BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB

There was a good gathering at the club meeting at the S. P. Hotel Wednesday evening; 16 members and 8 visitors. Geologist Gould, Wildlife Technician McDougal and Bernie Caton, brother of our high school coach, all of whom made interesting talks. Dr. McDougal opened by saying that they had enjoyed their visit here and thanked the club for courtesies shown. Dr. Gould and himself and further added that the reception given them was somewhat out-of-the-ordinary, as most of the time they had to be in CCC Camps or be content with remaining in the mountains. But here, he said they were like the blind man in the nudist camp; they just had to 'feel their way'.

Dr. McDougal explained the wildlife in different parts of the state, more especially where lava beds exist, saying that in the White Sands he found rats and mice which were snow white, on the range they were grey and in our lava beds, he found them to be decidedly black.

Dr. Gould gave a review of the lava beds over the state, showed the different formations of the same, but added that as we had no history whatever of the volcanic eruption here, it could be guess work as to how long ago, the same happened. He added that if a man should make the statement that it happened 10,000 years ago, he would not dispute it. Messrs. Gould and McDougal left yesterday morning for the Craven's Bat Cave, accompanied by E. M. Brickley, secretary of the club, after which they went on to Socorro.

HISTORICAL JARABE

Behind the colorful Mexican hat dance, which is to be given tonight, is a very interesting history. The Jarabe embodies the blending of the Spanish rhythm with the native Mexican steps. The interpretation of this dance is necessarily based on the fact that it is a courtship dance. In it, the charro expresses his enthusiasm for the girl he has chosen as his future mate. She in turn, returns the interest, by playing shy and hard to approach. The tempo slows up for the expression rhythmic movements of the dance and finally, when the hat exchanges hands (or heads) the betrothal is complete.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Nickels of Ancho were here Tuesday, and attended the Masonic banquet and entertainment Tuesday night. Mrs. Nickels was featured on that occasion, being an accomplished violinist.

Baseball Practise

Manager Harry Miller authorizes us to pass the word to all ball players, non-players, fans and all others interested in a good ball club for Carrizozo, to come out in a group to the local park next Sunday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, for a little friendly get-together, baseball practise and a resumption of acquaintances of seasons past. The idea is to arouse keen baseball enthusiasm among players as well as fans. Mr. Miller wants everyone to join in this big family reunion, take a hand in the practise (if you so desire) or sit around and discuss with your girl or boy friend, your batter-half or side-kick, the merits and demerits of each ball player. In other words, offer a little friendly criticism which you honestly believe will be for the advancement of the team. Harmony will prevail and we must attend and show Manager Miller, the boys and the American Legion, that we are backing their efforts 100%. It won't be long now, so let's get started!

MEMORY'S LANE

A. L. Burke

A few days ago, the writer received the sad news of the passing of one of his old friends and former associates, W. J. Wohlwend, who died March 24, at his home in South Pasadena, Calif. It was about 50 years ago that the writer first met Mr. Wohlwend, who was at that time foreman of the Burlington Hawkeye, a daily newspaper of Burlington, Iowa. Our acquaintance ripened into a deep and lasting friendship. We were associated together in fraternal, social and community affairs until we were separated by the writer leaving Burlington, after which we lost track of each other until he was attracted by reading an article from this paper and re-printed in the Burlington Hawkeye Gazette, concerning the early days when Buffalo Bill had but a small show and gave a performance at Grimes' Opera House.

Through that medium, we were again connected and since which time we have met again and again, through articles and correspondence. People who have read this column in the different issues have no doubt read of the above named gentleman and of his remarkable career in the newspaper profession. He had three brothers, George, Charles and Henry, all of whom were printers and all began in the profession in their father's printing establishment. Billy was the oldest of the boys, yet he survived them all and at the time of his death, he was nearing his 80th milestone.

The passing of Wm. J. Wohlwend, removes from the printing gallery, one of the foremost characters of the early days in old Burlington and when '30' came to him, it took away one of the most colorful personages of the profession from the Hawk-eye state. To our readers who, of course, never met him, this article has little meaning, but to the writer, his old friend of the early days and his lasting friendship, it means everything. The writer loved him for his strong Christian character, manliness, charitable disposition and his firm stand on matters of importance in which he never failed to have the proper viewpoint. To Mrs. Wohlwend and the children who survive him, the Carrizozo Outlook and the A. L. Burke family tender the deepest sympathy.

Mrs. Alvin Carl is expected home the latter part of the week from Hot Springs, where she has been visiting her mother and relatives. Alvin is a clerk at the Paden Drug Store.

Julia Romero, Emma Jean Krohne and Nurse Wally left the latter part of the week for San Francisco to attend the Exposition.

Paden's Drug Store has undergone remodeling this week. The three large windows facing the postoffice have been bricked up to allow more shelf room.

MASONIC ENTERTAINMENT

The Masonic Party mentioned in this paper last week, and scheduled for Tuesday, April 11, was a success from every point of view.

The Masons sponsored the event; C. P. Huppertz, Chairman, appointed E. M. Brickley as Toastmaster; Mrs. C. P. Huppertz prepared a splendid dinner which the committee served to the guests, consisting of Stars, members of Masonic families, and friends, led by Mrs. Lemon.

After the dinner which was served at 8:30, Masons and Stars repaired to the Temple lodge room, where Mrs. Betty Nickels entertained them with violin solos, Mrs. W. C. Hendren gave two piano solos, after which the entire audience which numbered 58, joined in singing old familiar songs.

Following the program, those who desired, were taken to the banquet room where bridge and other games were played. It was truly a home gathering and carried out the intention of the committee to cement the ties of community friendship more closely together.

HEADLINES FROM THE LIVES OF PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELF!

"Terror in a Tent"

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

You know, there's always a lot of hard luck on camping trips. Somebody is sure to get sunburned, and somebody else always steps on a rusty nail or clips himself with the hatchet while chopping wood for the fire. The bird who is doing the cooking burns half the food, and just when you're comfortably settled and getting along fine, Farmer Jones comes along and orders you to move on.

Camping trips just breed hard luck, but the one Syd Rapoport went on was the champion hoodoo camping trip of them all. It started dealing out tough breaks before Syd and his pals even got started.

Syd lives in Brooklyn, N. Y. It was in the summer of 1935 that he and half a dozen other lads began planning that camping trip. They had picked a spot upstate, in the neighborhood of Poughkeepsie, and were all ready to go. Then, two days before they were due to leave, there was a terrific rainstorm in New York, and, after inquiring about the weather, they learned that it was the same upstate.

The gang decided to go anyway—at least, some of them did. When the day of the big trip rolled around one fellow had the mumps. Another was laid up with an infected foot, and two other fellows had mothers who said they couldn't go camping in such weather because they'd catch their death of pneumonia sleeping on damp ground. The trouble had started early, but it was nothing to what Syd was to get into before that trip was many days older.

The Hikers Find a Camping Site.

"There were only two brothers and myself left," says Syd, but we went anyway. The brothers were Harold and Jerry. The three of them took a boat to Bear Mountain and then started to hike, with two tents and blankets and equipment on their backs. After a day on the road—and Syd doesn't say whether they walked or thumbed rides—they reached the spot they had chosen and picked a camping site. The ground was wet, and the earth was loose. They had a little trouble putting up their two small tents. But finally everything was shipsape. They got a fire going, cooked a meal, and when they had eaten it they were ready to turn in. Jerry and Harold occupied one tent, and Syd slept alone in the other.

Finally he had a horrible dream.

Syd dropped off to sleep, but he didn't sleep very well. Finally, he had a horrible dream—a dream that something cold and slimy was crawling over his arm. The dream woke him up, and as he came slowly to his senses he realized that that dream was a cold, hard reality. Something cold and slimy was resting against his arm.

In an instant Syd was wide awake. A full moon was shining and its bright light streamed in through the open flap of the pup tent. In that light Syd saw something that made his blood run cold. His arm was lying outside the blanket and a snake had crawled up and nestled against it. And Syd recognized that snake for a poisonous copperhead!

Frozen With Fear, He Cannot Move.

Says he: "My first impulse was to jump and scream. But I couldn't have moved to save my life. I was frozen stiff with fear. The moon bathed the head of the snake with light, and as I lay there stiff and trembling it crawled up to my shoulder. A cold sweat broke out on my forehead. Now I began to realize that I didn't dare move, even if I could. One move would cause the reptile to strike."

But it seemed to Syd that he could hardly keep himself from moving. Somehow he managed to lie there stiff and still. The hours rolled on. Syd doesn't know how many of them went by. Each minute seemed like a year and each second was like a week of torture. "I wanted to scream," he says. "I felt as if I could control myself no longer. At last the sky began getting gray, and off in the distance I could hear some farmer's rooster crowing. Then, again, the snake shifted its position. This time it came to rest with its head across my gullet."

Now Syd was afraid to swallow for fear of disturbing the snake. He felt his spine begin to creep and his hair felt as if it were standing up on his head. It was getting lighter now, and Syd was able to distinguish objects around him that he had lost sight of when the moon went down. Still it was a long time before dawn, and his only hope was to lie still until his pals awoke.

The Snakes Smelled of Rotten Cucumbers.

He could see the snake clearly now. And then, out of the corner of his eye, he saw another—and another. There were a bunch of them in the tent. And two of them were over four feet long. "I couldn't see the others very clearly," he says, "for I didn't dare turn my head and it strained my eyes to look at them from my position. I was beginning to shiver. My muscles were cramped and saliva dripped from my mouth. The snakes smelled of rotten cucumbers and the odor sickened me. But the sun was coming up, and I could hear movements in the other tent. That renewed my courage."

Harold and Jerry were up. A couple of times they walked past Syd's tent, but they didn't look in. Then Jerry glanced through the open flap and his eyes froze on the terrifying sight. Syd says he owes his life to those two brothers. He thought Jerry was going to scream, but he didn't. He remained cool and so did Harold. The pair of them stole up behind Syd's tent, gathered some damp hay from a field and set it afire. Huge billows of smoke poured through the tent.

"I began choking," says Syd, "but so did the snakes. They moved, and I lay back and breathed a sigh of relief. After a few minutes I went outside, picked a spot in the sun and dozed off. It was seven hours before I woke up again. And if you want to know what a nightmare is like, just ask me. I've had dozens of them since that night."

Ukulele Is of European Origin; Known for Ages

The ukulele is essentially a small guitar with four strings and was introduced to the Hawaiians in the latter part of the eighteenth century by Portuguese sailors. So far as known, the guitar itself is of European origin, observes a writer in the Indianapolis News.

In the Royal library at Stuttgart, Germany, is a manuscript dated 1180 A. D. which contains a representation of the instrument. The Hawaiians imitated and modified the smaller guitar of the Portuguese and popularized it under the name "ukulele." The same instrument, particularly adapted to the wistful minors peculiar to the native music of Hawaii, became an instrument of jazz in the United States. "Ukulele" is a native word, being derived from "uku" (flea or insect) and "lele," (to jump). Thus "ukulele" literally means "jumping flea," a name no doubt suggested by the motions of the fingers of the players over the instrument. The most common English pronunciation of the name is "yoo-koo-lay-le," although "oo-koo-lay-lay" more nearly approaches the Hawaiian pronunciation. Hawaiian ukuleles are generally made of koa, a fine-grained wood obtained from the native tree called "acacia, koa."

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: My living room is looking very smart and gay; the clear sketches on how to fit and make slipcovers in your Book 1, SEWING, for the Home Decorator, have been a great help. "I think you would especially like one slipcover I have made. While shopping in a drapery department I found some braid 1 1/2 inches wide in bright blue, green and red. I was so attracted by it that I had to find a way to use it. The result is a chair covered in plain blue glazed chintz with green seam bindings and the blue, green and red braid around the cushion and the bottom ruffle. It is very stunning and everyone admires it. My problem now is keeping my slipcovers firmly anchored in place. How should this be done?"

Here is a sketch of the chair that was inspired by a shopping tour. I have also sketched a method that is often used by professionals for anchoring slipcovers.

Give your house a fresh start with new curtains; slipcovers, lampshades and other smart new touches which you will find in Book 1, SEWING for the Home Decorator. Book 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, illustrates ninety embroidery stitches and many ways to use them. They are 25 cents each; with each order for both books, Rag Rug Leaflet is included FREE. TIPS to Gardeners

Fertilizer Usage

GARDENS can't go on producing excellent flowers and vegetables year after year without an application of fertilizer now and then. Because stable manure is difficult to obtain, a complete commercial fertilizer recommended by your dealer will prove most satisfactory. Before applying fertilizer, however, give consideration to a few simple, practical hints.

First, be cautious! Never apply fertilizer recklessly or over-abundantly. Don't be like the man who saw a neighbor get good results from a sparing use of fertilizer. He proceeded to apply 10 times as much, but expecting 10 times as good results—but his garden proved worthless.

Broadcast the complete fertilizer over the soil 10 days before planting, using about three pounds per square rod. Three or four weeks after planting, if the garden seems a bit backward, apply a side dressing. Sprinkle fertilizer lightly alongside the rows, about six inches from the plants, then cultivate. Apply only from one to two pounds per square rod of garden.

From Happiness—

"As you hold loving thoughts toward every person and animal and even toward plants, stars, oceans, rivers and hills, and as you are helpful and of service to the world, so you will find yourself growing more happy each day, and with the happiness comes health and everything you want." —Luther Burbank.

Smiles

Sooner the Better
"What was the concert like that Hammetonga, the pianist, gave?"
"It was over by nine o'clock."
"And did you like it?"
"Oh, very much. My only fear was that it would go on until ten."

Trying Him Out
"Mary, this morning I saw the milkman kiss you. Tomorrow I will take the milk myself."
"Very good, ma'am. It will be interesting to see if he's true to me."

We aren't all good judges— but we lay down the law just the same.

And It Worked?
"How did you like the sample of my homemade marmalade I sent you?"

"Was that marmalade? Oh, my dear, I'm so sorry. My little boy is, using it for sticking stamps in his album."

Who knows most about Building cars?

Ford has built more than one-third of all the automobiles ever built in the world

THERE are more Ford cars in use today than any other make. And there are more Ford V-8s than any other 8-cylinder car.

The 1939 Ford V-8 represents the broadest experience in building cars any manufacturer ever had. You will find values in it far beyond what any other maker can put into a car at the low Ford price.

Ford performance, traditional for a generation, has reached new heights in the 1939 V-8.

And now Ford style leadership is equally outstanding. "The smartest cars on the road" is the way owners describe their new Fords. Smartest in action. Smartest in appearance. Leaders, as they deserve to be.

Look at these FORD FEATURES

- STYLE LEADERSHIP—The luxury car in the low-price field.
- V-TYPE 8-CYLINDER ENGINE—Eight cylinders give smoothness. Small cylinders give economy.
- HYDRAULIC BRAKES—Easy-act—quick, "straight" stops.
- TRIPLE-CUSHIONED COMFORT—New flexible roll-edge seat cushions, soft transverse springs, double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers.
- STABILIZED CHASSIS—No front-end bobbing or dipping. Level starts, level stops, level ride.
- SCIENTIFIC SOUNDPROOFING—Noise hushed for quiet ride.
- LOW PRICES—Advertised prices include many items of desirable equipment.

Olds Sales Advance 60%

A sharp rise in retail deliveries of Oldsmobile sixes and eights during the last 10 days of March, brought national sales volume for that period to 6,382 units, an increase of 60 percent over sales in the previous 10 days, according to D. E. Kalston, general sales manager. Kalston added that the used car situation among the Oldsmobile retail organization is equally bright. Sales of used cars so far show a substantial increase over the corresponding period of 1938.

BANKING LOOKS AHEAD

Thanks to Thrift

For the native thrift of its people, our country has much to be thankful. We have the world's highest standard of living, not by chance, but because American men and women have set aside the money needed to build industries and develop new ideas. We have much to be hopeful for in the future, when you consider that some 44 million depositors have built a thrift reserve of nearly 24 billion dollars in their banks. We encourage thrift and urge you to start building for the future with the help of an account at this bank.

Weakness of Unsound Legislation Does Not Remain Concealed Long

Old NRA Is Striking Example of Careless Lawmaking; Now Comes Up the Unworkable Conditions of Guffey Law That Has Cost Coal Industry Millions.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—Unsound and unworkable laws have a way of concealing their weaknesses for varying lengths of time. It seems to be true, however, that those weaknesses, like one's sins, will be found out. This is especially true of written laws that are predicated upon a formula of how things ought to be done, rather than upon the basis of known acts and customs and living conditions of the people who make up our nation.

Take the old NRA, for example. Its glaring weaknesses and impossible prescriptions were discovered rather soon by the persons and businesses who had to abide by the terms of that law. It was not so long, however, before most of us discovered that the artist who had sketched the original design of the blue eagle had made a mistake. You will recall, of course, that the design had 13 feathers in one wing and 12 in the other. That was bound to make the bird fly in a circle, and how true it was of the law, itself! Even, then, there were many persons who believed the law was not given a sufficient trial before the Supreme court mowed it down.

Among those who held a conviction that NRA would work was Senator Guffey, the Pennsylvania New Dealer. It is the same Senator Guffey who attempted to destroy, politically, all Democrats who disagreed with President Roosevelt—tried to "read them out of the party" in a radio address.

Senator Guffey, with the aid of John L. Lewis and the C. I. O., pushed through congress the so-called Guffey-little NRA coal law. The coal industry was divided in sentiment about the bill, as I remember the legislative battle, but Senator Guffey won. There came about a national bituminous coal commission, with power to fix prices, with power to compel a lot of other things, including the right of punishment under other laws if a coal mine owner should commit the horrible crime of selling below cost in order to get rid of his coal.

Guffey Law Cost the Coal Industry Many Millions

The first law so enacted was mowed down by the Supreme court just the same as the original and big brother NRA. Senator Guffey tried again. And so for two years, or thereabouts, there has been a law in force that applied the same principles of regimentation as NRA to the coal industry, and during that time, according to official reports, the soft coal industry has lost money. It lost $37,000,000 in 1937, and it lost about $59,000,000 last year, the coal commission has reported.

Naturally, the coal mine owners are not taking this loss without a squawk. It is not a great deal more than a chirp, however, because the production of coal dropped from 442,000,000 tons in 1937 to 342,000,000 tons in 1938. That is pretty rapid reducing, even if the industry were really fat.

In consequence of this, and other conditions affecting labor and property, Representative Allen, a Pennsylvania Democrat, has introduced in the house a bill to reconstruct the Guffey law. His proposal would eliminate the price fixing; it would eliminate the special tax on the coal industry for upkeep of the high powered, but more or less futile, coal commission, and it would place the industry again on a basis where its individual mines would be competing for public patronage instead of inducing bootlegging of coal.

I mentioned above that the industry had lost money. Well, you and I, as buyers and consumers of coal, not to mention the thousands of great manufacturing plants using coal, also lost money because of the Guffey law. We lost money because of the price conditions. We would be penalized in a big way if the coal commission could ever have accomplished the almost insurmountable job of establishing a set of federally fixed prices. It would have cost us money because we would pay the price that was fixed, and that price would have to be high enough to allow a profit for the lowest grade and most inefficient mine operator.

Another Tug of War Between Coal Miners and Operators

One of the reasons the mine owners lost money was because many who supported the law were convinced it would mean increased wages for the workers. The United Mine Workers of America, headed by Mr. Lewis, believed so, and two years ago they demanded and obtained an increase of 10 per cent. During the debate on the bill in congress it was talked freely that the miners could get a wage increase and it could be passed on to the consumers. This would be true, it was said, because the coal commission would fix the price and the selling price, as fixed by law, would have to be above production costs. Certainly, labor's wage is a part of production costs, and the public would not feel it. The contract then negotiated expired recently and a new one is now being considered in the regular tug of war that occurs between miners and operators every two years. In the meantime, however, things happened to labor in the soft coal mines. As I mentioned above, there was a decline in production of coal. It figures out at 22 per cent. That obviously means that, while labor obtained an increase of one-tenth in the rate of pay, it worked only four-fifths as much time according to the records available to me. I fail to see where labor gained from the law. Moreover, from the federal relief authorities I learn that living conditions and buying power among the persons living in coal mining areas have declined almost in direct ratio to decline in production of coal.

With respect to the added taxation placed upon the owners of the mines, the surface indications and the original declarations of supporters of the law have proven to be quite misleading. The law required the industry to pay a tax of one cent a ton and to meet assessments to cover the expenses of boards that were set up in the various regional areas. It is easy to calculate that the one cent tax raised $3,420,000 on 342,000,000 tons, produced last year. But that figure does not show the extra assessments that were paid to the regional boards, nor does it reveal that every mine owner had to hire extra clerks in the company offices to take care of all of the various and sundry reports that the national commission and the regional boards saw fit to require.

Simply Became an Added Expense Borne by Industry

Again, it was expected that these costs and taxes would be absorbed—a nice word for concealing the facts from the consumers—in the selling price that was to be fixed. But, as reported earlier, the commission never quite got around to fixing the prices under the current law. Hence, the hundreds of thousands of dollars which the law's sponsors said would be passed on simply became an added expense borne by the industry.

The law has another feature which you and I, as individuals, do not feel directly. It is another one of those concealed things. The law specifies that no contract can be signed between operator and consumer to last for more than 30 days. That is to say, no price can be quoted for more than 30 days in advance. That may not appear important, but it is highly important.

The practice of large users of coal is to enter into a contract for a supply of coal to last, for example, for a whole year's operation. Having such a contract, the owner of the manufacturing establishment, for instance, will be able to know what his fuel costs are when calculating the price of the goods he manufactures and sells. Fuel costs are important, and it therefore becomes plain that large users of fuel have an unknown factor in their expense item for a year's plans. What do they do? They have to estimate that item, and they take the maximum that they can expect to pay for coal—and users of their product have to take that added amount whether in breakfast food or harvesting machinery or railroad freight rates. That one feature of the law alone has completely disorganized the coal industry.

Coal Operators Are Left With Supply in Sizes Not Needed

The 30-day limit also has had an other effect. When a mine owner could make a year's contract or a number of such contracts, he knew whether it was lump coal or stove coal or slack that his customers needed. Without a contract, the big buyers naturally shop around to get the lowest price. A mine operator, therefore, may sell to one firm one month and the next month, some other mine will supply the coal. The result is that one mine may find itself with hundreds of tons, or even thousands of tons, of lump coal when all that can be sold in a given month is slack or stove coal.

Well, it is the ordinary practice in business that if too large a stock is on hand, prices are reduced to induce someone to buy. But not so in the soft coal industry under the Guffey law. If the price is reduced below the actual cost of mining, costs approved by a bunch of accountants sitting here in Washington, the law steps in—not the Guffey law, but two other laws. They are the federal trade commission act and the Robinson-Patman act. Under either one of these laws, the mine operator who cuts prices below costs becomes tagged as a very bad boy who must be punished by fine or imprisonment. So, the unwanted coal lies in piles beside the mine, crumbling and becoming of less value daily as the weather takes its toll.

Speaking of Sports Diamond World Readies Plans For Centennial

By ROBERT McSHANE

"PLAY ball—American!" That command keynotes the campaign launched by baseball's National Centennial commission—a campaign to celebrate the hundredth birthday of baseball—America's own game.

Focal point of the celebration will be Cooperstown, N. Y., birthplace of baseball in 1839. It was there that General Abner Doubleday originated the first game of baseball 160 years ago. Doubleday, who was then a youngster of 29, laid out the first diamond and devised the rules which sired the most truly American game of all.

From this back-lot game for boys, baseball has grown in its hundred years to the stature of the greatest team sport in the world. It has come to personify Americanism everywhere, creating and fostering the American qualities of sportsmanship, team-play and aggressiveness.

Baseball's history is inextricably linked with that of the Civil war. When the Union soldiers marched off to the battlefields they took their baseball bats along. War records include reports of baseball games behind the fronts and in prison camps during the long, bitter struggle between the North and South. When the war ended, soldiers scattered homeward, spreading baseball to the four winds.

Rags to Riches

Carried along by the love of the game itself, thousands of American boys have followed it as a profession, rising to fame and wealth on the strength of their batting and fielding, the cunning of their throwing arm.

Success stories in baseball are numberless. The "Big Bam," Babe Ruth, left a Baltimore orphanage and slugged his way to the largest salary in the history of diamond warfare. In his greatest year the orphanage boy drew an $80,000 paycheck—$5,000 more than the President of the United States—because he could drive a baseball farther than any other man, and because people would come from miles away to see him.

Peer-boy-to-rich-man is a beaten path in baseball. Almost every player in baseball's Hall of Fame had an humble beginning. This Speaker, the great outfielder, was once a telephone lineman at a dollar-a-day salary. Ty Cobb was a Georgia farm boy who earned a million dollars in baseball.

There are 16 major league clubs, about 276 minor league clubs and thousands of semi-pro lines in the U. S. No other game has produced such an army of participants. No other sport has captured and held throughout the years the loyalty and steadfast attendance of baseball's spectators.

Colorful Careers

It would be impossible to dwell on the colorful personalities who have made baseball history, and those who are now adding new chapters. A century of baseball has produced managers, owners and players whose names are written in large letters in the game's archives.

The National Baseball Centennial commission, formed to celebrate the game's hundredth anniversary, includes American leaders from the game itself, from the navy, the army, the stage, radio and war veterans organizations.

Baseball's big birthday party will be joined and celebrated not only by every major and minor league in every big and little city in the country, but also by semi-pro and amateur circuits, prep schools and high schools, the American Legion and hundreds of other organizations. Each community will set its own date for the celebration and make its own plans. Special ceremonies have been arranged by the Legion, sponsor of junior baseball, now in its thirtieth organized year. Each city, town and community is included in the centennial's vast program directed full speed ahead to make 1939 baseball's biggest year.

Territory Reclaimed by France Termed 'Hell Hole of Creation'

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

As northern Africa recently echoed the tramp of mobilizing men, French troops made headlines by marching again into a strip of land on the northeast coast of the Dark Continent which had been under French ownership before. The territory reoccupied was a region between Italian Eritrea and French Somaliland. Little more than 300 square miles in extent, it was ceded by France to Italy in 1935 under an agreement which the Italians themselves repudiated just a few months ago.

The area into which the French are reported to have moved has an important strategic location. It commands the southern outlet of the Red sea at the narrow strait of Bab el Mandeb between Arabia and Africa. Furthermore, it is directly opposite, and only about 10 miles away from, the British-fortified island of Perim, off the coast of southwest Arabia.

Holds Key to Trade Lifelines. Through the bottleneck of Bab el Mandeb sail the ships of four empires, Great Britain, France, The Netherlands and Italy. This strait is the third geographic key, following Gibraltar and the Suez canal, which unlocks the Mediterranean short cut from Europe to East Africa and the Orient. Its treacherous currents have earned it the name "Gate of Tears."

Including the 10-mile stretch of reoccupied territory, the coast of French-Somaliland now overlooks the major portion of the Bab el Mandeb gateway. With the exception of its convenient and strategic situation, however, the additional land has little to commend it. It is hot, dry, and sparsely settled. Under a blistering sun, temperatures rise so high that the struggle merely to exist is an endurance test.

Not a Pleasant Place. Its barren, sandy shores merge, toward the interior, into dry, rocky plateau land with little vegetation. Waterless, except in time of rare rainy-season floods, river beds are usually little more than deep desert ditches. Although the climate is not considered especially unhealthy

The small area in black shows territory reoccupied by France after it had been ceded to Italy under the treaty of 1935, in order to strengthen the defense of Assab. The area covers only about 300 square miles but is of great value for control of the Bab el Mandeb strait.

In this northern section of French Somaliland, the inhabitants are largely Dankali, sometimes called "Black Semites," because of their intermingled Arab and Ethiopian blood.

They earn a precarious living as nomadic herdsmen in the uplands and as fishermen along the shores. Pearl diving is also an important coastal occupation.

Fish are plentiful there and are the chief food for many of the natives, supplemented only by rice, dates, and coffee. In the bush, men add to a scanty food supply goats' milk, and an occasional gazelle brought down by expert marksmanship with sling or dart.

Minorca, Spanish Stronghold Important to World Traders

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

The surrender of Minorca gave the Franco Spain control of the last Loyalist-held island of the Balearic group, off the eastern coast of Spain.

Minorca is the second largest of 15 islands in the Balearics. In an area of less than 300 square miles, it holds in normal times some 45,000 inhabitants.

Strategic stepping stones between Europe and North Africa, the Balearics lie in the path of two imperial sea lanes. Minorca, easternmost of the islands, is a geographic halfway mark between France and her North African possessions. To the south runs the British short-cut to India, by way of Gibraltar and the Suez canal. In addition, on both sides of the island, ships ply direct routes that link the Atlantic ocean with ports of northeast Spain, southern France, and western Italy.

Important in History. To its position on the crossroads of the Mediterranean, Minorca owes an early place in international history. Two centuries before Christ, Mago, brother of the famous Carthaginian general, Hannibal, founded the island's capital of Portus Magonis, now Mahon.

In the war against Rome, the Carthaginians made good use of the Minorcans' special talent for sling warfare. Eventually, however, the Romans took over the island. The Vandals and Moors followed; after which Minorca, with the rest of the Balearics, became a Moorish kingdom—and a pirate stronghold.

Conquered by James I of Aragon in the Thirteenth century, the island was seized by the English five centuries later. In the struggles that followed, Minorca changed hands five more times. It was shifted from French to English to Spanish possession, then returned to England, and was finally turned over to Spain. After the treaty of Amiens in 1802, the entire Balearics became a Spanish island province.

An Island Melting Pot. Modern Minorca shows the effect of its varied occupations. English, Spanish, and Arab types persist, despite the general race mixture. Whitewashed houses and garden walls reveal the Arab influence.

The excellent port of Mahon on the southeast coast suggests the English provinces, with its gleaming brass knockers and lace blinds. Visitors to Minorca's country homes tell of seeing Eighteenth century English furniture and French engravings from the time of the revolution.

On the other hand, Ciudadela, former Moorish and Spanish capital on the west coast, is an old Spanish town. Even the prehistoric past is architecturally represented in Minorca. Mysterious monuments of the earliest inhabitants are the numerous cave dwellings that honeycomb the mountains and the queer-shaped stone structures scattered about the island. In different forms, the latter are known as talayots, taules,

"Bert wasn't in a condition to say much about anything," Hale reminded Ainsworth. "But you must have seen what was going on," he added. "You're not the man to miss anything like that." Then, looking at Ainsworth's lolling figure, his sleekness, his air of well-being, and his Cheshire Cat grin, Hale suddenly lost his temper. "What I shall never be able to understand," he brought out between his teeth, "is why you and Mrs. Spencer Forbes, who knew exactly what was going on, sat back and let it continue. You did know, didn't you?"

"I suppose so, in a way," Ainsworth drawled. "I knew he was scaring young Kneeland into a smash, but I didn't know exactly why he was doing it. Of course I had my theories. I didn't interfere because it was none of my business."

Rex ground his teeth. His brown eyes looked red in the room's shaded light.

"All right," he said. "We'll let it go at that. It wasn't your business, so you didn't interfere. It wasn't my business, either, but I did interfere. I got Craig out. That's all there is to it."

"Oh, come now," Ainsworth was smiling tolerantly. "Don't hold out on me, old man. Tell me how you did it. I'm immensely interested."

Rex had called his temper to heel and it obeyed him.

"I can do that in one sentence," he smiled. "I told several distinguished psychiatrists what was going on, and found out from them how to stop it."

Ainsworth whistled softly. "You mean you actually gave Craig's name to his colleagues, and threatened to have him kicked out of medicine?"

"That's the general idea. I can't go into the details."

Ainsworth's face had grown serious. There was a silence which Hale did not break.

"You certainly went to it, Big Boy," Ainsworth commented. "It must have taken some nerve. I'm quite impressed."

"Thanks. I'm glad you're impressed. Because, to put it frankly, Ainsworth, I'm in good fighting trim now. And I'm taking you on next!"

Ainsworth straightened as if he had been struck. Then, very slowly, he sank back in his chair.

"Just what do you mean by that?" he asked gravely.

Hale grinned.

"That's right. Let's take it coolly. I'm going to tell you exactly what I mean. I mean that we don't like your activities here at Halcyon Camp any better than we liked Craig's. I mean that we're going to stop them."

"We? Who do you mean by 'we'?" Ainsworth almost purred the words.

"By 'we' I mean your host, Casper Kneeland," Hale told him cheerfully, "and myself. Don't cherish the notion that I'm butting in where I have no right to be. I'm Mr. Kneeland's employee, and my principal job was to get rid of the parasites and adventurers who are abusing his hospitality. I've done part of that job. Now I intend to finish it."

"You see, Ainsworth," he went on conversationally, as the other remained silent, "you're not dealing now with a middle-aged and tired man you think you've got a clutch on. You're dealing with a man your own age who knows a whole lot more about you than you think he does. That's quite a different matter."

"You won't find me as easy to get rid of as Craig was," Ainsworth returned coolly. "In fact, my interfering friend, I'm serving notice on you again that I'm staying here all summer."

Rex abook his head.

"You're mistaken," he said gravely. "You're leaving, Ainsworth, and you're leaving almost at once. You're going to be out of here by tomorrow night. What's more, you're going to leave prettily and politely, like a little gentleman. You're going to do it with a smile."

Ainsworth had laid down his cigarette.

"I know you're up against it, Ainsworth," Rex went on. "I've been going into your record. But your misfortunes are no excuse for the things you're doing. We're all up against it more or less, these days. But we don't all go in for a combination of extortion and sadism as you are doing."

"By God, there's a limit to what I'll take from you," Ainsworth said furiously. His self-control had snapped. Rex was glad of it. In one way Ainsworth angry would be easier to handle than Ainsworth calm.

"There may be," he said quietly. "But it hasn't been resolved yet. I've got a lot of things to say to you, and if you're wise you will keep quiet and listen to them. They are of vital interest to you. The first is this. You think you have Kneeland in your power. That may or may not be partly true. But there's one thing that's dead certain. I've got you by the short hairs, I can make you dance to any tune I play. When I remember what you've been doing to poor Kneeland, I'm tempted to play a tune that will give you a nasty dose of your own medicine."

Ainsworth yawned. He had pulled himself together again, and Rex admired his self-control.

"I don't want to seem rude to a guest," he said. "But you make me terribly tired."

"That's nothing to the fatigue you're going to feel a few minutes from now," Hale prophesied. "That will be exhausting."

"I can easily believe you. All right, get on with your story. To be candid I want to go to bed."

"That desire, too, will grow as I proceed. I'll get on with my story all right. I'll mention in passing that it will be an unpleasant one."

"Go to it, go to it," Ainsworth urged wearily.

"If it hadn't been for some little things that happened up in my room," Hale went on smoothly, "I'd have let you off this interview pre-calling his attention to some of his goings on," Hale mentioned in passing. "He changed his mind. I think you will. I'll get on faster if you don't interrupt."

"If there's anything that will make you get on faster, Hale, I'm for it."

Ainsworth was smiling now. He lay back in his chair, relaxed and comfortable, one leg thrown easily over the arm of the chair, his head resting against the padded chintz back.

"Be comfy while you can," Hale commended. "You're in for a jolt pretty soon. As I was saying," he went on, "you wrote your silly threatening notes and you drew your silly cobras and other sketches and left them on my desk. They didn't disturb me in the least, but I was enough interested to have them fingerprinted and get your fingerprints for comparison. You may remember that you tore a page out of your note-book in the medical library one morning, and handed it to me. That was kind of you, because I hadn't been able to get your fingerprints before. The fingerprints on that page were perfect. The choking—I gave Craig. He had earned that on the other counts."

"Hale, you're actually beginning to interest me," Ainsworth was leaning forward, his cigarette out, his face almost alive.

"But it may surprise you to know that I never poisoned that cat," he said.

"You're telling me that?"

"Yes, I'm telling you that. I don't care a damn whether you believe it or not. But as a matter of fact I didn't kill the cat."

"If you didn't, and Craig didn't, who did?"

"How should I know? But it's an interesting point."

It was such an interesting point that they both sat silent for a moment considering it. Then Ainsworth amplified his defense.

"I found the cat, dead, lying back of the big tent at the entrance to the woods," he explained. "It was Monday night. You had gone to the city. I picked it up and carried it to your room as a little surprise for you when you got back. The next day I saw it at the foot of the third floor staircase. I picked it up and got it out of the house to the place where I had found it. That's all I had to do with the matter. I don't kill animals."

Ainsworth got up. "Good night, Hale. Better luck next time you go hunting."

Hale kept his seat.

"Oh, I'm not going yet," he said cheerfully. "I've got a lot more to say. I'm going to be so interesting from now on that when I finally stop you'll be begging me to stay."

"That calls for some imagination," But Ainsworth's eyes were watchful again. He sat down with a shrug and lit a fresh cigarette.

"You're quite right in saying that I wouldn't have anything on you in the matter of the little nuisances you've been committing," Hale admitted. "But, you see, you finished by nearly murdering me. That is something else again."

"Any time you get around to explaining what you're trying to say—" Ainsworth murmured.

"I'm trying to say that you nearly murdered me," Hale repeated patiently. "I'm telling you that when you put that powerful emetic in my water carafe, and I drank the entire glassful, it was touch and go for an hour whether I'd come through it."

"What rot are you talking now?" Ainsworth jerked out. His expression had changed and his watchful eyes never left his companion's face.

"I'll assume that you didn't mean to kill me," Hale said soberly, "any more than you meant to injure me when you printed those anonymous letters. All you meant to do was to make me horribly sick. But you gave me a terrific dose—about four times the usual amount. As it happened, you gave that dose to a man who only a month before had gone through a life-and-death tussle with pneumonia. That pneumonia temporarily weakened my heart. If I hadn't had some brandy where I could reach it instantly," Hale ended very deliberately, "I'd be in my grave tonight and you would be facing a trial for murder. All the evidence is on file against you—the threatening letters, the snake sketch, the tombstone, the skulls, the analysis of the doped water, the fingerprints on the carafe, the statement of the doctor I consulted next day as to the condition of my heart and the effects of such a dose on such a heart. Do you imagine the law would have accepted your explanation that it was all a friendly little joke? Think that over, Ainsworth. Then laugh it off, if you can."

"But you make me terribly tired."

Ainsworth had stopped smoking. He took the cigarette out of his mouth and looked at it thoughtfully. Then he put it back.

"I did have a little fun with you," he said calmly. "I enjoyed thinking up those stunts and putting them over. What of it? It was nothing more than we did at college."

"At prep school, you mean," Rex corrected gently. "It represented about the prep school stage of mental development. You went a few steps further when you put the dead cat in my room. Of course I couldn't have poor Daisy fingerprinted, so I went up to Craig's laboratory and choked him for it. Up till then, you see, I thought he was the man that poisoned animals around here. I was also giving him credit for the notes and sketches and the wasps and all the other things. However, when I had his fingerprints made they vindicated him. What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Explains How Food Can Make You Fat or Thin; Offers Tips on Gaining Weight

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

TO NEARLY every adult, weight is a matter of great concern. Thin people step on the scales in the hope of finding that they have gained a pound or two. Fat people sometimes weigh themselves several times a day, trusting each time that the arrow will point to a slightly lower figure. In many cases, the reason for this absorbing interest is vanity—a desire to look better. But the real objective should be to feel better, for few people realize that to weigh neither too much nor too little is one of the best possible aids to buoyant health. Moreover, the secret of weight control for normal individuals lies in the kind and amount of food consumed.

The science of nutrition teaches us that all body fat originates as surplus fuel—that is, food which has been consumed over and above the immediate requirements of the body machine. It therefore follows that in general the problem of gaining or losing weight is concerned with an increase or reduction in the total fuel value of the diet.

Shortage or Surplus of Fuel
Those who find it difficult, after 30, to avoid taking on excess pounds must learn to reduce the total fuel intake. Otherwise, they may find themselves burdened with a mounting surplus of fat, which not only destroys beauty, but impairs health, and tends to decrease both mental and physical efficiency. On the other hand, those who feel that they must struggle to keep their weight up to normal—who declare that they simply cannot gain, no matter how much they eat—should acquaint themselves with the high-calorie foods and make a persistent effort each day to eat a little more than enough to meet their needs. If a gain is achieved, the result will be well worth the effort. For just an overweight in a handicap to health and efficiency, so have nutritionists observed that physical efficiency may be definitely decreased when the weight falls more than 10 per cent below the average for one's height.

It is often said that it is easier to lose weight than to gain it, and in many cases this is true. For the overweight person who consistently cuts down the fuel value of the diet, should, under normal circumstances, be able to reduce gradually, comfortably and effectively. But the individual who is underweight often has a small appetite and therefore has little desire to eat the increased quantities of food that are required in order to gain.

Influence of Body Build
Nutritionists have observed that many people who find it difficult to gain have a tall, slender type of body build. It has been determined that in people of this type, the digestive tract is usually shorter than in those having a stocky build. Moreover, they tend to be more tense, more active and of a more nervous temperament. As a result, the passage of food through the digestive tract may be so rapid that it leaves the body before all the available nutrients can be utilized. At the same time, these active people tend to burn up more of their food for energy, so it is not surprising that they fail to store body fat, unless the diet is especially planned to meet their needs.

Concentrated Foods Desirable
The well balanced diet, with its full quota of minerals and vitamins is basic to good health for all. But in order to produce a gain in weight, the diet of individuals belonging to the slender type should be composed of easily digested foods, which can be utilized by the body with a minimum of effort; and it should include generous amounts of concentrated and highly nourishing foods.

Included in this classification are eggs, cheese, cream, butter or margarine, bacon, bread, cereals, cream soups, custards, ice cream, rice and tapioca puddings. The addition of two or three glasses of milk to the regular meals will be found useful in increasing the fuel value of the diet. Milk also belongs in the reducing diet, but there it is used to replace other high-calorie foods. Fruit juices will be found useful in stimulating the appetite of those who desire to gain; and the fuel value of these beverages may be increased by the addition of milk or cream.

An Extra Meal
Very often it is possible to get extra nourishment into the diet by way of a light lunch in mid-morning, mid-afternoon or both—provided it does not interfere with the appetite for the regular meals. This may take the form of fruit juice and crackers; malted milk; cocoa, egg nog or plain milk. A between-meal snack is regarded as especially desirable.

Having "A Screw Loose"
The expression "a screw loose" is defined as "something wrong in the condition of things" or "a dangerous weakness in some arrangement" and according to the Oxford English dictionary the phrase had this sense at least since 1810. Later it was used in the sense of "something wrong with a person's credit or reputation" and "a rift between two persons." A derived meaning, the most usual, is "slightly crazy."

Importance of Rest
Since thin people have a tendency to tire quickly, they are advised to get plenty of rest. There should be long hours of sleep at night, and nutritionists have also observed that the food is apt to be better utilized if a short rest is taken before meals.

Questions Answered
Miss G. L. D.—It has been estimated that one quart of fluid skim milk and one-and-one-half ounces of butter may be considered as approximately the equivalent in food value to a quart of fluid whole milk.

It is also notable as a source of the blood-building mineral iron, and of copper, which is necessary for the proper utilization of iron. Muscle meats are considered a significant source of vitamin G, and contain some vitamin B. Pork has a considerably higher content of the B vitamin than lamb, mutton or beef.

SAFETY TALKS

At the Crossroads
THE "dirty work at the crossroads" of fable and story has a counterpart in the pattern of modern automobile accidents. The National Safety Council reports that in 1937 about 58 per cent of all injury accidents in cities occurred at intersections. In rural areas, however, only about 24 per cent of the injury accidents occur at intersections. The council said 82 per cent of the intersection accidents that involved two-motor-vehicles were right-angle collisions.

Why Let Yourself Get Constipated?

Why endure those dull headache days due to constipation, plus the inevitable trips to the medicine chest, if you can avoid both by getting at the cause of the trouble? Your constipation, like that of millions, is due to lack of "bulk" in the diet. The "bulk" way" is to eat Kellogg's All-Bran. This crunchy toasted breakfast cereal is the source of prevention that's worth a pound of emergency relief. It helps you not only to get regular but to keep regular, day after day and month after month, by the pleasantest means you ever know.

Old Indian Mission Near Quebec Still Uses Ancient Silver and Gold Presents

In the Indian village of Loretteville, nine miles west of Quebec, is a treasure which Louis XIV of France and his mother, Anne of Austria, sent to a poor Indian mission 300 years ago, relates a writer in "So You're Going."

Indian Lorette, as they call it in Quebec, is a tiny village where most of the population are Huron Indians. On the one street, half way through the town, is an old church, no larger than a good-sized barn, and seating only about a hundred people. Back of the church and connected with it by a wooden entryway, is a house—the tiny frame house of the village priest, where the treasure is kept in a brick vault, specially built for the purpose, with double iron doors. No one not known to the priest or brought by his friends is allowed to see it.

At the back of the tiny vault stands a glass cabinet with four shelves of silver and gold plate; tall, fitchy chased candlesticks, and wine and water cruets, and tremendous spoons of silver which Louis XIV himself sent. There is a jeweled studded gold ostent sent by the city of Paris in 1664, and there are two splendid cases containing relics of 11 saints sent by the city of Chartres in the same year. In a drawer beneath the cabinet are four pieces of the chasuble embroidered in the most elaborate patterns and fine stitches, by ladies-in-waiting of King Louis' court.

When the humble priest of the village of Lorette puts on the robes sent by Anne of Austria, sets the altar of King Louis XIV, and takes the golden ostent in his hands, there probably is no church on this continent more splendidly served.

STOP! SIGNS NEEDED

We think there should be STOP! signs on the intersection of the highway around Ziegler Bros. Store, the Carrizozo Hardware Company and the Citizens State Bank. This corner is one of the main thoroughfares of town.

Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Mayer have recently purchased the lots east of the Mayer Apartments on east Alamogordo avenue. The property was acquired so as to put in the cement sidewalks.

This improvement was done by Dan Conley and his men.

WE HEARD

A Capitan business man says that they would strike gas for commercial purposes if they'd drill deeper.

WE SAW

The new H. I. School building at Capitan; we were ushered through the same by Marshall West. This structure is modern in every respect, and the gymnasium is a treat to the eye. —Capitan is, or should be, justly proud of this building.

Mr. Billy Ferguson while in Capitan Saturday afternoon. Billy is a reader of this column, and speaks out like a man whenever he disagrees with anything he sees in this paper.

Mr. Ferguson is a pioneer, and we mean what we say. He has promised to give us some "old-timers'" news on different occasions — but tomorrow never comes.

Dan Conley and his men are making preparations to lay a cement sidewalk around the city park, facing the Carrizozo Auto Co., the Lyric Theatre, Charlie Page's Pool Hall and Jeff Herron's Grocery. —Bueno!

AN ANTI-NAZI REVOLTY?

"There'll be a Revolution," Erich von Schroeter, national secretary of the German-American League for Culture, an anti-Nazi group, is quoted as saying to a Chicago meeting of Czechs and Slovaks. "Germans, Czechs and Slovaks are oppressed people" he asserted.
