. Commercial flocks have to average better than that, to pay a profit in these times.

Less poultry on farms, reduced storage stocks of poultry and eggs, sustained consumption of poultry products and cheaper feeds in relation to prices of poultry and eggs are the outstanding factors in the poultry outlook, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

How Farmers Can Fight Corn Borer

Mechanical Devices Used to Bring the Pest Under Control.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.)

Mechanical devices for control of the European corn borer are coming into more general use in the areas infested by this pest. Interest in the machinery designed to reduce the borer population is increasing, especially in the territory which has heavy infestations of the more destructive two-generation strain of the insect.

Demonstrations of the attachments and implements for borer control held in connection with the programs of farm and home week at the agricultural colleges of Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, were largely attended and led to similar exhibits on a county unit basis throughout the corn-growing sections of these states and Vermont.

Control measures which have been found most efficient in years of experimental work by co-operating bureaus of the department require removal and disposal of all remnants and debris of one season's corn crop before another comes on. Obviously, the success attained is in direct ratio to the proportion of the farmers, in a community who follow the practices advised.

Low-cutting attachments on corn binders, for use at harvest time, sled-type shavers for cutting stalks in the spring, hand hoes for cutting corn at the ground surface, rakes for gathering stalks into windrows preparatory to burning, and attachments for plows assuring complete coverage of stalks when turned under are among the principal borer-control devices.

Use the Elevator Fan for Binning Small Grain

A valuable use which can often be made of feed grinders, equipped with elevator fans, is for elevation of small grain. For this operation the grinding mechanism is not used. The grain is fed into the hopper directly from the thresher, or scooped in from wagon or truck. A tractor or fair-sized gas engine will supply power enough to raise the grain more than 20 feet, or carry it a considerable distance horizontally.

At times when temporary space in hay mows is to be utilized, and an elevator is not available, the feed mill fan becomes a very helpful adjunct.

Oats were the first grain, to be commonly binned in this method, and tests show that they can be elevated at the rate of 600 bushels per hour. Other grains are handled with relative efficiency.—Exchange.

Trees Add to Farm Value

Trees are one crop which North Dakota farmers can plant without being afraid of any surplus. In fact, farm owners who establish sizeable windbreaks of trees on their farms now not only take some land out of crop production but also add to the ultimate value and living comfort of their homes.

While the small area of land on each farm devoted to tree growing may seem insignificant so far as affecting crop production, an acre planted to trees on each farm in the state would mean 78,000 acres less of wheat or some other surplus crop.

But the most important reason for growing trees is to improve the farm itself. L. S. Matthew, extension service forester, states that an effective windbreak is one of the first steps toward best success with orchards and gardens. Fruit trees and gardens need this protection against wind and cold. —Dakota Farmer.

Record for Safety Bull Pens

The Orange County (Va.) Dairy Herd Improvement association reports that all the herd sires in the association are now housed in safe-keeper bull pens. The bureau of dairy industry, United States Department of Agriculture, asks: "Are there other associations that can duplicate this record?" If there are, the bureau would like to hear from them. This report means that all the herd sires in this association are being kept under conditions which should insure long breeding life, as well as safety for the herd owner and his family.

Power in Honey House

Machinery is employed to the fullest extent in preparing honey for market by Earl W. Rood, Nicollet county, Minnesota. He has a house where all the work is done. A farm lighting plan supplies power. A ½ horsepower motor is used in running the extractor. A steam heated knife is used in uncapping. Additional machinery will be installed next year to handle the increased output. The Roods sell about 1,000 pounds of honey a month.—Chippa Farmer.

Controlling Soybean Weevil

Where soybeans are stored and the weevil appears it should be fumigated the same as for grain pests. One pound of carbon bisulphide to each 100 bushels of seed will control the pest and not injure germination of the seed. After fumigating the seed it may be stored in an unheated building for seeding next summer. In the South growers store soybeans in grain bins and cover them with a few inches of hydrate lime to protect them from weevils.—Missouri Farmer.

JOHN'S VISION ON PATMOS

GOLDEN TEXT—And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

LESSON TEXT—Revelation 1:1-20. PRIMARY TOPIC—The Heavenly Home. JUNIOR TOPIC—John's Vision of Heaven. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—John Sees the Ever-living Christ. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Glorified Saviour.

We should be glad that the lesson committee has given us another lesson from the Book of Revelation, which contains Christ's last message to man.

1. The Preface (1:1-3). The Revelation (unrolling) of Jesus Christ. The revelation of Jesus Christ refers to his personal appearing in glory to judge the world and to establish his kingdom. The word "apocalypse," translated "revelation," signifies according to New Testament usage the unveiling of a person (II Thess. 1:5-10; I Pet. 1:7). The theme of the book is Christ's second coming, his personal, visible appearance in glory (vv. 1, 7 & 10).

2. To whom made known (vv. 1, 2). To his servant John—"To show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass."

3. A benediction to those who read, hear, and keep the sayings of the book (v. 3). It must be possible to understand these sayings, or the promise is meaningless.

4. The Salutation (vv. 4-8). 3. To whom (v. 4). The seven churches then existing in Asia Minor. Seven, the number of completeness, suggests a symbol of the Church throughout her course.

2. From whom (v. 4). a. From him which was, and is, and is to come.

b. From the seven spirits which are before the throne—the Holy Spirit in his seven-fold plenitude as set forth in Isaiah 11:2, also in the Gospel of John.

c. From Jesus Christ (vv. 5, 7). While presenting Christ as the gracious Redeemer, John's prophetic eye caught the vision of the Coming One in glory, exclaiming, "Behold he cometh" (v. 7), the Alpha and Omega (v. 8).

11. The Vision of Glory (vv. 9-19). 1. The seven golden lamp stands (v. 12). These candlesticks are the churches (v. 20), thus presented because they are the light holders in this world's darkness.

2. The Son of man in the midst of the candlesticks (vv. 13-18). Christ in the midst of the churches indicates that they give forth light only when Christ is the central figure.

a. "Clothed with a garment down to the foot" (v. 13). This is a royal as well as a priestly robe (Isa. 22:21), and signifies his right to judge and to rule, as well as to offer sacrifice.

b. His head and hair white as wool (v. 14, cf. Dan. 7:10, 20). This has a twofold significance—purity and eternity.

c. Eyes as a flame of fire (v. 14). This suggests his infallible knowledge.

d. Feet like burnished brass (v. 15). This indicates that he comes as Judge and King, with irresistible power.

e. His voice as the sound of many waters (v. 15). His voice of judgment will be outside of man's control. All excuses will be swept aside by his relentless word.

f. Seven stars in his right hand (v. 16). According to verse twenty, stars mean the messengers of the churches, perhaps pastors or representatives sent forth to comfort John in his lonely exile. The minister lies in the right hand of Jesus Christ, hears his message, and speaks it out.

g. Out of his mouth was a sharp two-edged sword (v. 16). Observe that this is a mouth sword. "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him" (John 12:48). "The word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword" (Heb. 4:12). The two edges indicate its double action, condemning the evil and approving the good and excellent.

h. His countenance was as the sun shining in his strength (v. 16). The effect of sunshine is healthful and joyous to some things, while it is death dealing to others. The sunshine of God's love cheers some while it hardens others. The manifestation of the glorified king will be hailed with delight by those who love him, and will create dismay in those who do not love him.

Methodist Church

Sunday School and regular church service next Sunday morning. The subject for the morning sermon is: "Tomorrow's World." That is, The World of Tomorrow from a spiritual viewpoint. What will it be? Let us think about it. What of the God of Tomorrow? The Religion of Tomorrow? The Worshipers? Will the God of Yesterday, or Today, be sufficient for Tomorrow? Will the coming ages call for a new God, or a new conception of God? Is religion intuitive or philosophical? The pastor believes most people will agree with his answers to these questions. But come and let us see what we really do think. We all think about them. Perhaps we can harmonize our thoughts. Eleven o'clock next Sunday morning. And don't forget the young people's service at seven thirty in the evening.
