

Overweight and Life Span

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

FOR many years it was believed that overweight shortens the span of life...

Dr. Barton

These facts are that overweight definitely shortens the span of life...

In commenting upon this fact that the death rate is increased in proportion to the percentage or amount of overweight...

Now we know that Nature is very generous, that the limit or margin of safety in these organs is much beyond the everyday needs of the body...

Tendency to Diabetes

And the reducing of the span of life is not the only penalty of overweight...

Now the above facts should not make those of normal weight think they would feel better...

Nor should those who are slightly overweight give the above figures much thought...

It is of course fortunate up to a certain point that the fashion for slenderness has passed...

"When Clocks Stopped"

By FLOYD GIBBONS Famous Headline Hunter

HELLO, everybody: Bryan Carlock of Bloomington, Ill., is one man who knows exactly when his adventure started...

When death is staring you in the face, you don't stop to look at your watches and say, "Ho hum, if I don't get out of this mess pretty quick I'll be late for dinner..."

He knows it because, when the blow struck, all the clocks and watches stopped. It was the end of time. The end of the world!

It was just before dinner, when— In the meantime, they were busy getting dinner ready. Chester Linton had come home...

The More He Struggled, the Worse His Fix. The apartment was on the second floor of a brick building at the corner of Broadway and Linden...

The stairway was moving like an escalator.

and the kids were safely at the bottom. The lieutenant was behind him. Bryan was half way down that tottering stairway when his foot went through a broken step and caught there...

He struggled to extricate himself, but the harder he tried, the tighter he seemed to be wedging himself in. Now, the lieutenant was at his side, trying to get him out. Plaster was still falling from the walls and ceiling...

Tidal Wave Threatens Destruction and Hunger. And then, another terrible cry was passed from mouth to mouth through the stricken area. "Tidal wave coming!"

When we couldn't run any more, we walked. We went on that way for two or three hours, through streets filled with debris and ruin and desolation. Before long, the city was under martial law...

They were all exhausted by this time. There was still no sign of a tidal wave and, tidal wave or no tidal wave, Bryan wasn't going to go a step farther...

He Didn't Even Feel Nail in His Leg. They wandered back toward the ocean and, within a block of the Lintons' wrecked house they found an apartment building which was still in pretty good shape...

For the first time, then, Bryan noticed that his right foot was damp. He pulled up his trouser leg and found the foot covered with blood. There was a nail in the calf of his leg...

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By REV. HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

Lesson for August 8 GOD FEEDS A PEOPLE.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 16:11-20, 31-34. GOLDEN TEXT—Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh from the Father, James 1:17.

Israel, led by God, is on a journey to the promised land. But to reach their goal they must pass through the wilderness...

"People may be strong and hopeful at the beginning of a project, and most effusively and devoutly thankful at its close, but the difficulty is to go manfully through the process...

Note how elemental are man's needs in the final analysis—bread and water. The very things we take almost for granted as we concern ourselves with life's weighty interests and profound problems become, if lacking, the only things that have any real meaning...

I. Bread from Heaven. (Exod. 16:11-20). Observe first of all that this was a divine provision. There are responsibilities in life which we may bear—and must bear...

Secondly, we note that it was a daily provision. What forehanded folk many of us are, and no doubt rightly so, for God puts no premium on improvisation...

Finally, it was a limited provision—enough for the day and no more, except for a double portion on the sixth day, and none at all on the Sabbath...

II. A Rock in the Wilderness. (Exod. 17:3-6). "And the people thirsted"—for the daily manna was not enough—they must have water. Needy, yes, constantly needy are God's children...

III. The Bread and the Water of Life. Let us make certain that we do not miss the spiritual truth of our lesson which is revealed by Scripture itself...

How to Keep Quiet. Character is revealed by small things; it is also hidden by small things. Speech often hides it, and again distorts it...

Progress. No man who feels the worth and solemnity of what is at stake will be careless as to his progress.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

PICNIC time is here—and as every picnicker will tell you—it's the lunch which makes or mars the occasion. Here's a cake that can go to a picnic successfully.

Picnic Cake. (2 Eggs.) 1/4 cups sifted cake flour, 1 1/2 tsp. double-acting baking powder, 1/2 tsp. salt, 1 tsp. cinnamon, 1/2 cup butter or other shortening, 2 cup sugar, 2 egg yolks, stiffly beaten, 1/2 cup milk, 2 egg whites, well beaten.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, salt, and cinnamon, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy.

Divide into two equal portions. Put one in a 10-inch pie pan and the other in a 9-inch pie pan. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) 50 minutes.

A Tragic Anniversary

By RAYMOND PITCAIKN

National Chairman
 Sentinels of the Republic

Recently the world noted, with a sort of shocked surprise, that the war in Spain had entered upon its second year. During those tragic twelve months, untold thousands in the two warring camps died, and millions more were suffering. During those twelve months, the people of Spain may have enjoyed the best of everything that the world has to offer.

For the sake of the world, we must not allow the two warring camps to continue. We must not allow the two warring camps to continue. We must not allow the two warring camps to continue.

Both sides political products of a corrupted and fraudulent Europe are the enemies of that democracy which we of America cherish. Both sides are the enemies of the individual man and woman in a democratic state of America. Both are enemies of the basic principle on which our own nation was founded.

And whatever else may come a better victory America can never have. We can have no other victory where democracy stands secure, and, with it, government dedicated to freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion and freedom of opportunity.

When Europe achieves the tragic end, America celebrates the centennial of the 16th anniversary of a Constitution which announced the principle that "We, the people," would control our government.

What that principle can mean is demonstrated in our established record of national achievement and individual well-being—a record which no fascist or Communist state has even remotely approached.

NOW OFTEN CAN YOU KISS AND MAKE UP?

Few husbands can understand why a wife should turn from a pleasant companion into a snarl for one whole week in every month.

You can say "I'm sorry" and kiss and make up before marriage has even begun. If you want to kiss your husband, you won't be a three-quarter wife.

For the new generation women have told married how to go "smooth" through the "menstrual" period. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus relieving the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three months of their lives. 1. Preparing for menarche. 2. Preparing for menopause. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Don't let a three-quarter wife take LYDIA PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and go "smooth" through.

Forest Notes

To many who are not acquainted with New Mexico, the land of Sunshine, it is thought to be a large desert. As a matter of fact, nearly one-fifth of its area is covered with forest. To be sure, more than half the forested part is pinon and juniper, and these, because they grow on arid soil, are composed of short, limby trees of no value as saw timber. The stands are, however, located near the more densely settled sections of the state and for that reason are extensively used for fuel, fence posts and mine props. The forests that yields saw timber cover about 5 1/2 million acres and are restricted to the mountains where rainfall is more abundant than at lower elevations.

It is estimated that there are 17,197,000 M. B. M. of saw timber in the state and 33,448,000 cords of wood. In 1925, 126,220 M. B. M. were cut in New Mexico of which 44,964 were cut on National Forest lands.

"It's got to turn out."
 "How can it help turning out?" Kenning asked. "That river ran over here somewhere. Unless," he added, "it defied every rule of geology and swung under the bench land where I filed that worthless bunch of claims."
 "You've never pulled those out," Hammond suggested. "You said something about it when we signed our agreement—about having to take out eight acres for that English syndicate."
 Kenning nodded thoughtfully. "I've got to be getting at that. Had a letter from them yesterday. I should have deduced it over before. But oh, I don't know, when I get home at night."
 Hammond said nothing. Bruce, he knew, was seldom home, at least until late. His cabin rarely bore evidences of his presence when Jack went up on the hill, at evenings, to be with Kay and her mother. And the workmen talked daily of what Kenning had done over at Whoopee, at the roulette wheel. Jack gave it little attention; he felt that Bruce's winnings or losses could not be for sizeable amounts. At least, he said nothing about it, except now and then to explain his haggardness by good-naturedly cursing himself for being a fool about roulette.

"Know what I think I'd better do?" Kenning asked, suddenly. "That bench land's no good. Both of us know that. But I never take chances. I think I'll pull off a couple of men from this work here and put down a test pit. Just to be sure. Then, when it's done, I'll draw out that acreage and get rid of that English syndicate. Send 'em what they're looking for—he laughed abruptly—"Something we don't want."
 Hammond laughed with him. "Put down a test pit and then we'll be sure of it," he answered, and headed slowly back toward camp. But within sight of his cabin, he began to hurry. Mrs. Carewe, the Joyce maid, was there, and Kay had sent her to bring him up the hill. Hammond finished the ascent of the trail on a run. He never before had received a summons like this.

Kay was in the living room, walking about, her hands clasped tightly before her. From a distance came the faint drone of an airplane.
 "You're late," she said.
 "I came as quickly as I could. I was at the upper workings. What's happened?"
 She gave a brittle laugh.
 "Well," came abruptly, "I'm alone."
 "Where's your mother?"
 "That's it."
 "You don't mean—"
 "They're in that airplane, bound for Wrangell."

"She's gone with Olson?"
 The girl laughed again, that queer, thin-drawn laugh.
 "Yes, she's gone with Olson. He sold out this afternoon, to a bunch from up the creek. I tried to get hold of you—thought maybe you could argue with her. But it wouldn't have helped. She's wanted Olson and his nuggets ever since she saw him. So they're gone. Timmy's flying them to Wrangell."

Another month went by, blazing hot days, deepening into chill nights, with the dusk creeping over the valley more swiftly with each passing day. The bears had left the rock slides; berries were gone and leaves withered. The little town became more careful of sparks. Autumnal dryness was upon the North; growing more and more brittle and menacing each day. With every cloud, miners turned their eyes skyward in search of evidences of the first snowstorm. But the clouds passed and the sun blazed anew. Then, one day, shortly after the lunch hour, a workman came running down Loon Creek, shouting for Jack Hammond.

"Mr. Kenning wants you up there at the bench shaft!" he exclaimed. "He's found something!"
 Hammond hesitated only long enough to summon Kay. Then with her breathless beside him, they hurried to the upper diggings. Kenning nervously impatient, awaited them.
 "Don't ask me why it happened!" he said bluntly. "It's against everything I figured. It's just there—that's all."

He extended his clenched hands, opening them. Kay gave a half scream and moved forward, Hammond close behind her. The man's palms were heaped with yellow gold; the wet sand of deep gravel still clung to the hulking nuggets. The gravel's choked with them! Kenning said, in a queer voice, Hammond stared at the yellow wealth.
 "But how did it get there? Away over on this bench land—this has been sold earth for—"
 "A thousand years!" answered Kenning. "But there's gravel beneath."
 "Certainly. You can find gravel almost anywhere. But for gold to be in it—have you struck bedrock?"
 "We're not anywhere near bedrock!" Kenning answered.
 "You needn't shout," Kay suggested.
 Bruce laughed. "Well, what are you shaking about?"

"I guess everybody's nervous," Hammond cut in. He wiped the back of a hand across his wet forehead. "So we've found it—here. Where we least expected it! Again he asked, "Listen, Kenning, don't think I'm crazy. But are you sure? Are you really sure?"
 The man nodded toward the gaping shaft.
 "Get down there and shovel out a panful and see for yourself," he answered.

They were in Jack's cabin; Hammond was still shaken from the excitement caused by the panful of earth which he had taken from the gravel of the bench-land test pit. Kay walked about nervously. Kenning pawed through a tin box which he had brought down from his cabin; Hammond likewise had taken a bundle of papers from its hiding place under his bunk.
 "It's a damn good thing we didn't take care of that English syndicate before we sank that test pit," Kenning said.
 "Well," Kay announced, "if you had, I'd have been sunk."
 "You?"
 "After all the touting I did, to get Jack to take your advice."
 "That would have been a hot one, now wouldn't it?" Jack Hammond hardly realized that he was speaking. He still could remember little but that pan of gravel as repeated washings slowly carried away the dross, at last to reveal the heavy sediment of golden globules. "If we'd signed away that land—and then this crooked English outfit had come along and made a ten-strike—"

The Man Looked Down in Amazement.

 "Not much danger of that," Kenning answered. "I told you in the beginning that they never intend to work it. Three years from now, we'll be able to buy back any land we sell them at our own price—if we want it."

"And the problem is," Kay broke in, "to find something they don't want." She turned again to the window. "Looking for me, Mrs. Carewe?" she called. The maid of all work came nearer the cabin. "That's about ready, Miss Kay," she announced.
 "Thanks, I'll walk up with you." She turned, at the door. "Good night, Jack."
 "Oh—good night, Kay—good night."

"Aren't you going to kiss me?" He dropped the bundle of papers that he might rush to her.
 "That gold's made an idiot of me." Suddenly his hands clenched. "Gee, Kay! We've found it!"
 "For all the good it does me."
 "That's out." There was a drive to his voice. "I give the orders from now on."
 She kissed him and patted him on the cheek.
 "So that's what a few nuggets can do!"
 But he would not let her go. Impulsively he seized her, kissing her a dozen times, hugging her until she protested.

"That's it," he said huskily. "I'll give the orders. I'm boss—I'll tell you how to be happy. You can't imagine what this strike has done for me, Dearest!"
 Laughing, she pushed him away. "I've a fair idea," she answered, and calling good-night to the oblivious Kenning, went forth to join Mrs. Carewe. Hammond watched her until she was lost in the twist of the ascending trail.
 "Kay's been swell about not wanting to marry me—just because I had money," he said brusquely, as he rejoined Kenning. "But she's really didn't have much to offer her before—just those Loon creek claims."
 "You've got plenty now."
 "And come to spare. That reminds me. What are we going to do now about that English syndicate?"
 "Yes, we ought to get that out of the way," Kenning consulted the list of their holdings. "I don't see anything here that can come out of the stuff I threw in the pot."

 "It's all on the course of that gravel bed, isn't it?"
 "If that stream came down from the hills the way we've got to figure, all the claims I staked are right in line."
 "What about giving those leases, over where we've been digging the big bunch of test pits?"
 Kenning wrinkled his brow.
 "No, I still think that land's good. There's an explanation."
 "I don't see it."
 "Suppose Big Moose hit some obstacle, some tremendous rock that's since either been covered up, or ground to pieces and washed away?"

"Say, maybe you're right." "It stands to reason. The natural result would have been a split of the stream, wouldn't it? Half of it would have traveled right where my findings show it should have gone. The rest of it easily could have swung over to this side."
 "It doesn't leave much of a selection for your English friends."
 "Don't call 'em friends. They're swine, the whole gang of them. But I got mixed into it; I'll keep my word and send them something."
 "There isn't much left."
 "Kenning laughed.
 "Nothing except where Joe was working. If they want a worthless tract, that's it."
 Hammond was going over the leases. At last he asked:
 "What's the name of this outfit?"
 "You mean the English bunch? Oh, you'd better just sign the lease over to me, then I can reconvey it. There may be a lot of red tape about it if it's handled differently."

A half hour later, Hammond was alone in his cabin, his bundle of papers again resting in their hiding place under the bunk. The ground on which McKenzie had labored was gone; Kenning had taken the conveyed lease over to the recorder's tent, for entering under his name as owner. And Jack stood there, thinking how queer was gold; McKenzie Joe had fought every idea Bruce Kenning had advanced. Now the land where he had worked was of value only because it would allow Kenning and himself to control a veritable underground river of gold at another part of the valley.

At last Jack reached for his hat and left the cabin. It had occurred to him that he should tell Jeanne about all this. She was not at the store; her substitute told Hammond that she had gone on an errand, far up the valley.

The man turned from the little log structure with a feeling of disappointment. For a time he stood watching the activities down at the lake; volunteers in these short autumn days were donating a part of their work time to the completion of giant log life-rafts, with heavy boxes for food and blankets, the grim insurance of every outpost settlement when the sun blazes for a long stretch, when the moss grows crinkly underfoot and the dead spruce needles, rained down with every stirring of the wind, are like so much tinder.

A remote camp cannot take chances when forest fire lurks in the offing; these days at Sapphire Lake were ones of apprehension. That there would be a fire, providing snow or rain did not soon fall, was almost a certainty; prospectors were wandering the hills, seeking the mother lode source of the nuggets which had brought humanity into this far land. After a time, interest in the sight ceased for Hammond. He still wanted to see Jeanne Towers and receive her congratulations. Finally he began to walk in the direction she had taken.

They met, some four hundred yards from camp, where Jeanne followed a winding trail through the high, heat-yellowed marsh grass.
 "I've been looking everywhere for you! We've found it! All the gold in the world!"
 The girl cried out happily, "You've really found the old bedrock!"
 "You should have seen the pan I washed the stuff out in!" Jack answered disjunctly. "The whole bottom covered, either with nuggets or flake gold. Like it had been gilded. You'll see a rush all right when this news gets out. It's another Klondyke."
 He whirled then, looking down toward the lake, as if he could visualize the speeding of motor boats, the plodding progress of scows, the surge of airplanes, as they struck the water and taxied for shore. Then he realized that Jeanne's hands were on his arm.

"McKenzie Joe knew what he was doing, after all, didn't he?" she asked. The man looked down in amazement.
 "Knew what he was doing?" he queried. "We'd have been chasing rainbows yet if we'd kept on where he was working."
 It was her turn to be surprised. "Then you didn't make the strike in his test shaft?"
 "Of course not! We put down one away over on the west side of the valley, near that claim you sold, Kenning."
 "Oh, over there?" Jeanne cocked her head, frowning thoughtfully. At last she said, "That's funny."
 "What's so funny about it?"

Lewis Burke

Hello, Everybody! How are you these days? We shall now proceed with our articles informative (whatever that means.)

The Lyric Theatre is progressing by leaps and bounds. The interior is finished in a beautiful sound-proof "Fir-Tex" insulated construction — combined with the new "air-cooler" apparatus which Mr. and Mrs. Walker are endeavoring to have completed by Aug. 1.

The shows at the Lyric Theatre generally get here before El Paso receives them. The El Paso papers will bear out the truth of this assertion.

Gov. Clyde Tingley, in addressing a group of young Democrats in Missouri last week said, quote: "It clearly shows the inexactness of constitutional interpretation and the general welfare of the people has been dependent on the vagaries and fluctuations of few judicial minds." Note — Whew! Hot Dawd! What a long tail our cat's got, and any other adjective in commendation. P. S.—Would it not be a whole lot better to use simple English, that everyone could understand? —All who are acquainted with the Governor, know that he didn't write this speech.

"Do YOU write all the material that is contained in your column?" inquired a sweet young thing of your correspondent. Note — I have some assistance from the janitor and office boy. But most of my articles are made up outa my own head, with enough wood left over to make a table.

We are in receipt of a new letter from our old friend Ralph Williams of Huntington, West Virginia. New Mexico must be getting quite a bit of advertising, as the Mexican Heavenly Blue Morning Glory seeds sent them are, as he says, related to Jack and the Bean Stalk. Note—They will bloom rather late in the season, but when they do, it will be a mass of gigantic, gorgeous azure-blue blossoms.

SO WE THINK

It definitely proves that we are a nation of changing ideas and loyalties, says the Tucumcari News with reference to the recent Supreme Court defeat of the President.—Today he is just a mere President in the eyes of those Congressmen and Senators we have sent to our national legislature.

A few months ago he was something akin to a king, before whose shrine the great and near great worshipped. It seems just now, from a Legislative angle, that Mr. Roosevelt is "the forgotten man."

HE WOULD

"I see that E. D. R. is on another cruise (at the taxpayers expense) laughs a prominent Democrat.
