The next meeting will be at Mrs. Kille's with the Drake girls as hostesses, Saturday afternoon, June 16.

Stars Entertained in Honor of E. M. Brickley

On Saturday evening, May 26, the members of the O. E. S. met at their hall to honor E. M. Brickley, Worthy Grand Patron of New Mexico, this being the highest office a Mason can hold in the order. The welcoming address was given by Mrs. R. E. Blaney, resident Senior Past Matron. Response by E. M. Brickley. Past Patron C. P. Huppertz gave to us the honor guest's biography from the time he arrived in this state up to the present. Mrs. F. A. English, Past Matron, presented E. M. Brickley, Mrs. Hinkle of Roswell, Past Worthy Grand Matron, and Mrs. R. E. Lemon, Grand Lecturer of this district, with roses, donated by Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Burns.

All retired to the spacious dining room where the evening's entertainment was carried out, directed by Mrs. Paul Mayer.

A medley of songs was arranged by Mrs. T. E. Kelley, who presided at the piano. Past Matron Mrs. R. E. Lemon led the singing; Reading by Past Matron Mrs. C. A. McCammon; Piano solo, Mrs. B. S. Burns; Fancy dancing, Miss Helen Huppertz; Ernest Prohm, vocal solo. The men, (those who could sing) gathered around the piano and filled the room with melody for a time, but failed to win a prize. Ice cream and cake was then served by the Past Matrons and a social hour passed away quickly.

Those attending from out-of-town were: Mrs. Hinkle, Roswell; Mesdames Titworth and Rountree, Captain; Mesdames Simpser, Le Britten, Cusack, Norton and Elliott, Alamogordo.

Tuesday-Wednesday—"Goon-Goon" and "Police Call." A double feature! Something new—something different—something utterly and vitally interesting! A native picture made by Andre Roosevelt and Armand Dennis. Decidedly worth seeing.

DIAMOND DUST

Diamond Dust is wearing mourning this week on account of—well, boys, we hate to tell it, but we just must do it. When the boys left for Alamo Sunday we bid them adieu and we said: "All we want to know is how bad you're going to trim them, for we know you will come home with the bacon."

The Trojans had reinforced their team by importing both a pitcher and catcher from El Paso, and oh, boy! how they did land on us was enough to turn a prospector's whiskers green. The boys say that the El Paso pitcher didn't have anything, but he must have had something, for he fanned out one after another with the exception of Garrison and Shaw, who both hit homeruns to account for the two Carrizozo runs. Alamo made 12. They will come here again and the boys say they will get even. Better luck next time, boys! Well, we have the story off our chest, but we hated to tell it. We play at Socorro next Sunday and then Socorro will come here.

The East-Side "Charas" annexed another victory to their credit last Sunday on the west side diamond when they took White Oaks into camp by the close score of 15 to 14. Several errors were chalked up against both teams and they were hitting the ball very freely. Tony Percal lent his assistance to the Carrizozo boys, and needless to say, Tony played his usual dependable game, first starting on the mound for the locals and after being relieved by Alfredo Lopez, he took his regular position at shortstop. Leandro Vega umpired the bases.

Next Sunday, the Mesalero Apaches, who are very fond of fowl, will invade our coop and try to pluck a few feathers off the Yellow Birds. Come out and see if they succeed.

Corona was defeated by Cedarvale and according to Marion Jolly, that little town has a wonderful team.

Mrs. G. F. Pruett entertained at a birthday party in honor of her daughter Avis. There were ten guests present. Games and other forms of amusement were had, after which the hostess served refreshments.

Lincoln County's Part

Johnson and A. J. Rolland will act as advisors to the chairman of the west side.

Carrizozo alone has more than 30 organizations of various kinds, and all will be asked to assist in raising this fund. Every salaried man and woman will be asked to give at least $1.00, or as little as 50 cents will be accepted. Dances and entertainments will be given at various points and the proceeds covered into the fund. There will be no cost attached other than for actual postage, all funds to be forwarded to the county chairman and covered into the Century of Progress Commission Fund at the First National Bank, Carrizozo, N. M. and in due time, sent to Chairman Howard.

As soon as the County has been organized, and you have been assigned your task, proceed at once with your work as the money should go in within the next week or 10 days. Keep records of the donations, so that a list may be posted in the various locations, and the completed list posted at the local Post Office at Carrizozo, N. M.

Kindly act quickly and energetically and let us get this thing over. The cause is worthy and we will get what we should have had at the first Exhibition. More than 21,000,000 people visited the first Exhibition at Chicago; it is estimated that 31,000,000 will see the one this summer.

Both Carrizozo newspapers have agreed to donate free of charge whatever space we will need for the advertising and announcements.

E. M. Brickley, Chairman,
J. P. Sears, Assistant.

Railroads Prepare to Meet New Competition

Seek Traffic Lost to Buses, Planes and Autos.

Washington.—Railroads, out to recapture passenger traffic lost to buses, airplanes and private motor cars, are emphasizing speed, beauty and comfort in developing radically different types of train equipment, geared to present-day needs.

Two Western lines have produced stream line trains, one of which recently attained 104 miles per hour on a test run. Hundreds of thousands of persons, including the President of the United States, displayed "boyish enthusiasm" in these lightly-built, motor-driven trains wherever they have been on exhibition.

"Other enterprising railroads are trying to entice riders through electrification, automatic train-control, air-conditioning, and the use of motor coaches and 'rail-mobles,'" says a bulletin from the National Geographic society. "This summer American railroads are adding 700 air-cooled passenger and dining cars, doubling the number now in operation.

"Night Club" Cars.
"A New England railroad is building 'turtle-back' day coaches with ovalized bottoms and all moldings eliminated to cut air resistance. 'Night club' cars, with hostesses and music, made their appearance on Florida trains last winter, and pullmans composed entirely of individual bedrooms are now in general use. One Western road is using green window glass in club cars making desert runs, to cut down light glare and give a 'cooling' effect. Indirect lighting, reclining seats in day coaches, and radios are also making their appearance.

"The history of railroad transportation in the United States is a story of amazing development. At the outbreak of the Civil war the country had less than 31,000 miles of line, of which only about 2,000 were west of the Mississippi. It was not until February 22, 1863, that sod was turned for the first transcontinental line, on the Pacific end at Sacramento. Not until December 2 of the same year did work begin in the Mississippi valley.

"Six years later, after many delays and after 225 miles of overlapping line had been built, an agreement was reached whereby the two companies joined forces, and the gold spike which tied together the East and West was driven at Promontory, Utah (west of Corinne), on May 10, 1869.

"The railroads, indeed, constitute the key that unlocked the treasure-house of American resources. The story of the nation's rise to greatness and power is an account of a succession of frontiers.

Push Back Frontiers.
"At the beginning the frontier stopped at the Blue Ridge mountains. The turnpike and the canal finally pierced these heights and let it move on to the Alleghenies. These became an isolating influence that held the pioneers in the eastern half of the Mississippi valley almost a separate people from those on the Atlantic seaboard until the railroad builders' faith removed these mountains, as far as the flow of commerce and communication was concerned.

"In turn the Mississippi river became the frontier. What was the good of the land west of the Father of Waters if that stream remained unbridged?

"Even as late as the early eighties our people thought that it was useless to build railroads through western Minnesota and the Dakotas, arguing that the region was a desert in summer and a wilderness of snow in winter. It took Custer's campaign against

MAY BE A DIPLOMAT

According to reports in Washington, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman may be the next American minister to Ireland. She is a prominent Democrat and her home, Uplands, is the scene of many official dinners.

the Indians to persuade the public that the Northern Pacific extension beyond the Mississippi, at St. Paul, could be kept open more than five months a year.

"During the Civil war the South had much less than a third of the nation's railroads. These linked up distant communities rather than industrial centers. Comparatively few of them were strategic, whereas the North had rail connections admirably fitted for the movement of men and munitions.

"In Europe the history of railway construction has been that of roads laid down to meet the demands of traffic already there. In this country tens of thousands of miles of line have been built through virgin territory, which it was hoped would grow up, to their facilities."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(BY REV. F. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, C. 1914, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for June 10 JESUS ON THE CROSS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 27:32-50.
GOLDEN TEXT—Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith: who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God, Hebrews 12:2.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Dying for Us.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Giving His Life for Us.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Suffering on the Cross.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Calvary.

In a real sense the grand climax of the six months' lessons is reached in this one. It is not a matter of learning the lessons taught by a great teacher, or imitating the examples of a great good man, but of apprehending the atonement made by the world's Redeemer. He was made to be sin for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in him (II Cor. 5:21).

I. The Place of Crucifixion (vv. 33, 34).
They led him away to Golgotha, a hill north of Jerusalem, resembling a skull. He was crucified without the gate (Heb. 13:12). At first he was compelled to bear his own cross (John 19:17), but when physical weakness made it impossible for him to continue, they compelled Simon the Cyrenean to bear it for him (v. 32).

II. Gambling for the Clothes of the Lord (vv. 35, 36).

It was the custom for the soldiers who had charge of the crucifixion to receive the garments of the one crucified. We have here a fulfillment of Psalm 22:18, "They parted my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." What sacrifice for them to gamble for his seamless robe under the very cross where he was dying. If they had but eyes to see they could have beheld a robe of righteousness being provided in his death to cover their sinful nakedness.

III. The Accusation (v. 37).
It was customary to place over the victim on the cross his name and crime. This superscription was placed over Jesus by Pilate to vex the Jews. He was their king in absolute truth. They had long looked for him and now when he had come, this is the kind of treatment they gave him. Though they rejected him and placed a crown of thorns upon his head, the throne of his father David is his by right of the unfulfilling covenant of God to David (II Sam. 7:13-16).

IV. Two Malefactors Crucified With Him (v. 38).
We are not told who they were. Perhaps they belonged to the band of Barabbas. This again was a fulfillment of the Scriptures. "He was numbered with the transgressors" (Isa. 53:12).

V. The Dying Saviour Reviled (vv. 39-44).
He was reviled by the passers-by, the chief priests, the scribes, the elders and the very malefactors who were crucified with him. In their mockery they unwittingly spoke great truths.

1. "He saved others, himself he cannot save" (v. 42). This jest was meant to show the absurdity of Jesus' claims, but it demonstrated them and showed the reason for his suffering. He could not save himself and others so he chose to give himself to save others.

2. "If he be the king of Israel let him now come down from the cross" (v. 42). His refusal to abandon the cross established his rightful claims. The devil offered him the kingdoms of the world if he would escape the cross (Matt. 4:8-10). The very fact that he did not abandon the cross proves that he was what he claimed to be, for it was unto the cross that he came.

3. "He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him" (v. 43). His refusal to abandon the cross was to the full delight and satisfaction of God. His obedience unto death was the sacrifice which met God's full approval.

VI. The Death of Christ (vv. 45-50).

Who is sufficient to comment upon this tragedy. Let us contemplate it in adoration and wonder. So shocking was this crime that nature threw around the Son of God a shroud that the godless company could not gaze upon him. Darkness was upon the land at noonday. This darkness was the outer sign of that which hung over the Lord. He became sin for the world and the world's sin hid God's face from him. God forsook him, turned from him who had taken the sinner's place. God was dealing with sin on the innocent substitute. When the price of sin was paid he cried out with a loud voice showing that he still had vitality; that his death was not from exhaustion but by his sovereign will. He yielded up his spirit to God.

Honorable Way
We need not borrow the tools of Satan to win the victories for Jesus. Any honorable end can be reached in an honorable way. God sets no goal which has to be won by insincerity and indirection.

Where Strength Lies
"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." The vision of God unveils the lips of man. Herein lies strength for conflict with the common enemy of the praying world known as wandering thoughts.

Fashions for Juvenile Smart Set

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUMMERTIME means vacation time, which brings clothes-planning time to hand for mothers who would dress their style-conscious children fashionably and appropriately.

Since camp life plays so important a part in the modern child's life, it might be well to consider the clothes question from that point of view. Designers of juvenile sportswear declare there is an increasing tendency to feature bright color in camp and playtime apparel. Because materials are strong and sturdy is no reason why they cannot be gaily colorful and attractive.

So, the cotton broadcloths, the poplins, the gabardines and the argentine cloth which serve so admirably for children's recreation and everyday utilitarian clothes are coming out in unusually cheerful hues this season.

For youngsters who romp through woods and climb and wade and attend "gym" classes the idea of shorts, with inner bloomers that are brought up high so as not to be visible, is advocated. The newest shorts are pleated at front and back so as to give the appearance of a skirt.

After play hours, what then to wear? Why not a cunning tailored ensemble, on the order of the clever three-piece which the pretty little girl, to the left in the picture, is posing? The ensemble theme is being played up enthusiastically for children this season. Being so interchangeable with blouses and such, it is a guarantee of a well-dressed appearance for most any child at most any hour of the day. In fact, an outfit like this may be considered almost an entire wardrobe in itself. With the jacket on, this little girl's taller-of-mario blue flannel looks as modish as mother herself wears on cool days and on shopping tours. Looks nice, too, with the coat removed, for that wee button-up-the-front blouse of matching blue flat crepe is most wonderfully chic.

The older girl in the picture, who is helping little sister don her smart jacket, has on a sleeveless dress which also admits of interchangeable blouses. The one she is wearing while she poses for her photograph is a Mexican-stripe wash silk. Of course it would have to be stripes, for they are smart for everybody, old and young, this season.

Style interest in little girls' dresses is said to center around necklines and sleeves in the newer models. Which accounts for the wide pleated collar which finishes the neck of the wee frock of pale pinkish soft taffeta which the tot to the right in the group is wearing. You will note also that the sleeves are fancifully smocked. The vogue for taffeta has extended into the juvenile realm. If you prefer pastel crepes they are equally as good style for tiny folks' party frocks.

That sweet child in the foreground looks adorable in her airy-fairy frock of embroidered organdie.

WATCH NECKLINES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A change in necklines is in progress. High cut fronts are giving way to low cut fronts after the order of the charming neckline which graces the gown pictured. This stunning cafe dress is fashioned of a handsome chiffon of tulle. Its beautifully molded-to-the-figure silhouette, together with its interesting low-front neckline, make it outstanding in midsummer costume collections. Slim, long sleeves accented by three tiers of fine pleated net ruffles and a soft satin bow are intriguing details.

PLEATING IS USED QUITE EXTENSIVELY

There is much pleating in use now and it isn't all used for neckwear, although it does seem as though nothing flatter than neckwear would be found. Ruffles and frills galore are lovely on some and so absurd on others. Narrow side pleatings can, however, be worn by almost any figure, which is not true of the draped polonaise.

The time has come to speak a word in favor of brown. The season is so clearly a blue one that women have been inclined to underestimate the high style interest in brown. During the first showings of the imports for midsummer brown was impressive and something of a surprise for, by that time, women were so happy that it was a blue year.

With the interesting brown and white, brown and grey and brown and beige tones, came lovely costumes in which yellow and brown were pleasantly associated.

Brown Still in Picture as Nifty Summer Color

While it is true that navy and black are leaders in spring fashions for daytime, it becomes increasingly apparent that brown is to be reckoned with. It is an important color by itself and especially in prints, particularly printed crepes.

The brown prints are featured in separate frocks, in jacket costumes and also in long coat ensembles and redingotes, and it's interesting to observe the definite favor shown combinations of plain and printed crepes, featuring brown shades.

A favorite version is the jacket costume with monochrome skirt, worn with printed jacket and bodice, and costumes of this sort are attractive when done in polka dots, dots in dime or quarter size. Brown with white is then the favored combination.

Straw Cloth Appears
Straw cloth is a new material that has all the earmarks of novelty with the more stable benefits of practicality. It consists of cellophane woven on artificial silk.

Cowboy Sorry He Tried to Lasso Hawk on Rail

Dewet, Texas.—It will be a long time before Zelma O'Neill, farmer-cowboy of this community, again tackles a hawk. He is laid up at his home because of an encounter he had recently with one of these birds.

While riding through his pasture, O'Neill saw a hawk on a fence post and decided to rope the bird. Unwinding his reins he threw the loop and caught the hawk by one of its legs.

This was the signal for a desperate battle in which O'Neill came out very much the loser. The hawk flew at him, fastening one of its long, sharp claws into the man's knee and the other in to the horse's neck. The horse plunged in terror and agony and O'Neill fell off. The horse kicked him on the other knee.

The hawk still clung to him, having in the meantime loosened the rope from its leg. The bird clawed great gashes upon the man's body and this pain, together with that caused by the kick from the horse, made him unconscious. When he revived the horse and hawk had disappeared. He managed to drag himself home where his wife put him to bed.

Remains of Early Race Are Found in Tennessee

Washington.—Excavations of Indian mounds on the Shiloh battlefield in southern Tennessee, being made by Smithsonian Institution, already have revealed an old temple, about 30 smaller buildings and about 30 skeletons.

The mound group is located at the crest of a bluff, overlooking the Tennessee river. On three sides it is invulnerable to attack because of sheer cliffs. On the fourth there is a slow incline, with evidences of an ancient pallisade fence.

Dr. Frank Roberts, ethnologist, believes it was built by the proto-Muskogean race, a highly cultured people who populated the Gulf states when the white men arrived.

Cyclist Finds Africans Just Ordinary Folks

Washington.—African tribesmen are ordinary folks who work every day and enjoy a good joke, according to James C. Wilson, former college instructor.

Wilson, who motorecycled 3,000 miles across Africa, declared he saw no savages and few wild animals.

"It is time," he said, "that some one told the truth about the Africans. They are just like people all over the world. When you get to know them, they are just like neighbors."

Among Wilson's trophies is a drum hollowed from a tree trunk, and wool blankets woven and embroidered by natives.

Guillotiner of 300 Will Retire, Rich

Marseilles, France.—Anatole Deblier, the national executioner, guillotined his three hundredth criminal at dawn recently, a post office robber, Camille Maucher. Deblier, who is paid 7,500 francs (about $300) for each guillotining, said he was preparing to retire soon with a comfortable fortune. Meanwhile, he said, he was rushing to completion his invention of a new "fool-proof" guillotine. He refused to divulge its specifications.

Gives Real Facts About Life in Russia

Writer Paints Ghastly Picture of Soviet Republic.

New York.—Eugene Lyons, American correspondent in Russia for six years, brings back a picture of life in the Soviet republic that contradicts the statements of American social planners who point to Russia as an example of successful planning, and contented regimentation. In the Cosmopolitan, he says:

"I have seen Russia's new factories and power stations, new cities and vastly improved armies. . . On the other hand I saw the hundred and sixty-four million Soviet human being in their overcrowded homes and foul barracks, millions of them in exile, other millions trudging miserably in a direction they did not wish to go, all of them holding on desperately to food cards and passports. Then the ghosts of those whose lives had gone to fatten the plump statisticians crowded in upon my mind and clamored for a place in the futile accounting."

Executions, Lyons says, are not referred to as such in Russia. He was once present in the chief prosecutor's office when there was some discussion about three men sentenced to death for speculating in bread.

"All three have been sentenced to death," the prosecutor started to say "death." Then he changed his words. "I mean, the highest measure of social defense."

Before returning to America, Lyons crossed Europe from end to end, finding at every frontier barriers of bayonets, tariffs, censorship and spy systems.

"War," he says, "is again being idealized—the horrors of the last war are being carefully concealed. Psychologically, at least, Europe is prepared for war."

"The danger of conflict between nation and nation is in the forefront of the picture. Behind that, lying the whole view, is the danger of a war between class and class. It cuts athwart all boundaries."

SYNOPSIS

Stephen Drake, with his four-year-old son, is rescued from a blizzard by Jim Flynn, big timber operator, whom Drake has robbed. Flynn forgives the theft, and Drake, until his death, impresses on the boy, Steve, the debt they owe "Old Jim." Twenty years later, Steve meets "Young Jim" Flynn, his benefactor's son. Sent by Old Jim, in expectation through an accident in which Kate, his daughter, is temporarily blinded, to take charge of the company's—the Polaris—woods operations, the youth is indulging in a drunken spree. Hoping to do something for Old Jim, Steve hastens to the company's headquarters, finding Franz plotting against the Flynn interests. Worshipping Franz in a fit of rage, the Polaris crew assumes that Drake is Flynn's son, and he takes charge, as "Young Jim." A photograph of Kate, which Steve finds, intrigues him. Impulsively, Steve gains the friendship of LaFane, woods scout. Franz discovers Drake's impersonation. Threatened with disclosure, Steve accuses Franz of attempting to murder him, exhibiting evidence, and the man dare not act. Steve sends LaFane to find Young Jim and show him up. Steve wins the friendship of MacDonald, who owns timber land vital to the Flynn interests and the Suptman gives him an option for Polaris to buy his timber. Knowing of the giving of the option, and wanting the timber for a rival company, Franz plans to put Steve out of the way, but the latter outwits him.

CHAPTER VII—Continued

He gazed that significantly and the Laird stared at him in sharp query. "My guess would be this: that Flynn tried to buy from you and had gotten nowhere, that he knew his son was a worthless bum, that he found this fellow who makes a good enough appearance and who surely is a darned good fisherman and sent him in here with the deliberate purpose of winning your confidence and friendship."

"Ye think so? Ye think that, lad? . . . I wonder . . ." An irate gleam commenced to show in the Laird's eyes. "Queer happenin's, queer things. Ah, I'm sick of it all! Age rides heavy on th' shoulders! A great relief I felt when I signed his option but if he's gone, ut's gone w' him 'nd I've got th' timber back again! If Jim Flynn's a smart trickster, no more will I have to do w' him but I've th' property back 'noo 'nd just when I'd commenced to reckon on other investments."

It was Franz's opportunity, his hour snatched from what happened to have been defeat yesterday. Cleverly he played his cards. Each word he spoke was well calculated. They walked back to the Laird's where the old man paced the room while Franz listened in evident sympathy and waited. . .

"You Want Me?" She Asked So Simply and Directly That It Quite Took His Breath.

His waiting was rewarded and, at dawn, he started for Shoestring himself, an option in his possession. He presented his document to the register of deeds and watched that worthy scratch his head as he read it.

"Well, that's the second option on that description!" he declared.

"Second?" Franz's voice was shrill.

"Sure. Young Jim Flynn was in yesterday with it. He waited around town until this noon for a telegram."

"But . . . Why, he couldn't . . . He's . . ."

But ghosts do not transact business. He had been thwarted again but his agile mind grasped one shred of hope.

"His was a seven-day option. wasn't it?"

"Ye. Dated Thursday."

"Record this, then. It's for fifteen."

He went out of the building and walked slowly to the edge of town, throwing himself down under a tree and trying to plan. Telegrams had been exchanged between Shoestring and Chicago relating to this transaction. Now, if a man could know what instructions those messages contained . . .

Down at the railroad station, which was also the telegraph office, a figure stood for long in the deep shadow of the building. After a time, seeing no one, hearing no one, a man slipped an iron bar beneath a window sash, put his weight on it and heard the catch give with a snap and a tinkle. Slipping into the room he closed the window cautiously behind him.

He found Steve's message, signed with the single word, Jim; and after further searching, located the reply:

"God's in his heaven, all's well with the world. The option is grand news but indication of what you have done with Dad's trust brings the greatest happiness I have ever known. Twenty-five thousand currency will be delivered to Good-Bye Tuesday. Have team at Shoestring Monday noon."

"Kate."

And in the little camp beyond the Mad Woman two men lay under the arching stars and talked on and on.

"You've got it to do," LaFane said again and again. "You can do it; you must do it. In less than a week, now, you'll be as fit as you ever were. . . . And you can and you must; you can and you must!"

The boy beside him trembled a little.

CHAPTER VIII

Even after he had taken up the many details that were awaiting his decision Steve re-read that telegram from Kate Flynn and although one phase of her reaction gave him a feeling of vast achievement, another factor gave him pronounced dismay.

If LaFane failed to do for Young Jim what Steve had hoped he might do, Kate's heart would be broken. If he were making progress, Steve had no word of it and each day that was added to the absence of the two reduced his hope by just so much.

Drake knew that the time for his unmasking was at hand. Beyond a doubt Old Jim would send an attorney to close the timber deal and the chances were that any lawyer or agent so trusted would have had dealings with Polaris in the past, and would know Young Jim well.

When Steve re-entered his cabin on the return from town to find it in a sorry state of disarrangement he experienced a moment of great surprise. Then Franz's words at the Laird's came back. He had boasted that Steve had no evidence against him to prove that he had attempted murder.

Sure enough; the shotgun was gone. He was chagrined at not having taken more precautions. However, he told himself, the threat which he had held over Franz was no longer of major importance. The man could tell his story of having discovered the genuine Young Jim elsewhere in the country almost any time, now; it would make little difference to any person but Kate.

Early on a Sunday morning McNally harnessed his light team and started for town to meet the arrival due the next day.

Drake would have driven to the railroad himself but the fire hazard continued to increase and if a burning started he wanted to be on the job; furthermore, he was hoping that LaFane would come, either with Young Jim or bearing word of him. He must be present to have at the earliest possible moment whatever news might be forthcoming.

Had he gone to Shoestring himself he might have observed things that old McNally missed.

For one thing, he might have seen Franz idling within the building, watching as Mac escorted the arrival toward the waiting wagon. He was even close enough to hear McNally say as he looked down at the brief case which was lifted in query:

"Oh, that'll be all right! Jim'll likely take it right down to the Laird's. Anyhow, we got a good safe 'n th' store to lock it up in."

After the team trotted up into the town to have McNally's purchases loaded, Franz hailed an automobile, parleyed with the driver and was driven northward on the Good-Bye road. The car could take him only a dozen miles before the route entered swamp country that could be handily traveled only by teams, but it completed that much of the trip before McNally had more than a start on the way home. From there Franz went afoot, headed toward Good-Bye lake. He swam the lower river and, at night, rolled himself in a blanket taken from a pack-sack cached beneath a well-concealed canoe.

Until the arrival in the country of Steve Drake, Franz's first plan, which had taken many months in the fashioning, had progressed steadily. Once upon a time, he had sought to attach himself to Old Jim Flynn, render the services of which he was capable and profit therefrom, as most men profit. His impulse then had been rather decent; he was willing to give value for what he received.

Then Kate Flynn had come to Good-Bye with her father. In the beginning she appeared to like him but her intuition had it that the man was not what he appeared to be on the surface, that he was not one, even, for her father to depend on.

When this became clear to Franz, what decency had been in his character before was consumed by the fire of his greed and ruthlessness. Nothing remained for him in his relationship with the Flyns except gain.

But he did not betray himself in the beginning. He appeared to take his failure to win Kate's heart with as much grace as a man can. He pretended a continuing friendship with Polaris until his connections with rival timber owners were perfected. Then he had commenced his campaign to undermine Old Jim; had, by his land deals, drawn a strangling boundary of ownership around the outfit and, with so much accomplished, stepped into the open and sought to turn even the Flynn crew against the company.

Everything seemed to be going well.

The arrival of the man for whom he was to form such an antipathy frustrated the success of that scheme. His hope of sending Jim Flynn tobogganing into ruin so his holdings might go to add to that growing empire of timberlands which Franz's principals desired was quickly cooled by the new signs of life about the job which followed the arrival of an outstanding leader.

This was bad enough but, added to these other failures which could be laid only at the feet of the one who posed as a Flynn, was the item of his hold-over Mary Wolf. When Steve Drake aided the girl in her departure from the squalid little farm home where she had been so conveniently located, Franz was shaken by an urge for vengeance which knew no bounds.

He tried to kill, in a coward's way, and failed. He tried blackmail, a coward's weapon, and failed again. At MacDonald's, because of his regard for the old Scot's nature, he was forced to stand by and see the last plan he had laid for personal gain go crashing down.

But he was no quitter, this Franz! And when he read those telegrams, at Shoestring, hope came to life again. Money was coming into the country; money in a quantity which was in itself disturbing to consider. But that money meant more than the possession of so many thousands. It renewed his faith that some day he would be the agent for a transaction involving the transfer of the much coveted MacDonald property.

He had unmasked Steve Drake for the Laird at the proper moment. If that option could be caused to lapse he felt certain that the eccentric old Scot would refuse to renew a deal with one who had hoodwinked him or with a corporation which had had such a one in its service. So, the option must lapse.

Steve was in the store when McNally drove into the clearing. Mac had planned to spend the night at the last farmhouse between headquarters and town and Drake, after breakfast, had busied himself there to be present at the arrival.

But his mind was not wholly on that event, important though it was. It persisted in going back to an earlier incident of the day.

He had awakened as usual when the chorus of bird songs commenced to swell, dressed and stepped outside with an ejaculation of surprise, because Mary Wolf was seated on a log beside his threshold, elbows on knees, waiting with stolid patience, apparently for his appearance.

"Hullo, Mary! When and where'd you drop from?"

"Camp. Jus' now," she said.

"Something wrong? Has Franz been after you again? I haven't seen him in days and I'd wondered about you."

"Nothing wrong. Franz don't come by our camp."

"Well, if nothing's wrong . . . What brings you here again, Mary?"

"You want me?" she asked so simply and directly that it quite took his breath.

"Want you? Why . . . What . . . That is, I don't know what you're driving at," he evaded lamely.

The girl stirred slowly on the log.

"My father, he die bye-'n-bye," she said. "Not long, now. He gets worse. He breathes fast . . . So." She panted. "I should not go before he is dead. He is old; sick. At school they tol' us we should stay by old people. Take care of 'em. That is right. I do."

"But he die pretty soon. I can go. You're Jim," she said, "you treat me good. You are the only young man who ever treats me good. You say to me, you go to me like your men say and do by white women. You are . . . you are . . ." She hesitated, seeming to search for the proper word. Then, successful, spoke it with as much emphasis, it is likely as she had ever placed on an utterance.

"You are kind."

Steve laughed, deeply embarrassed.

"I say what is you are kind. You live alone. I can cook good. They tol' me at school I can cook good. I not like some. Some girls don't work. Me, I work. My father die. I come here and cook for you. I do it all. Sweep, Wash. Sew. I be your girl."

Red swept into Steve's cheeks. She searched his face with a probing gaze, almost as a faithful dog might, expecting largess.

"When Old Jim come, I go away. When white girls come, I go away. When you go to town, me I stay by camp. I think everything when I got bark-and-split cedar. What you say, Jim?"

"Now, what did a man say to a proposal such as this?"

Steve Drake said nothing at all. He had not a word at his command for that interval. In Mary's plan was nothing unclear, nothing offensive. It was childishly natural. He had been kind to her, probably the first man of his race and years whom she had known and who had not looked upon her as a creature of utility, and in her gratitude, she was offering all that she possessed.

"Why, Mary," he began with a helpless feeling as he realized the futility of attempting to make her understand either how deeply her offer touched him or the impossibility of his acceptance. "You . . . I don't know what to say to make you know that I am your friend. But, even so, you can't come here and stay. Understand that? I can't have you here."

Two Gallup students at the University of Arizona have been elected recently to important offices in the Arizona chapter of the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity. David J. Jones has been named vice president of the organization, James Guy, sentinel.

H. L. Royden of Phoenix, and Mattie Jacobson of Miami, were low bidders on two road projects. Royden bid $9,500.00 for grading, draining and oiling roadway at the Sunshine underpass on U. S. Highway 66, sixteen miles west of Winslow. Jacobson bid $18,670 for the widening of .07 of a mile of pavement within the city limits of Globe on U. S. Highway 60 and 180.

The Arizona highway commission is considering the designation of Nogales as the southern terminus of the proposed new U. S. Highway 87. Since the commission adopted a resolution several weeks ago recommending that the Coronado Trail and a road to Douglas from the trail be designated as U. S. highway 87, there have been, it was said at the highway department, many protests.

Streams in New Mexico are all very low for this time of the year and prospects for sufficient irrigation water to go through the season are not good. In some sections there is a shortage of irrigation water. Irrigated crops are in good condition, and because of the unusual warm spring weather are far advanced for this early in the season. Prospects for an excellent fruit crop continues good over the state.

Faced with the task of administering the sales tax for the state, retail merchants formed the New Mexico Merchants' Association and unanimously adopted a schedule of rates on the tax now in effect at Albuquerque, Roswell and other cities. Morris Ocoff, Albuquerque merchant, was named chairman of the organization, and C. H. Reston, assistant secretary of the Albuquerque Chamber of Commerce, was named secretary.

If the plan of allocating the 20 mills tax money advocated by Byron O. Beal, state tax chairman, is followed, it will seriously impair public health work in New Mexico, according to Dr. J. R. Earp, state director of public health. Allocation advocated by Beal would give the schools six mills, state five mills, municipalities four mills and would include all county levies within the present five mill limit allowed for general county purposes.

Fred McAlpin of Kingman was elected governor of the forty-third district Rotary International, comprising Arizona and Nevada, Calif., at the closing session of the annual district conference at Flagstaff. The conference adopted a resolution that the forty-third district nominate Karl Barfield, retiring district governor, for election to the board of directors of Rotary International at the convention to be held at Detroit in June.

A bronze tablet placed at Lookout Point, Yarnell Hill, honoring the late Charles G. Small, former deputy state highway engineer and sometimes called "the father of Arizona highways," has been stolen, according to Earl V. Miller, president of the Arizona section, American Society of Civil Engineers. The 18 by 24-inch tablet, which carried a bas-relief of the late engineer, was formally placed and dedicated last November 14 by the engineers' group.

First copies of "Arizona in Literature," by Mary G. Boyer, went on sale at book stores and were received by subscribers in Flagstaff recently. The volume, according to the publishers, should enjoy a wide sale. According to Miss Boyer, the book is the only compilation of material restricted to one state. Running to a little short of 600 pages, it includes fiction, biography, humor, folk-lore, and criticism by Arizona writers or material about Arizona by out-of-state authors.

Conditions were never better for the welders of rod and line, Elliott Barker, New Mexico game warden, said in issuing a last-minute appeal to fishermen to be careful with fires in the forests and mountain areas of the state. Water conditions are better than ever and roads leading to the streams are in excellent condition. There are also plenty of fish to be caught in virtually every stream in the state. Because of the extremely dry condition of the forests, fishermen are warned to be extremely careful with fires.

EDITORIAL COLUMN

Shades of Reed and Cannon

For many years, the Democratic party has cried out against what they termed, and justly so in many instances, the Czardom of the Speakers Reed and Cannon of the Republican party.

They cried Dictatorship, Gag-Rule, Steam - Rollerism on the part of these Speakers who have long ago passed to the great beyond.

But advices from Washington on June 2 convey information of a far worse Dictatorial condition on the part of Speaker Rainey than was ever credited to either of the two men of the Republican party.

With but one sweep of the power in him vested, he broke the small but militant filibuster of the Republican minority, but its instigators were content with the fact that they had pinned on the Speaker the very act that his party had so condemned as Czar Rule, cut-throat and dictatorial.

They now have the solid claim that the Big Club in the hands of the speakership they once so vigorously condemned with other Speakers who were Republicans, they have adopted the same methods in order to seek Autocratic Power for Protection. To make his Czarism better understood, the Speaker is now using a dictatorial power which his party denounced when the Republican Speakers went but a small distance to what the great Rainey is now going—but it makes a difference who does these things.

The Big "I" policy has been in vogue for the past year, and the Dictatorial System will grow greater as time goes by.

In other words, the "New Deal," don't you know, which means that the steam roller ruling of the present Speaker sinks past actions of Dictatorship into insignificance.

No Trick Gadgets

No matter what the possibilities for sensational publicity Ford has never resorted to stunt features to sell his cars. Freakish body designs on an automobile are just as speculative as freakish designs on houses. Millions of dollars were spent to sell American Motorists on free wheeling. Ford declined to put it on his cars. The Ford purchaser gets a proven car both in style and operation. There are no trick gadgets to catch the fancy and later on prove to be mistakes. The Ford policy of continuous improvement is well shown in this year's car. It is the best car the Ford Motor Company has ever built.

SUCH IS LIFE—Doesn't Sound Like It!

By Charles Sughrue

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

INITIALS

"I have fallen naturally into the way of initials," said Farmer, Corn-tassel, "especially when I tell my troubles."

ADOPTED

Tom—My ancestors were all people of brains. Mary—You must have been dila-hered.

Alcoholic Finance

"How's the dispensary getting along in Crimston Gulch?" "All right," answered Cactus Joe. "We've got a pretty good system. When the boys have spent all their money in the 'spence' the boss puts the money in the bank. The gang from Snake Ridge robs the bank. Then we Gulchers high-jack the money from the Riders and business starts all over again."

Enterprise in the Gulch

"How's the new dispensary coming along?" "Pretty well," answered Cactus Joe, "but we Gulchers are going to see that it prospers still more. You see, we've got to meet competition by nearby towns." "Have you any ideas?" "Yes. My proposition is to build a second story, hire an orchestra and put in a dance hall."

The Wrong Location

A man was eagerly fingering the dial on his radio, when suddenly he cried out, as a twinge of pain struck him: "Man—Gad! I believe I've got sci-atfca. His Wife—There you go. I don't know why you keep bothering with those foreign stations. You never understand them when you get them."

Big Idea

"What is your opinion of money?" "It's the big idea of civilization," said Mr. Dustin Stax. "Is it only an idea?" "Oh no. Some of its most practical forms are its humblest expressions. For instance, a plugged nickel goes right on buying things, while millions of dollars may be found to exist only in imagination."

CHANCE TO WIN

Mrs. Brown—Clarence DeBroke has had dreadful luck at bridge lately. Mrs. Smith (sager)—You don't say? Dear me! I must invite him out before it changes.

Missed His Pal

The director of a city zoo was on his vacation when he received the following communication from his assistant: "Everything all right, except that the chimpanzee seems to be pining for a companion. What shall we do until you return?"

He Got It—Bad

Jake—That dollar you gave me yesterday was counterfeit. What do you mean by that? Jack—Well, didn't you say to me "I want a dollar and I want it bad?"

Managed Emotion

"Do you ever lose your temper in debate?" "Not if I can help it," answered Senator Sorghum. "It's always liable to weaken your argument if you permit a righteous indignation to sound like a personal grievance."

Foremost Words

Speed Fiend (as he slowed down a bit)—Gosh! Don't you feel glad you're alive? Timid Passenger—Glad isn't the word—I'm amazed.

Branding Irons Tell Story of Romantic Period.

Alpine, Texas—Branding irons that burned claiming marks in the hides of yearlings during the last century lie in historical importance at Sul Ross Teachers' college here. Cattle rustling, drives over long trails to northern grazing lands and markets and all the color of pioneering in the Big Bend country of west Texas are connoted in these curiously twisted pieces of iron.

They were collected from over the Pecos river country by Henry T. Fletcher, Brewster county banker and ranchman, and presented to the West Texas Historical and Scientific society, of which he is president.

One Used Ninety-Six Years. Among the 60 irons is the "G" from the H. I. Kokornot ranch, one of the oldest brands in Texas. It was registered in 1839 and the mark has been used continuously for the last 60 years.

OBSERVATION By LEONARD A. BARRETT

One of the most convenient things about a home is a small instrument attached to a wall inside of which is a filament which is very sensitive to the temperature. When the dial is set at 70 degrees Fahrenheit and the temperature of the room reaches that point, the filament moves in one direction, thus disconnecting the electric current which shuts off the fuel supply at the furnace. When the temperature falls below the 70 mark, the process is reversed. That little instrument is called a thermostat.

It Comes Natural

discovered that the crack came at about the time the furnace needed a fresh supply of fuel. While this incident would have passed unnoticed by the majority of night watchmen, it started Mr. Spencer to thinking. Upon closer observation he discovered that the sharp noise came from the center of the furnace door when it was hotter than the outer rim, and also snapped again when the cooling process set in. He worked at this idea, with the final reward, after years of hard toil, of having made the first thermostat.

Some claim that the power of observation is a special gift with which only a few people are endowed. On the contrary it is something which can easily be cultivated. Not only are the things we look for nearest to us, but the opportunities for personal advancement and happiness are also all around us, but it takes an observing eye to see them. The same law holds good in the world of emotional and spiritual values. The blessings of friendship and love are frequently very near us, but we fail to see them because we have not developed the art of observation.

Texas Goats Will Have Beauty Contest in July

Rock Springs, Texas—A beauty contest for goats will be held by the board of trade of the Brewers of America during the Texas Angora Goat Raisers' association meeting here July 5 to 6. Texas ranchmen were asked to cooperate in the contest to find the most beautiful goat.

The Household By Lydia Le Baron Walker

THE homemaker who has not inherited money has two ways of acquiring it. One is to make money and the other is to save it. Each way has its advantages and also its disadvantages. There is something stimulating about being paid for one's labor, but it is not always possible to have time, energy for extra work, or money-making ability. On the other hand there is satisfaction in realizing that by careful management and thrift without stinting, small sums of money are accumulating. There is in this none of the flair of business, but also there are not the perplexing problems to be coped with which commercial enterprises, however small, always have. Also there is no lurking apprehension that home duties may have been neglected, or at least slighted, by busy-ing oneself with work entirely outside home requirements.

There certainly are points in favor of, and against each of the methods for the homemaker. It is for her to decide which she wishes most to do, make money or save it, and which she can be most successful in. It is probable that as far as the wish is concerned, the pendulum would swing far in favor of earning with most women. It is more than probable, however, that managing and running a home, even with the aid of delicatessen foods and cramped living quarters, plus application to business will be too taxing to strength. Men, who are recognized as having stronger physiques, do not attempt such duplex strain upon their energies.

When Well Fitted. The woman who has business aptitude who excels in making or creating a demand for wares, or who has pronounced ability in management of affairs plus business connections with co-workers, competitors and purchasers, is generally able to lead a business life and run a home by being a working housewife. She can expect to give up many of the social pleasures of entertaining and being entertained and still have a life which leads to such things as home life. She becomes Queen of a household, giving orders as well as a Queen of an institution. She manages many of the joys of house and homemaking. She is a wage earner in a large or small way. She can buy and pay for service and needed things. Such a life may be one of things of necessity.

The woman who must save to acquire money gets home above things. It is only when she feels the reward of success in her devotion to it that she wins out. It is payment for her in dollars and cents. It is these she most thirstily accumulate without becoming niggardly. Some women are best fitted to acquire money by saving rather than by earning it. Regarding Homemakers. To be competent and at the same time good-natured is an unusual combination. It is important for the expert homemaker to appreciate this and to be on her guard against allowing her annoyance to show when she sees those who should know how to do a thing well, being careless about it. This is really one of the most difficult things a fine homemaker has to contend with. She has worked hard to find the best ways to do the work, and has found what seems the most expert. To be competent means just that—that the person knows the best way of performing tasks which fall to her lot to do, and that she does them thus expertly. The competent homemaker is the successful one as far as her management and work are concerned. To add good-humor to this is the final touch of a great nature. To be careless and good-natured is a common combination. Such a person lets work slide off her shoulders with a laugh, not heeding its quality. The home is run in a hap-hazard way, sometimes well, but more often shiftlessly. To get the work out of the way somehow, anyhow, seems satisfying to her, and since it does not bother her, she fails to appreciate it may be disturbing to those of her household. Her saving grace is her even disposition. This should not be belittled, however much one could wish her work was as fine as her disposition.

Chic Coat Model

An unusual chic coat is this model of black cloth with the intriguing square collar designed by Stein and Stone. The collar is of silver fox fur and fits with its interesting shape.

Latin Language. All Latinians use the same language, whether they live in Britania's Canada, Canada's Canada, America's Alaska or America's Greenland. Some of the words are written and spoken in several different ways, each way having its own meaning.

Two Big American Fortunes United

When John Mortimer Schiff and Edith Baker were married the other day in New York two of the greatest fortunes in the United States were united. John is the son of the late Mortimer Schiff, half of whose fortune, or about $15,000,000, he inherited. Edith will some day receive a large part of the $75,000,000 estate of her grandfather, the late George F. Baker, banker. Besides this the young groom and bride are good looking, healthy and popular.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—President Roosevelt's determination to advise congress as it leaves for home after the current session, of some of the things that he wishes to present for its consideration next January has injected a new factor into the forthcoming political campaign.

Most of the careful observers here think his maneuver was politically smart. They take the view that he actually has presented to the country and the voters the general outline of his future legislative program in order that he can have something of a mandate given the representatives and senators who are chosen in this fall's elections.

I haven't seen any signs yet that will indicate how the Republicans and other anti-Roosevelt forces will attempt to meet this new factor, but it is quite apparent they will force debate upon many of the projects of the New Deal that have already been enacted into law, as well as the embryo plans contained in his late messages. Some leading thinkers around Washington have suggested that Mr. Roosevelt is taking advantage of the natural attacks that will be promoted by the opposition in order to ascertain for himself whether he has gone far enough with his social reform movements. It seems there can be no doubt that he will be in a position to know the temper of the country after the voters have heard his various New Deal items discussed. And, it is being suggested almost in the same breath that if the voters strike down many of the administration wheelhorses and those who have stood by the New Deal, the administration will not press some of the more far-reaching social legislation that Mr. Roosevelt mentioned in the series of messages lately sent to congress.

Examining the proposals, such as old age pensions, unemployment insurance, revision of NRA principles relating to minimum wages to meet practical instead of theoretical conditions and several others, one can hardly escape the conclusion that only the submission of them at this time when they will become fodder for campaign debate will enable the country to know its own mind. In other words, as I see the picture, if the country as a whole wants such far-reaching changes in its laws, it will show it by sending proponents of such proposals to seats in congress.

I have heard some discussion, however, to the effect that in taking the bold step of giving congress advance information of his thoughts, Mr. Roosevelt was seeking at the same time to present a more complete picture of his New Deal. By so doing, of course, he naturally can expect that proponents of the reform ideas will have something more to use in advocating retention of the changes. They will not be in the dark as to what the future holds. Many of them will have added confidence, especially if they have become a bit shaky about the course that the President is following. At any rate, if the Democrats emerge from the fall elections with anything like their present strength, the congress that meets in January, 1935, will be as tractable, or more so, than the present one. Anyone can see the President would be unable to put over his New Deal without an obedient congress, hence he is staking that need, too, by disclosing plans in advance.

It is not too much to say that there has been a tremendous stiffening of backbone in congress in the last several weeks. It has been more pronounced, I believe, than at any time since Mr. Roosevelt took over the reins. So there might possibly be some trouble brewing on Capitol Hill. This condition is regarded by some as being the more clearly discernible because the President frankly said he did not urge enactment of his proposals at this session.

There has been no secret about the fact, around here, that Mr. Roosevelt wanted to get congress out of town at the earliest possible date. I have heard it suggested even that he had hoped he could get the leaders to bring about an adjournment before the silver question got out of hand. But that desire was lost, if he entertained such hope. He has had to swallow some silver legislation which, it is quite apparent, he does not like. Political expediency made it necessary.

No one here has been able to explain just why the silverites have been able to muster so much strength. There are only seven silver states, and from the political standpoint, it is to be assumed that they cannot wield the power that is inherent in legislation affecting the more populous areas. But the silver bloc has persisted in its efforts, has been recalcitrant in many ways, and it never was licked completely. As far as I am concerned, I cannot see where it is going to be of any particular help. But the silver advocates tell me I am wrong, and, whatever else may be said, their views forced Mr. Roosevelt into a corner where he had to take a small dose of silver medicine. It was easy to see a week or so ago that if the President had been able to stall off the silverites a little longer, he would have succeeded in getting an adjournment before he was compelled to agree that the country's money should be backed by 25 per cent of silver coin or bullion. Financial sharpshooters assure me that actually the legislation on silver will do nothing more than raise the price temporarily to those who have silver to sell.

Borah's Outbreak

Senator Borah's recent outbreak on the President's proposal for authority to negotiate reciprocal tariff agreements with foreign nations is typical of the dangers confronting the administration in a session where adjournment is too long delayed. Senator Borah, though a Republican and a member of the minority in congress, has a strong following in congress and throughout the country. When he arises in his place, therefore, and challenges the administration, it urges the country to return to constitutional government and says there is "a niche alongside of Washington and Lincoln" for a brave leader to preserve a free government—when Senator Borah makes that challenge, a good many persons are going to ask, whither are we going? The Borah speech was such a ringing call for clear thinking that I believe his concluding paragraphs are worthy of recording for further dissemination:

"We have had emergencies before, have had more than one hour of peril. The Constitution has been sufficient and efficient in all instances. And now, of all times, we should show our faith in, and our devotion to, our form of government. Now, more than at any other time in our history, we should by word and act demonstrate the faith which made this Republic, and which will preserve it. "In the midst of world turmoil, Washington pinned his faith to Constitutional democracy. That steadfast soul never wavered, never doubted. In the midst of civil war, Lincoln declared that the government of the people, for the people, and by the people should not perish from the earth. There is a niche alongside of these two immortal defenders of free government for the brave American who in his place of power accepts the challenge of these apostles of terror and fanaticism, of these enemies, avowed enemies of free government and of personal liberty, and against all comers declares his faith in the efficiency and the worth of the republican institutions and his determination to maintain and preserve them in all of their integrity at any cost and at all hazards."

It is to be noted that Senator Borah made no reference to any individual now entrusted with power. His challenge was to the New Deal in its entirety, according to the opinions that I have heard expressed. From many directions, I have heard views that the Borah speech probably would arouse more fight among opponents of the New Deal than anything that yet has happened.

"Ding" Hits Snag

The inability of some government officials to carry out assignments given them by President Roosevelt, as a result of overlapping of authority or assumption of power by others under the complexities of the present governmental setup, has begun to attract attention. There are numerous instances that can be cited, but lately I encountered one that appears to me to be typical.

Mr. Roosevelt brought J. N. Darling, who is probably one of the greatest cartoonists of our day, to Washington as chief of the biological survey. Mr. Darling, whose signature "Ding" is known far and wide, is a zealot in his desire to restore game birds and animals to the numbers of earlier years. The biological survey is a unit of the Department of Agriculture. Funds with which Mr. Darling was to acquire waste land, timber, swamps and swall, were to come from the vast appropriation managed by Secretary Ickes of the Department of the Interior. There was to have been $25,000,000, and Mr. Darling said when he came to Washington that he believed a splendid job could be done with that sum. He proceeded upon recommendations of a Presidential commission to make plans for acquisition of the necessary lands and was moving at a steady pace when, lo! he learned that Mr. Ickes had declined to make the funds available as planned.

Numerous conferences followed. Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, and Mr. Darling were said to have figuratively went on each other's shoulder. They tried to find some way to get the money transferred so that the work could go on and, I understand, did get $1,500,000 made available from somewhere in the various alphabetical organizations. In the meantime, I am told, Secretary Ickes was determined to have his own inspection made of lands proposed to be acquired, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Roosevelt had named a commission for the specific purpose of locating the sites, etc. Also, in the meantime, it has been disclosed that the original $25,000,000 has been "earmarked" for several other propositions.

As to the Perversity of Inanimate Objects

A well-known writer was found one morning by his family when they came down to breakfast, groveling on the floor beneath the sideboard, writes Evelyn Sharp, British novelist in the Manchester Guardian.

"I am looking for my piece of bacon," he explained when, although accustomed to his curious temperament, they asked for an explanation. This story was told me in illustration of the absent-mindedness of a charming man of letters—there was, I may add, no piece of bacon under the sideboard when they looked for it—but to me it bears a different interpretation. On this occasion I do not think he was absent-minded at all. I think he was wrestling with the devil that habitually enters into some common object of the household and whisks it away into space. It is a devil that beats us all; and I have no difficulty in believing that the piece of bacon really leaped from his plate and shot under the sideboard and then disappeared. No one who has possessed a pair of scissors or spectacles, a pencil, or a knife, or a piece of india rubber, or an ear trumpet is in a position to doubt his assertion.

"Reason, I admit, is against this theory of the capacity for locomotion shown by the inanimate; but I do not pretend that there is any reason in the matter. I am stating facts, and everybody knows it is a fact that the pen you put down on the table a moment ago simply vanished while you walked across the room to consult a book, and then, when you had wasted several minutes in turning the room upside down in a vain search for it, reappeared where you originally left it. The pen may be a needle or a hammer or a bunch of keys or a pipe; its ability to disappear and reappear without human agency is the same in each case.

(The only exception to this rule is provided by the box of matches, which requires no supernatural aids to disappearance.) Most mysterious of all is the itinerary of the object that vanishes. Where does my fountain pen go when my back is turned and before it returns to where I left it? If I knew that I suppose I should know how to exorcise permanently the devil that enters into the inanimate object and gets the better of me every time. "I do not really want to exorcise him. He is almost the last relic in a material age of those things that cannot be explained away by reason or logic or science. The magic of the inanimate is a thing to be accepted, not a thing to be proved. I can tell you it is there, but if you do not see it I cannot make you believe me. The best kind of truth is like that, as every child can tell you who knows that, as soon as he goes to sleep, his playthings become alive. Besides, in spite of the power of the inanimate to exasperate us at every turn in our daily life, it holds at least one vestige of consolation for animate nature as represented by us. Can we wonder, when pens and pencils and pipes behave as they do, unprovoked, that the human race, strung to a finer scale and stranded in a world filled with inanimate objects, remains perverse, incalculable, prone to wayward action, and quite unable to account for its own foolishness?"

Minnows' Good Work
Minnows solved a serious problem for the Italian engineers who wished to develop Istra, on the east shore of the Adriatic. The place was full of stagnant ponds in which malaria-bearing mosquitoes flourished. The pest was conquered by introducing a special type of minnow from the United States which eats mosquito eggs greedily.—London Answers.

Expert Looks On Next War as "Tame Affair"

Speaking on the prospects of war, which he thinks not unlikely, Capt. B. H. Liddell Hart, widely known military expert of the London Daily Telegraph, said recently, as quoted by Time, that he believed such a war, if and when it comes, would be a tame affair compared to the last one.

"Europe's general staffs still believe in the effectiveness of mass movements and think the larger their armies are the more powerful will they be," said Captain Hart. "The fallacy of the theory was exposed a generation ago by the mechanical progress which made one man, sitting behind a machine gun, the superior of 100 or even 1,000 who were advancing against him with rifle and bayonet."

"Machine guns of every kind have multiplied everywhere since the last war, increasing the already overwhelming advantage of defensive forces on land. In contrast, artillery has decreased in proportion. That perhaps matters little, because at its utmost the larger gun was an inefficient and uneconomic machine gun destroyer."

"Gas, particularly mustard gas, will increase the helplessness of large armies. . . . It is doubtful whether the armies would ever come to the point of sighting each other. "Most likely air forces will strike and the last competitor of New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Oil, was put. The lone car, with this tremendously vital oil, labeled No. 2, went on and on. On the tenth day, at an almost unbelievable total of 4,729 miles, it failed—an all-time record mileage on a total of five quarts!

The "Hidden Quart" of new oily penetrativeness won—the greater film strength and higher resistance to the effects of dilution—the absence of carbon and sludge—all aided in this great achievement. It firmly supported Conoco's patented principle of added oiliness—it proved every claim. Conoco alone can make oil this way. It is covered by recent United States patents.

You can have this oil in your car, for it costs no more than other quality oils. Drive into a Conoco Station or dealer, marked by the Red Triangle. Fill and know the satisfaction, the freedom from repairs, the economy of low consumption that only Conoco gives.

Automobile Association. Six new, strictly stock cars, were used—a different oil of the same S. A. E. grade in each.

After the cars were broken in for 2,500 miles, they were drained, examined and a fresh fill of five quarts put in each crankcase. No more oil was added. Then the cranks were sealed by an AAA official. The real test began. It was ordered that they be driven at an average of 500 miles a day at 50 miles an hour until their motors failed to operate. Oil No. 4 was first to fail at 1,713.2 miles. Oil No. 6 failed at 1,764.4 miles. Oil No. 5 ruined its motor at 1,815.9 miles; three of them were out of the running. The next day Oil No. 1 failed to lubricate and, its motor wrecked, stopped at 2,266.8 miles.

Two cars—two oils—still left in the test. Oil No. 3, after a remarkable run of 3,318.8 miles, came to a shuddering stop.

WHEN New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil was perfected, it had lubrication values so great that a mere statement of them would seem absurd. Could you believe that any strictly stock motor could run 4,729 miles on just five quarts of oil before wrecking itself? It did—and Conoco proved it in competition with five widely known, nationally advertised, quality brands of motor oil!

The competition was held at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, under the supervision of the Contest Board, American Five quarts of each brand of oil were carefully put in the cars by AAA officials.

These were new motors before the test. They were wrecked to prove to you how to protect yours.

Here are the Representatives of the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association who supervised every detail of the test and attested to the records made.

The official sealing of cranks after fill of five quarts was put in. No addition of oil was permitted in this "destruction" test.

Warning

Some car manufacturers are using new types of bearings which will stand greater pressure and temperatures, resulting from increased power and speed. New and Improved Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil has been exhaustively tested on these new bearings. The results show that it gives them greater protection, speed—longer life—than any weight mineral oil now on the market. Protect your new car by using the motor oil you can be sure of.

New Mining Corporation

The El Rico Metals Corporation of White Oaks, has for the past several months, been conducting a thorough test of its placer property located in Soldier Gulch. While comparatively small in acreage, comprising only two claims, the fact that this property lies principally within the gulch with an unusual depth to bed-rock, gives it exceptional yardage.

The testing has been done with a Number 7 Denver Placer Unit, designed and built by the Denver Equipment Company. This machine was purchased solely for test purposes, being too small for commercial use.

In view of the scarcity of water in this district, the company feels very fortunate in having available an ample supply for the operation of a two-hundred to three-hundred yard per day placer unit, for which, installation arrangements are being made at this time.

Locally, this property is reputed to be one of the richest in the district and with its ideal working conditions, El Rico Metals Corporation anticipates a bright future.
