Masons Observe Bicentennial

At the regular meeting of Carrizozo Lodge, No. 41, A. F. & A. M., the program commemorating the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington was duly rendered. A large and respectfully attentive audience heard some of the best speeches made in the Lodge Room for quite some time.

Mr. Fred L. Boughner, Master, welcomed the members and visitors. Mr. Boughner handled this very creditably and gave an excellent talk.

After singing "America," Mr. R. E. Lemon, Secretary, presented the Lodge with a picture of Washington framed by the Manual Training Department of the High School. Mr. C. P. Huppertz accepted the picture on behalf of the Lodge. Both speeches received close attention and contained a great deal that was of interest to Masons.

Mr. G. S. Hoover, District Deputy Grand Master, then read a carefully prepared and very interesting paper on "Washington the Mason." The District Deputy was at his best on this subject, and all agreed that the brother had surpassed any previous effort.

Prof. D. U. Groce then took the floor to discuss "Washington the Man." His discussion was quite interesting. He called attention to dangerous trends in present day conditions, and showed the bigness of Washington in a masterly manner. After the conclusion of his address luncheon was served. Artistic programs were handed out to all present.

The following visitors were present: Andrew Sorenson, W. M. of Sacramento Lodge, Alamogordo; Wm. Lynch and Jack Bergere, Ft. Stanton; George Titaworth, Capitan; Ben S. Burns, Three Rivers, and E. O. Prahm and W. O. Garrison, of Carrizozo.

Barber, Adjutant of Post No. 11, American Legion, Carrizozo, who will make appointments with Mr. Hyland for all who want them. Any ex-service man in Lincoln county is welcome to see Mr. Hyland while he is here.

To The Public

For the reason that the High School Athletic Committee has had to equip their men for football this year, the indications are that they will not be able to pay any rental for the use of the Community Hall, and may wind up with a deficit. The Trustee has not called on them for any part of the receipts this year. Two plays have been produced for the Hall, but the receipts have not been large, and it is the desire of the Trustee to make the Hall pay its way, as soon or later it will have to do that, and it is not wise to lean too heavily on the Fair receipts as a bad day or two might show quite a deficit.

It is the purpose of the Trustee to assist in the third and last entertainment, which will be staged after the old Carrizozo Entertainers Plan, at the Crystal Theatre, or High School, the latter part of March or the first of April.

As a Beau Geste to the Old Carrizozo Entertainers who went to the bat for the first time May 20, 1922, the first act will be dedicated to that organization, and you will again see their old dancing chorus in action, by proxy, and memories of Juell Miller, Audroy Miller, Stacy Kustin, Jessie Kustin, Lois Jones, Leora Taylor, Lucille Fite and Opal Fite, trained by Karuna Dean, of El Paso, will flutter through the minds of old timers; also Hilary Cooper and Carrie Roberts, two of the old Organization's star singers, will appear by proxy, and you will hear the old songs they used to sing. These ladies will be notified, and will know just when their act goes on and who is doubling for them. At least six acts by different players will be staged, also an orchestra will be in the pit, adding pep to the occasion.

A word about the old Carrizozo Entertainers might be in line just at this time. They were organized to put on entertainments to pay a substantial deficit incurred by a committee from the Methodist church who had attempted to promote a Lyceum Course. From May 20, 1922, to Jan. 22, 1924, they staged ten entertainments grossing $846.52, or about $84.00 per number, paid all debts and disbanded. From October 24, 1923, to February 16, 1924, they sponsored another Lyceum Course of six numbers that grossed $347.35 and netted them a loss of $183.38. Old Timers will remember what happened to business in Lincoln County in 1923.

The Entertainers reorganized and put on a second series of 11 entertainments and picture shows that grossed $1344.81, cleaned the slate once more and again said their goodbyes. When all debts were paid they donated the net proceeds of their numbers to the High School Athletic Department to send their team to the State Tournament, to the Chamber of Commerce and the Fire Department. Aside from the net proceeds of one entertainment amounting to $21.15, which was divided between six Eighth Grade boys who had been especially active, all their net earnings went to foster some worthy enterprise.

Early in 1925, the moving picture show gave notice that it would close for the summer. At the request of the business men the Entertainers leased it as a strictly business proposition, took in a total of $1938.16, netted $244.74, which they divided

Leap Year - A Time for Great Events

Birth of Washington - 1732

Declaration of Independence - 1776

Landing of the Pilgrims - 1620

Landing of Columbus - 1492

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FEBRUARY 29 is approaching to remind us that this is leap year, a year of 366 days instead of 365, hence February's 29 days instead of its usual 28. The reason for the extra day in the month and the extra day in the year is connected with some tinkering with the calendar by several men away back in ancient times. The first one to do it was the Roman emperor, Julius Caesar, who in 46 B. C. established a calendar on the basis of each solar year consisting of 365 days and six hours. But rather than bother with the one-fourth of a day each year, the six hours were "saved up" and a whole day added to every fourth year which was to be known as a "leap year," when, presumably, time leaped ahead one day.

This calendar was defective, for the solar year actually consists of 365 days, five hours and 48 minutes, therefore Caesar's calendar was gaining 11 minutes on old Father Time every year. So Augustus Caesar, Julius' successor, tried his hand at tinkering with the calendar and ordered that there be no leap year for 12 years. Next the Pontiff took a hand in the matter by inserting an extra day every third year instead of every fourth year and by the year 8 B. C. they had added 12 such days instead of only nine.

When the march of time brought humanity down to the sixteenth century it was discovered that the year was ten days off schedule, the spring equinox falling upon March 11 instead of March 21. To correct this error, Pope Gregory XIII in 1582 ordered that the year should consist of 365 days only, with the extra day added every fourth year to make a bissextile or leap year. In order to prevent further irregularity it was decided that a year ending a century should be bissextile only at the end of each fourth century. In this way three days are "saved" in 400 years because the lapse of 11 minutes each year makes about three days in the period of four centuries. So while it is true that every year which is divisible by four is a leap year, there is the exception that a year which ends a century is not a leap year, even if it is divisible by four, unless it is divisible by 400. So 1600 was the last leap year of this character and the year 2000 will be the next one.

Now that we are started on another leap year, will history repeat itself and bring to pass events of great importance as it has in the past? For no less than four of the greatest events in American history took place during leap years - the discovery of America by Columbus in 1492, the landing of the Pilgrims in 1620, the birth of Washington in 1732 and the signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776.

The weather bureau says that condensation centers, or nuclei, are essential to the formation of clouds, and, therefore, of rainfall. These nuclei may be dust particles, especially of certain kinds, such as sea salt or even, it is believed, molecules of certain sorts that have great affinity, as we say, for water. The air always contains an abundance of such nuclei.

Famous Tree Gess

The famous Natick (Mass.) elm, believed to have been at least three centuries old, is no more. The huge tree, 16 feet in circumference, succumbed to age recently and crashed to the ground. Under this elm, according to tradition, the praying Indians of Natick once gathered to hear the words of wisdom of John Elliot.

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made especially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855 1/2 Wolf St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

Windmills Fight Frost

Don Quixote fought windmills, but up in San Joaquin valley, Calif., they are using windmills to fight frost. An electrically driven propeller of the type used in large airplanes is mounted on top of a steel derrick. It starts enough breeze to keep the frost off of twenty acres of citrus. Six machines have been in service for some time.

Surnames at Standstill

Surnames are not multiplying at any great rate at the present time. The civilized nations of the world have adopted surnames of the past and changes are infrequent. In the United States, foreigners who become naturalized often change their names or Anglicize them.

A Candle in the Wilderness

"It's curious how things come to pass," said Robert. "I met this delightful girl—the kind of girl I could tie to. She was brilliant, amiable and beautiful. I know now that she liked me. I know now that probably she would have married me. Suddenly hell opened in my face."

"Hell is all right in its place," said Amos. "Leave it there. Don't try to tote it around in yer memory. It's all foolation buildin' a fire in yer brain and gettin' burnt by it. Ye must keep hold o' Peggy's hand. That gal and me is doin' our best to lift ye out o' trouble. Don't hang on to it."

While they were asleep the wind rose and a big wave washed them off the rock. They were soon jumping and splashing in a heavy sea and water was coming in at the portholes so that Amos had to plug them on the windward side. For a time Robert did not awake but was restless with troubled dreams.

Amos had grown fond of his young comrade who was what he called "a fair player"—unselfish, brave, taking the hardships and perils without complaint. Long before then the shrewd man had decided that Robert had best keep away from Boston. "It's the road to Egypt but we'll keep a gin," he said to himself.

Amos was long awake tending ship, stopping leaks and worrying for fear the hatch would go over. He could hear the hiss of snow against the side. By and by the Whale's Belly began to bump bottom. Suddenly a wave drove her bow through the bushes and grounded her securely, to the stern branches, on a sloping shore. Then Amos lay back and slept until daylight. The wind had gone down. Amos took off the hatch and looked about. There was a scatter of snowflakes on the laurel and the small tamaracks among which the ship was hidden. A thick mist covered land and water. He left Robert sleeping and went ashore. At last the ship was grounded hopelessly. A yoke of oxen could not have moved her. She had found her last port. Near them was a burned slope of charred stumps and briars and low bushes. He looked about in the cold misty air to get his bearings. He awoke his young friend.

"We're still on the earth and another day has come," he whispered. "We must leave the ship and take to our nags."

While eating dried meat and some biscuits, from Kebec, Amos said: "We're on the west shore, and I reckon it's only a few miles to the end o' the lake. It's a good time to travel. We'll take a last look at the Whale's Belly and be off."

"Do you think the west shore is better than the east?" Robert asked. "It's a choice between rotten apples," said Amos. "But here we are. We'll have to take to our shanks and try to find that trading post."

They packed their things and set out by the compass, each browsing on a piece of dried meat. There was a wet swamp along the shore southward. They had to seek higher ground to get around it. Only a light flurry of snow had fallen, scarcely enough to penetrate the roof of the forest.

"I don't exactly like the looks o' things," the shrewd pioneer whispered. "How do you know?"

"Moccasin tracks!" Amos answered. They came to great banks of robin's hedgerow. They stuffed their hats in their packs and each covered the other with vines, head, pack and all. Amos had given his musket to the Algonquin chief, so the problem was not difficult.

Amos whispered: "Now if we hear anyone near us we'll lean ag'in' a tree and go on stump duty. Fog and vines are a help in our business."

Soon they heard a sound and both took a stand among bushes, still as a pair of rocks. The shrewd woodman knew that an Iroquois camp was probably within a falcon-shot of them. Within two minutes a warrior passed them so close that the white men held their breaths. When he had gone out of hearing they went on.

"It's an unhealthy sit for us," Amos whispered. "There's always a lot o' wounded beasts around an Indian camp. Their hunters scour the bush to find 'em. We'll stump along—slow and careful."

He drew his compass from beneath his collar and took a look at it. They resumed their journey and had traveled scarcely a bow-shot when a young brave who had been sitting against a tree scrambled to his feet within an arm's reach of the two and ran as if the devil were at his heels. The sight of moving stumps was more than the superstitious savage could endure. With no loss of time he sought a safer place.

The two men hurried onward in the mist, Amos laughing under his breath. They tramped on with no other alarms for an hour or so, but did not come to the lake. Amos led the way over deep moss into a thicket of young pines. The air was clear.

"We're in hell's dooryard," he whispered. "The air is full o' the stink o' brimstone. We're a walkin' on the edge o' the world an' if we ain't careful we'll fall off. I'll get myself ag'in' a tree outside and look around and listen a while. You stay here."

For a few minutes the vine-covered pioneer stood on a stump searching the burned lands with his keen eyes. A deep silence filled the mountain slopes and the only stir he could see was that of bushes shaking in the breeze. He returned to his young friend in the thicket.

"Can't see or hear a sign o' life," he said. "But I don't like the lay-o' the land here. It's bad for us. A savage upon the slope above could see us a mile off. We'll stretch out under this cover and sleep a while. At dusk we'll go on till the darkness begins to rub hard."

They tore off their vine cover, now in streaming rags, covered themselves and slept. When the sun was low a cow moose and her calf, going down for water, passed so near that Amos awoke. He arose and peered out at the beasts slowly going down the slope. It was to him an unfailing sign that no Indians were near. He awoke his friend. Again they set out, following the tracks of the animals to a pond where they camped for the night. There the roaring and splashing of moose disturbed their rest.

"It's the rutting time and when they get together at night the bulls raise hell," said Amos. They were up and off at daybreak with no mist to favor them. After an hour of tramping, Amos stopped.

"My God! We've hit another ketchow!" he whispered. "Have ye got yer acorn?"

"Yes." "Slip it under yer tongue when ye get a chance—not now."

They stood side by side, motionless. Suddenly the trap sprang upon its victims. Two warriors, until then hidden behind trees, rushed upon them with raised javelins. One of them struck at Robert. He dodged, receiving a slight wound in the thigh.

There was no time for taking thought. The motions of the two were as swift as those in the closing of a pair of hostile cats. Robert seized the weapon aimed at him. The savage stepped in a hole, lost his footing and fell. The young white man stood over him with stripped sword.

Amos had wisely made the peace sign, throwing down his sword and pistol. He shouted to the young man. "Don't draw blood, for God's sake!" Many warriors had come out of hiding. They now sat on their heels, motionless and silent, watching Robert, who immediately threw down his weapons. Again the white men were captured and at the mercy of a band of Iroquois braves going north to join their friends and sweep the country south of the great river clear of their enemies before the winter hunting began.

The party was in command of an old, one-eyed chief with a ragged, moth-eaten pelt scribbled about half his body, on which were many scars. He was dried up like an old tree, without leaves, and ill-favored. Yet he bore himself like a king, heightily and erect. His stern, wrinkled face was like that of an ancient Roman.

"I am graveled for lack of words," said Amos as he presented to him the other skins, his hatchet and a handful of shelled corn. By signs he made the chief to understand that he and his friend were going to the Dutch, who would give many skins and hatchets and sacks of corn and much strong water to have them sent to the fort on the big river beyond the eastern gate of the Long House.

The old chief opened his medicine bag and took out of it a bone decorated with feathers. In deep chest-tones and with a look of affection he addressed the bone. He lighted his pipe and blew into the feathers a few whiffs of tobacco smoke. The two white men, knowing that their fate depended on the result of this interview with a bone, sat watching the process.

In a moment the chief returned the sacred treasure to its resting place and solemnly arose. With great dignity he blew the smoke from his mouth. In a current it moved northward. His wrinkled, weathered face did not change. He went to Amos, touched the compass on his breast and pointed in the direction whence the smoke had gone. He made the gesture of drawing the bow. His right hand swept from east to west. He scattered dust on a sheet of birch-bark and with a stick drew a rude map in the dust marking different points. By his sign he made Amos to comprehend his decision and his plans.

The pioneer turned to Robert, saying: "The tide has set ag'in' us. They are going to join other warriors massed near the upper waters o' the Lake o' the Iroquois. They will move westward and sweep their enemies from the country. We are to go with 'em. I am to help 'em with the compass and their guns. They think that the great spirit is in the compass and that a little thunder-bird lives in every gun: There are two guns in the party. I reckon that they got 'em from the Dutch. Don't know much about guns. A little scared o' the thunder-bird. Ye needn't be 'worry. We're a godsend to this band o' ragamuffins. Keep a smilin' face. They'll take us down to the fort, by and by, and trade us off like a pair o' beaver skins. Amos is happy."

Robert, however, was far from happy. Safety and happiness had been near him and yet utterly beyond his grasp. His was a dejected figure as he yielded to this vile duress.

They headed northward with the fighting red men, of whom there were nearly two score, and came that night to an Indian camp. The haughty wrinkled chief was regarded with awe and veneration by his brothers, and the captives were well treated.

In the camp were fourteen warriors, who sat around a fire drinking bear's fat out of cups of birch-bark held together by thorns. On a fire the flesh of the bear was boiling in a pot. By and by the white men helped themselves at the source of supply, with their hands, and ate heartily if not as greedily as the others. Tepees had been built for the newcomers, who were apparently expected. The captives would have had to step on the bodies of at least half a dozen warriors to escape.

CHAPTER X

They Come to Adventures Sterner Than Any They Have Known

Next day the haughty old chief was unable to control his men. The camp became a scene of the wildest deviltries. Fortunately for Amos and Robert, the old man kept his head. A savage would sit down with a bottle of rum of gin, bite the cover off its top, ram down its cork and drink as if it were water, stopping only when he strangled. Getting his breath he would utter a few hoarse grunts of satisfaction and continue to fill his stomach, going crazy with wild excitement before the bottle was finished.

It was a day in hell for the captives. The campground and the tepee bottoms were soon siltier than a pig-pen. The old chief destroyed many bottles and a baricco, meanwhile shaking his head and muttering. By nightfall a grateful silence had come. The fountains of liquid fire had gone dry.

The braves were lying in a drunken stupor. One was dead from a hatchet blow. He had made no outcry of pain, protest or resentment. He had sat quietly, drenched with blood, until he fell over dead. No one paid the slightest attention to him—save the white men, who saw that he was beyond help. Two or three were groaning with sickness. The old chief and three warriors, who had kept their lips from the kill-devil, sat around Amos and Robert by the dying fire.

"Think what the greed of the white man is doing to these poor children of the wilderness," said Robert. "Here is the great injustice."

"Yes, it will make the savages hate us," Amos answered. "But we mayn't stop it. The country is big and wild. The greedy hell-makers sneak away with boatloads of this devil water to some God-likesome place where there's no more law than ye'd find in the heart o' a lynx. A million constables couldn't stop it."

"I like this old chief," said Robert. "There's something great about him. He looks now as if all the sorrows of the world—including my own—were resting on his back. He seems not to hear us."

They had heard his name. It was Tawandoba.

Amos answered: "Oh, he is a wise old man of many wars. I reckon he's been fightin' Algonquins and Hurons since he were a boy. He knows 'em and every path in the north and secret ways o' retreat. The follies o' youth are behind him. His pride is no longer in cover and gewgaws but in his history and the things he knows."

They sat a long time looking at the old chief and his faithful warriors who sat motionless, gazing at the fire. Sleep had silenced the sick men.

There is an entry in Robert's diary for that day, which cannot be omitted. He writes a brief account of the debauch and describes the camp at night, adding: "One satisfaction fills my wretchedness. I am probably as unhappy as my dear friend in Boston if he still lives. I find a degree of comfort in this thought."

JESUS RAISES LAZARUS FROM THE DEAD

LESSON TEXT—John 11:1-57. GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Makes a Dead Man Live Again. JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Gives Life to His Friend. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Giver of Life. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Assurance of Immortality.

I. Lazarus Sick (vv. 1, 2). Even those who are in close fellowship with the Lord are not immune from sickness.

II. Martha and Mary Send for Jesus (v. 3). Because they had come to know Jesus as more than a mere man, they instinctively turned to him when the shadow of death fell across their home. Those who receive Jesus into their home when all are well and happy can be sure of his love and sympathy when sickness and death overtake them.

III. Jesus' Strange Delay (vv. 4-6). Martha and Mary sent for Jesus because he loved Lazarus. They said, "He whom thou lovest is sick." Observe that when Jesus heard that Lazarus was sick he "abode in the same place" because he loved Lazarus and his sisters (v. 5). This mystery is to be explained by the fact that Jesus was divine and knew all things.

IV. Jesus Goes to the Bethany Home (vv. 7-17). Jesus knew, and apparently the disciples knew, that going into Judea at that time meant his own death. He told his disciples that his purpose in going was to awaken Lazarus out of his sleep to the intent that they might believe (vv. 11-15). Jesus fearlessly discharged his duty even though his life had been threatened.

V. Jesus Teaching Martha (vv. 18-27). As he was nearing the village, Martha met him with a complaint because of his delay. He ignored her complaint and taught her concerning the resurrection and life.

1. "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). Most blessed words are these to fall upon the ears of a sister sorrowing for a dead brother.

2. "I am the resurrection and the life" (vv. 25, 26). He is the source of life and all who are joined to him by a living faith experience such a vital fellowship as to be unaffected by any bodily change, death being but an incident in the course of an endless life.

VI. Jesus Weeping With Mary (vv. 28-35). Mary fell at Jesus' feet uttering the same words used by Martha but no doubt with a different tone of voice and attitude. She had been sitting at his feet in the days of sunshine, therefore, she knew where to go in time of sorrow. Being a real man, he suffered with these bereaved sisters, and though he knew the joy that was so soon to come in the restoration of life to Lazarus, he wept.

VII. Jesus Raising Lazarus (vv. 36-44). In this stupendous miracle we see an illustration of the quickening into life of those dead in trespasses and sins. Observe:

1. Lazarus was dead (v. 39). This is a type of the sinner dead in trespasses and sins, even morally corrupt (Eph. 2:1).

2. The stone must be rolled away (v. 39). As Christian workers we should remove every obstacle from between a dead sinner and a life-giving Saviour.

3. Martha's protest of unbelief (v. 39). She insisted that Lazarus had already undergone putrefaction. Christ is able to save the sinner regardless of the degree of his sins.

4. Christ's intimacy and fellowship with the father (v. 42). In his prayer he declared that it was not for his sake that he prayed but for those who stood by.

5. Christ's manner of dealing with Lazarus (v. 43). It was by a call. He is calling men and women today by his Spirit, Word, and providence.

6. The response of Lazarus (v. 44). This shows that the call of Jesus is with authority and power.

7. The command to the people (v. 44). They were to remove the grave clothes and set him free. They could not make Lazarus live, but they could remove the grave clothes which bound the man whom Christ made alive.

VIII. The Effect of This Miracle (vv. 45-57). 1. Some believed (v. 45). 2. His enemies sought to put him to death (vv. 46-53). 3. His withdrawal (v. 54).

In the days when the nation was enthusiastically accosting each his neighbor with "ask me another," we were often asked, where is the Cockpit country? It means a trip to Jamaica, and a journey when there to Balmorhea and the glades of the Black River, Jamaica's longest navigable stream, famous for its dye woods and alligators.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

Charles Springer

It invariably happens when a great man passes on, even those who so bitterly opposed him in life, are the first to bring his praises as a man of sterling worth, a public spirited citizen, highly identified in social and charitable circles and one of the state's greatest men—in fact, nothing too good can be said of him.

No man in the political arena in the state of New Mexico was subject to more abuse than was Charles Springer. During the last state campaign, he was the center of attack from all sides of the opposition. In state matters he was much like the President of the United States now in national matters, he was in a degree the goat in every stage of the game.

As with all good public men, Mr. Springer was just to the opposite of what many people believed him to be, for the attacks were but mere political propaganda. Instead of giving him even a portion of his just dues, he received at every turn of the wheel, a thorn instead of a rose. Now that he is numbered with those gone before, his true value to the state comes to the surface.

To all unjust criticisms and attacks, he remained the same smiling Charles Springer. Never did these attacks cause him to relax his untiring efforts to be of service to the state he loved so well. Thorns in his pathway were brushed aside, while flowers were withheld to use as last tributes to his worthiness.

In success or reversal, in victory or defeat, his outward manner never changed. He neither gloated over a victory or grumbled at defeat. Of a truth, the State of New Mexico has lost a valuable statesman and the Republicans a reliable strategist.

The Country's President,

Rooswell Record:

The anniversary Monday of the birth of the first President of the United States and the annual ritual of respect to his name and of tribute to his service to the nation, constitute an opportune time to think of the President of the United States in terms of the present as well as the past.

The cavil and abuse of George Washington when he was president of the United States is unfamiliar to American eyes and ears of today. It has long since been blotted out or silenced by the resounding triumph of the world to the greatness of his services.

The office of President of the United States should command the respect, sympathy and co-operative service of the people. There has been no man elected to that office, nor is there likely ever to be a man so designated as chief magistrate, who is not a worthy addition to that same respect, sympathy and co-operative service.

It would be pertinent if on each recurring birthday anniversary of the president, the thoughts of the nation were to be directed to the presidency and its immediate occupant, the responsibilities and burdens of office, the self-sacrifice and strain and devoted labor of the president were not mentioned. And there could be no more worthy memorial of the citizen, who first endured the presidency than a vow to stand by and support the citizen, who is now carrying the burden.

THE OPEN DOOR

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

"M Y DEAR," advised Enid's mother, "you would be a very foolish girl not to accept your uncle's generosity. He has to take the trip to London and wants you with him. It will give you a chance to meet many men on board ship and I have no doubt you will come back quite ready to marry George Danbury."

"I know I ought to love him, mother, and his money could perhaps do a lot for Edward, but I just can't make up my mind."

"It is difficult, my daughter," agreed Mrs. Walker, "but after all George is a thoroughly good man, has heaps of money, and I think you would be happy with him in a year or two."

Enid sighed. "Yes, I suppose it is much the same, in a few years time, so long as one married a considerable type of man."

So Enid went on the ocean trip with Uncle Henry. George Danbury sent her great sheafs of flowers and baskets of fruit on the day of departure and Enid felt reasonably sure that upon her return she would give him the promise he wanted. But deep in her heart she knew that the great big thing called love was not in her life and that lack of money and her little brother's crippled state were the reasons for decision.

She met many men on board ship and found herself studying them and comparing them with George Danbury as a possible future mate. She was using all her wisdom over the trying problem but the more she tried to realize the future the more confused it became.

They reached London safely and Uncle Henry was obliged to tend business much of the time. Consequently Enid was left to wander about by herself. The idea of going back to New York and marrying George troubled her night and day. She felt that Edward might be cured if they could pay for the services of a great specialist. Every crippled man she saw stabbed her, for Enid could see little Edward growing up a helpless cripple and she herself in a position to perhaps prevent it.

Enid found herself frequently visiting the wonderful old churches—St. Paul's, Westminster, St. James—and finding in the shadowed, silent walls a great amount of spiritual help.

And then her feet led her into the door of old St. Martin's in the field—that church whose doors are never shut, night or day, to the worn and weary. Human driftwood, asleep on the cushions, found safety, rest and help through the dark night.

Enid slipped in softly and found a seat in a darkened corner. A great surge of emotion swept over her and made her conscious of a tremendous and wonderful power working within the walls of that old church. There was tragedy, despair, poverty, scarred and besmirched bodies of human beings. Yet underneath and round about all a spirit of exaltation.

She went down on her knees and found herself praying for enlightenment, seeking the path which she should take and thereby do the most good during her span of life. She prayed, too, for those other poor souls that were so utterly, hopelessly dejected.

Enid found herself weeping softly. She didn't know exactly why—but perhaps she felt that a way was being opened up for her to follow. Perhaps she had drawn nearer her God and he was showing her a path.

She did not start when she felt the young curate's hand drop lightly, understandingly, on her shoulders, but she looked up and into the most kindly eyes she had ever seen—sympathetic, helpful and plainly asking her for the reason of her weeping.

She had watched him going slowly about the church, offering words of help here and a bit of money there—a man happy in the performance of his duty.

Before Enid knew it she was telling him about her problems and her crippled brother and Danbury and all that her marriage to him might mean to all members of her family.

He listened quietly as one used to the outpourings of the heart and all the time Enid felt herself being drawn toward him.

"This is a tremendous sacrifice you are asking of yourself," the young curate admitted, "marriage without love. But, on the other hand, pure love matches are not always happy. So many people seek personal happiness in marriage rather than looking upon it as the stepping stone toward the fulfillment of a greater destiny."

Enid looked up with such sudden comprehension in her big eyes that the young curate smiled. He had not underestimated the worth of this young girl who had sought light in old St. Martin's in the Field. His work had made of him a keen reader of human possibilities. "You would not be here," he added gently, "if you were one who could marry for money and what it can give. I think you love this chap—love him with so big a love that you have been afraid of it—afraid that you could not give him measure for measure—afraid that his wealth would stand between you, and I think that he is just giving you time to realize—all this."

The young curate passed on down the aisle of the old church and Enid's eyes followed him with an intense glow of happiness in them. He had unlocked and opened the great doors of love for her to enter, and Enid, in the soft distance saw the reflected smile of Danbury's eyes.

How Mr. Casad Got His Houses to His Lots

C. G. CASAD, city engineer of Bremerton, Wash., 12 miles across Puget sound from Seattle, couldn't bring his two vacant lots to Seattle, where he purchased two houses, so he loaded the houses aboard scows and towed them to the lots in Bremerton. Here we see the houses on their trip down the river with the Fremont bridge opened up to allow them passage.

FOR AFTERNOON TEA

THE cup of tea with a few congenial spirits, gives one an opportunity to enjoy a few moments of conversation, which in this day and age seems impossible over the bridge table.

Almond Sandwiches.

Mash one-half of a package of cream cheese with a tablespoonful of lemon juice, adding more if needed to give the right consistency and flavor. Now add one-eighth of a pound of ground almonds. Spread on buttered slices of white bread, cut into diamond-shaped pieces. Put three small pieces of candied orange peel down the center of each sandwich.

Date Sandwiches.

Take one cupful of ground dates, one tablespoonful of orange juice, mix well, add one-fourth cupful of ground pecans and one-eighth teaspoonful of cinnamon. Spread on buttered slices of bread into finger-sized pieces and decorate with half a pecan. Small cakes, french pastry, cookies and wafers, vie with the sandwiches on the tea table.

Candies, preserves, conserves, as well as candy wafers, add to the delights of the afternoon cup of tea. (© by Western Newspaper Union)

How glad we'd be some day to see Amid' the mall this letter Some man would write: "Your line's a fright, Why don't you make it better? It's out of date so much we'd hate To wish it on a cousin. Your goods are bad—all we have had— But ship a thousand dozen."

WHEN the Elbe river overflowed its banks recently the inundation in the vicinity of Dresden, Saxony, was so terrible that the Germans built up a 23-letter word to describe it. What they called it was "ueberschwemmungskatastrophen"—which seems to fit the case, judging from the scene here pictured.

HAD INSIDE VIEW OF BIG "TWISTER"

Experience That Few Men Have Lived to Tell.

I have seen a number of these things and have never become panic-stricken when near them. So I did not lose my head now, though the approaching tornado was indeed an impressive sight, Will Keller writes, in a report to the weather office at Dodge City, Kan.

The surrounding country is level and there was nothing to obstruct the view. There was little or no rain falling from the cloud.

Two of the tornadoes were some distance away, and looked to me like great ropes dangling from the clouds, but the near one was shaped more like a funnel, with ragged clouds surrounding it. It appeared to be much larger and more energetic than the others, and it occupied the central position of the cloud, the great cumulus dome being directly over it. Steadily the tornado came on, the end gradually rising above the ground. I could have stood there only a few seconds, but so impressed was I with what was going on that it seemed a long time. At last the great shaggy end of the funnel hung directly overhead.

Everything was as still as death. There was a strong gassy odor, and it seemed that I could not breathe.

There was a screaming, hissing sound coming directly from the end of the funnel. I looked up, and to my astonishment I saw right into the heart of the tornado. There was a circular opening in the center of the funnel, about 50 or 100 feet in diameter, and extending straight upward for a distance of at least one-half mile, as best I could judge under the circumstances.

The walls of this opening were of rotating clouds, and the whole was made brilliantly visible by constant flashes of lightning which zigzagged from side to side. Had it not been for the lightning, I could not have seen the opening, not any distance up into it, anyway.

Around the lower rim of the great vortex small tornadoes were constantly forming and breaking away. These looked like tails as they writhed their way around the end of the funnel. It was these that made the hissing noise.

I noticed that the direction of rotation of the great whirl was anticlockwise, but the small twisters rotated both ways—some one way and some another.

The opening was entirely hollow, except for something which I could not exactly make out, but suppose that it was a detached wind cloud. This thing was in the center, and was moving up and down.

The tornado was not traveling at a great speed. I had plenty of time to get a good view of the whole thing, inside and out. It came from the direction of Greensburg, which town is three miles west and one mile north of my place. Its course was not in a straight line, but it zigzagged across the country in a general northeasterly direction.

After it passed my place it again dipped and struck and demolished the house and barn of a farmer by the name of Evans. The Evans family, like ourselves, had been out looking over their hauled-out wheat, and saw the tornado coming.

Not having time to reach their cellar, they took refuge under a small bluff that faced to the leeward of the approaching tornado. They lay down flat on the ground.

Al Smith Willing to Accept Presidential Nomination Again—Developments in Shanghai War—Disarmament Plans Submitted to Conference.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SHOULD the Democratic party, as represented by the national convention in Chicago, so desire, Alfred E. Smith is willing to be again its candidate for the Presidency. That was the statement put out by the former governor of New York, and for a few days its reverberations drowned out the roar of Japan's guns at Shanghai, in this country. Declaring that he owed it to his friends to make clear his position, Mr. Smith's statement continued:

"If the Democratic national convention after careful consideration should decide that it wants me to lead, I will make the fight; but I will not make a preconvention campaign to secure the support of delegates.

"By action of the Democratic national convention of 1928 I am the leader of my party in the nation. With a full sense of the responsibility thereby imposed I shall not in advance of the convention either support or oppose the candidacy of any aspirant for the nomination."

To the reporters the ex-governor said: "I don't know how I can stop anybody who wants to do anything for me. No, I won't stop them. That would be biting off more than I could chew."

Political wisecracks immediately assume that Mr. Smith's statement meant he had joined the "stop Roosevelt" movement; that the New York delegation would be split up; that the nomination of the present governor of the Empire state would be difficult to bring about, if not impossible, and that there would be a deadlock in the convention comparable to that in the Democratic national gathering in New York city nearly eight years ago. Supporters of Mr. Roosevelt refused to be discouraged and began to redouble their efforts. Republican leaders expressed their quiet delight in the situation, believing it enhanced the chances of success for their party in November.

Then came a new development that left the prophets all up in the air. Mr. Smith made an unannounced friendly call on Governor Roosevelt in Albany—the first in a long time—and after he left the governor emerged all smiles, declining to say anything about the conversation that had been held. The guessers then guessed that Mr. Smith had agreed to throw his support to Mr. Roosevelt at the earliest opportunity and had been promised therefor a position in the cabinet if the governor becomes President.

REINFORCED by the arrival of a large contingent of army troops, the Japanese kept up their attack on Chapel, native quarter of Shanghai, and the Woosung forts and village. But the Chinese defending forces also were strengthened and their resistance was surprising to neutral observers. They refused to be driven from Chapel, though it was a region of battered ruins; and the garrison of the Woosung forts held out under an almost continuous rain of shells that smashed against their mud walls and blew up their ammunition stores. The apparent object of the Japanese was to silence the forts and land troops there for an advance on Shanghai from the north. But for the time this was prevented by Chinese artillery and machine gun nests and barbed wire entanglements.

Vice Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura, the new commandant of the Japanese naval forces in the Shanghai area, arrived at the scene of conflict and talked diplomatically of his intention to "prevent further trouble and settle the matters as quickly as possible in co-operation with the representatives of other countries."

Another Japanese admiral, Shimada, explained that the failure of the Japanese forces to occupy Chapel and Woosung was due to a desire to keep the Japanese casualties down to a minimum.

Shells from the Chapel battle area frequently fell in the international settlement, and protests of the powers were unavailing, as usual. The American Thirty-first regiment went on duty patrolling a part of Shanghai.

EVENTS in Japan showed there was not complete unanimity concerning the government's policy. Twenty-five students at the Imperial university in Tokyo were arrested for participating in a demonstration in which handbills were distributed urging the people to "stop this imperialistic war!" The demonstration was believed to be the first protest against the military operations in China since the Manchurian campaign began. Juanoske Isseye, financier, liberal statesman and leader of the Minseitō (opposition) party's campaign for the general election, February 20, was assassinated by a youth indirectly connected with the reactionary "patriotic" elements responsible for most of the recent political murders.

VARIOUS schemes for the restoration of peaceful conditions in Shanghai were put forward during the week and either discarded or taken under consideration. Dr. W. W. Yen again appealed to the council of the League of Nations to check Japan and received a scolding from the President of the council, Joseph Paul-Boncour, because he had not strictly observed the rules laid down for complainants. Said the Frenchman: "I would like to remind the delegate from China that the statement he has made does not replace the full statement of his case with all the relevant facts and paper which are required under article XV of the covenant, the article under which he himself appealed to the council."

Yen submitted quietly to the rebuke, but Doctor Liu, Chinese minister to Berlin, jumped up angrily. "You other powers are siding with Japan," he cried, "because you are afraid of being kicked out yourself. You want your share of the trade. If you don't be careful, you'll be kicked out, all of you, into the sea."

GETTING down to business, the disarmament conference in Geneva heard set forth the views of all the great powers. Andra Tardieu on behalf of France proposed that the League of Nations be provided with an armed force to enforce peace on the world, and emphasized the French refusal to disarm without security assurances. For Great Britain Sir John Simon offered a disarmament plan including abolition of submarines and gas and chemical warfare, and he criticized the French proposals.

The United States came next, and Ambassador Gibson made a speech, submitting a program summarized thus by the State department:

The American government advocates consideration of the draft convention as containing the outlines for a convenient basis for discussion, while expressing its entire willingness to give full consideration to any supplementary proposals calculated to invoke the end we all seek.

We suggest the possibility of prolonging the existing naval agreements concluded at Washington and London, and we advocate completing the latter as soon as possible by the adherence of France and Italy.

We advocate proportional reduction from the figures laid down in the Washington and London agreements on naval tonnage as soon as all parties to the Washington agreement have entered this framework.

We advocate, as we long have done, the total abolition of submarines.

We will join in formulating the most effective measures to protect civilian population against aerial bombing.

We advocate the total abolition of lethal gases and bacteriological warfare.

We advocate, as I have already stated, the computation of the number of armed forces on the basis of the effectiveness necessary for the maintenance of internal order plus some suitable contingent for defense. The former are obviously impossible of reduction; the latter is a question of relativity.

We agree in advocating special restrictions for tanks and heavy mobile guns; in other words, for those arms of a peculiarly offensive character.

We are prepared to consider a limitation of expenditure on material as a complementary method to direct limitation, feeling that it may prove useful to prevent a qualitative race, if and when quantitative limitation has been effected.

Chancellor Brüning for Germany made a demand for "equality" in fighting forces. Dino Grandi told of all the war tools that Italy was prepared to scrap, and was loudly applauded. And Ambassador Matsudaira assured the conference that Japan is as eager as ever in the cause of disarmament.

EDGAR WALLACE, British author of some 800 novels and plays, most of them mystery thrillers, died in Hollywood, Calif., of pneumonia after two weeks' illness. Mr. Wallace was perhaps the most prolific writer of the time and nearly all his books and plays were successes.

ANOTHER unit in the administration's economic program was brought forward when, at the instance of President Hoover, a bill was introduced in both senate and house to revise the fundamental portions of the federal reserve act with a view to increasing the amount of money in circulation, thereby stimulating credit, forcing down the value of the dollar and sending up commodity prices. Leaders of both parties had given the measure their approval and it was introduced by Senator Glass and Representative Steagall, both Democrats.

The bill, it was explained, may be expected to accomplish the following results:

It makes a $2,500,000,000 increase in currency theoretically possible; it may release close to a billion dollars of the federal reserve system's "free gold" for use as the basis of new credit; it will make eligible for rediscout billions of dollars in paper not eligible under present regulations.

Pope XI, who had just celebrated the tenth anniversary of his elevation to the papal throne, received on Thursday his first visit from Premier Mussolini. The day was chosen because it was the third anniversary of the signing of the Lateran treaty and concordat, and nominally the Duce called to thank the pope for the award of knighthood of the Golden Spur which made Mussolini a defender of the Catholic faith. The interview between these two strong men, who really admire each other, took place in the pope's private library and was behind closed doors. But the premier, in full uniform, was received at the Vatican with all the pomp usually accorded to visiting royalty. Accompanied by his chief ministers, he was greeted by the governor of Vatican City and the councillor general after passing through the streets of the papal city which were cleared of all but the Swiss guards.

"PROGRESSIVES" in the senate tried to prevent the confirmation of Ira M. Ornburn, Democrat, of Connecticut, as a member of the tariff commission. Norris led the attack and, after a sharp interchange between him and Moses the senate went into executive session to discuss charges against Ornburn's fitness. The progressives then were routed, the appointment being confirmed by a vote of 70 to 9.

President Hoover sent to the senate his appointment of Joseph C. Grew to be ambassador to Japan. It is expected Mr. Grew will go to Tokyo in a few weeks, for Ambassador Forbes has desired to retire for several months.

REPRESENTATIVE CRISP of Georgia, acting chairman of the house ways and means committee, says revised estimates by the Treasury department show the new tax bill now under consideration must raise a total of $1,241,000,000 in additional revenue if the budget is to be balanced by the end of the fiscal year 1933.

As a result the committee expects to find it necessary to broaden the tax base to a far greater degree than had heretofore been contemplated. The imposition of a general sales tax of some sort is considered well within the realm of possibilities.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S campaign to put an end to the hoarding of money in the United States as an effective means for the restoration of confidence and prosperity is now under way with Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, as its director. Groundwork for the movement was laid at a conference of 60 civic leaders. They pledged the support of 20,000,000 members of organizations they represented.

Citizens willing to put "slacker dollars" to work are urged by the treasury and Reconstruction Finance corporation officials to invest in life insurance and trust funds. Federal reserve and high administration officials also have suggested the transfer of hoarded money to postal savings accounts and government bonds.

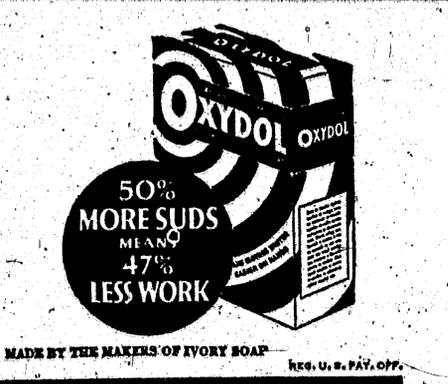

These types of investment are considered safe and certain. No money has been lost in postal savings or government bonds, and insurance, according to one treasury official, "offers a safe investment over a long period with attractive returns."

In 1930 $107,948,278,000 was invested in the United States in insurance. None of this money, according to a careful check, has been lost.

ONE of the country's most sensational murder cases came to a close when a jury in Phoenix, Ariz., brought in a verdict of guilty against Mrs. Winnie Ruth Judd, accused of killing, dismembering and shipping in trunks her friends, Mrs. Le Roi and Miss Hedvig Samuelson. The jury fixed the woman's punishment at death. Mrs. Judd's only defense was a plea of insanity, and this the jurors disregarded.

UPRISINGS along the Indian frontier and in Kashmir have become so threatening that, as a friendly gesture toward Great Britain, orders have been issued for the mobilization of the Turkish army. Also, the army of Persia was mobilized, the Persian minister at Kabul explaining that a tribal combination against England was imminent and that Afghanistan might be jockeyed into it.

Hindu Pilgrims Easily Wrought Up to Frenzy

The monotony of village life, relieved only by occasional market days, has for centuries been brightened by pilgrimage to sacred places. Here the sins of the pious Hindu are washed away by bathing under priestly guidance in the sacred pool. Hither come traders from all parts to sell their wares, elephants, cattle, horses, fine Dacca musling and machine-made cotton goods, books, household utensils, toys and all the little articles in daily use among the people. Hither come the maharaja in his glory of elephants and retinue, processions of holy men, naked fakirs, marvels and freaks, calves with five legs, two-headed children, and giants and puppet shows and all the appurtenances of the medieval fair in Europe.

Formerly, the pilgrims came in hundreds, on foot or riding, by ox-cart, elephant or boat; now they come in thousands by rail and motor car. Recently, there were 3,000,000 at the religious fair at Allahabad. For months beforehand, great preparations are made for the comfort of these crowds, their lodging, food, water supply and sanitation. Happy, orderly crowds they are in their clashing harmonies of color, grateful for kindness and attention, enjoying the fun of the fair no less than the religious merit of the outing. But let some religious discussion arise and all is changed in a moment to blows and shouting, vile insults and a tiger-like ferocity that will hurl people alive into flames and dance with joy at the victim's agony. —From "India Insistent," by Sir Harcourt Butler.

Fish Without Eyes
Blind fish swim in subterranean caverns 1,600 feet beneath San Antonio, Texas, scientists there believe. Specimens have been sucked up through pumping plant pipes of the San Antonio Public Service company.

The eyeless fish are light pink in color when seen above the ground, probably due to the breakdown of cell composition. Water pressure in their cavernous haunts is about 600 pounds a square inch, whereas atmospheric pressure at sea level is 14.7 pounds. Specimens, 3 to 6 inches long, invariably die on reaching the surface.

Sights of London That Linger in the Memory

Perhaps there is no city in the world about which more books have been written than London. There are a thousand Londons—those found in Limehouse, Rotten Row, Bloomsbury, Cheapside, Petticoat lane, the Strand, West end, Leicester square, Whitechapel—one could go on endlessly just writing the names of the streets and neighborhoods in London that have been made famous by an army of poets and novelists.

But merely because London is so vast, endless and varied, only the outstanding sights of that fascinating city can be described in these short articles.

There are, for instance, the Whitehall Horse Guards. The ceremony of mounting the guard, which takes place every morning in front of this historic old place, never fails to attract a crowd. The moment the new mounted soldiers in their brightly colored uniforms relieve their fellows and get into position they are like men of stone, and their horses seem to be also of stone—neither over-seems to move to the slightest degree.

Only specially privileged persons are permitted to drive through the gateway and arch. Beyond there lies the Horse Guards' parade, where every year, on the king's birthday, the magnificent military spectacle, "Trooping the Colors," is performed before his majesty.

And yet, an interesting as are Whitehall and the other famous sights such as the National gallery with its scores of masterpieces of art, the unmatchable British museum, Big Ben, the houses of parliament and Buckingham palace, none of them are the London you remember after you have left her vast midst.

IS ROBBING YOU
As Well As Your State

An enormous new racket has grown up in the past few years—the bootlegging of gasoline to escape payment of the state tax. Now an alarming amount of gasoline is being sold without payment of lawful tax.

Most motorists who buy bootleg gasoline buy it unknowingly. But know it or not, they are being robbed by the gasoline racketeers every time they buy from them!

The gasoline tax you pay belongs to you, and you should get it back from your state in the form of good roads. When you buy bootleg gasoline, you pay all or a part of the tax, too—but the racketeer pockets the money. You never get it back! And remember—if your state received all the money paid as a gasoline tax, it could well afford to lower the gasoline tax!

Knowing this, you naturally don't want to buy any bootleg gasoline. To be sure the money you pay as tax goes to your state, buy only gasolines sold under dependable, familiar brand names, backed up by reliable companies who make sure the state gets the tax. By sticking to familiar, reliable brands, you'll help banish racketeers.

CONOCO Gasoline is a branded gasoline you can buy with safety at the sign of the CONOCO Red Triangle.
