FORT STANTON NEWS

The work connected with construction of 35 new cottages for patients is progressing nicely. The leveling of the ground, where they will stand, is nearly completed and the foundations which are to be all concrete, will be erected soon. These cottages will be far superior to the old ones. They will have double flooring and sheathing; ceiling all around the inside; built-in dressers, lockers and wardrobes; sliding canvas panels, instead of rolling flaps; concrete porches and sidewalk; also, the roofs will be covered with fire and hail-proof asbestos shingles.

Our famous horticulturist, Rev. Smith and assistants have been hard at work on the garden surrounding the Community House, planting flowers, trees, etc. When summer comes and nature takes its course the place will be transformed into a charming tropical garden with beautiful flowers, vines, trees and shrubbery, giving forth a sweet fragrant scent. A veritable dreamland, where little birds sing, butterflies play in the sunlight, and, from a fountain, water will trickle down into a crystal clear pool, full of lilies, gold fish and big juicy frogs.

When passing through the deep woods near Mesalero, they suddenly beheld, ahead of them, a horrible ghost-like figure, draped in a weird looking shroud, doing the 'Hula Hula' dance in the middle of the road. Mr. Northrup stepped on the gas and as they whizzed by, the mysterious spook disappeared in the dark. It was found out afterwards that a gasoline truck had broken down at this place and the driver, wrapped up in a white blanket to protect himself against the cold, had tried to flag motorists to get a ride to the nearest garage.

Chief Black Hawk and His "War"

Indian Memorial on Rock River, Ill.

IT WAS just 100 years ago that there was being fought in Illinois and Wisconsin what has been called "the most inglorious war, from the standpoint of its military and naval operations, in which the United States was ever engaged." This was the conflict which has a place in our history schoolbooks as "the Black Hawk war" but which scarcely deserves the dignity of that title except that it was a war between two irreconcilable points of view—that of the American frontiersman and that of the American Indian. From the Indian point of view, Chief Black Hawk was a patriot, fighting bravely in defense of his ancestral home; from the frontiersman's point of view, he was only another "savage and bloodthirsty redskin" who had to be gotten rid of to make way for the "advance of civilization."

The leading figure in this now dimly remembered war was Ma ka ta me she kio kiah, or Black Hawk, a chief of the Sauk and Fox Indians, of whom Keokuk, or Watchful Fox, was the head chief. By the Treaty of November 3, 1804 made at St. Louis, the Sauk and Fox agreed to surrender all of their lands east of the Mississippi. But it was not until the close of the War of 1812, when a wave of migration began to pour into Illinois, that the United States was ready to claim the land which it had acquired from the Indians. Keokuk and the majority of his tribe bowed to the inevitable and moved across the Mississippi to a new home in Iowa. But Black Hawk, who had been a disciple of Tecumseh, the great Shawnee, and an ally of the British in the War of 1812, felt it to be his duty to maintain the old lands. He maintained that he had been deceived as to the terms of the St. Louis treaty and did not consider them binding upon him.

By 1831 so much friction between Black Hawk's tribesmen and the Illinois settlers had developed that Governor Reynolds considered it advisable to call out the militia to "protect the lives and property" of the pioneers. But General Gaines, military commandant in the West, hoping to avoid the expense of a demonstration with force, summoned Black Hawk and his sub-chiefs to a conference at Fort Armstrong on the Mississippi. The council was a stormy one and resulted in no satisfactory settlement of the difficulties, whereupon the militia on June 13 left their camp at Rushville, Ill., and marched upon Black Hawk's village. They found it deserted and burned all the lodges. Then Gaines sent word to Black Hawk that the "hostiles" should come in for a peace talk and on June 30 Black Hawk and 27 of his followers signed a treaty with Governor Reynolds by which they agreed to refrain from hostile acts and to retire to Iowa. There was no trouble with them until early in 1832 when Black Hawk crossed over into Illinois with some 2,000 Indians, of whom it was estimated more than 500 were warriors. Immediately the wildest rumors spread along the Illinois frontier. "Black Hawk and 1,000 blood-thirsty savages were descending upon the settlements to kill, scalp and burn."

The Indian side of the story is rather different. Under the terms of the treaty which Black Hawk had signed with General Gaines the Indians were to be supplied with corn in place of that which they had left in their fields when they went to Iowa. What had happened is a familiar incident in the history of our relations with the Indians. The government failed to keep its promise. The amount of corn turned over to them was so meager that they began to suffer from hunger. In that emergency, a party of the Sauk, in the words of Black Hawk, crossed the river "to steal some corn from their own fields."

Moving with his band up the Rock river, Black Hawk was overtaken by a messenger from General Atkinson, ordering him to return and recross the Mississippi. Black Hawk replied that he had not taken the warpath but was going on a friendly visit to the village of White Cloud, the Winnebago prophet, and continued his journey. Atkinson then sent imperative orders for him to return at once or he would pursue with his army and drive him back. To this the Indian leader protested that the general had no right to utter such a threat so long as his mission to the Winnebagoes was a peaceable one and that he intended to continue on his way. "Continue he did, until he was met by some Winnebago and Pottawatomie chiefs. In a council they made it plain that they had no intention of joining with Black Hawk in any war upon the Americans. Feeling that he had been betrayed by his Indian friends, the Sauk leader resolved to send a flag of truce to Atkinson, asking permission to descend the Rock river, recross the Mississippi and return to his reservation in Iowa.

In the meantime Governor Reynolds had called out the militia and one of the captains of the hastily-organized companies, elected by his own men, was a lanky young storekeeper from New Salem named Abraham Lincoln. At about the time Black Hawk was holding his council with the other tribes, a large force of the militia had mobilized under General Whitesides near Dixon's Ferry. At the request of Maj. Isiah Stillman, Whitesides sent a scouting party of about 270 men under Stillman to try to locate the Indians. This party ascended the Rock river to the mouth of Sycamore creek and camped there, ignorant of the fact that they were only a short distance from Black Hawk's camp.

Then occurred a tragic error—the first in a war filled with tragic blunders. Black Hawk sent three of his warriors under a flag of truce to ask for a conference. Stillman's undisciplined volunteers fired on them, killing one. Then followed the opera bouffe "battle" which has come down in history as "Stillman's Run" in which 40 Indians sent 270 white men into headlong flight, inflicting a loss of about a dozen on the militia.

The news of this defeat spread even greater terror through the state. Governor Reynolds called out more troops and from Washington came the news that Gen. Winfield Scott had been ordered to the scene of the "war" with a thousand regulars. While en route to Illinois this army was attacked by the cholera and the mortality from that disease was greater than the total number killed and disabled by the Indians during the entire war.

The war dragged on throughout the summer of 1832 without any very decisive result, except that the superior forces of the whites gradually began to wear down the Indians. Finally the Indian leader suffered a crushing defeat at the hands of an army commanded by Gen. James D. Henry in a battle on the Wisconsin river, losing 63 warriors killed and many more wounded and disabled.

Black Hawk now realized that the game was up. With the remnants of his band he headed for the Mississippi, hoping to escape from the soldiers and find peace among his people already settled in Iowa. He reached the Mississippi at the mouth of the Bad Axe river on August 1 with his starving warriors and his pitiful little band of women and children. Then occurred an incident which is often spoken of as a "naval engagement in an inland war."

While Black Hawk and his tribesmen were trying to cross the river in canoes and on rafts, a steamer, the Warrior, hove into sight. On board was a detachment of soldiers and one small cannon. Black Hawk raised a white flag to ask for a parley. And again the flag of truce was dishonored by the white man. The captain of the Warrior asserted that he believed the flag was only a decoy used by the wily Indians to lure him into an ambush. So he ordered the cannon to be unlimbered and it began shelling the Indian camp. As a result 23 Indians were killed outright and many others were wounded.

The following day the pursuing troops under General Atkinson, which were joined by a detachment of regulars under Col. Zachary Taylor and an army of Wisconsin volunteers, came up and attacked Black Hawk's camp. The end is not pleasant reading, for it was an Indian massacre—contrary to the popular idea of that. It was a massacre of Indians by white men.

The weakened Indians were no match for the whites. Finding that their attempts to surrender were useless they resolved to sell their lives as dearly as possible. So they put up a desperate resistance but were driven at the point of the bayonet into the river. Indian women with children clinging to them plunged into the river only to be drowned or shot down by sharpshooters on the banks. The Warrior, returning from Prairie du Chien, added to the carnage by raking the shore with canister. More than 150 Indians were killed or drowned and only about 50 were taken prisoners.

Black Hawk and his chief warrior, Neopope, escaped to the north and sought refuge among the Winnebagoes. A short time later he surrendered to General Street at Prairie du Chien, and was sent down the river to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., as a prisoner of war. The man placed in charge of him was a young lieutenant, the son-in-law of Colonel Taylor. His name was Jefferson Davis and of this man who later became President of the Confederacy, Black Hawk said "He was a good and brave young chief with whose conduct I was much pleased, and he treated me with great kindness."

After being imprisoned in Fortress Monroe, Va., for a short time Black Hawk was allowed to return to the Sauk and Fox reservation in Iowa. There he died on October 3, 1833, and there he was buried in accordance with the customs of his people. So Black Hawk slept in peace at last but not in the soil which he loved so well—that of the beautiful Rock river country in northern Illinois. But his spirit broods over that land in the form of a giant concrete statue of an Indian, the work of Lorado Taft, which stands on a high bluff near Oregon, Ill., overlooking the Rock river. Although it is commonly referred to as "the Black Hawk statue," the sculptor has repeatedly said that it is intended to symbolize the Indian—a spirit unconquered while still the conquered race. Even so, it may appropriately be a memorial to Black Hawk of the Sauk and Foxes, for his was such a spirit.

The governor arrived with his six swordsmen and halberdiers—the one colorful token of pomp in the colony. Peggy Weld stood with Philander Forman a little beyond the entrance.

"We were waiting for a look at you and to tell you of our love," said Forman.

William smiled. He shook their hands, saying to Peggy:

"You great lawyer! Why are you so pale and anxious? Be of good cheer."

They went to their seats. In a moment or so the meeting house was filled. Even the stairways were crowded with the young. The prisoners fled in, led by the ponderous John Samp, with sword and pistol hanging from his belt. They were followed by three armed constables. All heads were turned to look at the children of Satan, among whom was Robert Heathers with the hempen noose around his neck.

"Why has that humiliation been put upon him?" William asked himself as he looked.

A like query was in the minds of many. Was it a warning to the evildoer—a token of the dreadful punishment he was soon to suffer? The truth is the noose was put on Robert's neck that morning in compliance with a special order from the governor.

Now, in front of the pulpit, wherein sat the minister, was a platform for elders and, a little lower, one for the deacons of the parish. There was no musical instrument. The presenter arose, blew on a little box of wood, with a movable slide, to get his pitch and led the congregation in the opening hymn.

Doctor Cotton said in the first prayer: "When the devil maketh a man to holl against his brother and urgeth that he be hardly treated I pray that the man may consider himself and say: 'I have offended God more than this poor sinner hath offended me.'"

No doubt the heart of the good doctor was touched by the plight of the young man who had been his friend.

Rev. John Wilson asked those who wished to be prayed for to arise and present their bills.

William Heydon arose and walked to the side of his friend who sat at the end of the prisoner's pew next to the aisle. The stage had been carefully set for this dramatic moment by the governor.

William took the hempen noose from Robert's neck and put it on his own. "This is my confession," he said. "Before this day I should have made it. Long have I walked among you with this burden on me waiting for the chance to prove my courage and my manhood, for I could not bear to stand unregretted and a coward. Now I find here covered with my shame. When you pray for me pray also for the soul of her who shared my sin. To justify my act in your hearing I have not the will to try. I set myself before another judgment seat and of its finding I have no fear. The man whose shame and burden I now take upon me ran away in the hope that by so doing he could save my life. He has suffered much for his love of me. Of that I would not fail to tell you. Only one fear is in my heart—that my small service to the public and my many friends may embarrass the court. I have suffered the torment of the damned. My hope, my pride, my cherished plans have been swept away. I stand before you stripped and naked. I shall go hence to my home and there await your further wishes. I no longer fear you. If you would lighten this noose upon my neck until my life is ended you will only grieve my friends—not me."

He went to his seat. It was a tense moment. A little groan came from the lips of Margaret Hooper. Tears were flowing down her cheeks. She could fathom the depth of his words as could no other. The young man bent his head and whispered in her ear. A deep, electric silence had fallen upon the crowd emphasized by little signs of emotion. The hand of God was being laid on the souls of the people.

Rev. Philander Forman arose and went to William. He took the noose from his neck. These were his words: "I have said to the magistrates and I say again that the William Heydon who has spoken to you, with the grace of God in his heart, is not the man who broke a law of the court but one who has risen through suffering to a manhood noble and beloved, the like of which is not in this colony. Heydon the almsman has already suffered the pain of death. He is not here. Only the name remains—a thing without substance. If there be one among you who dares to think that he is as free of sin as this young friend of mine let him hurl the first stone, but I warn him that his conceit shall not pass unscathed."

The prayer, the sermon followed, but for once not many could have told what was said in them. The psalm singing and the benediction! There were many benedictions that morning as the people crowded around William and Robert and shook their hands.

"It was a sight as comely as the curtains of Solomon," said Margaret Hooper. "Dear son, the grace of God was poured upon your face."

No stone was hurled then or later. Again free, the young men walked to their home with Margaret and Peggy and Forman. The sun shone and song sparrows and bluebirds were singing on either side of them as they walked and talked together.

They found Amos Todkill waiting on the small veranda.

"I tried to travel by the light of the moon," he said to Forman. "I was lost and foundered in the darkness. So they got by me on the path."

His words had reference to William and his returning company.

"Faithful soul!" Peggy exclaimed. "It does not matter. Robert is free."

Amos threw his hat high above his head and lifted his right foot and shook it vigorously.

"You are to go out to my house tomorrow prepared to stay," said Peggy. "I need your help there. It may be that Robert will come to see us now and then."

"I think that it is very likely," said Robert with a smile.

"But you are not to come until Thursday," said Peggy. "Then we shall be ready for you."

For a time the young men were engaged with their business affairs. On Thursday they went out to Moon-dawn.

"It is very beautiful," said Robert. "I should love to live here."

"Well, I built it hoping that you would," she answered with a smile.

He kissed her lips and said as he looked down into her eyes:

"I now ask you to marry me. It's the first chance I've had."

She answered with a laugh: "Come to the house and I will perform my last act as your lawyer. I will collect my fee. Rev. Mr. Forman is there and William and Amos Todkill. In business I neglect no detail."

Again he kissed her.

Amos came upon them suddenly while they were in this tender attitude.

"Don't mind me," he said. "This is as nat'ral for the young as goin'."

"He Knew That the Penalty Was Death."

barefoot to a goose. May nothin' worse than a moonbeam ever cross yer path."

As they walked together up the hill Peggy said: "Dear Robert, tell me the story of that black night when you went away with Amos on the tavern ship and took my heart with you and left us in a cloud of mystery."

"Now it may be told," the young lover answered. "I was returning to our home about nine thirty-five. I found Amos waiting for me in the doorway. I heard a dog barking and a loud yelp down the road and the feet of a man running toward the house. I left Amos and went out into the road. It is a thing that I cannot explain but those footsteps seemed to tell me that they were William's and that he was in trouble. I ran toward the sound of them. About ten rods from our door William came out of the darkness and fell into my arms. He was nearly spent. He told me what had happened in the thicket. He knew that the penalty was death. I had my wits about me. I said:

"It was dark in the thicket. The constable could not tell whether it was you or I. That little woman will not betray you. I will run away with Amos. They'll be sure to think that I am the guilty man. You go up now to the camp and tell Peggy to take charge of the men in the morning."

"He set out for the camp. I told Amos that I had to get away from there and quickly. He knew that the tavern ship was going out at midnight. His captain had been trying to hire him. I had to go or be a witness against my friend. I was in eager haste. I got my wallet and gun and we set out for the shore where Amos had a boat house and a canoe. We reached the tavern ship in good time. When news came to the ship that William was to be tried for his life I did what I could to turn suspicion upon myself and that was a help to my friend as time went on.

"One thing was not in my reckoning. Mabel Hartley revealed the identity of her companion though she tried later to take it back. It is likely that for some time she and William had been well acquainted, but all this is to be forgotten. She was fair—very fair to look upon and one cannot help being human even in America."

"Be of good cheer," said Peggy with a smile. "I shall try to keep you out of danger."

"Often I wonder at what has come to pass in the soul of my friend," the young lover remarked. "I reckon a man is like a tree. If he is well rooted, strength, from the source of all power, comes into him and he grows. But a man can make his own soil and sunlight so that there is a kind of magic in his growth."

Peggy answered: "Somehow William got in touch with that power which hung the earth upon nothing and keeps it spinning in the sky. So I wonder not that we have seen a miracle."

Near the end of his term Governor Vane was voted down because of his liberal views. He returned to England and became one of the great figures in its history—a member of parliament in 1640; treasurer of the navy when Blake won his victories; a member of the Long parliament where in he led the opposition to the royalist party and was largely responsible for the trial and execution of the earl of Strafford. He went to Scotland as a commissioner to negotiate the Alliance League and Covenant was adopted. He was on all commissions treating with the king. He led the minority. In 1649 he had the control of the navy and of all foreign wars. In 1653 he opposed Cromwell's dissolution of parliament by force and became his enemy. After Cromwell's death he led the Republican party. Then the Restoration and the famous letter of Charles II in which he wrote to his counselors: "He (Vane) is too dangerous a man to let live if we can honestly put him out of the way." Vane was tried for treason and, although innocent, was denied the benefit of counsel or a day's delay to secure witnesses. He went to the block and in his last words he sounded the keynote of the Puritan character:

"I can die, but I cannot violate my conscience."

William Heydon, a wealthy planter and shipbuilder in America and quietly influential in its liberal party, was in England at that time. He was among the many friends of Sir Harry Vane who went to speak a friendly word to him and take a last look at his beloved face. William was then forty-eight years old. He had never married. A modest, unpretentious citizen rarely seen and never heard in public assemblies it is nevertheless true that for many years the rulers of the colony were named by the master of Heydon hall. It was his friend Richard Bellingham, twice governor, who late in 1661 sent him cheering news from England:

"I have seen Bessie Brade (she wrote). She is the victim of a father's stubborn pride. Like you, she is living with a memory. I learn that she wrote to you long ago. I wonder if the letter ever came to your hand. Probably not. Then a friend of her father coming over reported that you were soon to marry. Discouraged by this false report she engaged herself to a son of the second earl of Warwick who before their wedding was killed in a battle at sea. She loves you. In the last year her father has passed away. You are still in the full strength of your manhood. You owe it to yourself and to her to go to England and there amend the remarkable story of your life and hers. She has suffered not less than you but through it all she has kept her beauty."

So it happened that William Heydon took a ship for England. In the crowd at Vane's funeral he met the Lady Bess. He took her hand.

"The glory of youth is gone but still you are beautiful," he said.

"If so it is because I have had a memory and a hope," she answered.

She took his arm and they walked away together.

Boxing the Compass
To box the compass means, in nautical language, to recite in consecutive order the points of the mariner's compass. The points from north to east are as follows: North, north one-half east, north by east, north east one-half east, north east, north east one-half east, north east by east, north east by east one-half east, east north east, east one-half east, east by north, east one-half north, east.

Lesson for April 17 THE CALL OF ABRAM

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 12:1-9.
GOLDEN TEXT—And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Abram Leaving Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God Calls Abram to a Great Adventure.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Life an Adventure.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Conquering Power of Faith.

I. His Separation (v. 1).

The new era inaugurated with Noah as head ended in a colossal failure in the impious attempt of man on the plains of Shinar to set himself free from God's government. In view of this failure, God turned aside from the race as such and called Abram and placed him at the head of a new nation which he would train for himself. This call involved:

1. A great sacrifice. It meant the severance of three ties:

a. His country in the widest range of his affections.

b. His place of birth and kindred which comes still closer to his heart.

c. His father's house as the inmost circle of all tender emotions. All these must be cast off before the Lord could set him into the place of blessing. This is a call that is much needed today. The Lord is continually saying, "Come ye out from among them" (II Cor. 6: 16-18).

2. The performance of heroic tasks.

For Abram to go into a strange land and take possession of it, for God called for heroism. The life of separation from the world costs much, but it is the only way to have God's favor.

3. God's Promise to Abram (vv. 2-3).

The demand for separation was followed by a seven-fold promise—a gracious engagement on God's part to communicate unmerited favors and confer blessings upon him.

1. "I will make of thee a great nation" (v. 2). This was fulfilled in a natural way in the Jewish nation and in Ishmael (Gen. 17:20); also in a spiritual seed embracing both Jews and Gentiles (Gal. 3:7, 8).

2. "I will bless thee" (v. 2). This was fulfilled:

a. Temporally (Gen. 13:14-17; 24: 35). Abram was enriched with lands, cattle, silver and gold.

b. Spiritually (Gen. 15:6; John 8: 50). He was freely justified on the grounds of his faith. The righteousness of Christ was imputed unto him, also he had the exalted privilege of talking face to face with the Lord.

3. "And make thy name great" (v. 2). Going out from his father's house, he himself was to have a great name. He was to be the head of a new house which would be venerated far and wide. He is known as the "friend of God" (James 2:23).

4. "Thou shalt be a blessing" (v. 2). We now pass from the lower to the higher phase of the promise. It was a great thing to be thus honored and blessed by God, but to be the medium of blessing to others was greater still.

5. "I will bless them that bless thee" (v. 3). Abram and the nation which came forth from his loins became the very touchstone of God. Since he is God's friend, he regards acts performed toward him as toward himself. This has been strikingly exemplified in all ages since. The nations that have used the Jews well have been blessed.

6. "And curse him that curseth thee" (v. 3). The nations which have turned against Abram and the nation of which he was head have never prospered. While God at times used the surrounding nations as scourges for his people, he in turn punished them for it.

7. "And in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (v. 3). This has been fulfilled in:

a. The Jewish nation being made the repository of the oracles of God. Through them the Bible has been given to the world.

b. The bringing of the Redeemer into the world. Thus they became the channel through which God's richest Gift came into the world.

c. A future time when Jews shall be God's missionaries in carrying the good tidings to the ends of the earth.

III. Abram's Obedience to God (vv. 4-8).

Abram at once departed out of his own land. He proved his faith by his obedience. He went out not knowing whither he went. He was a typical believer. He renounced indulgence and idolatry. He separated himself for a testimony by his altars of witness. He entered into Canaan and accepted a pilgrim life.

MAKING OF HOLLAND

Dutch Damsels Talking Shop.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

VEGETABLES, not fish, will be the products of the broad expanse of the Zuiderzee, which now is having a complete change of face. Drainage and filling the Zuiderzee will add more than 1,000 square miles of farm land to the Netherlands area. The work when completed, will cost the Dutch government some $350,000,000.

Long ago the ocean salt to the Hollander, "You shall have no land here." The Hollander said to the ocean, "We will have a country here"; and they have one, in spite of water, winds, and waves.

In Holland all is new—the gulfs, lakes, and islands have come into existence under man's observation. He has seen within historic times sand close a river's mouth, land converted into water, and lakes dry up and disappear.

The ordinary agencies of change—wind and wave, rain and flood, and the rise and fall of land—have here found a favoring field for their activities.

Long after the greater part of the continent of Europe had become fixed and stable, Holland began its geographic formation and its still pursuing processes intended to hold or enlarge its boundaries.

By the aid of old maps and documents we can learn what Holland was at the time it first found a place and designation on the world's charts, and following them in sequence one can note the changes that have been wrought by the action of the waters of the rivers, the waves of the sea, and the hands of man—in short, how Holland was made.

The power of the rivers one can see in the inundations; the action of the sea in the sand dunes along the coast; and the transformation by man everywhere.

Before the birth of the Rhine a great part of the Netherlands, as we now see it, was a sea, limited on the German side by a rocky coast which now shows itself in the Tuetoburger Wald hills. The uplifting of the Ardennes enclosed a sea in the interior of Germany which, shielded by the Alps on its southern coast and protected from the cold winds of the north, became full to overflowing from the melting ice. Finally the pent-up waters broke through, and in the bed thus formed the Rhine has since been flowing.

How the Land Was Formed.

With the rush of the waters masses of rocks were hurled along until the moving force exhausted itself; smaller particles were carried farther, and when the sea was reached its resistance robbed the river of its final burden, and sand dunes formed the northern boundaries of Holland. The pebbles and grains of sand on which rests the soil of Gelderland and Overijssel and the island of Texel show that their primeval home was the basalt regions of the Rhine.

The result of the conflict between the waters of the rivers and the sea into which they seek to find an outlet is seen in the deltas of our largest streams.

Before reaching the Dutch frontier the Rhine has lost all the beauty of its banks, and flows in great, lazy curves suggestive of approaching old age. The indecision of senility is now seen in the separation of the Rhine into two parts. The main branch shamefully discards its name and throws itself into the Meuse, a river of French origin; the other branch, insulted by the name of Sannabrog canal, after going nearly to Arnhem, separates into two parts, one emptying into the Zuiderzee; the other, retaining its early name, though qualified as the Lower Rhine, goes as far as Daurstede, where it divides for the third time.

During the reign of Louis Bonaparte a canal was opened through the dunes and the Rhine again conducted to the sea. The mouth of this canal is protected by enormous dikes and breakwaters and the sea itself is held in check by locks, or sluice-gates.

When the tide is high these locks are closed, to prevent the waters of the sea from invading the land; when the tide falls they are opened, to give passage to the waters of the Rhine which have accumulated behind them, and then 3,000 cubic feet of water a minute pass out.

Continual Battle With the Sea.

The rivers of Holland, like all rivers whose lower reaches have but little fall, drop sediment along these lower levels, especially at their mouths. The sea has resisted this encroachment, and in retreating has continually fought to regain lost territory. It has thrown barriers across the river channel to make the rivers themselves destroy the land of their creation; it has buried the rich alluvial soil fathoms deep under unproductive sands, and where it does not throw up sand dunes as a fortress against itself, the state must accept the challenge and wage a royal battle.

The other rivers that have contributed to the wealth and woe of Holland have been less vacillating in approaching their outlets, but equal vigilance has been needed to keep their waters from inundating the land. Dikes must be built on both banks as high and as far upstream as experience demands.

Along the North sea there are places where, owing to changing winds, the sand cannot accumulate in quantities sufficient to form protecting dunes. Here sea-dikes must be built—veritable fortifications.

They are built of earth, firmly packed on the sea-face, and partly paved with dressed Norway granite or Rhine basalt blocks.

Beginning at the top, the dimensions are as follows:

Thirty feet across the top, on which there is a double-track railroad for the transportation of materials with which to make repairs.

On the sea-face it inclines at an angle of 30 degrees for a distance of about 40 feet; then the slope is one in three. Here the stone paving begins and extends about 50 feet.

From this point for 100 feet a sod surface is maintained, but beyond that for 110 feet, where the forces of the storm-lashed waves beat hardest, the surface is faced with stone. This carries the face to a point about three feet below high tide; then a flat pavement is laid out to and beyond the low-water line.

As a precaution, three rows of piles are driven in to hold the facing in place, and two other rows of larger piles, with their tops protruding, extend along the line where the waves are most aggressive.

Costly But Necessary.

The amount of labor required to construct such fortifications can hardly be imagined and the cost is well-nigh beyond conjecture. The piles, all of which came from other lands, cost, in place, $1 each.

This defense is not an idle precaution. When the west winds drive the waters from the English channel to meet those deflected by Norway's unyielding shores, they fill up the North sea and seek their old course across the Netherlands.

The sluggish current of the Zuiderzee is a weak contestant with the remorseless tide of the North sea. Consequently its shifting sands threaten to close up the harbor of Amsterdam and also rendered precarious the navigation out to and around the Helder. It was therefore decided some years ago to construct a ship canal directly to the North sea.

This great work was completed in 1870, with the sea terminus at IJmuiden. The sea being higher at high tide than the water in the harbor at Amsterdam, it was necessary to have big locks at that end.

The traffic through this canal is so great that the water let through in the locking would soon become a source of danger. The harbor of Amsterdam is, therefore, shut off from the Zuiderzee by means of dikes, with a series of locks to permit ingress and egress.

Protecting Dikes Everywhere.

It is not the sea alone that calls for the defending dikes. Every outlet into the sea must have embankments high enough to overtop the highest incoming tide, for twice every day these outlets become estuaries of the sea, and the land would be covered by the invading brackish water if it were not for the dike-like banks.

The farmers frequently build their dwelling houses under the lee of these banks, and from the deck of a passing steamboat one can literally look down the chimney, though he may hardly, in some have claimed, see what the farmer's wife is cooking for his dinner.

The Dutch word polder is a term applied to any area of land protected by an encircling dike and drained by its own system of pumps. Some of these are barely below the general level and need only a slight embankment; such are usually of firm soil, and after the removal of the water become arable fields. Others were originally ponds or lakes, or deposits of muck which have to be inclosed by more substantial embankments, and the removal of the water in the first instance as well as subsequently is a serious matter.

Twilight of Darrowism

In the trial now in full blast in Honolulu, in which Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer is conducting the defense against a young and spirited attorney, Darrow shows a lack of the old fire and influencing arguments which has always characterized his brilliant career as one of the foremost criminal lawyers of this country.

Even at the beginning, he lost out in the selecting of a jury, something he was noted for, was in ways which puzzled his adversaries. He would startle the court by scheming and maneuvering until he would get a jury strictly according to his wishes in spite of the many acts of lawyers on the opposite side to overthrow him.

But now in his declining years he fails to live up to the smoothness of years ago. He has set and admitted testimony when in times gone by, he would jump to his feet and with fiery gestures, raise objections so convincing that the court would order the testimony struck out and score point after point for Darrow's clients.

Criminals of the worst type have crowded each other in their attempts to secure his services, that many times he has had criminal cases ahead of him for several years, it being impossible for him to attend to them all, and clients would not let him to apply substitutes.

The old must give place to the young, and there is no more of a striking example of this truth than in the case of Clarence Darrow. He had announced that this was his last trial, and it will be, for his failure in this, will forever doom him for anything in the legal line hereafter.

Local Red Cross Chapter

On Tuesday afternoon, April 6, a called meeting of the Local Red Cross Chapter was held in the office of the County School Superintendent, at the suggestion of Miss Gimstead, Field Representative. Due to the death of the late John A. Haley, who has served as Chapter Chairman so faithfully and effectively for a number of years, it was necessary to complete the organization. Those elected for the coming year were:

Chapter Chairman, J. E. Hall; Vice-Chairman, Mrs. R. E. Blaney; Sec'y-Treas., Mrs. J. V. Hobble. Sub-committee on Disaster: Chairman, D. U. Groce; Volunteer Service, Mrs. John A. Haley; Medical Aid, Miss Brunk; Good Distribution, G. T. McQuillen; Communication and Transportation, Mrs. J. B. French; Finance, Mrs. J. V. Hobble; Clothing, Mrs. R. E. Blaney; Shelter, Mrs. Pete Johnson; Registrar and Information, Mrs. Clara Snyder.

The House Plant

A successful method of keeping the house plant fresh during a week's absence is to soak a large sponge well with water and place it on the dirt in the pot. The plant will absorb enough water to keep it in good condition during your stay.

A Bacheller story of the "North Country" based on a trial famous in the legal annals of New York state. A typically human American story. The woody setting, the quaint customs and the highly humorous sayings of the countryside, the unconscious nobility of its steadfast people, all blend to make the distinctive flavor of a true Bacheller story.

Misplaced Credit

The honey bee has been greatly admired for the cleverness with which it constructs six-sided cells for the storage of honey. Darwin spoke of the arrangement as "inimitable" for strength and economy of space. But the truth is that no bee ever thought of a hexagon. The cells are built as cylinders, which, crowded together when soft, cannot do otherwise than assume a regular six-sided form, in obedience to mathematical law.

Ginkgo Fruit

The fruit of the Ginkgo looks like a drupe superficially, but is very much more like a cone than a drupe in actual structure. The order to which the Ginkgo belongs is one of three orders of Gymnosperms, or plants with naked seeds, the most important of which is the order of cone-bearing trees, or conifers. The Ginkgo is closely allied to the conifers and is called a deciduous conifer, or cone-bearing tree, which drops its leaves yearly.

Brains and Brawn

Contrary to the popular notion that brains and brawn do not mix, that the weakling is one cut out for intellectual endeavors, it would seem that the opposite is true. Calvin T. Ryan points out in Hygeia Magazine. Health goes hand in hand with intellectual prowess, and physical fitness is necessary for leadership.

Watermelon's Travels

The watermelon is a native of Africa. It was early taken to India, as seems indicated by its having a Sanskrit name. It reached China about the Tenth century A. D. It has no name in the ancient Greek and Latin languages and was probably not known to these people much before the Christian era.

Would Go Unnoticed

If the world were to end in a blaze of glory the people would be too busy praying to notice the spectacle. — Toledo Blade.

The Seahorse

The tiny seahorse gallops over the coral of the warm tropical sea safely incased in a bony armor. Municipal aquariums throughout the country have specimens of this interesting little fish, which must be kept in salt water similar to that of its sea home. It is so called because of its startling resemblance to our equine friend. It, too, feeds on grass, of marine character, and disports itself as lively as any colt of the pastureland.

Or the Nighthawk

Visiting the Buckeye state, a man from the Empire state drops a line to the Toledo Blade: "Every state in the Union," he reminds, "has a nickname and several have two or three; each (excepting the Keystone state) has adopted a flower. Now," he continues, "I see they're beginning to choose state birds. What bird would be your suggestion for New York?" "Well," gurgles the editor, "there's the swallow."

Thirty-four per cent of London's foreign population are Russian, 10 per cent Italian, 8 per cent German and 7 per cent French.

Good Omen

It is considered among New England sword-fishermen an exceedingly good omen to haul in a "skilleggee." Perhaps this is because the billfish, as it is more widely known, is even more belligerent than the swordfish and can be landed only at great risk, and also because the species is rarely found in New England waters. It usually prefers a southern habitat, but occasionally one travels with a school of swordfish as far north as Georges bank. Billfishes range from 6 to 20 feet in length, and in weight from 100 to 1,000 pounds.

Baptist Church

Regular services at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. next Sunday.

Beginning last Sunday night, the pastor is preaching a series of sermons on the Sermon on the Mount at the evening services. These are very interesting studies. The Sermon on the Mount is not, as some seem to imagine, a mere set of rules for good conduct, no more spiritual than a book of etiquette. In reality whoever comes up to the standard of conduct set forth in these words of our Lord, must be in constant and vital communion with the Almighty. A cordial invitation is extended to all to join in this study of the greatest Sermon that ever fell on human ears. Read the whole Sermon—the 5th, 6th and 7th chapters of Matthew, and then come out to the services on Sunday evening.

Of course, you know what tribute is. Tribute is a gift from the weak to the strong, a gift not offered willingly by the giver, but demanded by the one to whom it is given.

All during the hectic days that followed that historic flight, when Lindbergh was being paraded and feted and called upon to make speeches, he frequently used the plural pronoun "we" in speaking of his trip.

Speaker Garner in Dramatic Speech Quells House Sales Tax Rebels—Substitute for Defeated Sales Tax Is Quickly Passed.

SPEAKER JOHN N. GARNER quelled the house of representative tax rebels and assured the nation of tax legislation that would balance the national budget. The members of both parties who had successfully opposed the sales tax provisions of the bill drafted by the ways and means committee promised to be good and support the new bill introduced by the committee and as a substitute for the sales tax that had been defeated.

It all came about when the speaker took the floor and delivered a speech that was a combination of tempered argument, impassioned plea, and camp-meeting exhortation. As he whirled into his peroration, an excited house membership answered his appeal for those resolved to lead a new life to arise. En masse the congressmen surged to their feet and took the pledge to pass a tax measure that will balance the budget.

Then the house settled down to business. The ways and means committee introduced its list of new taxes to take the place of the defeated sales tax, and the various items were approved so rapidly that Acting Chairman Crisp had to stop the offering of items in order to give the engrossing clerks time to draw the various amendments.

The new levies as provided for in the house bill covers taxes on the following articles with the estimated revenue:

The house bill provides for the payment of the levied excise and sales taxes by the manufacturer direct to the government, with the method of collecting the taxes about the same as under the general manufacturers' sales tax which was rejected. That does not mean, however, that the tax will not be passed along in the form of an increased price for the merchandise, and there is nothing in the bill that would prevent the manufacturer from directly including the tax item in his invoice to the jobber or retailer and so on down the line until it reaches the consumer.

The fact that the house has passed a revenue bill does not mean that this bill is to be the law of the land. It is almost certain that the senate will not agree. The senate committee is very likely to substitute for the new provisions of the house bill the manufacturers' sales tax that was rejected by the house, and pass the revenue bill in that form. Should it do so it will mean another fight in the house, then a long conference consideration, and there is no prospect for an early adjournment of congress. Experienced members of both houses are now predicting that there will not be an agreement over a revenue bill earlier than September.

THE Hoover budget will be slashed a quarter of a billion dollars if the house accepts the recommendations already made and to be made by its appropriations and economy committees, Chairman Joseph W. Byrns (Dem., Tenn.) of the house appropriations committee asserted.

Just prior to announcing his resignation, on a plea of overwork, from the chairmanship of the special economy committee, Mr. Byrns said that body will submit recommendations calling for consolidations and economies totalling at least $75,000,000 and possibly a sum two or three times that figure.

Chairman Byrns said that hearings thus far conducted by the various committees handling governmental supply bills disclosed that at least $150,000,000 could be shaved off the budget figures submitted by President Hoover without in any way impairing the efficiency of the government. The committees plan to slash an additional $50,000,000 from national defense appropriations, Mr. Byrns said.

NORMAN DAVIS, one of the American delegates to the Geneva arms conference, arrived in Washington and went into a series of conferences with State department executives. Although officials declined to make public the nature of the discussions it was learned that Mr. Davis outlined the obstacles which have been encountered in the move to work out a general arms limitation treaty and reported to the department on the plan of action for the future outlined by himself and his associates. As matters now stand, many pressing European problems must be settled before there is the remotest chance for the negotiation of a treaty which carries reductions in land forces.

PRESIDENT HOOVER announced formally at the regular press conference that he is "absolutely opposed to the enactment by congress of additional soldiers' bonus legislation, and indicated that he would veto such a bill if passed. The President's statement follows:

"Informal polls of the house of representatives have created apprehension in the country that a further bonus bill of $2,000,000,000 or thereabouts for World war veterans will be passed.

"I wish to state again that I am absolutely opposed to any such legislation.

"I made this position clear at the meeting of the American Legion in Detroit last September 21, and the Legion has consistently supported that position. I do not believe any such legislation can become law.

"Such action would undo every effort that is being made to reduce government expenditures and balance the budget.

"The first duty of every citizen of the United States is to build up and sustain the credit of the United States government.

"Such an action would irretrievably undermine it."

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE Arthur M. Hyde called his department the "prize boob in the history of finance," because of its policy of making virtually unsecured loans to farmers in the face of rapidly mounting crop surpluses.

"Under present conditions," Secretary Hyde said "my department is now lending more money on thinner security and sustaining more losses than any organization ever has done before in the history of the world. Loans now being made by my department to small farmers who otherwise could not finance themselves could not be the furthest stretch of the imagination he called good business."

The Hyde statement was directed at the farm loan policy under which the Agriculture department makes loans to small farmers for economic reasons. He asserted that the government should not go into the business of making loans to farmers except in cases of drought, or floods or calamities growing out of natural causes. The current type of loans are unjustifiable, he said.

WASHINGTON crime is again brought into the limelight as police attempt to locate extortionists who have threatened harm to the children of three prominent Washington families.

Mrs. Betty Hanna Davidson, granddaughter of Mark Hanna, demanded police protection following receipt of a telephone call threatening injury to her daughter Daisy, six years old, unless $2,000 was paid.

This threat followed shortly upon the disclosure that threatening letters had been received by Mrs. Alice Longworth, widow of the former speaker, and Sir Wilmott Lewis, Washington correspondent for a London newspaper. The letters threatened harm to Paulina Longworth, seven years old and probably the best known child, next to the Lindbergh baby, in the United States, and to Wilmott Lewis, Jr., five years old.

WITH a vigorous denunciation of the "disease of overtaxation," business leaders of the Middle West, at a meeting in Chicago, joined in a protest against excessive appropriations by congress. Federal waste and extravagance were bitterly attacked.

Some fifty representatives of cities in 17 states attended the meeting which was called by the Chicago Association of Commerce. A resolution was adopted which called upon congress to recognize the emergency in national affairs and to avoid taking any steps which might jeopardize the credit of the government. A number of speakers declared that the business and commerce of the nation could not recover unless a balanced federal budget is adopted.

A RECOMMENDATION against development of the navigation and irrigation phases of the $772,000,000 Columbia river development project at this time was included in a report submitted to the secretary of war for transmission to congress by Maj. Gen. Lytle Brown, chief of engineers.

While recommending that the sum of $16,000,000 should be expended by the government for the construction of locks and other aids to navigation in the Columbia river when private or state interests are ready to develop water power, Major General Brown took the position that the time was not ripe for the spending of any considerable amount of federal money on this huge project.

THE Missouri Democratic state convention at St. Louis instructed its 51 delegates to the national convention to vote for former United States Senator James A. Reed as long as he has a chance to secure the nomination for President. Missouri's delegation will have 23 votes. Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt is the second choice of the instructed delegation.

Governor Roosevelt is the choice of the Iowa Democratic convention. The 26 delegates were instructed to "use all honorable means" to bring about his nomination.

STILL hale and hearty, Maj. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday anniversary in Washington. His friend, Brig. Gen. Davis L. Brainard, chatted with him, recalling memories of the Arctic tragedy that shocked the world 48 years ago. Together they had laid on the ice of Cape Sabine in 1884 within whispering distance of the death that claimed 19 of the party of 25. Brainard was his top sergeant. They are the only survivors of the seven who were taken from the cape June 23, 1884, after ten months of privation and suffering, during which Greely, then a lieutenant, observed his fortieth anniversary.

A TREATY between the United States and Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway may be ready for signature soon, William D. Herdidge, Canadian minister, is now ready to negotiate. It only remains to secure the consent of the respective governments. Then the treaty will be written.

NATIVE EXPLAINS BUSH TELEGRAPHY

For many years white men have been puzzled by the uncanny way in which the Australian aborigines can communicate with one another over long distances without any apparent means. This has been known as bush telegraphy.

An explanation has just been given by David Unipon, an educated Australian aborigine. Bush telegraphy, he explained, was developed by an intense form of discipline started in youth, by which the young aborigine learns to detach himself from his surroundings. First he is taught to eat only when his body needs nourishment, and then to fast.

The supreme test of fasting for a boy is that he should walk for three days without food, and then on the fourth day eat one day's rations.

When it is desired to communicate with another aborigine at a distance a smoke signal is made by a man who concentrates on the message he wishes to send. The recipient of the message also frees his mind from all outside influences to receive the telepathic message.

"One morning," explained Unipon, "I was sitting in Sydney and trying to write, when a message came to me that my wife in South Australia was dead. Next day a telegram came to tell me what I already knew. I learned afterwards that my wife's mother had sent the original message to me by the bush telegraphic method."

ODD "INDUSTRIES" IN BRITISH ISLES

Almost under the shadow of Westminster cathedral is a narrow thoroughfare called Strutton ground, and here you will find an Armenian who claims to be the only outdoor repairer of timepieces in London and perhaps in England. He will mend your watch while you wait, says a writer in Pearson's Weekly.

"Bottler of smoke" is surely one of the oddest of professions, yet in the census returns we find one person who so describes himself. The smoke comes from hickory logs and no doubt is used for the curing of bacon. Less puzzling is the industry of collecting walrus whiskers, which has only one follower in the British isles. These walrus whiskers go to the East, where wealthy Chinese prize them as toothpicks.

There are two lighthouse builders in England, but only one man who sells his skin for a living. This man, formerly a mechanic, saw one day an advertisement asking for a healthy subject who would consent to sell a portion of his skin to be grafted on the face of a rich man's child who had been badly burned. He got two hundred pounds for his trouble and has since been in hospitals in various parts of the world on similar missions.

How One Man Lost 22 Pounds

Mr. Herman Runikis of Detroit writes: "A few lines of thanks from a rheumatism sufferer—my first bottle of Kruschen Salts took all the aches and swellings out of my joints—with my first bottle I went on a diet and lost 22 pounds and now I feel like a new man."

To lose fat SAFELY and quickly take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water in the morning before breakfast.

For your health's sake ask for a bottle that lasts 4 weeks is but a trifle at any drugstore in the world and if after the first bottle you are not joyfully satisfied with results—money back. All good druggists will be glad to supply you.

Hunger Adjective

A Missier miss was wearing a new dress at dinner, and her date's only comment was:

"Your dress is very nice."

"Your vocabulary does not contain any superlative adjectives," said the disappointed girl.

"Look what a beautiful beefsteak we are having for dinner," replied the hungry date.

Women said:

But they hadn't discovered the new Oxydol

A World's Record

MORE than three thousand births without a single loss of either mother or child! That is the official Platt County record of Dr. W. B. Caldwell, in fifty years' family practice in Illinois.

No wonder mothers have such entire confidence in giving little ones Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin!

If you have a baby, you have constant need of this wonderful preparation of pure pepsin, active senna, and fresh herbs. A child who gets this gentle stimulant for the stomach, liver and bowels is always healthier. It keeps children's delicate systems from clogging. It will overcome the most stubborn condition of constipation. It builds them up, and is nothing like the strong cathartics that sap their strength and energy.

A coated tongue or bad breath is the signal for a spoonful of Syrup Pepsin. Children take it readily, for it is really delicious in flavor. Taste it! Take Syrup Pepsin yourself, when sluggish or bilious, or you are troubled with sick headaches and no appetite. Take some for several days when run-down, and see how it picks you up.

It is a prescription preparation which every drug store has ready; in big bottles, just ask anywhere for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Discovers Meaning of Alaskan Totem Poles

Secretary of the Interior Wilbur has found out what the two brilliant Alaskan totem poles outside his office door mean.

So many people asked him about them when he first put them up that he wrote Governor Parks of Alaska. The governor called upon John Wallace, the Indian, who carved them, to explain his work.

The Indian advised Wilbur that one pole shows the raven, a good spirit. Below in the daughter of the Spirit of the Creek, then a bird, representing the Creek watchman; then the Spirit of the Creek, who has a frog in his mouth (being eaten), and the Spirit of the Salmon in his ears.

The other pole is topped by the beautiful daughter of an Indian chief, riding on a bullhead fish. Below is her father wearing the sort of hat to be used in time of trouble. At the bottom is a white killer who acted as messenger in finding the daughter after the bullhead had carried her away.—Washington Star.

Fools Them All

Tuxy never gucse his age... miss it by ten years at least... always think he's younger. Besides, he has such a young, attractive wife who simply is devoted to him.

Why doesn't he ever feel run down and out of "pep"? The answer is Fellows' Syrup, the wonderful tonic which restores frayed nerves and tired bodies. You quickly feel the good which this medicine does to the entire system. Get a bottle at your druggist's, today. Remember, doctors recommend it.

FELLOWS' SYRUP

Autos Lost in Fog

Descending suddenly at Harringay dog-racing track near London, recently, a fog caused abandonment of the meet and created chaos among the spectators. Cars leaving the enclosure could move only at walking pace, and in some parts the mist was so thick that drivers had to be guided by people walking in front of the cars with handkerchiefs tied to their backs.

High School News Notes
(Ansel Swearingen)

There are entirely too many things of interest going on this week. Everybody is so busy we hardly have time to study, and just when all of us should be cramming for the monthly examinations. And will Friday be another big day? Just come down to the Auditorium about 2 p. m. Friday and see for yourself. The District Commercial Contest, the District Music Meet and the Declamation Contest are scheduled for that day. And don't forget the concert by ten artists from State College Saturday night.

The boys' and girls' track teams are practicing for the track meet at Tularosa Saturday and we sure hope they bring home the bacon. The Seniors have been measured for caps and gowns and are counting the days until they pass on out into the world to take their places in the massive machinery of Life. They also started work on their play, "Take My Advice," Monday night.

Miss Melasa's English class was wholly responsible for five very good speeches last Friday. You may count on anything Miss Melasa directs to be good — she is just a genius for things like that.

The Board of Education kindly granted us permission to take April 1st as a holiday, seeing as how we had already made up the time through lengthened periods of time, and someone suggested to Mr. Groce that we all have a picnic. He agreed and we went to the Bonito Dam for good, wholesome fun and eats galore for everybody.

Sam Baker of Capitan was a Carrizozo visitor a few days this week. He was accompanied as usual by the Court House. Baker also an old-time printer, having at one time ran the Capitan Mountaineer.

Bull Much in Evidence
(Fort Stanton Correspondent)

A rather exciting nocturnal adventure happened a few days ago to a prominent citizen of the Fort, whose name we shall not, in a feeling of pity, reveal to the public, to save him from much embarrassment, if not a social ruin. Futile attempts were persistently made to keep the correspondent from submitting the news for publication. Threats of assault and physical injury were calmly ignored and an offer of bribery was emphatically turned down with aloof dignity. As a gentleman of the press, it is the sacred duty of your correspondent to keep his public informed with all the current events; therefore, he must be immune to all persuasions of keeping him from performing these duties, even if they be at the point of a shotgun. But on with the story. On a recent dark night a giant bull, belonging to the ranch at the Fort, had crushed through a fence and paid a visit to the residential district, where he was roaming around between the different buildings, when this certain person happened to return home after a pleasant evening, spent by going places and doing things. Fumbling his way through the dark he grabbed hold of what he thought was the branch of a bush, to steady himself. This, very unfortunately, happened to be the bull's tail. The giant beast, whose temper had already been aroused by the smell of human blood, ejaculated a nerve-shattering roar, turned around and charged with the speed of lightning. The earth trembled under the clatter of his hoofs as a horrible death race commenced, with our friend in the lead, directed to the nearest tree, which he reached just as the bull caught the seat of his pants on his horns. With spontaneous instinct, proving an unquestionable victory for the Darwin theory, he climbed up the tree with the alertness of a monkey. And as the Darwin theory does not take in the Bovine class, the bull remained on the ground, where he occupied himself by kicking up big clouds of dirt and sharpening his horns on the trunk of the tree—once in a while pausing to stare at his victim with eyes through which shone the hatred inherited from a long line of forefathers, long since digested and indigested by human stomachs.

After our friend had spent some three hours of anxious hoping and praying to the divine powers for the bull to disappear, the night watchman, making his round, happened to view the scene from a distance. Having sense enough not to venture near, he did some quick thinking, and knowing that nobody else could handle the bull, he ran up to No. 13 and summoned Mr. Boyd, the farm superintendent, whom he knew the animal had been trained to obey. Arriving at the scene, Mr. Boyd addressed the bull in the firm tone of an experienced animal trainer and ordered him off the place. Hearing his master's voice the beast stuck his tail between his legs and repaired quickly to his night quarters, where a some lonely cows, with a few 'moos' displayed their happiness over his return. The story would not have been known to the readers, had it not been for your trusted correspondent, who, unnoticed had watched the whole incident from another tree.

Dewey Takes the Air

Dewey Stokes has viewed his ranch from his car and also from his horse many times, but his first view of the entire layout from the air was yesterday morning when Chester Foust took him for a sail over his ranch possessions in his airplane. Dewey was so well pleased that he forgot to yell, "hold 'er Newt!" as they passed over his ranch home. They next flew over the I Bar X of J. V. Taylor near Oscura. They had intended to land, but the country was too rough, so after seeing Dewey safely home, Mr. Foust returned to the Kudner ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Ross and baby daughter left Sunday morning for Oklahoma City, following the improvement of his father, J. S. Ross, who has been ill of late but is gradually improving. Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Ross will leave this evening on No. 4 for Oklahoma City, where they will make their future home.

Mrs. Claude Branum entertained a number of close friends at cards and refreshments yesterday afternoon, that being her (oh! we have forgotten) birthday. The afternoon was pleasantly spent and the guests wishing her many happy returns of the day.

Mrs. M. U. Finley entertained the Wednesday Bridge Club at her home Wednesday afternoon.

Young Harold was late for Sunday school and the minister inquired the cause.

"I was going fishing but father wouldn't let me," announced the lad.

"That's the right kind of a father to have," replied the reverend gentleman. "Did he explain the reason why he would not let you go?"

"Yes, sir. He said there was only bait for one."

Misquotations
There is a quotation about Bible quotations ever which we nearly always go wrong. "Even the devil," we say, "can quote Scripture for his own purpose." Actually, the words are: "The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose." A superior person might refer to misquotation as "the last infirmity of noble minds"; in so doing he would make two mistakes, for it runs "That last infirmity of noble mind."—Lord Byron.
