Burnett's Grocery Changes Hands

A deal was consummated this week, whereby W. L. Burnett sold his stock of groceries and meats to Clint Branum, the new proprietor taking charge Tuesday. Clint is so well-known in and around Carrizozo, that he needs no introduction. Being born here, educated in our schools and a principal in all our community doings, has made his friends all over the county, legion. He extends an invitation to the public to give him a call and will appreciate your patronage.

Mr. Burnett has been in the grocery and meat business here for the past several years and enjoyed a splendid trade. His good service courtesy in business was a great drawing card and when once he gained a customer, that party became a permanent patron. Mr. Burnett has not as yet decided on what he will do in the future, but at the present time, he will reside on his ranch north of town. Clint will give the same good service and will keep the stock fresh and up-to-date.

Jim Tully Goes to Windy City

Roswell Dispatch:

After a half-century, Jim Tully is going back to his native city of Chicago, ten-gallon hat, boots, chaps and red bandana handkerchief round his neck—to look over the scene of his youth—to reconstruct in his imagination, the home he left 50 years ago to seek a new one in the far Southwest.

This afternoon when the Santa Fe Flyer pulls out of Roswell, Hon. James V. Tully of Glencoe will be aboard with a round-trip ticket for Chicago and the Century of Progress.

Enthusiastic as a kid who left Chicago 50 years ago for a new and untried country, Jim Tully, cowpuncher, farmer, stockman and legislator is on his way to see if everything goes to his liking during the half-century of his absence.

Fifty years ago a slim, sleek school boy left his home in Chicago for the west. He had never been out of the confines of the city and his most vivid memories centered around the Chicago fire. This kid who was determined to see and have his part in the final conquest of the west stopped in San Juan county. There he fought Indians and engaged in other wild occupations, all of which was long before he had ever heard of a gangster.

He remained six years in San Juan county and then came to Lincoln county, settling where he lives today, on the Ruidoso. That was 44 years ago. Since that time he has had a large part in the upbuilding of the great southwest.

When Jim Tully first landed on the "Doso" (as he likes to call it), the Lincoln county war was over, but the bitterness was still to be found on every side. The Mesquero Indians had only a few years before been subdued, and the troops still remained at Fort Stanton, ready for any emergency.

Everything from the Rio Grande to the Texas line, practically, was Lincoln county. Cattle rustlers were plying their trade and a lot of folks who are here today had temporarily left the country. It was a rough country and a tough one.

The Chicago boy, the din of a big city no longer ringing in his ears, settled down to work. In the parlance of the old west, "he never threw off" and there by the Ruidoso he built a home which has come to be one of the show places of the Southwest.

Adios, Jim, and good luck, in the city of your birth. Fifty years have made some changes in you and in the city of Chi-

Perished on the Range

Last Saturday afternoon, three boys, Bradley Smith, Brack Cornet and Jobie McPherson were horseback riding and after getting permission from the Stokes Brothers to ride on the range, they rode over to the foot of Hughes mountain and at a certain place they noticed an object which resembled a man, lying in a low spot on the range and on investigating, saw a suit of clothes which covered the whitened bones of what was at one time a human being.

The boys were badly scared and hastened to town, telling what they had seen to Sheriff McCamant, who, with Justice of the Peace Elerdo Chavez and a coroner's jury, went to the spot and brought the skeleton to the courthouse. Had it not been for a note found in one of the pockets of the pants, the identity of the dead man would never have been known; but the note was the address of Lorenzo Guebara, Ancho, N. M. At the inquest, Guebara stated that the effects on the man, a pocket knife, a pocket comb, scissors, a bag of tortillas and the address on the ticket, proved him to be Ricardo Sisneros, whom he had befriended at Ancho, brought to Carrizozo and from here he had started to walk to Three Rivers about January 10, since which time he had not heard from him. He was over 70 years of age and blind in one eye. He had evidently got lost in a storm and froze to death, which was the result of the investigation and the findings of the coroner's jury. The body having been exposed to the weather for nearly five months, there was no flesh on the bones and the grinning skeleton together with the clothes found thereon, were buried in the local cemetery Tuesday morning.

ATTENTION!

Harlow Hyland, State Service Officer of the New Mexico Disabled Soldiers Relief Commission, will address a meeting of veterans, their families, local clubs, business men and taxpayers in Carrizozo on June 10, at 7:30 p. m., at the Community Hall. It will be for the purpose of explaining to the public the effect of the new regulations governing benefits to disabled veterans. This is one of 32 meetings which are being held in every county in the state.

Hyland has been working on the new laws and regulations as they have been issued and he is in a position to show how they will affect the veterans and the taxpayers in Lincoln county, probably better than anyone else.

In discussing the laws he will merely tell and explain how the laws work and what they are, and how they will effect this county. Benjamin I. Berry Post No. 11, American Legion has made arrangements for the meeting and they are expecting a large turnout, as few laws in recent years have had as big an effect on the general public as the new veterans regulations. So everyone is cordially invited to attend this meeting and we, the veterans of Lincoln county feel sure that everyone who attends will go away from the meeting enlightened on the laws and their effect on the community at large.

The Single-Cylinder Car vs. the New Straight Eight

With tires all pumped up, a tank full of gas (4 gallons) and Spring in its heart, "Old Scout," the famous curved-dash, single-cylinder Oldsmobile left Lansing, Mich., enroute to Chicago a few days ago bearing a congratulatory message from Gov. Wm. Comstock of Michigan to Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors.

The occasion was the formal dedication of the General Motors Exhibit Building, the largest privately-owned structure at the Century of Progress Exposition.

The old car was piloted to Chicago by Dwight Huss, who in 1905 drove it to victory in the first transcontinental auto race ever held in America. That race started from New York 28 years ago this month, and finished 44 days later at the Lewis & Clark Exposition in Portland, Oregon. Two years ago Huss, again driving "Old Scout," retraced his route of former years between New York and Portland.

Before leaving on his latest Lansing - Chicago drive, Huss estimated that he and "Old Scout" had traveled together about 15,000 miles. He made the 218 miles from Lansing to Chicago in two days flat with an overnight stop, hitting up to 28 miles per hour on the straightway.

Mr. Huss resents somewhat the fact that R. M. Shaw, sales manager for Oldsmobile, insisted upon sending with him a new Oldsmobile Straight Eight as a convoy car.

"We don't need one of your new-fangled Straight Eights tagging along after us," he protested. "We've been places together and we can take care of ourselves."

Roy Shafer was a White Oaks business visitor Tuesday.

POULTRY

CHICK MASHES CAN BE MIXED AT HOME

Good Results if Properly Ground and Mixed.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Extension Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois—WNU Service.

Many poultry flock owners who wonder about using their own farm grains for chick-starting feeds can do so with good results if they carefully select, grind and mix the ingredients.

Flock owners of the state were raising more than 38,000,000 chickens annually in the last census, so that economy of feeding is a big item.

When ground wheat is used in place of wheat bran and wheat middlings, a starting mash can be made from 50 pounds ground yellow corn, 15 pounds ground wheat, 10 pounds finely ground oats, 10 pounds dried skim milk or dried buttermilk, 10 pounds meat scrap, 4 pounds alfalfa leaf meal and 1 pound salt.

When soybean oil meal is available, the formula is 50 pounds ground yellow corn, 10 pounds soybean oil meal, 10 pounds finely ground oats, 10 pounds dried skim milk or dried buttermilk, 4 pounds alfalfa leaf meal, 10 pounds ground wheat, 3 pounds bone meal, 2 pounds ground oyster shell and 1 pound salt.

When wheat bran and wheat middlings are used in place of ground wheat, the formula is 50 pounds ground yellow corn, 4 pounds alfalfa leaf meal, 10 pounds wheat flour middlings, 10 pounds dried skim milk or dried buttermilk, 10 pounds meat scrap, 15 pounds bran and 1 pound salt.

When the chicks can be given milk to drink instead of water, a mash can be made from 35 pounds ground yellow corn, 5 pounds alfalfa leaf meal, 15 pounds finely ground oats, 2 pounds ground oyster shell, 15 pounds ground wheat, 2 pounds bone meal, 5 pounds meat scrap and 1 pound salt.

A mash mixture which has given satisfactory results when fed to chicks confined to batteries can be made from 40 pounds ground yellow corn, 20 pounds wheat bran, 20 pounds wheat flour middlings, 4 pounds alfalfa leaf meal, 4 pounds dried milk, 10 pounds meat scrap, 1 pint of cod liver oil and 1 pound salt.

Massachusetts Poultry

About Free of Disease

A total of 180 poultry flocks in Massachusetts were completely tested and found free of pullorum disease last year, according to a report issued by the Massachusetts experiment station. Pullorum disease, also known as bacillary white diarrhea, is perhaps the most destructive disease with which poultrymen have had to contend in past years. The department of veterinary science at the Massachusetts State college has conducted tests of birds and conducted experiments in the disease for a number of years. Last year Massachusetts led all other states in the total number of flocks free from pullorum disease.

Since pullorum disease is transmitted from one generation to the next, most progressive poultrymen make an effort to buy hatching eggs or baby chicks only from flocks which have been tested and found free of the disease. The experiment station report shows that disease free flocks are found in every county in the state.

Feed Potatoes to Hens

Feeding of cooked potatoes to hens improves the ration by providing variety and palatability. They encourage consumption of feed and thus increase egg production. Unmarketable potatoes can be used advantageously for poultry. Raw potatoes are not satisfactory for hens. A good way to feed the potatoes is in a hot potato mash. By steaming or boiling potatoes until they mash freely, they can be mashed and mixed with equal portions of laying mash and fed to the hens while warm. Six to 10 pounds of potatoes for each 100 hens will be sufficient for one feeding a day, which can be either at noon or night.—Prairie Farmer.

Poultry Facts

Chica, which has long supplied quantities of frozen eggs to Great Britain, now has a rival in the market since Australia is shipping eggs to Britain, too.

The department of veterinary science of the Massachusetts State college, reports that 180 poultry flocks in Massachusetts were completely tested last year and found free of pullorum disease, one of the most serious poultry diseases.

Pullets must have substance and size in order to stand up under the strain required in heavy egg production.

To secure a good fall and winter egg production, the pullets must be the kind that mature early and come into production early.

When it comes to calories, one medium-sized egg weighing about two and a half ounces in the shell, supplies 25 calories of protein and 45 of fat, making a total of 70 calories.

Merits of Dried and Sweet Milk

Research Work Has Shown Food Values to Be Much Alike.

"I have noticed that you have sometimes used evaporated milk when giving inexpensive menus. Is evaporated milk as good as sweet milk and can it be used instead of it in any recipe? I always thought that some of the food value was taken out of it?"

This paragraph is quoted from a letter to a dietetic expert, who comments as follows:

We have changed our attitude in regard to evaporated milk in the last ten years, since much research work has been done in the nutrition laboratories and in the baby hospitals. It has been found that both evaporated and dried milk change very little in food value, and also that the process of preparing them makes the "curd" which develops as soon as milk reaches the stomach, so much smaller, that the processed milks are more easily digested than fresh milk. Pediatricians are ordering these milks, or boiled fresh milk—some of them even use freshly soured milk for infant feeding.

Those of us who have been brought up on fresh milk, do not usually care for the flavor of evaporated milk for drinking. Dr. Lydia Roberts of the University of Chicago, in an experiment with children, finds that after a short time they will take evaporated milk cheerfully, if urged in the proper way. The market orders of the relief association are, however, including an equal amount of fresh and canned milk, the latter for use in "cooking."

In cooking, not so much difference is noticed, and in some dishes the flavor of evaporated milk is considered an improvement. I know a college girl who after years of making cocoa with evaporated milk, prefers it to sweet milk, and practically every one likes it as well. With caramel or chocolate flavor, it is always as good, or better. In a highly seasoned dish it seems to give little difference to the flavor. The fact that it can be whipped makes it an inexpensive substitute for cream in dessert. I have found that if a tiny bit of gelatine is added according to directions given, the time of whipping can be cut down to about three minutes.

The point in all diets of low cost or high cost that is important is to see that plenty of milk is used, because it is practically impossible to fulfill the requirements of nutrition without it. It makes no difference whether milk is drunk as a beverage, or whether it is eaten in soups, cream dishes, or desserts.

Once upon a time, before we knew so much about vitamins and minerals, milk was called the "perfect food." Now that term is modified to the "most nearly perfect" food. Children depend upon it for protein, calcium, phosphorus and a goodly share of the vitamin supply. Adults get their protein supply from other foods, but it is difficult for them to obtain the calcium they need from a milkless diet. It makes the question of vitamins less difficult.

While adults are not building new bone or teeth, they need the calcium to replace the breaking down of hard substances of the body, which is constantly going on. The other day a business man who has not believed that grownups need milk, asked a famous nutritionist his opinion—the answer was true and to the point, "Milk is an essential during the whole learning period."

Taxpaying on the Installment Plan

Treasurers of New Mexico offering to accept partial payment of taxes on the installment plan. We have heard this suggestion in the past often.

A man may have a few dollars available for tax payments, but if he can not pay less than half his taxes, he is apt to spend it for something else and so his taxes become more delinquent.

Naturally, it may involve a little extra trouble on the part of the Treasurer to receive a small payment on taxes, but nevertheless it might be an advisable permanent policy, and clerical methods might be adopted to render the service at less trouble than at the present time.—Alamogordo News.

A One Dollar Bill Free

Bruce Brewer, vice-president of the Ferry-Hanly Advertising Company, is authority for the following test of the value of advertising made by a country merchant who thought no one read his ads.

To convince him, the editor suggested writing an ad with a lot of copy in it, such as the merchant believed "nobody read," and somewhere, buried in the copy, offer a one dollar bill to every one who reads the ad and brings it to your store. If you do that, I will run the ad free, just to prove folks do read the advertisements."

In spite of the warning of the editor that it would cost money, the merchant accepted the challenge.

The ad contained so many words that it had to be set in type even smaller than that of the regular reading matter—but, buried away down in the ad was this offer: "To every one who brings this ad to our store we will give a one dollar bill." That was all that was said about the dollar.

The newspaper had been out an hour before the store was full of people waying copies of the ad.

Why don't some of the merchants that think "it doesn't pay to advertise" and "no one reads our store's ad anyway," or "why advertise, everybody knows the store is here," try a like example.

4th of July at Fort Stanton

Spend the 4th at this place and be assured of a grand and glorious time. "Something for everybody" is their slogan.

Anyway, the 30-hour week never seriously bothered the patient, plugging newspaper worker, who talks shop even in his sleep.

The administration seems to have a "Mellon Case" on its hands, with the exception now that the attackers of Mellon will be the defenders of Mellon. The shoe is on the other foot.—Rowell Record.

1/2 cup sugar vanilla

TO count our pennies, to keep food budgets down, and yet to provide tempting fare—that is real kitchen art.

That is why chocolate's popularity over waxes. For chocolate gives the simplest, most economical dessert a note of luxury.

Let chocolate work its magic with such old standbys as rice or bread pudding, and your family will give three cheers for your most economical dishes.

Add chocolate to milk in double boiler or sud heat. When chocolate is melted, beat with rotary egg beater until blended. Combine sugar, salt, eggs. Add chocolate mixture gradually, stirring vigorously. Add vanilla. Place bread in greased baking dish. Pour mixture over it. Place dish in pan of hot water. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 50 to 60 minutes, or until pudding is firm. Serve hot with hard sauce, or cold with cream. Serves 6.

BUFFETS SAY "HAPPY DAYS!"

WHEN THE STEINS ON THE
The proper cheese is bound to be there with it!
For beer and cheese--the buffet supper in all its glory--are classic and inseparable food combinations.
The very thought of the smooth and amber-flowing liquid conjures up in the masculine breast thoughts of generous slices of nut-sweet Swiss cheese, scorpiusful of pungent Old English, wedges of ruddy American. From free lunch to political caucus, the joys of the foaming stein and the buffet supper are endeared to memory the world
'round.

Americans will have to learn the joys of the proper thirst-inducing, appetite-satisfying cheeses which properly belong with the foaming beverage, according to the educational department of the Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation. There are more than 400 different varieties of cheese--and all of them will enjoy renewed popularity now that buffet suppers are the thing, according to the cheese company.
Swiss, full-flavored American, Limburger, sharp and ruddy Old English-- these are some of the cheeses which are expected to enjoy unparalleled popularity on the buffet tables of the nation now that beer is back.

The Everlasting Whisper

SYNOPSIS

In the California sierra Mark King, prospector, sees Andy Parker killed by Swen Brodie, Parker's outlaw companion, both known to King. He is on his way to the home of his friend, Ben Gaynor. King and Gaynor share with Brodie and his crowd knowledge of a vast store of hidden gold. King meets Mrs. Gaynor and is impressed by her daughter Gloria's youthful beauty. He instinctively dislikes a house visitor named Gratton. With Gloria, King rides to the village of Coloma, intending to "ground" Honeycutt. He finds Brodie with the old prospector, and animosity flares.

"There's that box on the table," said King. "Maybe you'll want to put it away before he makes you another visit."

Honeycutt hastily set his gun down, leaning it against the wall with both hammers still back, and shambled to the table. He caught the box up and hugged it to his thin old breast, breathing hard, went to his tumbled bunk in a corner, sat down on it, thrusting the box out of sight under the untidy heap of dirty bedding.

He glanced at his gun. "You git, too." King felt that he could not have selected a more inopportune moment for his visit, and already began to fear that he would have no success today. But it began to look as though it were a question of now or never; Brodie would return despite the shotgun, and Brodie might now be looked to for rough-shod methods. So, to catch an interest which he knew was always readily awakened, he said:

"Brodie and Parker were on Lookout ridge day before yesterday. Brodie shoved Parker over. At Lookout ridge, Honeycutt." He stressed the words significantly while keenly watching for the gleam of interest in the faded eyes. It came; Honeycutt jerked his head up.

"I wish I'd of shot him," he wailed. "I wish I'd of blowed his ugly head off."

"It might have saved trouble," admitted King coolly. "Also, it might have been the job to hang you, Honeycutt. Better leave well enough alone. But listen to me: Brodie told you, and he meant it, that it was going to be Brodie or King who got away with this deal."

"He lied! Like you lie!" Here was Honeycutt probed in his tenderest spot. "It'll be me! Me, I tell you. Think I'm old, do you? I'm feelin' right peart this spring; by summer I'll be strong as a young feller again." "By summer will be too late. Don't I tell you that already Brodie has gone as far as Lookout ridge? That means he's getting hot on the trail of it, doesn't it? As hot as I am."

"Then what are you comin' pesterin' me for? If you know where it is?"

"I don't know," Honeycutt cackled and rubbed his hands at the admission. "But I'm going to find out. So, probably, is Brodie. Now, look here, Honeycutt. I am for making you a straight business proposition. If you know anything, I stand ready to buy your knowledge. In cold, hard cash."

"No man ain't got the money—not enough—not any Morgan or Rockefeller."

King began opening the parcel he had brought from the post office. As he cut the heavy cord with his pocket-knife Honeycutt looked on curiously. King stepped to the table, standing so that out of the corners of his eyes he commanded both doors, and stripped off the wrapping paper.

"Look sharp, Honeycutt," he commanded. "Here's money enough to last you as long as you live. All yours if you can tell me what I want to know."

A golden twenty-dollar coin rolled free, shone with its virgin newness and lay on the table-top, gleaming its lure into the covetous old eyes. Another followed it and another. King began counting.

"There's one thousand dollars. Right in the pile," he said. "One thousand dollars."

"One thousand dollars. An' some of it gold. New lookin', ain't it, Mark? Let me have the feel of one of them twenties."

King tossed it; it fell upon the bedding, and Honeycutt's fingers dived after it and held it tight. He began rubbing it, caressing it.

King went on counting.

"One more thousand in this pile," he said. "That's two thousand, Honeycutt!"

"Two thousand," repeated Honeycutt nodding. He got up and shambled on his cane close to the table, leaning against it, thrusting his peering eyes down.

King counted out the last crisp note. "Three thousand dollars." He stepped back a pace.

"Three thousand dollars! That's a mighty money, Mark. Three thousand dollars all on my table." His thin voice was a husky whisper now.

"I never seen that much money, not all at once and spread out."

"It's likely that you'll never see that much again. Unless you and I do business."

"It's a sight of money, Mark," Honeycutt whispered again. "It's a sight of money."

King held his silence. His whole argument was on the table.

He went to the door, standing in the sunshine, filling his lungs with the outside air. The sight of the gloating miser sickened him. More than that. It sickened his fancies so that for a minute he asked himself what he and Brodie were doing! The lure of gold. The thing had hypnotized him; he wished that he were out in the mountains riding among the pines and cedars; listening to the voice of the wilderness. It was clean out there.

But the emotion, like a vertigo, passed as swiftly as it had come. For he knew that though he had traveled on many a golden trail it was clean heartedly; that it was the game itself that counted ever with him and no such poisonous emotions as grew within the wretched breast of Loony Honeycutt.

He turned back to the room. Honeycutt was near the bunk, groping for his shotgun. He started guiltily, veiled his eyes, and returned empty-handed to the table.

"If it was all in gold, now," said Honeycutt hurriedly.

King made no reference to Honeycutt's murderous intent.

"That paper is the same as gold," he said. "The government backs it up."

"I know, I know. But what's a government? They go busted, don't they?"

His Whole Argument Was on the Table.

they sometimes? Same as folks? Gold don't go busted. There ain't nothin' like gold. If that was all in twenty-dollar gold pieces, now—"

"I'll get a car here," said King. "We'll drive down to Auburn and take a train to San Francisco. And there I'll undertake to get you the whole thing in gold. One hundred and fifty twenty-dollar pieces."

But old Honeycutt shook his head.

"I couldn't leave here an' you know it. I—I got things here," he said with a look of great cunning. "I wouldn't go away from. With the world full of robbers that would be after me like hounds runnin' down a rabbit. I won't go; you can't make me. No man can't."

King's patience deserted him.

"I am not going to make you do anything. Further, I am not going to put in any more time on you. I have offered to pay you three thousand dollars for what you know—and there is the very strong likelihood that you don't know a bit more than I do—"

"Don't know!" shrieked Honeycutt.

"Wasn't I a boy grown when the dyin', delirious man stumbled in on the camp? Didn't I hear him talk an' didn't I see what he had in his fist? Wasn't I setting right side by side with Gus Ingle when that happened? Wouldn't I of been one to go, if it hadn't of been that I had a big knife cut in my side you could of shoved a cat in—give to me by a slant-eyed cuss 'em go, the whole seven of 'em, Baldy Winch, rot him, Jeerin' at me an' me swearin' I'd get him yet, him an' Gus Ingle an' Preacher Elison an' the first Brodie an' Jimmy Kelp an' Manny Howard an' the Italian? Wasn't I there? If I don't know nothin', what're you askin' me for?"

King had learned little that he did not already know. He came back to the table and began gathering up the money.

"Wait a minute, Mark," pleaded the old man, restless as he understood that the glittering coins were to be taken away. "Let's talk a while. You an' me ain't had a good chat like this for a year."

"I'm going," retorted King. "But I'll make you one last proposition." He thrust into his pocket everything excepting five twenty-dollar gold pieces. These he left standing in a little pile. "I'll give you just exactly one hundred dollars for a look at what is in that box of yours."

In sudden alarm the old man shambled back to his bunk, his hands on the bedding over the box.

"You'd grab it an' run," he creaked.

"You'd rob me. You're worse than Brodie."

"You know better than that," King told him sternly. "If I wanted to rob you I'd do it without all this monkey business."

In his suspicious old heart Honeycutt knew that.

"I'll go you!" he said abruptly.

"Stand back. An' give me the money first."

King gave him the money and drew back some three or four paces. Honeycutt drew out the box and poured out the contents.

What King saw, three articles only, were these: an old leather pouch, bulging, probably with coins; a parcel; and a burnished gold nugget. The parcel, since it was wrapped in a piece of cloth, might have been anything. It was shaped like a flat box.

Honeycutt jeered.

"If Swen Brodie had of knowed what he had right in his hands," he gloated, "he'd never of let go! Not even for a shotgun at his head!"

"Brodie hasn't gone far. He'll come back. You have your last chance to talk business with me, Honeycutt. Brodie will get it next time."

"Ho! Will he? Not where I'm goin' to hide it, Mark King. I got another place; a better place; a place the old hell-sarpint himself couldn't find."

King left him gloating and placing his treasures back in his box. In his heart he knew that Brodie would come again. Soon. It began to look as though Brodie had the bulge on the situation. For that which Mark King could not come at by fair means Brodie meant to have by foul. For he had little faith in the new "hidin' place."

But on a near-by knoll, where she sat with her back to a tree, was Gloria. He turned toward her; she waved. He saw that Brodie and two men with him were looking out a window. He heard one of them laughing. They were looking at Gloria—

King quickened his step to come to her, his blood ruffled by a new anger which he did not stop to reason over. He could imagine the look in Swen Brodie's evil little eyes.

CHAPTER III

Gloria was genuinely glad to see King returning to her.

"It seemed that you were gone hours," she said. "I never saw such a dreary, lonesome place as this sleepy little town. It gives me the fidgets," she concluded laughingly.

"These old mining camps have atmospheres all their own," he admitted understandingly. "A dead town turns into a ghost town. It gets on your nerves."

She nodded soberly.

As she by side they went along through the sunshine King noted how Brodie and a couple of men came out to look after them. He heard the low, sullen bass of the unforgettable voice; saw that Brodie had left his companions and was going straight to old Honeycutt's shanty. King frowned and for an instant hung on his heel, drawing Gloria's curious look.

"You don't like that big man with the big voice," said Gloria.

"No," he said tersely.

"It is Swen Brodie?"

"Yes. But how do you know?"

"Oh, I know lots of things people don't think I know! All girls do. Girls are rather knowing creatures; I wonder if you realize that?"

"I don't know much about girls," he smiled at her.

She pondered the matter for a dozen steps, swinging her hat at her side and looking across the housetops to the mountains. She did not know any other man who would have said that in just that way. Archie and Teddy, any of her boy friends in town—they knew all about girls! Or thought that they did. Mr. Gratton with his smooth way; he led her to suppose that he had been giving girls a great deal of studious thought for many years, and that only after this thorough investigation did he feel in a position to declare herself to be the most wonderful of her sex.

"Don't you like girls?" she asked.

"For once she wasn't 'fishing'; she wanted to know."

"Of course I do," he told her heartily. "As well as a mad can—under the circumstances."

"You mean not knowing them better?" When he nodded she looked up at him again, hesitated, and then demanded: "You like me, don't you?"

She had never asked a man that before; she was not accustomed to employing either that direct method or matter-of-fact tone. Just now there was no hint of the coquette in her; she was just a very grave-eyed girl, as serious in her tete-a-tete with an interesting male as she could have been were she sixty years old.

"Of course I do," he said heartily, a little surprised by the abruptness of the question and yet without hesitation. "Very much."

She flushed prettily; she, Gloria Gaynor, flushed up because Mark King said in blunt, unvarnished fashion: "I like you very much." The grave sobriety went out of her eyes; they shone happily.

Through the long shadows of evening they rode back to the log house. Gratton looked at them sharply and suspiciously. King with a nod to the various guests and a few words with Mrs. Gaynor, entirely free to warm praise of her daughter, drew Ben aside for a discussion of conditions as he had found them and left them today. He was dead sure that Brodie had gone back to Honeycutt, had gotten what he wanted, and was off in a bee-line to put to the proof the old man's tale.

Gloria was off-to-bed early, saying "good night everybody" rather absently. She climbed up the stairs wearily. When her mother slipped away from the others, she found Gloria ready for bed but standing before her window, looking out at the first stars. Gloria usually had so many bright, gushing things to say after a day of pleasure, but tonight she appeared oddly preoccupied.

Washington.—The country has just witnessed the move by President Roosevelt to gather to put the nation's business back on its feet. In the legislation to encourage national recovery and provide for construction of public works as a stimulant to the economic machinery, the President asked for authority to use in his discretion second in amount only to that accorded him in the inflation provisions of the farm relief program.

It might be assumed that the delegation of so much power to the President would create a distrust among the people of the nation, and that probably would be the result in any country save our own. Here, however, it appears that the great masses of the people would rather have that power vested in Mr. Roosevelt than in the 500-odd representatives of their own selection who sit in the two houses of congress. I find in my rounds in Washington that the opinion of observers is virtually unanimous. Their information comes largely from "back home," as the politicians say, and so everybody seems to believe the President is more capable of doing things in this crisis than congress, except congress. I might add parenthetically the reason congress has granted so much is because individually and collectively it is afraid to go against the wishes of a man who has caught the imagination of the electorate as President Roosevelt has done.

Although the legislation accords the President the sweeping powers only for two years, his rights during that time to form a partnership with commerce and industry are almost limitless, albeit they depend upon voluntary co-operation by commerce and industry to a certain extent. But by the system of licensing which is set up, it is made to appear without much analysis that business had better cooperate or else—

In the first instance, all the long-standing antitrust laws are abrogated, kicked out of the window, so to speak. Upon the application of any association that is representative of a trade or group or business, the President is empowered to arrange with that organization and its individual members for a code of rules governing its competition. In other words, he is empowered to say in substance that prices may be set high enough to afford all of them a reasonable return of profit. It is obvious, of course, if there is a fair return factories will open and normal channels of trade will begin to flow. That means employment, and employment means creation of buying power. But the agreement must be within the bounds of reason or the President will not accept it.

There are only two restrictions to the President's power in this direction. Let me quote them: The President may agree to those codes of competition if he finds (1) that such associations or groups impose no inequitable restrictions on admission to membership and are truly representative of such trades or industries or subdivisions thereof, and (2) that such code or codes are not designed to promote monopolies or to eliminate or oppress small enterprises and will not operate to discriminate against them."

It is the plain purpose of that provision to see that such things as chain stores do not swallow up the corner grocery and that a great corporation may not drive lesser ones out of business.

Thus, we see the government fostering a program that is designed to assure for business a living wage and in providing that, it is the hope of the President that there will be a living wage for workers, too. To see that his policies are carried out and that the code is observed, the President has the right to revoke licenses which he has given with his approval of the competition agreements or codes.

But the program is not all a bed of roses for business. The President may, as a condition of his approval of the codes, "impose such conditions (including requirements for the making of reports and the keeping of accounts) for the protection of consumers, competitors, employees and others" as he may deem necessary in the public interest. That provision is a touchy spot. In effect, of course, the President will take little part in administration of the law. It will be done by those to whom he has given the administrative duty. And it never has been and probably never will be that any group of government officials see things the same way. Consequently, one hears many predictions that commerce and industry will be making reports in such detail and in such numbers, and investigations will be going on to such an extent that industry will be engaged in going over its books in one way or another about all of the time.

Further, it never has been popular among American business men to have all of the facts about their affairs disclosed. It is predicted now that this condition, developed highly by the federal trade commission, will be very much worse and that one factory will probably know all about its competitor, including the so-called manufacturing secrets. From these has come the progress of modern manufacturing and distribution.

The public works section of the bill is of a less imaginative character. Outright and with HopetoSpeed Recovery no exceptions, it makes provision for the expenditure of three billion three hundred million dollars for public construction. It proposes the expenditure of these funds over a period of two years, or so much of it as may be necessary, to provide employment. The construction work, of course, will cause all of the lines of business making or selling material for building to speed up. It ought to expand pay rolls in a hundred-odd lines as well as give the railroads some business. It appears to be a gigantic effort to increase the momentum of recovery which most everyone believes to be well under way. If it succeeds, no one will question the cost. It holds out that hope anyway, according to the President.

Mr. Roosevelt has not drafted the program of construction, nor did he offer to congress the plan of taxation to raise funds for the interest on the bonds for financing the work. He left the tax matter to congress and thus avoided causing trouble for himself, for he can say thereafter that the taxes were laid by the wisdom of congress.

After a lapse of twenty years, the senate of the United States again has performed the functions of a court of trial on articles of impeachment. It has just concluded this task on charges of impeachment adopted in the house of representatives against Harold Louderback, a federal judge in the northern district of California, marking the tenth time in our history that the senate has organized as a court of trial.

Even those who are not acquainted with the procedure because it occurs so seldom, and the trial drew to the galleries crowds of the proportion attracted by the most extraordinary murder case. They were, for the most part, curiously seekers. The thing was new. Of course, there were some seventy witnesses in the galleries, awaiting call, but there were enough others desiring to see the trial that the places of the witnesses would have been taken instantly had they stayed away.

Because the senate sits as a court so seldom, it might be worth while to recall what the procedure is. In general, the federal constitution prescribes the work to be done and how it shall be performed. The house of representatives sits as a grand jury, hearing accusations or charges brought against a federal official. The charge originally is one of "high crimes and misdemeanors" followed by a statement of a house member that "I, therefore, impeach" the individual named.

The next step is performed by a house committee to which is referred a resolution of impeachment and that committee determines whether it will recommend a formal vote of impeachment by the house itself. Thus, when the matter is placed before the house it votes for or against impeachment, which to all intents and purposes is like an indictment by a grand jury.

On March 4, just a few hours before the old congress adjourned, a senate attaché appeared in the middle aisle of the chamber and addressed Vice President Curtis, announcing the arrival of a committee of the house. Their arrival having been duly noted, the Vice President inquired their mission.

"To present articles of impeachment against Harold Louderback," replied Representative Summers, of Texas, the chief manager on the part of the house.

"They will be received," replied Mr. Curtis, without emotion.

Then the senate sergeant at arms arose in his place.

"Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye!" cried the sergeant at arms. "All persons are commanded to keep silent on pain of imprisonment while the house of representatives is exhibiting to the senate of the United States articles of impeachment against Harold Louderback."

And so the senate had been notified formally and officially, and in due course it organized itself into a court of trial.

The defendant is allowed legal counsel. Each side may call witnesses and they testify under oath in the senate chamber just as they would in court. There is the direct examination and cross examination, the house managers acting at all times in the role of the prosecution. When all of the evidence is in the case then is left for decision by the jury of senators, two-thirds of whom must vote for conviction or the defendant is automatically acquitted of the charges.

WASHING WOOLENS

To be safe, test new woollens for color fastness before washing, by squeezing a sample or inconspicuous portion in lukewarm water for five minutes or so.

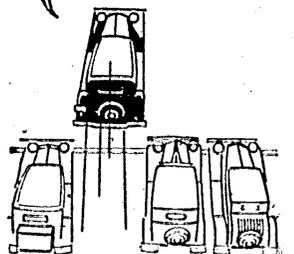

For the washing, briefly: make rich, lukewarm or cool suds with mild, neutral soap flakes. Put in the garment and wash quickly, by gently forcing the suds through and through the material. Never allow colored woollens to soak, even for a few minutes, nor to remain rolled up, or in a heap while wet.

Rinse the garment thoroughly in lukewarm or cool water. Squeeze out the water, or put it through a wringer, adjusted loosely. Don't twist. It is helpful, where practical, to roll woollen garments in a dry turkish towel to absorb the excess moisture. Then ease into shape and dry at moderate temperature.

A Correction

Through an error in copy last week, we said that the big meeting of the Cattlemen would be held at the Taylor ranch on July 12, but the truth is, that the big time will be on JUNE 12. So there now, you have it correct. We sincerely hope that our friends, J. V. Taylor and L. A. Whitaker, Mayor of the thriving town of Oscura, will read this; also the many cattlemen who read the old Republican Outlook, and be sure to attend next Monday, June 12.

At the last meeting of Carrizozo Lodge No. 30, I. O. O. F., in the month of May, the following officers for the ensuing term of six months, were elected:

Noble Grand, John Fay Harkey
Vice Grand, Geo. T. McQuillen
Secretary, Wm. J. Langston
Treasurer, F. L. Boughner.

At the last meeting in the month of June, the above named regular officers, together with others appointed by the incoming Noble Grand and Vice Grand, will be installed in regular order.

At a well attended meeting Tuesday night of this week, two candidates received the third degree and two were admitted to membership by transfer. The attendance was twenty.

Scenic painter George Elmgren of Fort Stanton is making some very artistic gold leaf lettering on the front windows of the lodge hall and will also paint the emblems of the order on the big new light over the front door. Work and interest increases in spite of the depression.

Sealed Bids Proposal

The local postoffice department is asking for sealed bids on messenger route No. 267054, between the postoffice at Carrizozo and the Southern Pacific Company Station Route 111801. Anyone interested, may receive information and necessary blanks at the Carrizozo post-office. Herman Kelt, Postmaster.

Carrizozo Romped on Cloudercroft

The Carrizozo ball team went up to the Sacramentos last Sunday and literally massacred the Cloudercrofters by a score of 28 to 8. Our boys were in a hitting spree, and the opposing pitchers just couldn't stop them. They were badly outclassed. Tony Perea, Manuel Chavez, Walter LaFleur and Manuel Ortiz were the batting luminaries of the day, each hitting a homerun.

The newly organized Fort Stanton team will come here Sunday and this promises to be a hotly contested affair, as these two teams are very bitter rivals. Let's all turn out and help the boys make it six in a row.

We Were Misinformed

In arranging the ad last week for Roy Skinner, who took over the old Star Cafe, we were intended to run the ad as "Roy's Cafe" instead of the Star Cafe, but it was a mistake of ours and not of the proprietor. So we beg leave to apologize for the error - and if you'll read his ad in this issue, you'll see the name as it should have been last week, "Roy's Cafe."

Painter George Elmgren of Fort Stanton has the new sign finished on the windows, so that everybody'll read it as it really is, "Roy's Cafe." Give him a call. You know that old saying, "To err is only human; to forgive, divine."

The Egyptian Republican with H-a-i-r on Chest) published at Herrin, Ill., came to this office a short time ago. It has for a slogan, "The Most Widely Read Paper in Southern Illinois," of which we have no doubt. "We'll be seen' you later," quoth the Egyptian Republican. All republicans aren't dead, by a long shot!

WOMEN'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE MOTOR CAR

There is some doubt that people care to hear very much about what goes on under the hoods of their cars.

The driver knows that "driving qualities" are not accidental; they are put there. How the manufacturer creates or evolves those results may not interest him. He judges entirely by the results he gets in driving.

Well, it is not essential to talk "shop"; let us talk Results.

Smoothness. Drive the Ford V-8 and you will find that the engine runs with surpassing smoothness, due to its design and the extra precise methods of its manufacture.

Power. There it is, 75 horsepower (we could say 80) at the drive-shaft for the driver's use. With less weight to pull around, the mettle of this car—its life-like response—is rather remarkable.

Economy. Our V-8 develops more power on a gallon of gasoline than any car we have made. Mileage is partly a matter of individual driving, but under average conditions the Ford V-8 does 17 to 20 miles a gallon. Of course, car economy is not only a matter of fuel. Ford V-8 has that too, but it is also economical in the complete sense—initial cost, operation, maintenance.

Appearance. This is woman's contribution. The motor car must not only be useful, but also good-looking. View the Ford V-8 and you will not need our comment on its fine appearance.

Comfort. This also is woman's concern. In 30 years she changed the motor car from a wagon to a coach. Comfort is a quality made up of numerous ingredients. There is no comfort without a quiet, smooth-running engine. We have all the other ingredients too,—color, good taste, quality, ease, safety, roominess and convenience.
