OUT-OF-THE ORDINARY

At Paola, Kansas, last Friday, a baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Gus Reiter, without a connection between his throat and stomach. The little fellow is doing as well as could be expected under the unusual condition. At the hospital, he is being fed through a rubber tube extending from his throat to his stomach.

Joe Bonomo, Hollywood's death defying screen actor, has finally quit the business. At first, he became a member of the Black Cat Club, which had 13 members. They are all dead except Joe. Some were clawed to death by vicious animals, others fell from airplanes and others died when safety nets failed to work. Joe has broken everything except his neck. His right arm has been broken four times, his left two times, his right foot seven times. His back has been broken and the vertebrae of his spine has been knocked out of place thirty times. He has suffered concussion of the brain six times and every rib in his body has been broken at least twenty times. Through all those injuries, he survived without entering a hospital.

Mrs. Carolina Diaz was the cause of saving herself and a crew from death in the ocean when the ill fated steamer, Mohawk went under. The men members of the life-boat crew collapsed. She kept the boat steady, saved it from sinking and brought the crew to safety. — Yet, there are those who would deny women even the right to vote.

In a cemetery at Mobile, Alabama, there are weeping trees, which constantly rain down showers of water. They overlook a dilapidated vault and the weeping trees shedding water continually, adds much to the gruesomeness of the spectacle.

At Hymannis, Mass., a ten-pound boy was born last week with two teeth equal in size for a child ten years old. To save the child's life, physicians will extract the teeth, it is said.

Edward Foster, 16, of Anderson, Indiana, robbed a grocery store and the judge gave him a sentence like this: For a period of 60 days, he must carry a 20-pound sack of brick on his shoulder for 24 miles each day. When asked how he felt, he said: "I guess I'll live over it." He has thirty more days of that work to perform.

Convicts in Canada, are now allowed 5 cents a day for their time, which amount is given them when their time expires. This, of course, is not as good as the proposed old-age pension, but in figuring it up, we find that in a year, a man would have the sum of $18.25 to his credit. But just think — if one should serve out a sentence of 99 years and 365 days, he would emerge from prison with $1,825.00. Great thing if you don't weaken.

Miss Eleanor Coburn, 92 year-old American born resident of Wimbledon, England, wakes and sleeps in three-day shifts. During her waking hours, she talks with much interest and corresponds with people all over the civilized world.

The Lady of the Polvo Blanco

In our issue of Jan. 11, we published in Out-of-the Ordinary, a story about the ghost of the White Sands, which has aroused comment from writers as Will Robinson, Clarence Morgan, the Albuquerque Journal and H. S. Hunter of the El Paso Times, who answered a question put to him by Tom Charles of Alamogordo, care-taker of the White Sands National Monument in the following manner:

Dear Tom: The Lady of the Polvo Blanco is a gypsy (not a gypsum) sprite, white, fragile, graceful, utterly and fascinatingly mysterious. She arises from the dunes of the White Sands at dusk or before sunrise like Aphrodite from the curving crest of Thalassa. Dancing, shimmering, beckoning, repulsive, the Lady of the Polvo Blanco treads her fancy measures on the spotless sands. Hers is the grace and the poetry of motion. Hers is the spirit of twilight, the stars, the night breeze and the rosy-fingered dawn. She is fantastic but wholly beguiling, bewitching, alluring to comprehending souls. Her beauty is ethereal, her charm entrancing. She is silent, ageless and serene. Her eerie dance completed, she fades from view. An instant one envisions her, and she is gone, fairy-like, vanished in the tumbled whiteness of the Dunes, yet haunting with fragrant memories any who have truly beheld her.

The Lady of the Polvo Blanco, the gracious White Wraith of the Sands, long may her lovely apparition be seen and cherished!

Gold Hunters Rush to Mojave Desert

Rich Strikes Recall Glamorous Days of '49.

Mojave, Calif.—Following one of the most amazing and sensational gold strikes in all history, California is witnessing a new gold rush which recalls her glamorous days of '49. The first huge strike—the Silver Queen—already has been optioned to a South African syndicate for $3,250,000.

a thousand-to-one shot, they dug a trench and discovered the mother-ledge—only six feet below the surface. Holmes gave Minnard a 20 per cent share. They then drew in Virgil Dew. For his digging under a blistering sun he, too, was given a 20 per cent share. Minnard and Dew furnish the first tragedy of the new gold rush. As months slipped past they lost confidence.

Queen of the Turf

For the first time in over two centuries a woman heads the list of money-winning owners of thoroughbreds. $100 is Mrs. Isabel Dodge Steno of the Detroit automobile clan, and she ranks in history with Queen Anne of England. In 1714 Anne had a horse named Star that won the first actual cash horse race in the world, with $50 going to the winner. In 1834 Mrs. Steno had a horse named Cavalade which won $117,233 by bringing her total for the season up to the top figure of $251,135.

OUR BEHAVIOR By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Spinoza, who wrote about 1650, expressed many profound truths in terse and pithy sentences. We quote the following: "Men believe a thing when they behave as if it were true." A later American philosopher, William James, voiced the same thought when he coined the phrase "the pragmatic test," by which he meant that the final test of the validity of any statement was the testimony of experience. The way we behave convinces others that we believe what we say. Someone has recently said that one of the most difficult problems in life is to get a person honestly to believe what he thinks he believes and to act accordingly. In other words, we can never successfully convince another of something we do not our-

The Household By Lydia Le Baron Walker

FUR can be pieced and sewed by any woman who finds her collar, scarf, coat, etc., in need of repairing, provided she follows the directions given today. She will be able to do an excellent bit of work which cannot be detected, if she works carefully. Mending fur saves expense, and while it appears difficult, it becomes easy with practice, and is not really hard at any time. It is imperative to work from the skin (or under side) of the fur, since it is the skin which must be cut, not the fur, which will readily separate once the skin is severed. Also the sewing must be done on the skin, on the side without the fur so that the hairs are not caught down but allowed to lie as they should.

point. This makes them cut the fur without pulling it as ordinary needles will. Woven textiles should not be cut by the sewing needle. Fur should be. In order to get at the under side of the fur, linings must be ripped just enough to permit of the sewing and patching.

Preparing for Summer

Snappy featherweight garments for summer wear defied snow and ice of the Chicago and New York winter to acquaint women with what will be what in active sports, on the beach and for lounging and strolling next summer. Interesting among them were a collection of related and interchangeable garments in a special crinkly fabric, created by Vernamie Rylands to supply a complete wardrobe for every daytime occasion next June, July and August, and to carry over into the winter for home use. Shirts, slacks, kerchief, pull-over blouse, wrap-around skirt, pajamas and robe in harmonizing shades of navy, brown, green and raspberry were displayed.

It's Up to the Hen

It's all up to the hen. If she lays an egg in this trick nest invented by three Berkeley, Calif., men, the egg rolls into the basket below and on its way releases a door in front of the hen and she steps out into the poultry yard, to return the next day if she feels the urge of "production for use." If she produces no egg, the door straight ahead remains locked, and she exits through a side door and into the slaughtering pen. The rooster on top? Well, he's just standing by. The ingenious nest is one of scores of inventions shown at the National Inventor's congress in Hollywood.

down between edges with the needle. With a fine furrier's needle threaded in 40 cotton or 0 linen, in black or white, overcast edges together. Avoid deep stitches. They must be taken just as close to the edges as possible without tearing. Use a medium tension, not too tight, and surely not too loose. The skin is flattened out after sewing and must lie smooth. Therefore a trifle of play should be permitted. This is by way of caution for those who may pull the thread too hard. Stitches may be close and single, or not so close, and the sewing be done both ways. This makes a cross stitch, with the needle put in the same stitch holes in the second journey across the seam as they were the first time. A seam taken in single or double stitching will not be discernible on the right or fur side.

Matching Fur When the fur needs patching, either use fur from the article itself or from a skin exactly matching. It is possible in a coat to take the collar fur lining and replace it with satin in the same color as the fur, and use this fur for patching. This is a common method. A perfect match is then assured and the cost of the satin is the only outlay.

Make a paper pattern of the exact size and shape of the patch needed. Lay this on the skin of the fur, and trace around it with a pencil or crayon. With a sharp knife cut through the skin following the outline marked. Fit this patch into the hole and seam edges as described. The patch will be invisible on the fur side provided the nap of the fur patch matches that of the article around the patch. This matter of having the fur lie the same way is of imperative necessity. Also the color of the fur must coincide with that of the piece removed. Fur is often streaked or spotted and the patch must correspond with the nature of the skins themselves. Fur needles are triangular about the

Sun Spots Promise Era of Prosperity

San Jose, Calif.—Eleven years of redoubled shining on the part of the sun, bringing animal and vegetable fertility and general prosperity to the world, were forecast by Dr. Albert J. Newlin, director of the Richard Memorial Observatory at the University of Santa Clara. Sun spots, Doctor Newlin said, indicated the increased solar activity. His observations were borne out by the opinion of Dr. Orcutt Caldwell, vice chairman of the advisory committee of the American Museum of New York.

selves believe. In the circus life, Barnum may have been right, that the people wanted to be fooled, and he proposed to fool them. On the other hand, from a much more responsible source, we have the thought that while we may fool some of the people some of the time we cannot fool all the people all of the time. True! We believe a thing when we behave as if it were true. Nowhere is the truth of this saying more fully attested than in the business world. Unless our attitude convinces a customer that we believe in the things we offer for sale, we will not get far in closing a contract. Unless the workmanship in the article proves to be what we claim for it, a return order is not likely to be received. Unless we ourselves believe what we say is true, we shall have a difficult time in convincing others no matter how meritorious may be the proposition under consideration. In the realm of character the same law holds true. "What you are speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say." We may believe in those traits of character essential to success, but unless we behave as we believe, our friends soon lose faith in us and we wonder why. In King Lear we read, "I am justly killed with mine own treachery."

Special permission had to be obtained to make this photograph.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—Now that the President has laid before congress his request for the new appropriations, financial students are wondering more and more when the end of this government spending is to come. It will be remembered that Mr. Roosevelt said a year ago that the total public debt should not exceed $31,534,000,000 and that that figure should be reached around June 30, 1935. When it is considered that the present public debt exceeds $28,500,000,000, it becomes difficult to understand how the President will succeed in sticking to his original assertion to hold the national debt at the figure named.

The Treasury department has just released its annual report and this reveals an increase in the public debt of approximately six billion dollars since June 30, 1933, an eighteen months' record. It has made the total cost of the recovery spending program aggregate something over twelve billion dollars since January 1, 1931, when the spending spree really began. To make the vast amount more readily comprehensible, if you take the time to figure it out you will find that the government has been spending borrowed money at the rate of almost twenty-three thousand dollars a minute in the last four years. To illustrate further the magnitude of this sum a figure expert here has calculated that there has been about one billion minutes since the birth of Christ and, therefore, the federal government in the last four years has added about twelve dollars to the public debt for each of the minutes since Christ came on earth.

But to get back to the present plan, presentation of the budget with its maximum outlay of around seven billion dollars recalled to some leaders the assertion by the President respecting the topmost limit for the public debt. In the budget message which he presented just a year ago Mr. Roosevelt boldly stated his belief that "the government should seek to hold the public debt" to the figure of $31,534,000,000.

"Furthermore," he added, "the government during the balance of this calendar year should plan to bring its 1935 expenditures, including recovery and relief within the revenues expected in the fiscal year 1935." The fiscal year 1935 begins next July 1. And frequent pronouncements from the White House have made it clear that a balanced budget in that time is quite unlikely. In addition, the treasury said in its annual report that taxes always lagged behind in reflecting recovery of the country. For example, income taxes to be paid on March 15, 1935, and in the subsequent installments of that year will be the result of levies on earnings of the current calendar year. No one expects earnings in 1935 to be normal. It is obvious, therefore, that the balancing of the budget in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1935, becomes almost a physical impossibility unless the President should do the unexpected by cutting off every one of the sixty-five or more recovery and relief agencies and should cut off all federal funds for relief of the destitute. If that were done, it is estimated by fiscal experts that ordinary receipts by the treasury would come close to meeting the ordinary cost of the regularly established governmental agencies.

There had been frequent contentions by avid New Dealers that Mr. Roosevelt's second budget recommendations President's Views Change would provide a clear picture of his general fiscal policies. If their statements remain true, they resulted in setting up one of the most paradoxical conditions in the history of this nation.

Looking back over the whole Roosevelt period, the thing which observers have never been able adequately to explain is who or what effected the change in the President's views on fundamental financial questions. It is too obvious to precipitate an argument that the President's views have changed. When one goes back to his first message to congress or beyond that to his campaign speeches and the platform upon which he made the race for the Presidency, it is futile to attempt to reconcile those utterances with the subsequent spending and borrowing program in which his administration has indulged. It will be recalled that Mr. Roosevelt declared in his inaugural speech an intention to balance the budget and wipe out the deficit left on his lap by the Hoover administration. He went on to say that if congress in its generosity voted sums that placed the budget out of balance it was under the necessity at the same time to provide taxes to raise the excess expenditures.

Since there can be no dispute that Mr. Roosevelt's views have changed and he has acted in accordance with his new found principles, the interesting thing is who brought about the revision of views on the part of the President. Some of the President's virulent critics have asserted in the opening days of congress that Mr. Roosevelt was wholly uninformed as to the needs with which he was confronted when he was making his campaign speeches. They say he found his original promise to be all wet and he took the only alternative to stave off a bitter row in his own party, offering much money for congress to spend. Among the President's friends, I have heard private expressions that Mr. Roosevelt had been misled by some of the group who held his ear at the start of the administration. These men referred to a number of the so-called Progressive Republicans like the LaFollettes, Norris, Hiram Johnson of California, and Bronson Cutting of New Mexico. Several of these were so well liked by the President that they were invited to enter his cabinet. Consequently, there are those who believe that Mr. Roosevelt followed the advice of the Progressive Republican group much more closely than leaders among the old-time Democrats. Most of the Progressive Republicans are spenders at heart, according to the general view here. And they are also men who regard a balanced budget as not very important. So, while no one can say definitely what influences altered the President's stand, it certainly is regarded among observers here as being a situation in which the wind makes the straws point toward the so-called progressives as having joined hands with the President in initiating what has come to be the greatest outpouring of taxpayers' money, except in war time, since our government was established.

Organization of the new congress has resulted in a new cry, in reality a very old cry, but it is new, since we have not heard it in fifteen years. The cry we are hearing now from Republicans and from northern Democrats is the wall that "the South is in the saddle."

While there certainly can be nothing criminal about the South being in the saddle, it provides a grand political issue both within the Democratic ranks and between the Democratic party and what is left of the Republicans in congress. It also touches a question that has been discussed many times, namely, the wisdom of the seniority rule in congress. The seniority rule provides that the oldest members in the point of service shall inherit committee chairmanships and shall have other positions of honor in the house and senate.

Out of the 60 Democratic senators only 24 come from what is known as the solid South. Of the 317 Democratic members of the house, only about 100 are thoroughly acquainted with the yell of the Confederacy. Yet in the face of this tremendous growth of Democratic membership coming out of the North and the West, the South is in the saddle more solidly than ever. The speakership of the house went to Representative Byrns of Tennessee, who succeeded to the place made vacant by the late Henry T. Rainey of Illinois. Mr. Byrns had been Democratic leader and his promotion left a vacancy to which Representative Will Bankhead of Alabama was elected, thus moving leadership further to the South. The only plum, if it be a plum, that went north of the Mason and Dixon line was the selection of Representative O'Connor of New York, as chairman of the rules committee.

In the senate we see Vice President Garner, the presiding officer, a Texan. The majority leader is Senator Robinson of Arkansas. The powerful committee on finance is presided over by Harrison of Mississippi; the senate committee on banking and currency is controlled by Fletcher of Florida; and the committee on agriculture is headed by Smith of South Carolina. One could go on and name many others although I believe the consensus is that the seniority rule has not worked to produce as many duds for senate committee chairmanships as has occurred in the house.

Democratic leaders in the house have made certain that they will not be embarrassed this year as they were in the first New Deal congress. In that session they were constantly harassed by the radicals who sought to force votes on legislation which the President and his advisers did not want and which for the same reason the Democratic leaders did not want. The radicals accomplished their purposes by use of what is called the rule of discharge of committees. But that rule has been amended so that to invoke it now, actually a majority of the house will have to sign a petition.

Under the previous rule, the signature of 145 members of the house was sufficient to compel the discharge of a committee from consideration of any piece of legislation referred to it for action. The necessary number of signatures was obtained in three embarrassing cases last year. The soldiers' bonus bill was brought out by that method; the Frazier-Lenke farm mortgage inflation bill was released for a house vote in the same manner. The new house organization, however, is determined not to be embarrassed in that manner. It succeeded in Democratic caucus—binding on all Democrats—in having the original rule amended so that now there must be a majority of all house members signing their signatures to the discharge petition before it becomes operative.

SEE NATURE AS SYMBOL OF LIFE

Chinese Art Developed in That Spirit.

Ku-hu-ming says: "Art speaks to the heart of all nations." The Chinese feel a reverence for the things of nature, akin to a religious awe. Air, water, flowers, trees and animals, to them, as to all ancient races, are honored as the indications of the presence of some deity, who must be duly worshiped at the proper season. Nature is a symbol of the universal life which we all share, writes a correspondent in the Auckland Weekly News. The largest Chinese temples are always in one of the beauty spots of the district, and are built in such harmony with the surrounding hills, trees, and rivers that the architecture enhances the loveliness of nature, and satisfies the eye of the beholder, seeming to fulfill some need of that particular place. Taoist contemplation and Buddhist rites are but different paths to the same goal—the realization of the oneness of nature. The deep chasm which to the western mind divides nature from the human intellect does not exist for the oriental. To him nature has a soul and lives as does man himself. So, whether revealed in snow-clad mountains, in slumberous mists drifting over rivers and lakes, in majestic trees and rugged rocks, in blossoming flowers, or in birds and beasts, Chinese art does exercise an elevating influence on the observer, calming yet exalting his mood.

Nowadays, when western civilization is gradually pervading the East, too much importance is given to material comfort, and thus the subtle charm and spiritual value of pictorial art, as portrayed in painting, prints, tripods, sacrificial bowls, seals, bronzes, stones and porcelain is in danger of perishing. Fruits and animals are presented as symbols. The destinies of the empire are said to be under the tutelage of four super-natural animals—the stag, the tortoise, the phoenix, and the dragon. Hence their bronze figures are to be found in the palace courtyard. The stag presides over literature and is visible at the birth of sages; the tortoise over virtue and appears at periods of widespread morality; the phoenix controls divination, and the dragon represents authority. This last super-natural monster is the national emblem of China. Besides his possession of authority the dragon king influences the seasons.

Eclipses are ascribed to his propensity to swallow the sun and moon, leaving the world in darkness. He is believed to conceal himself at certain periods under the banks of the river, and for this reason the bronze cow has to watch the river and keep it from flooding the country, but this ruse often fails to outwit the malice of the evil dragon, and floods result.

Other forms of the dragon are the scaly, the winged, the horned, the hornless, and the dragon rolled within itself. Each varies in color, as the azure, the gold, the scarlet, the purple, the black, the white, the variegated, and, most important of all, the yellow. The Imperial Dragon is always to be distinguished by its fifth claw which it assumes in all carvings—such as carved ascents to the temple—pertaining to the emperor. Each gateway of a temple is guarded by winged monsters who have power over all living creatures. At the Yellow temple a stone lion wipes his eyes with his paw in grief at a good man's passing. A tiger often guards graves, for the mythical animal, who is supposed to eat the brains of the dead, fears only tigers and pine trees. A frog is sacred because the chanting of frogs is often the only note heard among ruins.

The Progressive Trend

Progressive party members in Congress have put a movement on foot for a national progressive organization. There has been named a full slate of progressive candidates for organization in the House, all from Wisconsin, and Representative Withrow, Chairman of the Progressive Conference, has been quoted as explaining—

"This action will serve to establish the identity of the progressive party and at the same time form an organization under which liberal members of both House and Senate may join in action toward liberal legislation."

This is only one sign of the times. There is the growing Farmer Labor Party in Minnesota, the Sinclair and various other liberal movements coming out in California, and last but not least, the Huey Long movement in Louisiana.

That Mr. Long intends to remain active as a leader in the coming campaign must be evident to any who have listened to his "share of wealth" speeches over the radio.

Mr. Long handles his own rumored candidacy for the presidency by stating that the way to avoid his elevation to the executive chair, assuming that the statesman desires to avoid it, is to enact into law, the proposals which Mr. Long is now advocating. If this is not done, it is broadly intimated in Long headquarters that there may be something doing in 1936.

No political leaders now expect Mr. Long to capture either the Democratic or Republican nominations in 1936, but the question is whether this will stop Mr. Long and his followers. His words are appealing to a great class of our people and it must be remembered that there are a lot of folks in this country who do not possess $5,000, even if they do have radios and automobiles.

Now I'll Tell One—

Phillip Space opines the doctor who delivered the Dionne quintuplets is getting more credit than the parents.

If the Townsend Old Age plan goes through we are going to have to revise that statement about life begins at 40.

One out of every four persons are un-relief rolls—and it looks as though two out of the other three voted to get on.

The New Dealers seem to figure it out like this—The next generation will pay for the relief of this generation—and since birth control is spreading, there won't be any next generation, so why worry?

Interesting Painting

A new and interesting painting has recently been hung in the lobby of the Gateway Hotel of El Paso, Texas, featuring a bird's-eye view of the entire El Paso southwest, from Carlsbad Caverns on the east, including the Mescalero Indian Reservation on the north, and as far as the Arizona border on the west. The painting, executed by E. L. Boone, is not just an orthodox map, but is beautifully done in oil colors, and represents approximately what a person might see if he could reach a 100-mile height in the stratosphere. At the same time, map details, such as highways, cities and their names, and scenic wonders, are clearly shown in the picture.

The idea was originated by R. H. Washburn, manager of the Gateway and Lockies Hotels in El Paso, and has been placed in the lobby for the benefit of tourists who want to know what there is to see in and near El Paso. To supplement the map, Mr. Washburn, working in cooperation with Chamber of Commerce officials, is arranging for the erection of signs along the highways showing where points of scenic or historic interest are located.

"With the wealth of interesting things to see within a 160-mile radius of El Paso," said Mr. Washburn, "I see no reason why this area cannot keep the tourist—and his dollar—here for a much longer time than we do at present. It requires the co-operation of every hotel, chamber of commerce, filling station and auto camp to tell the tourists why they should stay, and what they can see if they do. Every community should have some sort of folder designating the sights in their vicinity; and then they should see that signs clearly mark the spots. When we all work together toward this end, we're making a good start in the right direction."

RED CROSS RELIEF GIVEN TO VICTIMS IN 103 DISASTERS

Tornadoes, Fires, Hurricanes, Floods, Epidemics, Make Record of Year

A history of the disasters in the United States in any year is written annually by the American Red Cross, according to Chairman John Barton Payne, commenting on the report for the year ending June 30, 1934, which has just been issued in Washington.

"Because of the charter provision, which places upon the Red Cross the responsibility for disaster relief, our chapter and staff workers are notified of all calamities of storm and fire and flood," he continued. "The emergency period may prove to be brief, in cases where the victims have their own resources to draw on. While it lasts, however, whether it brings the immediate need of food, clothing and shelter for the homeless, or entails a program of investigation and rehabilitation, the Red Cross is the official director of all relief."

A great variation in type, and a wide geographical distribution, characterize the 103 disasters reported last year. Tornadoes, hurricanes, hail storms and other storms made up almost one half of the total. Especially numerous were the tropical storms which swept in from the sea to the Atlantic and Gulf Coast region. There were 21 storms of this type, establishing a new record for frequency.

Next in number to storms were disasters of fire, the report shows. Red Cross aid was given following 25 fires in the United States and insular possessions. The most spectacular was the Chicago stockyards fire, where Red Cross workers arrived shortly after the fire started, administering relief until the emergency period passed, giving first aid to about 1,000 persons.

Floods caused serious damage in some sections, 17 calling for Red Cross relief. Three explosions were reported, and three epidemics of malaria and typhoid fever. A school bus wreck was one of the year's tragedies for which Red Cross funds were needed for relief and rehabilitation.

"Technique acquired by the Red Cross in these disasters and the hundreds of others we have handled is at the service of the public," Chairman Payne said. "To make this possible the disaster relief service has issued a manual containing instructions for chapters interested in advance preparations for emergencies. Disaster institutes were held last year in 35 strategic locations, to enable Red Cross and civic workers to formulate plans for possible disaster emergencies in their communities."

Support of the disaster relief activities of the Red Cross comes from the annual roll call held each year from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day.

Trained to Save Lives

First aid certificates were issued by the Red Cross last year to 139,972 persons who finished the course of instruction put on by the chapters. Included in this list were more than 70,000 foremen, time clerks and other key employees on Federal Civil Works projects. Further evidence of the government's endorsement of the first aid program is found in projects now under way where Red Cross chapters, at the request of the War Department, are giving first aid instruction in CCC camps. Where it has been requested by Army engineers the same instruction is also made available to key men working on federal water conservancy and flood control projects.

War Veterans' Problems Increase

Last year American Red Cross chapters dealt with the problems of nearly 400,000 veterans and their families. The workers find that as the years go on their responsibility increases rather than decreases. Changes in legislation, the increasing age of veterans and the consequent increase in physical illness, bring new needs for sympathetic treatment by trained Red Cross workers. In addition to this service to veterans the Red Cross served as the official medium between the people and the men in military and naval service, giving aid through this service last year to 6,979 men in the army, navy and marine corps.

Fires on Morro Castle and at Nome, Alaska, Received Help of Red Cross Workers

A number of tragic and unusual disasters have recently called for Red Cross relief. Included in them have been a flood in Kentucky, following a series of cloudbursts in August; epidemics of disease which threatened several sections, including some caused by drought conditions. Red Cross workers found much to do for the survivors of the Morro Castle fire and for those engaged in rescue work; and Red Cross relief went by airplane to Alaska when the famous old gold camp, Nome, burned in September.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles.

"A normal weight, your honor." He took the girl's hand and counted her pulse. Then he took a stethoscope from his pocket, placed it against her left breast, and listened.

you? Be yourself, Judge. Now you tell me. "Why not?" the judge pursued, remorselessly. "Well, maybe because nobody ever asked me," the girl assured him with simple directness.

"So you believe you're quite sane?" "Of course I am. There's nothing wrong with me except a bad memory, and a head like the American eagle."

"If you're a good girl, Nance, I'll not put the cuffs on you." side, put her arm around his neck, and laid her cheek against his.

"Anything else, Doctor Burt?" "I have given a concise and general outline of the case as it presents itself to me."

"And you think you would make her over into a responsible moral citizen?" "I think so, your honor."

"How would she support herself during the period of treatment? By theft—or worse?" The judge glanced at Nance Belden.

"Well," the girl declared, with an effort at nonchalance, "this is a tough break for old lady Belden, isn't it?" She smiled up at him patronizingly.

"Where does she live, Nance?" "Out there, somewhere." "You've been reading a poem, I think, Nance—a poem that runs: And you, my sweet Penelope, out there somewhere you wait for me, With buds of roses in your hair and kisses on your mouth."

She trembled with eagerness. "Why, you know her, Doctor. That's the Penelope I'm looking for." "Oh, if that's the Penelope, why of course I'll find her for you."

She was taken first to the warden's office, from there she was passed on to another officer where she was measured by the Bertillon system, thumb-printed and photographed.

The building in which female convicts are housed at San Quentin would readily be mistaken for a hospital were it not for the bars at the windows and the high metal mesh fence that surrounds the grounds.

"So this is San Quentin," Nance remarked gaily to her escort. "Not so bad, my boy, not so bad."

"You read and write, of course, Nance?" "Do I look like a dumb-bell?" "Well," patiently—"here are the prison rules. Read them, and then obey them strictly."

"The men who have done the most for any noble cause have been the men who have heard, and who have been prepared to listen to, the 'still small voice.'"

"Great and Good Living unto him is caring with all your heart for the things that are great and good and broad and godlike."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for January 27 PETER'S DENIAL

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:27-31, 54, 66-72. GOLDEN TEXT—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. I Corinthians 10:12.

A better statement of the subject would be "Peter's Downfall." From the height of fellowship with God which Peter enjoyed when he confessed that Jesus was the Messiah.

Jesus had issued a solemn warning, even a prophecy, of the backsliding of all the disciples. Peter's unwillingness to face the cross alienated him from Jesus.

When they came to arrest Jesus, Peter took a sword and cut off an ear of the servant of the high priest (John 18:10). He was zealous for the Lord, but it was zeal without knowledge.

When they came to arrest Jesus, Peter took a sword and cut off an ear of the servant of the high priest (John 18:10). He was zealous for the Lord, but it was zeal without knowledge.

Christ's rebuke for taking the sword and the awkward position in which Peter's act had placed him caused him to follow Jesus afar off.

Step by step Peter went downward until the words of a servant girl provoked open and blasphemous denial. Peter's trouble began when he shrank from the cross.

The men who have done the most for any noble cause have been the men who have heard, and who have been prepared to listen to, the "still small voice."

Hope Hope is the kindly instrument of God for rescuing mankind from inactivity, and inactivity is sister to stagnation.

Says Poison Best for Mice Control Most Damage During Winter; Rodents Do Their Work Beneath Surface.

By H. R. Niswonger, Extension Horticulturist North Carolina State College—WNU Service. Field mice are an orchard pest that most fruit growers are unaware of until it is too late to save their trees.

The common meadow mouse migrates to the orchards when their food supply in the open fields becomes scarce. The short-tailed pine mouse is most destructive, doing worst damage to orchards growing near timbered areas.

As a supplementary control measure, digging up of grass and weeds under the trees is suggested. This breaks up the tunnels and runways and causes the mice to seek their food in areas farther from the trees.

Chemists Warn Farmers on Fertilizer Mixtures Chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture have been making careful studies of chemical reactions in fertilizer mixtures to be able to warn farmers and manufacturers against undesirable combinations of materials.

When ordinary limestone is used for this purpose, only a limited quantity can be added; otherwise reaction between it and superphosphate in the fertilizer will render some of the phosphoric acid unavailable as plant food.

Causes of Heaves Heaves (emphysema of the lungs) is caused by overfeeding the horse hay, especially dusty timothy hay, or threshed clover hay, and working it immediately after a meal when the digestive organs are distended.

Farm Topics Erosion by wind and water is the major enemy of the soil. Some 25,000,000 bushels of corn each year are used to make corn sirup.

Dairying is the most important occupation on Wisconsin's 181,707 farms. An average of $10 per farm would be needed to pay the annual fire loss on farms.

The hoof-and-mouth disease has broken out among cattle and pigs in England. Few branches of agriculture exist today in which success can be greater or failure more common than in mushroom growing.

NEW SOURCE OF OPIUM The control of the drug traffic is likely to be complicated by a discovery which has recently been made in Hungary. It is a process for extracting morphine from the opium poppy.

To keep clean and healthy take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate liver, bowels and stomach—Adv. Eskimo Cannibals The Far North as well as the tropics has some cases of cannibalism even today.
