New Dealers Preparing To Desert The Ship

Following the crashing victories in so many states which were heretofore held in the grip of the New Deal, many of the 'yes-yes' officials of the administration have begun to back water and have already notified the powers that be, or (were) that their resignations would be tendered in the near future.

Chief among those who have given out such warnings is postmaster Jim Farley, who has silently worn the crown since the hysterical hippodromes began, has given out in a public statement that his resignation is to take effect by Jan. 1, 1939. As such intentions demands an explanation, he is quoted as saying that the salary he has been receiving is far too low and that he has or will accept a position wherein he will have a salary far in advance of what he has been receiving as Postmaster General and also at the head of the National Democratic committee.

But the truth of the matter is this: Mr. Farley like King Belchazzar of old, sees the handwriting on the wall and is preparing to seize a boat on Jan. 1, and desert the New Deal ship before it sinks. Since the great and glorious New Deal went into effect, he has been the mouthpiece of the President, acting as Bergren and His Lordship as Charley McCarthy.

Others of his compadres are doing the same thing. Such men as Cummings of Iowa, after viewing the Republican majorities in the different states which were formerly Democratic, are preparing to follow in the footsteps of the Big Chief, Mr. Farley, who caused many people to lose fortunes by his crack-pot prognostications as to how large the New Deal majorities would be in the recent elections, went to bed after the returns came in, rolled and tumbled all night until daylight relieved him of seeing blue elephants on the ceiling and aroused him from his nightmare.

The President simply said: "It came about as I had expected," But did he "plan it that way?"

A Thoughtful Contrast

As we write, Thanksgiving meetings are being held over our land, and our people are still breathing the air of Liberty in spite of last attempts through foreign influences to prevent us from that legacy left to us by our forefathers.

Events of the past week give us renewed courage to believe that under God, this will still continue to be the Land of the Free.

Latest reports from across the sea give a decided spectacle in contrast. In Germany the Jews, the chosen people of God, were lined up in rows, and clubbed to death. Adolph Hitler has issued a decree against using the name of God Almighty in the schools and churches.

Local Mention

Mrs. Erva Claunch, daughter Evelyn and son Jack came in the latter part of last week from Tulsa, Okla., where they had been residing for the past year. They are not here merely on a visit, but are here to again take up their residence with us and we welcome them to their old home. Evelyn is stenographer for Mr. Kroggel of the New Mexico Mechanical Equipment Co., and Jack is again in high school.

Deputy Sheriff Hugh Bunch, Mrs. Bunch, daughter Ida Dell, son Charles and Margaret Myers were in El Paso last Saturday attending to some business matters and returning home in the evening.

This office was pleasantly surprised last Saturday afternoon by a visit from Mrs. F B Chase, daughter, Mrs. Thomas Moore of Chicago and Margaret of Oakland, Calif. They were accompanied by Mrs. N. F. Whittingham of El Paso. The ladies had been to Tucumcari and were on their return trip to El Paso, from which place, they were to go to California to pay a visit to Lee Chase, who was the editor of this paper about 25 years ago. Mr. Chase has drifted from the weekly newspaper field and is now associated with his sister Margaret in managing one of the large dailies in Oakland.

Mrs. W. J. Ferguson and son Jimmy of Coyote were visitors in town this Wednesday. While here, they made this office a friendly call.

Rosendo Chavez is here from Colorado, visiting his sons, Atanacio, Pablo, Simon, Benny and their families.

Grocer Jeff Herron left the first of the week for Dallas, to spend the Thanksgiving holidays with Mrs. Herron and children.

Read City Ordinance No. 42 on page four of this paper.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Spence and daughter Shirley Ruth came through here Wednesday on their way to attend Thanksgiving with their son Keithley, who is attending college at Roswell. Bill has a fine ranch near Springerville, Arizona, and is doing nicely. They planned on making a longer stop-over on the return trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Tennis Smoot, small son Sonny accompanied by Miss Gerda Smith, left Wednesday for Farmington to spend Thanksgiving Day with Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Dickinson and a baby daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Maxwell were here Wednesday from their ranch home near the Gran Quivira, but returned in the afternoon so as to be home with the children on Thanksgiving Day.

BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB

There was the usual good attendance at the meeting Tuesday evening, the date of the meeting being changed to accommodate a representative from the Coronado Cuarto-Centennial, but the visitor failed to attend. Manager Peterson furnished the club with a delicious Rhode Island duck dinner, after which Baron Aurlemma, who was here on his annual drive for the Salvation Army made a talk in which he repeated his request for funds with which to carry the program. The new board is composed of Messrs. Rolland, Lemon and McQuillen.

In the notes of last week there was an omission in publishing the program for the ladies' entertainment. Little Deloris Peterson, daughter of the manager of the hotel, gave a piano solo as a request number, but it did not appear on the program proper, hence the omission. Beg pardon, Deloris.

Postmaster Herman Kelt purchased the first 1939 Oldsmobile that was on display at the City Garage—and is it a beauty?

M. H. Crockett of Los Angeles spent a week here visiting his father. Says Crockett and brother Bob at Los Lunas.

Fire at Capitan

Fire partially destroyed the West rooming house at Capitan yesterday morning, but the quick response of the Carrizozo fire department assisted in putting the fire out. The damage was about $300.00.

Mrs. Forrest Cathey is spending the week-end at the home of Mrs. S. E. Burks in Capitan.

Next Year Will Be Celebrated The Centennial of Photography

And in His Recently-Published Book, "Photography and the American Scene," Dr. Robert Taft Has Not Only Given an Authoritative Account of the First 50 Years of Picture-Taking but Has Made an Important Contribution to the Social-History of the United-States.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN JANUARY, 1939, will be celebrated the 100th birthday of "the greatest boon ever conferred upon the common man in recent years." That benefaction, according to John Richard Green, the historian who made this statement, was photography.

Throughout photography's centennial year of 1939, we Americans, who are probably the most "picture-minded" people in the world, will be asking such questions as "Who was the inventor of photography—how was it started—who were the pioneers in the field—who did most to bring it to its present high stage of development?" Fortunately for us the answers to those questions, and many others, are to be found in a recently published book, which is one of the most important contributions to the social history of the United States that has appeared in recent years. It is "Photography and the American Scene—A Social History, 1839-1869," written by Robert Taft and published by the Macmillan company.

Six years ago Dr. Taft, who as professor of chemistry at the University of Kansas has always been interested in the history of photography from a purely technical standpoint, was reading an account of the explorations of Gen. John C. Fremont, the so-called "Pathfinder of the West." A question arose in his mind as to the first use of photography in the exploration of the West and when he sought enlightenment on this point he found a curious dearth of information about it. He then began to accumulate data on the subject. Out of that grew his history of American photography—a monumental volume of 340 pages illustrated with more than 300 pictures, a book as distinguished for its lively and readable style as for the scholarly lines of the research back of it.

Importance of Photography. In the introduction Dr. Taft declares that Green, the historian, "can not be far wrong" in his estimate of the importance of photography to the common man. He says "Photography affects the lives of modern individuals so extensively that it is difficult to enumerate all of its uses. In addition to preserving for us the portraits of loved ones, it illustrates our newspapers, our magazines, our books. It enables the physician to record the inner structure of man and thus aids in alleviating man's ills. By its means, man has been able to study the infinitely small, to explore the outer reaches of space, to discover planets, and to reveal the structure of atoms. Crime has been detected through its agency as readily as have flaws in metal structures. It has recorded the past, educated our youth and last, but not least, it has given us the most popular form of amusement ever devised."

Louis Jacques Mande Daguerre, the Frenchman, little realized how all of those benefits would come from the process, the discovery of which he announced in January, 1839, and which was to immortalize his name to the word "daguerreotype." He was a painter of the diorama, a succession of scenes painted on a canvas which was caused to pass slowly before the eyes of the observer. Seeking a way to reproduce scenes upon the canvas without the labor of painting them, Daguerre began a series of experiments to find such a method. Then he learned that another Frenchman, Joseph Nicéphore Niepce, was engaged in a similar quest. The two men decided to join forces and in 1839 formed a partnership which was to continue for 18 years. Niepce died in 1833 but Daguerre continued his experiments which eventually enabled him to reproduce the most minute details of a scene with an exactitude and sharpness well-nigh incredible.

That was the characterization of his process by Arago, secretary of the French Academy of Sciences and the most influential French scientist of the time, who took instrumental in securing from his government an annuity of 3,000 francs (later increased to 10,000) for Daguerre and one of 4,000 for Niepce's heirs. In return for this Daguerre was to describe his process publicly and make it available to anyone who might wish to use it. Daguerre did not describe his process publicly until August 19, 1839, but already word of the new marvel had been spread through the popular and scientific press of France and England, and the news reached America as early as March, 1839. The editor of the Knickerbocker, a New York magazine, declared that the daguerreotype's "exquisite perfection almost transcends the bounds of sober belief."

Enters S. F. B. Morse.

One of the accounts in an American newspaper (the New York Observer for April 23, 1839) was written by a man who was to play an important part in the development of photography in this country. He was Samuel Finley Breese Morse, destined for future fame as the inventor of the telegraph. Morse, who had already achieved fame as a portrait painter, had gone abroad in the summer of 1838 to secure patents in England and France for his "electro-magnetic telegraph" on which he had been working for several years. After securing a French patent, he remained in Paris for several months while negotiating with the Russian government for a contract for his invention and during this time Daguerre made his historic announcement.

Morse, who as a portrait painter had experimented unsuccessfully, with the same idea, was immediately interested in the Frenchman's discovery, and sought an interview with the suggestion that if Daguerre would show him his daguerreotypes, Morse would demonstrate his telegraph. Daguerre consented and from this interview grew the story that the Frenchman "generously imparted the secret of the new art to the American by whom it was carried across the ocean and successfully introduced into the United States."

After examining all of available evidence in regard to the claims made in behalf of Morse and others for the title of "the first person to make a successful daguerreotype in the United States," Dr. Taft awards that distinction to D. W. Stager, an Englishman living in New York in 1840. On September 27, Stager made a picture which showed a part of St. Paul's church, the surrounding shrubbery and houses, and a corner of the Astor house.

The First Portrait.

The author of "Photography and the American Scene" also examines the evidence in an attempt to answer the question "Who made the first photographic portrait?" That honor has also been claimed for Morse and for Professor John W. Draper who made the famous portrait of his sister, Miss Dorothy Catherine Draper, which has often been reproduced as "the first photographic portrait." But according to Dr. Taft, it was not. That honor goes to Alexander S. Wolcott of New York, an instrument maker and manufacturer of dental supplies, who became interested in daguerreotypy when his partner, John Johnson, secured a copy of Daguerre's directions for making pictures by his new process. On October 7, 1839, Wolcott made a successful profile portrait of Johnson and this Taft calls the "first."

But more important than establishing these "historic firsts" is the complete story of the development of the various photographic processes which Dr. Taft's book gives—"not primarily from a technical viewpoint, but from that of social history" as he explains. "I have endeavored to trace, however imperfectly, the effects of photography upon the social history of America and in turn the effect of social life upon the progress of photography."

So in this book we read how Yankee ingenuity soon made the American daguerreotypes superior to those made in any other country and how this first phase of photography reached its zenith in the work of Matthew B. Brady to whose studio came all of the great and near-great, as well as distinguished foreign visitors, to have their portraits made. Brady's greatest fame, of course, rests upon the work he did in making a pictorial history of the Civil war. Dr. Taft, while giving full credit to him as a photographic historian, also rescues from oblivion the names of many of the operators in his employ who made the photographs credited to Brady, as well as other Civil war photographers. Notable among these were Alexander Gardner and T. H. O'Sullivan, who in the early morning of July 4, 1863, made the picture of the Battlefield at Gettysburg which was to become famous under the title of "The Harvest of Death."

After the era of the daguerreotype came the era of the ambrotype, the tintype, the carte de visite, which Oliver Wendell Holmes once called "the social currency, the sentimental 'greenbacks' of civilization" and the microscope, which in its day was found in the parlor of virtually every American home. Then came the day of the cabinet photograph and finally the new era began with the introduction of the sensitive dry plate and the flexible film. All of this, appropriately illustrated, is told in Dr. Taft's book, which in its 340-odd pages recreates more vividly than has ever before been done the story of American life during the five most picturesque and most interesting decades of its entire history.

In so far as Dr. Taft's book is the direct result of his curiosity as to the first use of photography in the exploration of the West, it is especially fitting that two of the finest chapters in it deal with "Photographing the Frontier." The first instance of the use of a camera on a government expedition was when the distinguished artist, John Mix Stanley, accompanied the party which in 1853 began surveying the northern railroad route to the Pacific under the command of Gov. I. I. Stevens of Washington Territory.

When Fremont set out upon his expedition in the same year he persuaded S. N. Carvalho of Baltimore, an artist and daguerrotypist, to accompany him. Carvalho wrote a lengthy account of his experiences and one sentence from it is significant of the handicaps under which these pioneer photographers of the frontier worked—"To make a daguerreotype view generally occupied from one to two hours; the principal part of that time was spent in packing and reloading the animals."

Although the Civil war halted government exploring expeditions and therefore expeditionary photography, both were resumed after the war and from that time on the photographer was an important member of the personnel of any exploring party. Outstanding among these photographers were T. H. O'Sullivan, already well known for his work during the Civil war, and John K. Hillers, who accompanied Maj. J. W. Powell on his historic trip down the Colorado river through the Grand Canyon of Arizona. But the best known of all Western photographers was a man who is still living in New York—95 years young and still keenly interested in photography!

William H. Jackson is his name. A native of New York, he went west after the Civil war. He opened a studio in the growing frontier town of Omaha in 1866, but becoming dissatisfied with the sedentary life of a village photographer, fitted up a traveling dark room on a buckboard and toured the country around Omaha photographing Indians.

In 1869 he took a trip along the newly completed Union Pacific railroad and this brought him into contact with Professor F. V. Hayden who was engaged in making one of the United States geological surveys of the West. From that time until 1877

W. H. Jackson and his working outfit along the line of the Union Pacific railroad in 1869.

Jackson was the official photographer of the Hayden surveys and in that role did some of his most important photography.

He took thousands of pictures of Indians which are interesting historically because they are among the relatively few that were made of the red man before he was forced to live on a reservation and his picturesque native life was greatly modified by contact with the whites.

But even more important work was done by Jackson in another field. The Hayden survey of 1871 was in the region now known as Yellowstone National park. "In fact, the park probably owes its present status to the Hayden survey of this year," declares the author of "Photography and the American Scene" and to Jackson belongs the distinction of taking the first photographs in the region of scenic wonders that has become such a "picture-taker's paradise." The next year he took the first photographs in what is now the Grand Teton National park and in 1874 he and Ernest Ingersoll of the New York Tribune discovered and photographed the ruins of the cliff dwellings in what is now Mesa Verde National park.

HEALTH

• Cancer, in early stages, now almost certainly cured by operation, radium, or X-rays.

—By Dr. James W. Barton

AS YOU think of the research workers all over the world patiently trying to discover the cause of cancer, some working with elaborate equipment and others with nothing but a microscope, you may feel that until the cause has been discovered all cancer patients must die within a short time after the cancer has been discovered.

As a matter of fact, because the cause has not been discovered after the many years of search, other research workers—physicians, surgeons and X-ray specialists, roentgenologists—have been trying just as hard to find methods of curing cancer. That they have succeeded is one of the bright pages of medical history.

In many hospitals now, when a case is found to be cancer, there is a discussion by the staff as to which method of cure is best suited for this particular case.

The London letter from the regular correspondent of the Journal of the American Medical Association records the annual meeting of the Royal Cancer hospital, London, in which Dr. Cecil Rowntree, senior surgeon, stated that the hospital was now supplied with the latest and most efficient apparatus that it was possible to wish for.

Best Methods of Treatment.

"We have now learned the best ways of dealing with the widely different types of cancer. We now know which are the types of cancer best treated by surgical operation. We know that in other forms, such as cancer of the tongue, mouth and throat, we can confidently expect such results from radium treatment as have never been equaled or even approached by any other form of treatment, and with a certain type of X-ray machine we are constantly and consistently curing such diseases as cancer of the lip and face and cancer of the skin with such certainty, simplicity and safety as has never been experienced before. In fact, give us a case of cancer in any of these situations in a reasonably early stage and we will now guarantee its complete and speedy disappearance."

The thought then is that in a reasonably early stage any type of cancer can be cured by operation, radium or X-rays.

Difference in Common and Allergic Colds

Perhaps you are afflicted with frequent colds but you notice that while some of these colds seem to last only two or three days, and remain in the head, others last for a week or more, and you cough and get up much mucus. If such be the case it is possible that the light cold or "head" cold is not really a genuine cold, or cold due to infection, the symptom being due to some substance—pollen of plants, house dust, or some chemical irritant.

Dr. Louis Taft in his book "Clinical Allergy" states: "Colds are not acute infective colds—coryza or the common cold—unless they begin with an irritation in the nose—generally malaise—prostration; discharge from the nose, at first a thin mucus, the later becoming like pus; and fever."

"Colds beginning with sneezing, followed by a 'watery' discharge from the nose, obstruction of the nose, perhaps a cough, with no fever, are more likely to be allergic rhinitis—due to allergy or sensitivity to various substances—possibly associated with asthma."

Allergic Symptoms.

A description of this allergic running nose, asthmatic type of cold due to sensitivity to substances should help us to distinguish between it and the true or genuine common cold.

"If sneezing is followed by nasal obstruction (nose blocked), watery discharge from the nose, shortness of breath, wheezing and cough, the condition is more likely to be a specific allergic type of asthma, than if there is cough, expectoration from the throat and bronchial tubes, followed by wheezing which is more likely to be due to organisms causing the common cold."

"The type of the attack of this allergic or sensitivity type of asthmatic cold is important. If it occurs at night there may be something in the bedroom causing the symptoms; whereas, if the attack occurs shortly after a meal, food allergy or sensitivity to foods should be suspected."

The thought then is that the genuine common cold may begin with nose irritation, just as with the "allergic" cold, but the common cold "just runs down" prostrates you, the discharge from the nose is thick, there is cough and expectoration; there is a rise in the temperature.

Germany's Colonial Demands Bring Tanganyika Into News

Reich Seeks Restoration Of Land Livingstone Made Famous

Prepared by National Geographic Society,
Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Germany's demand that the mandate settlement in regard to Tanganyika following the World war be rescinded, and that the territory be returned to Germany, brings that vast East African region again into the news.

Tanganyika was the bulk of the German East African empire before the World war. The remainder of pre-war Germany's domain, made up of two comparatively small areas, was turned over to the Belgian Congo and Portugal's colony, Mozambique, for administration.

Extending from the shore of the Indian ocean nearly halfway across Africa, Tanganyika covers an area about 4 1/2 times that of England and Scotland combined. Twenty thousand square miles is under water. Boundary lines bisect Lake Victoria on the north and Lake Tanganyika and Lake Nyasa on the west.

If the mandate were relinquished, Great Britain would not only break her continuous chain of possessions from Egypt to the tip of the Cape of Good Hope, but her census enumerators would have to deduct more than 5,000,000 people from the British census. Most Tanganyikans are tribes of mixed Bantu races in various degrees of civilization. Some tribes in remote areas show little, if any, effect of contact with Europeans, while others through the establishment of schools, and missions, have improved their methods of farming.

Europeans in Minority
There are less than 10,000 Europeans in the territory, most of whom are residents of coast towns. There also are about 32,000 Asiatics. They also live largely in the coastal region and are employed in industry and trade.

One of the first moves of Germany after laying claim to Tanganyika in 1884 was toward the abolition of slavery. The government declared that every native born after 1895 was to be free. The wildness of the region and lack of communications, however, made the enforcement of the decree almost impossible, particularly in isolated regions. In 1922, the British, recognizing the tendency of many tribes not to abide by the decree, made a new attempt to destroy slavery by legislation, and today there is little evidence of the old custom.

Forests covering thousands of square miles of the territory are the basis of a profitable lumber industry. Then there are extensive open areas used as farm lands, where sisal, cotton, coffee, ground nuts, and grain are grown for domestic needs, and for export. Other open country supports 5,000,000 cattle, 2,300,000 sheep, and 3,300,000 goats. These and wild game are the basis of a large trade.

Europe-in-Africa
Dar-es-Salaam is the capital of Tanganyika. To the traveler familiar with the towns of the tropical coasts of Africa, it seems almost a fairy city as his steamer moves into the harbor. Up and down the coast he has seen only the rambling, squalid Negro and Arab towns; but here is a garden city of Europe set down amid groves of palms and flowering trees of the tropics.

Streets and boulevards were laid out on a generous scale, bordered by palms and other trees and beautified by beds of flowers and shrubs. Along the shady streets German builders fashioned bungalows of white stone with red tile roofs that would do credit to Florida or California. Huge government buildings were set up—buildings that in size and architecture would do credit to European or American cities of 200,000 population. In addition the Germans built a fine, modern hospital, warehouses, wharves, a dry dock, and business blocks.

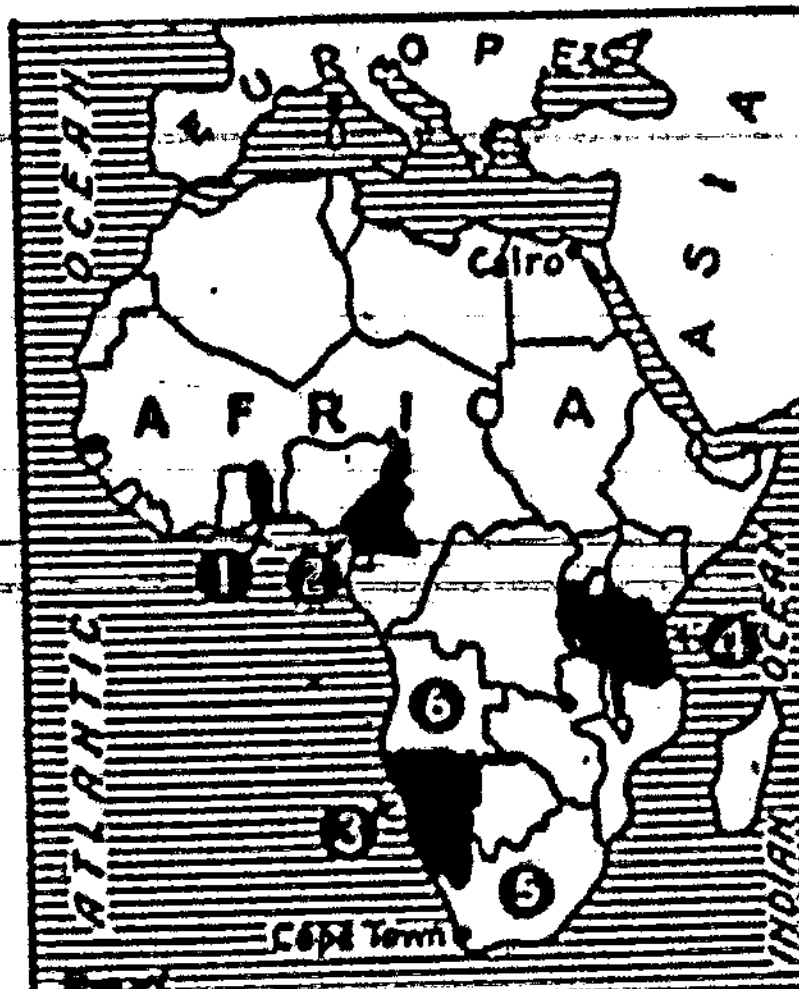

This spotless town of the tropics had just been completed when the World war started. In 1918 the German forces surrendered Dar-es-Salaam and Tanganyika to the British, and the country was made by the treaty of Versailles into a British mandate. The British have retained the attractive German-built capital.

Economically, Dar-es-Salaam has not lived up to expectations. Considerable trade continues to run in old channels, using ports that are mere roadsteads north and south of the capital. Dar-es-Salaam has a great asset, however, in its railway across Tanganyika territory to Lake Tanganyika.

Because Tanganyika contains some of the best grazing ground on the continent, several tribes of the territory have built their civilizations almost entirely on cattle-raising. The Masai tribe, whose chief interests are wars and cows, owns the richest pastures and the finest herds. They take little milk from their cows; consequently the calves thrive.

Land-Locked Lake

Lake Tanganyika is the world's longest fresh water lake. It has many unusual features. Approximately 450 miles long and from 20 to 45 miles wide, it lies in a rift with high banks on both sides. Some sheer cliffs are 2,000 feet and more high. In other places mountains near the coast reach altitudes of 8,000 and 10,000 feet. The surface of the lake is about 2,500 feet above sea level, and its greatest depths are approximately 4,700 feet. Thus its floor is well in excess of 2,000 feet below the ocean level. Only Lake Baikal, Siberia, among fresh water lakes, has a greater depth.

Although Tanganyika is classed as a fresh lake, its waters are sometimes slightly brackish. It teems with fish; more than 200 varieties have been identified. Along parts of the shore are numerous crocodiles and herds of hippopotami. Sudden tropical storms are a danger to navigation on the lake. The wind whips up through a canyon in the southern end and lashes the lake into a raging sea. Enormous breakers roll up and crash on the shores, often uprooting trees and demolishing native huts.

Lake Tanganyika lies roughly in the middle of the chain of great lakes which stretches north and south through east central Africa for approximately 1,200 miles. The northern end of the lake lies about 200 miles south of the equator. Nearly the entire western shore belongs to Belgian Congo. The northern part of the east shore is in territory of the Belgian mandate of Ruanda-Urundi, while all the remainder of the east coast is part of Great Britain's mandate of Tanganyika. Northern Rhodesia, another British territory, borders the lake for 85 miles at its southern end.

Tanganyika was first visited by Europeans in 1858 when Burton and Speke reached Ujiji on the eastern shore. Ujiji is the memorable spot where Stanley found Livingstone on October 18, 1871. A stone commemorating that meeting still stands in the town, although now about 450 yards from the shore because of the receding of the water since then.

Lesson for November 27

HONESTY IN ALL THINGS

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:15; Matthew 19:11-12; Golden Text—Thou shalt not steal—Exodus 20:15.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

Honesty in all things would seem to be what one should have a right to expect without question. As a matter of fact, dishonesty has become so common wherever man is found that people look on the person who is strictly honest as a peculiar individual. Try reporting an undercharge (everyone complains about an overcharge) or returning excess change, and you will see how unexpected honesty really is today. Under such circumstances the Christian needs to be vigilant; lest he also accommodate his own ideas of honesty and begin to justify little evasions rather than being absolutely upright.

I. Honesty Respects Property Rights (Exod. 20:15).

The very commandment against stealing implies that men have a right to that which they have made, earned, or saved. If no one had property rights there could be no stealing. Some of our modern isms reason along that line, but their reasoning is clearly not biblical or Christian. "Thou shalt not steal" forbids every kind of theft. It includes robbery, burglary, safe-cracking, housebreaking; but it covers far more than those obvious wrongs. It refers to such things as looting on one's job, "borrowing" money from the cash drawer, taking goods from the stock with which one is working, stealing another man's sermon and preaching it as one's own, "lifting" material out of another man's book without credit, contracting debts which one can never pay, using false weights and measures, adulterating food or other material, "watering" milk for sale, selling worthless stock, dodging taxes or lying to the tax assessor, using a slug instead of a nickel in the telephone to escape proper payment. It really means something to be honest, and it is a great testimony to the unregenerate world.

II. Honesty Restores Stolen Goods (Luke 19:1-10).

The story of the conversion of the despised Jewish tax collector Zacchaeus has many interesting features, but for our lesson we stress but one, namely, that the reality of his conversion was demonstrated by his honesty in restoring that which he had obtained unjustly, and that in fourfold measure.

Insofar as it is possible to do so, the honest person will make right any known injustice. To be right with God must mean that we are to be right with men. The testimony of many Christians could be presented to show that they have only entered upon real peace and usefulness as they have made consistent effort to right every wrong, to pay every debt. Often such actions open opportunities for Christian testimony and point others to the redemption in Christ, which makes a man live right as well as talk right.

III. Honesty Resents Crookedness (Luke 19:45, 46).

In sharp contrast to the prompt restitution by Zacchaeus, the converted publican, was the stubborn disobedience and dishonesty of the priests in the temple. Jesus had already cleansed the temple of the traffic in money-changing and the sale of animals for sacrifice practiced there (see John 2:13-17). On that occasion He rebuked them because they made His Father's house "a house of merchandise." Had they known the change of heart of a converted Zacchaeus they would have heeded His admonition. But they did not believe in Christ and went on with their ungodly desecration of the temple area until it became "a den of thieves" (v. 46). The Lesson Commentary of the United Lutheran Church makes an unusually apt application of the truth to "the goings on in our churches" in the following paragraph. Read it, ponder it, pray about it, then act, if it describes your church.

"If a church honest when it assumes obligations that it cannot meet, and is then forced to use all sorts of questionable means to raise money for the benefit of the church? Is a church honest when it turns a building consecrated to the worship of God into a restaurant or a theater, regardless of whether it is done to make money for the church or to attract people who are more interested in eating and drinking or playing than in the preaching of the Word and the worship of God? Is a church honest that turns its pulpit into a lecture platform for the discussion of current events or the review of popular books or plays while the world is destroying itself because it does not know the time of its visitation? The answer is that the church is dishonest that permits any such things, because it robs God of the honor and glory due to Him, and it robs people of their chance of salvation by giving them stones when they need the bread of life."

WHAT to EAT and WHY

Feed Adolescent Correctly or Tragic Consequences May Result, Warns C. Houston Goudiss; Teeth Must Receive Special Consideration

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

OFFHAND; it may seem as if there could be very little connection between a deficient diet during adolescence and painful childbirth in later years. Yet it has been demonstrated clinically that there is a definite link. It has likewise been determined that the kind of food which is fed adolescents, has a significant and far-reaching influence upon their teeth in later life, and in the case of girls, upon the teeth of their children when they in turn become mothers.

Preparation for Parenthood

Adolescence is a difficult period at best. And if a girl takes an unbalanced diet at this time, the result may be an unstable nervous system, poor physical development, lowered vitality and inability to fight off infections. This lack of strong resistance may open the way to dental disease and a variety of other serious infections as well.

It has also been established that if a girl is poorly nourished during these years of rapid development, there may not be the slightest indication of that fact until she first becomes an expectant mother. Then she will pay for her mother's lack of nutrition knowledge.

determined effort to feed them a diet rich in calcium and vitamins A, C and D—the substances required, especially, for maintaining sound, healthy teeth. If milk and succulent fruits and vegetables figure prominently in the daily menus of the adolescent girl, they will go a long way toward helping to correct the "choosy" attitude toward food from which many older children suffer.

And if careful attention to diet is coupled with careful attention to sound hygienic habits, the health of our teen-age boys and girls will be greatly improved, and they will be more adequately prepared to assume the duties of parenthood.

Correct Dental Hygiene

It is vitally important that the proper care be given to the teeth and mouth. But it is quite unlikely that a correct routine will be followed unless mothers offer tactful advice and suggestions very frequently. For while the tiny child has his teeth brushed for him, and the young school child has his tooth-brushing ritual supervised, too often the adolescent is left to his own devices in this respect. That is a great mistake, as adolescents are sometimes careless in the care of their teeth.

Mothers must see to it that there are two toothbrushes, one for night and one for morning, so that it is never necessary to use a soggy brush. They must watch when the supply of tooth paste or powder runs low, and see that it is replaced. For it is surprising how few children can be persuaded to brush their teeth properly without an agreeable dentifrice. Mothers should take care to choose a dentifrice that will preserve or restore luster in the teeth. For adolescents are extremely sensitive about their appearance and they must not be allowed to permit dingy teeth to spoil their smiles. If mothers will feed their adolescents a correct diet and supervise their daily dental care, the coming generation will not only be more attractive to look at but should enjoy more abundant health.

Answers to Questions

Mrs. G. B. A.—Yes, there is a substance called cholesterol, and it is a vital constituent of nerve tissue, and is also found in the blood. Foods rich in cholesterol include egg yolk, liver, kidneys and sweetbreads.

Our Presidents

Grant was christened Hiram Ulysses, but through an error on the muster roll at West Point it was changed to Ulysses Simpson.

John Tyler was a member of the Confederate congress.

Martin Van Buren was shrewd in political intrigue and campaign manipulation, and gained many nicknames. He was variously known as the "Little Magician," "Little Van," and "King Martin the First."

Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson were awarded the Nobel peace prize.

DURING the indoor season to come, make plenty of bright new workaday clothes for yourself and your daughter. Here's a design for charming aprons to wear over your own dark house frocks for protection and prettiness. And a simple, flare-skirted dress for school girls, so becoming and practical that just one of it will never be enough. Both of these patterns, in fact, you're sure to use over and over in different materials. They're easy as french dressing to make. A detailed sew chart accompanies each of them.

Charming School Frocks

This is an awfully good style for growing girls who incline to be a bit tanky. The puff sleeves, flared skirt and small waistline, drawn in by a belt at sides and back, give them just the right lines. The high neckline, finished by a little round collar, covers up their collar bones and looks so well under young faces. This is a diagram design, therefore can be finished in a few hours. Make it of velvet, flannel, jersey, wool plaid, gingham, linen—it looks well in practically every fabric that school girls wear.

Three-Way Apron Design

Two comfortable pinafore styles, so cut that they won't slip off at the shoulders, and a sweet little tie-around, are yours in this smart design that will help to solve many of your Christmas gift problems. Anyway you take it, or make it, this flaring, tiny-waisted apron design is a delight to make and to wear. Dimity, percale, dotted swiss, organdie and batiste, in white, dainty prints or pastels, are pretty fabrics for aprons.

If, upon such hearing before the Village Council, a majority of the Councilmen present at such meeting be of the opinion that it be for the best interest of the public, such license may be refused.

Section 4. VILLAGE COUNCIL MAY REVOKE LICENSE. In any case where, by any provision of the Village ordinances, a person, firm or corporation is required to obtain a license for any calling, occupation, profession, business or avocation, and has been adjudged guilty of violating any Village ordinance in relation thereto, or whenever in the judgment of the Village Council the public welfare shall require, such license so granted may be revoked.

Section 5. For the purpose of assessing the occupation tax specified in Section 1 of this ordinance, it shall be and hereby is made the duty of each person, corporation, association, partnership and owner or operator of any business in the Village to file on or before the first day of January, 1939, and of each year thereafter with the Village Clerk a statement under oath, showing the gross volume of business done by such person, corporation, association, partnership or business for the year ending December 31st, prior thereto, and the Village Council shall, as soon as may be convenient thereafter, fix the gross volume of business done for the purpose of taxing such calling, profession, occupation, business or vocation, from such statements filed with the Village Clerk, and other information obtainable. It shall give notice to each individual, firm or corporation of the amount of such assessment, with at least five days notice of the time and place of a hearing of protest to the assessment so made. At such protest meeting such individual, firm or corporation may appear and present evidence before such governing body of the amount of gross business done. If said governing body is satisfied upon such evidence that the assessment is too high, it shall lower the same to the amount they deem proper. Provided, however, that any license, now doing business under any license issued by the Village Council of the Village of Carrizozo, New Mexico, which does not expire by January 1, 1939, such license shall have the right to operate under said license until the expiration thereof, and upon the expiration thereof application shall be made and license shall be granted for the remainder of the calendar year 1939 upon payment of the fractional part of the occupation tax assessed as herein provided.

Section 6. If any person, member of a firm, agent or manager of a corporation, shall file a false statement of the volume of business done the preceding year, as hereinbefore required, the Village Clerk, on ascertaining such fact, shall notify such person and shall assess and collect from such person the amount found to be properly due, together with twenty-five per cent of the amount thereof as a penalty for making such false statement, and the facts shall be reported to the District Attorney for criminal prosecution as provided by law.

Section 7. In determining the actual gross volume of business done by any person, firm, corporation or business, the Village Council, acting through its Village Clerk, or other similar officer, may require of the State Tax Commission or Bureau of Revenue, a certificate showing the gross volume of business claimed to have been done by such person, firm, corporation, or business during the year or years under investigation or examination, as may be reflected by the records and returns on file in such office or offices.

Section 8. VILLAGE CLERK TO COLLECT. The license and occupation tax herein provided for shall be collected by the Village Clerk, and shall be paid to that officer by each person, firm or corporation owing such license or occupation tax, and before engaging in any trade, profession, business, calling, avocation or occupation subject to either such taxes.

Section 9. FAILURE TO PAY PENALTY. Any person violating any of the provisions of this article by failure to pay the occupation tax or license herein imposed shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than Twenty-five ($25.00) Dollars, nor more than Two Hundred ($200.00) Dollars, or by imprisonment for not less than one (1) nor more than sixty (60) days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court trying the case.

Section 10. SUIT FOR COLLECTION—ATTORNEY'S FEE. In the event of any civil suit for the collection of any occupation tax or license past due, the Village of Carrizozo shall be entitled to recover the tax, with interest and costs, and a reasonable attorney's fee, not less than Fifteen ($15.00) Dollars, to be fixed by the court trying the case.

Section 11. The license or occupation tax fixed as hereinbefore provided shall be and constitute a lien in favor of the Village upon the personal property of the person, firm, corporation or business used in connection with the said business, from the time that such license or occupation tax is fixed. Such lien shall have priority over any lien or encumbrance whatsoever, except the lien of State and County taxes. No sheriff, receiver, assignee, master or other officer shall sell the property of any person, firm, corporation or business subject to such license or occupation tax, under process or order of court, without first ascertaining from the Village Clerk or Treasurer of the Village in which said business is situated, the amount of any occupation tax or license due and payable under this or-finance, and if there be such occupation tax or license due, owing or unpaid, it shall be the duty of such officer first to pay the amount thereof out of the proceeds of such sale before making payment of money to the judgment creditor or other person whose instance such sale is had.

Section 12. It shall be the duty of the Village Clerk or Treasurer to furnish to any person applying therefor a certificate, showing the amount of all liens, taxes and interest that make of record in the files of the municipality against any such person, firm, corporation or business operating under the provisions of this act.

Section 13. DISTRAINT WARRANT MAY BE ISSUED. The lien herein provided for may be foreclosed either by a suit in the District Court in the manner as chattel mortgage are foreclosed, and the Village Clerk or Treasurer may, under his hand and seal of the Village, issue a distrait warrant against one or more persons who are delinquent in the payment of such fees or occupation tax. Such warrant shall be directed to the marshal of the Village of Carrizozo, and shall order him to seize and sell such property of such persons in an amount sufficient to pay the delinquent tax or license fee. Such warrant when issued shall be delivered to the marshal of the Village of Carrizozo, who shall execute the same within five days of its receipt by him by seizing the personal property used in the business of such person named therein in such an amount that the proceeds of the sale thereof shall be sufficient to pay such license or occupation tax as may be named in said warrant, together with all costs of levy, seizure, preservation of the property, and sale, unless the person whose property is to be seized shall pay the sums named in said warrant and all expenses and costs incurred before the time of sale. Property seized under such distrait warrant shall be sold at public auction to the highest and best bidder for cash, after advertising the time and place for such sale, the property to be sold and the amount to be realized from said sale by posting six notices of said sale in six conspicuous places in the Village for a period of ten days before date of such sale. From the proceeds arising from such sale, said license or occupation tax shall be paid, together with the costs of levying said warrant, preserving the property, advertising and conducting the sale, and the surplus, if any, shall be paid over to the person, firm, corporation, or business owing such tax or license.

Section 14. REPEAL. This ordinance hereby repeals ordinance No. 22 and all amendments thereto.

Passed, adopted and approved this 8th day of Nov., 1938.

Final Minutes Jinx Arkansas Football Hopes

By ROBERT McSHANE
IN LESS than three minutes of actual play Coach Fred Thomsen and his Arkansas Razorbacks have survived enough football tragedy to break the heart of an average team.

Beginning in November, 1937, the fatal last minute of play has seen the Razorbacks lose 5 out of 13 games. It all started when an Arkansas safety man was struck by a Baylor punt.

The next game saw Rice complete a 35-yard touchdown pass in the last 32 seconds to win the game. This tilt lost the Southwest conference title for Arkansas.

In 1938 Baylor beat the Razorbacks with a field goal in the final play of the game. The Texas Aggie game saw Arkansas in the lead 7 to 6 with four seconds remaining.

The Aggies were in possession on the four yard line. A penalty moved them to the one yard line, and on the last play they smashed over for a touchdown.

With 56 seconds left in the 1938 Rice game, Rice was in possession of the ball on the Arkansas 28. A 35-yard field goal saw Rice on the long end of a 3 to 0 score.

Grid Pioneer Dies
COL. WILLIAM PRESTON LANE, last member of the Princeton university team which was defeated in the first intercollegiate football game with Rutgers university in 1869, died recently at his Hagerstown, Md., home.

His death leaves only one survivor of the 1869 game—George Hall Large, Flemington, N. J., who played on the Rutgers team. Mr. Large is now 88 years old.

Colonel Lane, a member of the Princeton class of '72, was one of the 25 players on the Princeton team in '09. The contest with Rutgers took place in New Brunswick on a temporary field. There was no admission charge, and spectators sat on a fence rail. This encounter gave birth to the football yell of today.

The 1869 game, in which Colonel Lane played, differed vastly from modern football. It was played with a 16-inch round rubber ball, which was kicked, batted with the hand and thrown.

Galento Confident
ONE-TON TONY GALENTO, shy violet of heavyweight boxing circles, stuck $10,000 under the nose of Harvey L. Miller, first vice president of the National Boxing association, and offered to bet on himself to knock out Champion Joe Louis.

"I'll knock him out in two rounds," declared Galento, the man N. B. A. declares is America's ranking heavyweight challenger. "When?" he was asked.

"That's what I'd like to know." Miller expressed surprise at the proffered wager, saying that "As far as I know this is the first time since the days of Sullivan and Corbett that a boxer has offered to bet that kind of money on himself to knock out the champion."

Budge Turns Pro
DON BUDGE, the nation's outstanding tennis star, who recently turned professional for a flat guarantee of $75,000, refuses to underestimate his net worth to America's tennis fans.

He formerly stated that he would make the professional plunge for no less than $100,000. A lack of takers caused him to change his mind.

No Job Security

WHEN the wolves start their annual howling at the heels of football coaches in both major and minor colleges throughout the United States, little attention is paid to major league managers' jobs and their similar lack of security.

The past two seasons have set a record for a corresponding period in baseball history from a standpoint of managerial turnovers. During this time only two National league managers have managed to hang on to their jobs, and three new managers will be broken in during the coming season.

American league managers have been somewhat more fortunate in the two-year period. Changes have been made at Cleveland, Detroit and St. Louis. However, managers of the five other teams will be on deck for the start of the 1939 season.

Connie Mack, manager of the Athletics, and Joe McCarthy, Yankee's guardian, are, of course, league record holders. Mack has been managing the Athletics for as far back as he cares to remember, and McCarthy has been with the Yankees since the start of the 1931 season.

New managers of the National league include Leo Durocher with Brooklyn, Ray Blades with St. Louis and "Gabby" Hartnett of the Cubs, though Hartnett succeeded Charlie Grimm in the midst of the past season.

Football Messiah

SINCE 1931 Duke university's football team has turned on its many foes who were accustomed to scheduling the North Carolina school as a breather—and Duke fans are first to give credit to Coach William Wallace Wade, their football Messiah.

Wade appeared at Duke early in 1931, and since that time has been a maker of gridiron miracles. Before his advent Duke was smacked around by its smaller rivals with amazing regularity. His third team showed that he was well under way. That year's squad won nine straight, took the Southern conference championship, and lost only to Georgia Tech in an epic 6 to 0 struggle.

In 1935 and 1936 conference championships descended on Durham, along with a new horde of students.

"If I had to choose between a squad of good morale and one of good physical build, I'd take the squad with the morale," said Wade. He means it. To him football is a creed, a cult to be followed with absolutely loyalty.

He went to Alabama in 1923, building that team into the great Crimson Tide, which won Southern conference titles in 1924, 1925, 1926 and 1929. In eight years at Alabama Wade's teams won 61 games, lost 13 and tied three.

His football formula is simple: Strict attention to fundamentals. Fit your system to your players. Short, concentrated practice sessions.

Play football with all you have, all the time. A glance at his record shows how successful the formula has worked in the past.

Wade believes in football not only as a sport, but as a builder. "The one justification for a football team in an institution of learning is the training in steadiness, courage, restraint and resourcefulness it gives the men who participate."

That, to Wallace, is no after-dinner talk. He speaks of a game he knows and loves, and he means it.

The diagram above shows a kiss break shot.

Be careful to place the balls as designated in diagram, showing exactly how to line up the ball to be played with second object ball. Tumult and Shouting Are Over; So Now What Does It All Mean?

For Months to Come the Results Will Be Subjected to Measurement; More Thinking and Less Emotion Seems To Be the Rule; 'Middle Class' in Revolt.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART
WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — The period of distorted claims by the winners and the equally distorted alibis of the losers seems to be about over. We have heard all of the tumult and the shouting of an election time. The total vote has been tabulated, and it shows a greater number—83 new ones—of Republicans in the house of representatives and eight new Republican senators. Some 14 more states have Republican governors ready to take over from the Democrats they have displaced. There were what may be called important numerical gains for the Republican party label.

But while the total vote has been tabulated and served as the basis for the claims of the winners and the alibis of the losers, those figures will be forgotten soon. The thing that is important is the result. We will be measuring the results for months to come.

It is quite unimportant, in my mind, to appraise what the swing of a few votes may have meant. It is, however, mighty important to note that there were hard and close fights for scores of candidates, in this 1938 election. There were hard and close fights in the whole of New England; there were bitter struggles in New York, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and elsewhere. They were fought out largely on major issues because, generally speaking, local questions did not provide the fundamental issue in the states that are so important politically as those mentioned.

What does it mean? What is the portent? Other writers and analysts have given and are giving their views. I guess there is no prohibition against mine.

I firmly believe the votes cast in the 1938 election were the expression of an opposition to further experimentation by government in the field of unsound theories; the expression was against further use of the American people as guinea pigs, and it was definitely for a middle-of-the-road national policy. It was, therefore, a showing, a proof, of the necessity for our traditional two-party system of government, and surely, to that extent, the nation and national life benefited by the poll taken on November 8, 1938.

More Thinking and Less Emotion Seems to Be Rule

Looking over the whole picture, as the colors and the outlines now exhibit themselves, one who favors good government of a sound and lasting character cannot help having his faith renewed. Of course, the political pendulum swings back and forth. That is to be expected. But, to me, there has appeared on the horizon a new level of political thought. Perhaps, I should not say that it is entirely new; I should say that it has been restored to its place in American life. And that observation should be amplified with the further statement that more thinking and less emotion appears to be the rule throughout the land. Absence of hysteria, or reduction of the scope of hysteria, always makes for sounder and more constructive conclusions. That is why there is so little use for an analysis of minute returns this year. The aspect is too broad to hinge upon such detail.

Probably, it can be said that the vote was an expression against waste and extravagance, against corruption of the electorate by use of public moneys, such as went on among relief workers and for which we ought always to be ashamed; it probably can be said that it was a vote against blank check appropriations, or against government meddling into every phase of human endeavor, or against many another item of policy in the New Deal, and if it were so said, it would be true to a degree, everywhere. But we are concerned with the sum into which these several things have been added.

Vote Discloses Revolt by So-Called 'Middle Class'

The United States has been governed by an expression of the will of the majority. It is sound. It is the basis of a republic. There has been much criticism of President Roosevelt on the basis of his domination of government. It has been said that he is the government because he has had such complete control that even congress moved this way or that in his direction, in the manner of puppets.

If those characterizations be true, then it appears to me logical to conclude that the late election was something of a vote for government by law and not by an individual or group of individuals. By the same reasoning, it is a logical assumption that the vote disclosed a revolt by the great middle class of the American people—the group which lives neither by the power of organization and the strike threat, nor by the power which Mr. Roosevelt so often attributed to a few whom he has called the "economic royalists." The New Dealers completely capitulated to organized labor of the C. I. O. type, and used the numbers of votes there to bulwark its assault on business. The middle classes which embrace the backbone and the salt of the earth of any nation haven't had much consideration from the New Deal thinkers. They have been the "forgotten men" (and women) about which Mr. Roosevelt spoke when campaigning in 1932. It is quite clear that the middle classes have grown tired of government playing into the hands of a single class. They are tired, as they were in 1932, when the Republicans had played too much into the hands of big business.

Suspicious Middle Class Is Good for a Democracy

The sum total of the situation, as regards the middle classes, is that they have become critical again. They followed Mr. Roosevelt unswervingly (speaking, now, of the majority) and they accepted his statements that "we have planned it that way." But when the depression of 1937 came on them and it hit as hard as that of 1930, they found doubt in their minds. He could not have planned it that way, they reasoned. So there followed the natural sequence of criticism, and the country began to think that criticism was legitimate despite the New Dealers' barrage of propaganda that the criticism, itself, was propaganda. With the middle classes back in the suspicious mood that is good for a democracy, they are again occupying their rightful role in government. There are many times more of them than any other group; they are the majority, and they showed it again this year by the sharp division of votes.

The New Deal, with the aid of old line Jeffersonian Democrats, will control the congress for the next two years. But their control is not of such a character as to permit denial of rights to any individual representative or senator or any group of them. There can be no mailed fist or "must" orders. Instead, if Majority Leader Barkley in the senate and Majority Leader Rayburn in the house want to get their programs through, there must be moderation. Extremes will spell defeat and revolt, and it is conceivable that policies of a too radical type could send the old line Democrats over to the aid of the Republicans and into a coalition to destroy the New Deal utterly and effectively. There can be no more rubber stamp business. New Deal tactics must change, and the sooner the bunch of so-called intellectuals, the high brows, learn this lesson, the better it will be for Mr. Roosevelt, politically.

I am told by a number of politically important personages that the election already has increased the courage of some of the conservative Democrats who were not outspoken heretofore. It is predicted that these will feel free now to tell the President when they disagree. None can foretell how far that situation will develop. It is a part, however, of the thought that moderation must be the rule.

Must Become Statesmen, Quit Their Demagoguery

And, next, if the Republican leadership has good sense, it will display its best brand. It will tell its followers to become statesmen and quit their demagoguery. The opportunity awaits them to be constructive and if they fail to put forward sound proposals, they will have justified the country in refusing to give them control as was done in 1938.

It is proper to say, of course, that the Republicans will not be in control of either the senate or the house. That means, they can have no management of legislative machinery. That machinery, which is all-important in carrying forward political party policies, remains in the hands of the New Deal. But the absence of control for the Republicans can not destroy the responsibility which they have assumed in electing as many members of the congress as is recorded. They dare not dodge that responsibility.

Just ahead, therefore, lies the necessity for Mr. Roosevelt to realize that there is a new public temper which does not like extremes, and for Chairman John Hamilton of the Republican national committee, and Republican Leader McNary in the senate, and Republican Leader Martin in the house, there is the opportunity to fight for reasonable legislation all of the way. These three Republican leaders must have something to offer besides criticism of the New Deal.

We generally find the all-round politician isn't entirely square. To push or to be pulled—that is the question every traveler on life's highway ought to ask himself.

Rooting for money is the root of most evil.

Isn't That Enough? A cross man, like a cross baby, is not well. That's about all that ails him.

No liberal man would impute a charge of unsteadiness to another for changing his opinion.

After all of one's plans have gone to smash, one does not want his own way so persistently.

And Keep Their Sorrows Many of the world's greatest men are unknown to fame. They are great because they share their joys with others.

Gratitude costs no more than politeness. Use both liberally.

A Trade Mark Is an Honor Badge and Newspaper Advertising the Sentinel

Substitutes today are the illegitimate children of business. They are fatherless and unknown and they come to the consumer with a "Just as good" label on them which indicates clearly to the thinking buyer that she is buying something which is only "Just as good." The unknown product, the substitute parasite, has no reputation at stake. It is merely advertised for sale on a price basis and if the consumer does not like the quality, the manufacturer has suffered no injury because he is unknown and because he rarely links his name with a product as a standard of quality and a measuring stick of buying. It merely competes on a "take a chance" basis.

The manufacturers of well-known quality merchandise today place their names upon it and advertise it as the best they can offer to the consumer. The name of a manufacturer on an advertised product says this: This is the best product I know how to make. It is pure, good and worthy of your purchase. I think so well of it that I place my name upon it as a guarantee to you of its goodness. If it does not fulfill your wants I will gladly make good its failure.

There is no good reason why you should accept the unknown instead of the known; the untried instead of the tested; the doubtful instead of the sure. To refuse unknown substitutes is a guarantee to yourself of positive satisfaction in buying. If every purchase will confirm his or her purchases to known, advertised quality merchandise there will be little cause for complaint. Trade mark products tell their own story. It pays to look before you buy. Reading the advertisements in the newspaper, looking at trade marks, labels and names on products has pure interest.

Cross-Stitch Design For Knitted Things

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS. THERE is an amusing story about the mittens and scarf shown here. They were not hand knitted. They were purchased rather hurriedly and sent to a young miss who was away at school. She had wanted something rather gay and a bit foreign looking to wear for skating and these were perfectly plain and pretty drab. She didn't take her disappointment lying down, but decided to brighten up that scarf and mitten set and make it speak a foreign language as well. She found the Swedish cross-stitch design shown here and copied it in all its gay colors on the ends of the scarf and backs of the mittens.

Hand knitted mittens and other knitted things in plain colors may also be decorated with this pert flower pattern. Start at the upper right corner of the large flower and make the cross stitches as at A and B. This flower is a brilliant red, the small flowers bright blue and the stems jade green.

NOTE - Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book 2 - Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery - has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use for gifts and church bazaars. Largest Curtain Designed by Ted Weidhaas, the contour curtain in Radio City Music hall hangs in golden folds across the proscenium. It is the largest in the world and required over 2,000 yards of fireproof lining and about a mile and a half of metal cable. The weight is approximately three tons. The curtain is operated by 13 motors, each of which controls a cable which is sewn into the material so that the folds may be arranged into hundreds of different contours.

Nearing the camp of McQueen, Alan and Noel separated to close in with cocked rifles from different angles. At last Alan stood where he commanded a view of the fire which lit the surrounding trees with its flickering glow. Near the fire a tarpaulin, banked with snow, had been stretched across two saplings to reflect the heat. In the snow hole, beside the fire, huddled a bulky figure in hooded parka. Beyond, in the trail from the shore, stood the loaded sled. The four dogs, too exhausted to note the silent approach of the stalkers, lay somewhere asleep in the snow. The shed tent faced away from the anxious eyes of the man who sought the girl's familiar parka. He could not see her. Under that snow-banked canvas Heather doubtless slept, dead with fatigue. He moved closer through the black murk of the spruce and stood directly behind the man hunched at the fire. This was McQueen. Where was Slade?

"Well, Tom," mumbled the man in the parka, "y' wouldn't listen 'n' reason. Got tricky! Now you're lyin' out tonight - payin' for it! It's a cold bed out there, eh Tom?" A belowl of a laugh followed. "Figgered on John McCord's gold and his girl, too, Tom, old pal!" chuckled McQueen. "I said: 'Hands off her!' But y' were too smart - got tricky! Well, Trudeau got his and now - y' got yours! The gold's mine - all mine, Tom - and her, too!" McQueen twisted around where he sat and faced the river shore. "Sleepin' warm, Tom?" he jeered. "If you're cold, I'll bring you bags!"

For a space he muttered into his hood before he went on, aloud, talking into the fire: "With this Indian fish and meat I'll reach the cache. Then, Cameron, good-by to you! Heavy chance you had - with four dogs! We started with six," he chuckled, "and got a present of six more with fish and meat thrown in. Pity you didn't get what the Indians got at the bend! Too bad it wasn't you, Cameron - too bad!"

Thirty feet from the man raving at the fire a rifle covered the middle of his back. But the shed tent, beyond, was in the line of fire. Then a hunky somewhere in the snow suddenly waked and snarled. The husky yelped feebly, then was silent. There was no sound from the other dogs, too dead to stir from their beds. McQueen got stiffly to his feet and fumbled in his parka as he squinted into the blackness beyond the circle of fire glow, listening. He swung around and stared toward the river shore.

The rifle now covered his heart. "You here, Cameron?" he roared. "Well, you're too late!" Drawing a black automatic from his parka, he started toward the snow-banked tent. "Come and get her, now!" Before the man in the murk could fire, a black body lunged from the gloom and catapulted onto McQueen's back hurling him headlong into the snow. There was the muffled explosion of the pistol as a knife flashed in the firelight, flashed again and again. Then the dogs broke loose from the spruce beyond the shed.

A girl's voice cried: "Alan! Alan!" And the yearning arms of Cameron reached her. Above the sprawled body of McQueen - a Montagnais, hollow eyes glittering, stood, stiff as a spruce, while he held the half of his knife to his forehead and repeated: "Sleep well, John McCord and Napoy!" "Heather!" Alan held the girl in the sleeping bag to his pounding heart. "You came - at last!" she sobbed, hysterically, clinging to his neck. "It's been so long, Alan - so long! I was asleep! Then I heard your name and saw Noel leap."

Dumb with the wild joy and emotion that choked him, he gripped her in his shaking arms, as if he feared he would lose her, kissing her thin face again and again. "I've loved you every minute - through those awful days," she whispered, "hoping and praying that you'd come - come soon! It was so awful to leave poor Dad - lying there in the snow! They shot him but he fought them until - he died. And I had to leave him there! Oh, it was so hard to leave him!"

"He was unconscious - not dead," said Alan. "That night he died in my arms. Before he died, he smiled and whispered, 'Heather!'" "Dear, dear old Dad!" The stricken girl gave herself up to her grief. When the paroxysm of sobbing ceased, she said, wearily: "I'm so tired - so tired! I walked and ran - most all the way - except on the big lake. They let me ride there!" "You're going to rest now - for days, dear. We're all going to rest." "You're so thin, Alan! You and Noel and the dogs must have killed yourselves to reach us. Rough and the puppies - they're all right?" He pressed his face close to hers as he said: "You'd always think of these - our dogs! They're down the shore - worked out, but all right. Now you stay here and keep warm while I bring up the dogs." Before he left he asked her: "Do you believe I love you, now?" She impulsively drew him close to her. "I knew you did, that day at the camp when you took me in your arms, but I'd been so hurt. I've loved you so long - ever since you left us on the ice to go to Fort George." He kissed her, then pushed back her hood to touch the thick gold of her hair. Replacing the hood he suddenly sensed the ugliness of the sprawled shape beyond them in the snow. Standing by the fire on which he had placed fresh wood, Noel waited to speak to her, but Heather spoke first. "Noel, Noel!" she cried. "Noel, come here!" Heather impulsively reached and hugged the embarrassed Montagnais. "Thank you, Noel! Oh, thank you for what you've done for me! You're both so thin; you've worked so hard! It makes me cry!" And she burst into tears. "Eet was wort' all de work, Heather - to get you!" Noel's bony face shaped a grin, but there were tears in his winking eyes. The men placed McQueen down on the river shore beside the body of trail, Heather, I was almost kiskewew, as Noel says." "They were terribly afraid of you, Alan," she said. "They had heard at Fort George that you were the best shot on the coast. We had such a long start it seemed almost impossible for you to catch us, and I grew so tired. The last day I lost hope and decided to shoot myself, as McQueen and Slade quarrelled. They went mad, both of them, I knew I'd have to use my gun - some day, soon. Then I waked to hear McQueen call your name and saw Noel leap from the shadows." With the bribe of frequent feedings of fish, Noel had won over the shy Indian dogs and, when the party started leisurely for the cache on the big lake, he followed Heather and the gold on Alan's sled with a team of his own. At the cache they rested again while they revelled in flour, sugar and pemmican, and dogs and men rapidly put on weight. Slowly but surely the superb vitality of the exhausted girl was working its cure. By the time they reached the cabin on the Talking, which, to their surprise, McQueen had not burned, she had recovered her strength. The shadows had left her violet eyes and the dimples were again in her cheeks. There they waited two weeks to hunt deer and net fish, under the ice, for dog-food for the long trip to the coast. One night when the stars swarmed low over the valley and the aurora glowed in the north, Heather, Alan and Rough stood on the river ice as the frozen feather of a moon hung above the western tundra. The girl in the hooded parka the partner he had shot while Heather slept, then Alan went for his dogs. Somewhere back in the bush the Indian huskies again lay quiet, indifferent to the actions of the strange masters. When Alan brought his weary and stiff dogs up to the camp with the sled, a hooded figure stood on the ice. "We'll have to wire the dogs away from the camp, tonight, Noel," he said. "They'll pitch on those Indian scrubs if they're loose."

With a laugh the hooded shape moved through the gloom to the Ungavas. "Roughy! It's Heather!" she cried, dropping her mittens and thrusting her hands at the doubtful lead-dog. "Powder! Shot! Rogue! It's Heather! Don't you know Heather?" Sniffs, whines, then a mad chorus of yelps greeted her as the dogs recognized their old playmate. Trail stiff as they were, the four emaciated Ungavas overwhelmed her with the pawing of fore-feet, nuzzling muzzles and the swift thrusts of red tongues. In the crook of Alan's right arm, she walked slowly back to camp where Noel had steaming tea and caribou broth waiting for them. For two days the happy man and girl and the gaunt Ungavas ate and rested in a new camp across the river for there was plenty of Nas-kapi dried caribou and fish on McQueen's sled with the eight bags of gold. There, while Heather rested in her sleeping bag before the fire, she and Alan talked of John McCord and the long race up the Koksoak.

"You see they didn't know I had a pistol, Alan," she explained. "I had no chance to help Dad, that morning. They caught me in my sleeping bag. But, somehow, poor Dad broke away from the tent and shot it out with them. When they took me away, I had my pistol under my coat. I knew I'd need it." "Then, during that drifter," she went on, "while McQueen and Slade slept, I waked up in my bag to see that evil-faced halfbreed watching me. I tried to wake the others, but they were dead with sleep. I had to shoot - him - Alan!" "Slade was scared and wanted to take my gun," she continued, "but McQueen wouldn't let him. He told me to shoot Slade if he bothered me. I wouldn't have given it up - I'd have shot, first! At the last they were both out of their heads - always watching the back trail, afraid you were coming. Yet they insisted they were fifty miles ahead of you. That's how they ambushed the Nas-kapi - watching for you."

"When we reached the Nas-kapi gazed for a space at the flickering lights on the horizon. "He wanted this, Alan. Dad told me, more than once, he wanted it. He almost worshiped you. He wanted you and me to have this gold together - to be rich." "He knew before he died, I loved you," said the man. "I told him, and I promised him I'd get you. He smiled. It comforted him."

"Daddy! - Daddy!" For a space the girl's grief swept her. Then she regained her self-control in the refuge of his circling arms. "And now I've got you, Miss Heather McCord. No matter how hard you struggle you can never get away from me. Whether you like it or not, you're bound straight for Fort George with eight bags of nuggets and gold dust. What a terrible fate!" "It sounds pretty wonderful to me!" she whispered. "But I haven't told you the worst of it. A friend of mine by the name of Stanton, an awful man who wears black clothes, is going to take your name away from you. When he's through talking, you'll be poor Heather Cameron."

"Heather Cameron," she repeated, her face radiant with happiness. "What a beautiful name!" Noel, at the water hole, smiled, as he saw, above him on the river, a hooded shape take another hooded shape in its arms while two wolf-rimmed hoods were blended into one, and a great black dog, standing on his hind legs, pawed at the motionless figures, demanding attention from the two humans he loved. (THE END.)

American Sucker, a Unique Fish Which Carries Own Bait, Greed and Dishonesty

Although more than 25,000 different varieties of fish already have been catalogued and new types constantly are being brought to light there is only one species which carries its own bait. This unique fish is commonly known as the sucker and the bait is a mixture of greed and dishonesty, says a writer in the Chicago Daily News.

Thousands of these fish are hooked every year by con men who, although using a variety of lines, toss out the same old hook which has caught the over-greedy suckers for generations. The fishermen themselves have a very low code of morals but they live up to it and do not class themselves with crooks or thieves. "We just work the suckers," one remarked, "and if the fish wasn't perfectly willing to grab off some other sucker's kale he wouldn't take the hook."

"Farmers bite? I should say not," he replied in answer to a query as to where the best fishing grounds were. "Country folk work hard for their money and want to investigate before they lay out a dollar. The big cities are filled with fish that have the bait in plain sight and all one needs to land them is a good line and a fairly strong hook. "What chance would a guy have to take a roll of 'silk,' cut it up into dress-lengths, and then go to some little country town and try to sell these dress goods as material which had been smuggled through the customs. The dear old lady would go to the phone and give three long rings and a short one - and the entire town would know that a smuggler was sitting in her kitchen and the town marshal would be on the scene before you could say Jack Robinson with your mouth open. "When the 'silk' was taken down to the general store, and found to have been grown in the Carolinas, the fisherman would be called on to change his line and hook for a heavy sledge hammer and be sentenced to make canary bird tombstones out of big granite rocks. "I can take those same 'silks' into New York, Chicago or almost any other big town, put on some oily, soiled overalls and a blue flannel shirt and hand out a line about having just come off an ocean steamship and succeeded in smuggling goods through the customs and I will hook from 10 to 20 fish in a couple of hours."

Con men who invent new tackle look in scorn on those who persist in employing lines and hooks which have been used for generations. It is almost unbelievable that a man who had made a success of a legitimate business to the extent of a nest egg of $20,000 to $50,000 would lay his entire savings on the line in some game which has received so much publicity in the press that the average reader should recognize "line and hook" at once.
