Mrs. R. L. Huffmeyer in getting ready for church last Sunday morning, noticed that her car had a flat and as there was no male help at home just then, she went about getting the tire off. She got the car jacked up and put one of her feet between the casing and the rim to pull the tire off. Just at that time, the jack fell and the weight of the entire car came on her foot. One of the children hastened for help and she was soon released, but her foot has been painfully sore since that time.

STRANGER THAN FICTION

Mrs. John Malle of Camden, N. J., is seeking a divorce from her husband, because he beat her up until she fainted. He then made her drink strong coffee to arouse her so that he could beat her some more. She said she wouldn't have minded it so much, but he used the buckle end of his belt in doing the whipping. She also said that John was very considerate, because he whipped her in the far end of the house to avoid waking his mother—as John told her, "mother is so particular and doesn't want to be awakened with affairs of that nature."

Ping-Pong has always been considered a 'sissy' sort of a game, but see what damage was done by that little innocent game—R. O. Hunt, 62, being the victim. In a ping pong game, the paddle slipped from the hands of a player on the second floor of a hall. The paddle went through the window, showered glass into the street, striking Hunt in the face. He was taken to a hospital, where forty pieces of glass, ranging in size from a silver quarter down to a 10 cent piece, were taken from his face and neck. The glass filled a quart measure.

At Pocatong, Iowa, last week, a prisoner in the frame county jail sighted a fire in a house nearby. Seizing a heavy bar, he broke down the door, escaped and gave the alarm. The little country fire department put the fire out. When they went to look for the prisoner, he was found back in his cell, fast asleep.

With his heels on his desk and wondering where he could get his nose in for the next piece of news, Ellwood Owen, reporter at Petalonia, Calif., heard the fire alarm ring. Catching a taxi, he made for the fire station, reaching there just as the fire truck came out. Wanting to get a scoop on the news of the fire, he boarded the truck. There was some mistake in the fire call and the truck raced from one place to another before the right place was located. During the flight, Owen lost his balance, fell off the truck, lost his coat, hat and his pants were torn off. With nothing on but his E. V. D.'s, he landed at his own home. The home burned down, but the country fire department saved his lot.

Lester Carroll, Fairfield, Iowa, garage man, slept in the rear and one night an explosion took place which blew him through the roof and landed him almost a block away from his place of business. He landed on his feet on the sidewalk. Seeing a pile of queer looking rubbish in the street, he went to investigate and it proved to be his bed, bed-clothing and trousers.

Scientists Study Radiation of Sun

Secret of Ray's Effect on Life Is Sought.

Tucson, Ariz.—Scientists have launched here an expedition into mysterious worlds of sunshine which may revolutionize business and agriculture. For one year, the rays of the sun, which obviously affect every human being and virtually every field of work, will be mapped daily at three experimental stations, one at the University of Arizona, another at the Arizona State Teachers' college and the third at Hermosillo, Mexico, writes Gordon Gordon in the Chicago Herald-Examiner. Dr. L. F. Miller of the University of Minnesota is conducting the tests, the most extensive ever undertaken in the study of the sun by science. He will use a highly-sensitive instrument which he recently perfected and which records on charts every factor which influences the rays of the sun, such as the passage of invisible clouds, conditions in the stratosphere, atmospheric pressure different types of clouds, temperature and humidity. Many Groups Aid. Financed by the Rockefeller Foundation, many scientific groups throughout the world are aiding in the undertaking, including the Guggenheim Airship Research Institute, the Air Ministry of Great Britain, the United States Weather Bureau, and the pineapple industry of Hawaii. "Every living particle of life is afected by the sun's radiation," Doctor Miller pointed out. "If we can discover just the factors controlling those rays, whether in the sun itself or in the stratosphere or in the clouds, we could benefit mankind in a thousand ways. "A thorough knowledge of the sun's radiation might make possible control over the vital vitamins in foods, the proper growth of all plants, curative and preventive treatments in medicine, the deterioration of materials in buildings and bridges and the coatings of those structures, visibility in flying, and long-range weather forecasting. The benefits are seemingly without number." Instrument Sensitive. Doctor Miller's instrument, which many scientists believe will provide the key to the secrets of the rays, consists of a hollow sphere which is set in a highly-evacuated quartz bulb. "This is placed on the top of an observatory or other high point," he explains. "It is connected with a cable to a recorder in a laboratory below. As the temperature varies with changes of the intensity of the solar variation, a thermo couple measures and transmits the values to the laboratory. It is so sensitive that it records clouds which can't be seen with the naked eye and it is able to differentiate between every type of cloud.

Cuba's President Drops Business for Lunch at 2

Havana.—President Carlos Mendota has determined not to permit debate on the affairs of state to keep him from his regular 2 p. m. luncheon. Cuba's chief executive has established rigid control over the extended remarks of his secretaries in their Tuesday and Friday cabinet meetings at the presidential palace. He has installed a small bell by his place at the head of the cabinet table and at two o'clock sharp he taps it, and the meeting is over. It makes no difference who is speaking and what is the subject being aired. After a recent cabinet session, palace reporters asked a cabinet member how he had fared with a certain projected decree law. "I did not have a chance to introduce it," he replied. "In fact, three or four of the secretaries were unable to talk during the whole meeting. The president rang his small bell at two o'clock, and we had to leave."

MURDER OR MERCIFUL SLEEP

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

The victim of a serious accident in which death by drowning was inevitable, begged the attending physician to administer a drug which would cause immediate death. The physician complied with the request. In a moment all was over. The man had been saved the agony of drowning. In one of our large eastern cities a young woman was hopelessly crippled as the result of an auto accident. The surgeon declared there was no possible chance of recovery. The young woman was in constant pain and pled for the relief of some drug to cause her to pass on. She had no means of taking her own life and, rather, recoiled from the idea. Yet she pled for the mercy of an administered death.

In every community there are persons who are tortured with pain due to incurable diseases or accident beyond hope of cure. Should life for such persons be ended through the administration of drugs which cause a merciful death? A child is born with an abnormal or a subnormal development. He will always remain the victim of certain mental aberrations. What is the duty of the attending physician in these cases?

Sterilization of the degenerate was for many years tabooed. Legislators would not even give the matter respectful consideration. In many states today, not only is sterilization legal but popular opinion urges it as a necessary remedy for some of the social ills. Will the time come when our state legislatures will differentiate between murder and euthanasia, a means of producing painless death? Is it more merciful to let a person pass on, if he so desires, than it is to allow him to die slowly, from the ravages of an incurable disease? The writer only raises the question and leaves the reader to furnish the answer. However, in reaching a decision we are met with the necessity of choosing between equally undesirable alternatives. We pause before the inexorable law: "Thou shalt not kill." We believe where there is life, there is hope, regardless of the opinions of attending physicians. We put to death an animal suffering with pain when no cure is possible. Not to do so, would in some states be considered an act of cruelty to animals. How humanity any less claim upon that act of mercy known as euthanasia? What does the reader think? © Western Newspaper Union.

swallowing improperly chewed foods. Before such a necessity arises, parents can ward off stomach troubles by teaching their little folk to chew their food well before swallowing it. The gastric juices must be kept in correct action. Advised by Physicians. Dentists now agree that chewing food well is good for the teeth. They require action of this kind, and the clearing of food from crevices between teeth which results. Correct chewing promotes good teeth, as well as good health. Reduction of doctors' and dentists' bills is a natural outcome. But no negligence in going to a dentist and having periodic examinations of children's or adult's teeth should result. Nor should there be any laxness in summoning a physician when symptoms of illness foretell the need. A child, or an adult for that matter, who is subject to seasickness, or car sickness which makes itself felt aboard train, trolleys, and sometimes in closed automobiles, will find a cracker or crust of bread, well masticated, a decidedly good remedy. This is because anything that keeps the stomach in action relieves the nausea. Gum is sometimes chewed for this reason when traveling. In seasickness and its like, chewing of such simple things proves a remedy in itself. There is something intriguing about the idea of foods that float. We are ac-

Find Way to Take Pain Out of Tooth Drilling

New York.—Finding at last of a substance which makes the dentist's drill a painless instrument was announced here by Columbia university. The new substance, which, it was stated, will materially affect the practice of dentistry, was discovered after twenty years of research by Dr. Leroy L. Hartman, professor of dentistry. The substance, described as a "desensitizer," as yet without an official name, is a solution applied to the surface of the tooth. It not only prevents pain, it was stated, "but offers the possibility of saving teeth now lost through extraction." The desensitizer, Doctor Hartman revealed, is based on a new theory of pain and the recognition of a previously unknown substance in the dentine of the teeth. The price of the chemical will be controlled by the authority to make it available to all.

Famous Necklace Is Sold for 50 Cents

London.—A string of black pearls that once belonged to Mary, Queen of Scots, was reported to have been sold for 50 cents. In an antique shop in Forfar, Scotland, a woman whose name is not divulged, found the pearls on sale on a notions counter. She bought them for two shillings (50 cents). Shortly afterwards, when she took them to a jeweler, he communicated with the authorities of the crown jewels, and they are said to have recognized them as a necklace which belonged to Mary, Queen of Scots, and which had been missing for years.

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

PARENTS should teach their children to chew their food. Proper mastication in early youth is a fine preparation for good digestion in later life, since the habit, once formed, is likely to continue. This is no plea for languid eating for dawdling over the meals, which has little or nothing to do with proper eating. It is a hint to parents of one way to promote good health in their offspring by insisting that food is not swallowed without the amount of chewing needed for its ready assimilation with the gastric juices and the elements of stomach and body.

The term "Fletcherize" will be remembered by many readers as the name given to slow eating because the eminent Doctor Fletcher advocated that each mouthful of food should be chewed 40 times before being swallowed. Persons suffering from stomach ailments and their train of illnesses, were greatly relieved by this means of avoiding customed, today, to beverages, that are termed floats, chocolate floats, coffee floats, etc.,—but these are not establish although the liquids have nourishment in them. The very term float, is significant, since it indicates a combination of a buoyant creamy foundation, with sufficient body to support the top edibles, and an upper ingredient or preparation of a lighter consistency or with a texture that will keep a-top the lower or foundation food.

There are many of the floating preparations. Chief among these are the light and fluffy beaten whites of eggs, uncooked, or the delicately browned and slightly cooked beaten egg-whites as foamed in meringues. Marshmallows or marshmallow whip is a usual float. Among the more solid edibles that float are found conde (pronounced con-day) crusts, slices of lemon and also of hard boiled egg, halved Boston crackers, and oyster crackers, some varieties of grapes, and of leaves of sweet or fragrant herbs, etc. © Bell Syndicate.—WNU service.

The doctor, who is sixty-seven years old, has been at the Gopher school since 1890, and has been coach at one time or another of every sport but football. He introduced basketball at Minnesota and produced five big team championships, the most famous of which was the "1,000 per cent team" of 1919. SYNOPSIS

Following his father's criticism of his life, and withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, son of a wealthy banker, is practically penniless but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which he must reach in a hurry. He takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. Other members of the party include an attractive girl, Barry Trafford; middle-aged Giles Kerrigan; Sister Anastasia, a nun; and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack. Barry's reticence annoys him. To Kerrigan he takes at once, but he distrusts Crack. He finds his intimacy with Kerrigan ripening, and makes a little progress with Barry. Through a misunderstanding, at a stopping place, Hal is directed to Barry's room, instead of his own, and they exchange kisses. Next day he tells her he loves her. She answers that she must love him, without giving any reason. Crack brutally insults Kerrigan. Hal forces him to apologize abjectly, and his feeling of disgust toward Crack is intensified. On his insistence, Barry tells Hal that, at her father's urging, she had married a man many years older than she, and had promised her father on his deathbed to stick to her husband, "no matter what happened," for ten years. That was four years ago, and despite her knowledge of her husband's unworthiness, she is determined to keep her promise, though admitting her love for Hal.

"Come on," she said. "Let's stretch our legs. Let's see Wyoming."
"Lady, have you ever had a good look at my legs?" Kerrigan asked, as a question of grave scholarship. "No, of course not; I beg pardon. The point is—they're past stretching. Take my young friend Ireland with you, but let me have him back in good condition. And mind your ppp; coyotes'll lead a dog till he's tired and then turn on him."

"I wish you'd come," said Barry.
"I wish I would," said Kerrigan, "but I won't. I'll sit here thinking of old, old beads, and I'll be younger when you come back. Be off. If you run into Hostiles, send me a line by one of 'em and I'll be at your side in a twinkling—say, an hour and a half."

At the top of a little ridge to the westward, from which they could look down the road where Rasputin waited, and see across to the mountain range behind which the sun would set, they slowed their pace and stopped.
"That's not a long walk," said Barry.
"Long enough," said Hal. "Rattle-snakes."

"Oh gosh! not really?" said Barry, moving to him.
He watched her without stirring his arms, smiling a little at her and to himself. "No," he said. "I just wanted you to come where I could touch you and then show you I wouldn't. I'm proud of keeping my promise; you must ask me why I'm so strong."

There was a memory of solemn alarm under her smile. "Why are you?" she said dutifully. She sat down facing the west, her legs doubled and one firm shoulder hunched where she leaned against her arm.
"Because," he said, stretching himself before her, "because you've drawn your loveliness up into a kind of royalty that makes you more beautiful than I thought even you could be. Because you have a pride and purity in your eyes that goes as far above the world as that peace that makes Sister Anastasia beautiful. And yet your bravery is warm and living; you don't turn your back on life; and you can't turn your back on the most implacable thing I've known in life—my fantastic desires for you, for the beauty behind your eyes, for the beauty—"

She turned from her lonely looking into the west, glanced from his mouth to his eyes with that awed, still concentration, and said, "Hal, that's not—farling, we'll have to go back."
"And because," Hal went on, "tomorrow nothing you can put against me can stop me—nothing. There, I've finished. And you can watch the strength and implacability come into me with every minute of my promise."

"Hal," she said hopelessly, stripping her hat from the golden luxuriance that ran simply back from the round of her forehead. She faced the west again and watched it trying its faintest distance with the sorrow of her eyes. Then she turned to him and said artlessly, "What about your socks?"
"Socks?" said Hal, his look laughing as he glanced at them. "What about them?"

"I've got things to wash out—to-night, or whenever we get anywhere," she said. "If you've got any things, I can do them, too."
"You're certainly not going to wash my socks," said Hal.
She seemed to straighten a little in defiance as she said, "And why not?"
"Why, does it all because—"

"If you were in," Barry interrupted, "would you let anybody else take care of you if I could? I wouldn't allow your shoes, because you're plenty strong enough to do it for yourself; but for the love of Mike why shouldn't I do washing for you if you've got things that need it? Is it beneath me, or something? Wouldn't you shine my shoes if I asked you to?"

"Of course."
"Well, then. Perhaps you didn't know you wear woolen socks and woolen socks shrink if they're not carefully done."
"I didn't know that," said Hal. "Tell me more."
"I'd tell you lots more," said Barry, "if you'd try to see my meaning, and remember it."
"Barry, do you think I forget anything you say—anything, even the first word you said to me, years ago, when you used to make me mad?"
"Well, what did I say to you first?" said Barry, challenge—cheering—her eyes.

"You said—We were standing in that place, wherever it was—you know—that place, and you said—No, signals off. We were in the car and you said it wasn't my cigarette that burned your coat."
Barry chuckled at him, slowly and huskily, with her head a little back and her arm, white throat full. "Close, Mr. Ireland, close. I'm glad you remembered. I used to watch you being made mad by me and love it. And now—she said, her voice touching the edge of sorrow, then evading it in a little sigh: "now I'm asking you to let me wash your socks."

The sun set in bold, steady red, a short ledge of cloud fastened across it; and the whole dry spread of the land—the tawny, tufted sweep of plain ground, the rust and gray and emery stripes of strata under the flat terraces of rock, the high, heavy mountain peaks piled beyond—all came by a soft, purple clarity, as if they stood in tinted water. Hal and Barry had risen to watch the silent glory of the colors—she with her back against him and her hands clasped over his, the slow rhythm of her breathing under his touch.
She took a faltering breath and let it go reluctantly; and Hal, his mouth near the faintly fragrant thicket of hair-curls, whispered "What?"

She turned her head to look at his lips, then up at his eyes, her looking intimate, expectant; and then she stood away from him and returned to the fading colors of the western sky. "Beauty—" she said; "beauty to last forever, in a few minutes."
He pressed her hand before he let it go, watching her. "I s'pose while we can find the way we'd better go back," he said. "Some day, we'll never have to go back."

With a limber bending of her body, she picked up her hat, and it swung between them in her hand as they started down.
It wasn't cool, but Kerrigan was arranging brush and a few desiccated fence posts for a fire when they came to the car.
"Hi there," he said comfortably, as if they had kept house together for a long time. "Got the sun put away all right?"

"Yes," said Hal. "Very prettily, too. What's the fire for? Goin' to have a blizzard?"
"No," said Kerrigan. "Just like to attract attention."
"Haven't seen any to attract," said Hal. "But you know your publicity out here better than I do."
There was a pleasant murmur of welcome as Barry got into the car where the others still waited. Hal, with a strange, assured feeling of peace upon him, looked up at the first clearing stars and breathed his chest slowly full.

"Lord, it's good," he said to Kerrigan. "You should've told me I'd like Wyoming."
With the star-scattered night complete and the fire going, they made a thin supper from Mrs. Palsipher's oranges, the popcorn which she ordered John to uncheke, and some agglomerated fruit-drops from a bag in Kerrigan's pocket. The atmosphere was subdued, quiet, the voices not quite tentative but variously respectful, as if some one were asleep nearby. And each time John, after a silence, wondered where that Mr. Crack was, Hal felt the peace upon his blood freshly—a peace assured of strength, of Barry's earnestness, and of his seal coming to her—after the term of his promise. They in the car got out to stretch and stroll briefly and look up into the night; and part ten, when John gave a yawn that echoed in the shameslike cavern of his mouth, Mrs. Palsipher suggested sleep. She and Sister Anastasia disposed themselves in the back seat, while John cramped his gaunt lankiness in the front and Barry, Hal, and Kerrigan sat along the running board, watching the fire and talking.

She Gave Her Soft Laugh and Relaxed Against Hal.

"Listen," said Barry suddenly, interrupting her own speech. Doc raised his head for a grunt, snuffing. "There comes somebody."
They listened. A coyote—the pale, pretty ghost of a gully dog—passed on the edge of the gloom beyond the fire, and Barry's hand came to rest on Hal's knee.
"It is somebody," Kerrigan muttered in a moment, looking at his watch. "He's been long enough. It's eleven."
Impulsively Hal said, "It's not Crack," and wondered why he was so coolly sure.

Barry looked around at him slowly, solemnly. "How'd you know?" she said.
Hal moved a little inside his clothes. "Doesn't feel like him," he said. He gave a short, uneasy laugh of deprecation.
The footfalls—made by heavy, stiff-soled shoes—brought their slovenly beat nearer and stopped. Hal got up and walked around the car. A broad glow, as from a white and distant fire, was spread in the east where the moon would come, but he could see no one down the road. "Evening," he called into the dark.

"Evenin', evenin'!" came a cracked voice after an interval. "You the folks got the fire? I seen it from a way back and come to see what was goin' on."
He clumped up to the fire—a tall, ratty man, no hat on his tangle hair, shirt dirtily open at his throat, blue-jeans cut off about three inches above the tops of his veteran cow-boots. His grinning lips were stained at the corners and his bright, empty eyes watched the fire, not any of the three who were near it.
"You folks stranded, 'ey?" he said cheerily in a minute.

"Looks it," said Kerrigan.
"I run into some folks last year was stranded," he said. "Over t'other side. Seems like I'm always runnin' into folks that's stranded." He grinned happily at the fire.
"Didn't see a fella go out to the highway and get a lift into town, did you?" Hal said. "Late this afternoon?"
"To what town?" the man said absently.

"Any town," said Hal.
"No," said the man. "Last week I seen a feller get a lift out on the road. Goin' west, he was. But I mind these other folks was stranded there—over t'other side. I come on one of 'em drinkin' water out of a little crick we got. I says to him, 'How's it taste?' an' he says 'Good,' an' I says, 'That's good, I'm glad t'know an' he says, 'Why?' an' I told him why." He laughed silently without looking at any of them.

"Why?" said Barry in calm interest.
"Cause I found one o' my sheep lyin' downed futher up the crick where he was drinkin', an' I wanted t'know how it tasted."
"Did you tell him that?" said Kerrigan.
"I told him," said the man. "He didn't like it."
"You're a shepherd," said Kerrigan.

"I am," said the man, with a quick nod of pride. "Only I ain't jus' now. I been fired." He nodded again, his stained mouth open. "I live over t'other side there in the shed by the Old South Corral. An' when I feel like it some day, I'll tear it down."
"Why'll you tear it down?" said Kerrigan.
"It'll make 'em sore," said the man. "You can have anything you want up there. If you want to tear the shack down, I'll help you."

"That's mighty nice of you," said Kerrigan, "but I guess we'll just sit here for a while."
The man watched the fire a little longer. Then he turned and grinned at Kerrigan and said, "Well, I guess I'd oughta get back. Moon's comin' up."
"Well, good night to you," said Kerrigan.

"Good night," said the man, and abruptly started clumping away again. The late moon floated up clear and brilliant to pale the stars with its gray-blue disk, and they moved from the running board, nearer the fire, to watch that bright drifting.

"You're at liberty," Kerrigan said to Barry, "to lean against my friend Ireland and have a nap."
She gave her soft laugh and relaxed against Hal, as if she'd been waiting for Kerrigan's permission. Her hair touched his cheek as she settled her head to his shoulder; she looked up at him in sleepy comfort, saying: "Too heavy?" then pressed closer to him and closed her eyes. And in the naturalness of that, Hal was near believing he had dreamt the obstacles to their united fortune: her trapped allegiance to that man, that husband, was too grotesque a sacrifice.

The slow moon marked the moving of the night across the sky; and Hal and Kerrigan sat together in it, by Barry's sleeping—kept alliances that were broken only by the soft settling sound of the fire, or murmured of things not so much satisfying in themselves as in the fact that they spoke of them here.
Every so often Hal looked down at Barry's face—her dark lashes laid in a little radiant fringe on each smooth cheek, her vital lips at rest together, her breathing gentle and oblivious of care. And once when Kerrigan happened to glance at him as he looked up, they smiled at each other as if she somehow belonged to both of them.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

To remove white spots and rings from dining room table rub with olive oil in which a little white wax has been melted. Let dry and polish.

To cook rice properly, wash, season with salt and add very slowly to rapidly-boiling water. Boil about 20 minutes without stirring. Drain, wash and put in warm oven until kernels are well.

An aluminum spoon placed in the soap suds in which silver is washed will result in shining silver. Polish silver with chamels or a flannel cloth after drying.

Old blankets covered with art silk make excellent quilts. Stitch through blankets at corners and along the sides.

To fry bacon without burning, place on a cold frying pan over a low gas flame and turn frequently.

When broiling steaks or chops leave the oven door open. This prevents burning and smoking.

If screws are put into a cake of soap before you attempt to put them into hard wood you will find they will go in much easier.

One-half cup of soap flakes dissolved with a little hot water, to which a cup of kerosene has been added, is an excellent cleanser for the bath tub.

Mark Twain Depicted as a Serious Thinker

Mark Twain as a serious thinker and philosopher was described by Frederick C. Hibbard, Chicago sculptor who designed the Mark Twain statue and the monument to Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn at Hannibal, Mo.

"Mark Twain resented the fact that people laughed when he meant to be serious and that is why his statue in Hannibal does not show him smiling," said Mr. Hibbard. "During my study and research I was impressed with his seriousness. He was also a profound thinker. My treatment of Samuel Clemens (the author's real name) as a serious man won me the privilege of designing the Hannibal statue."

The New Year—
What Will It Bring?

We are entering another new year and naturally, we are prone to make the inquiry—What will it bring? If we could have our wish in the matter we would have the new year to laden this old world with gladness instead of sorrow—sunshine instead of cloudiness—peace instead of war—prosperity instead of depression, and the brotherhood of man, peace and good will to reign on the face of the earth.

On the recent commemoration of the birth of the Prince of Peace, who said, "They who use the sword shall perish with it," two nations, one of which is near to where the Savior was born, were engaged in bitter conflict and during that day which should have brought gladness to their homes; there was death, devastation and destruction to lives and property. To those nations, the answer to our question is plain and decided. The harvest that will be reaped by that conflict will result in nothing but evil, for after the strife is over the people will suffer for years untold in taxation and human misery.

In our own country, we have nothing to brag about. Political lines will be drawn so closely during the next eleven months that the result of the coming national election will mean either destruction of our beloved constitution or the upholding of the landmarks which have been the foundation of our free government since its birth. At the present time, we are slumbering over a rumbling volcano, which if erupted will mean the downfall of freedom, of which we always have so proudly boasted. Let us hope that American freemen will tighten their belts, go to the polls next November and see that we prove true to that name.

In the social world, let us hope for happiness in the homes, security in our business management, and preferring each other in our businesses as well as in our social lives. Let the great heart of charity respond more to the needs of those who are considered in the class of forgotten men and women. In other words, may brotherly love prevail and every moral and social virtue, cement us. As a final appeal, let us hope that we may not be drawn into the horrors of another war. The New Year—What will it bring?

ANOTHER BIG STEP OUT OF THE MUD

Highway engineers of Jackson County, Missouri, are lifting more farmers out of the mud with a new process of low-cost road construction. Asphaltic oil is injected several inches below the surface by a specially designed sub-oiling machine. The oil penetrates evenly to the surface, making a smooth, mudless and dustless road and a firm, stable base, five or six inches thick on which a riding surface or pavement can be laid. The photograph shows the finished road with a light bituminous surface. The inset shows the sub-oiling machine in operation.

NEW ROAD BUILDING PROCESS PROMISES TO LIFT AMERICAN FARMER OUT OF MUD

New Highway Development Seen as Solution of Mud Menace. Waterproof, Mudless and Dustless Road Built For Less Than Cost of Graveling

KANSAS CITY, MO.—An upside-down process of road construction in which asphaltic oil is injected or "planted" several inches under the ground and allowed to penetrate or "grow" to the surface has been developed by highway engineers of Jackson County, Missouri, with the cooperation of the state highway department.

The process has attracted the attention of engineers from the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads and from state and county highway departments who see in this possibility of removing the mud menace from America's roads. Farmers and motorists see hope of finally being taken out of the mud, in view of the tremendous road-building funds available through federal agencies for extensive use of the process.

"Initially successful experiments," states F. V. Reasel, materials engineer of the Missouri Highway Department, "give promise of transforming a clay road quagmire into a smooth, firm and stable base. Preliminary results indicate the possibility, under certain traffic conditions, of eliminating, or greatly reducing the use of expensive types of road materials."

The usual method of oiling roads merely by spreading oil on the surface has been reversed. In the new process, asphaltic oil, carefully suited to the soil by laboratory experiment, is spread several inches below the surface by a machine which operates in the manner of a corn or wheat planter. The oil penetrates smoothly and evenly to the surface, leaving an oil impregnated layer of earth of a pre-determined thickness.

After a short period of curing, the road is compacted by rollers and by traffic, leaving a firm and waterproof mixture of asphaltic oil and earth—mudless in rain or snow, dustless in the driest summer heat—a durable all-year road, capable of withstanding heavy traffic shocks.

Ordinarily, the road will be further improved by the addition of a bituminous surface or pavement except on roads carrying the lightest traffic.

The preliminary development reveals that smooth, mudless and dustless roads can be constructed with the new process for an original investment much lower than the cost of graveling. Maintenance costs will be far lower than for gravel. The cost will be still further reduced, engineers point out, when the process is used over an extensive network of roads.

The process has other advantages in that it lengthens the working season, as weather conditions offer a minimum of interference. Some of the test sections were constructed in the late fall when other road construction was halted. It is unnecessary to "add" gravel or crushed stone to the road base—a fact which further reduces the cost.

Women Have Lost Ground in Last Few Years, Claims Judge

Feminist From West Says a Change in Tactics Is Needed.

Judge Georgia Bullock, of the Superior court of Los Angeles, a recent visitor in Washington, D.C., believes that women have "lost ground" in the last few years, says the New York Sun.

Like all feminists, she advocates an equal chance for men and women in business and the professions. But unlike the militant feminists, she does not insist "rights" can be won or retained by combative tactics.

Time to Co-operative. "Women in the past have won some concessions—suffrage, for example—by warfare," states the judge. "But the time for contention is gone. Now our only hope for survival in public life is to co-operate with the men and to work toward proving our merits and establishing ourselves, not as trouble-makers, but as real contributors to public welfare."

Contrary to the stand of most women in public life and in organizations, Judge Bullock is convinced that, in the last few years women in this country have their wings clipped, have lost caste to a certain extent in business and the professions. She attributes this to world changes, but feels "the only way we can retrieve our former position is to prove we have unique ability and can work with, not against, men."

Her own successful career in the legal profession has taught her that the odds are not all against women. While she admits countless evidences of discriminations against women, she explains that this is not due so much to man's prejudice as to the attitude of women themselves.

Too Dominant? Developing this theory, she said she had noticed how often women in high positions set out to execute their ideas, regardless of the opinions of men and women with whom they worked. Such action, she said, was enough to prejudice men against all women who sought self-expression outside the home. "But I have yet to see the man who resented working with an intelligent woman who know how to co-operate with her associates and who didn't try to take over the reins completely." "The judge believes women could accomplish much more if they were strongly organized, "not as a third party but as a unit that could be counted on to help, rather than antagonize, men in public enterprises." And she thinks women have a unique contribution to make to human welfare because no matter what their interests they can always be counted upon to defend the dreads, the family life of their country.

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

By Edith E. Watson

THE SILVER GUNSIGHT

SIXTY-TWO men on their way to the goldfields of California. Sixty-two men who knew nothing of the country, resting at Salt Lake City, listening to all advice, wondering if there weren't a pass through the Sierras that they might find if they went the southern route through the Colorado desert. Sixty men traveling to certain death.

Death awaited in that valley which bears its name. But it grew impatient, and went ahead to meet some of the party. They were glad of that, we may be sure, after their troubled wanderings through unknown country, hungry, thirsty, weary. They were sure they were to die. And by the time Death Valley had been reached, all but four of the 65 had lost their lives. They might better have stayed in the East and clerked in stores or kept books. But the year was 1854, and 49 was not far in the past. Fortunes lurked in the hills and valleys of California. They did not realize that death took precedence of everything, and especially of fortunes.

Somewhere in Inyo county the forlorn four men wandered on. They had come thus far, and they must reach wealth before they, too, died.

George Dennis took up his gun, and sighted along the barrel. Now, that was a pretty howdy-doo! The sight had come off. It was lost somewhere on the back trail, and needles in haystacks would be easy to find compared with that gunsight. What could he do now? He needed that little aid to aiming.

There was grayish metal of some sort in the ledge at his side. Perhaps it would be soft enough to cut. He tried; he managed to whittle out a crude sight, and to attach it to the gun. Well, that was better. They needed that gun if they expected to eat until they came across gold.

The next day, after a night spent in the shelter of the friendly ledge, the four weary men stumbled on. Two of them died. George Dennis and one other man kept going. At last they reached San Bernardino.

If Dennis had not met the old prospector when he did, he might never have known that hideous nightmare which haunted him ever afterward. But the experienced miner saw that gun—saw the glimpse—saw, too, that it was made of almost pure silver.

Where did it come from? Oh, from a ledge back there in the Death Valley region somewhere—why?
He found out—why! They counted the days since he had made that gunsight, guessed at the miles, hoped for the direction. They went back; as well as they could, toward the ledge of silver. But the Southwest is a large place, and even a square mile can conceal many things beyond finding.

THE SNOWSLIDE ON SLATE MOUNTAIN

IN OCTOBER, 1849, thirty men made a party to hunt for gold. They traveled as far as Slate Mountain, near Red Cliff, Colo., and here they were successful in their search. The diggings were rich, and before long they had taken out about $100,000 worth of ore. Snow came early to the region, and provisions would soon give out. No man wanted to leave the diggings, so at last, lots were cast to decide who should make the trip, and one "Buck" Rogers was the chosen one. Taking $500 in dust, he started out on the 26th of November for town.

It took him a week to get there, as the weather was stormy and made traveling slow. But at last he reached town, and here he forgot his mission and celebrated his arrival in a spree that took him six weeks to recover from, and cost all the money he had. Stricken by his conscience as sobriety dawned, Rogers started back to the mine for more gold. He felt as if some terrible thing had happened—and so it had, for when he reached Slate mountain he found that a snowslide had swept over mine and men, and nothing remained to show that 20 human beings had lived and perished there.

Rogers had kept some information about the place in a notebook, and this fell into the hands of an old miner, who went to Slate mountain with the idea of finding the mine. He had to dig about here and there, for the snowslide had covered the whole countryside and changed its appearance, but at last he came on a tunnel, fragments of tools, human bones, and pieces of ore, all thrown together by the force of the slide.

The miner, satisfied that he had found what he was hunting, covered up all evidence of his discovery, and went back to Red Cliff, intending to get an outfit together before uncovering any more. Two weeks later he was killed in a drunken row.

A man named James Fairford, who had heard the story, went to the old prospector's cabin and there found some papers which gave directions and locations. He outfitted at once and went out, heading for Slate mountain. A month later he was seen in the hills, and said that he would soon return to town. Then news got to Spain, and he was apparently caught in a storm as he lay in, for his body was never found. And neither was the mine.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART

Washington.—There has been much discussion lately concerning the liquidation of the operations of New Deal emergency agencies.

Spending Must Stop

It is a discussion that is timely because, first, Mr. Roosevelt in his plans for the forthcoming government budget contemplates a shrinkage in the vast outlays represented in the emergency agencies, and second, it is a matter of political import. Whether Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected or whether there should be a Republican success him in the White House in January, 1937, somebody must clean up the wreckage of the alphabetical soup—which is what all of these various agencies eventually must become. They cannot go on; an end must be had to the expenditures and that will conclude the operations of these agencies and, further, something in the way of permanency for agencies that may be kept must be worked out.

It is one of the real problems of government. Those who have been in Washington any length of time recognize that it is much easier to establish a government bureau and populate it with bureaucrats of a political hue than it is to put an end to the agency and send the political patronage boys back home. It is really an old story to observers here and, I believe, all of them recognize how difficult it is not dangerous it is going to be to dynamite the alphabetical agencies out of existence.

Some of them undoubtedly have served and are serving a useful purpose. Undoubtedly, some of them were needed long before Mr. Roosevelt brought his New Deal to Washington. Instead of that fact making the wrecking job easier, it makes the job more difficult. It is very hard to convince plum pickers that their job is a temporary one, even though they were so informed when they were appointed. It is more difficult to convince that type of individual that their agency is not all-important or that it is of less consequence than a neighboring agency bearing another set of alphabetical letters.

In addition, the plum pickers have their patronage backers at the capital. The representatives and senators interested in building up their own political machines back home naturally will be most helpful in assisting that particular representative or senator to be re-elected. Thus, it becomes rather obvious that even if Mr. Roosevelt seriously tries to liquidate the various alphabetical bureaus, boards, commissions and administrations, he has a man-sized task on his hands. If by chance a Republican should be elected and Mr. Roosevelt retired to private life, he, too, will find himself criticized, cajoled and threatened when he seeks to squeeze the water out of this structure known as government which was expanded so much in Mr. Roosevelt's plans to meet the emergency.

Frankly, I believe it will take the full four years of the next President's term to unseat all of the excess job holders and eliminate from the government all of the surplus alphabetical agencies. In the very nature of things it cannot be done more quickly. The answer lies in the fact that these agencies embark upon ambitious programs that cannot be halted. The government becomes committed to certain propositions and, except in war time, most of them must be executed. So, however you examine the situation, Uncle Sam is well hooked.

Long, Hard Task

To illustrate how difficult is the job of getting rid of a government agency after it is once established, one need not go further than the late NRA. Six or seven months have elapsed since the Supreme court unanimously clipped the wings of the famed Blue Eagle. That decision did the work of wrecking NRA as completely as a bombshell can wreck a boat when a direct hit is scored. But, whether you realize it or not, we still have in Washington an NRA organization of almost 2,500 employees. It is true that number is probably only about one-fourth of the total number on the NRA pay roll when General "Crack-Down" Johnson was at the helm and guiding the flight of the Blue Eagle but it was assumed at least that the Supreme court decision made payments for the NRA pay roll illegal at the same time. However, it has happened that the administration has found money some place with which to pay this regiment of employees who, as far as most observers in Washington can ascertain, have very little constructive work to do.

The organization has no official status except such as is given it by Mr. Roosevelt's various executive orders. It has no authority. Anything it does or says has no more force than a sephyr. Yet thousands of dollars are being paid its workers on the first and fifteenth of every month—and there is no sign that these payments will be ended soon.

For another example let us go back to the war days. In order to successfully prosecute America's part in the World War, the government took over and operated the railroads. A gigantic organization was built up here in Washington and representatives of the railroad administration were scattered far and wide throughout the country. Commitments were made that continue even to this day. Credit in the form of government loans was extended to the rail lines and several hundred million dollars of that amount remains uncollected to this day. And with all, after 18 years we still have a railroad administration operating in Washington at government expense.

Another wartime agency about which little is heard but which still is in existence is the War Finance corporation. It floated bonds and made loans to private interests and those commitments have forced retention of a skeleton organization that probably must be continued for several years yet before the job of liquidation is complete. One could go on and on illustrating how a government agency becomes a parasite on the government structure to remain, long after its usefulness has ceased, a burden on the taxpayers. It is hardly any wonder then with the knowledge of what has happened in the case of other governmental agencies that there is a question of how long it will be before the present emergency alphabet can be eliminated. It is likewise a matter of concern what the total cost is going to be before the mess is finally eradicated.

We have had evidence lately of how efforts are initiated to maintain these agencies even when they are legally dead.

Thumbs Down They are Legally Dead, on NRA

Recently in Washington there was held a much hallooed meeting to which some three thousand representatives of business interests were invited. It was called by George L. Berry, the top man in what is left of the NRA structure. The purpose was to find out what business wanted in the way of a revived NRA. Business did not want NRA revived and the meeting turned out to be a genuine flop. There was nothing like three thousand representatives in attendance and the meeting itself gave a good many persons the impression of being staged for the benefit of the American Federation of Labor, to which the old NRA catered.

Mr. Berry, until lately the head of one of the large union labor organizations, did not convince business that it needed more governmental interference. Indeed, if business went away convinced of anything beyond the fact that Mr. Berry's meeting was a flop, it left Washington with a deep feeling that it did not want NRA in any form nor did it want any other governmental agency meddling around with its efforts to get back on its feet.

The circumstance illustrates better than anything I know how parasitic agencies in the government seek to perpetuate themselves. One must realize in considering such a condition that all of those employees obviously want to keep their jobs.

In the case of the attempted revival of NRA, the political factor is important. Mr. Roosevelt said, it will be remembered, that when NRA was organized it must be regarded as something of an experiment and that if the experiment failed to work, he would be the first to say so. He has not made that announcement yet for, it is considered, if he admitted that the NRA experiment failed to work he would be admitting defeat for one of his earlier pet projects right in the face of a Presidential campaign. Politicians do not like to make admissions of this kind.

Business Fights Back

It will be recalled as well that after the Supreme court held the business codes of NRA to be unconstitutional and unbusiness, there was much pressure exerted on congress from the White House for reconstruction of some sort of a program to succeed NRA. Business did not want it any more than it does now and it fought back while the legislation was pending. The result was that congress passed a law permitting lines of commerce and industry to organize and frame their own voluntary codes. Jurisdiction of these codes was placed in the Federal Trade commission. That agency was supposed to work in co-operation with business and to exercise a judicial function in determining when the codes were properly within existing laws against monopoly.

The Trade commission in the last year has blossomed forth as a rather sound agency in its consultations with business and, I believe, merits the respect which business generally has for it. But with all of that respect and the knowledge that the Trade commission tries to be fair, only five lines of industry have presented codes of fair practice for commission approval. The details of the futile attempt to breathe life back into the Blue Eagle have been related at this length to show what the future holds in the way of bureaucracies on our structure of government. If we have many more the result is liable to be a cancer and a cancer thus far has proved incurable.

"By the People" Or by Politicians?

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

During recent weeks America has heard a swelling volume of protest against interference by numerous political Boards, Bureaus and Commissions with the lives and affairs of citizens.

The protest comes from various sources—from merchants in communities both large and small; from many growers and consumers of our food products; from increasing numbers of men and women in the professions and in business.

What is the explanation? One answer might be that such interference can seriously affect the citizen's means of earning a livelihood. But many keen observers of the current American scene suggest a deeper and more fundamental motive.

The protests, they believe, reflect a surge of resentment against usurpation by political jobholders of powers which American citizens are convinced belong only to officials chosen by the people.

They represent, in other words, a spreading antagonism to Bureaucracy which after expanding swiftly during several decades has achieved an unprecedented growth and power during the past few years.

When one considers the many powers now assumed by the hundreds of Boards, Bureaus and Commissions which crowd the office buildings of Washington, the protests seem more than justified. This such usurpation of authority constitutes an abridgment of the political power of the people is equally obvious.

Under our Constitution the people delegate to Congress—not to appointed Bureaus—the right to make our laws. Under it we delegate to the Executive Branch of Government—not to appointed Bureaucrats—the power to enforce those laws.

When these powers are usurped by jobholders for whose selection we have no choice and over whose activities we exercise no control, then "Government by the People" becomes an empty phrase.

In its place we get Government by Bureaucrats—which means not only waste of the people's money in unnecessary public payrolls and public expenditures, but a frank surrender of the people's right to govern themselves.
