

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

As an act of making love to her favored suitor, a Soup Dance is arranged among the Arapahoe Indians and at a given time, the lamb-eyed, blushing bride-to-be rushes into the circle and throws a bowl of soup in his face. The modest lover tenderly grabs her by the hair, whirls her around the ring several times. He then drags her over tumble weeds and sage brush to his tent, gives her his gun and sends her out to shoot a rabbit for the wedding dinner.

The Cheyennes have a good system of divorce procedure. When the wife gets tired of her spouse, she throws all of his belongings out of the tent and washes her feet twice during the next full moon whether they need it or not. This finishes the divorce proceedings. Kit Carson had an experience of that kind after he married a Samson in a "Making-out-the-Road." This must not be construed to mean that she was in any way connected with the New Mexico Highway Department. After Kit received his divorce, he was sent to Washington, where he was honored for his bravery at the National Capital, where men wore germ-infested whiskers — and beer was five cents a glass.

Julia, daughter of W. C. Butterfield, owner of a chain of theaters in Michigan, was appointed on the reporters' staff of the Battle Creek Enquirer-News. She said she wanted to be on the job when a good story was to be written — these were her first stories to write: Two days after her appointment her father's beautiful Gull Lake estate burned to the ground. A few days later, a motor boat exploded near the Butterfield summer home and a well known Kalamazoo man was badly burned. On July 8, two masked bandits entered the Butterfield home and while one forced Mrs. Butterfield to hand over her valuable jewelry, the other held Colonel Butterfield in bed at the point of a pistol. At the time of the robbery Miss Butterfield and a friend, Miss Mary Hanley of Grand Rapids, were asleep on the second floor, but Julia wrote a graphic account of everything.

In Galesburg, Illinois, about 75 per cent Scandinavian population, a colored handmaster of the local darky band had been employed by Swedish carpenters doing odd jobs for many years. Consequently, he spoke Swedish like a native. His favorite form of amusement was to tell the Scandinavian new arrivals of the peasant class that after a while they would turn the same color as himself — and he was b-l-a-c-k, too!

Mrs. J. E. Farley was a visitor last night from Alamogordo and returned this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Farley will leave shortly for a visit with Mr. Farley's parents in Pittsburgh, Pa., and will visit the World's Fair in Chicago on their return trip.

Miss Hazel Melas came in the first of the week from Albuquerque where she had been since our schools closed.

Carrizozo 15; Tularosa 10

Last Sunday afternoon at the local ball park, the Carrizozo Team defeated Tularosa in a loosely-played game of baseball by a score of 15 to 10.

Tularosa made six runs in the first inning and things began to look gloomy for Carrizozo. But our boys have proven before that they can fight back better when badly pressed, and this time it didn't take them long to forge ahead and win their game.

Andy Lueras pitched the entire nine frames and was accorded good backing by his teammates. Bob Whitey and Salvador Ortiz hit homeruns for the locals.

Next Sunday, the team goes to Alamogordo for a game with the Trojans. On the following Sunday the crack Socorro County team comes to Carrizozo.

Blow to the Depression (Hobbs News)

Harvesting is now in full blast at the Hobbs Municipal Gardens and the crop returns are so abundant that the most casual observer is able to reckon broadly that the affair is an unequalled success. This is a distinction for Hobbs; these municipal gardens appear to be the only ones of this nature in the entire state. They are in fact, unique as well as unequally successful.

The tract embraces the municipal park, 310X310 feet in dimension. It was divided into thirty plots for gardening. 28 of the plots represent 23 families. The two remaining, are assigned to the indigent folk who are unable to work the same and by agreement, these are worked by the other 23, free of charge. The maximum welfare fund is about $150 a month. It is doubtless true that each one of these plots will produce much more than $150 in returns from fresh vegetables. Some of the plot workers are now canning the vegetables and this practice will doubtless extend to all of the plot workers. If this unique Hobbs plan had been adopted in every state in the union, the effect on the depression would have been staggering.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill Mendenhall arrived home from Pueblo, last Sunday morning and left again for Carlsbad, visited the cavern and returned Sunday evening. Bill has increased his orchestra to six pieces and their next dance will be held tomorrow night at Tularosa. Follow the Revelers and have a good time.

LOCAL MENTION

Narrow Escape

While out for a pleasure drive last Saturday afternoon, Mrs. Elmer Eaker, small son and Mrs. Anna Roberts met with an accident in which they narrowly escaped without injuries of a very serious nature. It was shortly after six o'clock and they were coming home for the evening meal.

As they were nearing the bridge on north El Paso avenue opposite Lemon's filling station, something attracted Mrs. Eaker's attention and as they went onto the bridge, she lost control of the car and it swerved to one side. The car pitched off the bridge, but luckily it did not turn over. The windows were open and the baby, who was in the lap of his grandmother, Mrs. Roberts, pitched out of the window and alighted on the soft ground beneath the bridge.

The jar was so terrific that they were unconscious for a short while. Mr. Lemon cared for the folks as best he could and phoned for a physician and they were taken to Johnson's Hospital. Mrs. Roberts sustained an ugly cut across the forehead which required twenty-two stitches to close. Mrs. Eaker also had a bad cut from the left temple to the center of the forehead in which twelve stitches were taken. Aside from the above named injuries, they were both badly shaken up. A slight cut on the baby's face and some minor bumps on his little body from which he recovered in short order, was the result of his injuries. They remained in the hospital over Monday and on Tuesday they were able to go home.

Lincoln Baptist Association

The Lincoln Baptist Association will meet at the Baptist Church in Carrizozo at 10 a. m. Friday, Aug. 11. The Rev. J. C. Blalock of Tularosa will preach the annual sermon at 11 a. m. Rev. Blalock will be remembered from last spring; having preached the 5th Sunday in May. Many enjoyed hearing him on that date and will look forward to hearing him next Friday.

The NRA

The National Recovery Act, authorized by the President of the United States, has been complied with very generally by the citizens and business houses of Carrizozo. This agreement is part of a nation-wide plan to raise wages, create employment and thus increase purchasing power and restore business.

Certificates of compliance have been signed and left with the postoffice and the NRA signs have spread their wings over the areas in windows throughout the town. The success of this attempt is yet to be proven, but it cannot be said that Carrizozo fails in complying with the nation in its policy or lags behind when others join.

Announcement

The Carrizozo Outlook Art & Gift Shop will have its headquarters in the building next to Rolland's Drug Store, within the next week.

John W. Harkey, son Fay and G. A. Sundquist motored to Alamogordo Wednesday evening on some business.

The Everlasting Whisper

FROM THE BEGINNING

In the California sierra Mark King, prospector, sees Andy Parker, his old-time companion, King is on his way to the home of Ben Gaylor. King and Gaylor share with Brodie knowledge of a vast store of hidden gold. King meets Mrs. Gaylor and is impressed by her daughter Gloria's youthful beauty. He dislikes a house visitor named Gratton. With Gloria, King goes to Colorado, intending to "sound" Honeycutt. He finds Brodie with the old prospector, and apparently King is drawn closer to Gloria. She and her mother return to San Francisco. In a spirit of adventure Gloria accompanies Gratton on a "business" trip. At Colorado she finds her father badly hurt. He gives her a message and a package for King, urging her to get them to him at once. King realizes she has compromised herself by her journey with Gratton. He proposes marriage, and Gloria apparently accepts him. Gratton arranges for the marriage by a country "judge." King, unseen by Gloria, watches the ceremony from a window. At the last moment Gloria refuses to utter the requisite "yes." King enters the room and Gloria appeals to him for protection. Gratton dismissed, reveals his knowledge of the hidden gold and makes threats. King, heartened by Gloria's appeal to him, urges her to marry him. Really in love with him, and seeing a way out of her dilemma, the girl consents. Gaylor's message to King reveals the location of the treasure, and urges him to go at once and secure it.

A more radiantly lovely Gloria he had never looked upon. She had slept and rested; she had bathed and groomed and set herself in order. He gathered her up into his arms so that her feet were clear of the floor.

"Do you know . . . do you guess . . . have you the faintest suspicion how I love you? It's sweet of you," he told her softly, "to get up and come down and see me off."

"Oh," said Gloria, "I am going with you."

Not once had King dared think that she should go with him into the mountains on this quest of his. He sat and pondered and stared at her.

"Don't you want me?" asked Gloria. "Aren't you glad, Mark?"

It was not on any spur of the moment, but after long deliberation, that she had decided that she would go with him. If it were rumored that she had gone out of town with Gratton; if Gratton wanted to be ugly and feed rumor; then on top of that if she appeared within reach of a reporter without a husband, there would be talk. If it were answered that she was married to Mark King, there would be the question: "And where, my dear, is this Mark King?" From upstairs last night she had heard fragmentary outbursts from the "judge." "Irregular; no license." Now Gloria meant to kill the snake outright, not to allow the scathed reptile to writhe free. She was married; she was going with her husband into the wilderness on the most romantic of all honeymoons. The papers were free to make much of that.

"Of course I want you," said King slowly. "Glad? Glad that you want to come with me? Can't you see that I am the gladdest man on earth? But—"

"I have already written a message I wanted to send to a girl friend in San Francisco. I was going to have it placed in to her. It tells her I'm married. To you, Mark. And that we're off on the most wonderful trip together into the heart of the wild country."

"And bless you," he said heartily. But Gloria glancing at him swiftly, saw that his eyes were clouded with anxiety.

"Of course," she said, "if you don't want a girl along— You said last night that you weren't afraid of anything Brodie and his men could do? That they didn't even know where to go? That they'd never know where to find you?"

"Yes. And I meant it. But—"

He wanted her with him; she wanted to come. Further, it gained him to think that those first glorious days should be spent with the mountains between them. He was tempted, sorely tempted. Was there really any danger, would there be danger to her? If he thought so, that there was the faintest likelihood of harm to her, he would say no, no matter what the yearning in his heart. But if they made a quick dash in and out; two days each way, not over one day at Andy Ingle's caves? They could go in one way, come out another. They had at least a full day's head start of any possible followers. No, in his heart he did not believe that there would be any danger to Gloria. Further, the thought struck him that she would not be altogether safe here; there was venom in Gratton. Gratton knew from Gloria's own lips that she had brought the message from her father in Colorado; hence Gratton might suspect, and Brodie after him, that Gloria was in possession of old Loony Honeycutt's secret. Instead of seeming hazardous to take Gloria with him, it began to appear that his new responsibility of guarding her from all harm had begun already, and that he could best protect her from any possible evil by having her always with him. . . . So with himself commended Mark King, never a man overly given to caution, but seeking now to measure chances, to set them in the scales over against the desire of his heart.

King estimated they would be gone five days, and then, making due allowance for any reasonable delay, provisioned for ten. Gloria was much interested in everything, and looked out to the mountains eagerly when King had swung her up to her saddle on Blackie, the tall, sober-faced horse. King looked at her and marveled; her cheeks were rosy, her eyes were Gloria's own, wonderful and big and deep beyond fathoming. "You are not afraid that I can take care of you, are you, Gloria?" he asked.

And Gloria laughed gaily, answering: "My dear Mr. Man, I am not the least little bit afraid of anything in all the world this morning!"

So with the glorious day brightening all about them they turned away from the log house and into the trail which straightway King dubbed "Adventure Trail."

There were red spots in Gloria's cheeks when they started. King sought to guess at what might be the emotions of a young girl going on with Gloria's present emotional adventure—vain task of a mere man seeking to fathom those troubled feminine depths;—marking that she was a little nervous and distraught.

"I know the place Gus Ingle tried to describe," he said, "as well as I know my old hat. Or at least I'd have said so until he mentioned the third cave. I've been there dozens of times, too, but I've got to see more than two-caves there yet."

"I wonder—do you suppose we'll find it as he says?"

"At least we'll see about it. And whether there be heaps and piles of red, red gold, as the tale telleth, be sure our trip is going to be worth the two days' ride. I'll show you such chasms and gorges and crags as you've never turned those two lovely eyes of yours upon, Mrs. Gloria King."

"Have You the Faintest Suspicion How I Love You?"

As they journeyed King noted that Gloria displayed none of that chattering, singing, gaily of their former rides together; he remembered, sympathetically, that she had had very little sleep last night, and that she had endured a wearisome twenty-four hours before, and that the long, nervous strain under which she had struggled must certainly have told upon her, both physically and mentally. So, believing that she would be grateful for silence, he grew silent with her.

King, well before midday, reached the spot in which from the first he had planned that they would camp. He was quick to help her to dismount and noted that she came down stiffly; the eyes which she turned to him were heavy with fatigue.

"Maybe I shouldn't have let you come after all, dear," he said contently. "These are harder trails than we've ridden before, and we've had to keep at it steadily."

There was an effort in her smile answering him. "The last two days have been hard to get through with," she said as she yielded to his insistence and sat down on the sun-warmed pine needles. "I am sorry I am so—"

He did not allow her to run down the elusive word. "Nonsense," he told her heartily. "You've got a right to be tired. But when you've had some lunch and a cup of hot coffee you'll be hip-top again. You'll see."

King unadvised and tethered the horses, built his little fire and went about lunch-getting with a joy he had never known in the old accustomed routine before. Now and then he glanced toward Gloria; he could not help that. But he saw that she was lying back, her eyes closed, and while his heart went out to her he did not force his sympathy on her. She seemed to be asleep.

But Gloria was not asleep. Never had her mind raced so. It was done and she was Mark King's wife; higher and higher loomed that fact above all other considerations. But there were other considerations; her father hurt, she did not know how badly; her mother mystified, by now perhaps informed of Gloria's marriage; Gratton with the poison extracted from his fangs had the fangs still; Brodie somewhere, Brodie with the horrible face. She shivered and stirred restlessly, and King, who saw everything, thought that she had dreamed a bad dream. But lunch was ready; he came to her with plate and cup. And again Gloria did her best to smile gratefully.

"You are so good to me, Mark," she said. Her eyes were thoughtful; would he always be good to her? Even when—but she was too weary to think.

"I want to learn how to be good to you, wife of mine," he said very gently. "That is all on earth I ask. Just to make you happy."

"You love me so much, Mark?" she asked, as one who wondered at what she had read in his low voice and glimpsed in his eyes.

"Gloria," he told her gently, "I don't understand this thing they call love yet; it is too new, too wonderful. But I do know that in all the world there is nothing else that matters."

She looked at him long and curiously.

"You would do anything you could to make me happy? Anything, Mark?"

"I pray with all my heart and soul that I always may!"

Gloria seemed to rest through the noon hour and to brighten. When she saw him the second time look at the sun—she got up from the ground and said:

"Time to go on? I'm ready. And after that banquet I feel all me again!"

He laughed and went off after the horses, singing at the top of his voice. She stood very still, looking off after him, her brows puckering into a shadowy frown. Oh, if she could only read herself as he allowed her to read him; if she could only be as sure of Gloria as she was of Mark; if she could only look deep into her heart as she looked into his. Did she love Mark King? She had thrilled to him as she had thrilled to no other man; but that had been in the springtime.

Twice then she had been sure that she loved him. But that was so long ago. And now that she had allowed him to carry her out of the quick-sands? What now? Oh, if she had only let him go on alone this morning; if she had remained where she could rest and think and thus come to see clearly, even into her own troubled heart.

They came about four o'clock to a small meadow. Stopping in the open, sitting sideways in the saddle, he waited for her.

Gloria drew rein and looked at him with large eyes across the twenty paces separating them.

"I can't go any further," she said bleakly. "I'm tired out!"

He was quick to see a gathering of tears, and swung down from his horse and went to her with long strides, his own eyes filled with concern.

"Poor little kiddie," he said humbly. "I've let you do yourself up."

And it was his duty, his privilege, and no one's else in the world, to shelter her, to stand between her and all hardship. In a moment, he was unrolling a pack, making a temporary couch for her and commanding her lovingly just to lie down and look up at the treetops above her, and rest while he staked out the horses. Gloria threw herself face down on the blankets.

She did not know what possessed her; she fought for repression, hiding her face from him. Out of a hideously stern world a black spirit had leaped upon her; it clutched at her throat, it dragged at her heart. She was so nervous that now and again a fierce tremor shook her from head to foot.

Dusk gathered while King worked over his fire. The aroma of boiling coffee rose, crept through the air, blended with the aromas of the woods. He set out his dishes upon a flat-topped rock, replenished his fire, threw on some fresh-cut green cedar boughs for their delightful fragrance, and went to call Gloria.

Gloria, too tired bodily and mentally to wage a winning battle against those black vapors which flick so frequently about luckless youth, had suffered and yielded and gone down in misery. Hers was a state of overwrought nerves which forbade clear thinking, which distorted and warped and magnified.

"A cup of coffee and a bit of supper," King said gently. "You'll feel a lot better."

She rose wearily and followed him, saying absently: "I am not hungry. It was good of you—to go to all of this trouble. I am afraid I am not much of a camper."

"Tuckered out," he thought. "Clean tuckered out."

And finally when she pushed her cup away and let her two hands drop into her lap he gathered the dishes and carried them away to the nearest pool to wash them.

When he came back to her in the hush of the first hour of night, he thought that he understood her need for silence, and spoke only infrequently and briefly.

"And now," he said, taking up his short-handled ax, "I am going to make for my lady-love the finest couch for tranquill, restful sleep that mortal ever had."

As he strode away toward a grove of firs he was lost to her eyes before he had gone a hundred paces. He worked swiftly, grudging every minute away from her. And then he stopped, sat down upon a log and filed his pipe with slow fingers. He'd force himself to smoke one pipe before he went back to her, thinking that she would be grateful for a few moments alone.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. F. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for August 6

RUTH

LESSON TEXT—Ruth 1:6-18. GOLDEN TEXT—Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God, 1 John 4:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Gift of Friends. JUNIOR TOPIC—Ruth the Loyal. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ruth the Loyal. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Message of the Book of Ruth.

In order to grasp the material contained in the subject there must be swept into view the whole book of Ruth. The lesson committee recognized this and assigned the book as the lesson text. However, for convenience the lesson text which is to be printed has been confined to the first chapter, verses 6-19.

I. Ruth's Connection With the Jewish Nation (1:1-5).

1. The sojourn in Moab (vs. 1-3). On account of famine in Bethlehem of Judah, Elimelech with Naomi, his wife, and their two sons sojourned in the land. During this sojourn Elimelech died, leaving Naomi, the widow, to care for two fatherless sons.

2. The marriage of the two sons (vs. 4). During the sojourn the two sons fell in love with and married Moabitish women named Orpah and Ruth. For God's chosen people even to sojourn in the world exposes them to the likelihood of intermarriage of the members of the family with the people of the world.

3. The death of the sons (vs. 5). In a brief time, three widows were left in the one family relation. This family went to Moab to escape trouble, only to have their troubles greatly increased. When God's people go into the world to escape difficulties they are sure to suffer in consequence.

II. Naomi's Return to the Land of Judah (vs. 6-14).

Because of the chastisement that was sent upon Naomi, she resolved to return to her country. The purpose of God's chastisement is to cause his children to return unto him.

When the time came for Naomi to go, Ruth and Orpah accompanied her for a distance. This she permitted, but determined to place before them frankly the difficulties that would confront them. Having laid the matters before them, she urged them to turn back. As much as Naomi loved her daughters-in-law, she would not have them go with her without knowing fully what their decision meant.

III. Ruth's Noble Choice (vs. 10-18).

This choice on her part meant: 1. No chance to marry again. In that day to be unmarried was the greatest disgrace. Furthermore, it was against God's law for the Jews to marry outside of their own people.

2. She must renounce her gods. Idolatrous worship could not be carried on in the land where God's people dwelt. This was delicately touched upon by Naomi when Orpah went back (vs. 15). Orpah went back when it was plain that there was no chance to marry again. At this time Naomi put an additional test upon Ruth, that of giving up her religion. Ruth was equal to the occasion. Her mind was fully made up. Her very expressions have come down to us in words which "no poetry has outvalued, and no pathos has exceeded, and which have gone through centuries with the music that will not let them be forgotten." She was determined to share Naomi's journey, her home, her God, her lot in life and her grave in death, whatever that would be. It meant that she would renounce her heathen gods, and worship Jehovah.

IV. Blessings Which Attended Ruth's Choice (chaps. 2-4).

1. She found the true God (1:10). Instead of her heathen gods who were unable to help her, she now had a living God—the God of Israel.

2. She found human friends (chap. 2). As she went to glean she was led to the field of Boaz, a man of wealth and grace. The servants treated her with consideration. Even Boaz gave instructions for special consideration to be given her.

3. A good husband and a happy home (chaps. 3, 4). She not only secured a husband, but a man of God who had an abundance of this world's goods.

4. An honored place in the Israelitish nation (4:13-17). Though she had to forsake her own people, she became one of a nobler people.

5. She became a link in the chain of Christ's ancestry (4:18-22, cf. Matt. 1:3). The one who fully decides for Christ and gives up all for him shall receive a hundredfold in this life, and in the world to come eternal life.

The Holy Spirit

There is only one inlet of power in the life; just one inlet—the Holy Spirit. He is power. To yield to his mastery, to cultivate his friendship, to give him full swing—that will result in what is called power. One inlet of power—the Holy Spirit is control.

Feeling Wrong Way

The man who becomes a Christian because he confirms the faith of his fathers may be on the right way, but he is not facing in the right direction.

OBEDIENT

The doctor smilingly entered the room where his female patient was reclining in a chair. "Ah," he murmured, "I see you are looking very much better today." "Yes, doctor," the patient said, "I have very carefully followed the instructions on that bottle of medicine you gave me." "Let me see, now," said the doctor thoughtfully. "What were they?" "Keep the bottle well corked," came the reply.—Somerset (Eng.) Standard.

ENTHUSIASTIC

It was a wretched play. Long before the interval the audience began to boo and hiss. But there was one man who clapped his hands vigorously. "I say," said the man next to him, "you've got a nerve to applaud this shocking play. What can you see in it?" The man smiled. "It's not the play I'm applauding," he replied heartily. "It's the hissing." —London Answers.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

The Fencing Order

El Paso Times: Despite all arguments, pleas and protests from New Mexico and Arizona livestock interests and members of congress against the removal of fences on or around the public domain, Secretary Ickes still stands firm on his order that the fences must come down. The order means hardship to scores if not hundreds of ranchmen. It puts them to the expense of removing the fencing. It leaves them with no way to control their herds and flocks. It deprives them of the ability to control the movements of livestock so as to equalize grazing and prevent the denudation of the range in sections while others are neglected.

To make the issue more clear to town and farm dwellers: Suppose dear reader, you were to come into possession of a 100 section ranch. Somewhere in the interior of that great block of land are two sections of government land. If you cannot homestead that government land and if you cannot bring it under your ownership in any other manner, how can you fence your own land without enclosing the government land also?

Ed. Note—The above is one side of the story and we invite the opinions of those who are otherwise minded. Write in; we will gladly publish your letters in view of the matter.

Mirages Seen No More

Certain parts of Kansas were formerly noted for the number of mirages to be encountered there at rather frequent intervals, but in recent years these interesting sky pictures have disappeared and the reason is said to rest in the fact that the state has been largely planted with wheat and the lack of variety in the landscape gives no opportunity for the formation of a mirage.

Fitness or Slimness

The tendency to be fat or slender is largely inherited, though most persons who are overweight can achieve a material reduction by proper habits of diet and exercise, says Hygeia Magazine. When one is underweight, there should always be an examination for organic trouble.

In Praise of Merchants

There are not more useful members in a commonwealth than merchants. They knit mankind together in a mutual intercourse of good offices, distribute the gifts of nature, and work for the poor, add wealth to the rich, and magnificence to the great.—Joseph Addison in the Spectator.

Guthrie Smith (Gloomy Gus) of the State Record says—

An Albuquerque auto mechanic was haled into court on a charge of driving while drunk and told the judge he had only drunk two bottles of beer. The judge must have believed him, for he suspended both jail sentence and fine. There is no law to prevent a judge from believing any story a defendant may see fit to tell, but it would be interesting to know how much the Albuquerque dealers are charging for those five-gallon bottles of beer.

Catch the Idea?

Part Played by Chance in Life

Not Possible to Deny Luck Is an Element.

"It is well known that as nothing succeeds like success, so nothing fails like failure," said Mr. Cato Ninetails; "and it seems highly probable that both ability and circumstances have a strong effect on either result. Ernest F. Henderson, in his 'Short History of Germany,' records that Napoleon, speaking of General Mack, who surrendered the Austrian army October 17, 1805, said: 'He is certainly one of the most incapable men in existence; and moreover he has had luck.'"

"Napoleon himself, was, of course, capable—and had good luck. That is, such conditions prevailed for about twenty years. Then they changed. It might have been from a loss of capability or a failure of good luck—or both. At any rate, he took no further part in the successful activities of the world. There have been other men who were capable and lucky, which qualifies them for an irresistible combination. There have been men who were capable, and men who were lucky. Neither kind got quite so far."

"As such an irresistible combination is seldom, if ever, lifelong, the question arises as to whether such a capable man would be so successful if he were not lucky, or such a lucky man would be so successful if he were not capable; and, indeed, a further question as to whether a good deal of what passes for capability isn't mostly or wholly luck. On the other hand, what is enviously called luck may really be capability. The two are such complementary attributes that it is almost impossible to determine which is dominant."

"There are those, of course, who say that there is no such thing as luck—that is, chance good fortune—but certainly there is some inexorable and uncontrollable force that has a powerful, even a decisive, effect on the affairs of men, and it would seem that luck is as good a name for it as any, whether it concerns the cast of fortune or of the dice; nor is there any doubt that it favors some people more than it does others—such as General Mack. It is our own feeling that when it favors us we are capable, and when it does not we are unlucky. This entitles our self-esteem, and does no particular harm, but it can hardly be regarded as a disinterested analysis. Undoubtedly a great many of our misfortunes that are blamed on chance are the effect of bungling, and much of our good fortune that is credited to capability is quite as undoubtedly the result of luck."

"Perhaps it is just as well. If we could not pat ourselves on the back without dislocating an arm, life could be a sorry affair. We feel a fine glow of generosity when we pat other people on the back, even when we think that they may be worthy of it, but it is not nearly so satisfying as when we pat ourselves on the back, for then we have no doubt whatever that the commendation is deserved. After all, all of us have some capability and all of us have some luck, but most of us experience great difficulty in keeping them working together."—Indianapolis News.

HER DOUBLE CHIN IS VANISHING

Shape Growing Normal

"Why am I taking Kruschen Salt? Because I was getting so broad across the hips I was ashamed of myself. I've been taking Kruschen about 2 months and they certainly are bringing my shape down to a normal condition and I like it better than (to my way of thinking) is they haven't taken flesh from my cheeks but to my surprise my double chin is vanishing for which anyone should be glad." Mrs. F. E. Gardner, Worcester, Mass. (Jan. 2, 1933).

Do lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salt the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent fronts and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.

MONEY PROBLEMS OF LONG AGO

Romans Had Their Troubles, as Did Other Nations, in the Adjustment of Currencies to the Demands of Trade and Public Welfare.

The Romans were slow to get a coinage system. Three hundred years after the founding of the city, far advanced in many respects, Romans were trading like a tribe of aborigines, Reuben Cahn writes, in the Chicago Tribune. They were quoting prices in sheep and oxen. The two were related in a decimal system—10 sheep equalled 1 ox.

In Etruria, which lay northwest of the Tiber river, were copper mines and at an early date copper was brought to Rome. It came to be used in shields, harness, wagons, ships, and for many other purposes. Thus it had a market value and it became the custom to use lumps of it in making payments. The government paid no attention to this innovation, however, for some years. At a time when pieces of copper were being used in trade a souse driving his chaplet recklessly along the Appian boulevard might have to settle with the judge by driving up a flock of sheep.

Since copper was sold by weight, it became convenient to have pound lumps called an "as." There were also two and three pound pieces. Thus copper served as money before the state started issuing pieces of metal stamped with picture of the gods, mythical heroes, and contemporary politicians.

When after 366 B. C. the Romans became commercially ambitious and founded a maritime colony they took up coinage. The money was bronze, lead, and tin, being combined with raw copper. The unit of value weighed an as and was called by that name.

Silver, which the Roman generals found desirable to have on hand to buy army equipment as they went on conquests and which was already widely used elsewhere, thanks to Greek and Alexandrian influence, became official money in Rome after 269 B. C. Thereupon the double standard was adopted, silver and copper, both being coined and a mint ratio of 120 to 1 was established. Although silver was used exclusively in the foreign trade, copper continued to constitute the principal money at home.

Now silver greatly increased in quantity. For one thing, Alexander discovered enormous treasures of both gold and silver in the Orient and set them in circulation. And there was the great silver mine in Spain, which at one time employed 40,000 miners. This had the effect of cheapening silver; boosting prices in terms of silver. At the time when wars had cut off the supplies of Rome's copper, the value of that metal in relation to silver rose more than did the general commodity index number. And furthermore, copper was a commodity useful to have around while warring.

Roman statesmen well understood Gresham's law 18 centuries before Gresham: with a double standard, an increase in the supply of silver, being coincident with a reduction in the supply of and an increase in the demand for copper, would have led to the hoarding of copper as money. If the double standard was to work, it was necessary to reduce the mint ratio from 120 to 1. And so the size of the coin "as" was changed from 12 ounces of bronze to 10, 8, 6, and eventually to 2 ounces. Thus, the relation of silver to copper fell as low as 20 to 1 while the normal sources of metal were unavailable. When the peace-time flow of new copper was re-established, and the war-time demand was cut off, the old ratio of 120 to 1 was restored. Copper and silver performed similarly in the World war. The market ratio was 30 to 1 in 1917—now is 70 to 1.

Devaluation of copper was not undertaken by the Roman republic at any time for profit nor to relieve the burden of debtors, the ends sought by gold devaluators today. It was done to maintain the double standard. It was the earliest example of a successfully managed currency. On the ides of March, 44 B. C., the great Caesar was slain.

After him came emperors who used the republican precedent to debase the currency as a racket, until its value was but one-fiftieth of what it was before.

The history of money in the Roman republic was a succession of readjustments to make a double standard work. That the republic supplied its citizens with a sound and an honest medium of exchange is testimony both to their ability and their character.

Seldom Need to "Talk Too Much"

Mr. Cato Ninetails Gives a Little Dissertation on the Subject.

"There is too much talk about the people who talk too much," declared Mr. Cato Ninetails. "It does no good whatever, because the people who talk too much keep right on talking too much; in fact, it does harm, for it merely adds to the amount of talk, and so increases that kind of unnecessary noise."

"I have never been able to determine whether loquacity is a gift or a disease. I am rather inclined to think that it is a disease of the nervous system, but on the other hand, it may be merely one of those involuntary physiological actions like respiration or the circulation of the blood. Mentality doesn't seem to have much to do with it, as it is noticed that the people who talk too much generally say less than the people who talk comparatively little. They have two distinctive characteristics. They talk principally about themselves, their families, their own affairs and their opinions of other people's affairs, about which they know little or nothing, and so have all the pleasure and stimulation of letting their imaginations range widely.

"For other people than those endowed with this gift, or afflicted with this disease, as the case may be, my observation and experience convinces me that talking is hard work; that it is not merely a mental effort, but that it is a physical effort that is wearing on the muscles as well as the nerves. The toll of 'making conversation'—which is undoubtedly the most unnecessary activity that humanity engages in—is more exhausting than the most arduous physical labor. I mean that it is for the people who don't talk too much. The people who do talk too much have to make conversation because what they think is conversation bubbles from their lips like the water from a never-falling spring.

"People, of course, cannot give previous thoughtful consideration to all the remarks that they make—as to their justifiability and effect, even though they experience repeated instances where after consideration is extremely disconcerting; talk, even discreet talk, must have some spontaneity; but it is certain that the less they say the less danger there will be of a subsequent feeling of regret.

"I don't think that the people who talk too much are really any more unattractive than the people who don't, and when they say things that are better left unsaid the effect is diluted by their general gust of words till it is hardly noticed. It is the people who don't talk much that must watch their step—or their tongues. The infrequency of their remarks tends to make their hearers note, and perhaps remember, what they say. So it really wouldn't appear to be safe to say anything—which would make life somewhat duller, and a good deal less laborious."—Indianapolis News.

BLOWOUTS are caused by frictional heat generated in the fibers of the cotton cords in a tire. Firestone is the only tire built with every cotton fiber saturated and coated with pure rubber—to prevent destructive heat. This is one of the reasons why Firestone Tires have been on the winning cars in the 500 mile Indianapolis Race for 14 consecutive years—the world's most severe blowout test.

We'll Meet You There

In the night of your manhood, you left us,

When your life was just at its prime.

In the midst of a life full of service,

You were cut down by the sythe of old time.

You left us with life full of promise,

Without even a chance for goodbye.

But as to why you should be stricken so sudden,

We'll find that out in the sky.

As those who have cared for and loved you,

And labored with you in life's day.

We have truly mourned at your going,

At your lightning-like taking away.

But we believe that God in His wisdom,

Knows exactly just what is best.

And in this time of deepest affliction,

He has called our friend to his rest.

So brother you have gone on before us,

In a short time, we'll join you again,

In that land without a y goodbye,

And there'll be no accidents then.

In that land of flowers and children,

We will look for your face ever there.

Together we'll meet God in His beauty,

In that land without sorrow and care.

Fowls Uncover Gold

A man living in Coventry, England, has a garden that is part of a new estate and boasts a fine old oak. As his fowls were scratching about near by the dug up a hoard of gold and silver. The lucky man found that the coins belonged to the reign of George the Third and that there were 12 pieces of gold and five of silver. The treasure had been buried exactly 100 yards from the foot of the oak tree and in a direct line with the cathedral spire.

Lightning Reveals Mirage

As a thunderstorm raged on the edge of the Sahara Desert recently, members of an exploring party saw, during a flash of lightning, a range of mountains outlined against the sky. The phenomenon was repeated on another evening under almost identical conditions. As the nearest range in that direction was the Atlas mountains, 800 miles away, the explorers concluded that the lightning had produced a mirage.

While going down the street on a dark night, if you'll pardon the repetition, you jokingly shout "Hello, Johnson!" And the answer comes back, invariably, nine times out of ten, "Hello!"
