Funeral of First Lady of Statehood, Tuesday

Funeral services over the mortal remains of Mrs. W. C. McDonald, wife of the first Governor of New Mexico after statehood, were held at the Methodist Church Tuesday afternoon with the Rev. E. Smith of the Episcopal Church of Fort Stanton, conducting the same. A sextette composed of Meses. R. E. Lemon, D. O. English, L. J. Adams, J. M. Beck, Rev. Bell and Murel Burnett, sang several beautiful selections and the litany for the dead was read by Rev. Smith. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. After the ceremonies, the remains were taken to the White Oaks cemetery, where they were interred by the side of the late Gov. W. C. McDonald.

Mrs. McDonald was born in the state of Wisconsin and came to this state in 1880. In 1889, she became the wife of W. C. McDonald. She died Saturday, Nov. 28, after a long illness. Mrs. McDonald is survived by two daughters and two sons. John and Paul McCourt were sons of a former husband. Mesdames Genevive Parker of Hollywood, Calif., and Frances Spencer of Carrizozo.

Mrs. McDonald was greatly devoted to the state in which she had spent nearly a half-century and especially to Carrizozo and Lincoln County. She was generous, charitable and was one of the community's leading workers in local affairs of all kinds. She was possessed of a gentle, sunny disposition and one which she maintained to the end, always meeting visitors with a smile and friendly chat. In honor of that estimable First Lady of New Mexico after Statehood, the flag at the Capitol in Santa Fe was lowered to half-mast during the afternoon of the funeral. The surviving relatives have the combined sympathy of our local community and the state at large.

Bingham News

Our noble president has journeyed to South America on a mission of peace, which reminds us of the fact that there are over 8,000,000 men trained ready for war in the world today. The world is armed today, as it was never armed before, for death and destruction. War may come, and we may be drawn into it in spite of our every effort to keep out, but the greatest preventative that can be found is to let it be known that if war is forced upon us, nobody, no matter how rich or influential, will be permitted to make a dime out of it, and that money and other wealth will be drafted on an equality with the "gun-toters." If that will not save us from war, nothing will! When the value of money is reduced to a level with the value placed upon human blood, there will be small danger of war. It is important that we, as peace-loving folk, should talk peace; but it is also important that this ardent desire be supplemented with governmental action. With the Yuletide approaching, we should ever remind ourselves and each other of that divine announcement given many hundreds of years ago to a group of awe-stricken shepherds: "Peace on earth, good will toward men!"

FLOYD GIBBONS

ADVENTURERS CLUB

How Everybody

"Terror at the Door" By FLOYD GIBBONS

THIS is the story of a man, a woman and a dog—and I'll admit right at the start that the dog got the dirty end of the deal.

The woman was Ellen J. Swanson of Springfield, N. J. The dog's name was Bill. The name of the man, I can't give you. I don't know it, and Ellen Swanson doesn't even want to know it. Maybe he wouldn't want us to know it either. There you have the characters in our story.

Twenty-four years ago, on a cold, January night, Fate juggled up a meeting between them—and most anything Fate arranges is packed full of drama.

The scene of that meeting was the home of Ellen and her husband on the outskirts of Summit, N. J. It was almost one o'clock in the morning, but Ellen was still up. Her husband was working late that night, and he'd want a hot meal when he came home.

Enter the Brutal Looking Tramp. Came a knock at the door. That ought to be her husband. Ellen jumped out of her chair, opened the door, exclaiming, "You poor dear!" But the last word stuck in her throat. Her feet seemed to freeze to the floor. It was not her husband.

It wasn't her husband, but the ugliest, dirtiest, most brutal looking tramp Ellen had ever seen. He had a long hunting knife in his hand, and under his arm was a bloody newspaper from which the head of a dead rabbit protruded. From a piece of clothesline tied around his waist hung a dead chicken.

Ellen stood gazing, speechless, at this strange figure. The tramp was the first one to speak. "I saw your light," he said, "and I ain't got no matches. I want to cook this here chicken." He paused, and Ellen noted to her horror that the tramp had planted his foot inside the door so that she couldn't close it. "But maybe you give me something to eat," he went on. "I been walkin' a long ways."

He Made Himself at Home. Ellen had to fight to find her voice. "Ye-es," she stammered. "Wait there. I'll bring something out to you." But the tramp pushed his foot farther into the kitchen. "It's too dark out here to see to eat," he stated flatly. And with that he stepped inside, pushed her out of the way, and closed the door behind him.

"I walked over to the table," says Ellen, "but I did not feel the floor under my feet. The tramp pulled out a chair and sat down. Somehow I got a plate and poured him some soup. Crackers and bread were already on the table, and he began to eat.

"In the meantime I was praying to God to save me and my two small children. I was so frightened that my teeth were chattering, and perspiration formed in beads all over my face. I wanted to scream, but I know it would be useless. The road we lived on didn't have many houses. There was one off to the right of us, but on the other side there was nothing but dense woods.

"Then, like a flash, a thought came to me—and with it came a little courage. I stepped across the room, saying, 'I must get the dog before you get out again. He is a fierce, vicious watchdog, and it's funny that he missed you coming in.'"

One Thing Made Bill Angry.

Ellen did have a dog—a big one. But he was no more vicious than Shirley Temple. He was just a big, good-natured hulk of a mutt that made friends with anybody and everybody. But Ellen had a plan. She called, "Bill—here Bill." And Bill came running like a streak. Inside the kitchen he spied the tramp and was all set to wag his tail. But Ellen grabbed his collar, held on to him with all her might, and put her scheme into action.

There was just one thing that ever made Bill get mad. When Ellen's youngest child was a baby, Bill used to like to walk beside her carriage. He walked so close that the wheels would run over his big clumsy feet. On such occasions he would growl and snap, and the hair on his back would bristle up like a porcupine's quills.

That was what Ellen had remembered. Now she thrust out her foot and came down hard on poor Bill's toes. Bill growled and tried to pull away. Ellen held him faced toward the tramp and tugged backward on his collar. The tramp looked up from his plate of soup, and Ellen stepped on Bill's feet again.

Fierce Enough to Scare Any Tramp.

She stepped a little harder that second time, and Bill almost went crazy with pain. The hair on his back stood up in true porcupine fashion. Bill looked like the toughest, most dangerous dog in the world at that moment.

The tramp jumped out of his chair. Ellen could see that he was beginning to be afraid. Then she put on the finishing touches to her little act. In a breathless voice she said to the tramp: "I think you'd better go now. I can't hold him much longer, and I'm afraid his collar will break."

And with that, Ellen stepped once more on Bill's toes. Bill let out another deep-throated growl—lugged furiously at his collar again. The tramp began gathering up his bundles. He got them together and snuck out of the door—reluctant to leave his half-finished dinner behind him, but not any less anxious to stay in the same room with that snarling, vicious dog.

When he was gone, Ellen was shaking like a leaf. She bolted the door, and then fell to patting Bill. He wasn't much of a dog as far as protection was concerned—but he sure could put up a swell bluff if you stepped on his toes a little.

Keeping Up With Science

Most Ancient India Is Revealed in Chanhu-daro Ruins

Trade City Uncovered by Archeologists

AMERICAN archeologists have unearthed a buried city in India, showing more vividly than ever before what the most ancient civilization of India was like. The ruins, found under mounds of earth at Chanhu-daro, northwestern India, date back five thousand years in their oldest era.

Chanhu-daro had homes of burnt brick, and the brick was just about like modern brick in size. The houses had bathrooms and drains that are pronounced superior to the sanitary arrangements in cities of other civilizations of their time.

The picture of a trade town of ancient India, as old as the famous ruined city of Mohenjo-daro, is the result of excavation by two institutions, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and the American School of Indic and Iranian Studies.

The Indus valley, where Chanhu-daro stood, had its trouble with floods, like Ur of the Chaldees and many another ancient town. The field director of the expedition, Ernest Mackay, finds that at least three great floods attacked the city. After such a flood, the people were forced to leave the place entirely, and in some sequences of the city's history debris piled over the abandoned ruins before settlers came to rebuild.

After the Harappa culture, as the oldest civilization at this site is named, there followed a people of about 2000 B. C. who lived in matting houses, and had only rough paving under their feet. These people made great quantities of pottery which the archeologists hope will shed more light on the migrations and trade relations of their era.

Gas From Fruit Skins Stops Potato Growth

WASHINGTON.—The skins of ripe apples, pears and Hawthorn fruits produce a gas that keeps potatoes from growing, Dr. O. H. Elmer of the United States Department of Agriculture has found.

Dr. Elmer measured a large number of the effects that this gas, produced by the living skin of sound apples, has on potatoes. He found that the respiration of the potato was speeded up, and consequently the activity of all the other processes directly connected with the potatoes' respiration was also increased.

Sufficient concentration of the gas stops potatoes from sprouting, and keeps them well preserved for long periods of time, the experiments show. Chemical investigation disclosed that the unknown gas was ethylene, the gas used in carbide lamps. Interestingly enough, this gas has for some time been used by produce experts to keep citrus fruits while in transit, and to aid in ripening them.

Wild Cinchona Trees Found in Costa Rica

CHICAGO.—Cinchona trees, the source of quinine, have been found growing wild in the Central American republic of Costa Rica.

Specimens of this unique discovery have been received at the Field Museum of Natural History here. Wild cinchona trees have not hitherto been known outside their ancient home in the Andean highlands of South America.

The world's supply of quinine is at present derived from plantation trees in the East Indies. The wild South American cinchona forests, hitherto unexploited, were practically wiped out many years ago.

Delicate Surgery on Tiny Fruit-Flies Aids Biologists

Glass Needles and Microscopes Used

PASADENA, CALIF.—Surgical operations of incredible delicacy are used for the transplantation of eyes, sex glands, legs, wings, and other organs of tiny insects the size of ordinary gnats, by two young scientists, Drs. Boris Ephrussi and G. W. Beadle. Doctor Ephrussi is a Frenchman, Doctor Beadle an American.

The work was begun in Paris, at the Institute of Physico-Chemical Biology, and has been continued at the William G. Kerckhoff Laboratories of the Biological Sciences at the California Institute of Technology. The insects operated on are the favorite experimental animals of geneticists, the handy little fruit-flies known more learnedly as Drosophila. They are subjected to the transplanting technique while still infants, in the larval or grub stage.

Only Sixth of Inch Long. Although even the largest of these larvae are only a sixth of an inch long and a twenty-fifth of an inch in diameter, both scientists work at the same specimen at the same time.

The operating table is a small glass laboratory dish, and the two biologists work with hollow glass needles, drawn out to hair-line fineness. Each man watches through a double-barreled microscope. With the needles they pluck up the rudimentary "buds" of organs which have been dissected out of one larva, and inject them into the body of another.

The "host" larvae, with their added transplanted organs, are then placed in an incubator and kept at a temperature of 77 degrees Fahrenheit for four or five days, during which time they transform themselves first into pupae and then emerge as full-grown fruit-flies.

Transplanted Organs Grow. Some of the transplanted organs, of course, are never of any use to the insect that has acquired them. An eye grafted into the abdomen of a fruit-fly becomes a perfect eye, but because it lacks the proper nerve connections does not help its unconscious possessor to see.

On the other hand, transplanted ovaries often successfully make connection with a female insect's egg-laying apparatus, and these then function quite as well as the owner's original pair.

These experiments have a purpose decidedly more serious than just showing that so difficult a biological stunt can be carried through successfully. Drosophila has been the most important organism for demonstration of the basic principles of heredity ever since Dr. Thomas Hunt Morgan, now director of the biological laboratories at the California Institute of Technology, carried out the pioneer researches in this particular field many years ago.

But certain tissue transplantation work, of value in studying these principles, has hitherto been possible only with larger but less understood animals, like insects, fishes and frogs.

Ancient Bone Armor Found in Alaska

WASHINGTON.—Bone armor worn in American battles a thousand years ago, when Europe's fighters went clad in mail, is among the trophies of an archeological expedition recently returned from Alaska.

Mounds of prehistoric rubbish yielded the slabs of bone armor, and the arrow heads, fish lines, harpoons, combs, needles, children's toys, and bits of clothing of Eskimos who lived at Cape Prince of Wales, the most westerly point on the North American continent. The expedition, led by Henry B. Collins, Jr., was a joint venture of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Geographic Society.

The makers of the ancient objects are identified as Eskimos of the Thule stage of Eskimo-prehistory, by Mr. Collins. While this type of culture has been known, especially in Greenland and central Canada, Mr. Collins' latest expedition confirms the theory that this ancient culture spread eastward from Alaska. The digging also probed into an earlier stage of Eskimo culture.

Dozen Years Added to Average Woman's Life

Washington.—Eleven years have been added to the average man's life and 12 years to the life of the average woman, it is revealed by life tables of the bureau of the census. United States department of commerce.

At the beginning of the present century, the average length of life in the United States was 48 years for white men. Now, these new figures give an average life length of 59 years. For women the average lifetime in 1926 was 51 years. Now it is nearly 63 years.

By VIRGINIA VALE

NEVER was a girl more excited over her first trip to New York than Olivia de Havilland was. For years she had dreamt of taking the trip from her home town (Saratoga, Calif.), but she had always supposed that she and her mother and sister would make it in a car, stopping everywhere, seeing everything.

Naturally, she had no idea that some day she would take it by plane because, as a motion picture actress, she couldn't be spared from the studio long enough to drive!

But that's the way she finally did it. And the thing she liked most was the view of Tennessee from the air in the very early morning! She had a grand time in New York. Her latest picture, "The Charge of the Light Brigade," had just been released, and the critics had raved about her beauty, as they always do.

Of course, Mary Pickford's plans aren't really exciting news any more, but all this autumn newspaper editors in the East have been spurred into action by the rumor that Miss Pickford and Buddy Rogers were being married that night.

And when it was learned that she was on her way to New York, supposedly to dispose of her United Artists holdings, marry Mr. Rogers and sail for Europe, a lot of people sighed with relief. If only she'd get married and end that story once and forever, they exclaimed, it would be a blessing.

Clark Gable is to have the coveted role of the hero of "Idiot's Delight," when the play is transferred to the screen. Alfred Lunt, the very talented actor, has been doing it on the stage for some time, with his wife, Lynn Fontanne, playing opposite him, and the play is so successful that a staggering price was paid for the screen rights.

Greta Garbo may have new competition in the person of Tamará Desni, a foreign importation who arrived in this country recently. Koroda, who is responsible for so many of the good English films, hails her as a great discovery. You'll be able to judge her possibilities for yourself if you see "Fire Over England."

There has been a lot of speculation about whether Randolph Scott's bride would live in Hollywood or not. Most of her interests, (except her husband) center in her country place in Virginia; it's said that she tried to persuade him to abandon Hollywood and live there, but he refused.

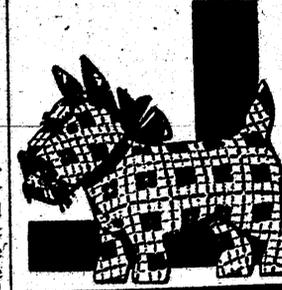

Now she's consented to try Hollywood, but if she doesn't like it she'll return to Virginia, and the marriage will develop into one of those long-distance ones.

If you find that sports events are being broadcast much better than they ever have been before, you can thank Red Barber for the improvement. He went to New York from the Middle West to help announce the World Series; and after his first appearance on the air the inner circles of the broadcasting business were running around in circles applauding his performance. Without any doubt he was the tops, so far as that type of broadcasting was concerned. Time has proved that he's just as good when it's football that he is talking about.

Poor William Powell is still having trouble with that left eye—and still reigning as a box-office favorite. "Labeled Lady" is his latest, with Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow and Spencer Tracy, and a swell picture it is. One of the best things about it is Jean Harlow's return to a comedy role. Whenever she goes dramatic, as she did in "Suzy," most of her admirers implore her never to do it again.

ODDS AND ENDS... Doris Dudley (first picture, "A Woman Rebels," with Katharine Hepburn) is through with RKO, because they wouldn't let her have a voice in selecting her roles... Incidentally, she wasn't very good in her first picture... Ferdinand Gracet, French aviation picture star who'll work over here (and is expected to head an all-star), brought his wife with him... She's worth millions... Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon have been chosen as the first television stars of the regular television service in England, where they are making pictures... Paramount may make a series of shorts with Cornelia Otis Skinner (unless you've heard on the air, no doubt) based on sketches written by her.

Print your child's name inside his rubbers when he goes to school. This will make it possible for his teacher to identify them, which would otherwise be impossible to do where there are so many rubbers of about the same size.

When making mayonnaise, stir the beaten eggs into cold vinegar and when it is boiled it will not curdle, as may be the case when eggs are added to hot vinegar.

To remove the feathers from wild ducks, dip them in boiling water, then wrap in a thick cloth. The feathers are steamed loose in a very few minutes and the "pins" will give little or no trouble.

If cinnamon toast is served frequently, it pays to mix some cinnamon and sugar and keep it in a shaker so that it can be used quickly.

Before storing winter cabbage wrap each head in an old newspaper. This will keep the cabbage crisp and green much longer.

Borax whitens napkins. Use a tablespoon of borax in each two quarts of water used for rinsing.

MONTAGUE

Relates What Came of Casting "Bread on the Waters"

One of the Men Made a Splint Out of the Spar An' Patched up the Flipper.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE
'BECAUSE they ain't got legs an' arms an' whiskers, an' religion, like people has," said the old sailor, "the idee has got around that fish ain't got no feelin's. Well, cold blooded fishes, like sharks and barracudas maybe ain't. But whales is different. Whales is warm blooded, an' if you treat 'em right, an' they ever have a chance to do you a good turn they'll do it. An' the other way 'round, if you do them a dirty trick they'll keep it in mind, just like elephants does, an' sooner or later they're liable to even things up."

"I ain't sayin' that they'll always git back at you, for the sea is a big place, an' it's just by accident that you meet up with a whale that you've had a acquaintance with before. But now an' then it so happens that you fall foul of a whale you bumped into before, an' if he was hurt bad in the smash you got to look out. Of course nowadays ships have guns to shoot 'em with, but that's only on whalin' vessels. An' even if a whale's eyes is small, compared to the rest of him, he can see a long ways out of 'em, an' recognize the people on her deck just like he had a glass to look at 'em through."

"I seen a lot of whales, mean ones an' sociable an' pleasant mannered ones, but they was two of 'em specially that I remember now, on account of the way they behaved their selves. The first one was a mean one, though I don't say he didn't have cause to act the way he did. We was layin' in a calm down off the west coast of Mexico one time about forty years ago when this feller come along side an' looked us over. There bein' nothin' to do till we got a breeze all of the crew that had anything to shoot with made a target out of him, just for the fun of seein' him take quick dives when he saw the flash of a gun, an' then, if he wasn't hit, come up about a hundred fathom further out an' sort of dare us to shoot him again."

"Some of the men was dead shots, an' he got so many holes in his hulk that you'd think he couldn't hold water. By an' by he got sort of sick of it an' decided to git out of range, but before he done so he cracked on all sail an' bore down on us till he got so close aboard that he could give the ship a good look over. Some of the men says that he dove under the stern an' come up close aboard so he could read the vessel's name, but I don't believe that. Them brutes is just fish, an' though they act like devils sometimes it would be stretchin' things to say that they could put the letters of the alphabet together an' make words out of it."

"Just the name this whale done a lot of rememberin', for four years after that, when we was makin' a voyage down the coast of South America who should show up about two points off our weather beam but him. We had a new crew, includin' officers, all except the bos'n, an' though after I called his attention to the critter he tried to put the old man an' the mate on their guard they just laughed at him for being a fool superstitious sailor an' kept right on their course. Well, nothin' could have been expected to happen but what did happen. That whale waited till night to hide him, an' then he must of swum out about a hundred fathom away from us so as to give him a good start an' headed for us."

"They ain't no ship built that can stand a wallop from the bony head of a whale. Six or seven ribs was stove in as if they had been made of kindlin' wood, and the sea begun to come aboard so fast that you could hear it pourin' in like a river. "What did we do? What could we do? We just took to the boats, an' if we hadn't of had the luck to be plucked up by a merchant man, we'd have finished up like Jonah, although I hear tell that whales don't eat people any more since them old sellers was keepin' logs."

"An' now here's the other side of the picture. Quite a while after that I was aboard a ship that had one of these here humanitarians for a skipper. He wasn't so humane to the men aboard, but he couldn't bear to see anything hurt unless it was a sailor man, who in his way of thinkin' don't have no proper human feelin's. One night there come an' awful bump, an' then a lot of others, like we was hoppin' along over a reef, an' the ship began to leak so fast that we could just about keep even by mannin' all the pumps. When it begun to get daylight, the men who was restin' from their work below come on deck so they could get a sniff of something besides bilge water, an' there, just off our beam was a whale with a busted flipper, tryin' to make head against a wind that was blowin' him toward the coast."

"Well, nothin' would do, after the old man found that about half the crew could keep the water out of her, but that four of us should go out an' see what we could do for the poor critter. We took along some line an' a spar, an' one of the men made a splint out of the spar an' patched up the flipper so the big fellow could use it pretty near as good as he done his good one. Of course he would of gone to port all the time an' just kept runnin' around in circles except for his tail. But he used that for a rudder, an' the last we seen of him he was makin' a passage to the sou'west, an', the sea havin' gone down he was doin' pretty good."

"Now here's what happened afterward. Some people don't believe it when I tell it to 'em, but there's a lot of people who don't believe it's a sign of bad luck when you're left heel itches. It's only a sailorman that really understands the signs an' omens that helps him to live out his days by the warnin's they bring him."

"We was stove up so bad that we had to put into Calloa to get new plankin' an' ribs put in, which took about three weeks. Then we laid our course for the Horn, an' before we had been out two days there falls a flat calm, and there we laid, bobbin' up an' down on the slick swell, an' driftin' this way an' that way with the tide, but not gettin' no place. It was one of them calms that looks as if they will last forever, an' to make matters worse some of the seams we thought was all tight begin to open. They wasn't none of us, includin' the captain that wasn't pretty sartin' we'd just stay there till she filled an' sunk with all on board an' nobody left to tell what had happened."

"But early the second mornin' when it was my watch on deck I looked over the bows an' seen something black headed in for us. I thought at first it was a porpoise, but soon I see it was too big for a porpoise an' could only be a whale. It kept right on headin' in till I noticed it was swimmin' a funny way, an' then I give a yell, for it was the whale we had doctored up while we was headin' down the coast."

"At first I was scared it was goin' to bump us because the splint had got out of gee an' it was sore at us because we'd been so clumsy, but it slowed up when it got under the bows, cocked an eye up at me, an' then just lazied along fast enough to keep up."

"I knowed what it was doin' then, an' why. So I got out a cable, made a runnin' bowline into it, an' drop it over the side slipped it over Mr. Whale's head an' made it taut behind his flippers. When he felt the strain, he give a lunge forward, an' soon he was towin' us straight for port. He knowed his way too, for by six bells we was alongside the drydock ready to be hauled out for repairs, an' the old whale's waka was a white line headed for the deep sea."

"Now that'll show you that whales is like folks. Some of us is mean an' some of us is kindly. An' yet when I tell this yarn to most people they look at me funny an' ask me what I've been drinkin'."

POTATOES EVER DIET MAINSTAY

Monotony Can Be Avoided by Varying Preparation.

By EDITH M. BARBER
POATATOES are certainly a mainstay in our diet. We do not tire of them and they can be prepared in an almost endless variety of ways. And yet there are some people who have them boiled, mashed, baked and boiled again week in and week out.

Have you ever made savory potatoes? They are delicious for a luncheon dish or served with meat at dinner. Pare and slice six good-sized potatoes. In a saucepan melt one tablespoon of bacon fat and in it cook two sliced onions until they are a very delicate brown. Add the sliced potatoes and cook until they have browned slightly, then put in one tablespoon of chopped parsley, one teaspoon of salt, one-fourth teaspoon of pepper, and one-half cup of water. Cover closely and cook slowly for twenty minutes. Add one-half cup of milk and cook fifteen minutes longer.

Remove the potatoes carefully to a hot platter and over the top sprinkle one-half cupful of grated cheese. These potatoes are a very nice substitute for scalloped potatoes, and as they are cooked on top of the stove do not take as long as those done in the oven. And it is not always desirable to heat the oven for just one dish, and it takes little gas to cook these over one burner.

Another potato dish that will almost make a meal is prepared by paring potatoes of uniform size and cutting a round hole through the center of each potato. Boil them gently in salted water until almost tender. Drain, place a curled-up slice of bacon in each hole and place in a hot oven until the bacon is crisp and the potatoes are thoroughly done.

Sometimes small sausages are placed in the holes in the potatoes and either baked in the oven or put under the broiler to cook. These also are good and the potato takes up fat and flavor from the sausage.

Potatoes can be baked, the inside scooped out and mixed with milk, butter, salt, and grated cheese, put back again and the potatoes put in the oven to brown. Chopped cooked meat or fish can be added to the potato before it is returned to its shell.

Nut Potato Croquettes.
1/2 cup cream or milk
2 cups hot mashed potatoes
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
Pepper
1 cup crushed Brazil nuts
To the hot potatoes add the cream or milk, baking powder, seasoning and half the Brazil nuts. Spread mixture on plate and cool. Shape roll in nuts and cook in deep hot fat, 390 degrees F., until golden brown. Drain on soft paper.

Stewed Potatoes.
3 tablespoons butter
3 cups diced potatoes
Salt
Pepper
2 cups milk
Melt the butter in a frying pan, add the potatoes and seasoning, and stir over the fire until the fat is absorbed. Add the milk and cook slowly about half an hour. More milk may be added if needed.

Codfish Balls.
4 or 5 medium-sized potatoes
1 cup picked salt cod or 1/2 cup prepared salt cod.
1 tablespoon butter,
Pepper
1 egg or 2 egg yolks
Pare and slice potatoes and cook with picked cod in boiling water until potatoes are tender. Drain, mash and beat until smooth. Add butter, pepper and egg. Drop by tablespoons into very hot fat, 395 degrees F., and cook until light brown. Drain on soft paper.

If mixture is too soft to hold together a tablespoonful of flour may be added. The finished cakes, however, should be irregular in shape. If croquettes of regular shape are desired add the flour, shape and dip in flour before frying. Garnish with bacon fried in deep fat and with sliced lemon.

Baked Beans.
1 quart beans
1/2 pound salt pork or 1/4 pound corned beef.
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon mustard
1/2 cup molasses
Boiling water
Soak the beans in cold water over night. Drain, cover with fresh water and cook until soft. Drain and place in an earthen bean pot. Bury the meat in the beans. Mix salt, mustard and molasses and add one-fourth cup of boiling water. Pour over the beans and add enough boiling water to cover. Cover, and bake in a moderate oven, 325 degrees F., eight hours.

Rich Muffins.
1/4 cup shortening
1/2 cup sugar
1 egg
3 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 cups flour
1 cup milk
Cream the butter, add the sugar and egg well beaten, sift the baking powder and salt with the flour, and add to the first mixture, alternating with milk. Bake in greased gem pans twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven (375 to 400 degrees F.).

YOU CAN THROW CARDS IN HIS FACE ONCE TOO OFTEN
WHEN you have those awful cramps; when your nerves are all on edge—don't take it out on the man you love.
Your husband can't possibly know how you feel for the simple reason that he is a man.
A three-quarter wife may be no wife at all if she nags her husband seven days out of every month.
For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three decades of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."
Don't be a three-quarter wife; take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

COMFORTS OF FRIENDSHIP
Oh, the comfort, the inexpressible comfort of feeling safe with a person—having neither to weigh thought nor measure words, but pouring them all right out just as they are, chaff and grain together; as certain that a faithful hand will take and sift them, keep what is worth keeping, and with the breath-of-comfort blow the rest away.

MORNING DISTRESS

How Many Pennies Your Child's Life?

Don't Try to "Save" on Home Remedies—Ask Your Doctor

There is one point, on which practically all doctors agree. That is: Don't give your child unknown remedies without asking your doctor first.

All mothers know this. But sometimes the instinct to save a few pennies by buying something just as good—overcomes caution.

When it comes to the widely used children's remedy—"milk of magnesia"—many doctors for over half a century have said "PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia is the standard of the world. Safe for children."

Keep this in mind, and say "PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA" when you buy. Comes now, also in tablet form. Get the form you prefer. But see that what you get is labeled "Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia." 25¢ for a big box of the tablets at drug stores.

The Voice and the Woman

Ernestine Schumann-Heink was more than a great singer. She was a human being of fine and lovable qualities. Her courage, her warmth and her simplicity endeared her to thousands of people who had never heard her sing.

As an artist, she ranked high. Her fame was worldwide as an interpreter of great contralto roles in Gorman music drama, particularly Wagner.

As a concert artist, she delighted her vast throngs with her rendering not only of German Lieder but of devotional songs or simple ballads. In recent years the radio had enlarged her audience.

Well past the time of life when the human voice is considered to be at its peak, she continued to sing, and won the approval of critics as well as of the public.

It was characteristic of her that when her musical career seemed to be over, she continued with motion pictures: "to make everybody laugh." She always seemed to enjoy amusing people, just as she always was ready to lend the aid of her art to soldiers, or to any who needed comfort.

People loved Mme. Schumann-Heink; they knew that she loved them. There was something about her frank simplicity that permitted no doubt of her sincerity. There was no pose about her. When she said she was happier in the kitchen than on the opera stage, people believed her.

Not only her musical tradition but her example of human helpfulness and good cheer will live long. —Christian Science Monitor.

"THANKS A MILLION" FOR MORE THAN A MILLION

America has bought 1,130,000 Chevrolets during the past twelve months, thereby giving Chevrolet the greatest year in its history and the greatest measure of buyer preference it has ever enjoyed.

The builders of Chevrolet are thankful for many things, but most of all for the warm friendship of the American people.

And so again at this Thanksgiving season we say, "Thank you, America," for you have given Chevrolet a measure of good-will without parallel in the annals of modern industry.

Consider, for a moment, all that you have done to inspire Chevrolet's appreciation during the past twelve months:

You have purchased 1,130,000 Chevrolets; you have made Chevrolet your favorite car for the seventh time in the past ten years; you have given Chevrolet strong preference in every section of the country; you have conferred this same high honor upon Chevrolet trucks by purchasing more than 265,000 commercial units; you have made 1936 the most successful year in all Chevrolet history.

And now, to climax these expressions of friendship, you are displaying even more marked preference for the new Chevrolet for 1937.

It is difficult to express adequate appreciation for gifts so great and so generous as these.

All we can say is, "Thanks a million" for more than a million cars in 1936; and all we can do is offer you the still finer Chevrolet of 1937 in return for the finest friendship ever bestowed upon any motor car manufacturer.

Goal Posts Belong to Winning Team, Coast Judge Rules

CUTUPS can now go to work on the goal posts without fear of tangling with the law. A California judge has ruled in a test case that, legally and morally, the posts belong to the winning team.

If you hear Harvard's players blissing Old Roscoe and Young Sam, don't jump too quickly to conclusions. They merely will be popping off about the blocking and tackling dummies upon which they must daily exercise.

Add gens to keep an eye on. Porter Tull, who was brought up from the scrubs at the start of the season and has missed only twenty-seven minutes at center in Tulane's six games since then.

Zeko Williams, the gray-haired end who tackles so savagely for U. S. C., is a brother-in-law of Ken Carpenter, Olympic discus notable.

Recalling When Grid Game Was Really Rough

Lee Little always laughs when people sigh about how rough the game has become. According to the ringmaster of the Lions, there never was a season to compare with 1919.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

LONG ISLAND U'S famous undefeated basketball team is planning to capitalize on its collegiate training. The Hillhouses, Mersons and Benders hope to find some towns to represent on the pro circuit after they graduate in June.

During the Pitt game Fordham's players counted four whenever they used their much-discussed shift and so slowed it down to suit official requirements. Now Jimmy Crowley can be tipped off that he had better do something about his quick kick unless he wishes some technically correct arbiter to start calling penalties on that, too.

In Yale's dressing room, the week of the Dartmouth game, there was a blackboard diagram showing a green wave breaking against a sea wall of Yale players.

Casey Stengel Doing Nicely With Oil Field

The Dodger directors will be disappointed to learn that Casey Stengel and his former playmates are doing very well with that Texas oil field investment.

Fordham's good season and the attendant big business at the Polo Grounds raised Secretary Eddie Brammick's plans for an October trip with the Mrs. They'll take two weeks in Brooklyn instead.

Owners of race horses competing in California are forbidden to bet in handbooks away from the track. Two of them (in direct contrast to New York where handbook operators also operate some very interesting ge-ges) were set down at Tampan for violation of this regulation.

Mid-Western letter writers are touting Ken Nelson, blind end, as the best punt blocker in recent years. The one he blocked for the winning touchdown against Michigan was his seventh in three years of varsity competition.

Washington Digest National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART

Washington.—There is an "era of good feeling" going the rounds that is quite different than anything we have had since early in 1929. It is being promoted with a great deal of enthusiasm and present results as well as indications justify the promotion work that is going on in the New Deal press agent circles.

Business also is indulging in this era of good feeling. Business always puts its best foot forward, just as lovers do. It wants to develop a spirit of good will on the part of the public and it wants to show its financial backers how things are coming along all hunky-dory.

The important, as well as the interesting, thing about this era of good feeling is that to the expert students it shows a gradual, if not conclusive, decline in depression conditions. It proves that things are on the up grade—not that they are at the top yet, but that a momentum is being established which may carry the economic recovery to the top if the federal government settles down and treats business with fairness.

As I said above, New Deal press agents are promoting this business recovery for all that it is worth. Naturally, they are attributing it to the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt as the basic factor in this upward surge of business.

While the New Dealers are shouting from the housetops how President Roosevelt has accomplished all of these things, there comes a discordant note from business itself. Business leaders, just like politicians, want credit for whatever is accomplished, whether they are responsible or someone else.

Business is seeking to show that it is pulling itself together, opening new factories, raising wages, in spite of New Deal policies with the handicaps that some of those policies include.

The answer to the upward swing of business lies chiefly in the fact that the depression has worn itself out. It would have worn itself out just the same whether the administration was New Deal or Republican. It would have accomplished just as much in the way of expanded buying power and increased production whether Mr. Roosevelt was re-elected or whether he had been defeated and Governor Landon of Kansas had been elected at the end of the recent national campaign.

I am reminded by this discussion of a remark that the late Eugene Black made while he was governor of the Federal Reserve board. On that occasion I asked him whether there were signs of the end of the depression. His reply was, "not yet." He added, however, that the depression would destroy itself as every other depression in history had done and that when this point of exhaustion had been reached, commerce and industry would take an upward swing. Then, he added with reference to some of the economic students of the administration in power: "It will wear itself out and good times will come back again—and every doggone professor and economic theorist in the world will try to claim credit for it."

Those who have access to the market pages of the great metropolitan daily newspapers must have been impressed by the rapid fire announcements coming from big industrial corporations of wage increases, bonuses for employees and melon cutting in the form of dividends for the shareholders.

A prosperous nation may not always be a happy one but there is a certain psychology about a prosperous nation that makes it carefree. It is a psychology that makes the average man and woman forget to a large extent about the recent pinch of economic displacements and, as well, those same people are inclined to disregard and give no consideration to the morrow.

Let us look into those circumstances. When corporations or other forms of business have reasonable years in their particular lines, early in the winter they begin to see what the year's total will be. They can figure rather accurately what the returns will be in the last two months, say, after they have made their totals for the first ten months of the year.

Now, we have a tremendously high tax rate on corporation surpluses and we have rather high tax rates on incomes of individuals. Corporations and other businesses, therefore, start figuring how to do the best they can with the earnings of the year. Some of them determine that their employees should share substantially in the profits of their labors; others want to distribute as much of these earnings as they may to their stockholders because such a showing creates a demand in the market for their shares and such a demand is influential in establishment of the corporation's credit for borrowing money if it needs to borrow from the banks.

To be perfectly fair, it must be said that the money now being distributed either in dividends or in bonuses to workers or in wage increases was earned before the recent election. Its distribution, however, is motivated largely on prospects for the future. In other words, those responsible for these distributions of earnings feel that they can let that money out of their hands. They may not be distributing all of the sums available but the "era of good feeling" is accepted by all of them as indicating the chances for continued earnings are bright.

I have merely touched on the effect of distribution of earnings among the holders of capital. It is just as important to consider the effect of distribution of these earnings on the laboring classes.

The humblest deeds, prompted by a pure and unselfish motive, measure larger in God's sight than apparently much greater deeds which are done to be seen of men and for the aggrandizement of self.—Gunn.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for November 29 CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD

LESSON TEXT—Philemon 4-20. GOLDEN TEXT—There is neither bond nor free... for ye all are one in Christ Jesus. Galatians 3:28. PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul's Shortest Letter. JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul's Shortest Letter. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Slave Becomes a Brother. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ Transforming Social Relationships.

Letters are always interesting, and especially so when they bring good news. The brief epistle to Philemon is one of unusual charm. Paul writes to Philemon, a Christian brother in Colosse, to inform him that he is sending back to him Onesimus, who was apparently Philemon's brother (v. 16) but who had through misfortune and sin (vv. 18, 19) become a slave.

Having reached this great city he no doubt was satisfied that he had placed himself beyond the reach of anyone who knew him. But he had reckoned without God, who not only knew where he was (see Ps. 139:7-12) but also what he needed. He is brought into touch with the imprisoned apostle, Paul, and through his ministry the fugitive slave becomes a "brother beloved in the Lord" (v. 16). How marvelous is the grace of God, and how patiently he deals with those who attempt to flee even from his love!

I. Appreciation (vv. 4-8). After an introductory word Paul speaks of his love for Philemon, his appreciation of the latter's hospitality, his fellowship, and his faith. Is Paul flattering his friend in order that he may grant his request? Certainly not, but he is expressing his true feelings toward a faithful brother. We need a revival of Christian courtesy and appreciation of one another.

II. Consideration (vv. 9-14). Paul could have kept silent, and encouraged Onesimus to remain with him. He needed help (v. 13) but without the consent of Philemon he would not keep Onesimus (v. 14). At the same time he reminds Philemon very tactfully that he owes them both loving consideration. We have here a striking illustration of the candor and considerate thoughtfulness which should characterize the dealings of Christians with one another. We need to put away careless trampling upon the rights of others in order that our work may go forward.

III. Brotherhood (vv. 15-16). The fact of regeneration does not change a man's social status so far as the world is concerned, but within the circle of God's household he becomes a "brother beloved." Let us look less at the accidents of circumstance, education, or birth, which differ and rather magnify the family relationship, for all who are born again are brethren.

IV. Partnership (vv. 17-20). Paul counted Philemon not only a benefactor and a brother, but a partner in the great enterprise of God on earth. Partners share both joys and sorrows, gains and losses. They stand by in the hour of need, they plan and labor, weep and rejoice together. One wonders what might be accomplished for Christ if all Christians would accord one another even the ordinary considerations of partnership.

It should be noted in closing that verses 17 and 18 present an illustration of the great doctrine of imputation.—The wrong of Onesimus was to be charged to Paul, and Paul's standing with Philemon is the basis of his acceptance of Onesimus. Even so the righteousness of Christ is imputed to the believer, because our sins have been laid upon him. What a wonderful Saviour!

A Mother's Love No language can express the power and beauty and heroism and majesty of a mother's love. It shrinks not where man cowers, and grows stronger where man faints, and over the wastes of worldly fortune sends the radiance of its quenchless fidelity like a star in heaven.—E. H. Chapin.

Spare Hours Bind together your spare hours by the cord of some definite purpose, and you know not how much you may accomplish. Gather up the fragments of time, that nothing may be lost.—W. A. Taylor.

Humble Deeds The humblest deeds, prompted by a pure and unselfish motive, measure larger in God's sight than apparently much greater deeds which are done to be seen of men and for the aggrandizement of self.—Gunn.

"Was the third caller you or Morano? And then I remembered two things. Morano took the 2:12 to Philadelphia to check on those finger-prints. He wouldn't have done that if he'd known Kelly was dead. The house was dark and silent when Morano got to Sixteenth street. He thought Kelly'd gone to bed, and so he went to Philadelphia. I was sure of that. And I was sure that the man who killed Kelly wore gloves."

"On a hot night. Not because he'd thought of finger-prints, but because he was accustomed to wearing gloves, even in summer. It was red-hot the day I came here to tell you about Nolan."

"And your gloves were lying there with your hat?"

Peter smiled, faintly. "I remember, too," he said. "You picked one of them up. But, of course, I might merely have been carrying them."

"You might," he admitted. "But the glove that fell on the floor was turned inside out. People don't carry gloves that way."

"Well," Winslow observed, "Harwood didn't make any mistake when he said you were a good newspaper man. You're right about everything. My wife was Mrs. Selby. She thought Selby was dead, of course, when she married me. Two or three years ago. I met him on the street. He was d-d decent. Believe it or not, I was terribly in love with Julie," he said. "I still am. But God knows I'm no husband for her, and you are. You've nothing to fear from me," he said.

"But I did fear. All my life, I've had one conviction. Murder will out. Everything comes to the surface sooner or later. I urged Julie to get a divorce. 'I can't,' she said, 'without more dreadful publicity. It would ruin your career,' she said. Always thinking of me, Julie is."

He touched the tell-tale magnet, almost lovingly. "We were still talking about it," he continued, "when Julie went all to pieces again. Just as she had when the tabloids printed the story you saw. I took her to Europe. When we came back, Selby'd disappeared. I didn't even know his new name, and, of course, I didn't look for him. I persuaded myself the danger was over."

"Then came the Jefferson street grab. 'I was upset about what the newspapers said of Judge Hamblidge. I'd no idea of what was back of that, of course, and he didn't tell me. I figured that they'd go to him, somehow. And then Morano telephoned, the night of the murder, to say Kelly'd been to the Coconut Bar. He'd had the marriage certificate some time, and, through an underworld connection, he knew Selby was alive, but he'd only just found out that Selby was Morano. Someone had told him that afternoon—probably the same man who tipped off Luis' telephone message to 'Harwood'. Kelly had said to Morano, 'Now I've got you, and Hamblidge, and Winslow.' 'He has, tee,' Luis added, 'unless you can find a way out of it.'"

Winslow's hand closed tightly. "Julie was upstairs, asleep," he said. "She'd left me an hour before, radiantly happy. I went to see Kelly. Heaven knows what I intended to do. Certainly not murder. I was about to ring the bell, when I saw the key in the door, and used it. Kelly was talking to Hamblidge. I recognized the Judge's voice, and slipped into the dining room. Listening, I learned why he had written that decision. And I heard Kelly say, 'If it ain't filed by noon today, I'll have your sister-in-law arrested for bigamy.'"

"Hamblidge said, 'You can do what you like; I won't file it.'"

"The cut-glass decanter was on the table in front of me. I picked it up, almost mechanically. Kelly was in the hall then, shouting 'squealers' and 'beat it.' I suppose I had some vague idea of helping my brother-in-law. I don't know. Anyway, I opened the door between the dining room and the drawing room. And as I did so, Kelly came in from the hall, closing that door behind him. His left hand was still on the knob when he saw me."

"More squealers!" he shouted. "Witnesses! So you heard, did you? Well, by God, you're not going to tell anybody!"

"He lifted his right hand, and there was a revolver in it."

"Another instant, and he'd fired. 'I hurled the decanter.'"

"It was just instinct. I didn't take aim. There wasn't time. If I meant to do anything, it was to hit his pistol arm. I don't really know where the bottle did strike. The side of Kelly's head, probably, for it landed against a metal door-hinge, rebounded, fell into a chair, and rolled off to the floor. A moment afterward, Kelly went down in a heap."

"He wasn't dead. A long way from it, for the gun had dropped out of his hand, and he reached for it. I picked it up. Ten seconds later, Hamblidge was on the other side of that door, trying to open it, and calling Kelly. I turned the lights out. Hamblidge left. I put the revolver into my pocket, and got the certificate out of Kelly's. There was a white push-button in the frame. I pressed it—or thought I did."

"It never occurred to me that Kelly was anything more than stunned. I went home, and burned that marriage certificate. There was no other record; I'd made sure of that. A few hours later, Hamblidge phoned to say he'd filed his decision. There was nothing about Kelly in the morning paper. I'd no idea he was dead until long after dinner that night at Southampton."

Barry nodded. "Of course, my first impulse was to give myself up," Winslow said. "But what good would that've done? They couldn't convict me. I'd killed in self-defense, and could come mighty near proving it. But, in doing so, I'd've given away the secret I'd struggled to keep all these years. I'd've smashed Julie utterly, and ruined Hamblidge, and Fat. Nobody was harmed by my keeping my mouth shut. There wasn't a chance of their finding Ridder guilty, or anyone else. If they'd done that, I'd've confessed in a moment."

"I know," Barry declared. "That's what you meant when you said, 'If we have to get the guilty man to free Rogers, we'll do it, but let's give the court a chance first.'"

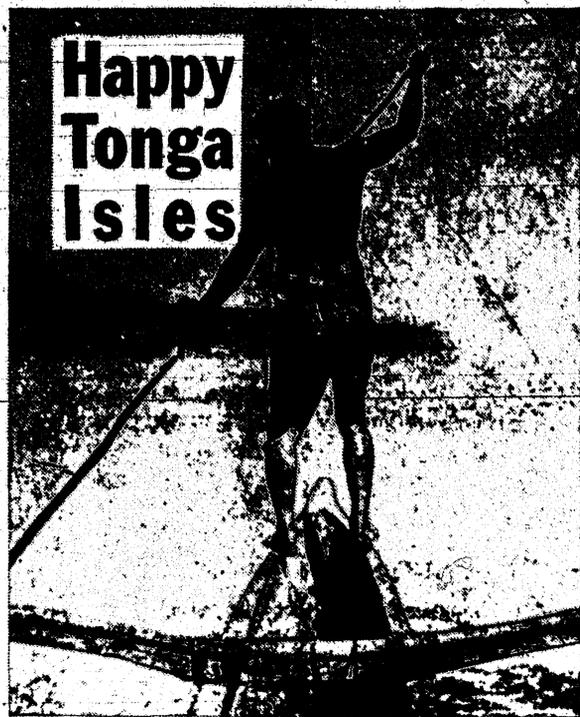

"Yes," Peter rose, and went to the window. "The difficult thing," he continued, "was not to confess. With that boy in jail. But it was letting an innocent man suffer a few weeks, or an innocent woman all her life. If you'd seen Julie's face, when she collapsed, after hearing of Selby's arrest—" He paused. "Of course, neither she nor Hamblidge knows I killed Kelly."

Barry said, "They'll never know it through me."

"Bon voyage," he added, blithely, an instant later, his hat in his hand. "And come back soon. I'd like to have you two at my wedding."

(THE END)

Happy Tonga Isles

South Pacific Islander Pelling His Canoe.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THE sovereign of Tonga islands in the South Pacific is Queen Salote (Charlotte), who, from her capital Nukunono, on Tongatabu island in the southern part of the archipelago, governs the islands under a British protectorate. The currency used is English money. In language and customs, the Tongans are like the Maoris of New Zealand and the Samoans. Being Polynesians, they differ decidedly from the Fijians, who are mostly Melanesians. Tongan society is distinct, with hereditary lines of chiefs, and Niuafu has its own peculiarities of culture. The people are entirely civilized and Christian; they are strictly governed by a high chief, a magistrate, and police service. There are usually seven or eight Europeans at Nukunono.

Wesleyan churches with native ministers and elders are conspicuous in all the villages. On Sunday, services start before daylight, with crowded congregations singing choral music in parts without any organ. The rhythmic and harmonious blending of the deep bass voices of the men and the soprano of the women is pleasing. The music has a quality quite unlike Hawaiian music, and the Sunday services are fascinating. There is no need for a pipe organ.

One evening service in the dimly lamp-lit church at Nukunono consists of a musical competition between the choirs from several villages. The choirs, each usually composed of eight persons, men and girls, rise in turn in their places and sing. When a song is finished a reverent chorus of braves, or the equivalent in Tongan, goes up from the congregation. The dusky faces in the lamplight, many of them beautiful; the splendid figures of the men draped in spotlessly clean valas, which suggest a Roman toga; the minister exhorting his flock, and elderly patriarchs and matriarchs rising at intervals to make confessions of faith, make the scene one never to be forgotten.

How the People Live.

The Tongan race is dominantly agricultural, with copra as the leading product. At Niuafu intervals between shipments of copra are long, for the bad anchorage and landings make visits by even tramp steamers rare.

The four villages immediately around Nukunono represent half the population of the island. Each family lives in an elliptical, thatched house, with woven matting for the walls, but these curtains do not lift up as in the Samoan houses. There are doors in the ends and sides.

Wealth consists of land, plantations, mats, and tapas. The owner of many and fine mats is respected for his prosperity and thrift. Numerous silver shillings circulate, from the traders in return for copra and back to the traders' stores for shirts, cloth, and chewing-gum.

Of native markets there is no sign. Each adult male has his own eight and a quarter acres of plantation lands assigned to him by the government.

Men and women work hard, subject to the orders of the government, on the roads and cisterns and other structures required for the progress of the community. Pigs and chickens are abundant, but there are few cattle. Each householder has his truck garden in the hills. To his he goes, leading an old pack horse, and gathers what is needed of yams, taro roots, sweet potatoes, oranges, breadfruit, or the like. The girls think nothing of trudging miles to wash the family clothing at the lake. All are free, happy, and smiling, and all are fine specimens of muscular humanity, leading a natural life of cultivation of the soil.

Like other Polynesians, these people have a fine dignity. Their own customs are regulated by the dictates of a host of ancestral traditions which center about the guilds of the craftsmen, the requirements of the family, and the orders of the chieftainship.

Method of Fishing.

The fishermen use canoes of hewn and pegged timbers and also a log device of the light wood of the fau (same as the Hawaiian hau, a species of hibiscus), to which a splinter rod is lashed tightly lengthwise, with one end free for the purpose of stringing fish by the gills. Hooks are made from pieces of bone attached to short shanks of wood. The fishline is a sennit (a braided coconut fiber), fastened to the log. Wearing water spectacles, two plain glass windows in wooden cups held by string around the head, the fisherman swims out with his arm across the log, his face plunged beneath the water, so that he may watch fish come to his hook.

After a capture, he removes the fish from the hook and strings it on the splinter rod. He then swims away slowly with the floating log. Two or more baits may be operated at the same time; and two fishermen may work from a single log. The fish are small and not abundant, and many of the species found in these seas are said to be inedible. With the canoes large sharks are occasionally taken.

Recently, the Tonga natives celebrated the completion of the government radio telegraph station. The command went forth that native dances or lako-lakas, would be in progress for a day. On the appointed feast day each village was to furnish a certain quota of baskets of food, and in the evening there would be a European dance.

During the morning the clans began to gather, young and old, dressed in the costumes of their forefathers, with garlands of shells; beads, beans, and flowers; head-dresses of many kinds; and skirts. Some of these last were tapas covered with scarlet berries cemented in place in elaborate designs with native gum; others were very old and fine mesh mats, prized as relics of antiquity.

At the appointed hour, the high chief emerged surrounded by functionaries, and seated himself on the veranda of the radio building. Clan after clan came forward, each representing a village, the headman and warriors flourishing spears for war dances.

The women and girls formed another line, bringing forward the baskets of food, placing them on the ground in a straight line, and singing and dancing with the stately steps and graceful motions of the arms that told a story of bygone days. Some of the dances are entirely hand and body gestures of girls seated cross-legged.

Drums Always Beating.

The beating of the drums is one of the characteristic noises of the country. At all hours of the day the sound can be heard by one wandering in the jungle. The beating means something with reference to village timekeeping, or signifies special orders to the people. The islanders guide their lives by the sound of the drum, on the one hand, and the clangor of the church bell on the other.

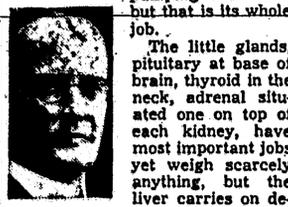

Niuafu, alias Tin Can Island, is one of the Tonga islands. Like a vast angel cake in shape, Tin Can Island was formed when a volcanic peak, protruding from the blue waters of the Pacific, violently blew off its head and left only a hollow outer shell. On the shores of a peaceful tropic lake which now replaces the molten lava and suffocating gases of its crater, a wise bird, the malau, lays large eggs in Nature's incubator, the hot volcanic sand.

No springs or streams are found on the island, so the natives must depend on rainwater for their drinking supply. Neither are there harbors, for foam-flecked lava cliffs, rising abruptly from the ocean, surround the island with hardly a break. A tin can, bobbing in the water offshore, pushed by a swimming native, to be picked up by a passing steamer, is the islanders' mail bag.

Talks About

The Liver and Wakefulness. I OFTEN speak about the liver—the king of the organs—because of the great amount and the importance of its daily work. It does more different jobs than any other organ and has to do them in such a big or wholesale manner. Of course the heart which is only a few ounces compared to the liver's six pounds in weight has the important job of pumping the blood but that is its whole job.

The little glands, pituitary at base of brain, thyroid in the neck, adrenal situated one on top of each kidney, have most important jobs yet weigh scarcely anything, but the liver carries on despite the various forms of damage that occur to it. In fact, as mentioned before, practically two of every three persons have some irritation or inflammation of liver and gall bladder and yet perhaps only one in a hundred has real trouble.

Recent investigations would seem to show that the liver has a regular routine or system of performing two of its important jobs, that is the storing away of glycogen (sugar) for future use, and the manufacture of bile to assist digestion and stimulate bowel action.

Glycogen and Bile. "It appears that in man there is probably in the liver the greatest amount of bile being manufactured when the least amount of glycogen is being stored, and the greatest amount of glycogen is being stored when least bile is being manufactured. According to research workers the least glycogen is being manufactured at noon and the most after midnight. While taking food may affect this routine to some extent, nevertheless this general rule is maintained."

These facts are of interest to physicians with diabetic patients.

This fact of the daily routine of the liver in storing its largest amount of glycogen at night—about eight hours after the evening meal—is thought to be the cause of sleeplessness or wakefulness about two o'clock in the morning in certain individuals. Eating their large meal of starchy and fat foods—potatoes, bread, sugar, sweets, puddings, cream—at the noon hour instead of at six o'clock might be of some help, but would certainly not tend to keep them alert for mental work in the afternoons.

Three Kinds of Overweight.

I sometimes think that most of us are just a little too severe in criticizing those who are overweight. While practically every case can remove some fat by cutting down on food, nevertheless there are some overweighters who honestly try to reduce in this way, with results that, to them at least, are disappointing.

In justice to overweighters it must be stated that the great majority of them inherit the tendency to overweight. Close questioning by the physician usually brings out the fact that if neither the father nor the mother were overweight, one of the grandparents or an uncle or aunt carried many excess pounds. Dr. C. G. Lambie in the British Lancet tells us that some 70 per cent of overweighters have overweight parents, so even where the parents were not overweight, the tendency to overweight is likely present in a goodly number of other cases.

Dr. Lambie puts overweight into three classes: (a) developmental (natural or inherited tendency), (b) metabolic (where the body processes work slowly and allow fat to accumulate instead of burning it up), and (c) nutritional (where more food is eaten than the body needs).

"The energy requirement of the body is the amount of energy needed to keep the body processes going, to supply energy for muscular work—walking, playing, working—and to cover the dynamic action of food. If these three needs are taken care of, and still there is food unused then this will be stored up in the body as fat."

It is estimated that from 70 to 80 per cent of all the food eaten is used by the body just to keep its processes going properly; that only about 20 to 30 per cent is needed for the work the body does with the muscles in doing our daily work.

Thus a man of average weight and height, 150 pounds, 5 feet 7 inches tall, in doing an hour's walk covering 2 miles would require only about a slice of bread to supply the needed energy for the walk.

Thus if walking does not demand a great amount of energy because the body is always on the ground, nevertheless if so much food is needed by the body every day a very considerable amount of this food or fuel is used by the body processes even if the individual is lying quietly in bed.

However, when real hard work is done such as outdoor digging, handling ice, coal, or other heavy materials; eight or more hours a day, then a great amount of food is needed—just twice as much as if this individual were lying quietly in bed.

Deux Fruit Salad
Eighteen large stewed, spiced prunes, two large tart apples, mayonnaise, grated yellow cheese, crumbled Roquefort cheese, lettuce.

When you stew the prunes, add an inch-thick stick of cinnamon and three or four whole cloves. Cook the fruit until tender but not the least bit soft and mushy. When cool remove pits, leaving the prunes as whole as possible. Peel apples, cut in quarters and remove cores. Then cut in thin slices. Dip apple slices in mayonnaise and then into crumbled Roquefort cheese. Dip prepared prunes into mayonnaise and then into grated yellow cheese. Arrange on individual salad plates on leaves of crisp lettuce.
