Of interest to Ancho Visitors

Carrizozo people are frequent visitors at Ancho, but many are not aware of the fact that they now have a place where one or many may enjoy a rest and refreshments while in our neighboring town. At "Bill's Place" you may have oysters served in any style and special lunches of all kinds. Quick and satisfactory service is Bill's motto. When you go to Ancho, be sure to give Bill a call and hurry back. Paste this in your hat so that it will be a constant reminder. Bill's tellin' YOU!

Among our subscribers from out-of-town this week, we have a nice letter from Miss Hortense E. Payne, former resident of Carrizozo, but now residing at Clarkburg, W. Va. Miss Payne is still a great booster for her former home state and among other things of importance she says, "why go to Europe when there's so much to see in New Mexico." In that statement Miss Payne speaks from experience, from the fact that she has paid many visits to foreign lands, but prefers the Sunshine State to climate and scenery across the seas. She loves the New Mexico Magazine. She also likes her Outlook—that's queer, isn't it?

W. F. "Bill" Eslow and Jesse Vandevort were here from Ancho yesterday on business. Bill has some information for Ancho visitors and you may read it in his ad.

Carrizozo Lodge No. 30 will have a competent instructor here on Nov. 26. He will be at the Hall for the purpose of giving instructions to all who may wish to avail themselves of the opportunity. D. N. Bonnell

Last Saturday morning, D. N. Bonnell of San Patricio, made arrangements to take his daughter to Capitan, but before they were ready, the home folks noticed him, as was his custom, taking a stroll toward the orchard. Finally, they heard a shot and hurrying to where the shot directed them, they found him dying from a bullet hole in the head. The presumption is that Mr. Bonnell, who always carried a gun, had sighted something at which he wished to shoot and stumbling, it was accidentally discharged.

Mr. Bonnell was a successful farmer of the lower valley, where he had resided for the past 30 years at the head of one of the most prominent and highly esteemed families of that locality. He was a brother to Bert Bonnell, owner of the Bonnell Ranch at Glencoe. The family have the sympathy of their many friends over the county, where they are so well known.

"Stranger Than Fiction"

A fiend incarnate has been discovered in California. His name is Wm. Van Cleave. Because his wife did not cook exactly to suit him, he kept her imprisoned in his home for five years, feeding her nothing but bread and water. When found and released by the police, she was in a demented condition and it took three officers to quiet her. Worst of all; a board of physicians pronounced Van Cleave sane.

Near the chapel altar at Rosary college in suburban forest, at Chicago, a giant candle is burning, dedicated to everlasting international peace and brotherhood. The candle will burn for 100 years, but it wouldn't last a minute in Italy or Ethiopia.

In 1885 pioneers of west Texas had barber shops, but had to make their chairs. In one town, a long-eared barber had a home made chair perched on top of a keg of beer. When he had his customer out of chair, he would draw him a glass. When the keg was empty, a fresh one took its place. Business was always good because the boys liked to "listen to it fizz!" with apologies to the radio announcer.

Away down in the lower part of Norway is the prettiest little town in that country. The name of the town is 'Hell.' A German lives there by the name of Tefel which being interpreted, means Devil. A shoemaker by the name of Flame is president of a local fraternal order known as 'Chamber of Horror.' James Torment, said to be the most tender-hearted man in town, is chief of police. How would you like to go to 'Hell'?

Rev. J. A. Bell, Pastor

We are making Sunday the beginning service of the year and are extending an invitation to both men and women, especially the men of the Business Men's Club and the different fraternal organizations. The subject for Sunday morning will be, "The Absolute Proofs of God and Immortality."

Rev. Bell and family express their appreciation for the kindly reception given them by the people of Carrizozo. We will strive to merit the confidence reposed in us. Again we thank you.

The "no ketch 'em" society, has increased its membership this season. Ed Kelley, who has never failed in years gone by to be one of the first on record, is now President of the above-named organization. Jess Roberts, the great bear hunter, is also a member; Pat Dolan, we understand, is one of the new recruits. The "no ketch 'em" boys hold regular meetings and tell about how they 'just grazed him,' etc.—They are 'regusted' workmanship.

Mrs. T. A. Spencer and Mrs. Paul Mayer presided at the tea table where an array of delicious little cakes, sandwiches and canapés were laid out. They were assisted by Mmes. Blaney, Allen, Grumbles, Cleghorn, Elliott and Miss Lair.

The Club was delighted by the presence of Mrs. William C. McDonald, and to show their appreciation, presented her with a bouquet of huge yellow 'mums.

Art Tea

An Art Tea was given by the Woman's Club at the home of Mrs. R. E. Lemon Friday afternoon, Nov. 15.

After a short business session, the meeting was turned over to Mrs. Ben S. Burns for the presentation of her program. A piano solo — the Norwegian Bridal March — by Miss Ruth Petty, was delightfully given, as was a vocal quartet — On the Lagoon — by the Senior Girls' Quartet.

A talk by the Rev. E. Smith of Fort Stanton, who made The Use of Art in Religious Education, his topic, was greatly appreciated by the Club. In connection with his talk, he displayed two small wooden statuettes, a woolen apron from Bulgaria, and a Russian icon. The woolen apron was quite like one of our own Navajo rugs

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for November 17

THE RETURN FROM CAPTIVITY

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 1:1-6; Psalm 124:1-8.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. Psalm 124:8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A New Song.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Coming Home Rejoicing.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a Fresh Start.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Thanksgiving for God's Care.

1. The Return Predicted (Ezra 1:1-6).

It seems that false prophets were flourishing in Babylon, telling the people that they would speedily be restored to their own land. To counteract this the Lord moved Jeremiah to send this letter to the captives in Babylon (Ezra 1:1-6). In this letter he advised them to settle down and quietly pursue their regular callings of life and not to be led astray by the false prophets (Ezra 1:7).

1. The length of the captivity (v. 10). Their coming back was to be "after seventy years." From Daniel 9:2 it is clear that seventy years means a definite time. It dates from the time when the first company was taken captive, among which Daniel was found.

2. Recovered by God (Ezra 1:10-14). God's purpose in the captivity was to cure them of their idolatrous practices. He assured them that when his purpose was accomplished he would visit them and convince them of his good purpose toward them. Their captivity he would turn away, gather them from all the nations, and bring them into their own land.

II. The Predicted Captivity Fulfilled (Ezra 1:1-6).

1. The proclamation of Cyrus (Ezra 1:1-4).

a. This was not by accident, but that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled (v. 1). What God has promised he will do; he never forgets.

b. By divine initiation (v. 1). "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." How this was done we do not know. Possibly Daniel brought to his attention the prophecy of Isaiah and Jeremiah (Isa. 44:28; Jer. 25:12). Every impulse to do good in all men is caused by the Lord. It may have been that Cyrus only saw his own action as a piece of statecraft—the creation of a buffer nation between his kingdom and that of Egypt.

c. The content of his proclamation (v. 2-4).

(1) "The Lord God of heaven hath charged me to build him a house in Jerusalem" (v. 2). This makes clear that he had some impression of God's hand upon him.

(2) Appeal to Jewish patriotism (v. 3). He invokes upon such as possess the national religious feeling, the blessing of God, and commands them to go and build the house of the Lord God.

(3) Lend assistance (v. 4). Many of the Jews were established in business and therefore were not free to go. Many, no doubt, had lost their national spirit and therefore did not desire to go. All such were to lend friendly assistance in silver, gold, and beasts.

2. The response to Cyrus' proclamation (v. 5, 6). The chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin and the priests and Levites presented themselves as willing and ready to go. The company which returned was largely made up of representatives of Judah and Benjamin.

3. The royal favor (v. 7-11). Cyrus brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had carried away from Jerusalem and put into the house of his gods. Now to have 5,400 of these vessels returned to their owners and sent back to Jerusalem to be put to their original use, met a hearty response by the Jews.

III. The Gladness and Rejoicing of the Returning Exiles (Ezra 1:12-6).

1. The proclamation of Cyrus as a dream (v. 1). They recognized that their going back was through the favor of the Lord.

2. Their laughter and singing (v. 2, 3). They not only recognized this as the favor of the Lord upon them, but testified thereof in the hearing of the heathen round about them.

3. Their prayer for prosperity in the land (v. 4). They were not only going back with the consciousness of the good hand of the Lord upon them, but were trusting him for fruitfulness of the land.

4. Sowing in tears (v. 5, 6). The seed which they were to sow in the land was so precious that they seemed to have hesitated as to sowing, and yet they recognized that joy would follow their sorrow as they brought with them the sheaves of the harvest.

Monotony

Whether we are rich or poor, we all have to fight against monotony—doing the same thing over and over until it loses interest.

We can fight monotony with variety, and one way to do this is by making a wise use of leisure. If we wish to avoid the feeling that we are merely machines, we must become interested in many things.

Fattness

Fattiness is better, but its fruit sweet, however.

Silo Good Place for Winter Hays

Most Legumes Are Excellent for Dairy Cows When Handled Right

By W. E. Norris, Associate Chief in Dairy Cattle Feeding, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois—WNU Service.

Since hay mows are already bulging with good legume hay, allow probably will be pressed into the unusual service of furnishing storage space for much of the additional hay crops being raised this year.

Contrary to the popular opinion, most legume hays make excellent silage for dairy cows if handled in the right way. Alfalfa, soybeans and the various clovers, all of which are in abundance in the state this year, can be made into palatable, nutritious silage.

The only difficulty with legumes as silage is that they will develop a strong, unpleasant odor and become unpalatable if put into the silo too green. This is caused by deterioration of the large amount of protein in such crops. This condition not only reduces the feeding value of the silage but also is likely to taint the milk, since the odor will pervade the entire barn. Some of the taint also is carried to the milk from the silage eaten by the cows.

Allowing the legume hay to wilt and dry out after it is cut will help prevent the unpleasant odor and taste. The surest method of preventing the development of these damaging qualities, however, is to mix fairly green corn with the legumes half-and-half by weight or not less than one load of green corn to two loads of legumes. The additional sugar in the corn causes an acid, to form, thus preventing deterioration of the protein and the development of the bad taste and smell.

Another method which may be used where green corn is not available is to mix black strap or sugar beet molasses with the hay at the rate of 1 to 2 per cent, or 20 to 40 pounds to the ton.

Use Cull Sweet Potatoes as Feed for Dairy Cows

Unmarketable sweet potatoes may be fed to dairy cattle with excellent results, says R. H. Ruffner, head of the animal husbandry department at North Carolina State college.

Both the tubers and the vines make a good, palatable feed which will produce milk and butter of high quality.

But live stock men can afford to feed only cull potatoes or those which cannot be marketed for human consumption at a fairly good price, Ruffner pointed out.

Sweet potatoes contain about one-fourth the total feed value of an equal weight of corn. Consequently, dairy-men cannot afford to allow more than one-fourth the price of corn for the sweet potatoes.

Sweet potatoes may be fed cows in place of corn silage. Since there are 25 pounds of digestible nutrients in 100 pounds of potatoes, while an equal weight of silage contains only 17 pounds, the cows will not need as much potato feed as silage.

When sweet potatoes are fed, the cows should also get eight to ten pounds of legume hay to balance the ration, as potatoes consist mostly of starch and sugar, Ruffner stated.

Herd Sire Important

A healthy, registered bull displaying quality in a high degree and at the same time representing approved type for the breed selected is needed to head the grade herd being maintained for the production of beef. Although such a sire may have proved satisfactory, it becomes necessary after a few years to replace him because he has outlived his usefulness or must be removed to avoid inbreeding. Better results will then be obtained with a bull of similar blood lines, provided, of course, that he has desirable quality, scale, and conformation. This practice tends toward the production of calves of uniform type and quality. It is, therefore, an aid both in the selling of stock and in selecting heifers raised on the farm to replace the cows in the herd.—Missouri Farmer.

Ration for Dairy Cow

Each dairy cow offers a different problem and the amount of grain needed can be determined only by the milk records. In addition to all the roughage, including hay and silage, that the animal will eat she is given sufficient grain for maximum production. To determine the proper amount, according to the North Carolina State college, the grain ration should be gradually increased and the daily milk sheet carefully checked. When the milk production is not increased then the grain should be decreased. A check of both increase and decrease of grain will soon show the proper amount for profitable production.

Short Furrows

Horses and mules, for the most part, relish cottonseed meal mixed with their corn.

Manure is not a fertilizer, it is merely a soil amendment and would be useful on a field where soil was more or less acid.

Approximately 45 per cent of American farmers rent all the land they farm, according to the Department of Agriculture.

Marriage Is Insurance Against Most Everything

A married man lives longer and is less likely to end up in the workhouse than a bachelor. So says Edwin S. Burdell, professor of economics and social science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The professor is further of the opinion, based on his studies of the subject, that married men commit few crimes and less often go insane. The unmarried man has less at stake in the community because he has a lower status. Marriage is the best insurance in the world—insurance against crime, insanity, poverty and premature death.

I FEEL FINE

Mothers read this:

A CONSTIPATED child is so easily straightened out, it's a pity more mothers don't know the remedy.

A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be given to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.

This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult. Doctors use liquid laxatives. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. And today, there are fully a million families that will have no other kind in the house.

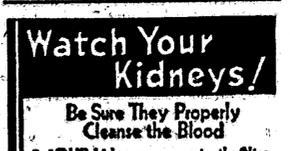

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a doctor's prescription, now so widely known that you can get it all ready for use at any drugstore.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained. Don't delay? Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any drugget.

stays oiled

Today you can use a winter oil which builds itself right into the "innards" of your engine. That is, a certain portion of Conoco Germ Processed Oil really forms a BOND with metals, and stays on continuous duty where all the worst friction used to come.

This uncanny action, created by the patented Conoco Germ Process, automatically wipes out the costliest winter wear . . .

"Dry," unlubricated, wracking starts? . . . Not with the oil that's Germ Processed to stay up on the job every minute, every hour, every day that you park—whatever the weather! . . . Not when Germ Processed Oil has become a part of all metal surfaces . . . Not with the Hidden Quat, which has enabled many an engine to run with the crankcase absolutely empty—in verified show-down tests.

And this same patented Germ Process means extra protection not only for the conventional babbit bearings, but for the newest bearings—whether copper-lead, high-lead or cadmium-alloy. Germ Processing also creates the high-durability oil film . . . hence a light, free-flowing winter oil that's tougher too, for the toughest going of all the year. You and your Conoco man can make this whole winter "act gentle" to your motor, beginning today. Drive in.

Billy Sunday and the Sawdust Trail

The passing of the noted evangelist Billy Sunday last week, recalls many interesting episodes in the life of the man who arose from the baseball field to be one of the greatest preachers the world has ever known.

The writer knew Billy Sunday, first forming his acquaintance in Burlington, Iowa, and again meeting him at Galesburg, Ill.; where he conducted a series of meetings similar to those he held in all parts of the country.

In response to a request made by Billy Sunday, the writer allowed him to bring his singers and preach a sermon to an audience composed of 65 employees in the large industrial plant of Adams & Johnson Co., of that city.

As those who knew the evangelist will agree, he would carry on a conversation on any subject without injecting religion into his talk. He would speak freely with you on baseball, football, golf, boxing, rowing and in fact all kinds of sport—but baseball was his hobby. Billy saved his religious talks for under the tent and on the sawdust.

As Dr. Timothy Stone said at the last sad rites, he was loyal, devoted, intense, sympathetic, human, humorous, guileless, plain, pointed, direct, colorful, conscientious, strong and humanly sweet.

He was brave when the occasion required and could put on as good a fight as one would like to see, if he was forced to it. That was one thing among others which caused the writer to admire him. He would stick to what he believed to be right under all circumstances. His funeral services were very simple, according to his request—in keeping with the plain life of the man. His charity was unbounded and most of such acts were performed without the knowledge of the outside world. In his latter days, trouble overtook him, most of which, was of the most painful type. There were many things about Sunday with which we did not agree, but he was a good scout, a good preacher and a conscientious man.

Have you any old toys, broken or discarded that you would care to donate to the boy scouts? If so, just notify the scouts or send them to the school, where they will be repaired by the scouts and given to deserving children at Christmas time. SYNOPSIS

Following his father's bitter criticism of his life, and the withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, only son of a wealthy banker, sets himself practically without funds but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which city he must reach, from New York, within a definite time limit. He takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. With five other members of the party, an attractive girl, Barry Trafford, middle-aged, Glee-Kerrigan, Sister Anastasia, a nun, and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack, he starts his journey. Barry's reticence annoys him. He takes at once, but he is unable to shake off a feeling of uneasiness. He distrusts Crack, although his intimacy with Kerrigan ripens, and he makes a little progress with Barry. Through a misunderstanding, at a stopping place, Hal is directed to Barry's room, instead of his own.

Alarm—of a curiously profound and quiet kind—deepened the clarity of her look as she got up, turning one hand against her breast to hide her crumpled handkerchief. Her golden hair was as Hal had hoped; the burnished vigor of it flowed through full, deliberate waves to end in a rich thicket of half-curled, their rioting simply disciplined at the edges of her smoothly modeled cheeks. There was new, mature loveliness in her straight young body—under deep-green satin, fitted to her firm waist, spreading to a full skirt, and tapered above to her straight shoulders.

The splendor of what he saw, with out moving his look from the deep alarm of her eyes, seemed to check the running of his blood in that silent moment—like the shadow of shock. And he heard himself say, very gravely: "I—I'm sorry. She told me this was my room. She must have thought . . ."

It wasn't important enough to finish in the expectant silence between them, round them, full in the room.

"It's all right," said Barry, her low voice coming with reluctance. Something made him say, quietly, respectfully, "I'm sorry you've been crying."

The alarm stayed in her eyes—not a replenished thing, more like a solemn moment of it fixed there over the later business of her erect head. She might not have heard him, except that her voice said hurriedly, "That's all right, too."

They stood looking at each other, and new rounds of silence crept close into the room. She was waiting for him to go. Hal knew he must turn and walk out at the door; and he must do this before the slow, strong force gathering somewhere deep in him allowed itself in his enchanted eyes, before it unlocked his resolution, loosened the warm words that already stirred at his tongue. It was a race between his lagging command to still limbs, that they move, and a hot, headless authority careering forward to take charge of blood and flesh and hurl mind away, like a deflagrant, toward the morning.

His made his legs move him. And, slowly, they moved him to her, her awed watching of his eyes unchanged, the carriage of her glistening head fearless. His arms slipped round her, under her own, and as he drew her firm, satin warmth toward him, her hands went up to his shoulders and over them. She made a small sound of weariness; her eyes closed; her lovely head turned so that her lips—warm and soft and sure of grandeur—came under his.

It was probably a long time they stood there close together, without speaking, resting almost as part of each other in the silence that had grown enormous around them in the room. Once Barry took her generous lips slowly away and pressed her golden head to his shoulder; but when he moved his mouth along the faintly fragrant smoothness of her hair, she turned her lips up again—confident, grateful, credulous. Only her eyes, before they closed, were neither confident nor credulous—still held in awe, they were, still near in the fringes of alarm.

In the pregnant hugeness that blotched away the four walls, Hal felt an excitement of silent rushing—not so much that they were being flung upward alone, as that the whole silence that marooned them there was being rushed on through surely gathered speeds toward some explosive, brilliant revelation. And as his will to lose himself in this enormous and impatient beauty flooded toward whole possession of his senses, one stubborn, small agent of reason tried more frantically to make him do what he had to do. Get out, get out, get out; it came around across his attention again and again, fainter and fainter, until suddenly it took ridiculous command and his hands went to Barry's straight, firm shoulders.

She looked up at once, and the alarm was conquered in her courageous eyes. Quietly and as if to herself, she said, "You're pretending. And I am. I'm not in love with you, I'm not falling in love with you."

She took a step backward, and his hands dropped down to hold hers. He knew that command of his reason was for a moment only; the sudden calm on him now was not to be trusted, not to be found again if he let his tongue, his blood, his whole spirit run out in their hot impetuosity.

Their hands slipped apart. He saw the reluctance of that in her solemn eyes, and saw that she watched it in his, too. The sound of his voice was as if he hadn't used it for a long while when, with a short, hampered turning of his head, he said, "Good G—d, this is no place to talk about anything." He moved to the door, as if he must leave the best part of himself behind, with her. He was leaving something, surely; something sank down out of him with a slow, mocking glitter, like a silver plate dropped in a pool. If this was a decent thing he did, there was no braver in it, since he did it like a fool. The only conscious bravery he could effect now, with the bolt shot back and his hand on the doorknob, was to look at her again. Doctor Calligari jumped his forepaws up on Hal's leg; Hal put his hand to the terrier's woolly head and turned.

She stood there with her chin raised a little, as if she had just shaken back the full, glistening richness of her hair—her hands behind her back, one knee bent so that there was a suggestion of her straight leg in the sheen of the satin. The courage of her eyes, watching him, was solemn, deep, and darkly clear; but that very courage added to her air of loneliness. The unshelved light was merciless upon the ill-chosen, worn furnishings around her in the room. And she stood there—straight, beyond common loveliness—and watched him leaving her as if she were sending him away.

"Good night," he said, and it sounded utterly casual. Her frank lips, which already he couldn't believe had been under his, moved over a "Good night" which he didn't hear. He swung the door open and went out, down into the dark house, past hope of sleep for the confusion into which his thoughts and feelings and desires had been so abruptly tumbled.

CHAPTER V

Friday

Sleep trapped him as that confusion had—without warning. And he woke with a start that nearly slid him off the horsehair sofa. Fresh sunlight blazed into his face through the fern-hung bow-window, and he wasn't sure where he was at all, only that he was wide awake and filled with a fine, sourceless joy for the day and for something that had happened. He lay happily for a moment while the circumstances of his being here found themselves in his head.

First, remembering the transport of Barry's sheer loveliness in his arms, he stretched himself luxuriously, a bath of rich content tingling through his body. He snapped off his stretching suddenly to look at his watch, but his wide smile remained. Think of feeling so well at quarter past five.

But what the dickens had been all the trouble last night? All that momentous entanglement with chivalry and speechlessness, just because the break had come before he had expected it? He had done a very sound thing; he had saved himself from promoters' enthusiasm that would have mixed up the rest of the trip a good deal; but there was nothing so very momentous about it. It was enough for one evening to see her defenses go down; her trust of him, taken slowly, would be more certain. Five more days coming, at least; it would have been very disappointing to forget the job of chaperonage he had to do—go off the deep end at the first drop of the hat that way. Yet there he'd been so off his guard as to make emotional difficulties about leaving her room, as barely to hold himself from charging in against that remark of hers about not loving him. And outside her room, even, the sudden, restive creaking of an old house in the dark had . . .

He got to his feet and breathed deeply, as if the contained, dusty air of the room were that of a mountain pasture in spring. Somewhere in the upper regions an alarm clock went off into its persistent rattle, and there was distant, occasional bumping to stir the slumber of the house. When he came back to the hall he found Kerrigan fumbling at the chain and bells of the great front door.

"Well, sir—of all people," said Kerrigan, his ruddy, well-scrubbed face held by quiet concern. "A good morning to you. Thought you were lost—probably been locked out."

"I got in late," said Hal, feeling his blandness penetrated by that brown, scholarly look. "She showed me the wrong room; so I slept in there."

"You slept in there?" Kerrigan said cautiously.

"Yes," said Hal quickly. "Why?"

"Then that can't be the room the trains run through," said Kerrigan, grained. "Must be the kitchen. Didn't you hear 'em?"

"No," said Hal, laughing.

"Let me tell you if every train't charged through here was hauling pay load, stocks are a buy at any price. Gad, sir, they were on five-minute headway all night and on their way somewhere. Only trouble, they wasted a lot of steam whistling for the pantry door. If I slept here once more, I could get a dispatcher's job on the division. I only missed the number on one train; that was because I was scared his backwash was going to suck the bedclothes off me. And you slept?"

"A twinkle grew behind the false moroseness of the brown eyes. "Whose room did she try to stick you in?"

"I don't know," said Hal. "Didn't wait to find out."

Kerrigan watched him an extra instant, then dismissed the last of his concern. "How's your body?" he said.

"Fine," said Hal. "Gosh—well, fine, as I said. How's yours?"

Kerrigan's look was amused and curious. "Like the bottom of a stove."

"And that's how?"

"Grate," said Kerrigan. "Come on, let's go out and have a snort of the ay em."

Hal was up on the widow's walk stowing luggage when Barry came out the door—refreshed, immaculate, fully awake. He watched her look into the new morning, draw a breath of it, then turn and say something smiling and quiet to Sister Anastasia, the rich sick of gold under her hair gleaming. She didn't look for him nor show any trace of consciousness that he might be there, and Hal smiled to himself as he drew an end of the lashing round the rail.

He stayed on the roof purposely until she should get in. She came toward the car without looking up; and when she was close under him at the door, he said, "Hello there," in low pleasure. She glanced at him then, as if she had to see him before she knew who had spoken. "Hello," she said pleasantly, echoed nothing but the same pleasant hello. Then she got in.

Even as his smile widened, Hal's memory hurried back to last night to make certain there was nothing he'd overlooked. It was she who'd made it so serious, her eyes held in alarm, her head carried as if there were something to be brave about. Well, said Hal to himself, ignoring a certain inconclusion about it; I can pretend nothing's happened, too; but you can't make it a fact by pretending, my beauty.

He was about to vault down from the roof when something drew his eyes to the high stoop. Crack stood there, drowsing in his amiable half-dream of something satisfactory and private as he hoped for Hal's look. The golf ball gave a short leap from his idle hand and fell back into it.

"Morning," said Hal, and swung himself to the ground.

"Mornin'," said Crack quietly. "Sleep good?"

"Fine, thanks," said Hal. "You?"

"Listen, d—n it, Hal charged himself; there's no special meaning in that tone of his; it's just his way of saying things. "Good," he said aloud, without looking at Crack. If the man did know already by his own devices that Hal hadn't slept in a bed, what was there in it to amuse him so shyly?"

The river beside the road was flat and leisurely; leisure in the slow little veins and eddies that all under the overhanging weeds of the bank and leisure in the tall trees that stood still above their own unfocused reflections. They had run along some twenty smooth miles when Barry's voice came low, slow, sure, and Hal listened to the measures of it without especially heeding the words. She said, "That sign said ten miles to Logansport; that might be the very place for breakfast."

Hal thought of her as he had left her last night, head up, hands behind her back, one satin leg a little bent; and he remembered suddenly that she had been crying when he came in—the memory pricked him—like the quick recollection of a promised kindness which it is too late to perform. He pressed the accelerator nearer the floor—possessed by a tentative hurry to see if her expression was clear of the remembered loneliness, to make sure she had nothing to do with the uncertainty hushed sense of something ill that had seemed to travel with them.

They drew up before the shining white-tile lunchroom toward which Mrs. Puleipher had thrown a yelp of hurry approval, and Hal slid out to stand by the door. Barry leaned forward to get up, and Doctor Calligari, held in the crook of her arm, was brought closer to Crack for a moment than he seemed to like; he bared his teeth over an ugly, rising growl. "Doc!" he said in quick censure. Hal took the dog from her. And when he set her eyes, they had in them the hurried end of last night's solemn alarm.

D—n it, I don't want her to take back what she said, Hal told himself inside his closed mouth; I don't want her to be in love with me. All I want . . .

States' Rights

Washington—In days not so far in the distant past, an argument could be developed in any community where there were more than a handful of Democrats. One took the position that the rights of the federal government were predominant over states' rights. States' rights constituted an issue that never died politically until the New Deal arrived on the scene at Washington. Through some two years or more now, we had heard very little about states' rights. Yet, within the last few days, we have found that the states' rights issue was not dead. It was only sleeping, and it has come to life in a really big way.

New Deal policies have been consistently policies of centralization of power in the hands of the federal government. New Dealers have enacted much legislation and have carried out many programs that appear to be contrary to the views which used to be held by advocates of states' rights. These things have been accomplished with almost no complaint from the Democratic side and with only a minimum of squawking from New Deal opposition from whence came complaints about regimentation and extension of government functions into the field of private enterprise in competition with the government's citizens.

Lately, however, some thirty or thirty-five cities have awakened with a shock and have rendered one New Deal program a severe jolt by that awakening. I refer to the plans for government construction of the so-called low cost housing projects. These were and are intended to provide apartments or small homes for families in the very low income brackets and to provide work for labor in their construction. Eventually, it was hoped, the program would use up a good many hundred million dollars of work-relief funds. Some has already been spent; some projects have been completed, and these results coincided with the arrival of tax paying time in certain localities. That was the crux.

Atlanta Project

To show what has happened in those cities and areas wherein the low cost housing projects have been planned or completed, let us take a particular case, namely, the housing project in Atlanta, Georgia. It is of no use to cite the facts in all of them, because the Atlanta case is typical.

Secretary Ickes and his Public Works administration had spent approximately three million dollars in the construction of the Atlanta housing layout. No sooner had this been accomplished, however, than the city of Atlanta awakened to the fact that it would get no taxes nor will the state of Georgia get taxes from this great investment. The project was ruled by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl to be federally owned. As such, it was not subject to state or municipal taxation. The city of Atlanta and the state of Georgia had been deriving taxes from the real estate now owned by Uncle Sam.

It was Atlanta's turn to move. It announced through its properly constituted city authorities that if there were no taxes, then Atlanta could not furnish fire and police protection for the property nor could it supply water for the tenants nor would it permit children of those tenants to attend the Atlanta schools at free students. Atlanta contended that it bears the burden of these expenses and it was not going to add to that burden without reimbursement.

Secretary Ickes sought then to offset the Atlanta ultimatum by tendering funds, taxpayer's money, to the city of Atlanta equal to the amount he thought the city would receive in taxes. Again, Mr. McCarl stepped in. He said that since the property was owned by the federal government it was not subject to taxes and therefore a payment to the city of Atlanta out of federal funds constituted a gratuity. In other words, it was an illegal proposition.

The comptroller general's ruling was so definite and positive that those who have been boasting and boasting about low cost housing projects have been stunned. Frankly, they do not know which way to turn. Thus far, they have not discovered a ray of light to lead them. The housing projects are held in abeyance.

Enter Taxation

The housing project situation brings to the fore a condition which apparently had not been generally recognized. It relates, of course, to the general subject of taxation, but it has a bearing upon many policies now operative and which, it is fair to say, have been described by President Roosevelt as experimental. Since they are experimental, it seems to me they ought to be examined from this taxation phase.

One can understand readily the base of the objection. There is hardly a city or town or even any other kind of taxing district in the United States where the tax rates are not at the very peak which the people can carry. That was shown most vividly a year ago when Congress thought it necessary to enact legislation permitting municipalities the privilege of declaring themselves virtually bankrupts and according them the right of compromising with their bondholders under a decree of a United States court. So, when we think of taking away taxable property in any city and making it non-taxable by conversion from private to federal government ownership, we see how it adds a further burden of taxes to the remaining privately owned property. That is the reason why many municipalities are fearful of government ownership of railroads, for example, since the railroads are heavy taxpayers in every community they serve. Laying aside the question of merit or lack of merit in the proposition of government ownership of railroads, no municipality can afford to overlook the loss of tax receipts that would follow government acquisition of those carrier properties. They pay real estate taxes in the United States annually of more than three hundred million dollars. Of course it is distributed in thousands of places but whatever the amount may be in your community or any other, it represents a tax source which the local government can ill afford to lose.

It is the same, although to a lesser degree, with respect to the housing project. In this statement I mean only as to the local tax phase. It has, however, another very important tax angle. Property, or the income from property, everywhere is subjected to three tax assessments. First, the county or city in which the property is located takes a tax toll; second, the state gets a share, and thirdly, the federal government either by income or some other tax gets its hand into the pocket of a property owner.

In the case of the low cost housing project, it was necessary to calculate the rental rate on a basis so low that it would be impossible for the total receipts to pay off the government investment. This had to be done if the low cost housing was to be supplied at a rate the poorer classes could pay. It is seen, therefore, that there was a deficit staring the project in the face. To meet this deficit certain federal funds were to be set aside regularly which, coupled with the receipts from the tenants, would serve to amortize the original cost. From the standpoint of liquidating the cost of the building, this is fine but it does not impress one as being so wholesome when it is shown that the government's contribution comes out of the general fund of the Treasury which in turn comes out of the general taxpayers of the nation.

And so it is with a great many other of the experiments where such programs place government-owned agencies or industries in competition with citizens. Take the Tennessee Valley hydro-electric project for another example. The federal government has placed more than $131,000,000 in that venture. The present Tennessee Valley Corporation has taken over these properties at about one-third of this amount—a net loss to the government. But that is not all. The vast project that has been developed in the Tennessee valley and through the adjoining counties and cities is not subject to state taxation nor do the cities that are being served by Tennessee river electricity get any taxes from this source. It may be sound in the theory but I am fearful that the inbred opposition to federal government encroachment on local affairs sooner or later will cause a new explosion. It will come from the original feeling that state's rights ought to be superior to federal rights except where states have delegated that authority to the federal government in the national Constitution.

Earlier in this discussion I mentioned the ruling by Comptroller General McCarl who acted, of course, as the head of the general accounting office.

Always the Goat

This agency was created with a very definite purpose in mind. Congress wanted some independent group or authority to watch all federal expenditures to make certain that they were made in accordance with law. A good many years ago when this job was done by the comptroller of the treasury, it was not infrequently that an adverse ruling by the comptroller put the comptroller in a tough spot.

Mr. McCarl is not popular. Privately and publicly, he has been criticized, sometimes in language hardly printable. These complaints always have come from someone whose idea of spending money was found by Mr. McCarl not to be in accordance with the law. Always, he was the goat.

He has been the goat much more under the New Deal than ever before. Every time he kicks over a New Deal plan, the sponsors of that plan brand him as a Tory or a Reactionary or as being just plain dumb. He has engaged in controversy with none of them. He has contended that his decisions were rendered in accordance with the law which he was directed by congress to construe. But it is true of all humans. When a pet plan is destroyed, we try to find somebody upon whom the blame can be placed.

Costume of Suede Is Top o' the Mode

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

STOP, look and listen for it's most important news we are telling you—all about the latest sensation in fashion, namely the costume done entirely of handsome, colorful suede. In the perfectly stunning dresses, jackets, swagger coats and many-piece ensembles of all-leather which are stepping out into the limelight this season, an epoch-making chapter is being written into the annals of fashion history.

A significant thing about this intriguing all-leather movement is that designers have discovered that suede adapts itself with equal facility to formal as well as casual sporty styling. Which is a line of thought to which our minds must adjust would we fully appreciate the broad scope covered in the new leather fashions, since hitherto the mention of leather in a style sense meant its use for sturdy sportswear only. In the new order of affairs suede qualifies as aptly and happily as a medium for the loveliest and daintiest of formal evening apparel as it does for the sturdiest of outdoor garments.

To prove to your satisfaction the truth of the above assertion, we invite you to glimpse the "love of a gown" as pictured to the left in the illustration. The lady of the evening as here portrayed is Belle Davis of cinema fame. She is wearing an exquisite gown of white chevrilla suede, which goes to show that Hollywood agrees with Paris in this all-leather vogue now sweeping throughout the style centers of the world. An adorable gown, you will admit, is this beguiling suede formal. It has the sleek, suave lines to which so many of fashion followers aspire. A high neckline in front with low neckline outlined with braided suede adds further distinction to this charming gown.

Suede evening wraps are also in high fashion, either of the short jacket styling or in loose swagger lines. Capes, too, if you please, some of which are elegantly collared with white fox.

To the right in the picture, Kathleen Burke, another favorite, is wearing a five-piece ensemble done entirely of handsome suede, in a fascinating tone of rich hunter's green. It is one of the hand-laced types (the skirt is sewn together with leather thong) such as is foremost in fashion this year. In fact, laced-leather is the password to high style in the thrilling suede outfits that are being turned out for fall and winter. For like seams to be laced together as here shown dates your costume as being unmistakably a "last word" creation.

In the instance of the five-piece "set" here shown, lacing is carried out along the edge of the side-front fastening of the form-fitting skirt, also on the collar and revers of the swagger coat and two-buttoned vest. A saucy youthful suede берет together with a miser's drawing bag completes this perfectly attuning street outfit.

As to the evening outfit below in the group, it tells at a glance that it has gone decidedly "football." It is Maureen O'Sullivan, of film prestige, who in flying colors is scoring her touchdowns in this hand-laced suede suit of delectating chic. Even the buttons are laced as is also the pig-grain leather football hat. Her bag is of the same leather ingeniously shaped like a football. The suit's standup collar is news.

CREPE AND VELVET

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Velvet enters into every phase of the mode this season. The afternoon dress which combines velvet with wool or silk is a highlighted number on the present style program. In the model pictured the designer has introduced velvet very effectively. The flowers at the shoulder are also of velvet. A high military-type neckline accents the chic of this costume.

COLOR PERVADES WHOLE ENSEMBLE

Color is not content this season to be a splash or a dab—it pervades the entire ensemble from tip to toe and has finally invaded the field of woman's most conservative color accessory—silk stockings.

The traditional beige and gray tones have made way for red and green stockings. Wine red stockings are smart with all of the wine tones. Suede green silk stockings are worn with greens and browns, with green suede or antelope gloves, shoes, and bags to match. Very sheer, two and three thread hose, in green or red make their debut for dressier wear.

Navy blue hose are high style with a blue town suit, collared with raspberry red velvet and worn with a matching hat. With a Venetian green dress accented in brown-green silk stocks and brown shoes are news.

Some New Shades Added to

Hosiery for Autumn Wear

Hosiery, this fall is here in a variety of new shades. In keeping with a growing feeling of luxury in the evening mode, smart complements will be provided for the gold, silver, and bronze slippers worn with gowns of Eastern influence. For daytime, a series of browns will be best liked—golden brown, wine brown, brownish tawny with a rose cast, natural beige and coppery brown—to go with autumn colors.

Smoother Hair Styles

Smoother hair styles are being seen for early fall. Advance styles would indicate that the elaborate rows of curls, popular for many months, are to be laid aside—until we all change our minds again.

Handbag Made of Wood

A smart handbag is large and flat, designed to look like an enormous compact, and it is made of wood in a dark brown natural finish.

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

By Kathleen L. Watson

PILLARS OF GOLD

WHEN the Spanish conquerors were following the northward windings of the Rio Grande, they went as far as the northern part of what is now New Mexico. Here, Spanish legend relates, some of the padres, with soldiers at their command, turned to the westward. In the midst of some extremely rough mountains they came across a small valley, and here they saw two great pillars made of large stones.

What these pillars were they did not know, but with the curiosity to which we owe so much of our information about the early southwest, the padres halted to examine these monuments. To their surprise and delight, they found that some of the stones were pieces of rich gold ore, which argued that their source must be somewhere in the vicinity.

So it proved; the lode was rich beyond all dreams, and the party immediately set to work, the soldiers laying down their arms to become miners. They remained in the hidden valley long enough to take out all the gold they could carry with them.

After this time, others who passed that way hunting wealth saw the lonely pillars in the center of the valley, but for a long time no one thought to examine them, and consequently passed on without knowing that their opportunity lay near by, and that a few hours searching might disclose that mine that the padres saw.

At last an old miner by the name of Mike O'Leary, rambling about through this region on a prospecting trip, found the ancient workings, and appeared in Parrot City some time later with enough ore to finance an expensive spree for several weeks. After sobering up he disappeared, only to come into Animas City several months later with more ore.

The old prospector of the western mountains was a wily creature. He preferred hunting alone or with one partner, and if he did strike gold he could be "as mum as a clam" about its location, even though he loved to boast about his good fortune. Knowing the hills as he did the streets of his home town, he usually eluded all those who tried to follow him. He knew only too well that the discovery of his mine would mean a lot of unpleasant neighbors, the theft of his ore, and possibly death to himself. The silence of the old prospectors of the subject of their finds is one of the large factors in the losing of mines.

O'Leary was just such a man. He might show up every now and then with enough gold to pay for a celebration, but he always drifted out of sight before anyone could see where he went. Finally he disappeared for good—nothing more was seen of him, and it is supposed that either he went to some distant city to spend his money, or else the mountains claimed him for the final sacrifice.

With O'Leary's passing, however, the secret of his mine did not remain a secret. Once in a while some miner comes to the front with ore which he claims came from that little valley in the mountains, and there are even said to be maps, made by others who came into sight of the two rock pillars. However, as far as anyone knows, the location of the mine has never been filed as a claim.

SECRET OF THE PRAIRIE

COUNCIL OF WAR

A party of freighters camped under an old lightning-killed cottonwood, talking earnestly. The year was 1850; the place was Kearney county, Kansas, on the Santa Fe trail. There was $70,000 in Spanish gold in that wagon train, being carried from Mexico to Fort Leavenworth. Would it ever reach its destination?

Indians had begun to follow the wagons in New Mexico. They hung on, making no move to attack, but drawing a little closer day by day. Now, as the freighters consulted with each other around the campfire, the Indians lurked out yonder in the darkness, waiting—waiting—

It was decided to bury the gold. Here, where the great dead tree formed a landmark on the trail, was as good a place as any, and there was no time to lose. There was no telling when the Indians might make up their minds to attack.

It was midnight. The full moon shone brightly on the camp and on the cottonwood, and cast a shadow along the ground. Here, where the shadow fell, they buried the Spanish gold.

Next day they moved on. The Indians followed as usual, drawing a little closer. Three days later they attacked, when the train had reached Pawnee Rock. Only one man survived; he reached Fort Leavenworth, told his story, and died.

There was no chance, just then, to send out after the gold. It was safe; it must wait until the opportunity presented. And so a year passed before a party set out on the Santa Fe trail to recover the hidden coin.

But during that year lightning had struck the old cottonwood again, and this time had destroyed it completely. There was nothing left to show where it stood. Only the tall buffalo grass rippled in the wind—grass which had grown closely over all the countryside.

PURE FOOD LAWS FIRST ENACTED 500 YEARS AGO

Proof that pure food laws are not the product of modern civilization, nor the result of an age in which the can-opener reigned supreme in the kitchen, was submitted recently by H.A. Schuette, professor of chemistry at the University of Wisconsin.

Professor Schuette described pure food laws which were enacted in Medieval Germany some 500 years ago—during the same century that saw the rise of Joan of Arc to immortal fame and the discovery of America by Columbus—which regulated the sale and production of honey, milk, and other foods in the southern German city of Nuremberg.

The old laws were especially aimed at the sale and production of honey, which then was the chief satisfier of the human "sweet tooth." The law was aimed at not only the seller, but also the buyer and user of "any honey except that which has been examined and measured by duly appointed honey inspectors." Violation was punishable by a fine.

Even though these old laws were necessary to protect the unwary consumer of money, Professor Schuette pointed out that the adulteration of this sweetening food could not have been the problem in the Middle Ages that it was to become in later years.

Before 1900 authorities revealed that there were probably few foods in the United States more subject to adulteration than extracted honey, he explained.

Now, however, adulterated honey seldom comes to official notice, because the pure product, honestly labeled, has taken its place. Under the federal pure food act of 1906, exactly 20,728 notices of judgment reporting the action taken on foods and drugs have been published up to the present time, and less than one out of every thousand prosecutions for some form of violation of this act concerns honey.
