Entertained Senior Class Mesdames Lillian Richard and Albert Snow entertained the Senior Class and sponsor, Mr. Caton, Wednesday, May 24, at Mrs. Snow's home, at a buffet 6 o'clock dinner, honoring Mrs. Richard's niece, Hilda Ann Barnett and Mrs. Snow's son, Charles Unfortunately, Miss Barnett was ill and unable to be present, so the class drank the cocktail to her speedy recovery

The tables were decorated in the class colors, blue and yellow. A very elaborate dinner was served, during which they enjoyed the snap favors which contained fortunes. All present had an enjoyable time and after dinner went to the commencement program at the High School Auditorium. Diplomas were issued to 84 8th grade graduates of the rural schools; 18 to CCC boys. Mrs. Nelle W Day, County School Supt., delivered the diplomas to the different schools and gave a Commencement Address to the 8th grade graduates at the Hondo schools. Schools closed May 19 with a successful year.

The following students are expected home from school, the latter part of the week: Walter Fulmer from College of Mines, El Paso; Wilma Snow, Rhoda and Carl Freeman, State College; Jane Newman from Business College at Albuquerque. The Carrizozo Baseball Team was idle last Sunday, from the fact that the Ancho Brickmakers of pre-historic times, failed to show up. We would give Carrizozo the game on a forfeit, but as only one-third of the team, Diamond Dust and a few other fans comprised the audience out at the park, we will call it 60-50 and let it go at that.

Harry Ryberg was here from Corona Tuesday. Harry's wife and children are now in Colorado and when they return, Harry will make a trip to his old home in Sweden and his brother will manage the ranch during his absence. Harry came to this country 24 years ago and he will have to brighten up on his native tongue in order to converse properly with his relatives and friends.

MEMORY'S LANE

A. L. Burke

Minstrel Shows, which are now numbered among things of the past, furnished most of the entertainment for the fans of the early days. At first they traveled overland, but later on when the railroads began to reach out over the country and rates became more moderate, they traveled in special cars.

Large towns and cities more especially, would look forward to the coming of the minstrel show with the greatest of anxiety. The billboards carried flaming advertisements of coming events and when the show finally landed, the populace would turn out to see the parade, which took place shortly before the noon hour, so that people going to lunch, might enjoy the snappy music and view the brilliancy of the moving spectacle.

Jack Haverly's Big 50 Minstrels was the largest aggregation on the road. They were 50 strong including the band, some of whom would double on brass and minstrel performance. In the parades each man in line wore the Prince Albert costume with the silk hat and was a sight never to be forgotten. Minstrel performers were the highest paid and the most efficient of any in the realm of public entertainers.

In the line of minstrelsy, memory recalls such aggregations as the Georgia Minstrels (colored,) the principal minstrel being Billy Kerans, the man with the big mouth. He could entertain an audience without saying a word, but with his wonderful facial expressions he would keep a crowded house alive with laughter for full 15 minutes. Bob McIntosh was another funny man, who would give what he called a "bass drum acrobatic solo." He would perform the most difficult feats on the bass drum. At times he would straddle the drum, while at other intervals, he would roll over and over from one side of the stage to another, part of the time being under and then on top of the drum, keeping in true time, accompanied by the orchestra.

Then came Neil O'Brien's minstrels, which featured what Neil called the "Darktown Fire Brigade," the funniest feature ever staged in minstrelsy. They were all white men and the best that could be produced. Then Honey Boy Evans and Lou Docstader's minstrels. When Pancho Villa raided Juarez, Lou Docstader's minstrels were showing on a week's stand in El Paso. The people were badly scared on account of shots coming across the Rio Grande, but Lou kept them in a sense of good humor with his funny men until the danger subsided. But the old glory of minstrelsy is gone. The gorgeous first part settings, the solos, quartette singing, the rattle of clog shoes and the band of merry-makers have all vanished, leaving only pleasant thoughts of the glory of the early days, in memory's golden frame.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Burke and son Lewis were Roswell visitors Sunday.

Proposed Memorial on Historic Field of Yorktown Would Be Symbolic of Friendship of Two Groups of 'First-Class Fightin' Men,' British and American

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Western Newspaper Union

ON THE historic field of Yorktown in Virginia there may soon be erected a unique memorial. It will be a monument to the friendship of two groups of "first-class fightin' men" who are bound together by more than one tie of common interest, the greatest of which is that they have stood shoulder to shoulder against a common enemy. These two groups are the British army's Royal Welch Fusiliers and the United States Marines.

The first time these fighting men served together was 39 years ago this June—during the famous Boxer Rebellion in North China. As the result of steady aggressions against China by European nations, an organization of Chinese patriots, who called themselves Boxers and who sought to preserve China for the Chinese, raised the rallying cry of "Kill the foreign devils!" and fell upon the white communities in and near Peking. Many of the foreigners were killed and the remainder were besieged in the legation quarter of the Chinese capital.

When the news of this outbreak was flashed to the world all the governments whose nationals were involved immediately sent expeditionary forces to China. The first objective was Tientsin where the foreign population with some 800 sailors and soldiers were desperately trying to hold out against the onslaughts of hordes of Chinese fanatics. The first attempt to relieve them failed when a column of American Marines and Russian troops were driven back to their base by overwhelming numbers of the enemy. There the Marines were reinforced by other Marines and they were also joined by the Second Battalion of the Royal Welch Fusiliers despatched from Hong Kong under the command of Major Morris.

Tientsin Captured.

Then this combined British and American force advanced toward Tientsin. When Major Morris fell wounded, the command was assumed by the next in rank, Maj. Littleton Waller Tazewell Waller of the Marine corps, and the Fusiliers and Marines fought side by side in the series of actions which resulted in the capture of the Chinese city and the rescue of the beleaguered foreigners. Among them, incidentally, was a young mining engineer, then comparatively unknown but destined for future fame as the President of the United States—Herbert Clark Hoover.

During the fighting which followed, as the allied armies moved on Peking, the close association of the Fusiliers and the Marines continued and so great Cup presented by officers of the Royal Welch Fusiliers to officers of the United States Marine Corps in memory of their service together during the Boxer Rebellion.

From August, 1937, until February of last year the same Second Battalion of the Royal Welch and the Fourth Regiment of the Marines were stationed along Soochow creek, bordering the foreign settlements of Shanghai to guard British and American citizens and property when the Japanese attacked that city.

Revolutionary Service.

The close association of these two military units in 1900 and again in 1937-38 is in striking contrast to the first contact of the Fusiliers with American men-at-arms. That took place more than 150 years ago and they were then enemies instead of friends. For the Royal Welch were among the troops sent to America in 1775 to help subdue the rebellious English colonies on this continent and they served in almost every major engagement of the Revolution, beginning with the Battle of Lexington and ending with the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Among the defenses erected by that ill-fated British leader, when he was penned up in the Virginia seaport, was a star-shaped fortification on the right of the British line. It is pointed out today to visitors to the Colonial National Historical Park as the "Fusiliers Redoubt" because it was held by a remnant of the Royal Welch Fusiliers (who had been decimated during the seven years of warfare in America) assisted by a few British marines. They held this redoubt against three attacks by Washington's French allies under Count Rochambeau and rank of major general in the Marine corps before he was retired. Before his death several years ago he suggested that the association of the Fusiliers and the Marines, representative forces of the defenses of the two leading democracies of the world, be immortalized in a permanent memorial and that an appropriate place for it would be at Yorktown.

Gen. Richards' Speech.

His suggestion was repeated and given emphasis in an address made this year by Brig. Gen. George Richards, United States Marine corps (ret.), speaking before the annual meeting and dinner of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution in the State of Virginia, held on February 22 in honor of Washington's birthday. He reviewed the history of the association of these two military units, recalled General Waller's suggestion that the memorial be erected on the field of Yorktown and concluded:

"When, 13 or more years ago, that proposal was made, international politics with the problems of statesmanship—a field at all times not the responsibility of the active soldier—presented the clear outlines that are today apparent to the vision of our people. This condition then led the followers and associates of General Waller to turn elsewhere lest that memory be lost. We appealed to the talent of the late John Philip Sousa. At the spring dinner of the Gridiron club in Washington, in 1930, there came from the gifted baton of that great composer . . . the last of his many, many military marches, the very last: 'The March of the Royal Welch Fusiliers,' dedicated to the Marine corps. As the strains of that martial music faded away, from the lips of the President of the United States came his story of the siege of Tientsin, the burden of care and anxiety lifted from the shoulders of that young mining engineer and his associates, how from across 10,000 miles of sea, the might of two great nations had reached afar to say their people in China should not die.

History Repeats Itself.

"That recent reunion at Shanghai of last year—history repeating itself with its revival of the recollections of the like service in North China of 1900—has recalled to the veteran officers of that campaign the almost forgotten and unfulfilled wish of the late Maj. Gen. Littleton Waller Tazewell Waller of Virginia. These veterans wish that under your auspices—under the aegis of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution of his native state, the proposal of one of Virginia's distinguished soldiers, be submitted for the reaction of America's public.

"It is not sufficient that that memory of a common service be preserved only in martial music and solely to the ear of the soldier. It deserves now to be perpetuated in the wider field, to the eye of the public in the chosen way of that departed leader of ours. American public opinion, it is confidently believed, will support the project. More, in its larger sense—in its wider import, measured by the trend and aspect of these times—our people will applaud our effort."

Air view of the "Fusiliers Redoubt" on the Yorktown battlefield.

was the admiration of the Royal Welch for the American major that one of their officers is quoted as having declared "Just give us Waller—we will go anywhere with him." At the end of the campaign in China Major Waller and the officers of the First Battalion of the Marines received from the officers of the Fusiliers a silver loving cup, engraved with all their names, and presented in memory of their service together. Moreover, since that time it has become a custom for the officers of the Fusiliers and the Marines to exchange messages of greeting on St. David's day (March 1), an anniversary observed by all loyal Welshmen.

The years passed. Once more the Fusiliers and the Marines were "brothers-in-arms" and this time it was again on Asiatic soil.

after the siege the French generals gave their unstinted praise to the stubbornness of the resistance which they had encountered there. They could scarcely believe that so few men in this fortification had been able to hold in check their superior numbers. Lord Cornwallis, also, in his official report of the capitulation, paid a glowing tribute to the courage and bulldog tenacity of the Fusiliers.

If the proposed memorial mentioned at the beginning of this article is erected it will be placed here. The first suggestion for such a memorial came from the major of the American Marines who won the admiration and respect of the Fusiliers during the Boxer rebellion—Littleton Waller Tazewell Waller. Major Waller, who was a Virginian, rose to the

The Royal Welch Fusiliers has one of the most interesting histories of any regiment in the British army. It dates back 250 years—to 1689 when, after the bloodless revolution of 1688 forced James II to flee to France, leaders in the English parliament asked William of Orange, president of the Dutch republic, whose wife, Mary, was the eldest daughter of the deposed King James, to ascend the throne of England. One condition was imposed upon the new ruler. The throne was to be assumed in the name of Mary but William was to administer the affairs of the country. So the reign of William and Mary began. One of the first acts of the new monarchs was to grant to the people of England, the Bill of Rights.

To protect the liberties granted to his people, William III raised immediately an army of 25 regiments of foot (infantry). One of these, the Twenty-third, was enlisted along the border counties of Wales among the descendants of the ancient Britons who were followers of the Welsh chieftains, Llewellyn and his brother, David. It was first known as Herbert's Twenty-third Foot, after Lord Herbert of Chirbury, who raised the regiment, and his cousin, Col. Charles Herbert, who first commanded it.

Baptism of Fire.

When King William took the field, with his new army against the forces of James II and his ally, Louis XIV of France, which had been raised to restore the deposed English king, Herbert's Twenty-third Foot had its baptism of fire under the eyes of King William at the Battle of the Boyne on July 1, 1690. Its record of gallantry on that historic field has continued unbroken for 250 years. In recognition of its services in Marlborough's campaigns against the French in the early Eighteenth century, the prince of Wales, later King George I, conferred upon the regiment the title of "The Prince of Wales Own Royal Regiment of Welch Fusiliers," a title which has been shortened to the better known Royal Welch Fusiliers.

Like other British regiments, the Royal Welch have what they call their "battle honours"—names of the most conspicuous battles in which they served emblazoned upon their regimental standards. Among them are Corunna, where the fallen Sir John Moore was "buried darkly at dead of night"; Lucknow, with its memory of the Highlanders, the MacGregors and the Campbells and the thrilling rescue, Blenheim, Inkermann, Ramilles, Waterloo, Oudenarde and nearly a score of others—all bright pages in England's military history.

Although the Royal Welch served throughout the American Revolution there are no names of battles on the soil of the United States emblazoned on the regiment's banner. Ask a Fusilier today why and his reply will reflect the sentiment which makes appropriate the proposed memorial: "Tradition says our predecessors of those days did not wish the memory of our American battles recalled—that is all we know."

Although the United States Marines are a much younger military unit than the Royal Welch Fusiliers, they, too, have a long and honored tradition back of them. The Marine corps is the oldest active armed force in the United States, antedating both the army and the navy. It was organized by the Continental congress on November 10, 1775, nine months before the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Marine Traditions.

The Marines, like the Fusiliers, preserve their traditions by certain symbols or customs. One of these symbols is the sword which their officers wear. It is described in the regulations as "one with a Mameluke hilt, curved or scimitar blade and bright metal scabbard." It came about in this way:

In 1805 a young Virginian named Presley Neville O'Bannon, first lieutenant in the Marine corps, with Midshipman Peck, a sergeant and six privates from the Marines, formed a part of the motley army of Greeks, Turks and Mameluke Arabs which William Eaton, President Thomas Jefferson's naval agent in the Mediterranean, led against the stronghold of Derna, held by Yusuf, bashaw of Tripoli. Yusuf, who had deposed his brother, Ahmet, had been preying upon American commerce and enslaving American sailors. Eaton's plan was to help restore to the Tripolitan throne the former bashaw, Ahmet, who would thereafter restore American rights in the Mediterranean.

Young O'Bannon took part in that epic march of 800 miles across African deserts and in the storming of the fortress of Derna where for the first time in history the Stars and Stripes were hoisted over an Old world fortress. In appreciation of his services, Ahmet presented O'Bannon with a sword with a Mameluke hilt and this sword became the model for the weapon which has been the symbol of authority for Marine officers from that time on. O'Bannon's exploit also is memorialized in the first line of the famous "Hymn of the Marines."

PAUL THINKS IN WORLD TERMS

LESSON TEXT—Romans 1:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.—Romans 1:16.

"I see chaos . . . only one thing will stop this coming chaos . . . a sweeping spiritual revival. Unless we have such a reawakening of religious forces we shall have a depression within the next 10 years that will make the last one look like a Christmas eve program." So wrote a prominent business advisor recently, as quoted in the Practical Commentary. His view is shared by others not only in business but in governmental circles. Religious leaders, some of whom until recently were presenting glowing pictures of the beautiful fellowship of the peoples of the earth in a modernistic faith which is far from the gospel, are now either silent or prophets of despair. Faithful witnesses for God have long seen the approach of this day, and like prophets of old have warned the people to turn to God. God still lives. The good news of the gospel has lost none of its redeeming power. The Light of the World is ready to shine in the darkness. Now is the time to preach

I. The Gospel (vv. 1-6).

Paul knew himself as the bond-slave of Jesus Christ, recognizing that he had been set apart by God for the exalted purpose of preaching the gospel. The word itself means "good news," that is, any good news. But because there is but one bit of good news in the world entitled to a place of supremacy, it has come to mean the good news of the grace of God in Christ Jesus.

Note the three points made by Paul. First, it is "the gospel of God," good news from God. "Humanly speaking, from every reasonable standpoint, God can have only one message for fallen, rebellious men—a message of judgment and death. If there is to be good news from God, then God Himself must undertake to change the relationship between man and Himself so that He will be able to bestow His richest blessings upon men. This is the good news, that God is undertaking to save men from the judgment and doom that man deserves" (Wilbur M. Smith).

Then observe that this salvation was prophesied beforehand (v. 2). This gospel we have is not something suddenly prepared to meet an emergency. It was prepared before the foundation of the world (Eph. 1:4; Rev. 13:8). And in verse 3 we read that the good news is "concerning his Son." He is the only Saviour and unless it is concerning Him that we are to speak, the news is not good news.

II. The Gospel for the Whole World (vv. 7-15).

Religious cults flourish only where conditions prosper them. "Buddhism, we are told, succeeds best in warm climates. Mohammedanism flourishes among people of low culture. The gospel of Christ breaks through all barriers of geography, climate and race, and has proved itself to be equally adapted to men of 'all nations'" (LeRoy M. Lowell).

Paul was called to preach to Greek and barbarian, to Jew and Gentile, to the wise and the unwise, to every living soul. What is more, he regarded himself as a debtor to them, and that is the spirit that brings forth a sacrificial determination to make Christ known to the ends of the earth. Let us recognize that we too are in debt to the whole world because we have the gospel that men need. Then in Christ's name let us as honorable men and women pay our debt. Perhaps some who would not wait overnight to pay the grocer for what he has delivered, have never felt the slightest compunction about standing in debt to all men for the preaching of the gospel.

III. The Gospel for the World's Salvation (vv. 16, 17).

Paul was not ashamed to take the gospel into the very heart of that ancient world, the magnificent city of Rome. Had he come with some new philosophy of life which had no power to transform men, he might well have been ashamed; but he knew that what he had would meet the deepest needs of humanity for deliverance from sin and sorrow and eternal death. He knew that the need of the "up and out" was the same as that of the "down and out"—namely, the redeeming grace of God—the gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (v. 16).

Why should we who follow Christ be so timid when Paul could be so bold? Certainly we should not speak to men about this good news in an apologetic, "hope-you-won't-mind" attitude. Men need Christ. We know Christ will meet their every need. Let us not be ashamed to tell them about Him in the home, in the church, in the office, on the street, in America, in China, in Africa, yes, even to the very ends of the earth.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—brings heavy strains on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney trouble are: frequent urination, burning, stinging or soreness of the urinary tract and need to urinate frequently. Doan's Backache Kidney Pills have helped more than forty years of public approval. Ask your neighbor!

"Fog of Death"

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Well, sir, the Vikings of old used to sail the seas in oared galleys that were hardly bigger than the motor cruisers in which we plough through our lakes and rivers today. I'll give them a lot of credit for their nerve. But they had oars to row with and sails to carry them along. They knew where they were going and they had a pretty good chance of getting there. I'm betting a lot that there wasn't a Viking in any age who would have put himself in the spot Pete Gear of Sunnyside, L. I., found himself in. Not for any amount of money.

It happened in September, 1927—and here's how. Pete got a job on a coal barge. And one of the first trips that barge was sent on after Pete joined the crew, was a tow out to sea with a load of coal for a ship that was to meet them a hundred and ninety-five miles out in the Atlantic.

The rendezvous at which they were to meet was south-east of Block Island. A tug was to take the barge out. Five men composed the barge's crew. Four of those fellows—Pete included—had never been out to sea before. The fifth man was a regular seagoing bargeman.

Trip Was Like a Moonlight Excursion.

On the afternoon of the day appointed, the tug came along and the barge was hooked on behind it. Pete says the trip up Long Island sound was like a moonlight excursion. But after they passed Montauk Point, the sea was mighty rough. The four landlubbers immediately got seasick.

It was a hard night for those lads—but it was going to be a lot harder before they got back. The next day, when they arrived at the appointed spot, there was no sign of the boat they had come to meet. The tugboat captain told the bargeman to drop anchor and he would circle around and see if he could find the other boat. He cast off the tow line and the tug steamed away. Soon it was out of sight. There was nothing in sight, as a matter of fact, but water and more water. They were nearly two hundred miles from the nearest land. Then, half an hour later, a thick fog settled down over the anchored barge.

Says Pete: "We were lying in our bunks, too sick to move, when the regular bargeman came in and told us about the fog. He explained that we were anchored in the shipping lane, and that was a dangerous position. We would have to keep the fog bell ringing as long as the fog lasted. Otherwise we would most likely be run down by one of the liners which were continually passing through that part of the ocean."

And that was only the beginning. The troubles crowded thick and fast after that. It was night now, and the bargeman went aloft to hang a riding light. He was hardly up there when he fell to the deck and lay still, his leg broken. "Then," says Pete, "the nightmare began."

Pete Hauls Injured Bargeman to His Bunk.

Pete picked him up and carried him to his bunk. The other three men were still lying in their bunks, the ghastly pallor of seasickness on their faces. When he had done what little he could for the injured man, Pete went out and started ringing the fog bell.

The night wore on, and the fog showed no sign of lifting. Pete yanked away rhythmically on that bell, tolling a monotonous dirge. His arm was getting tired. His hand was chafing from its constant contact with the bell rope. Every minute he expected to see the bow of an ocean liner looming over the barge. Every minute he expected to hear a thud and a crash of splintering timbers as some huge craft cut them in two.

Pete began to feel that he couldn't hold his arm up to pull on that bell rope any longer. He went into the cabin and tried to rouse one of the seasick men. Not one of them would get up. Pete was seasick himself, but these fellows felt a lot worse. In vain he told them of the dangers of leaving that bell unmanned. They didn't care whether the barge went down or not. In fact, one or two of them hoped it would.

Pete dragged himself back to the bell. He was sick—sleepy—aching. But he couldn't quit. His life depended on it. And so did the lives of those other four men in their bunks. Dawn came, and still he was jerking away on that rope. Still the fog hadn't lifted. All morning long—all afternoon—he stuck to his post. Both his hands were so raw now that he had to hook his elbow through the bell rope and pull it with his arm.

Night came—and still Pete was at it. His whole body was stiff now. He ached in every muscle and joint and bone. His arm was working mechanically now. He scarcely realized that he was pulling that cord.

Pete Rings Bell for 36 Hours Straight.

And for two nights and a day Peter rang that bell. Never will he forget the nightmare of that experience. On the morning of the third day he couldn't take it any longer. He didn't quit. He just fell asleep—right where he was—from sheer exhaustion.

When Pete awoke again the sun was just disappearing over the western horizon. But the fog had lifted. There was no sign of the tug. When the fog came down it had been unable to find the barge—and it still hadn't found it.

All that third night they waited. On the fourth day Pete sighted a plane. It circled around in the skies and then headed back toward land again. "When it turned around," says Pete, "I thought that pilot hadn't seen us." But the plane had spotted the barge. It had been sent out from New London for that very purpose. And on the fifth day the tug boat came out and reclaimed its lost tow.

It didn't take Pete long to get over the effects of his adventure. Now he looks back on it as quite an exciting experience. There's one thing, though, that makes Pete mad. He worked himself to exhaustion trying to keep some vessel from sending that barge to the bottom. "But in all that time," he says, "I didn't see a single one of those big liners that I was in such fear of."

Walks Should Be Aimless, Peripatetic Expert Says

A walk should never have an objective. If you have it firmly fixed in your mind, at the outset of your walk, that you are on your way to Cousin Ella's or that you are going to get a pound of raisins, the awareness of this objective will gnaw constantly at your subconscious, like a maggot in a walnut. It will tinge your sensibilities and irritate your psyche. Do not, therefore, have an objective. Just go for a walk.

The taking of a walk must never be a premeditated ritual. It must not be an event that is planned in advance, like a bridge party or an application for a bank loan, but must be as spontaneous as a sudden smile.

One of these days, while you are quietly sitting reading—or doing the housework or tidying the cellar or whatever—the notion will suddenly and unaccountably fit across your consciousness that it would be pleasant to take a walk. You must act upon this notion instantly. Do not attempt to think up reasons or pretexts or objectives for the walk. Just open the door and go out.

Diet Treatments Often Cure for Bladder Trouble

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

YOU may wonder why a physician in treating gall bladder trouble sends some cases into hospital for operation, treats others by medicine and still others by outlining a diet to be followed strictly. You have perhaps thought of the gall bladder as a small bag which should be removed if it contains any stones; whereas in all cases of gall stones underwent operation, all surgeons could be kept busy.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

As a matter of fact the gall bladder is removed only when there is a new growth (cancer), excessive stone formations causing frequent attacks of colic, or when the symptoms of indigestion—nausea, vomiting and painful gas formation—make life hardly worth living. And the results from these operations when the patient follows diet and other instructions afterward are, in most cases, very satisfactory.

Dr. Barton

However, there are some borderline cases; that is when the physician would like to use medical and diet treatment or diet treatment alone, and thus try to avoid operation, and there are other cases that are severe enough to require operation but for various reasons—bad heart, old age, generally poor condition of the patient, unwillingness to undergo operation—in which diet treatment offers the only help.

Knowledge of Patient Needed.
The usual symptoms of gall bladder trouble are "belching, gas pressure, distress in the upper part of the abdomen coming on after the taking of food, biliousness, sometimes nausea and vomiting, occasionally headaches, constipation, and loss of appetite." To prescribe a diet to prevent or lessen these symptoms requires much thought and knowledge, not only about food but about the patient himself, his surroundings and his likes and dislikes.

The foods to be used are the non-irritating foods—fruits, some of the leafy vegetables, meat and fish once a day—never fried—very little butter, no spiced or smoked meat or fish, plenty of water, dilute fruit juices, milk, buttermilk and weak tea.

The foods to be avoided are cream, salted, canned and preserved meats and fish, cheeses except cottage cheese, corn, cabbage, cauliflower, onions, raw vegetables, gravies, pie, nuts, alcoholics, pastry.

Use of Venom Studied At Pasteur Institute

From time to time you read about the great relief from pain obtained by cancer patients by the use of the poison (venom) of snakes. As a matter of fact, the use of the venom from that very poisonous snake, the cobra, has been used for hundreds of years, but when a research unit such as the Pasteur institute reports its findings, then we can rest assured that "if snake venom has merit, it will be made known to the world."

Dr. D. I. Macht, in Annals of Internal Medicine, tells us that the first "scientific" use of a venom (that of the cobra) was made quite "recently" by the Pasteur institute.

First, special methods of sterilizing the venom had to be developed as the venom is destroyed by high temperature. Then a study of its effects on the body showed that its power to relieve pain was caused by its action on a certain part of the brain and that it had no effect when placed upon any painful spot in or on the body. Its action then is like that of morphine except that it is much slower in taking effect and its effect lasts much longer than morphine.

Not Habit Forming.

By careful experiments the exact dose with which to begin daily treatment has been worked out and when pain has been relieved, the needed amount to keep patient free of pain requires this dosage two or three times a week instead of daily.

"The results in incurable cancer were very satisfactory, pain and discomfort being greatly relieved. Later, cobra venom was found to be very useful in other painful conditions such as angina pectoris, severe neuralgias, arthritis (rheumatism), where not only was the pain relieved but also muscle-spasm was relaxed. In a series of cases of Parkinson's disease, or shaking palsy, cobra venom was found to be effective in relieving pain and relaxing nerves and muscles."

Dr. Macht states that in his experience cobra venom did not appear to be habit forming as is so often the case with morphine.

While it is now available, to a greater extent than heretofore, the patient must always be guided by the advice of the family physician as to its use in his particular case.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Heat Brown Sugar.—If dark or light brown sugar is too hard to measure, heat it in the oven, then measure it quickly while it is soft. Store it in the refrigerator or bread box, where it will remain soft.

Prevent Soiled Curtains.—Paint patent clothes pins the color of your decorations in different rooms and use a pair to pin back curtains at night or during showers. This keeps the curtains from being soiled by the screens.

Sharp Kitchen Tools.—One of the most effective aids to speeding up cooking preparations, is to see that paring knives for fruits and vegetables, and knives for trimming up meats and fowl, are kept sharp. Dull knives not only waste an unbelievable amount of time, but they are disconcerting to thoughtful planning.

An Appetizer.—Celery stuffed with crabmeat salad can be used for variety on an appetizer tray.

Burnt Aluminum.—If you burn an aluminum saucepan when cooking, boil an onion in it. The burnt part will rise to the top like scum and leave the saucepan clean.

Life's Battle

WE ARE constantly speaking of the "struggle for life," and calling life "a battle"; but we do not see that our very existence, and the fact that we have a battle to fight, are due to the struggles and triumphs of those who have gone before us. We think that some strange thing has happened to us, and that our lot is an unusually hard one.

But such thoughts are altogether unworthy. Our fathers found life as hard a battle as we do, and if they had not fought we should not be alive to fight. Every stage of human history is the outworking of the same destiny; and it is in fulfilling ours, and entering well into the struggle for life as arranged for us, that we do our part toward perpetuating the moral life of humanity.

We are descendants, and somebody is responsible for us: We are progenitors, and we are responsible for somebody.

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: The curtains I made from your Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, are so smart and modern looking that they have given our living room an entirely new appearance. Right now I need an idea that will pep up my kitchen windows. Everything is up to date but the curtains. They look old fashioned. The color scheme is red and white, but please don't tell me to use red and white checked gingham because I have done that before.—J. B."

Alright, no checked gingham! How about some nice crisp dotted swiss with the widest red rick rack you can find for the edge? Then make a border around the top and sides of the window by pasting scalloped red oilcloth on the window frame, using wall paper paste. Cut the oilcloth in strips first, then mortise the corners by cutting them on the bias. Start marking the scallops at the corners, as shown here, making the center top scallop wider than the others. The tie-backs for the curtains may also be made of the red oilcloth.

Work of Stonecutter

Most modern sculptors do not produce their own marble statues. They merely make small models in wax, clay or plaster and then turn them over to a stonecutter or carver for reproduction. Sometimes the sculptor adds a few finishing touches, but these are not necessary when the marble worker is an expert.—Collier's.

"I'm glad the game is over," Rex admitted soberly.

Joan looked at him in surprise.
It wasn't like him to be serious.
"Didn't I strike you that Aunt Hoanna was strangely calm for a serious wreck?" she asked after a moment's silence. "That reflection occurred to me a few times."
Rex nodded.

"I suppose she was relieved to have her responsibilities off her retty raw deal all her life."

Joan nodded and flushed.
"It's one of the things I shall al-

ted. "I can't understand yet why we were so blind and selfish. That's why I added two thousand a year

"We'll both try to do a bit of added cheerfully, "you may concen-

BY BEN AMES WILLIAMS

STANDING by themselves on Ken-

The ultimate solving of the mystery

Hoan's 'Good Government' Plea Ignored by Washington Press

Milwaukee Mayor's Criticism of Relief Administration Practices Neglected as Mayor LaGuardia Furnishes Usual Newspaper Copy.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—It has come to be quite a habit for mayors of cities and governors of states to come rushing to Washington for appearances before congressional committees.

Visitations to Washington, therefore, have become fashionable as a political game. And if, as a result of the words of alleged wisdom dropped from the lips of the self-anointed purveyors of people's thoughts, new checks should be forthcoming from the United States treasury—"ah," they say, "we got it for you."

The traffic in mayors and governors, especially mayors, has grown so heavy that it is seldom news, except for the mayor's home town; and, frankly, the news writers describe them as being worth about a dime a dozen from a strictly news standpoint.

Hoan Flays Relief Spending

Those preliminaries ought to explain why the appearance here the other day of Mayor Daniel W. Hoan of Milwaukee, Wis., failed to get anything like the attention it deserved from the press.

Said the Milwaukee mayor, in substance you fellows are spending a lot of money for relief of the destitute, you are wasting a lot of that money, and it ought to be stopped.

These were not Mayor Hoan's words, of course. Yet I have presented them as substantially what his testimony meant, and seldom, in recent years, have I heard better sense spoken to a committee of congress.

Charges States Shirk Relief Responsibilities

Mayor Hoan appeared to believe that some of the states were, and are, shirking their responsibilities. It is so easy to come to Washington and tell a congressional committee that "our people are destitute and we have no money to care for them."

Another mayor was around town at the same time that Mayor Hoan was here. He was Mayor LaGuardia of New York. Nobody seems to know exactly where "the Little Flower" should be catalogued, politically.

Republican when he came in, but he wandered around into three or four different political parties and seems now to be among the bell wethers of the American labor party.

Mayor LaGuardia is a great favorite among many news correspondents in Washington. He is what is called "good copy."

So, I say that Mayor Hoan's money was almost sensational, while Mayor LaGuardia was singing same old refrain of "gimme, gimme."

A subcommittee investigator sent statements to the effect that WPA money was used to build lakes in Tennessee "without reference to the need for recreational facilities considered on any statewide or community basis."

The investigator and his sources of information named ex-Senator George L. Berry and Gov. Prentice Cooper, of Tennessee, as holders of land which benefitted by the WPA-built lakes.

Patagonia, Argentine Territory, Named 'Land of the Big Feet'

Patagonia—a little-known region with a familiar name—came into the international picture recently, as Argentina reported the investigation of an alleged German plot to annex this South American territory.

Long contested between Chile and Argentina, the so-called Patagonian area, constituting the tail of the continent, was finally divided between the two countries in 1881.

Rumania is younger than United States. Rumania, modern battleground of Old world traders, is one of Europe's newer nations.

Patagonia is a thin, people, especially in the southernmost territory of Santa Cruz. The entire population is estimated to be only about 80,000 people in an area of more than three times as many square miles.

Visitors to Switzerland find it interesting to visit frontier posts where they watch the guards on duty at both frontiers.

Because of domestic lack of raw materials and fuel, and the high cost of transport, Switzerland has specialized in quality products.

Germany continues to hold the No. 1 position in Swiss trade, both as customer and vendor, although in 1938 purchases of German goods declined considerably.

From now on, however, much more of the national income will be diverted to military preparedness, according to recent news dispatches from the Swiss capital.

Perpetual neutrality was guaranteed Switzerland in 1815 at the Congress of Vienna by Prussia, Austria, France, Great Britain, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and Russia.

Largely a plateau land of high winds and little rain, Patagonia supports, on the whole, sparse natural vegetation and few people.

On the other hand, irrigation, particularly in the northern sections, has transformed much of the once desert area into blooming communities, producing fruits and grains.

Expensive Carcass

A MAJORITY of horse races on the nation's tracks are claiming races—in which any starting horse must be offered for sale at a sum which is stated before the race.

Patagonia is rich in natural resources of timber and oil. One oil field, in Chubut, is reported to yield more than 80 per cent of Argentina's total production.

Sheep raising, the chief occupation of the region, accounts for a large proportion of the country's exportable supply of wool, sent largely to England, France, and Germany.

Yet despite the potential wealth of a still undeveloped region in a world of vanishing frontiers, Patagonia is thinly peopled, especially in the southernmost territory of Santa Cruz.

The owner of the then fastest animal strolled to the racing secretary's office. He was told that a rival horseman had put in a claim for Staff Sergeant. Shields received the $1,500. The unfortunate buyer received the carcass, and was forced to pay for its removal from the track.

Braddock Eyes Comeback Trail As Funds Wane

By ROBERT McSHANE

JIMMY BRADDOCK, Cinderella man of the heavyweight ranks, has decided to come out of retirement.

Braddock has a good reason for taking his gloves off the wall. It's the same reason that prompted Tony Canzoneri, Benny Leonard, and the many others to get back into the ring after their best fighting days were over.

Joe Gould, Braddock's manager, forced his retirement in the first place. Gould intended to see to it that his man quit before he absorbed too much punishment.

Don't feel too sorry for Jim. Being broke isn't a new experience to him. When his fighting went bad a few years ago he went to work on the docks as stevedore.

He didn't stay at the bottom long. Through a combination of circumstances he was tossed into the ring on June 13, 1935, with Max Baer, heavyweight champion who never deserved the title.

Braddock made a lot of money, spent a large part of it, and lost a great deal more. Four years after he was considered to be washed up, Braddock is attempting a comeback in the game which made him famous.

JAMES BRADDOCK

Unquestionably this was one of the most remarkable reversals in the history of boxing. Braddock didn't stay at the top very long, and was knocked out by Joe Louis on June 22, 1937.

Braddock made a lot of money, spent a large part of it, and lost a great deal more. Four years after he was considered to be washed up, Braddock is attempting a comeback in the game which made him famous.

"I didn't really hurt her very much," continued Miss Hosanna. Hale took a few more turns around the room.

"Try to understand," she continued steadily. She was quite herself again—cool, composed, patient with him. "I was fighting for the little I had in life, for the little I had ever had, for the little I wanted. I can't live on without Ruth. Life would be too hideously lonely. When you came and began to interfere I got desperate. When you put Joan in the doctor's hands and stopped the milk I got reckless. I thought, though I'm not sure of it, that Jane was getting a little suspicious about the milk. I had her leave it in the butler's pantry, but before Rose took it up I slipped in from the dining-room and added the mercury. Once Jane came in from the kitchen just after I had put the bottle back in my pocket. I picked up a glass, as if that was what I was after, and went out of the pantry. Several times, when the doses were due, the milk went up to Joan's room before I had a chance to prepare it. The first time that happened I used my master-key and went into Joan's room during the night. She woke. I was going to say I had come to close the windows because I was afraid of a storm. But I was startled and got out. I didn't dare risk going again till tonight. Then I had to add the mercury to the water bottle, since you had stopped the milk. I thought Jane had acted rather queer, when Rose said no more milk must be sent up. It was odd, too, that she and Rose kept so quiet about Daisy's death. I began to suspect that they were watching me, but I don't think they really were."

She stopped a moment, as if turning this over in her mind. "Then—well, you had stopped the heroin and Ruth said she was through with it," she continued. "She told me she had about decided to go to Mrs. Stuyvesant this fall. I thought I'd go crazy when she said that."

"I see."

Hale had stopped before her again and was staring down at her.

"I don't think I did Joan much harm," she ventured. "She's been improving so fast these last weeks. She couldn't have been much—" she sought for the word, "undetermined," she brought out.

"That's why you made tonight's visit—to hurry the finish, Miss Hosanna."

"Yes. I had to do what I could quickly."

"To do what you could. Miss Hosanna!"

He threw up his hands with a gesture of desperation. There was another silence. Then Hale said abruptly, "I'm going to marry Joan, Miss Hosanna. I'm going to marry her right off. I think she needs me."

Miss Hosanna nodded.

"I thought you would marry her," she said dully. She added, "That's one reason why I felt hurried and reckless. You see, everything was pushing me at once."

"Yes, I see, all right. Now, listen to me. Looking at you, Miss Hosanna," Hale went on, "and listening to you sitting there and talking as if you were at an afternoon tea, I could strangle you. My fingers are itching to do it. But my brain tells me you are not wholly responsible. You've been badly treated. You have brooded over your wrongs till you have become obsessed by them. Perhaps many women would be who had gone through your experience. I don't know. I'm not judging you. But I don't want you around my wife."

Miss Hosanna's gray head, with its incongruous covering of sleeping net and pins, rose higher.

"I expect to go away, of course," she retorted. "I will go away at once—within a day or two."

"Yes," Rex agreed dully, "that will be necessary. Where will you go?"

"How can I tell?" Her head drooped and she stared down at the floor. "You aren't giving me much time to make plans. If I had the money I would go to California." Suddenly her features twisted. "I'm tired," she muttered. "I want to rest somewhere. Then I'll look for a position."

Hale, who had been standing before the window, looking unseeingly at the water, turned and came back to her.

"I will persuade your brother to allow you a living income," he said in a level voice, "and to give you money now to get to California. I think that will be the best place. It's a long distance away. Away from everything."

She sighed.

"You shouldn't be so cruel. You have your life before you, and you will get everything you want. But you're young. You can't understand. You ought to understand one thing, though," she hurried on. "My brother will not give me one penny. He'll never forgive me, either. He's really devoted to Joan."

"He won't know he has anything to forgive."

Hale spoke in a low voice. As she started and stared at him incredulously, he went on. "We will keep this matter between you and me, Miss Hosanna. I can't see that anything would be gained by telling your family about it. They would never get over it. It would affect them in lots of ways. It might make them morbid and suspicious of everyone. It might change their whole outlook on life." He ended firmly. "They must never know."

"But—how—can—we—manage?" the words were so low he hardly heard them.

"You'll say you've had a breakdown, and that you need rest and change. I'll see that Kneeland makes you a decent allowance. Trust me for that."

"You won't even tell Joan?"

"Joan least of all. No one will ever know, Miss Hosanna. You may count on that."

He turned his eyes away from her brightening face.

"I suppose I have no moral sense," he muttered. "I've never believed in the eye for an eye business—especially in cases where no eye has been lost. If you had killed Joan I could have watched you go to the electric chair, all right. As it is, well—that's something different. I let Craig off because we didn't want family skeletons rattling in the closets. In his way he was as bad as you. I feel about you as I did about him. At times, as I listened to you tonight, I was almost sorry for you. Then I'd realize again what a go damned hard to take in. This isn't a nightmare, but an actual fact. . . . It's happening. . . . Oh, well—"

He made a gesture of futility and went on in a different tone.

"I'll talk to your brother tomorrow and I'll arrange the income matter satisfactorily. You may depend on it."

Her momentary look of relief was gone. She sat twisting her hands, her eyes on the floor.

Hale did not look at her. He could not endure another flash of relief against that ghastly background.

"Later, after a year or two," he told her, "you can write your brother that you intend to live in California indefinitely. I am quite certain he will have no objections to such a plan."

"Thank you, I think you mean to be merciful."

She got up and came toward him with outstretched, shaking hands, but he quickly stepped back out of her reach.

"Please don't touch me," he said. "I couldn't stand that. You can count on me to put everything through, though. I suppose I can count on you to—"

"To be different hereafter?" she asked under her breath. "Yes, you can."

He interrupted her. "Does Mrs. Spencer Forbes realize what's been going on?"

"Ruth! Good God, no. She must never know."

Notwithstanding his first recoil she caught his arm and clung to him.

"She has been watching you," he pointed out.

"She has been worried about me. She has seen that something was wrong. She was watching Bert, too. She was suspicious about Bert because she knew he'd get Joan's money. She warned me about him. She thought—Rex, you will never let her know, will you?"

He released his arm and moved away from her.

"I won't let her know," he said dully. He was recalling Mrs. Spencer Forbes' words. She had been all within two months," Hale boasted to his bride a fortnight later. They were on an ocean liner bound for France and a month's honeymoon.

"It was a pretty thorough job, darling," Joan agreed. "You ousted Doctor Craig and Mr. Ainsworth. You married me. You got Uncle Cass and Bert nicely settled in a cool New York penthouse, with Jane and Banks to look after them. You even hustled poor old Aunt Hosanna off to California for a long rest-cure. You certainly have been a busy boy. I suppose you're really what's called a 'god in the machine.' Just how does it feel to play with other peoples' lives like that?"

"I'm glad the game is over," Rex admitted soberly.

Joan looked at him in surprise. It wasn't like him to be serious. "Didn't it strike you that Aunt Hosanna was strangely calm for a nervous wreck?" she asked after a moment's silence. "That reflection occurred to me a few times."

Rex nodded.

"I suppose she was relieved to have her responsibilities off her shoulders," he suggested. "Your Aunt Hosanna, my love, has had a pretty raw deal all her life."

Joan nodded and flushed.

"We'll both try to do a bit of that," Rex said, "as a thank-offering for being so happy in a pretty grim old world. But just for the present, Heart of my Heart," he added cheerfully, "you may concentrate on thinking of me!"

(THE END)

Good Cricket Balls May Last for 1,000 Runs in Perfect Condition

Every time you play with a cricket ball you are handling an article of romance and ancient, almost unchanged, industry. The birthplaces of approximately 250,000 cricket balls manufactured annually in this country, says London Tit-Bits magazine, are still mainly devoid of much machinery, yet their construction requires some of the world's most skilled craftsmanship.

Often it is handed down for generations, and at Teston, near Maidstone, famous hamlet of cricket ball manufacture, workers now frequently occupy the places of their fathers and grandfathers in the factory.

Cork from the Spanish and Portuguese forests, worsted spun in the Midlands and north, specially selected and prepared milk-white English hides, gold so valuable that the sweepings of the room in which it is used are sifted for its dust, and great ton-weight pressing machines for the balls, are some of the necessities. The manufacture is a long and intricate process, beginning with the secret dyeing of the hides, occupying a fortnight. Each strip is cut into quarters, divided into two, which are joined with invisible stitches. Attached tightly together the two cup-like covers are blocked on a gunmetal mold and the case reinforced with small pieces of leather.

Cricket balls' centers are molded with one inch-wide piece of cork, bound with worsted, to which, when ball-shaped, are added more alternate cork and worsted binding until it is a rounded ball of the required weight. It is then hammered in a recessed mold.

With a powerful vice exerting the pressure of tons, the two edges of the little ball are brought to meet, and the expert worker joins them in usually three rows of minute and intricate stitches. As many as 95 stitches are often required.

Clamp molds then deal with the ball until it is perfectly shaped, only needing to be inspected once again, stamped with the real gold, and sold.

Lives of first-grade cricket balls are long. In first-class cricket a new ball may be called for when 200 runs have been scored, but they often stand 1,000 runs in perfect condition. It depends on the way you use them, and the wickets on which they are played.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Describes the Role of Phosphorus in Nutrition; Tells Where to Obtain This Mineral

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

There are at least 11 different mineral salts which are essential to the structure or functioning of the human body. But of these, only four—calcium, phosphorus, iron and iodine—require the careful consideration of the homemaker. That is because a diet which furnishes adequate amounts of these four will automatically provide the others. But when the diet is deficient in any one of these four minerals, disastrous consequences may result.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that every homemaker should know something of their functions, and what foods supply them. In this article, we shall deal specifically with phosphorus.

Versatile Phosphorus

It has been said that if the biographies of the elements could be written, that of phosphorus would be the most interesting of all. That is because there are 14 different ways in which compounds of phosphorus may function in the body. In fact, it is doubtful if any other inorganic element enters into such a diversity of compounds or plays an important part in so many functions.

This mineral is indispensable for all the active tissues of the body and likewise helps in regulating the neutrality of the blood. It is found abundantly in nerve tissue.

Needed for Teeth and Bones

Its most significant role, however, is to team with calcium in giving rigidity to the bones and teeth. Approximately 90 per cent of the total phosphorus of the body and 99 per cent of the calcium are found in the bones and teeth.

Both these minerals are required in generous amounts, but almost twice as much phosphorus as calcium should be supplied every day. Moreover, children should have about one-and-one-half times as much phosphorus as adults, to meet the requirements for growth.

The muscles and soft tissues need phosphorus as well as the bones, and in the dietary of the child, they must share with the bones, the phosphorus that is provided by the food. Hence, the greater need for this mineral during childhood.

Phosphorus and Rickets
If a child's diet is deficient in phosphorus or calcium, or if conditions are not favorable for their proper absorption, rickets will occur. This devastating nutritional disease may result in deformities of the chest and pelvic bones, as well as the more familiar bow legs and knock-knees.

Investigators have spent many years in discovering how to prevent and cure this disease which has made life miserable for so many children and which has far-reaching effects that carry over into later life. For example, adults who have bow-legs or a pigeon breast as a result of childhood rickets, are always self-conscious because of their defects. And motherhood may be far more difficult for young women whose pelvic vic bones were deformed by rickets in their early years.

A Low-Phosphorus Diet

It was found that rickets may be associated with a low-phosphorus diet, even when the calcium content is high. And investigations also determined that there is a seasonal tide of blood phosphorus which corresponds to the amount of available sunlight. This led to the realization that sunlight—which we now know helps the body to manufacture vitamin D—is closely related to the proper utilization of phosphorus. And today it is well established that rickets can be prevented, or cured, by a diet containing liberal amounts of phosphorus, calcium and vitamin D. Vitamin D can be obtained from direct sunshine, but where this is not available in adequate amounts, cod-liver oil, irradiated foods, or those fortified with a vitamin D concentrate will supply this necessary substance.

Make Use of Sunlight

As we approach the season when the greatest amount of sunshine is available, homemakers should see to it that not only the children, but every member of the family spend as much time as possible in the sunlight. This will help to promote the proper utilization of phosphorus and calcium. And both teeth and bones will benefit, as well as the general health.

Where to Find Phosphorus

Every homemaker should acquaint herself with the foods that supply phosphorus most abundantly, so that she will be prepared to include this mineral in the diet every day. Egg yolk and dried beans are both valuable sources of phosphorus. So are whole grain cereals and lean meats. In fact, cereals and meats have this in common—both are rich in phosphorus and deficient in calcium. Whole grain breads are likewise important for their phosphorus content. And on a percentage basis, cheese ranks very high as a carrier of this mineral.

Cocoa also contains a large percentage, though it must be remembered that, as a rule, only small quantities of cocoa are consumed at one time. Many nuts, including almonds, peanuts, pecans and walnuts, furnish significant amounts. And this mineral is found in dried fruits such as raisins, figs and prunes, and in much smaller quantities in vegetables, such as spinach, cauliflower, string beans, carrots and Brussels sprouts.

Milk supplies phosphorus, though not in such generous amounts as calcium. However, if you follow the rule of a quart of milk daily for every child and a pint for each adult, you will contribute materially to the phosphorus and calcium content of the diet.

COMMENTS

Lewis Burke

—And R U Listenin'?

Carrizozo: The town of cool nights.

Despite Mr. Roosevelt's apparent prejudice toward business men, industrial top-notchers are begging their few surviving colleagues to stick with the Roosevelt administration. Their pleas repudiate reports of a business boycott of the New Deal.

At Livingston, Montana, merchants co-operated with the Montana Stockgrowers' Association and advertised, "No Argentine beef sold here."

It would be an excellent idea for the retailers to inaugurate a like program in Carrizozo.

The Titsworth Co. of Capitan is headquarters for practically everything. And it's a fact — their prices are reasonable.

The following letter was received by the writer Tuesday of this week:

Dear Commentator:

"Well, you are jumping on poor Roosevelt, are you? Don't you know he's the best President that the Argentine, Canada, England and Italy ever had? Why the King might even make him a Knight of the AAA (or WPA) while he is over here. He might even get to kiss the King's hand while His Majesty is here visiting."

"Don't bother about Roosevelt buying Argentine beef, etc. New Mexico stockmen will find some way to pay their taxes in spite of him until the next election. After that, we won't be bothered. We'll then be able to tie tin cans to such persons as him, Farley, John Lewis and Madame Perkins and head them towards England, Russia or Argentina.

"Even we Democrats can get enough after a time — and when a good old hard-headed Democrat gets enough of anything, he's had ENOUGH. We are the easiest people on earth to get along with if you treat us half way right — but you start treating us rough, you'd better back up and start hunting a cyclone cellar in which to hide.

"When we do go on the war-path, something is going to rip you. You are going to hear more noise of that ripping in 1940. We don't want any more Roosevelts or Farleys — and we dog-goned sure won't vote for anybody they recommend. We are at last fed up.

Yours truly,
— You'd be surprised.
