OUT-OF-THE ORDINARY

On opening a bunch of bananas at Billings, Montana, last week, Tom Kirk was greeted by a hopping visitor with long legs and a tummy like a congressman. On examination, the frog, which it proved to be, had a full set of toenails. Naturalists decided it was a South-American tree toad, but a species with which they had never before come in contact. The frog was given to the school at Billings.

To prove that newspaper men can stop most anything, what do you think of this? Sam Falk, a painter in New York City, had been hiccupping for a period of 18 days, during which time, all known remedies had been employed to stop it. They tried everything. Holding his breath for a certain time, drinking sugar-water, breathing into a bag and inhaling horse-radish fumes, inhaling Limburger cheese, etc., without avail. Finally, a group of newspaper reporters paid him a visit. He took a look at the bunch, hiccupped only once and the stuff was off. He never hiccupped again.

Twenty-five years ago, William Kane, Manitowoc, Wis., had a fuss with his wife and in a hurried fit of temper, Mrs. Kane told her husband she wished he would never speak to her again and he never has. The greatest of pressure has been brought to bear during that time to get Bill reconciled in the matter, but he stays put. He told relatives that if that was the way she felt about it, it was all right by him.

J. H. Bennet, Vancouver, B. C., bought a turkey for which he paid $1.50. His wife said he was extravagant in the depression, but on dressing the bird John found a gold nugget in his craw, turned it in and got the neat sum of $6.00 for it.

Two young ladies, one residing at Eastman, Ga., the other at Cedar Hill, Tenn., are great friends. The name of the one at Eastman is June Flowers and the one at Cedar Hill, Ann Apple. They are said to be very beautiful, but neither of them are "peaches."

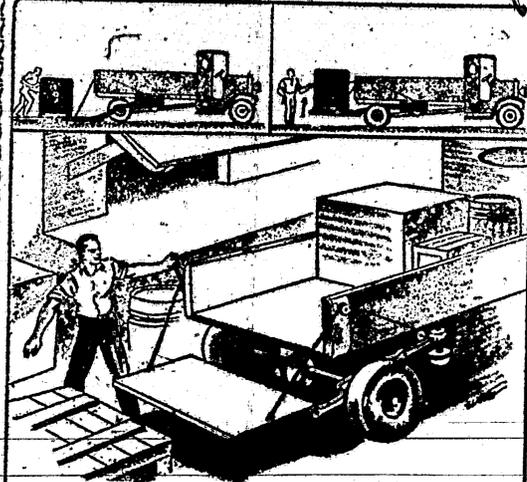

On Jan. 29, Emily Hahn, explorer, returned from Europe and immediately advertised for a husband, one who could walk the globe with her. As to his qualifications she suggested the following—Wanderlust, ability to write about her travels, training in mining, engineering, admiration of natives (on close inspection,) and willing to go to Africa to study monkeys. Might we advise that she pay a visit to congress and some of our state legislative bodies before starting for Africa.

The day before groundhog day, a hawk was killed near Carlsbad by Roy Askew of Roswell. On the neck of the bird was found a Catholic crucifix, measuring two inches in width by four inches in length. On the crucifix was the inscription: QBN 1934. The hawk measured in spread 4 feet.

J. H. Brawner, Excelsior Springs, Mo., at the age of 83 cut a new tooth last week — and his wife, 79, recently recovered from a severe case of whooping cough. The young couple are doing nicely, thank you — and receiving congratulations from their friends.

Music Drama Study Club

Met on Jan. 24, at the home of Miss Helen Frances Huppertz, with the President, Mrs. Maude L. Blaney, presiding. Thirteen members and four guests were present. After the business meeting, a well-arranged program was given with Mrs. W. O. Garrison and Miss Helen Frances Huppertz in charge, as follows: Vocal solo, "Sunshine of Your Smile," Mrs. J. M. Beck, with Miss Ruth Brickley at the piano; Piano solo, "Etude Caracteristique," Miss Ruth Brickley; Reading, "The Biography of Hawthorne," Miss Hazel Melaas; Clarinet solo, "The Old Refrain" (Kreislere), Miss Helen Frances Huppertz, with Miss Ruth Brickley at the piano; Play, "Lost Ticket," Mmes Garrison, Snyder, Degitz, Mayer, Blaney, the Misses Ruth Brickley and Nellie Shaver. A short but very interesting talk was given by Mrs. John Gutknecht of Chicago, concerning her visit to Europe last summer. Mrs. Gutknecht's talk was enlightening as well as educational.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. C. W. Hendren at Fort Stanton on Feb. 25, with Mmes. Hendren and T. E. Kelley in charge of the program.

Sunday-Monday-Tuesday - "Manhattan Melodrama"

The picture that lured John Dillinger to his death! Featuring Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, William Powell and Leo Carrillo. Three boys who grow up together along different paths that converge strangely in later years. An M-G-M picture. Comedy: "Maid in Hollywood."

Mr. and Mrs. Frank DuBois of Corona were Carrizozo business visitors Monday.

McNutt Oilers vs. Lincoln County Team

The McNutt Oilers, city league basketball champions of El Paso, will play a Lincoln County team Saturday night, Feb. 9, in the Capitan Gym., at 8:30 p. m. The Oilers are a tall, rangy team and just about the cream of El Paso's basketball crop. The outstanding scoring threat of the El Paso quintet is a forward by the name of Price, a high school coach on the border city. If our memory serves us correctly he recently made something like 30 points in a city league game. The Lincoln County line-up will probably include Detloff, Dodds and Leonard of Carrizozo, Parker and Dick Traylor of Fort Stanton, Schuman and Billy Ferguson of Capitan. Preceding this game the high school teams of Capitan and Tularosa will play, starting at 7:30 p. m.

Charley Spence Had Narrow Escape

On Thursday, Jan. 31, Chas. Spence, in company with three other men, set out to make a trip from Phoenix, Arizona, to Holbrook. When within 8 miles of Holbrook, they were met by a large car bound for California. Instead of keeping to its side of the road, the large car crowded the smaller one to one side, which caused it to turn over four times. The three were in the front seat and Charley was in the back seat and sound asleep when the accident occurred. Charley was thrown through the top of the car, but the other men escaped without injuries beyond slight scratches.

Charley was taken to the Albuquerque hospital, where after an X-Ray examination, no bones broken and no internal injuries were found. But the force with which he was thrown through the top of the car and the impact on the hard ground, bruised his entire body so badly that he was unable to move himself in bed for several days. At last reports, he was recovering nicely.

On Wednesday evening of last week at the home of Evelyn Dixon Evelyn Claunch and Ruth Barnett entertained at a farewell party in honor of Cleta McClintock, on the eve of her departure for Dallas. Twenty guests were present.

PERSONALS

Mrs. J. S. Cook has recovered from a serious illness of the flu.

Miss Cleta McClintock left for Dallas, Tex., last week, after visit with her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. L. P. McClintock.

Mrs. J. H. Fulmer of White Oaks was a visitor in town Tuesday.

Mrs. Tennis Smoot is teaching at the Stetson school temporarily.

Mrs. Beulah Hartley is the new assistant at the local post-office.

Mrs. Louis Adams, who has been ill for the past week, is improving nicely at present.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Lemon had as their Sunday dinner guests, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Queen, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Queen, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Queen and Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Whitwell, all of White Oaks.

The Misses Rosalind Burke and Maynor Faye McGee were Fort Stanton visitors last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. T. Lumpkins and son Bill were business visitors on this Tuesday from Capitan.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryan Hall of Anthony, N. M., were guests of Attorney and Mrs. John E. Hall on Monday of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Pfingsten and little daughter, Betty of Hondo, returned last week from a business trip to different parts of Texas. On the trip, they encountered rain, snow, sand storms and politicians and HOW!

Mrs. D. X. LaVallee entertained the Tuesday Bridge Club at her home this week.

Attorney and Mrs. John E. Hall were in El Paso the early part of the week and stayed over to see the Ziegfeld Follies.

Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Kelley left yesterday for El Paso to pay a visit to their daughter Ruth, who is attending school in that city.

A joint meeting of the Agricultural Extension Service and the Rural Rehabilitation Division of the State of New Mexico was held this week from Monday, Feb. 4, to 8, at State College, Las Cruces. Regional field directors were principal speakers.

February Issue of New Mexico Magazine

Two authors of national note, Erna Ferguson and Earl W. Scott, feature the February issue of New Mexico Magazine, just off the press. Miss Ferguson contributes a story, "Three Miracles." It took her three miracles to find a fiesta in Old Mexico.

"Noche del Diablo" by Scott brings to readers a writer who has become popular to millions who delight in detective and mystery fiction. His story is set in the Santa Cruz and Chiricahua country north of Santa Fe.

Other new offerings include "Trail Dust," a tale of old cattle days by Col. Jack Potter of Clayton; "Yonder Comes the Sun"; "In Ancient Ruins"; "Handicraft Arts"; "Last Chance Canyon"; "White Man's Magic"; "Down Into Darkness"; "Museum Hotel" and the usual assortment of established features.

FORT STANTON NEWS

Lovers of art will be given an opportunity to feast their eyes on a large collection of magnificent aquarelles, by some of the foremost Southern Artists, which will be displayed in the Community House between 3 and 7 p. m., Saturday, Feb. 9. This art show is sponsored by the Water Color section of the 12th Circuit Exhibition of the Southern States Art League, and is brought to the Fort through the cooperation of Mrs. Gensler, chief aide of the O. T. Dept. here.

The first issue of the "Caduceus," local, mimeographed, bi-monthly newspaper of the Fort, was on the market on Jan. 29. Copies sold like hot cakes for three cents apiece. It is edited by Messrs. Kelley and Martell. Contributors to this issue were Messrs. Campbell, Maure and Wilbur Smith, the latter supplying a humorous column in which a score of Stantonians found their names mentioned. Undoubtedly it furnished the readers as well as its writer with a great deal of "mental contentment."

Gunther Kroggel of the New Mexico Mechanical Equipment Co., in Carrizozo, has sold several washing machines and other electrical equipment to Fort residents.

The delegation of officials from Washington, D.C., have approved and recommended the erection of a gymnasium for the Fort.

William Clark, Fort Librarian, is merging his business ability with Bill Hale's culinary skill in a business deal that will enter them into the canning industry with a new product that he expects will revolutionize the market. To some of his closest friends he is willing to sell a limited amount of shares in this business, but he is absolutely against letting any of the big shots like Mellon, Rockefeller, Morgan, Trolis Dickey and Walter Pitts, in on this deal, lest they should get a corner on the market.

On Saturday afternoons, after a strenuous week of hard work, our enterprising auto mechanic, Comrade Linassar, drives his motor to Roswell where he spends the week-ends, recumbent from mental and muscular strains in soothingly artistic environments.

P. T. A. Program

At the Hi School Auditorium last Friday, the P. T. A. gave an interesting program with Mrs. Selma Degitz in charge, as follows:

Selection by the Hi School Girls' Glee Club, directed by Miss Gayle Sharp.

Piano solo, - Miss Evelyn Claunch.

Mrs. Watson, Supt. of Rural Schools of Socorro and Lincoln Counties, gave an interesting review of the improvements that have been made in rural schools during the last two years. Mrs. Watson also showed charts and other things of importance in which pupils showed a marked advancement during that period.

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Rathman, daughter Marguerite of Blair, Neb., are at Capitan, while visiting Mr. Rathman's son, Dr. Wm. Rathman of Fort Stanton.

FINE EFFECT IN TUNIC AND SKIRT

PATTERN 9187

It's buttoned up the back like Mainbocher's Butcher Boy design, and it's shirred round the neck and the tops of the sleeves like Lanvin's peasant blouses. What more could you ask of this gracefully molded tunic? The skirt proves its sisterhood with latest fashion by being slim as a reed and slashed at the hemline. Make up the two in contrasting colors and fabrics, a green velvet skirt, perhaps, with a honey-colored satin blouse. Or, if you'd like a very dressy frock, choose a metal-flecked crepe for both blouse and skirt. Then top it all off with a high toque for an extra bit of glamor!

Pattern 9187 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 requires 2 1/2 yards 39-inch blouse fabric and 2 1/2 yards skirt fabric.

Complete, diagrammed sew-chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Bring Dead to Life With Late Devices

One Stimulates Heart, Another Restores Breathing.

New York.—Nearly 500 persons apparently dead have been brought back to life in New York and Chicago by two of the scientific instruments recently developed by physicians.

Many of these 500 were quite literally "dead" by ordinary tests—a few of them new-born babies whose bodies had been laid aside with the last hope given up.

The 500 were restored not only to life but to health. They are the answer of organized medicine to spectacular ideas of reviving dogs, suicides and executed criminals. They are the practical application of the same knowledge which is being used for the more sensational experiments.

The immediate objective is an annual company of American "dead" about equaling the number of automobile fatalities. It is believed that as many as 50,000 in this group could be saved yearly if the new devices reached them soon enough.

Gold Needle Saves.

There is no progress yet toward restoring to life the person who has died of a wasting disease—nor any wish by physicians to attempt it.

About 200 of those brought back to life here and in Chicago were treated with the artificial pacemaker, a gold needle which stimulates heart beats with electrical impulses at the rate of 50 to 120 a minute.

This needle was brought out two years ago by the Witkin foundation of Beth David hospital, New York city. It grew out of the fact that up to 1000 about 60 persons, apparently dead, had been brought back to life by hypodermic injections directly into their hearts.

Adrenalin was frequently used, but even a "shot" of caffeine similarly given restored some of the "dead." This all called attention to a mighty effort which nature herself makes in every heart, in the first 30 seconds after it stops, to get it to resume beating.

The heart quickly loses alkalinity, and its acidity rises. With rising acidity the heart becomes a better conductor of electricity, its own natural control—is partly electrical, with exceedingly faint chemical-electric currents.

Gives Electric Shock.

The prick of a needle, without any hypodermic at all, is an electric shock to a heart in this condition. Realization brought the protection of the "artificial pacemaker" to supply electric impulses.

It was found, also that the heart has an electrical pacemaker of its own, a small group of cells in the right auricle, which seem to regulate the beat of the entire heart muscle. The gold electrical needle is used to substitute for these pacemaking cells.

Use of the needle tip there, instead of haphazardly about the heart appears to be frequently the direct source of recovery of life and permanent health.

The other new device for restoring the "dead" is an insufflator, sponsored by the society for the prevention of asphyxial death. It is a pressure apparatus for mechanical breathing, which goes a step farther than the "mechanical lungs," the equipment of emergency squads and artificial respiration.

Insufflation forces oxygen and carbon dioxide into the lungs. Moreover it mixes them when necessary in proportions to stimulate as well as give the ordinary effects of air.

Keeping Young By LEONARD A. BARRETT

How old are you? Birthdays come and go. We either celebrate or forget them depending on our mood.

Age is not a matter of years. It is an attitude of mind. At forty, with ideals crushed and all hope lost, we certainly could not help feeling old. If there is no "forward glance" then age has already settled upon us. But why should a person permit such attitude to dominate his mind? At three score years and ten we could be seventy years young as well as seventy years old.

South African Carries Whales in His Suitcase

Capetown.—"Anything to declare?" asked the customs officer. "Two whales," said the man with the suitcase. "Don't be funny," snapped the officer. "Just open that bag." The man opened the case—and produced the whales. They were contained in bottles—whale embryos taken from a harpooned whale.

The Household By Lydia Le Baron Walker

This Tester Bedstead is Fitted With Casters Which are Correct for All Types of Bedsteads.

MOST pieces of furniture should be provided with casters or gliders so that they can be moved easily. This being the case, it is well to consider the comparative virtues of each kind of fitting. There is a tendency toward using gliders in preference to casters although certain articles are exempt from this vogue. Bedsteads should have casters, so also should davenport, day beds, and heavy furniture such as sideboards, dining tables, etc. Lighter pieces such as chairs, smaller tables, piano benches etc., are well suited to the glider fittings.

Casters raise furniture perceptibly while gliders do not. Neither are the latter visible, while casters are unless they are those which do not swivel, and these are not satisfactory usually. The reason for this is that the piece of furniture is easily movable in one direction only. Also the casters have an inclination to scrape in moving the other direction. When buying furniture fitted with casters be sure that they are swivel casters and then you will have no difficulty in moving it in any direction.

Height of Furniture The matter of casters raising furniture should be remembered since this is taken into consideration in the making of some pieces and so they are at the correct height only when on casters. Sometimes chairs so constructed have had the casters removed and gliders put on in order for them to match the fittings of other pieces in the room. The actual comfort of the chairs is not altered, but the person sitting down in such a chair may be slightly surprised to find it lower than expected, and many a person finds these lowered chairs not so easy to get out of. It is not hard to pick out chairs which have had casters changed to gliders. To the initiate they appear shorn of a needed fitting. However it is true that the invisible element of gliders is desirable in chairs.

Metal casters are preferable to wooden ones which in time and with wear will lose their fully circular shape which the metal ones seldom do. Gliders are merely disks of polished metal. They must be absolutely smooth at rims as well as on surfaces. © Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

Versatile Canine Plays

Piano, Drums, Mandolin Seattle.—Micky, four-year-old fox terrier owned by Mrs. D. C. Read, is said to be America's most versatile canine musician. The dog plays the piano, drums, mandolin, guitar and a one-string Chinese instrument. He started his music lessons when six months old, on a toy piano. Micky handles the drums with small sticks clipped to his paws. Picks for the stringed instruments also are clipped on. His selections are not always classical, but are effective.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is won over despite Nance's hard-boiled exterior. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary.

"You'll do," Nance declared, and held out her hand. Her cell proved to be exactly what the matron had said it was—a small, neat white room, with a neat little white bed and wash stand, and a small chest of drawers, not unlike that of a room in a hospital, save for the steel door with an orifice in the center of it, and connected by a locking mechanism with all the doors in that tier of cells so that the throwing of a lever locked them all simultaneously. Nance surveyed it with satisfaction. "This will do me nicely," she said. "Thank you ever so much, Matron."

She unpacked her suitcase, stowed her few belongings in the chest of drawers, removed her hat and sat down on the bed to read the printed list of prison rules. But one of the rules interested her. She discovered she could write letters once a month and receive visitors once a month—if she behaved herself. "I must be mother's little lamb," she decided. "This is some joint to get out of, but where there's a will there's a way." And she set herself resolutely to discovering the way.

Before locking-up time she thought she had discovered it. It was the fishermen in the cove just off San Quentin point who suggested it to her. In her stroll around the grounds she inspected the fence. It was sixteen feet high, of quarter-inch steel mesh, set on steel posts bedded in concrete, and it ran along a concrete base. A barefooted woman, using her toes to cling to the mesh, could climb the fence readily enough, were it not for an eighteen-inch topping of barbed wire, strung in strands four inches apart and set inward at an angle of forty-five degrees. One could not possibly surmount that. Nor could one burrow under the concrete base in daylight, even were the means available. Nor could one do it at night, because then one was locked in the cell. But one could stroll down the main walk to the sentry box just outside the entrance and appraise the situation there. As Nance suspected, the gate was kept locked and the guard had the key; indeed, the gate was never opened except to admit a new prisoner or an official, or to provide an exit for a discharged prisoner or official. However, Nance did not despair, for the gate was narrow—two feet—and there was no toppling on it. She decided she would climb over it some day when the guard's back was turned; ergo, the thing to do was to induce the guard to turn his back!

For a month Nance gave her thoughts over entirely to this problem. Lanny came into Doctor Burt's office and laid a letter on his desk. It was dated from San Quentin, on the cheap prison stationery and read:

"Dear Miss Lanning:
"I can receive visitors next Sunday. Won't you please come over and visit me? I'm so lonely, and you were so kind to me when I visited Doctor Burt's office. I have never forgotten you and never shall. Sincerely,
"Nance Belden,
"No. 43,231."

"Just think, Stevie," Lanny declared proudly. "She hasn't forgotten me, the poor dear."
"I suppose you'll go over."
"Indeed I shall. It would be terrible if I didn't. You'll send her something, won't you, Stevie? I think that might please her. I think she'd appreciate a portable phonograph and a couple of dozen records. I understand model prisoners are permitted such luxuries."
Stephens smiled. "Well, I'll stand for that expense, too, Lanny. And I shall await with interest the report you will have to make on your return." Lanny beamed.
The following Sunday afternoon, therefore, the matron admitted Lanny to the visitors' room and sent for Nance, who arrived on the run and cast herself joyously into Lanny's arms. Then Nance led the latter into a corner, and speaking swiftly and in a low voice, said:
"We aren't permitted to be alone with our visitors, Lanny. You'll notice the matron remains in the room. She won't listen to what we have to say but she keeps her eyes on us. Will you smuggle a letter out for me? I've got one all written, but the matron reads all our letters before posting them—and I can't have her read this one. It's to a very dear friend and I just couldn't bear to have her read it. Besides, if she read it, she wouldn't mail it."
Lanny's face grew grave. "Do you realize, my dear, what you are asking me to do?"

"Certainly, I wouldn't ask anybody but you to do it, Lanny dear. You're so understanding. If you can smuggle the letter out for me it will mean that within a month I'll be out, too. I'm sorry I cannot give you all my confidence, Lanny, but I just can't. You're the only woman on earth I'd trust, the only woman who has ever been kind to me. And oh, Lanny dear, I do appreciate your friendship so."
Lanny comforted the girl and considered her request. Considered it sympathetically, too, for at heart she was an outlaw herself. She knew Nance Belden did not belong here; that if the girl had had a fair chance, if she had not been the victim of a code of justice born of ignorance and lack of sympathy, she would be in a sanitarium instead.
"You can read the letter when you get home, Lanny," Nance pleaded, "and if you do not approve of it, you need not mail it. That's fair, isn't it?"
Lanny fell into the trap. "Yes, that's fair," she agreed, for she had unbounded confidence in her own judgment of what was right and what was wrong.
"You old sweetheart," Nance breathed, and kissed her—and at that moment a tall, handsome brunette who had repaid her lover's faithlessness by killing him, and who had been standing around in the hall near the entrance to the visitors' room, moved off down the corridor towards the recreation room. At once a shrill scream penetrated the visitor's room; then another and another—a woman cursed—and cried: "Stop them or they'll hurt each other."
The matron immediately left the visitors' room to quell the disturbance. Instantly Nance Belden drew a thick envelope from her bosom, unlocked Lanny's hand-bag and thrust the envelope in. She beamed proudly upon Lanny.

"I staged that ruckus," she confessed. "We have to play the game with each other here, you know—and two lifers obliged me. Good behavior doesn't mean time off for them, you know—and a hair-pulling match isn't taken too seriously here. Oh, by the way, what's your address—I mean your home address and telephone number?"
"It's in the telephone book," Lanny replied, and wondered why Nance had requested the information.
"Kiss me again, you dear thing," Nance commanded. Then she was out of the visitors' room, running for the scene of the excitement in the recreation room. She met the matron hurrying back to the visitors' room, after having quelled the fight by her mere appearance.
"You left me alone," Nance explained, "and that's against the rules. So I followed. I didn't want you to think I'd take advantage of you."
The matron smiled and pinched the girl's cheek. "You funny girl," she said. "You don't belong here and it's a shame you have to be here. You have a fine code of honor, Nance, even if they hang it on you for shoplifting."
She nodded to Lanny as the latter passed out of the building. The guard at the entrance took up her pass, looked her over with a pretense of suspicion, opened the gate and let her through. She climbed into her little car and had just started it when a good-looking but somewhat flashy young woman came to the side of the car and said:
"Are you driving to Greenbrae, madam?"
Lanny nodded. "I wonder if you'd give me a lift that far. The bus doesn't leave for an hour and I—"
"By all means," the generous Lanny agreed, and opened the door. The girl thanked her smilingly and climbed in. Half way down to Greenbrae, her guest said: "I think one of your rear tires is flat, madam."
"I was beginning to think so, too. It's bumpy, isn't it? Oh dear, I loathe changing a tire."
Lanny pulled up to the side of the road and got out, leaving her hand-bag beside her on the seat. Instantly her guest opened it, abstracted the letter Nance had given her and tucked it in her own hand-bag; then got out, and with Lanny surveyed the flat rear tire.

Instantly Her Guest Opened It and Abstracted the Letter.

"I'll help," she promised eagerly. "The least I can do to repay your hospitality."
Between them they shifted the wheels and resumed the journey. At Greenbrae the girl got out and thanked Lanny. No sooner had her little car disappeared behind a curve than the girl waved to a sedan parked in back of the little station and climbed in beside a young man who sat behind the wheel.
"Well?" he queried, apparently without interest.
"It worked," she replied. "Let's go."
CHAPTER IV
Arrived at the little bungalow she occupied in St. Francis Wood, Lanny put her car in the garage, entered her home, and sat down to read Nance Belden's letter. And when she failed to find it she did some of the logical thinking of which she was so eminently capable in situations where her emotions were not being preyed upon.
"Good work," she decided finally. "That girl I picked up on the road to Greenbrae stole it out of my hand-bag when I got out to look at the flat tire. She must have visited Nance before I got there. She was a flashy sort of damsel, too, now that I think of it. An underworld buzzy, doubtless; doubtless, too, known to the police. So Nance had no opportunity to slip her the letter. The matron watched too closely. Nance feared that would be the case, so she had an alternative plan. What a shrewd judge of human nature that girl is! She knew she could work on me, and oh, what a fool I was to permit it! Why, I'm as lawless as she is, only I'm a responsible member of society and she isn't. Nance knew I wouldn't fail to visit her; so she described me to her confederate, who spotted me when I drove up to the main gate and parked my car.
"When the confederate saw me coming back she drove a nail about an inch into my rear tire—simple as two and two are four. The nail was driven all the way in and the air was out before we'd gone a mile. Oh, dear, dear, dear, what a simpton I am! I suppose I ought to do something about this, but then if I do, how can I explain my conduct to the prison officials?"
She realized thoroughly now the extent to which she had been an accessory before the act. What act, she wondered. Well, she would have to keep the details of this adventure to herself. Even Stephen Burt could not share her confidence in this, for Lanny was justly proud of her intelligence and integrity and loathed the thought that a suspicion of either might obtain in the mind of her beloved Stevie. She feared, should he learn of her adventure, that he would never quite trust her again. And that would be unbearable.
That sly mix—telling her she could read the letter before mailing it; that if she did not approve of its contents she was free to destroy it. That was the point upon which the susceptible Lanny had impaled herself.
"Well, it can't be anything so very important," she decided finally. "It couldn't be part of a plan to escape, because escape from that place is impossible. Besides, no woman convict has ever succeeded in escaping from San Quentin. In all probability it was just a private message to one of her old underworld friends. That girl is too intelligent to dream of formulating plans for escape. Why, she couldn't get out of the front gate. She'd have to swim the bay to escape, even if she succeeded in getting through the exit from the woman's quarters and past that suspicious guard in the little house there."
So Lanny made herself a highball and resolved to dismiss all thought of the incident. She also resolved to give Nance Belden a piece of her mind if and when she decided to visit her again. And she was not at all certain she would make Nance another visit.
Two weeks later, while she was sitting before the fire, reading, her telephone rang and a man's voice said:
"In this Miss Rebecca Lanning?"
"Yes, Who is this?"
"Never mind. You wouldn't know me if I told you who I am. I'm a friend of Nance Belden's."
"Oh, indeed?" Ironically. "And who might Nance Belden be?"
Lanny was nobody's fool. On the instant every sense was alert, for if this was a trap set by the authorities, who, in some mysterious way, had gotten wind of her escape, she was resolved not to walk into it.
"Are you going to be at home for an hour, Miss Lanning?" the voice pursued. It was a pleasant enough voice, Lanny reflected.
"I am, but what business is that of yours?"
"Oh, well, if you're going to be such a cutup," the voice rejoined, "I'll bother to argue with you over the phone. I'll come out. Good-by."
He hung up, leaving Lanny in a state of acute mental perturbation, which did not subside until she heard her doorbell ringing some ten minutes later. It subsided then. Her courage always mounted when there was an immediate situation to face. "Nance Belden's friend," she decided instantly.

Fur and Game Production as Business Proposition

A business that pays a 98 per cent dividend is the American fur and game industry. The bureau of biological survey estimates the annual returns from game and fur resources total probably not less than $2,000,000,000, and the amount expended in the protection and increase of fur, fish and game does not exceed 2 per cent of the yearly profits.
Fur and game production is a feasible and practical side line to forest and land conservation, and its increase under control is in no way detrimental to timber production, flood control, water conservation or the prevention of soil erosion, it is declared.
Game management on a timber area may bring profits long before any income from the timber can be realized, it is pointed out. These profits will help to carry the expenses of public or individually owned forests.
In keeping with the policy of the biological survey and other co-operating government agencies in the conservation program, the bureau advises landowners to plant or salvage nut and food-bearing trees and shrubs and to intersperse cover growths and den trees.

The World Court

With a vote of 52 to 36, the great United States Senate put its foot on the President's pet policy and determination to have this country join the World Court. With the lower house mesmerized into his views, the President was quite certain that the Senate would follow suit and add another piece of dictatorial power to the executive's credit.

But such was not the case. As stated above, the overwhelming vote was a sore disappointment to him and is a strong indication that that body is about tired of the trend toward dictatorship and are giving the people to understand that it must be stopped. That action is only a shadow of that which is to come, for soon will come the President's proposition for that four billion, eight hundred million which will, we predict meet the same fate as did the world court stuff.

This country is not ready to again offer its young men on the altar of sacrifice to satisfy the selfish desires of foreign nations which are only interested in us to the extent that when they need us to fight their battles, they may have the leverage to call on us.

The Senate has come to the conclusion that we have had too much of this tinkering with this that and the other polities, fly-by-night experiments and is determined to put a stop to such juggling stunts. — Hurrah for the Senate!

The Lindbergh Case

Not only the people of this country, but over the civilized world, there is a deep-seated opinion that the defendant, Bruno Richard Hauptmann was the kidnaper of baby Lindbergh. The evidence thus far, would so strongly indicate his guilt. But as strong as that evidence really is, it is circumstantial to a large extent, while in other respects there is a positive evidence to assure his guilt. In this particular case when the spectre of kidnaping causes mothers to fold their babies tighter to their breasts, one might say with truthfulness that the world at large is sitting as a jury in this celebrated and pitiful case which has excited international interest.

We have yet to find one individual who believes the defendant innocent; while the prevailing opinion, the world jury, has a fixed belief in his guilt. With no means of communication with that mammoth opinion, the old saying that "it is in the air" will prove, according to our opinion, just what may be expected when the jury of eight men and four women returns its verdict.

"THERE is no reason," said Anthony Rud, "why we should doubt Ordway's word. He has served as my butler and valet for more than ten years. I have always found him honest and upright. I believe what he says."

Inspector Joe Warren looked from the tall, handsome figure of Rud to the stiffly erect, thick-set, bald-headed Ordway. There was on the butler's face an expression of indignation, of bored hauteur.

Warren smiled. "Your ideas were correct, Mr. Rud. Vincent isn't a vicious character. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if, upon investigation, you found him sleeping soundly. The sleep of the just—and innocent."

a long time, and we modestly claim to know something about how to get at a thing like this. We have our methods and they usually work.

Without waiting for a possible report, Warren strode over to the safe and bent to scrutinize its interior. Mr. Rud and his butler exchanged glances.

Warren smiled. "Your ideas were correct, Mr. Rud. Vincent isn't a vicious character. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if, upon investigation, you found him sleeping soundly. The sleep of the just—and innocent."

Warren whirled and pointed an accusing finger at the wife-faced butler. "There's your thief, sir! The man who's been with you ten years and whom you trusted implicitly! The man who was willing to let some one else go to jail for his crime!"

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. F. E. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, 300 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., and Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for February 3

PETER'S RESTORATION

LESSON TEXT—Mark 16:17; Luke 24:34; John 20:1-10; John 21:1-19. GOLDEN TEXT—He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. John 21:17.

As there were seven definite steps in Peter's downfall, so there are seven definite steps in his restoration. These steps in both his downfall and his restoration were most strikingly presented by G. Campbell Morgan at the Bible conference in Northfield in 1893.

Little did Peter realize the testings through which he would be forced to pass. Christ revealed to him that Satan desired to have him to sift as wheat and informed him that he had already prayed for his abiding faith.

His was the guilt of a man bewildered and confused, of inability to understand in what manner his crime had been detected. And Warren, understanding the feeling, smiled in a satisfying manner.

It was difficult not to notice the electric clock in front of the wall safe there, Ordway. I checked its time with my own watch, which is noted for its accuracy; and discovered them to coincide to the second. Which means, of course, that there wasn't any fuse blown at all, for if there had been and the lights were extinguished, the electric clock would have stopped and would now register fifteen minutes slower than mine."

Wandering Folk Players of the Czar's Day Vanish

In the Czar's day there was practically no theater in that part of southeastern Russia—which is now Soviet Uzbekistan, writes Langston Hughes in Asia Magazine. Tashkent had a small Tartar theater and also a poor provincial Russian playhouse for the entertainment of the military and colonial families.

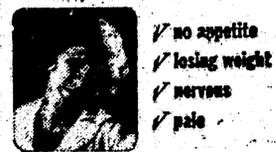

Instead of putting poor Peter on probation before giving him anything to do, he immediately brought him back into fellowship with his Lord in service. It was because Peter passed satisfactorily the examination and the Lord saw his real love for him that he permitted Peter to begin his work.

While Peter had now openly confessed Christ and had received at the Lord's hands his work, he needed to be made willing to drink the bitter cup of suffering for his Lord. Jesus made it clear to him that he was to follow his Lord in crucifixion. He was now willing to suffer the shame of the cross for the glory of God.

One of the chief values of a noble friendship is that it keeps one living at his best. The soul's discovery of God is the greatest moment in the life of any man.

Washington. — Out of President Roosevelt's eight-billion-dollar budget is developing a very Budget Starts real controversy which runs to the heart of the New Deal. True, this controversy like nearly all of the others will not result in changing the President's plans, but it seems to be a matter which justifies consideration even though the Roosevelt will in the end must prevail. Included in the budget was provision for an appropriation of four billion dollars and, as stated by the President, to be supplied "in one sum, subject to allocation by the Executive principally for giving work to those unemployed on the relief rolls." Beyond that, there was no exposition of its intended use nor has there been any detailed statement of the plan. As a result, there is a considerable body of opinion in the halls of congress which is saying in effect that Mr. Roosevelt ought to define his work relief program. He has not done so, and the best information I can obtain is that no explanation may be expected in the near future; he intends to proceed as he has in the past by developing a program piece-meal and using the funds as the occasion requires.

In the critical days of 1933 when Mr. Roosevelt took office, I believe it was generally conceded that the emergency was so serious as to warrant delegation by congress of almost any power even remotely desired by the President. He used that power during 1933 and 1934. Now, many members of the house and senate believe that the time has arrived for congress to become more inquisitive about the expenditure of taxpayers' money and to avoid following in blind trust however the President may direct. While it is probable that congress will not be told how the President intends to use the money and while it is also probable that the requested appropriation of four billion dollars will be rubber stamped, the fact remains that at no time during the New Deal has there been such a buzz of discontent in the President's own list of wheel-horses. Senator Byrnes, the South Carolina Democrat who has been looked upon consistently as Mr. Roosevelt's spokesman on financial affairs in the senate, has informed that body that it is impossible "to be more specific at this time" on the work relief program. Senator Byrnes will go no further. He has given no interviews respecting his own thoughts on the matter and apparently has elected to wait at bat until the President tosses him the ball. Nevertheless, there are some senators who think they detect just a trace of concern in the attitude of this administration spokesman and they are wondering how long he will continue to repress his known energies.

Presentation of the budget was expected in many quarters to disclose the means by which Critics Chide President to get employment going again in private industry. It showed nothing tangible in this direction. Consequently, critics of the administration who have had opportunity to speak in the house and senate have begun to chide the administration on its third experiment in three years. Representative Slick of New York, Republican leader in the house, has called attention to the situation something in this manner: The President tried out one plan in 1933; he tried out a second plan in 1934; and now he is trying a third experiment. The first two were found to be all wet, and the Republicans, it seems, are convinced that the current effort has two strikes on it before it gets started. They are predicting failure for it in every way except the success that is assured in getting rid of money which the treasury is borrowing. Their conversations all have the same theme song, namely that the country is seeing activity, but they are not predicting how long this action can continue until the nation goes broke.

Whether the business leaders who met at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., a month ago were right or wrong in proposing the use of a dole instead of the more expensive work relief plan, or whether they were correct in any of the other recommendations they made, the truth is the administration has rejected without comment every single one of the recommendations made by that group. Mr. Roosevelt made no mention in his budget message or in his annual message to congress of plans for balancing the budget, and this fact at last has sunk in. The result is additional fear on the part of many business leaders who can see in the future only inflation and economic chaos for the country.

Privately, I have heard many expressions indicating that men of wealth are putting their money into tangible property—something that will not dry up and blow away. That is always the refuge of individuals who fear that the currency which their government controls is losing its worth. These men will be criticized for that course, naturally enough, by blind followers of inflation plans.

From all of the signs now visible and from the undercurrent of musing that I hear, it certainly is made to appear that Mr. Roosevelt is confronted with a necessity for some definite outline of his plans and an assurance that he will adhere to those plans. Without such, the situation assuredly is that he will not have the confidence of the business structure. It seems illogical even to suppose that he can gain the co-operation of business in expanding its activities, thereby re-employing workers, unless he takes a different tack than his pronouncements thus far indicate. At least, such is the conclusion of a vast number of thinking people.

I heard a visitor to Washington say the other day that he would like to ride airplanes, "but the confounded things fly most of their schedules at night."

Night Flying
The individual is a man of great wealth and his time is of great value. He insisted he was sincere in his statement that he would much rather save time by flying if the planes were on day-light schedule.

The statement aroused my curiosity to the extent that I conducted some inquiry into the situation. I found the night schedules of the air lines to be due to the fact that they are fixed by the Post Office Department. If a line desires to carry mail it has to subject itself to the dictates of "Big Jim" Farley, the postmaster general. His office can and does say to an air-line that it will fly a ship leaving New York at 9 p. m. or else it does not get the mail contract. The result is that the plane leaves New York at 9 p. m. or it leaves Chicago or Washington or any other city on a time stated by the Post Office Department.

Many persons feel that such a policy is taking undue advantage of private industry. It is true that the Post Office Department is paying for carrying the mails at a rate probably well above the rate it receives in postage on that mail. It is, therefore, a subsidy. But this government has for years maintained a policy of subsidizing new industries and that course is responsible for the success attained by the development of the transportation systems of this country.

The President's special commission named to study the airplane problems of this country and to make recommendations heard much testimony and received much data showing that the airplane industry in the United States had placed this country in the number one position in the air among all nations of the world. Individual members of that commission have stated they regard this as highly beneficial. Some of them at least maintain that development of an air industry was one of the greatest steps taken in national defense preparation. They appeared to consider this one end as justifying the course without even considering the maintenance of a great industry within the borders of our nation as a commercial unit.

But while this has been going on, and while many authorities on economic matters continue to urge development of the air industry, we find another agency within the government placing handicaps on that same segment of the economic structure. The least that can be said is that the courses cannot be reconciled.

The administration is determined to control oil production. If it cannot do so by Executive order —and the Supreme Court of the United States has decreed it cannot do so in that manner—there will be laws predicated upon the Interstate Commerce clauses of the Constitution which will permit the executive branch of the government to keep its hand on the valve of oil wells.

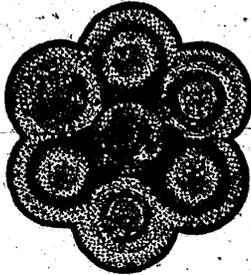

The Oil Case
President Roosevelt apparently was not much concerned over the Supreme court decision which invalidated that part of the recovery act, giving the Chief Executive Authority to allow or prohibit interstate movement of oil as it decided best. This President appeared to feel, in responding to questions by news correspondents, that the rebuff was only temporary. He announced at that time a determination to control oil production in one way or another to avoid what he describes as a criminal waste of a great natural resource.

The oil case, the Supreme court decided, had its origin in regulations and executive orders issued under what the administration believed to be authority accorded by the recovery act. Those regulations and orders prescribed quotas allowed to be shipped from each of the several oil producing states. The motivating spirit was a desire to avoid accumulation of a vast surplus of crude oil with the consequent depressing of prices until crude oil was worth little or nothing. But, like many other prohibitory laws and rules of conduct, individuals resented being told they could not do a certain thing and immediately began to devise ways by which it could be done—a characteristic that was developed to its fullest during the bootleg days of national prohibition. The oil that was moved surreptitiously came to be known as "hot oil," and the controversy over the validity of the regulations and executive orders consequently was called the "hot oil" case.

RUG WELL NAMED "BED OF ROSES"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

The original rug shown measures 44 inches and requires four pounds of rags to complete. It is braided with three strands, but can be crocheted. A crocheted rug has better wearing properties. Many colors are used in the following combinations: Center circle in white, yellow, red, and black. Three of the outer circles in various rust shades. The other three circles in two shades of blue, and yellow. Outer edge is rose, yellow, black.

This rug shows that beautiful rugs can be made of rags. The regulation or common rag rug is either round or oval, with various color combinations, and when finished has no particular beauty. In making the above "Bed of Roses" rug, make seven small round rugs about twelve inches in diameter, and set together as shown here, then work rows all around to size wanted. It's a different rug and only another idea of what can be made of rags.

The best material for making rug rags is "Linkraft." When using this new material no cutting or matching of sizes is necessary. Linkraft is a round knitted material like jersey. It comes in links about five inches long, but stretches to about nine inches when linking together. These links are to be linked together in solid colors or mixed as desired. Linkraft is very durable, does not fray like rag strips and Linkraft rugs weigh about 20% less than rag rugs.

If you are interested in making rag rugs, send for Grandmother Clark's Book No. 25 on Crocheted and Braided Rugs. Twenty-six rugs are illustrated, with instructions. A wonderful selection to pick from when having a good-looking rug in mind.

The Galapagos have been recently in the public eye as a result of a series of extraordinarily bizarre episodes connected with the lives of several unusual characters who had fled from Europe to escape the conventional life.

It was here that Charles Darwin, the celebrated English scientist, made his observations that convinced him of the soundness of his theory of evolution and prompted the writing of that monumental work, "The Origin of Species," early in the Nineteenth century. The islands have undergone no change since Darwin came.

HEIGHT OF ANGELS

The customs authorities of one of the central European states have been engaged in a very interesting controversy. A sculptor entering their country objected to paying duty on a statue of an angel, which, he said, he had no intention of selling. Under the rules, he was told, works of art of this type were only exempt if they weighed over ten pounds and were at least life-size.

But what, in the case of an angel, was life-size? The statue was five feet high, but the customs officials were quite sure an angel was taller than that. So, in spite of his protests, the sculptor had to pay.

He really can't grumble, because the best authorities seem to agree that, while angels can change their height and general appearance at will, they are normally considerably over five feet.

This appears not only from Milton's "Paradise Lost," but also from details given by the learned men of the Jews. According to them some angels, at least, are nearly 8,000 miles high, and one of them, Sandalfon, is described as "taller than the fellows by the length of a journey of 500 years."

CONSTIPATION Can be Helped!

(Use what Doctors do)

Why do the bowels, usually move regularly and thoroughly, long after a physician has given you treatment for constipation?

Because the doctor gives a liquid laxative that can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Ask your doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit—even in children. Your druggist has it; ask for—

Velvet Hostess Gown Is Favorite

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

EVERY hostess owes it to herself and to her home to look her most charming when entertaining, and the way to do it is to wear velvet.

In the picture, red velvet and gold cord is the formula for this beautiful creation. The neckline is gathered on a gold cord which is repeated at the front of the gold braided girdle.

It is good style to use contrasting velvets for the hostess gown. We have in mind such fetching combinations as dark green velvet with a bright tangerine velvet girdle, also tangerine velvets for the long winglike sleeves.

Typical of the newest trends in hostess gowns are the three lovely fashions pictured. The center model, which is so sweetly simple yet so utterly so sophisticated when it comes to meeting the demands of a fastidious mode.

BY THE CLOCK

By R. H. WILKINSON

"THERE is no reason," said Anthony Rud, "why we should doubt Ordway's word. He has served as my butler and valet for more than ten years. I have always found him honest and upright. I believe what he says."

Inspector Joe Warren looked from the tall, handsome figure of Rud to the stiffly erect, thick set, bald-headed Ordway.

There was on the butler's face an expression of indignation, of bored hauteur.

Somehow Warren got the idea that Ordway thought him a bit coarse and crude in his manners and appearance; and the thought annoyed him.

He did not address the serving man, turned instead to inspect the room.

It was a spacious room, tastefully and expensively appointed.

There was a large table in its center, priceless portraits on the wall, a huge bookcase, a radio, an electric clock atop a stand of its own in a corner.

Behind the clock there was a wall safe, the door of which now stood open.

Warren strode over to the safe and appeared to glance inside.

Presently he turned, addressing Anthony Rud.

"Your jewels were kept in this safe, Mr. Rud?"

"I placed them there early this evening, having purchased them in the late afternoon. Tomorrow I planned to transfer them to my safe deposit box until such time as I wished to dispose of them."

"And after dinner this evening you went out? You returned home about a half hour ago." He glanced at the clock. "About 11:30, and found the safe open and the jewels gone?"

"Yes, that's right."

"Who was in the house during your absence?"

"Ordway and a man named Tyler Vincent. He's the cook and Ordway's general helper."

"Where is he now?"

"Presumably asleep in his room on the third floor."

"Humm." Inspector Warren tugged at the lobe of his left ear and contemplated. He turned to Ordway.

"Ordway, your manner seems to think highly of you. Hence I will take it for granted that your character is above reproach. I hope you won't mind answering frankly a few questions."

"Not at all, sir. I have every wish to recover the jewelry."

"Good. Now, first of all, were you in the house all the time during Mr. Rud's absence?"

"Yes, sir. Save for a brief spell when I went into the cellar to replace a fuse that had blown during the thunder shower we had, shortly after Mr. Rud's departure."

"How long were you gone?"

"Ten minutes. Possibly fifteen."

"And the lights were out during that time?"

"Yes, sir."

"How long was it after your return above stairs that you discovered the theft?"

Ordway reflected.

"It must have been about thirty minutes. I had come into the library with the intention of reading until Mr. Rud's return. I neglected at once that the safe was open, and upon investigation discovered that the jewels were missing. I immediately called police headquarters and then summoned Mr. Rud from his club."

Warren nodded thoughtfully.

"Then you think it likely that the theft occurred during the time the lights were out and you were below stairs?"

"Very likely, sir."

"In that event," said Warren, "it is also very likely that the man who committed the crime was familiar with the interior of the house. He would have had to work fast in order to accomplish his deed during the brief time that Ordway was below stairs."

Warren paused and eyed the butler closely.

"Ordway, would you think it possible to believe that some one arranged to have that fuse blown—took advantage of the thunder shower as a likely alibi—and looted the safe during your absence?"

Ordway looked uneasy. "I wouldn't dare say, sir."

Warren nodded.

a long time, and we modestly claim to know something about how to get at a thing like this. We have our methods and they usually work.

Without waiting for a possible report, Warren strode over to the safe and bent to scrutinize its interior.

Mr. Rud and his butler exchanged glances.

It wasn't often that the master of the house was so completely dismissed without being given a chance to assert himself.

A testy retort had formed in his mind and he was on the point of speaking, when footsteps sounded on the stairs, and Bradley appeared in the arched doorway.

The detective carried a package in his hand.

Warren, a satisfied smile on his lips, relieved his chief of the package and handed it to Rud.

"Your jewels, Mr. Rud, and I believe you'll find them all intact."

The tall man blinked, gulped and stared incredulously.

"Why—why," he stammered, "this is miraculous! I say, how in the world were you so sure that Vincent was the guilty man. Why, drat his hide, I'll clap him in jail for this! I had no idea he was such a vicious character!"

Warren smiled.

"Your ideas were correct, Mr. Rud. Vincent isn't a vicious character. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if, upon investigation, you found him sleeping soundly. The sleep of the just—and innocent."

"But—but I don't understand. These jewels—you found them in his room, did you not?"

"On the contrary, Mr. Rud, we did not! We found them in Ordway's room, which I instructed Jim to search five minutes ago!"

Warren whirled and pointed an accusing finger at the white-faced butler.

"There's your thief, sir! The man who's been with you ten years and whom you trusted implicitly! The man who was willing to let some one else go to jail for his crime!"

There was no mistaking the expression of guilt that flashed across Ordway's face, an expression which he immediately tried to obliterate by a poor attempt at blustering.

His was the guilt of a man bewildered and confused, of inability to understand in what manner his crime had been detected.

And Warren, understanding the feeling, smiled in a satisfying manner.

He no longer felt that his manners were regarded as coarse and crude.

And the sensation of having triumphed was pleasant.

But at least he said:

"It was difficult not to notice the electric clock in front of the wall safe there, Ordway. I checked its time with my own watch, which is noted for its accuracy; and discovered them to coincide to the second. Which means, of course, that there wasn't any fuse blown at all, for if there had been and the lights were extinguished, the electric clock would have stopped and would now register fifteen minutes slower than mine."

Wandering Folk Players of the Czar's Day Vanish

In the Czar's day there was practically no theater in that part of southern Russia which is now Soviet Uzbekistan, writes Langston Hughes in Asia Magazine.

Tashkent had a small Tartar theater and also a poor provincial Russian playhouse for the entertainment of the military and colonial families.

But the Uzbek masses, unlettered as they were, contented themselves with folk music and jugglers, magicians and other outdoor performers.

These wandering folk performers are rapidly disappearing, some of them being absorbed into the state circuses and others into the modern theater.

Some have gone even as far as Odessa and Leningrad to perform for distant audiences in indoor circuses.

Gone, too, are the dorvos, native ropewalkers who used to perform in the public squares.

Czozozif, an old musician whom I met, told me that he had never heard of any European ropewalkers as skillful as these dorvos.

They worked on high ropes with no protecting nets and crowds of people below them. Among them were accomplished dancers doing graceful steps in mid-air.

Makes Goods Fireproof The chemicals that make wood and fabric fire-resistant are such water-soluble salts as ammonium sulphate, ammonium phosphate, ammonium bromide, sodium tungstate, sodium molybdate, borax-boric acid, or a mixture of these.

All of these have one property in common," explains an authority. "When heated they fuse before the gases evolved by the decomposition of the wood can ignite. The fibers are thus covered with a protective coating impervious to air."

Lesson for February 3

PETER'S RESTORATION

LESSON TEXT—Mark 16:17; Luke 24:34; John 20:11-10; John 21:11-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. John 21:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Helped Peter Try Again.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Peter Learned When He Failed.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Prove Our Love for Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Test of Loyalty.

As there were seven definite steps in Peter's downfall, so there are seven definite steps in his restoration. These steps in both his downfall and his restoration were most strikingly presented by G. Campbell Morgan at the Bible conference in Northfield in 1908.

I. Christ's Prayer for Peter (Luke 22:31, 32).

Little did Peter realize the testings through which he would be forced to pass. Christ revealed to him that Satan desired to have him to sift as wheat and informed him that he had already prayed for his abiding faith.

We see that before Peter fell the Lord began the preparation for his reclamation. The Lord knew that soon he would have to announce to him that before the cock crew he would deny him thrice.

11. The Look of Jesus (Luke 22:61, 62).

This look was not one of contempt, but one, doubtless, filled with pity and pain. It revealed the heart of God. It brought to Peter the full consciousness of his cowardice and disloyalty and his blasphemous words of denial, while at the same time displaying Christ's love and pity.

11. Christ's Message Through the Women (Mark 16:7).

The Lord's message was "Go tell my disciples and Peter." Had the message merely been, "Go tell my disciples," Peter would have believed himself not included. The message indicated that Christ had particular consideration for him and loved him still.

What new hope filled Peter's heart as he heard this message from the risen Lord is seen in his words: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pet. 1:3).

IV. A Personal Interview With the Risen Lord (Luke 24:34).

The declaration is here made that the risen Lord had appeared to Simon. The nature of the conversation is hidden in mystery. It may be that the Lord reminded him of his boasting self-confidence, his warning himself at the enemies' fire and his blasphemy, but only to assure him of his unchanging love and that the Cross which he shunned was the very means of covering up his grievous sins (Luke 24:34; cf. John 20:1-10).

Peter's Open Confession of Love (John 21:15-17).

The disciples had gone back to their fishing. As they returned weary and hungry Christ invited them to breakfast. In connection with this ministry of providing food and warmth, Jesus, by skillful questions, induced Peter to confess him three times.

A vital step in Peter's restoration was his professing anew his love for his Lord. What marvelous grace, that the one who had across the fire of the enemy denied his Lord should now across the fire prepared by the Lord thrice confess his love for his Lord.

VI. His Word Given Back (John 21:17, 18).

Instead of putting poor Peter on probation before giving him anything to do, he immediately brought him back into fellowship with his Lord in service. It was because Peter passed satisfactorily the examination and the Lord saw his real love for him that he permitted Peter to begin his work.

VII. Willingness to Suffer for Christ (John 21:18, 19).

While Peter had now openly confessed Christ and had received at the Lord's hands his work, he needed to be made willing to drink the bitter cup of suffering for his Lord. Jesus made it clear to him that he was to follow his Lord in crucifixion. He was now willing to suffer the shame of the cross for the glory of God. Peter, with the other disciples, later counted it joy that they were counted worthy to suffer (Acts 5:41). It was the Cross of Christ over which Peter bled.

After his restoration his greatest happiness was to suffer for Christ's sake.

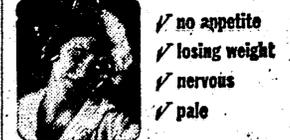

Meekness Meekness is more than the absence of self-assertion; it is the manifestation of the mighty power of God.

WATCH YOUR KIDNEYS! Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering impurities from the blood stream. But kidneys get functionally disturbed—lag in their work—fail to remove the poisonous body wastes.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, attacks of dizziness, burning, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains; feel "all worn out."

Don't delay! For the quicker you get rid of these poisons, the better your chances of good health.

Use Doan's Pills. They are for the kidneys only. They tend to promote normal functioning of the kidneys; should help them pass off the irritating poisons. Doan's are recommended by users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

Washington. — Out of President Roosevelt's eight-billion-dollar budget is developing a very real controversy Budget Starts Controversy which runs to the heart of the New Deal. True, this controversy like nearly all of the others will not result in changing the President's plans, but it seems to me to be a matter which justifies consideration even though the Roosevelt will in the end must prevail.

Included in the budget was provision for an appropriation of four billion dollars and, as stated by the President, to be supplied "in one sum, subject to allocation by the Executive principally for giving work to those unemployed on the relief rolls." Beyond that, there was no exposition of its intended use nor has there been any detailed statement of the plan. As a result, there is a considerable body of opinion in the halls of congress which is saying in effect that Mr. Roosevelt ought to define his work relief program. He has not done so, and the best information I can obtain is that no explanation may be expected in the near future; he intends to proceed as he has in the past by developing a program piece-meal and using the funds as the occasion requires.

In the critical days of 1933 when Mr. Roosevelt took office, I believe it was generally conceded that the emergency was so serious as to warrant delegation by congress of almost any power even remotely desired by the President. He used that power during 1933 and 1934. Now, many members of the house and senate believe that the time has arrived for congress to become more inquisitive about the expenditure of taxpayers' money and to avoid following in blind trust however the President may direct. While it is probable that congress will not be told how the President intends to use the money and while it is also probable that the requested appropriation of four billion dollars will be rubber stamped, the fact remains that at no time during the New Deal has there been such a buzz of discontent in the President's own list of wheel-horses. Senator Byrnes, the South Carolina Democrat who has been looked upon consistently as Mr. Roosevelt's spokesman on financial affairs in the senate, has informed that body that it is impossible "to be more specific at this time" on the work relief program. Senator Byrnes will go no further. He has given no interviews respecting his own thoughts on the matter and apparently has elected to wait at bat until the President tosses him the ball. Nevertheless, there are some senators who think they detect just a trace of concern in the attitude of this administration spokesman and they are wondering how long he will continue to repress his known energies.

Presentation of the budget was expected in many quarters to disclose the means by which the President hoped Critics Chide President to get employment going again in private industry. It showed nothing tangible in this direction. Consequently, critics of the administration who have had opportunity to speak in the house and senate have begun to chide the administration on its third experiment in three years. Representative Smith of New York, Republican leader in the house, has called attention to the situation something in this manner: The President tried out one plan in 1933; he tried out a second plan in 1934, and now he is trying a third experiment. The first two were found to be all wet, and the Republicans, it seems, are convinced that the current effort has two strikes on it before it gets started. They are predicting failure for it in every way except the success that is assured in getting rid of money which the treasury is borrowing. Their conversations all have the same theme song, namely that the country is seeing activity, but they are not predicting how long this action can continue until the nation goes broke.

Whether the business leaders who met at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., a month ago were right or wrong in proposing the use of a dote instead of the more expensive work relief plan, or whether they were correct in any of the other recommendations they made, the truth is the administration has rejected without comment every single one of the recommendations made by that group. Mr. Roosevelt made no mention in his budget message or in his annual message to congress of plans for balancing the budget, and this fact at last has sunk in. The result is additional fear on the part of many business leaders who can see in the future only inflation and economic chaos for the country.

Privately, I have heard many expressions indicating that men of wealth are putting their money into tangible property—something that will not dry up and blow away. That is always the refuge of individuals who fear that the currency which their government controls is losing its worth. These men will be criticized for that course, naturally enough, by blind followers of inflation plans.

From all of the signs now visible and from the undercurrent of mumbly that I hear, it certainly is made to appear that Mr. Roosevelt is confronted with a necessity for some definite outline of his plans and an assurance that he will adhere to those plans. Without such, the situation assuredly is that he will not have the confidence of the business structure. It seems illogical even to suppose that he can gain the co-operation of business in expanding its activities, thereby re-employing workers, unless he takes a different tack than his pronouncements thus far indicate. At last, such is the conclusion of a vast number of thinking people.

I heard a visitor to Washington say the other day that he would like to ride airplanes, "but the confounded things fly most of their schedules at night."

Night Flying

The individual is a man of great wealth and his time is of great value. He insisted he was sincere in his statement that he would much rather save time by flying if the planes were on day-light schedule.

The statement aroused my curiosity to the extent that I conducted some inquiry into the situation. I found the night schedules of the air lines to be due to the fact that they are fixed by the Post Office department. If a line desires to carry mail it has to subject itself to the dictates of "Big Jim" Farley, the postmaster general. His office can and does say to an air line that it will fly a ship leaving New York at 9 p. m. or else it does not get the mail contract. The result is that the plane leaves New York at 9 p. m. or it leaves Chicago or Washington or any other city on a time stated by the Post Office department.

Many persons feel that such a policy is taking undue advantage of private industry. It is true that the Post Office department is paying for carrying the mails at a rate probably well above the rate it receives in postage on that mail. It is, therefore, a subsidy. But this government has for years maintained a policy of subsidizing new industries and that course is responsible for the success attained by the development of the transportation systems of this country.

The President's special commission named to study the airplane problems of this country and to make recommendations heard much testimony and received much data showing that the airplane industry in the United States had placed this country in the number one position in the air among all nations of the world. Individual members of that commission have stated they regard this as highly beneficial. Some of them at least maintain that development of an air industry was one of the greatest steps taken in national defense preparation. They appeared to consider this one end as justifying the course without even considering the maintenance of a great industry within the borders of our nation as a commercial unit.

But while this has been going on, and while many authorities on economic matters continue to urge development of the air industry, we find another agency within the government placing handicaps on that same segment of the economic structure. The least that can be said is that the courses cannot be reconciled.

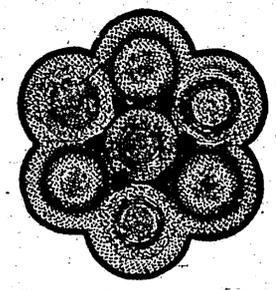

The administration is determined to control oil production. If it cannot do so by Executive order — and the Supreme Court of the United States has decreed it cannot do so in that manner — there will be laws predicated upon the interstate commerce clauses of the Constitution which will permit the executive branch of the government to keep its hand on the valve of oil wells.

President Roosevelt apparently was not much concerned over the Supreme court decision which invalidated that part of the recovery act giving the Chief Executive authority to allow or prohibit interstate movement of oil as it decided best. The President appeared to feel, in responding to questions by news correspondents, that the rebuff was only temporary. He announced at that time a determination to control oil production in one way or another to avoid what he describes as a criminal waste of a great natural resource.

The oil case, the Supreme court decided, had its origin in regulations and executive orders issued under what the administration believed to be authority accorded by the recovery act. Those regulations and orders prescribed quotas allowed to be shipped from each of the several oil producing states. The motivating spirit was a desire to avoid accumulation of a vast surplus of crude oil with the consequent depressing of prices until crude oil was worth little or nothing. But, like many other prohibitory laws and rules of conduct, individuals resented being told they could not do a certain thing and immediately began to devise ways by which it could be done — a characteristic that was developed to its fullest during the bootleg days of national prohibition. The oil that was moved surreptitiously came to be known as "hot oil" — and the controversy over the validity of the regulations and executive orders consequently was called the "hot oil" case.

RUG WELL NAMED "BED OF ROSES"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

The original rug shown measures 44 inches and requires four pounds of rags to complete. It is braided with three strands, but can be crocheted. A crocheted-rug has better wearing properties. Many colors are used in the following combinations: Center circle in white, yellow, red, and black. Three of the outer circles in various rust shades. The other three circles in two shades of blue, and yellow. Outer edge is rose, yellow, black.

This rug shows that beautiful rugs can be made of rags. The regulation or common rug rug is either round or oval, with various color combinations, and when finished has no particular beauty. In making the above "Bed of Roses" rug, make seven small round rugs about twelve inches in diameter, and set together as shown here, then work rows all around to size wanted. It's a different rug and only another idea of what can be made of rags.

The best material for making rug rugs is "Linkraft." When using this new material no cutting or matching of sizes is necessary. Linkraft is a round knitted material like jersey. It comes in links about five inches long, but stretches to about nine inches when linking together. These links are to be linked together in solid colors or mixed as desired. Linkraft is very durable, does not fray like rag-strips and Linkraft rugs weigh about 20% less than rag rugs.

If you are interested in making

rag rugs, send for Grandmother Clark's Book No. 25 on Crocheted and Braided Rugs. Twenty-six rugs are illustrated, with instructions. A wonderful selection to pick from when having a good-looking rug in mind.

Send 15c to Rug Department for Book No. 25.

Unchanged by Time

The Galapagos have been recently in the public eye as a result of a series of extraordinarily bizarre episodes connected with the lives of several unusual characters who had fled from Europe to escape the conventional life.

It was here that Charles Darwin, the celebrated English scientist, made his observations that convinced him of the soundness of his theory of evolution and prompted the writing of that monumental work, the Origin of Species, early in the Nineteenth century. The islands have undergone no change since Darwin came.

HEIGHT OF ANGELS

The customs authorities of one of the central European states have been engaged in a very interesting controversy. A sculptor entering their country objected to paying duty on a statue of an angel, which, he said, he had no intention of selling. Under the rules, he was told, works of art of this type were only exempt if they weighed over ten pounds and were at least life-size.

But what, in the case of an angel, was life-size? The statue was five feet high, but the customs officials were quite sure an angel was taller than that. So, in spite of his protests, the sculptor had to pay.

He really can't grumble, because the best authorities seem to agree that, while angels can change their height and general appearance at will, they are normally considerably over five feet.

This appears not only from Milton's "Paradise Lost," but also from details given by the learned men of the Jews. According to them some angels, at least, are nearly 8,000 miles high, and one of them, Sandal
