FICTION

A. L. Burke

Alexander Anderson of Melbourne, Australia, is an artist's model and a great shik among the ladies. On Nov. 10, he pulled three motor cars each containing six passengers, for a distance of three blocks with his teeth. While he was pulling the load, he was headed by a band playing the good old American tune, "Alexander's Ragtime Band." What a man!—What a band!—What a tune!

In the little town of Bloomdale, N. J. lives James J. Wagner, was born, reared in the town and has never been outside of town but once and that was last fall when he hunted hickory nuts in the woods, 2 miles from town. He has held every office in the town from dog-catcher to Mayor. A short time ago, a shikish desire came over him to go to Newark, 15 miles from there, but Mrs. Wagner said: "John, you are now 60 years old and it's about time you were behaving yourself." Did he go?—No, he didn't!

An old 1935 took flight and '36 came in, an unidentified person stood in an alley in Little Falls, Idaho, all set to usher in the new year. Pressed against his shoulder was a 30-30 rifle, poised high in the air. He pulled the trigger and the bullet mushroomed thru a telephone cable carrying 404 fine copper wires. Instantly some 104 telephones in the north end of the city went out of commission. Within a few minutes there was a call for emergency repair crew. The bad place was cut out and the two good ends stripped back while workmen set themselves to the tedious task of splicing each pair of wires. A two-way signal system was required for every splice so that the proper connections were made. The work was completed 24 hours after the break, during which time the phones were out of commission.

In the month of April, 1935, Robert Smith and pretty, dark-haired Doris Tratheway, both of Alameda, Calif., in order to carry out a love pact to fly away into the sunset and never come back; rented an airplane and as the sun was sinking in the west, they set out over the Pacific ocean and never returned. On a day last week an over-sized balloon tire from the airplane was picked up at sea, 280 miles from Honolulu, which told the sad story.

Mrs. Olga Ferenda being a Russian and in order to carry out an ancient custom of kissing the first man she met on the Russian new year, she tackled big Conrad Heedyl on Broadway in New York, a policeman while on his beat. After giving him a big smack in the kisser, the cop arrested her and brought her before Judge A. F. Burke, who fined her for not kissing a better looking man.

Photographs Show Earth's Curvature

Stratosphere Flight Films Interest Science.

Washington.—Striking pictures from high in the stratosphere, showing the earth's actual curvature on the horizon more clearly than ever before, and revealing how the world looks from the greatest height at which photographs ever have been made, have just been developed from films exposed during the recent stratosphere flight of the National Geographic Society—Army Air Corps balloon, Explorer II.

1/100th of the total circumference of the earth. The curve of the horizon is easily noticeable when the picture is projected on a screen—photographic evidence that the world is round. When the edge of a ruler is laid along the horizon the curvature is even more plainly visible.

In taking this picture the camera used by Captain Stevens "saw" a distance of approximately 300 miles, far beyond the range of the human eye. The horizon showing in the photograph is estimated to have been at that distance from the camera. The photograph was taken by infra-red light which is capable of piercing distant haze.

The picture shows a vast stretch of western South Dakota, covering more than 33,000 square miles. The Black Hills, from which the flight started and which have an area of about 6,000 square miles, appear as a large dark area at one side of the picture 100 miles in the background. The picture was taken from a position above Parmelee, S. D.

The horizon line in the photograph is represented by a stratum of haze estimated to lie about 10,000 feet above the earth. This stratum of haze, however, conforms closely to the sea level surface of the earth and its curvature reflects accurately the curvature of the earth itself.

Rivers Like Delicate Tracery. Both still and motion pictures taken directly downward from the stratosphere balloon while it was at its ceiling of 72,803 feet, the highest-altitude pictures of the earth ever taken, also were shown by Captain Stevens. They reveal the earth as a huge plain marked with tiny checkerboard-like farms and fields. Cutting into the level, smooth farm lands are regions of erosion, with innumerable small stream courses, arroyos and creek beds, forming intricate patterns of delicate tracery like frost on a window pane.

Make Men Bigger Than Trees on Indian Rugs

Sault Ste. Marie.—Indians hereabouts are long on art but short on perspective, a study of the designs they work into their hooked rugs on sale in local stores would indicate.

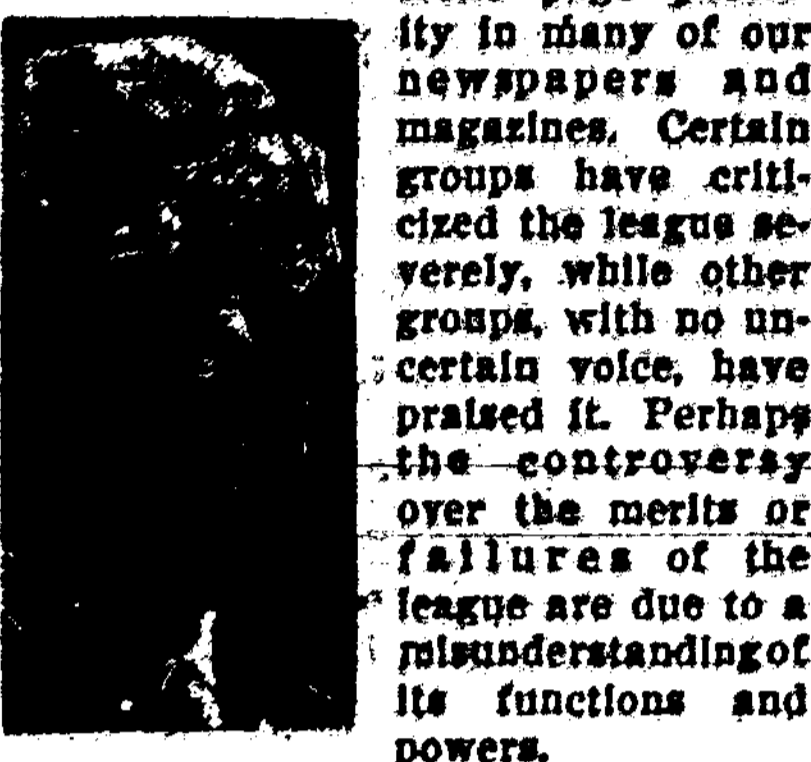

Frequently the rugs, sought by tourists because of their eccentricities in proportions, have men taller than trees, canoes so small they wouldn't support a child but shown carrying two or three men, and bears of the size of elephants worked into the designs.

Sometimes when they get a man finished they don't have room for a big tree so they just make a small one. "The picture is the thing—not the size," explains "Pete" Vigeant, friend of the Indians who seeks an outlet for much of their handicraft.

The League and World Peace

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Since the Ethiopia-Italy uprising the League of Nations has been given front page publicity in many of our newspapers and magazines.

The league was organized for the promotion of peace and it was inspired very largely by Woodrow Wilson. It was officially created January 10, 1920, with headquarters at Geneva. The covenant of the league includes a provision which binds all member nations to refrain from warfare for a period of three months during which time they agree to submit their disputes to arbitration.

POLE VAULTER

Jay Derwanger, sensational back of the University of Chicago football team, is not satisfied with being placed on the All American team. He hopes to represent the United States in the decathlon event of the Olympics in Germany. He is shown above practicing for the pole vault.

able. But the power vested in the league is limited. Some persons expect it to accomplish results for which it was never organized. One of these is the prevention of war. The league can function only as a court of arbitration, penalizing nations which violate their covenants and establishing "sanctions" against nations provoking war, as in the case of Italy. The league, however, has no power to annihilate the war spirit. It has administrative but no creative powers. A desire for war must arise first before the league can function, but it is powerless to prevent the rise of the passion for war. We must look elsewhere for the source of that creative power which substitutes for the war spirit the passion for peace.

According to the record, when the founder of Christianity was born, the angels sang, "On earth, peace to men of good will." This passion of "good will" cannot be legislated into reality. No court of arbitration, however powerful, can create it. It is a passion of the heart which needs to be expressed through the international mind, in irrevocable obedience to the command: "Thou shalt not kill."

Indeed, it may be seriously questioned if the military way ever accomplished the real purpose for which men fought and died on battlefields. The struggle for international peace by way of the Cross is more potent than by way of the sword.

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

IT IS a bad habit that should be broken, this one of calling up friends, acquaintances, and especially business persons, when they are eating.

It is amazing but strangers sometimes do this very thing, evidently in the hopes of getting a job for themselves or for a member of his or her family or for some friend. It is a distinct intrusion on the quiet privacy of home life. The person calling up realizes that it is during meal times that people are most sure to be in, but this is no reason why he should disturb the routine of a household, as the call most certainly does.

Meal time telephone calls are actually "infringements on the peace and quiet of the home. A busy person must have hours of relaxation, and part of such time is taken up with meals. Moreover, it upsets everyone at the table to have one of the group called off, though it be for just a few moments. Conversation is broken in upon and food gets cool.

No Response. A person of affairs, either in the business or social world, seldom pays attention to a telephone call made during meal hours. The servant is instructed to say, "Not at home," or to inform anyone calling up at the time, that he or she cannot be interrupted until after a certain hour later on, or until the next day. The person calling up has no reason to feel slighted or bothered when so informed.

A Child's Attitude. Children respect parents who do not spoil them. They fear parents who are too severe and harsh and who punish to give vent to their own tempers rather than to correct misdeeds of their youngsters. After all, the size and strength of individuals has a great deal to do with such chastisement. Parents are like plants in these respects in comparison with children. Such punishment as just referred to has nothing to do with that type of correction that helps character building. Physical power and not courage is represented by such parents.

Courage to discipline a child begins when the child is very little. An early instance of it is when the infant cries for something that is not good for it, and the mother, who longs to let the dear little baby have everything, must steadfastly refuse.

It is the courage of love that underlies family discipline, the courage that is self-sacrificing, that is steadfast in refusing but is equally determined to grant permission whenever possible, and which will overcome obstacles to do this. The courage to give and to withhold are balanced.

Irrked Sergeant Keeps Warrant for Ten Years

New Haven, Conn.—The most joyous moment in the long career of Sergt. James J. (Scoop) O'Brien will come when he finally serves the warrant he has been carrying for 10 years.

It's not the fugitive so much as his "involence" that strengthens O'Brien's determination.

"Always one step ahead of the law, the fugitive has faithfully kept the warrant posted as to his whereabouts. His latest "involence" came from Paris in the form of a postcard which read: "Dear Scoop: Having a good time. Glad you're not here."

On the reverse side was a picture of a youngster wearing boxing gloves and a notation: "I'm the champion. Come over and take me some time."

Formal Velvets in High Color Mood

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FASHIONABLE velvet, and fashionable indeed it is, has gone high color. Not that the style prestige of black velvet is challenged, not at all. To defend the supremacy of handsome black velvet in the mode never a need will there be. Its claim to sovereignty among formal weaves in the fabric realm will go unchallenged through the ages.

However, many of the new velvets are gorgeously colorful. They abound in rich reds, purples, greens, sapphires and golden hues.

The message of color is eloquently told in the trio of formal velvet modes pictured. Each is a Paris creation, for French couturiers are most enthusiastic in regard to the importance of velvet in the mid-winter style picture. For the striking evening ensemble as worn by the smartly costumed lady of fashion seated, Bruyere employs a magnificent stiff velvet in deep blue. The jacket is decorated with motifs cut from the wide gold galon such as bands the sleeves. The blouse is of gold lame, likewise the chic and youthful off-face hat.

Dramatically colorful is the gown to the right in the picture. Dark green cellophane-shot silk velvet fashions this molded-to-the-figure evening dress. The shoulder straps and large bow on the corsage are of red velvet. Clipped in the hands of this dark-haired beauty is a floor-length cape which Molyneux styles of velvet striped in green and red shades to complete the ensemble color scheme.

In the mode to the left, also by Molyneux, the new formal evening cape with its long graceful and stately trailing lines interprets the very latest silhouette at its best. This voluminous wrap is of sapphire blue double-faced velvet. Its color tones beautifully to the gown which is done in pervenche blue and silver lame.

Speaking of the color glory of the new velvets calls to mind a superb evening ensemble (not illustrated) which LeLong creates of cerise red velvet, a fabric woven like a semi-transparent baghdada. Its lack-luster surface and the fact that it is so sheer one can see through it almost as if it were chiffon, add infinitely to its charm. The dress is fashioned with utmost simplicity—sophisticated simplicity according to modern interpretation. It has one of the new inch-high band collars and buttons demurely down the front to below the waistline. Decidedly form-revealing is this dress so suavely is it fitted to the figure. The piece de resistance is its cape of the same dull-surfaced velvet, the majestic floor-trailing lines of which are that imposing they quite overawe one. Capes of generous flowing lines such as this stand for all that is smartest and newest in way of the formal evening wrap. We almost forgot to tell you about the collar of precious brown fur that completes this costume. It is ingeniously attached to the dress although it appears to be part of the cape.

Now that we are talking about smart evening wraps, here is something worth stretching your budget to acquire. Every woman who loves to dress will be wanting one. It's the enchanting little velvet jacket with revers embroidered in colored stones which have only just recently made their debut. They are fascinating.

SILK MILITAIRE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The military trend in fashion is increasingly apparent. The afternoon gown pictured interprets the theme in a novel and attractive way. It is fashioned of high-grade black silk crepe as is also the laced corset. The blouse is likewise in matching crepe, overwoven, however, with silver threads to simulate a coat of mail in keeping with the military movement. The off-face black felt hat is up to the moment in "lines."

Latest Materials Popular

Latest materials are being used for everything from sports suits, ski suits and underwear to sportswear.

ITALIAN INFLUENCE IN SLEEVE STYLES

The style of sleeve has been noticeably affected by the exhibition of Italian art in Paris. Very full sleeves have the preference, with a few close-fitted ones, often detachable and shaped like those in Italian portraits, which resemble a long mitten reaching above the elbow. These mitten sleeves are often in velvet that contrasts in material and color with the rest of the dress.

Some of the models are made entirely of vivid colored transparent plastic materials, such as sequin on a dull black rayon velvet dress with matching hand at the round neckline. The art exhibition has also inspired Bouffant sleeves, slashed over contrasting colored fabric, as well as very long medieval sleeves that fall to the hem of the skirt in panel style.

Dead White Most Popular

Color for Evening Clothes
Top hats, gleaming white shirt fronts, glittering gold and silver lame, that's the fashion picture by night, according to Carmel Snow, editor of Harper's Bazaar.

"People are dressing up as they haven't in years," she says. "It has been suggested that the Jubilee in London last June is responsible for all this dressing and this splendor. Certainly it has taught us all to dress in the grand style."

"To get back to what we are wearing in America, in the evening, after lams, the most important color is dead white—as pure as marble. The draped dresses that Yvonne made her great success with this autumn are many of them marble white."

Snow Suits

For fun in the snow, two-piece suits for youngsters from four to eight will be smart this winter. Plaid double-breasted jackets have attached scarf collars for warm protection and knitted cuffs. Plaid color jackets with tricolor round yokes close with zippers up to snug little collars. The plain trousers in brown, green or navy for both jackets have reinforced knees and knitted cuffs. A little matching hat with soft lining goes with each suit.

THE WHITE CEMENT

AN OLD man, exhausted and ill, started a stampede that was once the talk of the Southwest.

It was in July of 1898 that the prospector, who was named White, staggered into Horse Head gulch camp, near Amarillo, Texas. He had some peculiar-looking stuff with him that resembled nothing so much as white clay or cement, and this strange "ore" was specked with flecks of gold. In fact, assay showed that the stuff would run a thousand ounces of gold to the ton.

White's gold find could not be kept secret. The news flashed from man to man, and everyone who heard it was eager to know where the location was, so that he could get some of this wealth for himself. White tried to keep quiet; he had no desire to tell, when he knew that every man who heard it would dash out and stake claims. But his wish for secrecy was not respected. When he refused to answer questions, the men of the camp gathered about him and threatened to kill him if he would not show them where he found his gold.

After such threats, White could do nothing but promise to lead them to the place right away. As many as could possibly get away followed him, and the strange, fierce cavalcade set out for northern New Mexico.

The journey was not a pleasant one. Many of White's party were suspicious of him, and when time went on and no gold appeared they threatened again to kill him if they found that he had been misleading them.

At last, one night the party reached a blind canyon and made camp. One more day, White announced, would see them at his find, which was thirty-five miles to the northwest. Tired out, their suspicions lulled by White's words, the men slept soundly—all but White himself. He said that he was nervous, since he was so close to the mine. He could not sleep for thinking of it. And since he was awake, he would stand guard while the others slept.

This was agreeable to the rest. They were soon fast asleep, resting for the long ride ahead of them.

Morning came, and with its first light the men awoke, eager to press on. But what was this? White was nowhere to be seen, and his horse also had disappeared! He had slipped away in the night, leaving them as ignorant of the location of the gold as they had been at first.

Three years after this clever ruse, White was seen in Salt Lake City, where he spent money liberally. He loaned a man in Provo $50,000 in gold dust, so apparently his "cement" mine was still producing. Then he disappeared. He never returned to claim his money. No one heard of him or saw him again.

THE ADAMS' DIGGIN'S

THE Gila river, which seems so much a part of Arizona, has its headwaters in New Mexico. There are three forks which meet before the state line is reached, and the country thereabouts is known only to forest rangers and cowboys, who ride the ranches of the Heart Bar, the Slashes, the Gos, and other lonely ranches.

It was in 1890 that a party of fifteen men set out from California to prospect in the mountains to the east. A prisoner of the Yuma Indians man aged to catch their attention, and this man told them that he knew where there were wonderful gold fields, and could guide them to the place. As a consequence the party bought him from his captors, and set out after him across the state of Arizona and up into the headwaters of the Gila.

Three peaks rose from a valley, and between two of them a stream flowed eastward. At the base of the central mountain the placer gold sparkled, and here the party camped and went to work.

Presently their supplies ran low. Half of the party started out for Yuma, not realizing that there were towns across the mountains to the south, to get food and other supplies. A month went by, and no one returned. The provisions were alarmingly low by this time, so three more men started after the first party.

When they reached a mesa top which gave a view of the camp, the three looked back. To their horror, they saw their little settlement in flames, and even as they watched Indians killed the remaining men.

It would mean death to return; besides, their friends were beyond help. Frightened, the three men hurried on, missing their way, and in their wanderings one of them died. At last they reached a town, and here another man, exhausted by that long travel among the mountains, gave up the ghost.

The sole survivor of the party was a man named Adams. He told the story, and added that $1,000 a day could be washed out with a gold pan at the place where his comrades had died. In spite of the horror of his experiences he longed to return to where the golden phantoms beckoned. But it was not to be. Adams tried many times to make his way back to the three mountains, but somehow he could never find them again. Others, too, have hunted for the lost diggings in that fiercely beautiful country, but the secret remains unknown.

Belief Is Influence in Direction of One's Life

The forces that impel action decide a temperament. The ideals and convictions that guide it are hidden in the mind and heart. A man moves lowly or swiftly, he does his work nervously or calmly, according to the energy that is in him. But the direction of his life, this way or that way, allows the unseen influence of what he admires and loves and believes in. Henry Van Dyke.

Inebriate Youth Should Have Been Tossed Anchor

He is what, for lack of a better name, is sometimes called a young man about town. On the morning after he is clinging for support to a lamp post.

An individual connected with the street-cleaning department walks up to a hydrant, dragging a length of hose behind him, and, fitting a wrench to the cap, proceeds to unscrew it.

"Don't—please don't!" cries the youth anchored to the lamp post.

"Don't do what?" asked the functionary, halting in astonishment.

"Don't wind up this street any tighter. She's spinning round too fast as it is!"—Bystander.

Man Still Is Rated As "Forest Enemy No. One"

Man still ranks as "Forest Enemy No. 1." More than half the fires in national forests this year, reports the Forest Service, were caused by man. The number of these fires was 5,777, as compared to 5,282 last year, and to an annual average of 4,601 over the 1961-34 period.

These fires were started by brush burners, by residents on land newly acquired by the forest service—many of whom still believe that an annual "burning-over" is good for the woods—and by campers, hunters, recreationists, and tourists who have made greater use of national forest facilities this year than ever before.

"Keep the Gang Out" Says Farley

If President Roosevelt would put a muzzle on Postmaster General Farley and keep him in a cellar until after the 1936 national election, he would be much better off. Every time Farley makes a speech, he drives another nail in the President's political coffin. But with all of that, he is the silk stockinged pet of the chief executive.

In his latest harrangue in Tuckahoe, N. Y., he bitterly assailed the business interests of this country, branding them as "arrogant demagogues," "hirelings of privileges," who are seeking to muzzle in on returning prosperity."

He continued by saying that the fight against the depression has been won, but that we are now faced with another enemy, which he describes as the business interests of this country. That element he says, who would "gang up" against the government. This is the first time in the history of this country that a man so prominently identified in the affairs of any administration has so vilified and slandered the business interests of the United States, without which our entire financial structure would be torn into fragments.

For several years, the Roy Record has headed its editorial column with these words: "There never will be a new deal until Jim Farley is out of the picture." While we do not blame everything on Jim, we would rather add to what the Record has said. Until the entire regime which includes the brain trust and everything it has done unconstitutional is put out of business, there cannot be a return to prosperity. The Constitution forever and hurrah for the Supreme Court.

Broadcasting Stations in Democratic Stranglehold

You may call it dictatorship, censorship or anything you choose, but the fact remains nevertheless that the big chain broadcasting companies have denied the Republican party the use of broadcasting during the coming national campaign.

Congress Faces a Dual Responsibility
By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

As members of Congress reconvene at Washington, America is hearing many familiar promises of economy in government.

Let's hope our legislators mean it this time. Let's hope they remember that the staggering debts piled up by government must be paid out of our earnings and our savings; that what they do to the public budget affects our family budget as well.

Let's hope that, unlike New Year resolutions, the promises will be fulfilled. It's time they were. For today, as a result of reckless spending by our federal, state and local governments, a public debt of more than fifty billion dollars has been written up for us, the workers and the earners of the United States, to pay.

Fifty billion dollars! That's a lot of money. And it will take a lot of taxes to pay it off. The interest and service charges alone cost us billions every year. It's one of the reasons why five out of every twenty-five dollars of the national income—which means the money earned by the American people—is consumed by taxes. And unless the economists are wrong, a lot of the bills which these taxes are straining to meet will be handed down as a grim legacy to our children and our grand-children.

But you can't blame it all on Congress. The politician's penchant for squandering the people's money has extended to states and cities and smaller units as well. More than twenty billions of our fifty-billion-dollar public debt is, in fact, charged against state and local governments.

We pay for that, too—if not directly, then in higher rents and in heavier bills for food, clothing and other necessities, all camouflaged as "hidden taxes."

Only a large dose of the frequently promised economy in government can lighten the load. Only an escape from the billion-dollar complex of the past few years can help.

Today our Senators and Representatives at Washington can do their part. Because of the importance of the present session, the eyes of the entire nation are upon them as never before. If they keep their promises and apply the brakes instead of the accelerator to public spending they will not only ease our burdens but will set an example for state and local politicians to follow. They face a double and a serious responsibility.

Let's hope they meet it squarely—not only with our own relief in mind, but to assure the security and prosperity of America.

American Bankers Association Announces Purpose to Combat Return of Excessive Number of Banks

CITES LAX CHARTER POLICIES IN THE PAST

Finds a Chief Cause of Bank Failures Was Too Many Banks—Existing Sound Banks Serving Communities Well

NEW YORK. — Existing sound banks, especially the small banks in the rural districts which are serving their communities well, should be protected from any return of the over-banked local conditions caused by former lax chartering policies, which were mainly to blame for the unfavorable failure record of the past, says the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. This is brought out in a report covering an investigation by the commission of bank failures and public policies in chartering banks.

"The Commission's study gives an impressive revelation of how great a part mistaken public policies in the chartering of banks played in creating the unsound banking structure which finally collapsed with the Bank Holiday in March 1933," Robert V. Fleming, president of the association, says in a foreword.

"Over-production of banks, literally by thousands, over many years in the face of insistent warnings not only from bankers and others who recognized the danger, but even more so from the mounting records of bank failures themselves, is clearly shown to have constituted as a whole one of the greatest single economic errors in the history of the Nation."

A Recurrence Feared
He refers to fears of a recurrence of over-banking recently expressed by Federal banking authorities, to the powers given the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by the provision of the Banking Act of 1935 over the admission of banks to membership in the insurance fund, to strengthened state laws and to the policies now being followed by both national and state supervisory authorities aimed to safeguard the nation against over-banking.

"But sound laws and conscientious officials are not of themselves always sufficient safeguard in any field of our complex national life unless they have the active support of public opinion," he adds. "It is the purpose of the American Bankers Association to aid in mar-shaling public opinion in support of both national and state supervisory authorities in their efforts to strengthen and protect the banking structure."

The Economic Policy Commission summarizes its findings in part as follows:

"The facts show a distinct causal relationship between the over-chartering of banks and the abnormal bank failure conditions that prevailed from 1920 to the bank holiday in 1933. It is desirable that studies be made on the basis of experience to develop standards governing the number of banks or the volume of bank capital which can be successfully operated.

"Such a study would embrace the question whether banking facilities can best be supplied to the rural districts by small unit banks or by branches from banks of substantial capital in larger centers. Existing sound banks, which are serving their communities well should be protected from any return of the over-banked local conditions caused in the past by lax chartering policies.

Banking Officials Queried
"An inquiry among state bank commissioners shows a preponderant opinion against increasing materially the number of banks, coupled with the fact that present laws give them sufficient discretion to prevent a repetition of the grave errors of the past.

"Under prevailing abnormal conditions, with the Federal Government extensively exercising loaning powers in competition with the banks, and with industry itself so largely supplied with funds as to render it to a great degree independent of normal bank borrowing, the banking structure even with its present reduced numbers, finds it difficult to support its existing capital investment and operating personnel.

"These are new factors, intensifying the need for highly prudent and restrictive chartering policies. We urge the retirement of the Federal Government from the banking business as rapidly as the return of normal business conditions warrant."

TO TAKE MYSTERY OUT OF BANKING

By ROBERT V. FLEMING,
President American Bankers Association

The American Bankers Association has cooperated in however it could properly do so in every measure for national recovery, it has offered constructive recommendations

for such changes in banking laws as we recognized were necessary, and we now have a better law under which to operate. The Banking Act of 1935 affords us opportunities for broader service
and, at the same time, retains the fundamentals which we believe are so vital to our national welfare and which have played a large part in bringing our country, in a comparatively short space of time, to the position of the greatest industrial nation on the earth.

The Public and Banking
It is necessary that the public have a thorough understanding of the functions of banks, what they can do and what they cannot do, for it must be recognized that to many people the business of banking is still somewhat of a mystery.

We should frankly explain these functions to the public, acquaint them with the laws under which we operate and emphasize the vital part which banks play in the economic life of the Nation.
Therefore, in order that there may be the fullest cooperation and understanding between the banks and the people of the country, it will also be one of our objectives to take the mystery out of banking wherever it exists in the public mind.

Banking Conferences

A series of Regional Conferences on Banking Service will be held in strategic sections of the country, embracing all types of banking. The new banking laws and the regulations issued thereunder will be carefully analyzed so that our bankers will have a thorough understanding of the broadened services now made possible.

The question of public relations and how we can best serve the people of our communities will be another topic of discussion. Clinics or forums on specific questions of interest to bankers and the problems confronting them in their particular localities will also be included in these conferences.

SYNOPSIS

Following his father's criticism of his idle life, and withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, son of a wealthy banker, practically without funds but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which he must reach at once, from New York, takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. Other members include an attractive girl, Barry Trafford; middle-aged Miss Kerrigan; Sister Anastasia, a nun; and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack. Barry's reticence annoys him. To Kerrigan he takes at once, but he distrusts Crack. He finds his intimacy with Kerrigan ripening, and makes a little progress with Barry. Through a misunderstanding, Hal is directed to Barry's bedroom, instead of his own, and they exchange kisses. Next day he tells her he loves her. She only answers that she must love him. Crack brutally insults Kerrigan. Hal forces him to apologize abjectly. On his insistence, Barry tells Hal that, at her father's urging, she had married a man many years older than she and had promised her father, on his deathbed, to stick to her husband, "no matter what happened," for ten years. That was four years ago, and despite her knowledge of her husband's unworthiness, she is determined to keep her promise, though admitting her love for Hal. No argument he can make will move Barry. That night she begs him, in a note, not to insist on seeing her, as he has declared he will. He disregards her missive, and goes to her, in her room.

As if he had expected it, he pushed the paper into his pocket, said good night to the clerk, and went upstairs. There was light around Harry's door and he knocked softly. He heard the bed creak, her deliberate footfalls came, her low, resigned voice—admit she knew who was there even as she asked.

"Harry, you've got to come out," he said.

"Hal, no," she said, gently pleading. "Then I'll come in." He pushed the door, and as if she had expected that too, he felt her weight against it.

"Don't, Hal," she said, less surely; "for the love of heaven, please don't. I'll come out to you—five minutes."

"No," said Hal. "If you come out, there'll be no conditions. And if you don't come out, I come in."

"Hal, I'm tired; I've got a headache—please, oh, please, my darling."

"You haven't a headache, and you'll forget you're tired. Barry, I'm serious as death, as sin, as happiness; if you won't come to me, I'll come to you. Do you understand that?"

He waited a few seconds for her to speak again; then he pushed the door against her strength until she dropped back from it and he stood inside, closing it behind him. There was no key, nor any eye for the bolt to engage, so he left it and faced her.

She turned from him as if the room had grown too small, murmuring, "Dear G—d, if you haven't given me a way to keep him out, you must want him here."

Hal took her arm above the elbow and turned her to him, then held her other arm too and shook her once, gently, to stir the heavy-lidded study that held her eyes. "You believe there is God?" he said.

"If I do," she said, meeting his look steadily, "you don't know better than I what he wants of me."

Her chin was up bravely over where the parting of the little stiffened collar showed her white, firm throat; between the turbulent bushes where her golden hair ended, her cheeks drew a little inward to compose her full lips in their faintly puffed pride.

As he held her before him with the arms and looked into the living blue of her eyes—deeply strengthened against him, yet never blind to the wonder of what had occurred—there fell suddenly across his heart a bad shadow, as if somewhere a silent signal for hurry had been made. His voice sounded too slow, too undisciplined for his quickened purpose as he said to her: "Angel of heaven, it's nothing to tell you I'd die for you—is it. Love is as much as you said it was, so that all its old meanings have fallen away and I can speak it only to tell you I love you; and to say I love you so much I'd die for you is nothing more—is it?"

His voice made no inquiry, but his eyes waited upon hers for the known answer. Her quiet golden head bowed a little aside and back again, and her deep look gravely underlined him.

"Harry, do you love me?"

She nodded down at the mouth that had asked her that, then back at his eyes as her bare forehead said, "You know it; God forgives me for letting you."

"You'd never need to tell me you loved me so much you'd die for me—would you?"

"No," she said.

"You'd mean me to know you would, just by saying you loved me—would you?"

"Yes."

Without changing the composure of his tone he said: "But you won't shake off the wrong slavery of a spurious bargain with your father and with a man who has no claim upon you; you won't risk a little time of trouble in your conscience, of unrest in your disillusioned duty to a figure of love that had his best life in your own fancy as a child; you'd die for me, but you won't do this other, won't eyes-willingly listen to me tell you why you must, how you can."

She looked at him, the dark awe of alarm taking her eyes more deeply; she said nothing. But under the very heart of her look, he saw a shining, liquid fullness that had come so slowly she herself might not have felt it. And before the tears could form, he had her—warm and mortal—in his arms.

"That's it," he whispered, feeling her soft cheek wet against his. "You cry, and when you're cool and calm again, I'll show you the simple, honorable, little things that are all we need to do to have the world—to ourselves, for always."

She shook her head against his shoulder, but not, Hal triumphantly felt, with the same stubborn conviction.

Clear footfalls ringing on the sidewalk opposite reminded Hal that the lighted room must be in plain view of anyone who cared to look at the windows. But one of the shades wouldn't stay down; so, back at the door, he cursed the impossibility of locking it, and turned out the light.

The glow of the street against the ceiling showed the meager furniture, and Barry waiting for him. He went to her.

"It can't happen—ever," she said, as if to herself. "And you must go away, in a minute—soon, before—oh, God help me, my darling."

Her good lips turned quickly to his. He held her close—her whole, surrounded loveliness living against him; it was as if she gave the best treat-ures of her life to the keeping at his exultant body, as if their nearness found its way of growth to inseparable communion, miraculous and destined both. She would forget he must go; and he knew he must not.

A quick, single creak was all the warning that came from the hall, bringing Hal to a sense of time elapsed, to sharp, premonitory alertness. Doc's ugly growl was begun as the door-latch clicked; it broke into a sharp bark at the sound of a step in the room; and the door crisply closed again. A key scraped metal, found the keyhole, and turned the lock over, plucked snarlingly at again. Then the snap of the switch put light in the frugal room, and Hal was looking into Martin Crack's light-blue eyes, their lazy, private smiling harassed by a rattling intensity, as of hate and fear and triumph all together. Only his voice was still drowsy as he said, "I kinda thought I'd be tonight."

For a moment Hal was afraid that the bursting of hot poisons in him must blind him, gag him, nauseate him beyond any power to act.

"You little sniping son of a—cat!" he said, the heavy savagery of his voice somehow saved from trembling. "What're you—doing here?"

Indolently Crack's hand slipped into his side pocket; Hal knew the sight of that evil little golf-ball would snap the last shackle on his control; but Crack drew out a stubby double-decker to point at him; and a small, preposterous agent of reason remaining in Hal noted how that old-fashioned weapon suited Crack's old-fashioned tidiness.

"You guess what I'm doin'?" said Crack in aly, almost nasal falsetto. The bed creaked. Hal became aware of his arms, hanging down beside him, drained of certainty, ready to tremble, as after great effort. Then the physical revulsion under his fury abruptly choked itself, left him to a numb, miserable disgust, a tainted exhaustion of blood that would pit for calm. And in it there thrabbed only one more emotion to command such faculties as were undrugged—hatred of Crack, steady and uncomplicated, seeming to live independent of Crack's hate of him. Crack's private plotting in his degradation. Hal heard his own voice quiet and serene in contempt as he nodded at the doggerel: "You don't need that G—d thing."

Crack put it away, but underneath, more bringing about of the situation, he looked at his own hand, which you'd push to be nervous," he said.

"You G—d," said Hal dryly. "And what's there to be sensible about? The small check in Crack's return to banking satisfaction did Hal good."

Hal looked at Barry. She sat on the edge of the bed, knees drawn up, legs tightly encircled by her arms, golden head, a little bowed over her dark, swollen stare at the washstand in the corner.

"Well," said Crack, with a sort of aly modesty in achievement; "we can use dough an' we can use publicity. You got the say which."

"You'll have a G—d of a time getting money," Hal said out of his listless calm, "so shoot on the other, if you think it'll get us anywhere."

"I guess I'll get us somewhere all right," said Crack. "But I figured Mr. Frederick Ireland's agones make it dough, if you wouldn't."

By G—d, what a dirty trick on the Old Man, setting him into a mess like this! . . . Shame like an instant of fright, held Hal's veins and made his lungs seem to shrink. Providence, you Ireland! Providence! Let a narrow, white bug leer at you in the rotten trap you walked into, and leave Providence to take care of the Old Man. Christmas! Leave Providence to take care of your hate, too. Look at Martin Crack, named for a saint, no doubt—look at him sitting there, a venomous lackey of evil; don't fight him, don't match your private wit against his banking viciousness, don't disturb your fine, wounded spirit now that the first fury is out of you.

Hal thanked God his revolted calm had stayed steady upon him till he saw what he must do. He could stall, somehow, for another day, until patient Sister Anastasia was delivered at her sorry destination; and in Los Angeles, a free agent, he would be his father's—his own Providence in this. In the room of a city hotel, alone with Crack, he might remember those immense, riven compositions in defiance through which they had minutely traveled, scenes in which it did not matter what happened to a man.

And while these flashing things tumbled past Hal's bitter attention, he said quietly, "If it interests you what Frederick Ireland would think, I'd ask him."

"You know him better a I do," said Crack. "What do you figure he'll think?"

"How well do you know him?"

"Don't know him," said Crack; "but you'd ought to. You're his son, aren't you?"

"Is that a statement?" Hal asked. "Or a request for information?"

"Don't seem like you were exactly denyin' it."

"No," said Hal. "I don't remember having denied it, since I've known you."

He glanced at Barry as he reached for a cigarette. She hadn't stirred.

"You're Ireland's son," Crack said. "Frederick—the big whack."

"Sure," said Hal confidently.

"And you got no idea what he'll think when he hears you been caught in a married woman's room by her husband?"

"If I told you what you didn't like, you wouldn't believe it," said Hal, as if Crack were being a little dull-witted about it.

The shy smile slipped over Crack's fair-skinned face again, and he said, "Lash, Ireland, we don't want to get you in a lotta trouble. A hot swirling under Hal's composure made him hold himself hard; in Los Angeles, in the room alone with Crack, he would remember that "we."

"Well?" said Hal, "I s'pose you don't."

"Here's the thing," Crack said: "if you'll talk dough, the whole world stops right here in this room—between the three of us. If you won't, we gotta go to Uncle Frederick. An' after that, it's court an' the newspapers."

"That's a program anyway," said Hal. "Push them number one off, and go to Mr. Ireland. Is that all you want to know?"

"Don't you wanta save yourself trouble?"

"Yes, you bet," said Hal, and the casual readiness of his own voice fortified him. "But I don't see any trouble."

"You don't," said Crack. "You don't wanna stop this right here?"

Hal welcomed with vicious pleasure the undertones of impatience. He said, "By paying you money?"

"Yes."

Hal puffed the fragment of a laugh through his nose and said, "Wouldn't pay you a nickel even if it meant anything to me."

"Maybe you don't think I know you're Ireland's son," said Crack, his voice breaking peevishly as he raised it. "I haven't denied it yet," said Hal. "Anyone'd think you didn't want to get ahead with this."

Crack watched him again and liked it less. The smugness in his eyes tried for a space of minutes to challenge Hal's unworried look, then suddenly the possibilities blew to a hot surber of malice, hissing in his words like a coal settling through snow: "By G—d! If all this is washed, I'll—!" With one unguarded look of sweating hatred at Hal, he jerked a pencil and a telegraph form from his pocket and went to the bureau, shows out, to write quickly at a message.

"You know him better a I do," said Crack. "What do you figure he'll think?"

"How well do you know him?"

Muscle Bound

Several conditions are described by the term muscle bound, but perhaps the commonest is that by which muscles, through constant practice, are trained to oppose one another rather than to act together in efficient work. Thus when a muscle is called into play involuntarily its opponent also contracts and the result is less efficient motion. The condition was voluntarily produced by a man who was subjected to a course of exercises which consisted of the following:

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART

Washington.—President Roosevelt has told congress that he wants it to finish its labors and adjourn in short order. He has figured that about three months ought to give the members sufficient time to mull over the problems that confront them and that they then should return to their several homes. But the President is doomed to disappointment if he sincerely believes that he can get congress out of the Capitol by the end of March. The best guess right now is that the congress will be in session at least four months and, it is well within the range of possibilities that it will remain in session almost to the time of the national conventions.

There are a number of factors that make realization of the President's early adjournment wish impossible of realization. Probably the most influential of these is the fact that this is a campaign year. Every member of the house and one-third of the senate, along with Mr. Roosevelt himself, are affected by the election date and politics must have its turn. Every four years this same condition obtains and every four years politicians do about the same things in furtherance of their own political interests. The bulk of the legislation to be considered has its political tinge. Politics even creep into the annual appropriation bills—and usually the result is a swelling of the totals in order that some gear of individual political machines may be oiled just a bit for smooth running in the campaign.

While the appropriation bills are important from a political standpoint, their weight in this session of congress sinks rather below par because there are such things as the bonus for the World War veterans, the Townsend old age pension plan, various New Deal reform measures and such replacement legislation as may be necessary since the Supreme court kicked over New Deal propositions like the Agricultural Adjustment act with its processing taxes and sundry other schemes. However the Roosevelt leaders in congress may desire to act, the machinery of legislation can be run only so fast in an election year.

One of the chief reasons why a congressional session in an election year drags on longer than usual is because of the publicity value the sessions have for individual representatives and senators. Members of congress discovered a hundred years ago that the chambers of the house and senate constituted splendid sounding boards for the dissemination of political views. There has been increasing use of this potentiality as the years have gone by until now the older members of the house and senate have become very adept in capitalizing on this factor. It takes a stretch of the imagination to discover that a senator or representative, speaking from the floor of his respective chamber, gets much more publicity than his opponent back home who talks only as a private citizen. It is perfectly natural, therefore, that those members seeking re-election want to take full advantage of the publicity vehicle available to them in Washington.

The use of this publicity weapon is available to opponents of the New Deal as well as to its supporters. While the approaching election may be expected to knit the house Democrats more closely into a unified front for the November election, the same condition is not true in the senate. In that body, there are a number of old-line Democrats who do not like the New Deal and who are going to utilize every available opportunity to make their record as Democrats as complete as it is possible to do before they must speak to the home folks in person. It is obvious that such men as Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, cannot desert the Democratic ticket and run for re-election independently. So it is to be expected that men of this type will establish for themselves a comprehensive outline of their political beliefs as Democrats while distinguishing their position from that known as the New Deal. They must look to the future when, according to all indications, they feel the party machinery will again be controlled by the Jeffersonian type of Democrat instead of by the reform type of Democrat headed by men and women with the New Deal outlook.

An additional factor operating in the senate in the presence of two Republican Presidential possibilities in the persons of Senator William E. Borah of Idaho and Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, Senator Borah is actively seeking pledged delegates to the Republican national convention. Senator Vandenberg says he is not a candidate, but the well-known fact is he is being around and there are many observers who think that Senator Vandenberg is hoping that in case of a convention stalemate, the assembled delegates may elect and turn to him as the president.

Such a condition means, as it has meant before, that these two men will

Scientists Believe Ice Layer in Air Storm Cause

French scientists who have been conducting experiments in east Greenland say there is a layer of ice in the air over the polar regions. This ice ceiling (concealed atmosphere a million times finer than water) is situated approximately 90 miles above the earth.

The discovery was made when electrical impulses from an electric sounding machine were reflected back. Time of the impulses in transit was recorded and computations made which gave the height of the ice layer. This ice is believed to be the cause of the storms at sea.—Pathfinder Magazine.

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia; ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the safest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all-common pains . . . and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

GARDOL

SELF-CONFESSED

By CARLTON JAMES

INSPECTOR JOE WARREN read the last few lines of "The Gladstone Murder Case" and closed the book. He looked across at the young man who sat on the opposite side of the desk, and shook his head. "It may sound all right in story books, Mort, but it doesn't go in real life. There are two things in this crime-detection game that you can depend upon. First, that the murderer will return to the scene of his crime. And second, that murder will out."

"You see, Mort, we wanted a written confession, and we've got it."

averaging his death. O. K. But Hlaten, Warren leaned forward, "I've got a hunch you have a theory in the matter. What is it?"

"You read the story. Remember, I wrote it from the point of view of the criminal. I explained how, to my mind, he could have accomplished his crime and got away with it. All the clues I mentioned were there for the police to see, but they overlooked them."

"I see. Then you think young Stan Aicus killed Dyer? Stan was his nephew and would have benefited by the will."

"Not necessarily, Stan. Why him?"

"Then some one connected with the family?"

"Yes."

"Winetta Wimple, the granddaughter?"

"I'm not saying."

"Warren sat back. "In other words, all I have to do is fit a member of the Dyer family to the character in your book, and I'll have the murderer of James Dyer?"

"You may and you may not. I can't tell. I'm not a detective. But as an ordinary layman, I'd say you'd be closer to your man than you have been during the past three months."

"I get it," Warren bit off the end of a cigar. "Mort, do I understand that you don't believe in my theory? I mean, the one about the murderer, believing himself clever, confessing his crime to some one sooner or later?"

"I disagree with it most heartily. No man is vain enough to jeopardize his freedom, perhaps his life, by boasting about a thing like that. I pointed that out in my book. My killer was content to sit back watching the futile efforts of the police and chucking over them." He gestured airily. "Of course in the end he got his punishment by figuring in an airplane crash, but that little touch of melodrama is necessary to prevent day novels. Evil must get its just dues or the public won't buy the books."

"I've discounted your touch of melodrama, and I've also discounted the theory that a member of the Dyer family is guilty of the crime."

"You have? Why?"

"Because we've had them under surveillance, checked back their stories a hundred times, questioned them, investigated them, investigated their alibi. We're pretty well convinced that they're innocent."

"Ridiculous!" Mort said. "That's just where the police are lacking. They're content with another man's say-so. They don't go into the thing far enough."

"Moreover," Warren went on, "according to James Dyer's will, all members of his family benefit equally. Did you know that?"

"No. I had no way of knowing. But had I known, it wouldn't have altered the test of mystery."

"However, aside from the will, there are others who will benefit by James Dyer's demise. Among them being a man who owed him a good deal of money. He is the suspect on whom we are working now."
"A suspect? You mean, you actually have some one in mind? What's his name?"

"For the time being, we'll not mention names," Warren smiled. "You might put them into a book on us. Suffice it to say for the present that we know this person to be an unusually vain creature. We have every confidence in the world that sooner or later he will confess his crime. Brag about it."

Mort laughed. "Nonsense. A man would be a fool to do that."

"Of course he would. And yet, it he thought he could do it in such a manner that the police wouldn't guess what he was up to, it would satisfy his vanity, so end."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean, that if the killer thought himself smart enough to commit his crime and get away with it, he would likely think himself smart enough, also, to announce to the world what he'd done, and get away with it."

"Announce it to the world? Inspector, you're talking in riddles."

"Am I?" Warren smiled, but his eyes were cold. "Mort, we've been waiting for three months for you to write and publish your book. We were pretty sure what would be in it—that's why we've been answering your fool questions, providing you with the material you asked for, playing dumb for your benefit. . . . No, don't draw that gun from your pocket. Lieutenant Michaels is standing right behind you with an automatic in his hand."

You see, Mort, we wanted a written confession, and we've got it." He tapped the book again with his forefinger. "We didn't even have to ask for it. You brought it right in to us and then sat around till we read it. Perhaps now you might get the idea there's something to this crime-detecting business besides blind luck. It's a study in itself, Mort; mostly a study of human nature. We're studying all the time—that's why we weren't upset because the public was condemning us for not apprehending Dyer's murderer. We know, also, that things would even themselves up when the public knew how we'd accomplished our purpose. Just wait till they hear. Say, your book will have a record sale! It's a pity you won't be able to enjoy the profits, Mort. A pity."

Excessive Heat Caused Ice Age, Scientist Says

A revolutionary theory of the cause of the Great Ice age, blaming this episode of earth history on more warmth than was received from the sun instead of less, was proposed at a recent meeting of the Royal Meteorological Society in London, England, by the weather scientist, Dr. G. C. Simpson, says a writer in the Detroit Free Press.

The theory also explains the succession of four ice ages and three interglacial periods during which the ice retreated. According to the new theory, the ice age began about a million years ago with a slight increase in heat reaching the earth from the sun. This raised the average temperature of the earth only very little, but did increase greatly the amount of water evaporated from the ocean.

This increased evaporation caused heavier rains and snows all over the earth, including snows in the Arctic and Antarctic regions and on high mountains. The summers being too short for all this snow to melt, the first stage of the ice age came on.

Doctor Simpson supposes, however that the slow increase of the sun's heat continued. Probably this was enough to affect the earth's temperature as well as to increase the evaporation of sea water. Accordingly, the accumulated ice and snow melted again and there happened a wet and relatively warm interglacial period.

As the sun's heat then increased again this cycle is believed to have occurred in the reverse order, creating another period when snow and ice accumulated and which ended when the sun's heat had decreased enough to stop the excessive evaporation of ocean water.

Boring Insects Broadcast

Wood-boring insects were invited to broadcast their presence through microphones, amplifiers and loudspeakers placed in suspected timbers by the Forestry Products Research Board, says Pearson's Weekly. But their performances proved disappointing, being almost inaudible to the learned listeners. In this was not due to "mike-shyness" of the insects, who gnawed away with their usual unashamed gusto, but to the difficulty of getting rid of external noises. Even the noisy and notorious death-watch beetle could not be traced with certainty by the wireless sleuths.

The Pop in Pepper

Many slang American words we hear today on the films are not so novel, after all. "Pop" and "fan" for instance, are merely short for "paper" and "fanatic" according to Prof. Ernest Wheeler. Then there are words which have been twisted out of their original and real meaning. "Glamorous" is so often encountered nowadays in novels and films, is an exception. Actually this word, with its suggestion of romance and enchantment, is merely a corrupted form of that old and respectable word "grammar."—Pearson's Weekly.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By REV. F. E. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, Western News Service, Union.

Lesson for January 19

JESUS PREPARES FOR HIS WORK

LESSON TEXT—Luke 4:1-13. GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.—Luke 4:8. PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Grew Up. JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus was Tempted. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a Right Start for Life. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Finding God's Way for Life.

The statement of the subject of this lesson is not quite satisfactory. His baptism and temptation were not means of preparation, but were respectively his formal entrance upon his work and the first conflict with the devil, whose works he came to destroy.

1. Jesus Entering Upon His Mediatorial Work (Luke 3:21, 22). In his baptism (v. 21). In his baptism we see the symbolic act of Jesus dedicating himself to the work of redemption through the cross, or the act of consecration on his part to the work of saving the world through his death and resurrection. His baptism did not mean his obedience to the law of God, but his entrance upon the sacrificial work which on the cross of Calvary made a real foundation for full righteousness.

2. His anointing (v. 22). As he thus dedicated himself to the task of bringing in a righteousness, he was anointed with the Holy Spirit.

3. The heavenly recognition (v. 22). This act of devotion to the divine will was attended by the declaration of divine approval. "Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased."

II. Jesus' First Conflict With the Devil (Luke 4:1-13). Jesus went from the place of anointing and heavenly recognition as the Son of God to meet and to spall the arch enemy (Heb. 2:14). Instead of the temptation, therefore, being a preparation for his messianic work, it was a demonstration of the inseparableness of the divine and human natures in the incarnation. It is to be noted that the Holy Spirit, not Satan, led Jesus into the wilderness to be tempted.

1. The place (v. 1). It was in the wilderness of Judea. The first man, Adam, was tempted in a garden, with the most pleasant surroundings. The second man, Jesus Christ, was tempted in a barren wilderness, surrounded by wild beasts (Mark 1:13).

2. The method (v. 2-12). Christ as the world's Redeemer sustained a threefold relationship: the Son of man, the Messiah, and the Son of God. Therefore, Satan made each one a ground of attack.

a. As Son of man (vv. 2-4). Satan made his first assault upon Jesus as a man by appealing to the instinct of hunger: Satan urged him to use his divine power to convert a stone into bread. Hunger is natural and sinless. Real human life experiences hunger. The appetite of hunger was normal and right. The temptation was to satisfy a right hunger in a wrong way. To have yielded in this case, though his hunger was desperate, would have been to renounce the human limitations which he had taken for our sins. To use divine power to satisfy human needs would have been to fall as Savior and Mediator. To do right in a wrong way is to fall.

b. As Messiah (vv. 5-8). Here the temptation was to grasp his rightful dominion by false means. The devil offered to surrender unto him the world, if he would adopt his method—worship him. The force of this temptation was in the fact that the kingdoms of the world are Christ's by God's covenant with him. God's method by which Jesus was to possess the world was the sacrificial death on the cross. The temptation which Satan is placing upon the church today is to get possession of the world by other means than that of the cross.

c. As Son of God (vv. 9-12). Here Satan tries to induce Christ to presume upon God's care. He quotes a messianic psalm to induce him so to act. To do the spectacular thing in order to get publicity is to fall into Satan's temptation. For Jesus to have placed himself in danger in order to get God's special help in delivering him would have been to sin. To test God as to whether he will keep a promise is the greatest distrust; it is to sin and fall.

d. Christ's defense (vv. 4, 8, 12). It was the Word of God. He met every onslaught of the enemy with "It is written." Our defense is God's Word. May every Sunday School teacher and believer know how to use it.

e. The issue (v. 13). Satan was vanquished. If we but trust God and use his Word, we too can overcome the devil.

Burdens

Bear your burden manfully. Boys at school, young men who have exchanged boyish liberty for serious business—all who have got a task to do, a work to finish—bear the burden till God gives the signal for repose—the work is done, and the holiday is fairly earned.

The Best Way

Choose always the way that means the best. However rough it may be. Custom will render it easy and agreeable.—Pythagoras.

A Few Little Smiles

NOT SO KEEN

"I visited a phrenologist today and had my bumps read." Bootle told his wife. "He complimented me on the possession of a head with razor-like qualities."

"Did he explain what he meant?" his wife asked quietly.

"Well, no," replied Bootle; "but I gathered he'd noticed the keen edge of my ready wit and my clean-cut methods of reasoning."

"H'm!" she murmured. "If he knew you as I do he'd probably consider your head hollow ground."—Answers Magazine.

WHAT SAY?

The Tall One—When I say a thing I mean it. I never change my mind.

The Short One—I'm mighty glad to hear it. I remember some mighty interesting things you said about paying back ten dollars you once borrowed.

Audience "You can always tell your troubles to a policeman."

"Yes, can if you're lucky," said the policeman, who was writing a ticket. "But a driver like you is lucky not to be telling 'em to a grand jury."

A Believer "Do you believe in Santa Claus?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Playing up Santa Claus is one of the best ways of boosting business I know of."

Just Average "Wife (heatedly)—You're lazy, you're worthless, you're bad-tempered, you're selfish, you're a thorough liar. Husband (reasonably)—Well my dear, no man is perfect."

Poor Excuse "How dare you offer me a cheap necklace like this! It's imitation!"

"My dear—the sincerest form of flattery."—Stray Stories Magazine.

Poor Catch Small Jane had just received a spanking from her father.

"Mother," she sobbed, when they were alone later, "wore men awful scarce when you married Daddy or did you just feel sorry for him?"

In the Sign Language "I am a woman of few words," announced the haughty mistress to the new maid. "If I beckon with my finger, that means come."

"Suits me, mum," replied the girl. "I'm a woman of few words myself. If I shake me head, that means I ain't comin'."

NOT ON THE LEVEL

"I hear Mrs. Leghorn was arrested while hatching a nest of eggs."

"Yes; she was accused of running a shell game under cover."

Legal Minded "Are you afraid of war?"

"Whereabouts?" asked Mess BILL. "Most anywhere."

"No. Crimsons Gulchers can shoot or run, as the case may require. We haven't any women or children to protect."

Tribute "Do you enjoy flattery?"

"Very much," said Senator Borghum. "While flattery may not always imply sincere admiration, it invariably indicates genuine respect for power."

Exercise "Are you fond of music?"

"I used to be," said Mr. Dustin Stax. "But I gave up piano lessons in boyhood. I'm now looking for a professor who can teach me to play a proper tune on the cash register."

Correct Use Teacher (during written English test)—Write a sentence with the word "analyze" in it.

Pupil's Exam Paper—The teacher told us to look up the word "analyze" in the dictionary.

Household Questions

When an apple pie is two-thirds baked, sprinkle grated cheese over the top. It adds much to the flavor of the pie.

Sugar, used wisely, is an important source of energy to the body.

If apples are pricked with a fork before putting into the oven to bake, skins will not crack open in baking.

Sprinkle the buds and leaves of tulips, hyacinths, etc., grown in the house. It prevents their shriveling.

Place a turkey or chicken with breast down in pan for the first half hour of roasting. Juices will then flow into the breast and meat will be much more tender.

A soft cloth moistened with kerosene instead of water will clean windows quickly and well in freezing weather.

Give house plants a little fresh air every day. They require air as well as water and sunshine.

To prevent fruit settling on bottom of gelatin desserts, whip until gelatin is of the consistency of whipped cream.

The color and flavor of roast beef gravy is improved when a tablespoonful of brown or white sugar is added to it.

Clinkers that form on the stove lining will soon disappear if four or five oyster shells are burned on red hot coals that are left after fire has been shaken down.

Comments

By Lewis A. Burke

Good afternoon, Youse Guys and Youse Gals.—No, this saying isn't a bit original, being swiped from a well known radio orchestra leader.

Do you notice—or perhaps we're wrong, but the people of Lincoln County are a lot more cheerful since the recent snowfall. 'Everything's jake,' utters a local man.

A new song is being heard on the radio, "The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round" (we hope that's right about the title.) The bird who composed this number wasn't familiar with the French Horn, about which the song is written. The French Horn, as musicians know, isn't to be used for jazz. And it is conceded to be the most difficult of all brass instruments. Even cornet soloists are lost when it comes to playing the genuine Horn.

Now to delve into the 'realms of journalistic propensities and proclivities': The present administration, discussing Millions and Billions, reminds us of Amos 'n' Andy.

—And to think that Thomas Jefferson was bitterly criticized for having spent $18,000,000 for the Louisiana Purchase.

We note that Al Smith helps Roosevelt in the Solid South. Well, that's that. The southern people are against Sen. or Al on account of his religion. Remember how Texas went in the last presidential campaign?

Reminds me of when there was a national election held quite some time ago. Some men dispatched a boy down to the newspaper office to see how things were progressing. After about half an hour the boy returned, all out of breath. The spokesman asked what he had heard. "Louisiana—Gone—(g u l p) Democratic," gasped the lad.

Bughouse Fables—Roosevelt and Al Smith bosom friends.

Quoting Chas. E. Collins, president of the American Livestock Association—"In all history there is no record of such a wild and extravagant demonstration of a government supporting the people as exists in the United States at the present time."

Joe Louis After First Million—News headline. When an ignorant Negro, or shall we say, politely Colored boy can make that much dinero with his fists there isn't much incentive left for college professors or tasks requiring skill. "Why that's a whole lot more than the president of the United States salary" gloomily says a local man.

After receiving such a good drubbing from Joe Louis, Primo Carnera now goes to the battle front to furnish "beef" for the Ethiopians.

A lot of folks objected when president Jefferson paid $18,000,000 for all of the Louisiana territory. Shux, it would cost the government that much now to take a census of Philadelphia.

Short sermon for this week—Bad luck is a disease which, if taken in time, isn't incurable. Try working hard six days a week, go to bed early and be have yourself. And see if you don't improve.

Some folks are critical because the Democrats at Washington charged $50 a plate for the Jackson Day dinner. "Fiddle," snorts a local man, "if I were a 'pleaser' under the present administration, I'd be willing to pay twice that amount—and like 'n' Adon Amigos.
