

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Last Wednesday we were favored with an address by Mr. Demeter, of Albuquerque. Mr. Demeter made a very interesting talk, and one which should be of help to all of us should we ever care to take out life insurance. Although Mr. Demeter is in the Life Insurance business, he did not make a sales talk, but merely talked to us on Life Insurance as a business, outlining the different classes of companies, and which of these were best to patronize. Also he stated the tremendous value of Life Insurance to the general public. Another very interesting phase of Mr. Demeter's talk was his very interesting and clear-cut description of the public school system of Europe. Being foreign born and educated, he was able to give us a very intimate view of their systems from his personal experience. There is really a very pronounced contrast between their systems and ours.

And now we have had three games. On the sixth came that long anticipated game with Capitan. The boys and girls went up full of hope and confidence, but came back rather crestfallen. The girls lost their game to Capitan with a score of 19-39. Too bad, but this is the first loss of a game by the girls this year, and I think we should give the little girls a great big hand. The boys held 'em to a 9-9 tie in the third quarter, but then that old jinx, which seems to be following them around stepped in, and Capitan ran the score up to 18, while the best our boys could do was one more point, making it 10-18 for Capitan.

On the 12th Vaughn boys and girls came down here, and our girls gave them a good slam, 14-49 for Carrizozo. In the boys' game, the final score was 8-13 for Vaughn, with the best playing of the season so far behind our boys.

The next night, the 13th, the boys went to Alamo and played Tularosa, only to be defeated again by a score of 4-22. Come on, you Grizzlies, let's get a Tularosa has no girls' team, the girls did not go. And, by the way, the girls are having a hard time trying to fill their schedule. So, if you hear of any girls' team with an open date, pass the news on toward old C. H. S.

The next game is with Mountaineer on Saturday, the 20th. This should be a good one, and let's come out and stand behind the boys. Maybe all they need is a little support from the rear. Mountaineer has no girls' team, either, so the boys only will play.

On Friday, the 19th, you are invited to attend a free George Washington entertainment at the Auditorium, and also to attend the meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association afterward. You are all welcome.

On Tuesday this week, we were glad to have Mr. A. L. Burke, local editor, address us on Lincoln's life. This was a very interesting speech, in which Mr. Burke brought to light facts which we would probably never have heard elsewhere. Thank you, Mr. Burke, and remember that you are always welcome here.

The District Music Meet has been definitely awarded to Carrizozo, and will be held in the early part of April.

Also, the County Declamation and Essay Contest will be held here on March 18. We will have

LOCAL MENTION

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Moore were here Monday from Oscura. From our visitors from that neighboring place, we learn that Judge Seth F. Crews is confined in a hospital in El Paso with the flu, but physicians are of the opinion that if no further complications set in, he will soon be out of danger. This information came from the Judge's daughter, Miss Cora Crews.

George Hyde, the Capitan barber and shoemaker, was here Monday. George is a sort of a landmark at Capitan. He makes cowboy boots, does your repairing and will give you a haircut or a shave before you get away. Business, George said, was ordinarily good in his home town.

Miss Marie Brunk spent the first part of the week at Corona, where she teaches a class which occupies, as a general thing, Monday and Tuesday of each week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Ferguson and children were down from Coyote last Saturday. Mr. Ferguson is employed at that place in the water service of the Southern Pacific. They made this office a friendly call before leaving for home late in the afternoon.

Sunday School Class Party at Spencer's

Last Monday night Mrs. T. A. Spencer entertained her Sunday School class at a Valentine party in her home. About thirty-five members of the class and a number of guests were present.

Lively and interesting games were played, including some brain teasers and contests for which beautiful prizes went to the winners. A delightful group of young people entertained in the beautiful and hospitable home of the Spencers by a host and hostess who saw to it that each one present had a joyous good time.

Glencoe Woman's Club

On Feb. 12th the Glencoe Woman's Club held their regular meeting at the home of Mrs. J. H. Jackson, with Mrs. Werner assisting.

The Bi-Centennial Program was rendered, and several interesting papers on the life of Washington were read.

Plans were made for a benefit card party to be held Feb. 19, at 7:30 P. M., at the Bonnell Ranch. Pie and coffee will be served.

The meeting was then resolved into a community meeting for the discussion of plans for the new consolidated grade school. Mrs. J. B. French, County Superintendent, was present and rendered highly appreciated aid by her wise counsel. All present were very enthusiastic over the prospects for a bigger and better grade school in the community.

On Thursday we had the town's radio expert here with a very interesting and enlightening talk on Radio in Relation to 20th Century Civilization.

Forest Ranger and Mrs. R. V. Gault of Capitan were here last Saturday, spending the day and returning home in the evening.

Two Hundred Years Ago

Aged Citizen Passes Away

On Monday, February 15, 1932, Robert Leslie, a pioneer citizen of Lincoln County, passed away at the family home in White Oaks. Mr. Leslie had lived in White Oaks for about 46 years, having come to that town from Eastland County, Texas, in 1885. He had been in feeble health for about two years, a large part of which time he was confined to his bed.

Robert Leslie was born in Fulton County, Georgia, May 17, 1852, went to Eastland County, Texas, in his youth, and was there married to Miss Elizabeth Ward, of Dublin, Texas, on May 5, 1871. He joined the Baptist Church in Dublin, Texas, in his young manhood.

Mr. Leslie was the father of ten children, six of whom, with their mother survive him. The surviving children are Mrs. Lura Yates, and Lisha, Rob, Ward, Ben, and Ellis Leslie. Besides the above mentioned, he leaves three brothers, five sisters and thirty-four grand-children to mourn his departure, as well as a host of friends.

Funeral services were held in White Oaks Church Tuesday afternoon conducted by Rev. L. D. Jordan, and attended by a large concourse of neighbors and friends, all of whom extend to the grief-stricken family sincere and heartfelt sympathy. Interment was in Cedarvale cemetery, at White Oaks.

Pete Johnson Makes Formal Announcement

In this issue of the Outlook, Pete Johnson, who has served this county in the capacity of deputy sheriff for the past seven years, makes his announcement as a candidate for the office of Sheriff on the Republican ticket subject to the decision of the coming Republican County Convention.

Pete is so well known over the county, that he needs no introduction to the public. He was born and reared in this county; in fact, he was born just one and-half miles below Carrizozo, on the old "Anchor" ranch. After leaving school, Pete entered the stock business, in which industry he continued until the World War, when he enlisted in the army, served overseas and returned with a brilliant record.

On his return from the war, Pete again entered the stock business until he was appointed to his present position under S. W. Kelsey, then sheriff of this county. When the present sheriff, John E. Brady came into office and knowing Pete's record

"Breach of Promise Case" Was a "Bear"

On account of illness in some Carrizozo homes, many were unable to be present at the "Plummer Breach of Promise Case" at the High School Auditorium last Saturday night, but those who attended were given a treat.

The entertainment began with several selections by the "Gloom Chasers" orchestra, after which Miss Dia Heringa and Mrs. R. E. Lemon gave vocal solos, and Mrs. C. A. McCammon and Miss Ella Brickley gave a laughable farce in black face, entitled "They're In Again." Then, "The Great Plummer Breach of Promise Case," directed by Miss Hazel Melas and with a selected cast, was produced and to say that it proved to be a "bear" would be putting it lightly.

We wish it were possible to dwell at length on each number and to give each character more complimentary mention, but space forbids, nevertheless, we take the program in a collective sense, and wish to say that those who attended found the time well spent.

It is worth more than ordinary mention to say that where directors like Miss Melas find it possible to arrange and perfect such programs as the one mentioned above, aside from their usual routine of school work, is not only commendable, but should be appreciated from the fact that an effort like this is a task in itself, but they do these things, gladly and perfectly.

Dr. R. R. Green

Dr. R. R. Green, of Corona, who was brought here the first of the week stricken with erysipelas, passed away on Wednesday night. Dr. Green came to these parts from Oklahoma about six years ago, and settled at Corona, since which time the family had made that place their home.

In the absence of relatives, who are at this writing in Corona, we are unable to get such information as we desire concerning the deceased. The remains will be shipped to his former home in Oklahoma for interment.

"HE WAS BORN LEGENDARY"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON FEBRUARY 22 America will begin a nation-wide celebration honoring the memory of the greatest American. For February 22 is the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington and, as a result of plans which have been in preparation for several years, the observance of this bicentennial will be the most extensive ever held in this country. But the ceremonies on February 22 are only the beginning of a series of patriotic pilgrimages, pageants, programs, dedication of memorials and other forms of celebration which will be held until Thanksgiving day, all having as their purpose a "re-awakening in the hearts of all Americans of an appreciation for the character and the life of America's greatest citizen."

In addition to these celebrations, the name of George Washington will be kept daily before his countrymen in other ways. Every time they mail a letter or a parcel they will see his face, for a series of 12 commemorative postage stamps, ranging in denomination from one-half cent to ten cents have been issued, each one bearing a likeness of Washington. In their pockets will jingle a new 25-cent silver coin which will bear the face of Washington on the obverse. This new quarter is not a "special issue" merely to mark the Washington bicentennial but it will replace the 25-cent piece now in general circulation.

The year is certain to bring forth also new books about Washington in which new attempts will be made to interpret Washington in his various roles as a soldier, as a business leader, as a statesman, as a President and as a man. In view of this fact, it is pertinent to raise the question, "Considering the amount that has already been written about Washington, is there anything new that can be said about him?" Off-hand, the answer would probably be "No." Yet the fact remains that something new has been said about him and that in a recently published biography. It is "George Washington, Republican Aristocrat," written by Bernard Fay and published by the Houghton Mifflin company, and this book is important, not only because of the interpretation of Washington as a "Republican aristocrat" but because his interpreter is not a fellow-countryman but a foreigner, a Frenchman, therefore a man whose judgments are less likely to be obscured by partisanship one way or the other.

It is doubtful if there has yet been written such an adequate and understanding summary of the greatness of George Washington—without indulging in extravagant language—as the 1—Portrait painted by W. Williams in Philadelphia in 1784 for the Masonic lodge at Alexandria, Va. This portrait will be on the new nine-cent stamp.

2—Portrait by Charles Wilson Peale which will be on the new three-cent stamp.

3—Miniature portrait by Charles Wilson Peale which was presented by Washington to his niece, Harriet. This portrait will be on the new one-half cent stamp.

4—Another portrait by Charles Wilson Peale made in 1792. It will be reproduced on the new five-cent stamp.

5—Photographic reproduction of the famous Haden bust of Washington which has been chosen as the official portrait for the Washington bicentennial.

admirable essay which forms the introduction to M. Fay's book:

Those who believe in the hand of God in the affairs of man will indorse the idea set forth in this introduction that George Washington came on the stage of history at the precise moment he was most needed. It was the eighteenth century when all looked forward with joy to the arrival of an "enlightened despot."

"He was a gentleman. He was rich. He was a soldier. There was nothing of the revolutionary about him. And, for the first time, in more than fifteen centuries, he exemplified the type of hero who declined supreme power and wished to command only to serve. The world did not expect this; and it surprised the upper classes more than any other attitude would have done. And throughout the entire world the conservative classes, the middle classes, the enlightened nobility, and the people who, even though most cautious, were desirous of change, beheld the serene, great man with an detachment which soon turned to enthusiasm. Washington accomplished, by the legend which so immediately surrounded him, more than anyone else had done. By his personality he prepared the extremists and the traditionalists to accept democratic ideas."

"There was nothing of the revolutionary about him." So it is all the more remarkable that this Virginia gentleman, this land-holding aristocrat, should engage in a struggle in behalf of the common people in which he had everything to lose and but little to gain. If he could have foreseen that he would have to carry on that struggle almost single-handed and then after it was won that he would be reviled by those whom he had served so well and for whom he had suffered so much, one wonders if he would have engaged in it.

For, like all great men—even more so than most—he was a lonely man—a lonely man, both in private life and in public office. Throughout his life he carried on his heart the burden of an unrequited love, his love for Sally Cary, who married his best friend and neighbor, George Fairfax. Even when he married "the Widow Custis" he was still a lonely man. While he was busy building up the estate at Mount Vernon, according to M. Fay, "He noted in his diary sometimes during a whole week that he had remained at home alone—although Martha Washington was living under the same roof and in the same house."

But this was as nothing to the loneliness that was to come to him during the dark hours of the Revolution when he was trying to keep together the wretched little army which congress had given him for winning the independence of the new nation—and then gave him nothing more, certainly not enough supplies or even moral support for carrying on his almost insuperable task. Even when he had been successful, when the new nation had rewarded him with the highest honor in its power by making him its first President, he was also the first to discover what every President since then has learned—that the Presidency is a lonely job, wherein the occupant of that position never knows whom to trust. For no sooner was he made President than he found himself traveling a lonely path between two opposing political ideals—the monarchial tendencies of the Federalists and the democratic theories of the Republicans.

So he followed his lonely course to the end.

A CANDLE IN THE WILDERNESS

A Tale of the Beginning of New England
by IRVING BACHELLER

CHAPTER IX

The Voyage in the Whale's Belly

Amos went out to the fallen tree with his handsaw, and clinging to the upper branches, he began sawing off those below water, flush with the trunk. Soon the under side of the tree was clear of boughs. He labored until the sun had passed the middle of the heavens while Robert on his lofty perch looked out upon the lake and the silent wilderness sloping upward from the shore. He saw no sign of life. When Amos rapped on the side of Robert's tree the young man descended and saw with wonder what the ingenious pioneer had accomplished. About two fathoms from its butt he had sawed, and split out with his hatchet, an opening in the upper shell of the tree large enough for a man to enter. Beneath it he had loosened with a spud the crumbling, rotted heart of the old hemlock and tossed a wain load of its timber dust in the water until he had cleared a space under the shell wider than his shoulders and twice as long as his body. He had carefully preserved the bark-covered arch cut from the rounded side of the bole.

"The big belly of the old tree is our cabin," he said. "It's nigh two fathom long and wide enough for us to stretch out comfortable inside. The stem is a big shell o' good timber. I've made two portholes on each side and rammed a peek hole through the punk for'ard. The wide spread o' boughs above water in the stem will keep her balanced and their weight and wide will lift her bow a little. Do ye notice how I've got 'em tied together? That turns her top into a sail."

Robert said: "But we have no rudder." Amos bit off a chunk of tobacco and answered: "We don't need it no more than a toad needs a pocket in his breeches. In wide water with the wind mostly goin' our way we don't have to be nervous about steerage. Daytimes I set straddle back in the riggin' near the stern. With a long stout paddle, I can help her a little to keep her tail behind her. I'll be hid by the green boughs. She'll yaw around some. She's got a right to. It'll make her look nat'ral. But whether she backs up or slips sideways or goes head first she'll be movin' south, and by the guts o' Pharaoh, I think she'll take us to the lake's end."

Amos lifted his right foot and shook it playfully. Robert tells in his diary of the old pioneer's unlabile habit of lifting and shaking his right foot when greatly pleased. The man spat and looked very wise and confident as he added: "Don't worry about old Amos. It's bad goin' when he gives up. Let's go below. I'll put on the hatch and show ye how to be captain."

They entered the little cabin. Amos adjusted the bark-covered arch. Coming down through it was a bit of dressed hemlock about the size of a gentleman's cane. Green branches were left on its top above the arch. They resembled a natural outgrowth from the trunk.

Amos proudly set forth the duties of his young friend: "Ye lie here in the Whale's Belly and keep watch. If the wind blows hard hold on to that stick. If ye see any danger on the right rap once, on the left twice, for'ard three times. Don't make much noise. Just tap gentle on the side, like that. I'll hear it."

After this day they called their ship the Whale's Belly. They got their packs and wallets aboard. Amos heaved his paddle out of a long strip of dry spruce and smoothed and shaped it with his knife. They carpeted their cabin with a blanket and stored their luggage in each end.

Amos cut fathoms of robin's hedge-row—a luxuriant, creeping, clinging vine, with dark green foliage, abundant in the northern forest—and asked Robert to wind it around him. On the string of this vine are tiny prickles so that it is able to cling to its footing as it grows. When Robert was done with the winding his comrade looked like a vine-covered stump.

fore it struck her sails Amos had worked her bow toward the south. Soon she was out in broad water with small waves breaking on her side. They cleared an island and she went on as steady as a fifty-ton pinnace. Soon Amos heard three taps. The captain had spied through the forward peephole a fleet of canoes heading toward them in the distance. The breeze freshened. The ship began to swing. Amos sat motionless and let her drift as she would. Ten canoes, filled with painted warriors, passed near them going north. They gave no attention to the floating tree—doubtless a common sight on this lonely water with its shadowed, far-reaching border of towering trees. They seemed to have crowded down to look and to bathe their feet and there to have stood pushing and peering over one another's shoulders, entranced by the scene, for centuries.

The Whale's Belly grounded off a point on a small island many miles nearer their destination. When darkness fell Amos crept forward and lifted the hatch and lowered his feet to the cabin. Sitting down he asked: "How do ye like the cabin?" "It's a comfortable place, but I'll be glad to get out and stretch my legs."

"Well, there's nothing on this island. I've listened for an hour. It's well out from the eastern shore. We can slip over the side and take a quiet dip before we go to sleep."

Amos removed his cover of vines, saying that by lying down on the tree trunk in times of danger he thought that he would be well hidden.

They undressed and had a refreshing bath on the sandy beach. The breeze had sunk to almost a zephyr, lulling down the vast water plane from the north. "We'll try to push her out and she'll make a few miles with her own head while we're asleep. Amos is happy."

She was lightly grounded. They worked her free, shoved her into deep water and climbed aboard. They dressed and lay down under their blankets, with the hatch off and roped to a peg in the cabin side. They spoke of the Iroquois warriors whom they had passed.

"A war is on with the Hurons and Algonquins," said Amos. "The Iroquois are out scouring the wilderness like a pack o' wolves before snow flies. There are six nations o' them banded together in their Long House—a chain o' villages on a path under the forest roof from near the North river to a great fresh-water sea in the west. They cultivate their lands. They rule their people smart and with a sense o' justice. But they are fierce and terrible. They have driven the Algonquins and the Hurons from these lands north o' 'em to the great Canadian river. They keep drivin' 'em north'ard. They give 'em no rest on the big split. You may be sure that the Algonquins have moved since we set out. I wouldn't bet a pig whistle that they are on that island."

"The Iroquois are at least semi-civilized," said Robert. "Wouldn't they give us fair treatment?" Amos answered: "I wouldn't trust 'em. The white man is their pison with his meddlin'. His God and his thunder-birds that travel with him. He bothers 'em. His death song is like blueberries and honey. We have no friends among the Dutch. The Indians could do as they like with us. We better not take that bull by the horns. I'd rather have hold o' his tail."

The travelers fell asleep and were awakened just before daylight by the chattering of birds above them. Amos arose and looked about. A flock of pigeons flew out of the branches over the stern.

"We're still driftin'," he whispered. "The breeze has freshened a little. I can just make out the treetops on the east shore. Daylight is comin'. My thoughts have been playin' around that handkerchief. Wasn't that like a love-sick gal to hang her handkerchief out over the water? She says to herself if he comes down the lake in a canoe he'll keep close to shore and if it's daylight he'll see that little white flag and grab it. It's like a play o' Will Shakespeare's and me one o' the players. We won't have long to wait for the last act, I reckon."

water and the side of the tree its broad long blade served as a kind of center board.

They drifted on through a day filled with excitement. A bald eagle lighted on a branch of the old hemlock and, presently, discovering Amos, threatened him for a moment with spread wings and open beak—the wild, fantastic spirit of the wilderness. He rested a little time and resumed his flight. Toward midday they passed a party of Indian women in canoes hauling up fishing lines fastened to wooden buoys. Later a solitary savage crossed their bow, scarcely ten fathoms ahead, in pursuit of a swimming deer. In the dusk of the falling night they grounded on a rock a bow-shot off a point of land. A fire was burning in the edge of the forest behind the point. The timbered slope rang with wild cries.

Those days in the Whale's Belly gave Robert his first chance to try his hand with the delicate mechanism of Peggy's locket. One day it yielded to his patient efforts and Peggy's secret lay before him. It was written on a little square of perfumed paper that bore these words: "Dare you tell me again?"

Robert needed no interpretation of this message. In a moment—he had sounded the depth of its meaning. She had decided that she could not be happy with Rosewell and was planning to break with him.

Doubtless she thought that Robert would soon return to her and beg for help in solving the mystery. Once she knew that he was eager to learn her secret she would have helped him to find it. He thought of that day with her on the forest path. How it glowed in his memory! Soon he exclaimed: "What a pity! What a pity that my life had to be broken like a tree hit by lightning! It isn't fair."

Yet there was something in this bit of paper that gave him cheer and comfort. He examined the beautiful trinket and wondered what was the meaning of the legend engraved in Greek on its case. The day waned.

With a deep sense of relief he heard Amos crawling toward him in the darkness. Gently his friend lifted the hatch and entered. The cheerful, resourceful Amos was a comfort to the young man. He and his ship were just a part of the wilderness but a kindly part of it. He could make its winds and waters serve him.

"By the liver and lungs o' Pharaoh!" the old pioneer exclaimed in a whisper. "I'm e'en a most tuckered out and hungry enough to eat a raw muskrat. I ain't dared to move from my perch all day."

He began to strip off the dried meat and devour it. "There goes a twig but I don't mind twigs or moose hair or sand and pebbles," he muttered. "My insides has got kind o' lonesome. They're like a lost man hollerin' for help. Ye can undress and take a quiet dip if ye want to."

Robert stood up with his head through the hatchway and began to undress. The lake was a great inland sea, so big that he was losing heart. "This is like a sea-voyage," he said. "Do you think we'll get through?"

"Well, comrade, I've been in worse fixes and got through. It's an old say ye can tie the hands and feet of an Englishman but unless ye break his head his brain will do as it pleases."

For just a moment the young man opened his heart: "A good Englishman can look death in the face rather calmly. I reckon it's true of a gentleman the world over. I'm not that. I'm losing my manhood. I'm a trembling coward. I get worse every day."

Amos answered: "Look here, comrade, don't put no dirty word on Bob Heathers in my presence. Ye don't understand him as I do. By the toenails o' Pharaoh! A man that can suffer what ye have without swearin' or kickin' up a row is as good as any man ought to be in this here world we live in. Ye're half sick—that's what's the matter."

For the first time in many days Robert laughed and with tears of joy in his eyes. Then he told of the medallion and showed the message which had just arrived, as it were. It relieved the young man to hear the encouraging cheerful comments of the old pioneer.

"Come, hear o' gold!" Amos cried out. "Don't live in a coke pit. Hang on to Peggy's skirts and the black thought'll leave ye. Amos is happy."

"But you're not shaking your right foot and so I know it's only verbal happiness," said Robert. "It's a credit to you nevertheless."

Robert took his dip and climbed aboard and dried himself with a piece of linen in his pack. "It's getting cold," he whispered. "Yes. The wind has swung into the northeast. I look for a storm."

JESUS THE GOOD SHEPHERD

LESSON TEXT—John 10:1-30. GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Our Good Shepherd. JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Our Good Shepherd. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Following the Good Shepherd. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus the Good Shepherd.

The occasion for the parable of the Good Shepherd was the excommunication by the Pharisees of the blind man who had been healed by Christ.

1. The Good Shepherd (vv. 1-18). 1. Jesus is the true shepherd (vv. 1-10). He came by the divinely appointed way. John the Baptist and others of the prophets had performed the function of the porter and opened the door to the sheepfold (vv. 2, 3). The power exercised by the Pharisees in casting out this man was not obtained by lawful means. It was stolen by them and exercised in the bold spirit of robbers. The reason the man suffered excommunication was that he recognized Jesus as the true shepherd and turned from the Pharisees, not only as strangers, but as thieves and robbers. Despite the deceit, audacity, theft, and robbery of these Pharisees, those who were Christ's sheep were declared to be forming a new flock and following him as the true shepherd (v. 4).

2. Jesus is the door of the sheep (vv. 7-10). The way to fellowship with God is through Christ. He is not only a door, but the only door (Acts 4:12). There is absolutely no way into the fold of the redeemed but by and through him. All who attempt to gain access to God except through Jesus Christ are thieves and robbers (v. 8). Those who become members of the flock of God through Jesus Christ enjoy marvelous privileges and gifts (vv. 9, 10).

a. Salvation—"shall be saved" (v. 9). They not only enjoyed present salvation, but are eternally saved (vv. 27, 29).

b. Liberty—"shall go in and out" (v. 9). Only those who accept salvation in Christ know what freedom is.

c. Contentment—"shall go in and out and find pasture" (v. 9). The one who really enters the fold by Christ, the door, receives that which is all-satisfying to the soul.

3. Jesus is the good shepherd (vv. 11-18). a. He gives his life for the sheep (vv. 11-13). The hireling abandons his sheep in time of danger. The hireling, represented by the Pharisee, takes up his work and continues it for his own sake, for the profit that is in it. Jesus was so devoted to his sheep that he willingly laid down his life for them.

b. He has perfect knowledge of his sheep and they know him (vv. 14, 15). Knowing his sheep so well, he looks after their welfare. He enjoys such personal intimacy with his sheep that he knows them by name, goes before them to lead the way and defend them from every danger.

c. His sympathy is world-wide (v. 16). He declared, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold." This suggests that the Gentiles have a place in his fold.

d. He enjoys the love of the heavenly Father (vv. 17, 18). 11. The Sheep (vv. 10-30). 1. Unbelievers are not Christ's sheep (vv. 10-20). Christ's assertion that he was the good shepherd caused a division among the people. Some accused him of being mad, others that he had a devil. To their request that he would tell them plainly if he were the Christ, he responded by referring them to the testimony of his works, declaring that the secret of their inability to recognize him was their unbelief.

2. His sheep recognize his voice (v. 27). There are many voices in the world: the voice of the hireling, the voice of the thief, and the voice of the stranger; but none of these will the sheep hear. The voice of the true shepherd is recognized by his sheep even amidst the babble of voices in the world today.

3. He knows his sheep (v. 27). Regardless of how helpless and ignorant the sheep may be, he knows every one and he looks after them.

4. His sheep follow him (v. 27). This is the proof that they are his. The true sheep will flee from strangers (v. 5). This should be a solemn warning to all such as are following strangers.

5. His sheep are eternally secure (vv. 28, 29). The sheep are entirely dependent upon the shepherd. It is the shepherd's business to look after and care for the sheep.

WORDS OF WISDOM

The short way to spell holiness, is 1-0-v-e. The glory of labor is a commendable harvest. A companion of fools shall be destroyed (Prov. 13:20). Most of the shadows of this life are caused by standing in our own sunshine.

POULTRY

EGG-PRICE RATIO TO BE CONSIDERED

Highly Important Factor in Poultry Raising.

The main cause of profit or loss on commercial poultry farms in the East is the relation between the price of eggs and the price of feed, says E. G. Misner of the New York State College of Agriculture. He points out that the wholesale price of grains which go into the poultry ration has recently averaged 74 per cent of the pre-war price, while the price of the highest grade of eggs in New York state has averaged 103 per cent. He says that this is the reverse of last winter and spring, when feed was above pre-war price and eggs were only four-fifths of it. In other words, the egg-price ratio is now more favorable to the grower than at any recent time.

Among other factors which make for profits, the first need is high egg production from each hen; to show profit birds must produce considerably more than 120 eggs a year. On 124 commercial farms in New York in 1920, the average number of eggs was 144 for each bird, and only one-fourth of the farms produced more than 100 eggs a bird. These farms made four times as much as those with a production of less than 100 eggs.

Yet high egg production, adds Professor Misner, is not enough; a large number of layers is necessary so that the total income will be big enough to pay the interest on the capital invested and to return good wages to the operator. Two thousand laying hens or more are needed to produce a labor income of more than $100 a month. With less than this number of birds on a commercial plan, the flock does not afford full-time employment for a poultryman.

"Long-Distance" Layer Is Worth Considering

The theory that pullets alone pay as egg producers is being modified. Pullets do lay more eggs than year old hens and in better season. But it costs money to buy or raise them. If a bird in her pullet year produces 201 eggs and in her second year 218 it is clear that she is of the sort that should not be summarily dealt with after one year's production. It would pay to keep her for egg production alone and of considerably more importance to retain her for breeding purposes. The hen referred to is a Barred Rock on the Agassiz farm. She and 15 other Barred Rocks under test produced an average of 187 eggs in their second year. In five years one of these hens laid 1,070 eggs, an average yearly production of 215. The development of long-distance layers offered an interesting field of work for poultry breeders and may be of considerable value to the poultry industry. —Nor'West Farmer.

Poultry Run Rotation

Internal parasites and disease are the twin terrors of the poultry breeder. Running the birds on the same land two or more years in succession is the cause of most of their troubles, of almost a full hundred per cent of those due to internal parasites. At Sidney, Vancouver Island experimental station, the poultry yards are operated under a definite 3-year rotation—1, clover and grass; 2, roots; 3, grain. The young chicks are run only on the turf land. Two years out of three the runs are in crop and are twice plowed before the birds are returned to them in the third year. —Exchange.

Isolate Sick Hens

Every poultry farm should have a hospital—or some place apart from the rest of the flock where sick birds can be examined and treated. If you are not a poultry disease expert let your local veterinarian or the poultry disease laboratory diagnose the case. The isolation of any bird not in the best of condition will prevent the spread of any disease through the rest of the flock and often save the poultryman hundreds of dollars.

Poultry Hints

Keep young turkey poult separate from chickens and from old turkeys. The American standard of perfection recognizes twelve classes, forty-five breeds and one hundred and twenty-seven varieties of chickens. Delaying the housing of pullets until they are well started laying is one of the main causes of winter and fall molt, a disastrous blow to winter egg production.

One of the major needs in the poultry industry is widespread education on disease prevention.

It is best to make the poultry house as airtight as possible in order to conserve the greatest amount of heat during cold weather.

Tuberculosis of fowls is a chronic, infectious disease resembling tuberculosis of other animals and man. In some sections of the country it is called spotted liver or liver complaint.

Swedish Enjoy Long Life

A Swedish record for longevity seems to be held by the inhabitants of the little parish of Klara, in central Sweden. The latest figures showed that out of a population of 4,000, 92 persons were over eighty, and of these, ten were over ninety. Some years ago Klara had Sweden's oldest inhabitant, the farmer Sven Eriksson, who died at one hundred and five and a half years.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

History Often Repeats

On the 23rd of August, 1864, President Lincoln wrote the following over his signature—after sealing it delivered it to Secretary Wells with instructions not to open it until after the election:

"This morning as for some days past it seems exceedingly probable that this administration will not be re-elected. Then it will be my duty to cooperate with the President-elect so as to save the Union between the election and the inauguration as he will have secured his election on such grounds that he cannot possibly save it afterwards."

The Republican managers shared the President's apprehension. They were especially doubtful of both Pennsylvania and New York. Secretary Chase was all but openly hostile to the President until well toward the end of the campaign when he finally came around and made some effective speeches. There was serious disaffection also among other prominent Republicans, and a general feeling that Lincoln could not be re-elected. The feeling against the Republican party itself was so strong that the convention which nominated Mr. Lincoln did not use the name "Republican," but called itself the "Union" convention.

Throughout the campaign Mr. Lincoln was vilified outrageously by the Democratic press and orators. He was called corrupt, incompetent and ignorant, and some of the more vehement of his critics even accused him of personal dishonesty.

But when the election was held all the States which participated (25) cast their votes for Mr. Lincoln except Delaware, New Jersey and Kentucky, and he received 212 of the 233 electoral votes.

This interesting little scrap of United States history is recalled and transcribed for the benefit of those whom it may concern.

Battle Orders

In this instance the orders are for an advance along the entire national front in a united attack on "depression" by the American Legion and the Federation of Labor, with auxiliary forces. The objective is to find a million new jobs within thirty days for a million wage earners now unemployed. The National Commander has sent sealed messages to all post commanders and trade union presidents with instructions how to proceed. But there is no concealment of the "zero hour." Perhaps watches will not be synchronized to a second, but there will be eagerness to be among the first in every city, town or village to win the honors in this new campaign.

Each community is to be divided into districts and industrial units and an officered team assigned. The workers may be chosen from the community at large, but the Legion is directing their movements with the fullest cooperation of the labor unions. Every employer of labor is to be approached and asked to give employment to at least one more man. What has been done successfully in several cities—notably Rochester, Muncie, Green Bay—will be done on a national scale. In more than 7,000 cities volunteer local groups have been formed under State and regional organization—recruited from every walk of life. The national headquarters, at the Biltmore Hotel in New York, will serve as a clearing house for the field units, as well as the centre of command for the entire field.

Here is another illustration of William James' moral equivalent of war: an activity in which soldiers and laymen alike may serve their country by performing disagreeable duties—Even if they are not perilous—and making real sacrifices in order to restore unemployed men and women to hopeful existence. The Legion has the approval of the President in this campaign and goes to its "zero hour" next Monday with a fine zeal. Meanwhile the public is urged to be thinking of what it can do by way of new jobs for the jobless. If employment is found for the first million, by this effort the Legion will itself find a more grateful place in the heart of America.—New York Times.

THE MAN TURNS

By HOWE EVANS

FROM her seat in the breakfast room, pretty little Madge Byron looked about her clean, immaculate kitchen, and watched wistfully her preparations for luncheon.

"I ought to go home and wash my dishes, but as long as I've taken your advice and given up my position, I hope you won't mind if I stiffen my spine a little by detailing the reasons."

"Shoot; I'm going to make you a cup of coffee before you go." "Thanks, I need it. I feel awfully shaky. I—I was counting up last night. In the four years Jim and I have been married, he has held an even dozen different positions."

"You mean quit that many?" Vera's energetic young voice sounded explosive. She had none of Madge's yielding softness of voice or manner. "That's the limit, honest it is. You have had the same job all that time and supported Jim in between his."

Madge shook her blond head thoughtfully. "That's hardly fair, Vera. He's never been lazy or idle very long and when he has been out of work he has done everything around the house, cooked and cleaned and—well, I love him more than I ever did, but as you say, I've been spoiling him."

"His mother did that before you ever met him!" Vera spilled hot water on the stove emphasizing her words.

Madge smiled wearily. "You just can't blame him; he is such an adorable lamb when he has his own way about everything."

"Yes, and a stubborn mule when anybody tries to boss him." "Fortunately, they seem to realize that where he is now and give him his head. He seems better satisfied than he has ever been before and he's been promised more money next week."

Slipping her coffee Madge was gazing with dreamy satisfaction at the little bungalow next door. Suddenly she leaned forward, a quick gasp in her voice.

"Oh, dear, I spoke too soon! There's Jim coming now and I can tell by the way he walks that he's mad and has quit another job!"

Vera followed her to the door, catching one slim arm and pressing it firmly.

"Don't weaken, now! If you do—if you go back to work you are lost. You'll never have the nerve to take such a stand again."

"Don't worry," Madge's large pansy eyes glowed. "I'm sure I'm doing the best thing for both of us. I'll stick it out!"

Jim was hanging up his coat as she entered the front door.

"Why Madge, darling, are you sick? You look so white—and sort of queer." Hands grasping her shoulders, he started at her anxiously.

The tenderness in his voice, the concern in his usually laughing eyes was more than Madge could stand. With a sob she jerked away from him and tumbling into the dining room, buried her head in the couch pillows.

Jim followed and sitting down pulled her into his arms.

"What's happened? Are you sick? Shall I phone for the doctor? I never saw you like this before!"

Recalling Vera's advice, Madge choked back her sobs. She must be calm. Pressing her head against his shoulder she murmured shakily.

"You don't need to tell me. I know you have quit again, just when everything seemed to be going along so fine and I had planned—" She felt him stiffen at the unexpected reproach but she hurried on. "Let me finish before you say anything, Jim. I didn't tell you I was going to resign my position today, I want to surprise you. Oh, Jim, I'm just tired of leaving my little house and going out to work every day. I want to stay home like my friends, do a really good job of housekeeping, and I hoped I could with things going so fine for you!"

Jim interrupted in so stern a voice that she sat up to look at him. "You mean you are tired of the office? I thought you were so sold on the whole bunch down there that you wouldn't give up your job, that you'd give me up first!"

AN EXPERIMENT

By JANE OSBORN (By McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service)

"GET the right kind of woman and she can do it as well as a man." "Stuff and nonsense! She wouldn't have the head for it! Imagine Miss Kline or Miss Hicks here going out to sell bonds—imagine their selling any!" "They haven't got the head for it," abjected young Tom Venner. "That's what I'm telling you. Get a woman of the right sort and she could sell bonds with the best salesman we've got."

The middle-aged Kirk Yates shrieked his answer. "But if you get a woman like that you've got to pay as much." "Then pay, by gummy, pay," bawled Tom Venner, with several emphatic bangs of his fist. "The point isn't that I want to get a bargain, but I want to get people that will stick. Take Bloden, or Smyth, or Klunger—any of 'em—they sold bonds for awhile and when they got real good at it, they got better jobs, went somewhere else or started out by themselves. My idea is that a woman isn't so ambitious or so daring. Get two or three trained in, and we'll have a staff you can depend on. Get me!"

Mr. Kirk Yates sniffed, indicating thereby that, while he didn't "get" Mr. Venner at all, he was through arguing. "Go ahead," was all he said. "I'm only a partner. I can't stop you from trying an experiment. But don't start out with three or four. Get one and see if it works."

So it was that the employment agent who supplied the bond house of Yates and Venner with stenographers, comptometer operators and other office workers had a rather unusual position to fill. There was only one applicant on the list at this agency that was considered suitable. This was Jane Hayden. The employment agent sent a sealed note along with her. Tom Venner read it through while Jane Hayden sat waiting at the other side of his desk for an interview.

"She does not seem to have the striking personality you may think necessary for selling bonds. But there is something about her eyes that I should think would take the trick. And she's very intelligent."

Tom Venner had not noticed her eyes as she came in the room, he had merely noticed with a trifle disappointment that she was a young woman of middle size and not commanding appearance, who made no special effect when she came in the room.

Then, as he turned to talk to her, she lifted her eyes, sober, light brown eyes they were, with exquisitely moulded brows. They were eyes that, had he never seen them again, he could not have forgotten—trustful and trust compelling, eyes that made you forget everything else save the personality of the young woman who owned them.

"I think you could sell bonds, or anything else," Tom said, trying not to look at the eyes, lest he be too easily influenced. "The question is whether you are willing to learn enough about bonds to know how to do it."

Jane Hayden said she knew she could learn, as she was used to study, and after an arrangement had been agreed upon—whereby she was to be paid as much for what she did as a man salesman—she was formally taken into the employ of Yates and Venner.

Mr. Yates remarked to Tom that he had certainly picked a pair of good eyes, adding: "But can she sell bonds?"

Tom Venner said, "We'll see." Jane Hayden soon proved her ability as a saleswoman. She sold bonds and more bonds, and she was always on hand when either Tom Venner or Mr. Yates wanted to see her. She never seemed to have to play golf or eat lunch or go motoring with the people to whom she sold the bonds. By all means she was the best bond "salesman" they had.

"Here's something that I don't suppose you've thought of," said Mr. Yates. "Here we've got a first-rate bond salesman. She has learned the business and she's making money for us and for herself. And not being a man she isn't ambitious. She won't want to start out for herself. That was my idea about getting a woman."

"Your idea!" cried Tom. "I don't remember that it was your idea." "I didn't say much," smiled Mr. Yates, "but that morning I asked you to get a girl—that was the idea I had in view. There's no reason now why this Miss Hayden shouldn't remain with us for years."

"No reason but one," said Tom Venner hastily and with color mounting in his already rather ruddy face. "She might marry some one in the business."

"Well, as I am a married man myself," said Mr. Yates with a cancelled smile. "And as Trigger can't get his divorce and as Hayden is about a foot shorter than Miss Hayden, and as Ben Short is engaged, I don't see much to worry about."

"What about me?" cried Tom. "You!" gasped Mr. Yates. "Does she care about you? Well, I'm blessed." Then he laughed.

"She's got wonderful eyes," said Mr. Yates, "but it's bad business for you to take her away from the firm."

THEY've got to be good to imitate this song has. It was written a long time ago by Abe Lyman and Gus Arnheim together with Arthur Freed, and its background is as colorful as its melody. It first became popular when Abe Lyman was creating such a furor at the Coconut Grove in Los Angeles. Abe featuring it on nearly all of his programs. Its popularity spread, and at one time it was numbered among the country's leading songs.

The years rolled by and Lyman journeyed East to even bigger triumphs. The song stayed on at the Coconut Grove, however, becoming a regular tradition and such successive bachelors and singer bars, by popular request, included it in their repertoire.

When I was at the Coconut Grove a year ago, I sang it, just as the others had done, and it immediately became one of the most popular numbers I had ever sung. Naturally, I have a sentimental attachment for the song, but that alone would never make me sing it on my "Songs of the Week." I am featuring it because I feel that there's a reason for the tremendous popularity it has gained and held over such a long period. Very few popular songs can claim as long a life. Then, too, it's a torch song (slow moaning tempo) a style of number all the rage just now. All in all, it's a song with a great past and possibilities for an even greater future.

ROBINSON CRUSOE

IT IS because Daniel Defoe was a good newspaper man, able to see the "story" in a current news yarn concerning the rescue of a marooned sailor from a desert island that we have today that universal favorite "Robinson Crusoe."

The yarn upon which he based his book was about one Alexander Selkirk, English mariner born at Largo, Fifeshire, who early went into privateering in the South seas and by 1704 had earned promotion to command of the good ship Cinque Ports.

Not only was it his story upon which Defoe built "Robinson Crusoe," but Juan Fernandez is today frequently known as Crusoe's Island, and boasts not only many of the very umbrella trees that figure in the story, but a Crusoe's cave, and near the summit of its highest mountain, Selkirk's Lookout, a tablet, placed there in 1908 in honor of the original Robinson Crusoe!

Then I think about the floor, Where I slept in days of yore, Where I used to slumber some Night the company would come, Then our house was much too small, Few the beds, to hold them all, And we children, with delight, Slept upon the floor that night.

Blanket, pillow, these I find, And, upon the floor reclined, Fall asleep, and wake at three Glad again a bed to see, Sleep again, and waken lame, Just as certain just the same I'd have stayed awake till four if I hadn't tried the floor.

Japan Rejects Peace Proposals of America and European Powers—Mellon Quits Treasury to Be Ambassador to London.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DESPIITE the vigorous protests and the proffered peace plans of the United States and the great European powers, Japan continued her relentless warfare on China. Developments came swiftly and continuously and as the week drew toward its close the situation was becoming more and more critical. Attacks on Shanghai by land, sea and air were renewed twice within 48 hours; the Woosung forts at the mouth of the Whangpoo were bombarded; Nanking and its protecting forts were shelled.

While the attack on the Woosung forts was going on Admiral Montgomery M. Taylor, commander of American Asiatic fleet, arrived in the Whangpoo aboard his flagship, the cruiser Houston, from Manila, and the American forces for the protection of our nationals in China were reinforced also by nearly every warship that had been in the Philippines, together with the Thirty-first regiment of regular infantry. Great Britain, France, Italy and Portugal also rushed warships and troops to the China coast.

America and England, supported by France and Italy, proposed in Tokyo through their ambassadors a plan for restoring peace that embraced these points:

1. Cessation of all acts of violence on both sides at once on the following terms:
2. No further mobilization or preparations whatever for further hostilities.
3. Withdrawal of both Japanese and Chinese combatants from all points of mutual contact in the Shanghai area.
4. Protection of the International Settlement by the establishment of neutral zones, these zones to be policed by neutral nations and arrangements to be set up by consular authorities on the spot.
5. Upon acceptance of these conditions a prompt advance to be made by negotiations to settle all outstanding controversies between the two parties in the spirit of the treaty of Paris and the resolution of the League of Nations of December 9, without prior demand or reservation and with the aid of neutral observers or participants.

After the emperor had been consulted the government announced that it rejected the second and fifth proposals and accepted the others conditionally.

IMMEDIATE reason for the protests of the powers against Japanese aggression in Shanghai was found in the persistent violations of the neutrality of the International Settlement by the Japanese. They took possession of the Hongkew section and made it the base of their operations against Chapel, the native quarter, where the Chinese were still putting up a strong resistance and driving their foes back by force of numbers.

Edwin S. Cunningham, American consul general and head of the consular body there, was in the thick of things conditionally, striving not only to curb the Japanese but also to bring about a cessation of hostilities. Once or twice he and his colleagues did arrange truces, but these were promptly violated and the fighting began all over again. For the details of that fighting there is no room in these columns.

China's government offices were removed from Nanking to Honanfu, 500 miles in the interior, in anticipation of an attack on the capital, and that attack soon followed. Two cruisers and a destroyer shelled the Nanking forts and parts of the city. As usual the Japanese had their excuse ready, asserting that the Chinese fired the first shots. However, correspondents aver that neither the forts nor the two old Chinese warships there replied to the Japanese fire. The population of the city was panic stricken and fled to the open country. Soon after the shelling the evacuation of the American citizens there was begun, although the firing had not been resumed.

Members of the League of Nations council held a special session in Geneva and were told by J. H. Thomas, British secretary for dominions, about the peace proposals put forward by the powers. There was a report there that Japan was planning to announce her withdrawal from the nine-power Pacific pact and also from the Washington naval agreement of 1922.

RETIRED from the position of secretary of the treasury, which he has held since 1921, Andrew W. Mellon becomes the American ambassador to Great Britain. This was announced by President Hoover in a statement in which he gracefully called Mr. Mellon "one of our wisest and most experienced public servants."

The new ambassador is seventy-seven years old and his health of late has been so poor that Undersecretary Ogden L. Mills has been doing most of his work. Mr. Mellon was named by the President to succeed Mr. Mellon as secretary of the treasury.

NATURALLY the opening of the international disarmament conference in Geneva was clouded by the discouraging situation in the Orient.

Little had been expected from the parley before by independent observers of world affairs, and this little was lessened by the events in China. Arthur Henderson, former British foreign secretary, looking ill and worried, took his place as chairman of the conference and spoke for an hour, mostly in generalities, concerning what the meeting should accomplish.

"I refuse to contemplate even the possibility of failure," Mr. Henderson said. "If we fail no one can foretell the evil consequences that might ensue."

With regard to the China-Japanese conflict, he said:

"We feel bound to refer to the tragic fact that at the very moment this conference, whose purpose is to promote peace, begins its work, we are confronted with such a situation of extreme gravity as that which now exists in the Far East."

"It is imperative that all signatories of the covenant of the League of Nations and the Briand-Kellogg pact make it their business to insure strict observance of these two great safeguards against acts of violence and war."

After the preliminaries and the organization of the conference the thousand or so delegates adjourned until the following week to prepare for the long drawn out sessions and protracted discussions. The most prominent statements were not expected before February 8. When Secretary of State Stimson, head of the American delegation, would arrive was uncertain.

GOV. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, a leading aspirant for the Democratic Presidential nomination, has declared himself opposed to American membership in the League of Nations in an address before the New York state senate. In this he follows the lead of Newton D. Baker, also a Presidential possibility, who recently said that while he still believed in the league, he would not have the United States join in while popular opinion was against it.

Governor Roosevelt said he had no apology for having worked and spoken in behalf of American participation in the league when he was the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate twelve years ago. He added: "The league is not the league conceived by Woodrow Wilson. Rather, it is a mere meeting place for the political discussion of strictly European difficulties."

Other pronouncements by Roosevelt were that Europe's debts to America should not be canceled, and that an international trade conference should be called to level tariff barriers.

SUCCESS crowned the efforts of the railway presidents and representatives of rail labor unions in their long sessions in Chicago. A formal pact was signed by which the unions accepted a wage reduction of 10 per cent for one year, beginning February 1. The deduction is made from each pay check on every pay day, but the basic or legal wage is not disturbed and the full rates will be restored on January 31, 1933.

A separate agreement, in which the railroads made certain concessions along the lines of a program proposed by labor for the betterment of working conditions and the relief of unemployment, was signed simultaneously with the wage pact.

Leaders in the negotiations were David Brown Robertson, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' association, and Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio railway.

HEADS of the leading civic organizations of the country met in Washington on Saturday, summoned by President Hoover to discuss and form a national organization for the purpose of conducting a campaign against depression and bringing out hoarded money. According to figures given by the President, a total of more than $1,500,000,000 of American money has been hoarded during the last year and is still out of circulation on a nonworking basis.

ORGANIZATION of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance corporation was completed with the election of Charles G. Dawes as president and Eugene Meyer as chairman of the board; quarters were opened in the old Commerce department in Washington and the reception and consideration of requests for loans was begun without delay. The senate already had confirmed the names of Harvey C. Couch and Jesse H. Jones as directors, and President Hoover sent in the name of Wilson McCarthy of Salt Lake City to complete the board membership. Applications for more than one hundred millions in loans had come in before the board began to function.

IN ORDER to curtail the current overproduction, the Department of Commerce's making an effort to create sentiment against night work in the cotton mills of the South, and the heads of the cotton textile industry are co-operating in this with the government. According to Edward T. Pickard, chief of the textiles division of the Commerce department, there is considerable overproduction of cotton textiles and prices have been depressed as a result.

NEW hope was given the advocates of a large navy by the virtual war in the Orient.

Senator Frederick Hale of Maine (Rep.), chairman of the senate naval affairs committee, delivered a prepared speech in the senate in behalf of his bill authorizing the building of the American navy up to treaty strength. He said that of all world powers, Japan has made the greatest strides in naval armament, taking a legitimate advantage, under the terms of the treaties, of the laxity of the other powers.

"The next difficulty that we shall have to face," he said, "will, without doubt, be a demand on her part for parity with Great Britain and the United States," and he added that if we continue our policy of nonbulldozing we shall be in a very poor position to dispute such a demand.

"A navy equal to our own in the Pacific," Senator Hale went on, "opens up many interesting problems for the future, and is not at all in conformity with our declared needs at the time of the Washington and London conferences, and no one can truthfully say the conditions in the East with the dove of peace in temporary hibernation on the China coast warrant any lessening of those needs."

SEA and land forces of the United States began their annual war game in Hawaii, the problem being the defense of the islands from invasion. Fighting planes from Wheeler and Luke fields established air bases on various islands, army tanks rumbled about through the cane fields and artillery and infantry were stationed at points commanding possible landing places. All provisioning of troops was being done at night to avoid observation. Meanwhile the vessels of the navy were moving toward the archipelago preceded by seaplanes, for the attack which was to begin early Saturday morning.

BECAUSE his release would be "unjustifiable and incompatible with the welfare of society" the federal parole board denied the application for a parole for Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior. Therefore Fall must serve his full sentence of a year and a day in the New Mexico state penitentiary where he was sent for bribery in connection with the oil lease deals during the Harding administration.

SENATOR WESLEY L. JONES of Washington, author of the "Five and Ten" law, has devised a way to compel states without state prohibition laws to enact such legislation. He introduced a resolution to prohibit the navy from sending any vessel to a port in any state without state enforcement, and to prohibit the holding of citizens' military training camps or the building of government ships in states without state dry laws.

The United Mine Workers of America, in convention in Indianapolis, adopted a resolution recommending the legalization of "good" beer, rather than an attempt to repeal the Eighteenth amendment, as the practical solution of the prohibition problem.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE started a debate of several days in the senate by moving to make the next order of business the bill prepared by himself and Senator Costigan of Colorado appropriating $375,000,000 to be given the states for the relief of the unemployed and needy, directly. The opposition held that the major contribution of the federal government toward relief should be the administration measures for the extension of credit.

SANTIAGO, a picturesque and historical city near the eastern end of Cuba, was badly shattered by a series of earthquakes. At first the deaths were reported to be in excess of a thousand, but when the people calmed down it was found that not more than a dozen persons had been killed. Property damage was estimated at more than $10,000,000, few buildings in the city having escaped unscathed.

Brazil Well Described as "World in Itself"

Brazil has features of distinctive interest both in the universe in general and to ourselves in particular. Kipling once said that the region over which the benevolent and bewhiskered Dom Pedro II ruled, "is a world in itself." Nor did he overshoot the mark.

With an area of 3,275,510 square miles, Brazil is greater in extent than the United States, excluding Alaska and the insular possessions. Some of the states are larger than the largest European countries, Isaac F. Marcasson writes, in the Saturday Evening Post, Amazonas, for example, is five times the size of Great Britain, while Matto Grosso could cover all France twice.

Putting it in another way, Brazil is bigger than the whole European continent, not counting a part of Russia, and is the fifth country anywhere in geographical scope. The average man thinks of Brazil in terms of Rio de Janeiro, loveliest of all harbors—it lives up to the advertisement—and his cup of breakfast coffee. The republic accounts for nearly 70 per cent of the total coffee supply. But Brazil is much more. To no land has nature been more generous in the bestowal of her rich gifts of raw material.

An observer has stated that if a deluge should again inundate this world, sparing only Brazil and the United States, the two countries could still carry on their lives and industries with one supplementing the other.

Brazil could supply rubber, sugar, coffee, rice, bananas, meat, cacao, iron ore manganese and timber, especially mahogany, while we could contribute wheat, corn, copper, cotton, fruit, manufactured articles of all kinds and capital. Practically the only essentials lacking would be tin and platinum.

"Lucile is the Happiest Girl"

So many mothers nowadays talk about giving their children fruit juices, as if this were a new discovery. As a matter of fact, for over fifty years, mothers have been accomplishing results far surpassing anything you can secure from home prepared fruit juices, by using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup, which is prepared under the most exacting laboratory supervision from ripe California Figs, richest of all fruits in laxative and nourishing properties.

It's marvelous to see how bilious, weak, feverish, sallow, constipated, under-nourished children respond to its gentle influence; how their breath clears up, color flames in their cheeks, and they become sturdy, playful, energetic again. A Western mother, Mrs. H. J. Stoll, Valley P. O., Nebraska, says: "My little daughter, Roma Lucile, was constipated from babyhood. I became worried about her and decided to give her some California Fig Syrup. It stopped her constipation quick; and the way it improved her color and made her pick up made me realize how run-down she had been. She is so sturdy and well now, and always in such good humor that neighbors say she's the happiest girl in the West."

Like all good things, California Fig Syrup is limited, but you can always get the genuine by looking for the name "California" on the carton.

Marriage Easy in Poland Young lovers in parts of Poland have adopted a motto of "marriage without priest, incense or vodka." The new ceremony consists merely of the swearing of an "oath" before a local Communist worker, who then declares the marriage valid. An Ukrainian newspaper of communist tendencies publishes the names of those thus united.

Mother of 7—Still Young

THE woman who gives her organs the right stimulant need not worry about growing old. Her system doesn't stagnate; her face doesn't age. She has the health and "pep" that come from a lively liver and strong, active bowels. When you're sluggish and the system needs help—don't take a lot of "patent medicines." There's a famous doctor's prescription for just such cases, and every druggist keeps this standard preparation. It is made from fresh laxative herbs, active senna, and pure pepsin. Just ask for Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin. Take a little every day or so, until every organ in your body feels the big improvement.

The next time you have a bilious headache, or feel all bound-up, take this delicious syrup instead of the usual cathartic. You'll be rid of all that poisonous waste, and you haven't weakened the bowels. You'll have a better appetite, and feel better in every way. The constant use of cathartics is often the cause of a sallow complexion and lines in the face. And so unnecessary!

Only place where a torn shirt doesn't matter is in camping out.

A man should have a good excuse ready before committing a mean act.

Would you like to break yourself of the cathartic habit? At the same time building health and vigor that protects you from frequent sick spells, headaches, and colds? Get a big bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin today. Use often enough to avoid those attacks of constipation. When you feel weak and run-down or a coated tongue or bad breath warns you the bowels need to be stimulated. Give it to children instead of strong laxatives that sap their strength. It isn't expensive.

"INDISPENSABLE" for children

"Cod liver oil is not a 'luxury,' but an indispensable food for young children. Lincoln County Boy in Santa Fe Art Exhibit

The first four-man show of Albuquerque artists to be held in Santa Fe will begin April 15, and last one month. Brooks Willis, Janette Willis, Bill Lumpkins and Jose Moreno will exhibit oils, water colors, portraits, sculptures and wood block prints at that time.

Two alcoves have been allotted this group of the younger Albuquerque artists who are working at the studio in Old Town.

Bill Lumpkins is working on wood carving, sculpture and water colors. He is well known here and through the eastern part of the state through his wood block prints. Brooks Willis, who studied in the Colorado Springs art school, and has been painting in New Mexico for several years, will show both water colors and oils and a few black and whites.

Janette Willis, who, by the way, is Mrs. Bill Lumpkins, is doing some very interesting work in portraits. Her technique is a modern adaptation of that of the old masters. She also studied at the Colorado Springs school under Boardman Robinson, whose work is nationally known. Instructors at the academy predict a brilliant future for her in her special line.—Albuquerque Tribune

In the above article of complimentary mention, Bill Lumpkins, who shares so prominently, is a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Lumpkins, of Capitan. For several years prior to entering the field in which he is now engaged, Bill had led the Boy Scouts in all their outings, and that time having been thus identified with the movement in Roswell and Capitan. This offered the means of study on which his heart was set. He visited the ruins of the ancient cliff dwellers and other places of interest in New Mexico, and gathered such information as was of great assistance to him in the oils, water colors and block work in which he is now engaged. He was married a short time ago to a lady whose tastes correspond with his own. She also receives her share of complimentary mention in the above article.
