State Director Reports on Rural Schools

The following letter was received at this office this week from U. R. Beeson, State Director of Rural Schools and Elementary Education after his recent visit to Lincoln County and appearance at the Carrizozo Business Men's Club, where he addressed the club in the same manner as in his letter, which will be of interest to our readers in general. We quote Mr. Beeson's letter:

Messrs. U. R. Beeson and J. T. Reese recently visited some of the schools of Lincoln County in company with Meses. Irene Hart and Ola Jones and Mr. McQuillen, Chairman of the County Board of Education. Mr. Beeson Director of Elementary Education, praised the work that was being done by Meses. Hart and Jones.

The state officials were asked by Mrs. Roselle to visit the rural school circulating library. This work was lauded by Mrs. Jones and is being successfully built up under the administration of Mrs. Hart. The new library building is a distinct credit to the County school system, according to these men.

Mr. Beeson complimented the testing program which is being carried out by Mrs. Jones, and the thorough-going remedial program in instruction that has ensued as a result of the testing program. He felt that the County should continue the splendid work that is being done by both of these women.

Cordially yours,
Ulrich R. Beeson,
State Director of Rural & Elementary Education.

Mrs. C. O. Garrison arrived here Wednesday from Bakersfield, Calif., to which city the Garrisons moved several months ago. C. O. being transferred in the signal service of the S. P. Mrs. Garrison will be a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Karr for a week or ten days.

BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB

The regular meeting and six o'clock dinner at the S. P. Hotel proved to be another banner event, from the fact that members of the club were attended by their wives, and single members brought their sweethearts. Memories of the past were revived by the presence of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Brickley of Carlsbad, Mr. Brickley Carrizozo's former banker and past president of the Business Men's Club.

President G. T. McQuillen opened the meeting with an address of welcome to the ladies and visitors from Carlsbad, and was followed by Vice-President James M. Carpenter, who added emphasis to what the President had said, making the welcome doubly complete.

Mr. Brickley was called on and gave a very interesting talk on his experience since leaving Carrizozo and also spoke of his future intentions, plans, etc. A 8-piece orchestra from the local CCC Camp furnished music for the occasion. The attendance was 40.

New Train Schedule

The S. P. Company has issued orders to the effect that on next Sunday, Feb. 13, trains 11 and 12 will be discontinued, leaving only trains 3, 4, 43 and 44. The time set for the arrival and departure of these trains will be as follows:

J. K. Emmett, America's Sweet Singer

As mighty oaks from little acorns grow, so have mighty men grown from those who seemed to have had no chance in life and to all appearances, were lost in the streams of humanity and wrecked on the shoals of oblivion.

We admire greatness where it is obtained in the school of hard knocks and bemoan the downfall of any of whom may later in life, fall victims to adversity and lose more than they had gained.

In the year of 1848, in the city of New York, J. K. Emmett was born of poor parents - so poor that they could not afford to give their children proper schooling. Joe, as he was called, first began to work as a bootblack at the age of ten. Next, he sold newspapers and with his scanty savings, he would attend the theatres, listen to the singing, see the dancing and at each performance, he would catch some new step in dancing or commit some new strain of song from the different actors. From his early childhood he had an unrelenting desire to become an actor and singer.

His efforts were rewarded for as he grew up, his singing and dancing attracted theatrical promoters and he began his career. He first appeared in vaudeville and from that to the drama. He was a fine specimen of manhood. His manly form, dark hair, brilliant eyes, perfect teeth, handsome appearance in general, made him the idol of theatrical goers. His fame grew until he was called across the seas, where his name drew crowded houses. On returning home, he stirred great audiences with his sweet singing, in "Fritz in Ireland," "Fritz in Russia," and "Fritz in Switzerland," in which his Tyrolean wailing, sang with such sweetness and expression that boxes of offices everywhere, were sold out long before the day set for his appearance.

From a penniless, bare-footed urchin of the Bowery in New York, to one of the most attractive stage drawing personalities in the theatrical profession. He made money hand over fist, but he had one failing; strong drink, and that finally proved his downfall. The writer first heard him sing at the opera house in Lincoln, Nebraska, where he appeared in "Fritz in Switzerland."

The scene was laid in a beautiful valley in the Alps mountains, where with his brother Tom, they tilled their small farm. In a certain part of the setting, it was a twilight scene and Fritz sang a Tyrolean warbling song, "Tom, go call the cows in," with such force of expression and harmonious sweetness, that the audience that filled the theatre to overflowing, rose to its feet in thundering applause.

In the winter of 1881 he was billed at Pope's opera house in Cincinnati, Ohio. As usual, the big theatre was crowded to its capacity, but the manager came forward with the announcement that Mr. Emmett was ill and could not appear until the following night. All tickets were returned. Part of the night was spent in trying to find him, but at last the police found him in a dingy, dirty, slimy saloon on the Ohio levee, in a state of beastly intoxication. He was taken to jail on an order from his wife. At the police station the next morning, he was arraigned with a horde of bums, bar-flies and criminals before the judge. His wife and mother were there. They occupied seats near the judge, with J. K. Emmett, America's sweet-singer, hair matted and disheveled, face bloated and clothes torn, sat with the scum of the underworld.

Seeing his wife and mother was more than he could stand. He arose, crossed the room, and with an expression of repentance, he knelt for forgiveness. The wife spurned him, but the mother smoothed his disordered hair, kissed his swollen face and said, "God bless you, my boy - mother forgives you." The next day, the Cincinnati Enquirer said that in that scene, Emmett revealed his dramatic nature more than in any of his plays. The judge viewed the scene and said, "go with your wife and mother; the case is dismissed."

The Way To National Progress

Recent news dispatches from Washington contain numerous promises that the "little fellows" in industrial and other activities are going to be consulted in current endeavors to clear the roadway toward sound recovery.

By this is meant that the average merchant or small producer and employer will have a chance to tell his story and outline his needs to the men who make and enforce the laws which control our well-being as a nation.

It's an excellent idea, which all Americans who feel a sincere concern with our national progress will approve. It could, with real benefit, be carried still further. It could, with real benefit, extend to all types of workers and producers, who compose the body and strength of our Republic.

Washington might, for example, consider the problem of the average wage-earner, who feels the toll that heavy taxes—direct and indirect—lay on the contents of his pay envelope.

It might, for example, consider the worries of the average insurance policyholder or other prudent saver, who wonders what effect huge public debts—with their constant threat of inflation—may have on the thoughtful provisions he makes for the future security of his family.

It might, for example, consider the situation of the housewife, struggling to provide balanced meals on a family budget constantly unbalanced by rising prices due to public extravagance and impractical economic experiments.

These are the people to consider, rather than the blatant pressure groups or the expert saboteurs for votes, whose voices appear so often to drown out the modest demands of the average worker and earner.

Yet it is on these average citizens that the strength and stability of America depend—today as in the past. They represent not only the throes and sinews of our country, but its hope as well. It is they who built America and will carry it to still greater heights—if given a chance.

They are, moreover, the real voice of the Nation—and if Washington only heeds that voice, America cannot fail to resume her progress.

CHAPTER I

Joyce sat on a leather puff beaded her small-paned window looking out and down at the turning maple leaves. She was nineteen—tomorrow she would be twenty. Nobody living knew it but herself—nobody. She had lied about her true birthday since she was eight and owing to a single overwhelming catastrophe it had been easy enough to confuse her father. Twelve years—twelve years in Elsinboro, six of them without him, terribly alone with her step-mother. Yes, you could be alone with somebody else—far lonelier than if you were by yourself. She was alive—tremendously alive inside. That was the trouble; it had to stay inside. She palpitated with dreams of what might be—the secret dreams of a young girl who longs to believe in life as something warm, something you can hold in your arms. But when she looked outside herself she stared at a wall.

Elsinboro has its counterpart in Ocean or Elmira but not in Wilkes-Barre, Scranton or Pottsville. Forty thousand strong, it has known no overpowering foreign infiltration and presents a cross-section of the American scene, old style, from a miniature Tammany to an elite who read French, talk liberalism and discriminate between one dollar and another. There are plenty of dollars, gathered by adventurous sons from the four corners of the earth, but there were no fabulous fortunes until Bolivar Smith got an idea 15 years ago. Six roughnecks believed in it and became multi-millionaires almost overnight. They took over the section now known as Platinum Hill and built their incongruous chateaux in a huge circle.

But Joyce Sewell was not of them; in fact she had no part or parcel of Elsinboro, new or old. She was pure North Shore, descended from generations of the Sewells who christened more clipper ships when the American merchant marine overtopped the fleets of the world than any other tribe. Her presence in the town was an accident—one of those tragic accidents that leave their mark for the whole of life. The scene—so far away, so long ago—lived in her eyes, shut or open. She would listen too, her ears trembling lest they hear. But memory is silent, part of its terror lies in silence.

No crash of guns reached her now, only the remembered flash. No thud of bullets on stone, wood and flesh, no choking scream—only the indelible, the unforgettable scene. Her mother unspeakably murdered. A pause—the eternal pause that had lasted but a second. Her father matching her up under one arm, a petaca under the other, to rush along interminable corridors, followed by shots and the derisive jeers of the marauders who believed he could not possibly escape. Stairs—wooden stairs, stone steps, the secret door and the garden, black beneath towering cypress and spreading ash. Hurry! Hurry! The pattern, unopened, then locked. The startle, unlooked, then locked. The icy lake, a dugout and, finally refuge in a humble peon hut. No—not finally. Followed days in a pannier on the back of a mule, hours in a crowded train, a week on a refugee ship bound for New Orleans and on that ship Mrs. Irma Thorne, of Elsinboro, New York.

Irma Thorne, then three years a widow, believed it was her mission to do people good whether they liked it or not. She was not a refugee but a returning traveler with a well-filled pocketbook. She had soft tobacco-colored eyes, but there the softness ended; though the truth would have surprised and wounded her, her chin, her stocky body, her will and her conscience were as tough as rawhide. The mere sight of Cutler Sewell's lackluster eyes, gone dead in his head, staring at his little daughter but eternally seeing something else, was a supreme challenge to her peculiar aptitude for service and abnegation. She took charge. She gave Joyce her first bath in ten days and made her a frock out of her own best skirt. She rushed father and daughter to her home in Elsinboro. She was undoubtedly a good woman and by every rule in the copybook Joyce should have loved her. Gently admonished by her father she tried pitifully to do so and failed. It was no use. She was too young to think things out; all she knew was that a barrier of ice stood between her heart and her benefactress.

"Daddy, let's go away."
"We can't, Joyce; not just now. At present I haven't a cent."
"Please, papacito, I don't like her."
"You mustn't say that. She's a good woman—a very good woman."
"I know," quavered Joyce, bewildered by her own detestation but face to face with a fact. "Oh, please, papacito, please!"
He compromised, yielding to the endearing pet diminutive that had never yet failed her. On the excuse she ought to keep up her Spanish as a possible asset for the future. He took her into his study for an hour every afternoon. That hour had been sacred, proof against any form of interruption from the day when a knock on the door had thrown Joyce into a paroxysm of screams followed by prolonged sobbing. Yet she was no cry-baby; that one convulsive protest was her last, but it had been enough. She and her father talked Spanish in peace, not always for the full hour. Sometimes, quite content to be at his side, she watched him write letters—long painstaking letters—always to one of two addresses.

When the answers came he filed them away, ever more and more sadly, in the petaca. It was a funny little trunk covered with rawhide stretched on the frame while still wet. The hair was mostly worn off but there were still arabesques of brass-headed tacks to which he had added a card bearing the following signed inscription: "Upon my death this box and contents become the property of Joyce Sewell, my daughter and sole heir." With each addition to the dossier he weakened, became less the man of property and more the chastened sacrificial goat. The day came when Irma Thorne married what was left of him for appearances' sake and for his and for Joyce's—not for her own. Perhaps he knew the surrender would kill him, but at least his orphaned child would have a roof over her head. She was sixteen when he died.

Helm Blackadder was a rock of a man, forty-nine and virile; with bushy brows, steely eyes and crisp gray hair. He was a native son, a product of Elsinboro—so interwoven in the town's pattern it had never occurred to him to consider any other place as a base. Yet in his capacity as an excellent engineer and a daring promoter he had burrowed in South Africa, combed Korea and lived in Chile with varying degrees of profit. In the intervals he had known Irma Bostwick, Irma Thorne and finally Irma Sewell. Part of him frankly admired part of her; she had a bulldog quality and so had he. Now she had sent for him and as he entered her very comfortable living room he wondered why.

"Well, Irma, what's on your mind?"
"It's Joyce, Helm; but do sit down. Take that big chair. It looks as if it had been made for you."
"What's the matter with Joyce?"
Mrs. Sewell frowned and then substituted a look of patient resignation. "You know all I've done for her. Don't think I mean I begrudge it since it was my duty and there's no greater satisfaction in life than seeing one's duty and doing it. But can you believe in spite of everything she actually dislikes me? She does, though; I think she always has." She waited, but since Blackadder refrained from comment she continued. "But that's not the worst of it; she's harming herself, deliberately destroying her great chance."

"How?" he asked bluntly.
"Oh, all this extra-curriculum studying she's been doing. She's kept up her Spanish so you'd think she could teach it anywhere but now she wants to take a business course."

"Secretarial?"
"No; she doesn't give it any fancy name—just plain stenography and typing."

"What's wrong with that?" demanded Blackadder. "It's the way several of the highest paid women in the world got their start and I can name half a dozen cases where it's been a royal road to marriage. So I don't see how it could hurt Joyce."

"You don't?" said Mrs. Sewell. She edged forward on her chair.
"Listen, Helm; I wouldn't tell this to anybody but you. Howard Sempter, Emil Schaaf and Michael Kirkpatrick have all proposed to her over and over again."

"Half of Platinum Hill!" said Blackadder, scowling. "Well, she's no business woman and never will be."

"Why? Why do you say that?"
"Because if she were she'd marry them all, one after the other, and retire."

"Oh!" gasped Mrs. Sewell, truly shocked.
"Which one of the three do you think she'd find it easiest to fall for and to handle?"

"That's what I wanted to ask you. It's got to be one pretty soon or none."

"Why? What's the hurry?"
"Can't you think it out for yourself? If Platinum Hill goes after a girl with no money it's largely because she isn't a stenographer."

Blackadder's scowl deepened. "I hate to agree with you but I guess you're right. It's a shame one town should be saddled with three of that brand of job, but if she's so attractive, what about a boy or two of the good old stock? Aren't any of them hanging around?"

"They would if they could afford it, but they know they can't. The nice boys she knows are all in college with years to go before they'll begin looking for a job. They're too young. I have enough income to manage on and wait, but I know Joyce—she won't stay with me much longer and she hasn't a penny."

"What about her father? I remember hearing he owned one of the show places in Mexico. Do you know what that means? A hacienda that doesn't run over 20,000 acres would be at the foot of the class."

"He lost it—everything he had. He wasn't even compensated for the murder of his wife though his lawyer assured him he would be. Cutler used to speak of it as blood money and wouldn't have thought of taking it except for Joyce. And it's she that matters now. She's got to be saved from herself and you must help."

"If? Why me?"
"Because you're real, Helm, and the only man I know well enough to turn to. There's something in her frightens me. Sometimes she's a burning bush and the next instant she's quicksilver. Please, Helm. This child was put in my charge by a direct act of God. Whether she loves me or not it's my duty to guide her life along the lines of common sense. Which do you want her to do—go around looking for a job at $15 a week or be the first to bring a little culture to Platinum Hill? Which gives her the best chance for a full life?"

"A missionary, eh?" said Blackadder, his lips quivering oddly. He lifted his heavy shoulders and let them fall. "Well, Mike oughtn't to be so bad. I remember his father as a ditch-gang foreman with a laugh and plenty of punch besides."

Mrs. Sewell sighed resignedly. "I would have chosen Howard Sempter, but trust a man to pick a man is a good rule though we women seldom follow it. So it's to be Mrs. Michael—not Mike—Kirkpatrick. Anyway it sounds a lot better than Mrs. Schaaf." At that moment there was a sound of somebody entering the hall. "Joyce, is that you?"

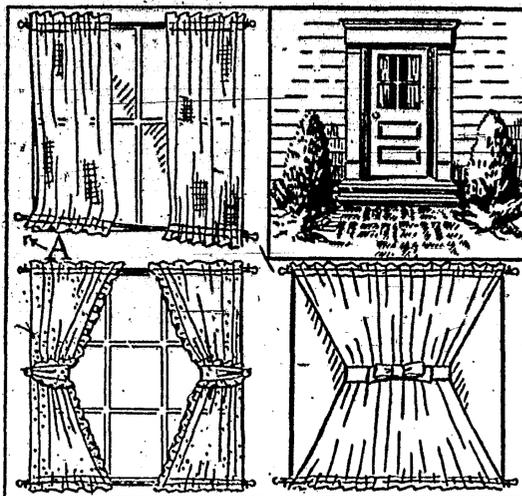

"Yes, ma'am."
"She's never once called me mother," whispered Mrs. Sewell to Blackadder, a hurt and bewildered look in her liquid brown eyes. Then she raised her voice. "Come here, dear; we want to talk to you."

Blackadder disliked being rushed and felt he was being drafted without his consent, but immediately Joyce entered he was conscious of an odd reaction as though all his gears had gone suddenly into reverse. The girl was more than handsome. There was ardor in her bearing, her eyes and her half-parted lips that not only aroused his combative nature, but promptly convinced him that Irma was right—the sooner this potential dynamo was married-off, the better for all concerned.

She nodded to him and turned to her stepmother. "Well?"
"Oh, do sit down, Joyce. Can't you sit down and talk reasonably for once in your life?"

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Curtaining Your Front Door.

YOUR front door greets your friends before you do. Is it dressed to look its best? Here are some simple rules that will be useful in selecting the material and style for front door curtaining.

Choose a fabric that looks well on both sides and that harmonizes with the outside color of your door as well as with the color scheme of the hall or room into which it opens. A simple net curtain material or plain silk are good to use but if your door is white on the outside think twice before you choose the usual ecru or pongee color. White net or silk of a color to match the shutters or the trim of the house will look infinitely more attractive and will not be too conspicuous. The curtains may be made double with a different color on the inside if need be. Pale yellow is another color that is always safe to use as it gives the effect of light shining through the door.

These curtains should be firmly anchored both top and bottom so that they do not blow about and catch in the door when it is opened and closed. Both bottom and top rods may be fastened over heels as shown here at A.

Every homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; curtains for every type of room; lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents (coins preferred) to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

TIPS to Gardeners

Start Them Indoors

TOMATO, cabbage, broccoli, egg plant and pepper crops usually prove more satisfactory when they are started indoors from seed. The gardener thus may use seed of a known variety from a dependable source.

About eight weeks before plants are to be set in open, sow seeds a quarter-inch deep in good soil in a regular florist's flat. Water thoroughly but not too frequently—preferably on bright days.

Good sunlight and good air circulation are important in preventing "damping off." Keep temperature fairly even at 70 to 75 degrees. When young plants are about one and one-half inches tall, transplant to a larger box or cold frame, spacing about three inches apart.

If the plants are grown in a box, place them indoors in the shade on six or eight mild days to harden them off. When plants are set in open soil, space them far enough apart to allow for full development.

Early Arc Lamps

When Charles Brush's arc lamps were lighted for the first time at Cleveland's public square in 1879 many persons looked at them through smoked glasses. They thought the light coming from these new contraptions would injure their eyes. Many women complained that these "bright" lights would not do justice to their complexions.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

For Chest Colds

Distressing cold in chest or throat, never safe to neglect, generally ceases up when soothing, warming Muterole is applied.

Better than a mustard plaster, Muterole gets action because it's NOT just a salve. It's a "counter-irritant"—stimulating, penetrating, and helpful in drawing out local congestion and pain.

MOVIE DIRECTOR...

He's the man who must close his eyes and dream a motion picture before the cameras turn. He must transform hard, cold, typewritten words from a scenario into an exciting, attention-compelling story that will draw customers to the box office. Every inflection in his star's voice, every movement of her graceful foot must pass his scrutiny before the heartless camera records the sequence. He must fight time to complete production speedily and keep down expenses. He must fight his own cast sometimes, to dissuade a temperamental player from stalking off the lot. He commands an army of property men, technicians, extras and featured players, depending either on personality or brute force to keep things moving and finish his picture according to schedule. If it holds true on the legitimate stage, it's also true in the movies... THE SHOW MUST GO ON!

FOTO-FEATURE

Director Van Dyke is six feet tall, weighs 160 pounds, has dark hair and blue eyes. He would rather act than direct, successful though he has been in the latter field. Golf is his hobby, but he must also work, so Van Dyke helps set nine cameras (below) to shoot an elaborate scene. Dressed in white suit with dark glasses, he seems unaware of the army of cameramen swarming about his shoulders.

...W.S. VAN DYKE

The Man Who Has Been Entertaining People Since He Was Seven Years Old

The son of a San Diego superior court judge, W. S. Van Dyke first appeared on the stage at the age of seven with Fred Butler and Charles Nichols in San Francisco. He's come a long way since, having directed such opposite type pictures as "Trader Horn" and "Rosalie." For his cinematic exploration work in "Trader Horn," "White Shadow" and "Eskimo" the Japanese government decorated Van Dyke with the Order of the Rising Sun. "Trader Horn" was an accomplishment, for he took a large company of white actors and technicians into darkest Africa and brought them all out alive. Like a ship's captain, Van Dyke directs everything about his motion picture sets. Below he is conferring with Cedric Gibbons, left, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer art director, and Charles Chick, center, general production manager, over last minute details of "Rosalie." Here is a day in Van Dyke's life.

Van Dyke's favorite contemplative pose is with hand to chin or nose. Abbye he discusses a few more details of "Rosalie" with Nelson Eddy, the male star, and Herbert Stothart, musical director. Later, as filming starts on a mammoth dance sequence, he apparently thinks everything's going swell (right). It's seldom that a director can look so pleased.

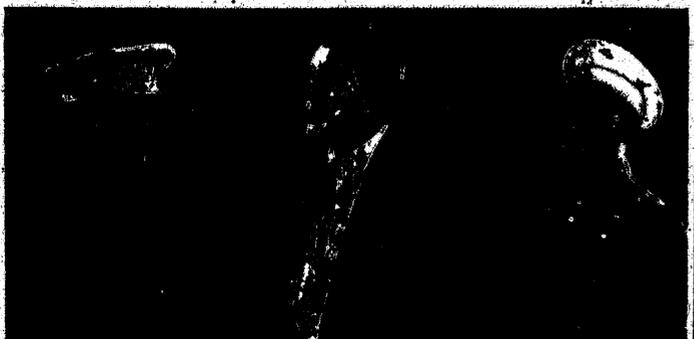

Van Dyke, like most other good directors, feels that his players can't do a happy scene unless they're actually in a happy state of mind. Hence he must sometimes hide his own feelings when things aren't going right, giving an occasional pep talk to keep the ball rolling. Van Dyke must be a master craftsman, else he couldn't jump from African adventure stories to a musical romance and have each of them "click." Possibly he has an adept mind like his famous cousin, Henry Van Dyke, philosopher, writer and former U. S. ambassador to The Hague. He is also related to John C. Van Dyke, art critic who wrote "Art for Art's Sake," now professor of archeology at Rutledge college. Director Van Dyke may also believe in "art for art's sake," but his art must have box office appeal as well to please the producers. Evidently it does, for most Van Dyke pictures make money.

watches intently. These two pictures illustrate part of the director's endless job of coaxing, praising, scolding and wheedling. Stars often have reason to be discouraged—So does the director.

Washington.—The month of January, 1933, has come and it is now gone with the wind. Dozens of big business men have been called to the White House for conferences with the President on means of solving the depression problem. And dozens have gone away from the White House after those conferences without any announcement from the head of the government as to what is to be done. Much conversation and much noise—totaling much conversation and much noise. That was January at the White House.

A new session of congress started with the opening of January. The house and the senate appear actually to have no definite program; certainly, no program for a constructive course that will lead the country out of the terrific business decline. Instead, the senate has been debating and debating a bill to punish any community where a lynching takes place and the house has been indulging in its annual sport of passing appropriation bills, voting money without knowing too much about the items for which it votes. Southern senators filibustered against the anti-lynching bill because of the problems, the burdens, such legislation would load on them and the northern Democratic senators seemed willing to let business die, unemployment increase, etc., in order to gain a few negro votes. That was January in congress.

An analysis of the situation, therefore, would seem to be in order. To do that, we have to go back to 1933 when President Roosevelt took office. The nation was in chaos. There is no need to review those conditions. The new President came in with an overwhelming majority to support him. His majority was so large that he needed only to express his view and it was translated into action. The country liked the aggressiveness thus shown. Members of the house and senate, however, developed a habit—not all of them, but a majority of them. That habit was one of waiting for the word from the White House.

While this habit was growing, business interests were pushed and kicked around and generally given to understand that they did not know what the shooting was all about. Like a country school boy, the business man was sent to his seat and told to stay there. Otherwise the hickory stick would be brought into use. Indeed, the hickory stick in the form of several pieces of legislation was laid out the business of the country, not as a pat on the back, but much further down toward the end of its spine. So business, too, got the habit of standing in the background. It was afraid to venture forth.

Things began to look up. There was something approximating good business and it looked as if Mr. Roosevelt's policies were correct in every sense. But something happened; the boat struck a snag. For several months last year the administration refused to admit that conditions were alarming. It was just temporary, officials said. The country would pull out of it—and it will some time if there is anything left. But the problem is immediate and January has gone into history, as did December and November. It was in this circumstance that the results of the habit formed in 1933 began to show their worst phases. Business interests have gone to the White House to tell their side of the story, at the President's request, and nothing has come of those conferences.

In the criticism of congress, I did not intend to indict all of the membership. There are those who see their mistakes and are willing to do something about them. Unfortunately, they are in minority. Blind followers of the President, generally speaking, constitute the majority. So that those who want to take constructive action haven't had an opportunity.

Lately, I heard Worth Clark, a Democratic member of the house, from Idaho, make a radio speech on this fact; or rather he touched on this fact. Mr. Clark is a pretty hard-boiled Democrat, but he believes he was elected to represent his people and not to throw them down simply because his party leadership wanted to do something else. In the radio speech that I mentioned, Mr. Clark referred to mistakes that had been made in the last five years and asked: "What is the remedy?"

"First," he continued in his answer to that question, "we must squarely face the problem. We must realize that we have done some things wrong. We must retrace our steps where necessary and start anew. One of the difficulties involved here is the lack of independence of thought and courage among us in congress. The worst injustice that can be done a great leader is to blindly follow his every suggestion. That frequently causes him to make more mistakes than he otherwise would. A man's best friends are not those who crouch at his feet with blandishment, flattery and subservience. His real friends are those who disagree with him when they think him wrong and who give him their utmost in support when they think him right."

There are many others in congress who feel as does Mr. Clark about the present situation. They recognize, I think, that Mr. Roosevelt must assume his fair share of responsibility, as President, for the current depression. It is apparent, too, that he must assume responsibility for the failure of some of his policies in that he turned to "yes" men for advice instead of recognizing that there could be honest disagreement with him on the part of many who desired to be helpful. It is, in other words, another result of the type of leadership that he has assumed, a leadership that worked without halt when everything was hunky dory but a type that obviously will fall when the tide runs against you.

Perhaps I was a bit unfair when I said Mr. Roosevelt's conferences with business men had yielded nothing. It is true that he has "persuaded" the automobile manufacturers and finance companies to tighten up the strings somewhat on installment buying. It is likely that hereafter an automobile finance company will grant credit only for 18 months instead of 24 months on the sale of a car where deferred payments are used. I do not know how that will solve the current depression, but that was the reason given for the change in business practice. As a matter of fact, experts in the Department of Commerce said in published reports in May, 1932, that a majority of the finance companies were holding to the 18-month limit even then.

There can be no doubt that installment buying is a dangerous thing because of the abuses that accompany it. My objection to it is the same as I have often stated in these columns respecting other types of debt. Any time debt is made easy, there has been created a fresh danger at the very same time. Installment buying has been generally used—and the general result is that it was bound to be, that hundreds of thousands of people put themselves into debt. When their income from wages or otherwise was reduced, their installment obligations became a burden that had first call on whatever money was available. In the case of the automobile finance companies, it seems clear that there have been abuses. High pressure salesmen, anxious to sell cars "and you can pay in two years." The companies found out long ago, however, that the dangers existed and they were trimming their commitments accordingly. Since these sales are comparatively small in ratio to the whole country's business, I think the White House announcement will not result in immediate restoration of prosperity.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

Baked Peaches for Garnish or Dessert.
CANNED peach halves baked in their own syrup with the addition of sugar, butter and a suspicion of cinnamon make an ideal fruit to feature with the meat course or they are equally delicious to have for dessert. Serve them hot or cold but hot fruit during the winter months is especially good.

Baked Peaches.
1 No. 2 1/2 can peach halves
1/4 cup brown sugar
3 tablespoons butter
Cinnamon

Pour the peaches and the syrup into a shallow pan, a cake pan is convenient to use. Turn the peach halves so the cut side is up. Sprinkle the sugar over the peaches, place a piece of butter in each peach where the pit was removed and sprinkle them ever so lightly with cinnamon. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees) until the sugar on the edges of the peach begins to brown, or about 30 minutes. If you wish a more pronounced brown edge, set the pan of peaches under the broiler for a few minutes.

Canned peach halves are delicious prepared in this same manner. If the fruit is served as a dessert, plain cream is nice to serve with it.

Legends and Oddities That Make The Isle of Man Very Attractive

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

MANXMEN (natives of the Isle of Man) travel all over the world and sometimes settle in out-of-the-way places, but they never seem to forget their little island, which lies almost midway between England, Scotland, and northern Ireland, set like a jewel in the Irish sea.

Tradition says the island came into existence when a legendary hero, Finn MacCool, hurled handfuls of Irish earth at some giant enemy; but, though reluctant to doubt this story, we shall be nearer the mark perhaps if we believe the geologists who tell us that it was once attached to the neighboring mainlands and is geologically akin to the English lake district.

The stories of the early inhabitants are just as strange as those concerning Finn MacCool. One hears, for instance, that fairies made their kingdom in Man, and that St. Patrick, fresh from triumphs in Ireland, came to Christianize the island and turn out the snakes.

But even when one leaves the legends and turns the pages of island history, the truth is exciting and romantic enough. The Celtic inhabitants were at different times ruled by Irish, Scandinavian, Scottish, and English kings.

When the island passed to Edward I of England, he and his successors presented the little kingdom to various favorites until in 1405 it came into possession of the great house of Stanley. This famous Lancashire family ruled in Man up to 1736, when the lordship passed to the duke of Athol.

Twenty-nine years later the island was sold to the British Crown. Fortunately, however, all the old laws and customs were preserved, so that today the island, which is only 30 miles long and 12 broad, still possesses its own law courts and its own legislative bodies, though enactments, of course, are subject to the approval of the British government.

Flag With Three Legs.

The first thing that strikes you during a voyage to the island is the fact that your ship is flying a red flag bearing the Three Legs of Man. This is the ancient emblem of the island, which decorates the hilt of the Thirteenth-century sword of state and in addition is seen almost everywhere.

It seems certain that this emblem is of Sicilian origin, for many Sicilian vases in the British museum bear a similar design. The only difference is that in the Manx version the feet are booted and spurred and a curious motto states: "Whichever way you may throw me, I shall fall on my feet."

Castletown, though deprived of its former importance, still retains an air of aloof grandeur. The inhabitants rather look down upon those who live in less favored places. There is an atmosphere of peace about the place, for the "trippers," who in summer turn the other towns into perpetual playgrounds, are satisfied to see the castle and then pass on.

Most of the town, built on Castle-town bay, is grouped around Castle Rushen. The streets are so old and narrow that sometimes the inhabitants, after nearly being annihilated by a motorbus, remark pathetically, "Why, there isn't room to swing a cat here!" All the same, they are proud of their old houses and would not have it otherwise.

One large square, facing the castle, is remarkable for its monuments. In the center stands a lofty column, erected, so a tablet explains, as a memorial to Col. Cornelius Smelt, a former lieutenant-governor of the island. One wonders why there is no statue on the top, until some kind passer-by explains that insufficient money was forthcoming to complete the memorial.

Clock With Only One Hand.

This seems odd, but odder yet is the time-keeping apparatus displayed. First, there is an old sundial, which, so it is said, can be used to tell the time, by either the sun or the moon.

But strangest of all is a large clock presented by Good Queen Bess. At first glance it looks very imposing and useful, but then one discovers there is something seriously amiss. There is only one hand, the hour hand.

As a result, the stranger is very likely to miss trains and buses, but in this, as in other things, practice improves even if it does not make perfect, and in time one becomes quite a good guesser. The Manx people do not mind, for after all their motto is "Time Enough."

Castle Rushen is one of the finest specimens of a medieval castle in existence. The local limestone has wonderfully withstood the storms of centuries.

Robert Bruce captured the castle in 1313, by dint of a long siege. As a fortress it looks impregnable, and, in fact, was so in the brave days of old, before the development of artillery.

During the reign of Charles I, who was beheaded in 1649, the seventh earl of Derby, known to this day as the Great Stanley, built a house in the grounds after the style of his Lancashire seat, Knowsley hall.

This great man, and his gallant wife, Charlotte de la Tremouille, played a prominent part in the British Civil war. While he raised men for the king in the Isle of Man, she defended Lathom house in Lancashire. Later, when Charles II made his unfortunate raid into England, the earl fought by his side at Worcester and was captured and executed.

They Liked the Great Stanley.

Greatest of all the lords of Man, he knew how to make himself popular, so that, although the people had to support numerous troops and were heavily taxed, he was well liked. Some of his own words have come down to us and they explain the secret of his success: "When first I came among the people, I seemed affable and kind to all, so I offended none. For taking off your hat, a good word, a smile or the like, will cost you nothing, but may gain you much."

When he died the countess was ruling in Castle Rushen and one William Christian, receiver of the island, was in command of the militia. This man at once led the militia against the countess and captured all the strong places with the exception of Castle Rushen and Peel.

The Parliamentary forces then landed on the island, and Christian surrendered on condition that the Manx should retain their laws and liberties. A few days later the countess was compelled to give in. The castle is no doubt a wonderful specimen of medieval architecture, but one can not help thinking how dreadfully uncomfortable it must have been for all those who had to live there. "Thick walls, tiny windows, and holes through which to pour boiling pitch may be admirable for defensive purposes, but do not increase the amenities of a dwelling."

Indeed, the only consolation the residents can have had is the knowledge of the even greater discomforts suffered by the prisoners in the underground dungeons. There are, it is said, ghosts haunting the castle, notably a lady in white who appears in unexpected fashion out of the main gateway at midnight.

Manx Cats Still There.

This is doubtless a myth; but the Manx cats are no myth; there are still some about, looking very strange minus their tails. Little is known about them, though it has been said that the original specimens came off a galleon of the Spanish Armada wrecked on the rocky shores of the island. But whatever their origin, they are far wilder than English cats, in shape rather like a miniature leopard.

Half a mile from the center of Castle-town is Hango hill, the ancient execution ground where William Christian was shot.

This macabre hill rises from the seashore, and immediately behind it the inspiring pile of King William's college dominates an enormous green playing field. Anyone who wishes may visit this great public school, where most distinguished Manxmen, and some distinguished Englishmen, received their education.

From here one can ramble on to the fishing village of Derby Haven, formerly a center of smuggling but now remarkable as the island airport, and visit the white farmhouse of Ronaldsway, the old home of Christian and the place where he hatched his plot to rise against the countess.

"When the Volts Broke Loose"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

HELLO EVERYBODY:

You all know what happens when the lions get loose. Here's something that can be just as deadly as a full grown, man-eating lion. It's a doggone sight more common than lions, too. You've got 'em in your own house, and they travel along every street in the city you live in. It's volts I'm talking about those little electrical sledgehammers that pack such a terrific wallop.

The more of those volts you get together in one place, the more of a wallop they pack. A hundred and ten of them—the number in your lighting circuit at home—will knock a man flat on his back if he gets in the way of them. But this story is about a lad who was fooling around with eleven thousand of those ornery things—and that's three or four times as many as they run through the electric chair up at Sing Sing.

Richard Flushing of Jamaica, N. Y., is today's Distinguished Adventurer, and he wins the honor with the story of how it feels to see the volts come hopping-out of the cable eleven thousand strong. Dick is an electrician, and he says he's had plenty of close calls of one sort or another, but this one with the galloping lightning was the biggest thrill he ever had or ever expects to have.

The date was February 7, 1933. At that time Dick was working for the Long Island railroad. It takes a lot of current to run those electrified trains that run out of New York on the Long Island, and Dick's job was in the road's key sub-station, where the voltage came through in large quantities.

Thought It Was a Simple Job.

Dick came to work at four o'clock that February day. He and his partner worked the four to midnight shift. They had only been on the job for five minutes when they got an order over the telephone to put into service an eleven thousand volt feeder that had been taken out by the day men while some tents were being made.

Both of them started for the cellar of the sub-station where the disconnecting switches are located. They took along their switch sticks, but they didn't bother about rubber gloves, for their job was a simple matter of throwing a switch and letting the juice ride on through.

At least, that's what they thought. But when they reached the cellar they discovered that something was wrong. Ground wires—high tension cables—were dangling in the air when they should have been hanging on brackets. The two men laid aside their switch sticks and proceeded to put those wires where they belonged. The wires were dead, for the switches were still open, and Dick and his partner figured there'd be no need for gloves or any such precautions.

Dick's partner put one set of wires on the brackets and in doing so he passed within a few inches of the open switch. Dick thought he went a little TOO close to it for comfort. He hung his own set of wires on the brackets and, in passing the switch, took care to be farther away from it than usual. The cable in Dick's hand was at least eight inches from the switch when, suddenly, things began to happen.

Eleven Thousand Volts Hit Them.

A buck-feed was what did it. An extra load of power was suddenly shunted back from another station. It hit that switch, but couldn't get through it because it was open. If there had been no other metal in the neighborhood that current would have stayed where it was. But there was that ground wire in Dick's hand—eight inches from the switch. That current—eleven thousand volts of it—streaked out toward that wire with all the force of a thunderbolt.

Dick felt himself being picked up off his feet and hurled through the air in one direction, while his partner, standing near by, was hurled in the other. Each of them landed twenty feet away, on opposite sides of the switch. Dick's eyes had been opened by the terrific blast of the power. He felt the floor come up and hit him, and then the next thing he remembers is staggering to his feet and seeing his partner, forty feet away, doing the same thing.

His face was scorched and burned from the terrific heat. He put his hand to his head—and it was bald! Every bit of hair was burned, not only from his head, but from his arms as well. "That current," he says, "had given me a heat shave, cleaner than any barber could have done it, and all in a fraction of a second."

Dick walked back to the switch from which those deadly volts had broken loose. His partner came over and joined him. The switch was nothing but a mass of molten metal. Lumps of hot copper lay on the floor. The big insulators were gone. There wasn't so much as a sign of them. They had been blown to dust.

Lucky to Escape With Their Lives.

Says Dick: "Even the fireproof barrier had whole bricks burned out of it. Both my partner, and I considered ourselves mighty lucky to get out with our lives. I don't believe either one of us had taken much of the voltage through our bodies. I escaped because I was holding the ground wire at a place that was well insulated. Had my hand been in any other place, or had there been a slight leak in the wire, I would unquestionably have gone up in a cloud of smoke."

So, if you were to give Dick a choice between a bunch of loose lions and ten or fifteen thousand loose volts, I have a hunch that he'd take the lions every time. There may not be much left of you when a crowd of lions get through looking you over, but there'd be a darned sight more than the volts would leave.

Strength of a Lion
Naturalists have seen a lion leap over a nine-foot wall with a calf in its mouth, honeybees extinguish the flame of a candle with the breeze created by their wings, and a secretary bird, four feet high, kill a venomous snake with one blow of its foot.—Collier's Weekly.

Indians Used China Brier
The China brier, which grows in Florida, was used by the Seminole Indians to prepare a dish called conito, or contee, which was made from the starchy roots of the China brier. The roots were chopped up and pounded in a mortar. Then this meal was mixed with water and strained through a basket. The sediment, when dry, was a red meal. This meal was mixed with honey and warm water. It jelled as it cooled and was eaten with corn bread or cakes.

The Dominican Republic
The Dominican republic has both historic and scenic attractions. Ciudad Trujillo, formerly Santo Domingo, is the oldest European settlement in this hemisphere, having been founded by Bartolome, a brother of Christopher Columbus, in 1496.

Snakes Rattles Don't Count
A prevalent and popular notion is that the age of a rattlesnake may be told by counting the rings or buttons of the rattle, each one of which is supposed to represent a year in his life. This is entirely erroneous, says a writer in the Detroit News, because they actually take on an average of three each year. Vibration at the tip is so pronounced that very frequently a segment is broken off and lost. Some small specimens carry more buttons than some twice their size.

Lesson for February 6

CHALLENGING THE SOCIAL ORDER

LESSON TEXT—Mark 2:13-22. GOLDEN TEXT—I came not to call the righteous, but sinners—Mark 2:17. PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Had Dinner With Matthew. JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus Passed By, Intermediate and Senior Topic—Helping by Being Friendly. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Crusading for a Christian Society.

"Crusading for a Christian Society," is one of the topics assigned for consideration today. Everyone who is right thinking would be glad if the social order of which we are all a part might be made Christian, for it is far from it now. But foredoomed to failure are the attempts to Christianize society by some great program of "social regeneration." God's way is to save the individual who makes up the social order. When a man is right with God he will be right with his fellow man.

The Scripture lesson for today is full of outstanding spiritual principles of the greatest practical import to both Christians and the unconverted. It should be studied by the guidance of the Holy Spirit and taught in his power.

I. One Sinner Becomes a Servant (vv. 13, 14).

Capernaum was so situated that it provided an excellent location for the collection of the Roman taxes which the Jews so hated. There at the "receipt of custom" sat a Jew named Levi, who was no doubt despised by his neighbors because he had joined in this distasteful business. To him came the gracious Lord with the invitation, "Follow me." How different would be the history of the cause of Christ on earth if every other man who thus was called had done likewise. To follow the Master means sacrifice and breaking with the old life, but it also means peace and glory.

II. Many Sinners Meet the Lord (v. 15).

Levi, who now becomes Matthew, showed his love for the Lord by desiring that his friends might also meet him. So he prepared a dinner for them in his own house, to which he also invited Jesus.

It is always dangerous for a Christian to maintain social contact with his former companions in sin, if he does so for his own enjoyment or advantage. But to be their friends that one may win them to Christ, that is most desirable.

III. Some Eighteen Folk Miss the Lord (vv. 16, 17).

Sin is an unspeakably horrible thing that separates men from God, but it is not an insuperable barrier, for the moment a man confesses his sin and calls on the Saviour he is saved. But self-righteousness—that is the impassable barrier. God can do nothing for the man who rests his hope of salvation on his own good character, high morality, and respectable position in society.

IV. Fasting and Feasting—When and Why (vv. 18-20).

God established one fast day for Israel. They established many, especially the Pharisees. Religion that loses its spiritual life and power clings with tenacity to outward observances and symbols.

Should one never fast? Yes, to the true follower of Jesus there come times when the urgency of soul concerning the problems of one's own life, the lives of others, the needs of the world, shuts the door of interest to anything as ordinary as food for the body.

Feasting and rejoicing—these are spiritual and uplifting; Christianity is a joyful faith. It is not to be hidden in damp, dark cloisters; it thrives in the sunshine, in the happy laughter of a child, in the cheerful shout of the saint. The Church is the Bride of Christ. If the friends of the bridegroom were to rejoice (v. 19), should not the Bride shout for joy?

V. New Things versus Old Things (vv. 21, 22).

The Pharisees wanted the gospel of grace to conform to the narrow channels of their interpretation of the law. Was not the law good? Yes, Jesus said he came not to destroy it, but to fulfill it (Matt. 5:17). He bore the curse of the law that we might be free (Gal. 3:13, 14). But he also brought in the new covenant of assurance and grace. The mixing of grace and law, or the effort to do so, has continued even to our day. Let us be clear on that point—we are saved by grace, not by the works of the law (Eph. 2:8, 9). We work because we are saved, not in order to be saved.

Prayer

If the eye is fixed on God, thought may roam where it will without irreverence, for every thought is then converted into a prayer.

Need Exercising

The only way to restore a weakened will is by exercising itself in details of duty.

Constant Joy

"Rejoice evermore," says the apostle; let your joy be constant and durable.

Why of Hollywood

Movie companies first settled in Hollywood in 1910 for two reasons. Early movies were made in sunlight, and Hollywood, then a small suburb of Los Angeles, offered plenty. Secondly, that region had a greater variety of free scenery than any other in the United States. Today Hollywood, while officially the "movie capital," is well settled and many studios have located in Los Angeles proper or in other suburbs.

Does a Big Job

Advertising of canned fruits and vegetables created demand, produced competition, made large and economical production possible, provided markets for the farmers and owners of orchards, and jobs for many thousands of people. The consumer profits by better quality and lower prices. Without advertising, these things could not have happened.

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

A Winter Salad.—Chopped raw cabbage, apple and raisins, served with mayonnaise, make a delicious winter salad.

Hanging Out Clothes.—Before hanging clothes on the line in freezing weather, put pins on clothes in the house, then snap on line with double clothes pins.

Judging Cod.—Cod should be judged by the redness of the gills, the whiteness, stiffness and firmness of the flesh, and the clear freshness of the eyes. These are the infallible proofs of its being good. The whole fish should be thick and firm.

Nut Cakes.—One-half cup of butter, three-quarter cup sugar, one-third cup milk, two eggs, one and one-third cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder, one-half teaspoon salt, one cup almonds, blanched and cut in pieces. Cream butter, add sugar and continue beating. Add well beaten yolks and then milk, sifted dry ingredients and nuts alternately. Fold in stiffly beaten whites. Bake in individual tins 20 minutes in a hot oven. Plain icing, sugar or nuts can finish off cup cakes with the proper touch.

To Bake Potatoes.—Potatoes will bake more quickly if cut in halves. Melt a little butter in a baking pan, place halved potatoes cut side down in it and bake.

Work on Yourself

There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may.—R. L. Stevenson.

Pepsodent with IRIUM makes ugly surface-stains go

Irium contained in BOTH Pepsodent Tooth Powder and Pepsodent Tooth Paste

There are dentifrices and dentifrices on the market, but there's only one dentifrice that contains that marvelous new tooth cleanser IRIUM—and that's PEPSODENT. So what? So this Irium is so remarkable in helping Pepsodent safely brighten teeth—in helping Pepsodent gently brush away stubborn surface-stains—that Pepsodent containing Irium has taken the country by storm!... Why not at least try PEPSODENT, and learn what Irium can do for you? Remember—It works SAFELY, contains NO BLEACH, GRIT, FUMES!

In the midst of the snow and icy blasts, our artist friend took a few days off last week to visit his folks back home in the hill country. While there he participated in the skating party, and made the sketch. We see several bad mistakes, however. Can you find them? Answers will be found above.

Profits, Safety, Service, Charges.

Banking is a business. Like every business it is operated for profit. Unlike other businesses, however, if a bank is unprofitable, it is unsound. Your grocer can close his doors and quit when business falls—your bank cannot close lest the entire community suffer severe loss.

Your bank sells service—at a profit that is fair to all. This profit is shown in two forms—interest on loans and service charges. If your account contains sufficient money to be profitable from interest derived from loans made with it, you pay no charge. Otherwise you pay your share for safe banking by a service charge.

THESE CHINESE

—Believe it or not Bob Ripley tells this one: He says if all the Chinese were to pass a given point, the line would never stop marching. Somebody asked him how the Chinks would multiply by so doing. "Well, these Chinese are pretty damn clever," laughed Ripley.

By golly, it is chilly weather we're havin' for the past week. We must be getting the aftermath of the eastern cold wave, we're thinkin'.

—And lend thine ear, while your correspondent gives the low-down on matters of pro and con—mostly "con."

So, Your Commentator sits up at the case, with type-stick and 18-m composing rule in hand—without "copy," and spits out what's on his mind.

Jack Benny, the Radio Comedian, really has a 1923 Maxwell automobile—Jack bought it for $145 from a California owner. So, next Sunday when you hear the Benny broadcast, remember that what he relates in praise of his beloved Maxwell is nothin' but the truth—SI, Senyor.

President Roosevelt seems to be getting in bad by making the recent assertion to "Raise Wages and Lower Prices." Consequently the stock market went down.

FOR THE YEAR 1938

Things we would like to see transpire in 1938:

That times would get better. The Ancient Lava Flow or Malpais made a National Monument.

Highway No. 54 (Tularosa) all paved, so that we could make the trip to El Paso in comfort.

We would like to see this town a thriving, prosperous little city of 10,000. Any objections?

To see the government take hold of the Cravens' Bat Cave and the Cavern on the Sayres Crockett ranch, and advertise the same as two wonders of nature.

To see Carrizozo the tourists' paradise.—And why not?

We'll write to Pres. Roosevelt and see what can be done about the matter of too much sunshine. As the Dutchman says, "enough is enough, but too much is plenty!"—We have reference to the everlasting sunshine in Carrizozo. It certainly gets monotonous.

Wonder what has become of Molly of Fibber McGee & Molly. Their radio act seems dull without her.—But Amigo Fibber still says at the close of his skit, "Good night, Molly."

Wish there'd be an old-fashioned eastern snowfall next Christmas Eve.

That China would defeat Japan.

That we'd have a white heavy-weight boxing champion—either Braddock, Schmeling or Tony Farr.

That radio station KGGM at Albuquerque would increase their power, and join the Columbia Broadcasting Network.

So, Adios from the Land of Mesana (tomorrow) too much sunshine, turquois sky, and romance.

Mountain Lion Killed
At Kudner Ranch

Ed Fitzpatrick and Maurice Sandoval killed a mountain lion in the big draw on the Kudner ranch. They trailed him with hounds from early morning from until about two o'clock in the afternoon before the dogs treed him. It took several well-directed shots to bring him down. About 10 o'clock they found where he had killed a deer. The mountain lion was an old offender, and had killed numerous calves on nearby ranches. He measured approximately six feet from tip to tip, weighing 187 pounds.

Word reached here from Sierra Madre, California, the latter part of last week, to the effect that Julian Leal had passed away at that place. Mr. Leal was an old-timer of Lincoln County and his many friends are sad to learn of his demise. He was a brother-in-law to Fred and Louis Lalone.

Augustus Hines

Last Saturday, Jan. 22, Augustus Hines (colored) passed away at his ranch home near Ancho. Mr. Hines was born at Euflalia, Alabama, in 1877. He moved to El Paso in 1906, and joined the Second Baptist Church that same year. He moved here 18 years ago and settled on a ranch southeast of Ancho. Gus, as he was known to all, was a faithful Sunday School and church worker — well respected by all who knew him and greatly admired among the young people at Sunday School. Rev. Crawford of Carrizozo rendered a very impressive message. To his wife, three sisters and two brothers, the people of Ancho and vicinity extend their deepest regrets.

—Mrs. Geo. Goodson.

The Nazarene Church at Capitan was crowded at the last meeting of the Lincoln County monthly singing. Fourteen song leaders were in attendance and 12 communities represented. The next meeting will be held at Ancho the 2nd Sunday in February at 2 p. m. Everyone invited.

NOTICE

We wish to state that we are still in business and intend to stay, and will continue to give the people of Carrizozo the same service they have been getting in the past over our lines. Your business will be appreciated.
