Nine years ago in Roswell, N. M., County Clerk Edward Penfield, Fred P. Bowser and John K. Funk were schoolmates. A few years ago, John left Roswell and located in Tulsa, Okla., and as the old story goes, he fell in love with Miss Gavin Metzger at Tulsa and they were engaged. Being of a wealthy family, John, remembering the happy school days spent with his old associates, decided to do something out-of-the-ordinary and he carried out his desire. Knowing that Eddie was clerk of Lincoln County and that Fred was the J. P. at Picacho, he chartered an airplane and with his bride-to-be, flew to Roswell and thence to Carrizozo by auto. He had his marriage license made out by Eddie, went back to Picacho and had the wedding ceremony performed by Fred. John said that he wanted to pay a visit to his schoolmates and as a part of his honeymoon trip, nothing could please him better than the above novel manner in which he had things planned.

If you are even to a moderate degree given to superstition, you will be interested in this one, which was told a few weeks ago at Marysville, Mo., by a physician, who laid no claim to believe in superstition and is still wondering what caused him to have such an experience. Dr. S. E. Russell was waiting on a patient and at the same time wondering how another patient of his, Jim Donaldson, who lived in another part of town, was getting along. All at once he began to feel weak and a mist came before his eyes. He placed his hands over his eyes which caused his patient to ask if he was ill. He answered no, and told the patient to wait awhile. He said that all at once, the mist cleared and he saw in an adjoining room, his patient, James, who was just getting out of bed. He put on his clothes and was in the act of lacing his shoes, when he fell over dead. Saying nothing to the party on whom he was waiting and as soon as he dismissed him, he reached for his phone to call and ask about James. Before he could get his party, a man entered the office and said, "I am sorry about Jim Donaldson," to which the physician asked "why?" The other answered by saying, "He died a short time ago, just as he was tying his shoe after dressing himself."

Brooding more over the matter, he came home one night, tied her in a chair, cut off her lovely hair, made it into a pillow and used it for his dog's bed. ADVENTURERS' CLUB

HEADLINES FROM THE LIVES OF PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELF!

"Fanged Death"

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

Distinguished Adventurer Graham Babcock of Paterson, N. J., takes the Adventurers' club rostrum today, and Graham wins ten bucks because he wouldn't take another fellow's advice. If he'd done what that fellow told him to he'd have had no story to tell us today. But Graham paid no attention to that fellow, and the result is one of the most thrilling, blood-curdling adventure yarns I've seen in a coon's age.

It was in August, 1913. Graham was just seventeen years old, lived in Suffern, N. Y., and spent his spare time hunting in the Ramapo mountains, in season and out. At the time, hunting was out of season, so Graham carried his rifle in a gun case and took along a fishing basket, just in case he happened to meet up with a game warden. Game wardens can put you in the jug for hunting in August, but there's no law against fishing for minnies at that time of year.

Graham started out up the tracks of the Erie railroad and walked as far as the Ramapo crossing. From there he planned to cut into the mountains, but the crossing tender, an old friend of his and an old-timer in that section tried to dissuade him. "There's a rattlesnake den just up the side of that gully," he said, "and rattlers are mean at this time of year. Better go in up the track a ways."

Graham Unknowingly Walks Into Nest of Snakes.

But Graham had seen rattlers before and he wasn't afraid of them. Whenever he'd come on them, they had always wriggled out of sight as fast as they could. He forgot, though, that a nest of rattlers in the late summer season might actually be LOOKING for trouble.

Graham climbed up the side of the hill and walked along a ridge until he came to a place where a big boulder jutted out over the edge of a small cliff. There wasn't a rattler in sight, and he began to think he must have passed the nest the crossing tender had spoken of. He saw some berry bushes a few yards away and set his gun and fishing basket down on the boulder while he climbed up to pick a few berries. But Graham never picked so much as a single berry. The minute he reached for them, things began to happen.

As he stooped down to part the leaves of the first bush, a rattler shot out from beneath it and landed almost at his feet. Graham leaped back. As he did, the skirling rattle of another rattler sounded from a niche in the rock just over his head. Then, all at once, that sound was repeated from a dozen directions. From the right. From the left. From behind him! The sound swelled into a low, ominous hum.

Graham realized, then, that he was right in the middle of that nest of vipers. He took a quick step forward—and stopped dead in his tracks. "A big one lay right in my path," he says, "colled and ready to strike, its whole body swelling and vibrating with anger, as if it were being blown up by a bellows. Its tail sounded its threatening war-note and its head was flattened and drawn back for the kill. I tried to back up, and right behind me near a rotted tree trunk another one reared its head and rattled and hissed.

"Talk about things flashing through your mind! In a split second I remembered everything I had ever heard about rattlers. I remembered my grandfather telling that this was the worst time of year to be bitten, for in late August when the rattler is about to seek his winter quarters his venom is twice as poisonous as it is at other times. And I remembered hearing that the speed with which the venom takes effect depends on where you are bitten. My uncle once told me of a woman bitten in the breast who lived just 17 minutes."

Those thoughts went through Graham's mind in just the smallest fraction of a second, and they stirred him into action. Over his head was a tree limb. He leaped for it, caught it, and swung out from between the snakes that had him cornered. He landed in an open space, grabbed up a stick and began felling the bushes to right and left. "I made for the boulder where I had left my gun and fishing basket," he says, "still beating frantically with my stick. Another snake struck at the stick, and I threw it away as hard as I could and tore through the bushes like a madman."

Suddenly He Heard Another Low-Pitched, Ominous Hum. Graham reached the boulder where he had left his gun, out of breath and shaking like a leaf. He had hurt his knee in his mad scramble through the brush and now, believing himself out of danger he sat down to look it over. And then, suddenly, he heard another low-pitched, ominous buzz.

Says he: "I looked back over my shoulder just in time to see another big rattler leap at me. How I ever did it I'll never know, but from a sitting position, without getting to my feet, I actually jumped three feet to one side, and the snake missed me by a foot. It knocked over the basket and landed coiled right on my gun case. I ran to the left edge of the boulder and broke a limb from a green sapling as if it were a pipe-stem. I saw the infuriated snake make ready for another strike and I knew it wouldn't miss this time.

"Behind me was the cliff. In front of me was the snake, and I couldn't get off the boulder without getting in range of its strike. Then I saw two other rattlers edging up to join in the attack, and although it was a terrible jump I preferred the cliff to death by snake-bite. I hesitated only an instant, hoped for the best, and leaped into space."

The top of a cedar tree broke Graham's fall. He landed in a bed of pine needles below it and he says he fairly bounced as he landed. "Luck was with me," he says, "and the only injuries I suffered were the terrible scratches on my body, arms and face. I went home leaving my gun and basket right where they were, and I didn't go back for them until after cold weather set in and the snakes were all holed up in their winter quarters."

Origin of Morgan Horse Has Been Traced to Other Breeds

The founder of the house of Morgan in the horse world was a horse born about 1780—the property of Justin Morgan, who kept a tavern in Springfield, Mass., until he moved to Randolph, Vt., in the same year that was foaled the colt which was to perpetuate its owner's name. No one seems to have any knowledge of the blood strains of this famous sire, writes Capt. Maxwell M. Corpening in the Chicago Tribune. Some historians of Morgan horses say he was anything from a thoroughbred to a Canadian pony. Others claim many infusions of Arab, Barb, and Turkish blood. Be that as it may, a good horse was produced.

This founder of the clan was named Figure at birth, but renamed

Justin Morgan when its offspring started to gain fame. He was a small horse, only 14 hands high and weighing 950 pounds; dark bay in color, with black legs, mane, and tail. The latter were coarse and heavy but not thick. His head was good but not very small—the forehead broad, with small ears set far apart. His eyes were medium size, dark, and prominent, with a pleasant but spirited expression. His back and legs were his most noticeable points—the former being extremely short, with shoulder blades and hip bones long and sloping. The legs were short, close-jointed, and thin, but with very wide bones and extremely well muscled for a horse of his size.

HEALTH

• Rapid heart beat is often found in healthy individuals, of all ages.

By Dr. James W. Barton

"THE term paroxysmal tachycardia is when the heart rate suddenly becomes rapid and after a variable time—a few seconds, hours or days—just as suddenly goes back to its normal rate." During an attack the heart rate may go as high as 250 beats to the minute, and then drop to a rate of 72 to 76. The cause of this very rapid beating of the heart is unknown but something—shock, worry, disappointment—interferes with the "starter" of the heart beats and the beat gets out of its regular rhythm or regularly.

Fortunately the great majority of cases occur in the two heart chambers—the auricles—which receive the blood, not the two chambers—ventricles—from which the blood is pumped to lungs, and to all the other parts of the body. This auricle type is not dangerous.

Dr. W. Ford Connell in Canadian Medical Association Journal states: "Paroxysmal-auricular tachycardia is found in healthy adults of all ages. Heart disease may or may not be present. This very rapid beating may be just for a few beats or it may go on for as long as six days. Attacks lasting a few minutes are much the commonest. Neither exercise nor drugs makes any change in the rate whereas in a normal heart or a diseased heart, drugs and exercise affect the rate."

Attacks Stop Suddenly. Most persons feel discomfort during an attack—a fluttering in the chest or pounding in the neck.

Usually no treatment is necessary as the attacks stop suddenly without treatment. Many of these individuals have learned some method of preventing or shortening an attack by stimulating the large nerves supplying heart, lungs, and digestive apparatus. Thus holding the breath or pressing with the fingers on first one eyeball and then the other, or pressing firmly on the large blood vessel in front of neck which can be seen to bulge if watched closely, or the drinking of ice water, or by bringing on a vomiting spell, often stops an attack.

The drug that has been found most useful is quinine (not quinine) and it can be given by mouth, five grains every hour for 10 hours. As this very rapid heart beat naturally alarms the individual, Dr. Connell suggests that its lack of danger be explained.

Excess Tissue Water May Cause Epilepsy

It is sometimes difficult to tell whether a patient is hysterical or having an epileptic attack or "fit." However, in epilepsy the patient is always unconscious and may do harm to himself—biting his tongue or others if not protected. In hysteria the patient is not unconscious and is aware of all that he is doing and all that is going on about him. He is usually, but not always, trying to be the center of attention. This is called a defensive mechanism.

While the cause of epilepsy is still unknown, investigators have found that food is a factor in causing attacks, as a group of 11 epileptics, having one or more attacks a day, were kept entirely free of attacks by being starved for 10 days. Other investigators then found that if liquids were reduced the epileptic attacks stopped, occurred less often or were not so severe. From this finding—excess water in the tissues causes epilepsy—a test for epilepsy has been discovered.

Epilepsy Test Perfected.

Dr. McQuarrie and Peeler, in Journal of Clinical Investigation, tell of their study of the effects of using extract of the pituitary gland in cases of suspected epilepsy. This extract—pitressin—has the effect of preventing the escape of water from the tissues by way of the kidneys. The patients were forced to drink water and were then given the pitressin. In cases of true epilepsy this forced drinking of water and the keeping of it in the body by means of the pitressin brought on epileptic attacks. A series of other individuals who were forced to drink large quantities of water and were also given pitressin did not have any attacks.

The point then is that before giving the regular treatment for epilepsy to patients it should first be learned, by this method, that the case is really epilepsy.

The present successful treatment: 1. Cutting down by one-half on all starch foods—bread, sugar, potatoes, pastries. 2. Cutting down by one-half on all liquids—water, tea, coffee, milk, cocoa, soft or hard drinks. 3. Increasing the fat foods—butter, cream, fat meats. 4. A daily dose of phenobarbital as prescribed by a physician. Copyright.—WNU Service.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Reveals Several Reasons Why Food Sometimes Disagrees; Warns Against Eating When Tired or Worried

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A GREAT many people have the unfortunate habit of warning friends and acquaintances against this or that food, on the ground that it is "difficult to digest," or "is almost sure to cause digestive distress, especially if eaten at the wrong time of day or in combination with the wrong foods." Indeed, to hear some men and women recount the various dishes that are best left alone, is to wonder how they manage to find anything to eat at all, in view of the many good foods they consider taboo!

Certainly there is no objection to food as the topic of conversation.

It is so basic to good health that it should be uppermost in the mind of every individual who desires to promote physical and mental efficiency. And it is also natural for a person to be guided by past experience in determining what he should eat, and what it may be advisable for him to avoid.

But it is a grave mistake for one person to warn another against any food or combination of foods on the ground that it will cause digestive distress. For the truth of the matter is that under proper conditions, a normal, healthy person should have no difficulty in digesting almost any food that has a place in the well-balanced diet.

Food Dislikes Often Unfounded

I once met a woman who told me that her contented-looking husband could, and did, eat most everything 'cept horseshoes. Menu planning was simple for her! And how different from the problems of the home-maker who must try to reconcile her menus, both with the food dislikes of various members of the family, and with the foods that they declare they can't eat, for fear of digestive distress.

It is true, of course, that individuals differ greatly, and occasionally a food that can and should be eaten regularly by most people, will cause distress in an individual case. But that is no indication that the food will have the same effect on another person, and it is misleading either to proffer or accept advice of this nature from friends.

It may be that the victim has an allergy to the food in question—that he reacts to it differently than the majority of people. But there is also the possibility that the prejudice exists because of some previous distress, caused, not by the food itself, but by the circumstances under which it was eaten.

Perhaps a clearer understanding of some of the mental and physiological factors influencing digestion would dispel many of the bugaboos that cause people to avoid various, wholesome foods and food combinations, and to warn others against them.

Emotions Influence Digestion

Scientists have established that the stomach is capable of reacting to almost every emotion and sensation that is experienced by men and women. Thus, how you eat becomes quite as important as what you eat. And any food or combination of foods consumed to a large meal when exhausted from too much physical or mental work. A brief rest before eating will put the body in much better shape to receive and assimilate the food.

Then, if the meal is served in pleasant surroundings, and if the food is flavorful and well cooked, the chances are that it will be digested satisfactorily by all normal individuals.

Be Tranquil at Mealtimes

In view of the fact that tranquility of mind is essential to the proper utilization of food, home-makers should remember never to discuss unpleasant subjects at meal times. Don't nag the children about eating, or choose that time to discuss their lapses from discipline. Don't talk about finances or take up real or fancied grievances with your husband. Let such matters wait until the meal has been digested.

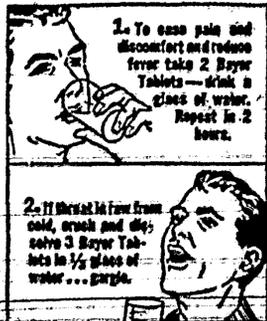

If these suggestions were more generally followed, it is almost certain that we would hear much less conversation about foods that cause distress, much more wholesome talk about the pleasures of the table.

To Check Constipation Get at Its Cause!

If constipation has you down so you feel heavy, tired and dopey, it's time you did something about it. And something more than just taking a physic! You should get at the cause of the trouble.

If you eat the most refined food most people eat, the chances are the difficulty is simple—you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean heavy food. It's a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines.

If this common form of constipation is your trouble, eat Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day and drink plenty of water. All-Bran isn't a medicine—it's a cereal of the most nutritious cereal. And it will help you not only to get regular but to keep regular, day after day. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

PATTERN SEWING CIRCLE DEPARTMENT

No. 1691—Little girls should be seen (if not heard!) in simple, bare-skirted frocks like this one, that looks was at the waist, flaunts a narrow ribbon sash, and bright rows of braid or ribbon. For school and everyday, make this dress of gingham, percale or batiste, with ricrac for trimming. It will be equally pretty for dress-up, in taffeta or organdie, with velvet or ribbon trim.

Slimmering Lines. No. 1696—A lovely dress for afternoon parties is this new one with a princess skirt, v-neckline and jabot trim. Every detail is designed to make you look slimmer. The bodice fits beautifully, thanks to darts on the shoulders and gathers above the waist. And of course nothing could be more slenderizing than a skirt like this. Choose flat crepe, small-figured silk, tulle, gorgette or chiffon for this design.

Thompson, Voss Doing Good Job: McLaughlin

By ROBERT McSHANE

AMONG the year's minor miracles of sport must be included the Chicago Blackhawks' long slide from the championably hockey team of 1938 to their present position of fall-enders.

Winners of the Stanley cup last year, the Blackhawks have languished near and in the National Hockey league cellar all season. Even a change of managers failed to bring new life to the club. When McLaughlin, Frederic McLaughlin, Blackhawk boss, replaced Manager Bill Stewart with Paul Thompson, he undoubtedly expected the change to be reflected in the all-important wins and losses column. However, the Blackhawks continued to lose games as regularly as before.

Fans, demanding to know the reason for their club's failure to win games, have been answered by the major.

"There's plenty wrong with the Blackhawks," he admitted, "but there won't be for long. There'll be plenty of trades at the end of the season. We know what we want. We know what we have to do to deserve the unflinching patronage of hockey fans, and we mean to deliver."

According to the owner, one of the principal reasons why his team hasn't delivered is the fact that Thompson took over a highly disorganized team. He had directed pre-season practice, bringing the Hawks into the regular season. They won four in a row, and then hit the toboggan. Stewart's illness kept him out of the pre-season work. Thompson drilled the men and Stewart took over when the league season started. Thompson was named manager January 3, when the team was sliding.

McLaughlin dispelled any doubts that might exist concerning his managerial appointment.

"I am thoroughly, completely and altogether satisfied with Thompson. Paul asked for Carl Voss as his coach, when we made the change. Carl played for 10 years—not on his size, his skating, his shot—but on his brains. Paul wants him. They work together beautifully and they are making progress."

Two years ago the Blackhawks dropped regular gymnastic work for the players. Now it is McLaughlin's firm belief that gym work is absolutely essential for any athlete. It has already been reinstated.

In regard to the Hawks' poor showing, he continued:

"When a hockey team begins floundering, as ours has recently, there's little a coach can do about it from the bench. The wasted effort, lack of timing, poor passing, failure to check and seeming futility of a team comes from pressing too much. Our boys are down at the bottom of the heap. They're trying desperately to flash their best form. They try too hard, so they blow everything. We're correcting these things."

Next year, the big chief promises, things are going to be different. Chicago is going to get the world's best hockey, and the Blackhawks are going to furnish it. The major is going to try every promising youngster that comes along; he's going to do a lot of trading and he's going to see to it that the boys put in their proper number of gymnasium conditioning hours.

McLaughlin is convincing. After listening to him you really believe his definite statement that "we're going to build the greatest hockey team in America."

Handicap History

The Santa Anita $100,000 handicap, outstanding race of the Pacific coast, had its start back in 1917 under the guiding hand of Jim Coffroth, San Francisco boxing promoter.

Coffroth had purchased an estate near San Diego. He decided to go into the racing game at Tijuana where there was already a good track and wooden stands. The 1917 purse was $4,000. In 1921, when the second race was held, it paid $14,775 to the winner, Be Frank. Other winners were Mulciber, Rejube, Runstar, Atherstone, Carlaris and Sir Harry.

It wasn't long before the Tijuana track gave way to Agua Caliente, a $10,000,000 resort with a top-notch racing plant. In 1930 it was known as the Agua Caliente $100,000 handicap. Gambling finally went out and Caliente was closed.

It was a gloomy time for racing until California legalized betting. A track, promoted by Doc Charley Strub, was built on the "Lucky" Baldwin estate at Arcadia by several wealthy turf enthusiasts.

The first of the present Santa Anita handicaps was held in 1935, with a $100,000 purse. It was the same race that had started back in 1917 in Tijuana, under Coffroth, who long ago faded out of the picture.

Galento Marches On

HEAVYWEIGHT Champion Joe Louis, one of the greatest fighting machines ever produced by the boxing game, will meet Two-Ton Tony Galento, roly-poly knight of the taverns, some time in June through the courtesy of Mike Jacobs, promoter extraordinary.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about this fight is that it possibly could occur. Louis, who has had no difficulty with the cream of contenders, was not misnamed when some sportswriter, in a brilliant burst invented the title, "Brown Bomber." That's just what he is. His lethal wallop has the same effect as dynamite.

Joe Louis

Tony, on the other hand, is as graceful as a bear wagon, and according to reports, has somewhat the same capacity. He is an accomplished scowler and his vocabulary is not bound by ordinary restrictions. Nevertheless, fast thinking fight fans have pointed out that he can't win by making faces, and he really shouldn't devote more than one round to calling Louis a bum.

Galento has all the color necessary for publicity purposes. His frequent poses over a glass of beer, his black, murderous cigar, and his rough and ready wit have brought him squarely in the limelight. His lack of fistic ability probably won't interfere with the gate: His knack of getting publicity, both good and bad, will cause the turnstiles to click much more rapidly than the fight will justify.

It's hard to blame Promoter Jacobs for the coming fiasco. He has a saleable commodity, and naturally intends to capitalize on it. But it is a reflection on today's heavyweights. Though little more than a rough and rugged clown, Galento has been designated as No. 1 contender. That doesn't make the rest of the leather pushers look too good.

This delightful little shambles will not make boxing's history more glorious. But the champ is running out of competition, and Galento will be well-paid for his sacrifice.

Sport Shorts

FRANK CARIDEO, former Notre Dame star, has been appointed backfield coach at the University of Iowa. . . Glenn Schoey (Pop) Warner, recently assigned as Temple university football coach, has been named advisory coach at San Jose state college, California. . . Don Heap, former all-American at Northwestern, is a freeman in Evanston, Ill. . . Baron Gottfried von Cramm, star of Germany's Davis Cup team in 1937, will return to international tennis competition—but he will not play for Germany. . . Members of the British Ryder Cup team have been notified that their wives will not be allowed to make the trip to the United States this year. . . Tommy Henrich has made almost $50,000 in his two seasons with the Yankees.

Zeke Bonura

Luke Sewell of the Dodgers says Zeke Bonura will have to learn to hit curve ball pitching now that he's in the National league. . . The Pirates will cover 8,245 miles during a spring training. . . For the first time in 10 years no change was made in the American league's staff of umpires. . . Carelessness with glove laces is responsible for far more cases of eye injury in the ring than solid punches. . . The lower house of the Wisconsin legislature recently adopted a measure congratulating Howie Weiss, Wisconsin football star.

Cub Captains

WHEN the Chicago Cubs, training at Avalon, Calif., called their first fall squad roll recently, five former players who have served as captains of National league teams were present and accounted for.

The executive list includes Bill Herman, present captain of the Cubs; Gabby Hartnett, Woody English, Gus Mancuso and Dick Bartell.

Woody English succeeded Charley Grimm as captain when Grimm was named manager in 1932. He held that position until he was traded to Brooklyn in 1935. Woody was purchased recently by the Cubs from the Cincinnati Reds.

Gus Mancuso was captain of the New York Giants at the time he was obtained by the Cubs in the biggest, most widely known trade of the year.

Dick Bartell, obtained in the same deal that brought Mancuso to the Cubs, was captain of the Phillies before his sale to the Giants after the 1934 season.

Though this array of executive talent may look formidable, Manager Gabby Hartnett is not worried. Gabby is ready and anxious to have every man a captain as long as he is in charge. The ex-captains are all aggressive players, and that's right down his alley. He has no worries that Bill Herman won't be able to protect his position as incumbent chief.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

CLIP AND DRAW OUT FABRIC THREADS

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS; I had been wanting some really handsome velvet roses to pep up an evening dress. I was thrilled to find in your Book 2, instructions for making them from materials I already had. I would also like to thank you for the knitted rag rug in Book 1. My Mother spent many happy hours making it last winter."

"I thought you might be interested in a luncheon set I have just finished. It was planned to go with a set of blue dishes. There are four mats and a long runner in medium blue linen with bands of old fashioned needle weaving in darker blue across the ends. Just two edges of the napkins are banded with the weaving."

We can imagine how attractive the table must be set with these mats and the blue dishes. Some

TIPS to Gardeners

Flowers for a Purpose

GARDENERS want flowers for house bouquets, for beautification of the yard, or both. To be certain of an abundance of flowers for cutting throughout the growing months, however, the gardener need plant packets of only three or four of the following flowers:

Annuals—snapdragon, aster, calendula, calliopsis, candytuft, carnation, bachelor button, cosmos, dahila, larkspur, annual lupin, marigold, nasturtium, salpiglossis and zinnia.

Perennials—columbine, coreopsis, gallardia grandiflora, perennial lupin, pyrethrum (painted daisy) shasta daisy and delphinium.

For earliest bloom, the following are recommended by Gilbert Bentley, flower expert: Calliopsis and candytuft among the annuals, and coreopsis, delphinium and pyrethrum among the perennials.

For late-blooming cut flowers, grow zinnia, marigold, gallardia, snapdragon, aster, cosmos and dahila.

Improved Oration

It is a thing of no great difficulty to raise objections against another man's oration; nay, it is a very easy matter; but to produce a better in its place is a work extremely troublesome.—Plutarch.

of you who have pink dishes might like to try the same idea in tones of rose. Use a rather coarse linen. Prepare the work for the weaving by drawing out the fabric threads as for hemstitching. Each step is shown here in the diagram. Either linen or mercerized embroidery thread may be used.

Sewing Book No. 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroideries, contains 48 pages of step-by-step directions which have helped thousands of women. If your home is your hobby you will also want Book 1—SEWING for the Home Decorator. Order by number, enclosing 25 cents for each book. If you order both books, copy of the new Rag Rug Leaflet will be included free. Those who have both books may secure leaflet for 5 cents in postage. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. JUST FUN

Sounds Probable
Magistrate—You are charged with assault and battery by knocking this man down at a street crossing.
Motorist—Not guilty, your Honor, absolutely. He started across in front of me. I stopped to let him go ahead, and it was such a shock he fainted.

His Dish
Jane—George says I look good enough to eat.
Jean—He always did like plain fare.

Just Sales Talk
House Agent—This is a house without a flaw.
Prospective Client—Gosh! What do you walk on?

No Come Down
Mr. Smith—My wife came from a very large family. Did yours?
Mr. Brown—No, she brought it with her.

HUNTER-HUNTED

"Is that dog good to hunt?"
"Is he? I have to hunt for him a dozen times a day!"

Denial
"Is Kathleen going to marry that magistrate?" asked Elsie, with interest.
"I don't know," replied Betsy.
"He proposed last night."
"Well, didn't she accept him?"
"No; she asked for time to think it over and he gave her six months."

SAFETY TALKS

Mischivous Hands
MAYBE he picked up the habit about the time he couldn't resist pulling the pig-tails of the girl who sat ahead of him in grammar school. But even though they were "mischivous" in their school days, adult man (and woman) has a lot of trouble keeping his hands and fingers out of mischief.

The National Safety council reports that of all accidents suffered during 1937 by persons who were at work, 33 per cent were hand and finger cases. Legs and feet were injured in 24 per cent of the occupational accident cases. The human trunk was injured in 19 per cent, or the third largest, number of cases.

Other parts of the body and the frequency with which they were injured: arms, 11 per cent; head (other than eyes), 6 per cent; eyes, 2 per cent. The council said general accidents accounted for 3 per cent of the cases.

Uncle Phil Says

A Reminder
"Are your neighbors honest?" the old Negro was asked.
"Yasir, dey is."
"But you keep that loaded shotgun near your hen coop."
"Yas, dat's to keep 'em honest."

A Day Dream
Tom—My wife had a dream last night and dreamt she was married to a millionaire.
Bill—You're lucky, old chap, my wife dreams that in the daytime.

Not by Compulsion
The best "improving" of moral character is by advice and example.
"It isn't loaded" never reassured a living soul.
A friend is one who thinks you are a dear old cuds when your opinion differs from his.

Hardly an Instance of It
Does any man become a millionaire by his own efforts who wasted money in his youth?
Safety is the dividend paid by caution.
When a dog growls over his food he likes it, but with a man it is different.

And Release is Easier
The boredom of having too much of everything is no greater than the boredom of having nothing.
Vanity dies hard; in some obstinate cases it outlives the man.
How to make the best of life: Dodge some of the drudgery.

WATCH GEORGE WOOD CLOSELY AS HE ROLLS UP HIS JOY-SMOKIN'

- 1 THE "MAKIN'S" Ready with the paper, ready with the tobacco! And look at what he rolls—yes, sir, Prince Albert! His name is George E. Wood (insurance) and he says: "Start with Prince Albert and you're all set. I got a yen for P.A. and you're about to see why..."
- 2 LAYS RIGHT! P.A. snug-goes right down in the paper, pinches up tight, thanks to its "crimp cut." "I'll say it rolls firm and neat," says Wood. "It's the easiest-handling 'makin's' tobacco I know of. That special cut helps Prince Albert to smoke cooler and taste mellow..."
- 3 ROLLS RIGHT! It's so easy to get the "hang" of rollin' 'em if you use P.A. The picture can't show how quickly Wood twirls up his "makin's," but it's only a matter of seconds. "And speakin' of taste," he says, "well, Prince Albert has more taste—more smoke-joy—and no bite."
- 4 READY! GO! Look at that smile on George Wood's face as he lights up his mellow-smoking "makin's" cigarette. "Showing a man with a P.A. tin peeking out of his pocket," he says, "and I'll show you a real contented smoker who's enjoying a smooth 'makin's' cigarette."

BANKING LOOKS AHEAD

Teamwork Wins

The traditional American formula for success is teamwork, cooperation, mutual helpfulness. Few men reach the top purely through their own efforts. Rather, they succeed because they cooperate with and have the cooperation of others. Likewise no nation can achieve and maintain a standard of living such as we have in America without teamwork among all classes and groups. If we are to go forward to greater prosperity in the future, we must do it hand in hand as a united people. This bank will continue to cooperate for the best interests of the community and nation.

A Giant of American Commerce Celebrates Its 100th Birthday

In March, 1839, William F. Harnden Began Carrying Packages in a Large Leather Bag and That Marked the Beginning of the Express Business Which Now Employs 57,000 Men Who Cover More Than 275,000 Miles of Railroad, Motor, Air and Water Routes.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A HUNDRED years ago the ailing son of a New England widow had an idea for a new business. Equipped only with a large leather bag, which he carried in his hand as he traveled by train and steamboat, he started his enterprise.

Today that business has 23,000 offices, uses 10,500 vehicles in its operation and employs 57,000 men who cover 213,000 miles of railroads, 20,000 miles of water routes, 33,000 miles of air lanes and 10,500 miles of motor roads.

The young man who started all of this was William F. Harnden and his new enterprise was the express business.

Harnden was born in Reading, Mass., August 23, 1813, the son of a poor man who was unable to give him little, if any education. While very young he entered the furniture factory of his cousin, Sylvester Harnden, and there learned the trade of cabinet-making. Then his father died and young Harnden was called upon to support his widowed mother.

In 1834 he entered the employ of the Boston and Worcester railroad as a conductor and was in charge of the first passenger train run in New England. Later he became a passenger clerk and ticket master for the same railroad but after five years in railroad work was so exhausted by the long hours—16 hours a day—that he gave up his job and went to New York for a visit.

There he met a transplanted Bostonian, James W. Hale, agent for a Providence-New York steamboat and operator of a reading room and news service. Hale told Harnden that he had frequent requests for some one to do errands in Boston and suggested that a service of this sort offered opportunities for profitable work if some enterprising young fellow would organize it. Impressed with the idea Harnden made a contract for express service with the superintendent of the Boston and Providence railroad and the manager of the John W. Richmond, a steamer plying between Providence and New York. Then he advertised in a Boston newspaper on February 23, 1839, that he would run an "express car from Boston to New York and vice-versa four times a week."

As a matter of fact, this "car" was the large leather bag which he obtained and his non-too-strong back and hands to transport it. But the public didn't know that, and by March, 1839, he had enough packages to start operations.

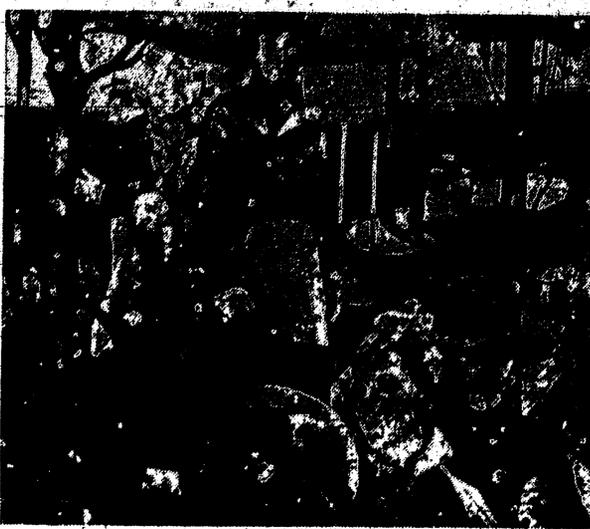

A Successful Venture.

The venture was such a success that Harnden acted as his own messenger only a few months. Then he had to have assistance. He established a clerk in an office on Wall street in New York since brokers' remittances and messages soon formed an important part of his business. Next he established an office in Boston, took his brother, Adolphus, into his employ to act as messenger between the two centers, and the second year opened an agency in Philadelphia.

When the steamship business of the Cunard company between Boston and Liverpool greatly stimulated the express business, its success suggested to him the extension of his service overseas. So in 1840 he formed a partnership with Dexter Brigham Jr., his New York agent, under the name of Harnden and Company.

That same year was marked by a personal tragedy in Harnden's life. When Commodore Vanderbilt's steamer, the Lexington, caught fire and burned in Long Island sound on January 13, 1840, Adolphus Harnden was one of the victims. When his body was washed ashore, 144 letters were found in the pouch he was carrying and were dried out and mailed. The $40,000 in money and other valuables he was carrying were lost, however. One of New England's important financial institutions owed $12,000 of the lost funds but, fearing to ruin Harnden's business, never pressed its claim.

The extension of Harnden's business into Europe changed the character of it somewhat. When offices were first established in the principal cities of England and France and later in Ireland, Scotland and Germany, their principal business was handling emigrant funds between Europe and America. But soon they were handling the emigrants themselves. Planning to expand his business in America by helping people secure the undeveloped lands in the West, he carried on an active campaign for immigration into the United States, using large red posters to proclaim the resources and opportunities in America.

To aid the company's traffic in "human express," Harnden secured special rates and privileges on the Enoch Train line between Liverpool and Boston and also the exclusive use of certain boat lines on the Erie canal. It is estimated that more than 100,000 emigrants were billed through from their European homes to new homes in the Middle West.

The inevitable result of Harnden's success with his new venture was to bring competitors into the field. One of these was Alvin Adams, an orphan boy from Vermont who came to Boston at the age of sixteen to make his fortune. He sought it in vain for 20 years—as a hotel clerk, family grocer and produce merchant. Then in 1840 he joined with P. B.

WILLIAM F. HARNDEN

Burke to form Burke and Company to compete with Harnden and Company.

Boston, however, looked upon Harnden as the originator of express service and gave him most of its business. Burke soon became discouraged and retired from the firm. But Adams, the alert, aggressive Yankee, was convinced that he could make good and persisted.

By 1843 Harnden and Company's European ventures had led them to neglect their American business and Adams quickly turned this fact to his own advantage. At first Adams and Company (formerly Burke and Company) had confined its operations to New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts. When Harnden sold his Philadelphia branch to Hatch and Bartlett, Adams expanded his southward to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington and during the next decade began covering the South along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Harnden died on January 14, 1845, after a five-year struggle with tuberculosis and the two parts of his company's business, the domestic and the European branch, were separated and sold. Eventually the American domestic business dropped his name and became known as Thompson, Livingstone and Company. This company, which changed its personnel and name several times, began extending its operations westward and southward until it came into competition with Adams and Company.

The European branch of the Harnden company kept its name until 1851 when unwise investments resulted in its ruin. Then the name of the founder was ished from the express business, although his son, William H. Harnden, was for a short time an employee of one of the new companies that came into existence—Wells-Fargo and Company. Eleven years after Harnden's death a memorial was set up over his grave in Mount Auburn cemetery near Cambridge, Mass., bearing the inscription "Erected by the Express Companies of the United States in the Year A. D. 1866." Thus they paid tribute to the "father of the express business" but, aside from this, little public recognition has ever been given the pioneer in this giant of American commerce.

Meanwhile the Adams company had been reaching westward as well as southward and eventually reached California via Panama. The territory which it now controlled was the most densely populated and most developed industrially of any in the United States. Consequently its business expanded enormously and by the early fifties Adams and Company was the best entrenched express company in its territory.

In July, 1854, it was able to buy out its principal rivals, including the former Harnden company, and it was reorganized under the name of the Adams Express company with a capital of $1,200,000. The express business had come a long way in the 15 years since young William F. Harnden had started it with his one leather bag!

Competition Begins.

Successful and powerful as the Adams Express company was, this did not prevent new competitors coming into the field. Many confined their operations to the limits of their own city and the collection and delivery of small merchandise in it. Others had agents or connections in several towns or cities while still others served all the principal trade centers in one state or in several states along a particular trade route.

By 1860 five companies were the acknowledged leaders in the business—Adams, the American, the National, the United States and Wells-Fargo and Company. Because Adams was so well entrenched on the north and south routes along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts the other companies were forced to seek new territory.

The part played by the express companies during the period of westward expansion, both before and after the war, is too well known to need much mention here. Included in that epic is the story of the famous "Pony Express" and many a thrilling yarn of adventure with hostile Indians and highwaymen while the stage coach lines were in operation.

Along with the development of our railroad system came a development of the operations of the express companies until July, 1818, when the seven large express companies were consolidated as a wartime measure under the name of the American Railway Express company. After the war, the united company was permitted to continue as a private enterprise. On March 1, 1829, the company was taken over by the railroads and renamed the Railway Express agency.

Then came the air express division of Railway Express. An agreement was later signed in July, 1934, with Pan-American Airways for international express, and the first shipment under the new system left Oakland, Calif., for Latin America on August 7, 1934. The next great boost for air express came on February 1, 1936, when 22 of the nation's major airlines joined.

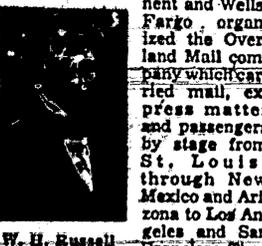

WILLIAM G. FARGO

Famous in the annals of the West is the name of Wells-Fargo. The men who made it thus were Henry Wells, born in New Hampshire December 12, 1805, and William George Fargo, born in New York May 20, 1818. Wells got his start in the express business as an agent for William F. Harnden and in 1841 formed a partnership with George Pomeroy to operate an express business between Albany and Buffalo.

The venture was not a success and suspended operations for a time. Then it was resumed with the assistance of Crawford Livingston under the name of Pomeroy and Company's Albany and Buffalo Express. In 1842 William G. Fargo became a messenger for this company and that marked the beginning of the association of the two men which was destined to make both of them famous. After a number of reorganizations and consolidations of the various express companies then in existence, Wells-Fargo and Company emerged in 1852 to operate between New York and San Francisco, carrying gold and silver out of the West and taking supplies into the gold regions.

Since there were no railroads then in that part of the West, Wells-Fargo carried their valuable parcels on stagecoaches and these treasure coaches soon became the prey of highwaymen who inaugurated the "stagecoach hold-up" which has become such a familiar Wild West tradition.

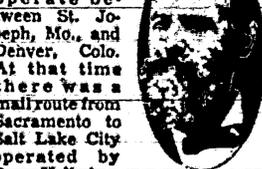

In 1857 the United States government asked for proposals from the express companies to transport the mails across the continent and Wells-Fargo organized the Overland Mail company which carried mail, express matter and passengers by stage from St. Louis, through New Mexico and Arizona to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

W. H. RUSSELL

Then came the discovery of gold in Colorado. From the Missouri river 2,000 miles westward to California was a stretch of almost-unknown wilderness without a single permanent settlement except the newly founded Mormon colony in Utah and a few posts established by the United States army. But where gold was, men, supplies and news must go.

So a stage line, called the Central Overland, California and Pikes Peak Express company, was established by the freighting company of Russell, Majors and Waddell to operate between St. Joseph, Mo., and Denver, Colo. At that time there was a mail route from Sacramento to Salt Lake City operated by Ben Holladay, and another between Sacramento and Salt Lake, run at infrequent intervals by John Hockaday. Both of these enterprises were absorbed by the new express company which, under the leadership of W. H. Russell, conceived the daring idea of establishing a regular fast mail route over the entire 2,000 miles between St. Joseph and California. Thus was the famous "Pony Express" born.

BEN HOLLADAY

When the Overland Telegraph company was completed in 1871, the usefulness of the Pony Express was at an end. Meanwhile its success and the threat of war had caused Wells-Fargo to transfer its Overland Mail company from the southern route to the central route. So Wells-Fargo bought up three stage lines between Salt Lake City and Sacramento, and consolidated them all into one. From 1866 to 1890 it continued to run a stagecoach mail, express and passenger service from St. Joseph to Sacramento despite the perils of blizzard and hostile Indians.

When the Union Pacific railroad and the Central Pacific met at Promontory Point, Utah, in 1869 to form a transcontinental railroad, Wells-Fargo sold out its stagecoach business and reverted to its former role of express and banking company and in 1870 became the dominant express company in all the western territory.

Congress Takes Bit in Teeth to Restore National Confidence

Vast Resources of Nation to Be Made Available Again for All People; Old-Line Democrats Responsible for Sudden Determination to Assume Congressional Leadership.

WASHINGTON.—The dictionary defines the word, "confidence," as meaning: "trust in, or reliance upon, another; a belief in a person or a thing." The dictionary might well have added that confidence is something quite intangible but yet it is a condition of national or state thought about its governmental policies as well as a condition of individual thought. It might have added, further, that confidence can be destroyed more easily than it can be maintained, or recreated when it once has been destroyed.

In any event, the thing about which we have heard most in Washington lately is the necessity for establishing a feeling of confidence throughout the country. The necessity exists, it is explained freely, because the depression continues and millions of persons, who would like to work, are not working. In some places, where political face-saving is important, the movement is called "business appeasement," but that is a difference between tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum. It remains as an effort to recreate national confidence so that all of the vast resources of the nation can be made available again for all of the people.

Congress Takes the Bit in Its Teeth

All of this is only a prelude to the declaration that: Congress has taken the bit in its teeth with a determination that indicates a unified effort to restore the country's confidence. It apparently is going to guide the policies and work out solutions for the various problems that are viewed as destructive of a feeling of assurance among the bulk of the people. In other words, congress seems to have assumed a leadership in national life that it has not had in recent years, and is moving sincerely to bring back prosperity.

President Hoover's Plans Wrecked by Stock Market

The course of events that has led up to the latest development (a development that has both political and economic significance) has been rather a wandering trail. It had its headwaters back in 1930 and 1931, when Herbert Hoover, then President, sought to stem the tide of rushing waters of depression by inviting dozens of business leaders to Washington for consultation. He was seeking to restore confidence, to encourage the country to feel safe. Those were days, it will be recalled when "prosperity was just around the corner." Mr. Hoover wanted to bring it out where it could be of some use.

Well, Mr. Hoover failed because the stock market crash had so destroyed the confidence of the country in him and in his policies of government that there was no possibility of recreating it. The folks simply would not believe in him, nor in any of his works at that time.

Along came the elections of 1932 and Mr. Roosevelt took over the job in 1933. Those days need not be reviewed, except to point out that no man ever had the complete confidence of a people as the new President held it. Congress did as it was told, thereafter. Of course, there were ups and downs but the scene was dominated by the personality of Mr. Roosevelt, a condition that continued through about six years.

That brings us to the mistakes in politics which Mr. Roosevelt made in 1938—reorganization of the government, proposed expanding of the Supreme court by appointment of six justices of his own choosing, charges that business leaders were attempting to subvert the New Deal policies and destroy the Roosevelt administration. This was the beginning. In quick succession, there came important gains for the Republicans in the 1938 elections, fear among many old line Democrats that their seats in congress were being jeopardized by mistakes of various New Deal agencies and laws, and in general a doubt that their party should be allowed to remain under New Deal leadership.

Old-Line Democrats Decide To Assume Leadership

And I believe it is the latter condition of belief among the old line Democrats that is chiefly responsible for the sudden blossoming of congressional determination to take leadership. Some observers hold the conviction that many members of the house and senate feel they should protect their own hides and that, to accomplish this, they must assume national leadership instead of leaving the policies to be theorized and blue-printed by such as Jerome Frank, Thurmond, Arnold, Tommy Corcoran, Secretary Ickes, and others of that type. That is only saying numerous house and senate members believe the country has lost confidence in that sort of leadership.

Only recently, it may be recalled, Mr. Roosevelt voiced an assurance that business would have no new taxes to burden it. He spoke confidently about the future. Others, reflecting the President's position, including Secretary Hopkins and Secretary Ickes spoke pieces of an assuring nature. This is the same Mr. Hopkins who used to be head of the relief spending.

What happened? The stock market that ruined Mr. Hoover's administration showed its confidence in the new statements of 1939 with only a little less feeling than it did in the years when prosperity was just around the corner. The market dipped down only a few days, but if the stock market can be regarded as an answer for any question, the stock market must have said, "Hokey!"

Shows Days of Rubber Stamp Congress Are Gone

Anyway, there arose immediately the new and very potent movement in congress for a program of "business appeasement." One of the first things to happen was a declaration by Senator Harrison, Mississippi Democrat and one of the really powerful men in the senate, for a cessation of spending. Or, specifically, Senator Harrison demanded a curtailment of spending, a start toward a balancing of the national budget, in the belief that the whole country is fearful of the gigantic national debt.

The foreign policies of the administration were dragged out onto the floor of the senate for examination under a magnifying glass. Of course, the senate did not force any real change in the international relations which Mr. Roosevelt has established. From long observation in Washington, I doubt that the senate's criticism of these policies was any too sound, but it had to engage in debate on the subject to let the country know it was watching everything that was being done. It obviously had the effect of demonstrating to the country that the days of the rubber stamp congress are gone, and it constitutes another bit of evidence of the new Washington leadership.

The real demonstration of congressional vitality, however, came the other day when Senator Harrison, as chairman of the senate finance committee, and Representative Doughton of North Carolina, as chairman of the house committee on ways and means, joined in a letter to Secretary Morgenthau, requesting a treasury statement on a tax program. The two congressional leaders urged a new and sound tax program and an administration reassurance against further heckling of business to the end that business would try to go ahead. What they were asking, therefore, were some signs which could give business, great or small, a feeling of confidence that the government at Washington would quit pulling hair.

Congress Will Go Slow on Increasing National Debt

There are numerous signs that congress is not going to be in any hurry at all to pass a law that will allow an increase in the total national debt. Present law provides that the treasury may issue notes and bonds up to $45,000,000,000. The current total is not so far below that figure, and Secretary Morgenthau has asked congress to boost the limit to $50,000,000,000. Congress apparently is not so sure that there should be an increase in the debt limit. It is a type of confidence—rather, a lack of confidence—that is plainly visible. I believe the debt total will have to be increased because there is no provision made for enough taxes to offset the vast spending program for relief and national defense upon which Mr. Roosevelt has launched. There is no place to get that money, therefore, except by borrowing. So about the only good that can come from congressional barking on this score is to awaken the country as to the dangers of its great national debt.

From all of these things, one is pretty likely to get the heebiejees. One can hardly help wondering where we are headed. But it seems to me that there probably is need for a confidence that thus far has not been mentioned in this discussion. This is a confidence in fundamental Americanism. The voters of the country can compel sound government on the part of those who make the policies and, on the surface, it appears now that the voters are telling congress what to do.

WNU Review

That was something. Rex carried into his bedroom the warming conviction that at least it was not his hostess who wanted to frighten him away from Halcyon Camp. This did not take him far on his mental journey, for he had never thought that it was. He undressed rapidly and got into bed. He was glad to be there. He was not wholly over his earlier experience, notwithstanding his gallant assertions. The evening had been a hard one. He fell asleep about one o'clock.

He was awakened almost immediately, it seemed to him, by a hand that clutched his arm and a voice that babbled incoherently at his bedside. He sat up with a jerk, and simultaneously flashed on the light at the head of his bed. Down in the hall the big clock was striking three—Halcyon Camp's pet hour for nocturnal visits. He had slept only two hours, but he was already as wide-awake as he had ever been in his life. His instant thought had been of Joan. It was Herbert Kneeland, however, who mouthed and jabbered at his bedside.

"Hale—for God's sakes—wake up. Hale! Hale!"

"Good Lord, man, I am awake. What's the matter? Anyone sick? Hurt?"

As he spoke Hale shook off the clutching hand, sprang out of bed, seized his dressing-gown from the chair where he had flung it, and slipped it over his pajamas. So distraught was his visitor that Hale had to break away almost by force from the other's frantic grasp. He now seized the young man's shoulders, pressed him backward into a chair, and stood over him, still gripping him and trying to steady him by eyes and hands.

"Kneeland, pull yourself together. Tell me what's happened. Quick. Every second may count."

"Nothing has happened!" Kneeland pulled away from the other's grip, and added with the gulp of a terror-stricken child, "I—I—just can't stand it. That's all. Oh, God!"

Hale crossed the room to the open door, closed it, and locked it. He remembered now that he had forgotten to lock it when he went to bed.

"Now," he said quietly, "tell me what this is all about. I think I understand it, but tell me, anyway." Kneeland's head had been swinging from side to side. Now it steadied suddenly. He stared at Hale incredulously but with a dawning hope.

"You— you understand?" he gasped. He added, under his breath and with a desperate backward glance at the closed door, "What do you understand?"

Rex answered the look, not the words.

"Don't worry," he soothed. "The door is locked. We won't be interrupted. Quiet down now and explain." He added gently, but with deep meaning, "He can't get in."

Kneeland drew a quick breath and covered his eyes with his hands.

"What must you think of me?" he muttered.

"I think you're the victim of one of the most heinous schemes that was ever tried on a poor devil," Hale said simply. "What I can't understand is why you've let it go on so long."

"How could I help myself?"

"There are a dozen ways in which you could have helped yourself. You're helping yourself now by coming to me and letting me straighten out this tangle. Why didn't you go to someone long ago?"

"Who could I go to? Who would have understood and believed? You see—you weren't here. And he—he's so infernally clever!"

"I know!" Hale spoke with difficulty. The unconscious pathos of that one sentence, "you see, you weren't here" had caught him by the throat.

"Well, it's over now," he said cheerfully. "We must—"

He was interrupted by a sharp rap at the door. Kneeland straightened as if under a galvanic shock, then cried out frantically.

"Don't let him in, Hale! Oh, Hale, for God's sake, don't let him in."

"We'll let him in, all right," Hale said grimly. "I've got something important to say to that gentleman. But I promise you that I'll keep you with me tonight. And this is the last time you will ever have to see him."

He started to rise but Kneeland sprang at him, caught his arms and tried to hold him back. He was like a madman in his terror, but he had little strength. Rex disengaged himself without difficulty and pushed the young man back into his chair.

"Be quiet," he said. "You haven't got a thing to be afraid of. But we must have a show-down, and this is the best time for it. Sit tight and leave everything to me. I understand the whole devilish situation."

A knock struck the door again. It was sharply imperative. Kneeland was almost beyond reason. He was in a frenzy of animal fear. Rex got him down on the chair and went to the door. He opened it, and Doctor Craig strode in. The doctor was cool and imperturbable. He nodded to Hale, then glanced at Kneeland. The young man cowered back against his chair with a groan, as if the glance had been a blow. Craig's tone was quietly friendly.

"I see my patient is here," he said. "I thought he would be. He has taken quite a fancy to you. I hope he hasn't disturbed you. He's been in a bad way the last few days. I'll take him along now."

"No, Craig, you won't take him along," Hale told him. "He's going to stay right here. By the time he's up tomorrow morning," he added inclusively, "you will be out of the house for good. Is that quite clear?"

"It's quite clear that you're making a fool of yourself again, Hale," Craig said mildly. "You mean well, but this is another situation you don't understand. I hoped the other break you made would be a lesson to you."

"I understand your whole damnable scheme," Hale brought out curtly. "If you think I don't, sit down and make yourself comfortable and

"If incidentally, you really drove the boy mad while you had him there," he went on, "it would have been just too bad. Probably that wasn't part of your scheme. Your plan was to give him just enough treatment to keep him about where he is now—terrified, desperately afraid of you, and yet trusting you as his only anchor. He was your best friend. He has always been. He has kept you here. He has fitted up a laboratory for you that any man in your position would be proud of. What was your return for all this? You have put him through hell. Compared to what you were doing to him, plain murder would have been a merciful thing. When I think of what you have made him suffer, I could strangle you with my bare hands."

"You fool!" Craig was choking with fury. "I'll make you regret this."

Hale ignored the interruption. "And all the time, Doctor Craig" (he emphasized the title with such bitter irony that Craig whitened under the word), you knew that he was in no more danger of insanity than you are or I am. You knew that his mother suffered from puerperal insanity, which is due to complications in childbirth and is not hereditary. Bert Kneeland was nervously run down, but he was in no more danger of insanity than you are."

A choking gasp came from behind them. Kneeland had straightened up. He was stammering out almost incoherent words.

"Hale! Is that straight? Are you certain of that? God in heaven!"

Hale turned and looked at him. "I'm certain of it," he said quietly. "You could have been certain of it, if you had the initiative to go to any honest physician and ask Doctor Nick Crosby, who is only two miles away, and who attended your mother till she died, would have told you that you had nothing to fear. He told me that. So did two psychiatrists I have consulted. Any honest physician would have burst Craig's infernal bubble for you."

"I've been going into your case, Craig," Hale said slowly, "ever since I got here. You aren't really very clever. If most of the people around you hadn't been either self-obsessed or as bad as you are yourself, you would have been discovered and kicked out as soon as you began to develop your little scheme. It's a very elemental scheme. If you had been more patient and intelligent you might have carried it out. But you were in too much of a hurry, especially after I got here. You wanted to get to Vienna and study. You wanted a steady income there while you were doing your work. Last year it occurred to you that by convincing your best friend, who has plenty of money or can get it in an emergency, that he was inheriting his mother's insanity, and in sending him off his head by constant and hellish suggestions, you could get him to go with you to Vienna, supposedly for treatment there."

He paused a moment, then went on. "It was a very pretty plan, from your viewpoint. You let Bert infer that you alone could save him from a madhouse. You had a patient very susceptible to suggestion. You could have kept him in Vienna a year or two. You could have convinced him that you were keeping him out of an asylum. You could have handled the purse strings, and you could have taken damned good care that he never saw another psychiatrist while he was there. You would have sent reassuring reports to his anxious father. In one way or another you would have kept him there till you finished your own course of study and experiments."

Hale's voice rose as his temper hours of steady talk to Herbert Kneeland out of every twenty-four, and I think he's had enough of it. So have I. If you're wise you'll keep quiet and learn what's going to happen to you. When I tell you that, please remember that I'm speaking for Casper Kneeland. I think," he added slowly, "I am speaking for his son, too. Is that right, Bert?"

"Yes. Oh, God, yes. Don't let him come near me again. You don't know what he has put me through!" Kneeland was still shaking and cowering, but his eyes were quieter.

"Don't!" Hale looked at him, and then at Craig. "I think I've just proved that I do."

"Damn you!" Craig jerked out between his teeth. "I've had enough of this raving."

"I don't doubt you have," Hale agreed. "I'm spoiling all your plans, and they were working" so nicely till I came. My appearance here rattled you, and hurried you. Bert told me last week you wanted him to sail with you the middle of July. You told him he was in very bad shape. You scared him out of his remaining wits. You were pretty stupid about him after you got frightened. You might have had a mad-man-on-your-hands-in-a-few weeks more. And all the time you thought you were so clever! Encouraging him one day, and casting him into the depths of despair the next day. A chap with less pluck than Kneeland would have smashed under it weeks ago. But he's young and strong. He'll soon be himself again."

He turned to Kneeland. The young man had stopped trembling. He drew his chair close to Hale, but as far from Craig as the circle would permit, and sat down.

"So you're a psychiatrist, too?" Craig sneered.

His face was livid, his voice a hiss. Again he looked as venomous as the cobra he had suggested in the upper hall that noon.

"No, I'm not a psychiatrist," Hale acknowledged placidly. "But I got some expert advice about this case. I've talked to your superiors in New York, Craig. I've a letter in my pocket from Doctor Marcel Michel, of Paris, a friend of mine. I fancy you know him by reputation."

"What?" Craig was out of his chair now. "You've been slandering me to my associates, you interfering hound! There's a penalty for slander, and you'll pay it!"

"Not until the Grievance Committee of the New York County Medical Society has acted on your case," Hale said gently. "And certainly not after your license to practice medicine has been revoked."

"He watched Craig sink back in his chair after that blow, and went on conversationally.

"We've a very strong case against you, Doctor." Again he underlined the word. "A statement signed by Mr. Kneeland, by Bert himself, by Miss Joan Kneeland, by Mrs. Wilbur Nash, by me, and even by Alinsworth, would interest the New York County Medical Society very much."

Craig stood up.

"Bert Kneeland is off his head," he said slowly. "So are you. But there's a limit to what a doctor can be expected to endure from his patients and their fool friends. I shall take the first train from here in the morning."

"Good," Hale said heartily. "Now I'll tell you what else you're going to do. Wait a minute," he ordered, as Craig started for the door. "This is important."

Craig waited, his hand on the door-knob.

"The answer to both your questions is yes. Sit down."

hereditary. Bert Kneeland was nervously run down, but he was in no more danger of insanity than you are."

A choking gasp came from behind them. Kneeland had straightened up. He was stammering out almost incoherent words.

"Hale! Is that straight? Are you certain of that? God in heaven!"

Hale turned and looked at him. "I'm certain of it," he said quietly. "You could have been certain of it, if you had the initiative to go to any honest physician and ask Doctor Nick Crosby, who is only two miles away, and who attended your mother till she died, would have told you that you had nothing to fear. He told me that. So did two psychiatrists I have consulted. Any honest physician would have burst Craig's infernal bubble for you."

"I've been going into your case, Craig," Hale said slowly, "ever since I got here. You aren't really very clever. If most of the people around you hadn't been either self-obsessed or as bad as you are yourself, you would have been discovered and kicked out as soon as you began to develop your little scheme. It's a very elemental scheme. If you had been more patient and intelligent you might have carried it out. But you were in too much of a hurry, especially after I got here. You wanted to get to Vienna and study. You wanted a steady income there while you were doing your work. Last year it occurred to you that by convincing your best friend, who has plenty of money or can get it in an emergency, that he was inheriting his mother's insanity, and in sending him off his head by constant and hellish suggestions, you could get him to go with you to Vienna, supposedly for treatment there."

Connection Between Good Memory and Vitamins Demonstrated by Scientists

A connection between good memory and an adequate supply of vitamins is demonstrated in experiments carried on at the University of Colorado by Dr. Charles F. Poe, professor of chemistry, and Dr. Karl F. Muenzinger, associate professor of psychology.

Their experiments were made on rats, using three groups, one group kept on a normal diet, one kept on a diet deficient in vitamin G and one deficient in the vitamin B complex. All were given an opportunity to learn to solve a maze problem at the age of seven weeks. Three months later they were put back on the maze and data was collected on their ability to solve the problem a second time.

The rats lacking vitamin B made a very poor showing compared to the other two groups. The group on a normal diet re-learned the maze in an average time of 650 seconds; the vitamin G deficient group in 707 seconds, while the B deficient group required 1,074 seconds. The lack of vitamin B had a greater effect on memory than it had on learning ability, since the B deficient group learned a new maze in 405 seconds. The normal group did it in 355 seconds and the G deficient group in 418 seconds.

Vitamin B is known as the anti-neuritic vitamin because its lack causes nervous disorders. It is found naturally in whole grain cereals, tomatoes, beans and yeast. Soluble in water, it can be lost from foods if the water they are cooked in is discarded.

Life of Alexander Hamilton
Alexander Hamilton, born January 11, 1757, on the British Isle of Nevis, in the West Indies, was forced to support himself at the age of twelve and came to America three years later. Having adopted this country, he fought for its independence and became one of the outstanding statesmen of the infant republic. His work as first secretary of the treasury, in Washington's administration, when he laid the groundwork for a sound money system in this country, is perhaps his greatest contribution to posterity. Hamilton advocated a strong centralized government and a liberal interpretation of the Constitution, but his theories were opposed bitterly at that time by leading statesmen.

PETER EXHORTS TO CHRISTIAN LIVING

LESSON TEXT.—1 Peter 3:18. GOLDEN TEXT.—But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.—1 Peter 1:15.

Christians are not only "the called of Jesus Christ," but are also "called saints" (Rom. 1:8, 7). Peter had the same thing in mind when he (in v. 9 of our lesson) says that we "are thereunto called." Let us remember that when we are tempted to say that we "do not profess to be saints." "Dr. James Denney once remarked how odd it would look to see in the New Testament the statement, "I don't pretend to be a saint." It would be tantamount to saying, "I do not take the call of God very seriously and I do not profess to live up to it." When God calls, our answer is not a matter of indifference and . . . not a matter of presumption. "It is not a life for which we volunteer, or on which we adventure of our own motion or which we have to carry through our own resources; it is a life for which we have a divine summons, and that summons is our justification" (Arnold's Commentary). All believers are called to live a consistent, powerful, useful Christian life, and God makes such a life possible.

1. Living for Christ (vv. 8-12). To live for Christ one must be born again into the position of a true believer. Peter was not so foolish as to urge that his readers try to live a Christian life without first being born into the family of God. He therefore lays a foundation for his exhortations by discussing in the early chapters of his epistle the atonement of Christ and the position of the believer. Then he gives specific instructions to certain groups, leading up to the general plea for Christian life and testimony.

1. Among brethren (v. 8). Knowing what Christ has done for us, it might well be assumed that all of us who are His followers would love one another and do nothing but that which would promote Christian fellowship. But human nature prevails even in the Church, and sometimes displays its worst side there. Hence we need to consider this instruction of Peter that we cultivate unity, sympathy, and love among the brethren. Observe that this is not just a pious platitude which we may take or leave. It states our obligation to one another as Christians. Whatever others may do or say, let us be clear that we have obeyed this word of God.

2. With unbelievers (vv. 9-11). God has called us to live peaceably with all men. We will not cure evil by returning for it more evil. If our ungodly neighbors or fellow workers mistreat us by word or deed, we are not to retaliate in kind. We are to control our tongues—how much we need to learn that lesson. We are not to be tricky and deceitful, not to look for a fight, but to seek peace.

3. For our own good (v. 12). What blessed assurance we find here for the believer. The eyes of the Lord are upon both the good and the evil in the world. He knows. Consider also the promise of "blessings" in verse 9, of seeing "good days" in verse 10, the assurance of peace in verse 11. It is not only honoring to God, but good for us to live as Christians.

II. Suffering for Christ (vv. 13-18). Peter was writing to those who were bearing bitter persecution because they followed Christ. Perhaps some were tempted to say then as they do now, "If there really is a God, if Christianity amounts to anything at all, certainly believers would not be permitted to suffer at the hands of enemies of Christ." Let us be clear that being a Christian in no way exempts us from the common experiences of humanity, nor does it assure us that we will not have to bear persecution and suffering. But (and here is a point of greatest importance), we are able to meet such difficulties in the name of Christ without fear or discouragement, for God is with us.

1. Not afraid (vv. 13, 14). The martyr spirit has not died out in the earth, and there are those in our day who stand unafraid before dictators and rulers who would destroy them because of their loyalty to Christ. "Be not afraid."

2. Not discouraged (vv. 15-17). The one who knows God's Word (and every Christian ought to know it) can give answer (v. 15) concerning his faith. Note that if we are punished for our own wrongdoing we may well be depressed, but if we meet persecution with a clear conscience (v. 16) we need feel no discouragement.

3. Not alone (v. 18). The path may be dark and difficult, but one thing we know, our Leader, Christ, walked an even darker and more desolate road. He it is who is now with us, yes, in us. Remember that "Christ also hath once suffered" (v. 18) and go on your way in victory.

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of their efficacy. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who have prescribed Doan's under various laboratory conditions.

Doan's Pills are a physician's recommendation. They are a good diuretic treatment for functional kidney disorder and for relief of the pain and worry it causes.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more after employed.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be warning of disturbed kidney function. You may notice swelling, backache, persistent headache, aching, stiffness, getting up at night, aching, swelling, and other symptoms. Doan's Pills will relieve all these.

Use Doan's Pills. It is better to pay a medicine that has won world-wide approval than to pay for something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!
