The second interest payment on Women's Club Notes is due Aug. 20th and will be paid by presenting said notes to Mrs. B. L. Stimmel, Club Treasurer. There are twelve notes of $25.00 denomination unsold. Any one desiring to purchase a note or two to help finance the Community Center Building for Women's Activities, see members of committee. Thank you for your support.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Stimmel and children of Dayton, Washington, are here, coming in Wednesday for a visit with the B. L. Stimmel and Tennis Smoot families. The children are George, Margaret and Margie. They will go from here to San Francisco to attend the World's Fair. Mr. and Mrs. Stimmel's children with the exception of Mrs. Smoot, reside in Washington and California. Roy, George and Mrs. C. N. Eaton reside in Washington, Ben and Lee, in California, but notwithstanding the long distances, they make yearly visits to the home folks.

BORN - To Mr. and Mrs. Haley Hall of Socorro Monday morning, Aug. 7, a girl. Mother and daughter are doing nicely.

Local Mention

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Barber and baby daughter Lena Gail are here from Carlsbad. Mr. Barber being on his vacation, he being the credit man for the large department store of Jackson-Horne. Mr. Barber is a son of Mrs. E. M. Brickley.

Mrs. M. C. St. John and children returned last Saturday from Las Cruces, where they visited relatives for a few days.

Mrs. Talley B. Cook of Montecillo, N. M., was here for a few days this week as a guest of the S. H. Nickels family and incidentally, to interview the new 7-pound baby, born to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cook last Friday morning and her name is Sue Anne.

Dick Willis, who was here on his vacation, has gone to Bakersfield, Calif., to work for the S. P. Ry. Co. in the signal service.

Mrs. Grace Kennedy and niece Miss Ida Dell Bunch spent the week-end in Roswell visiting relatives and friends.

The judges were, Mrs. J. H. Fulmer of White Oaks, Mr. Martinez of Fort Stanton and M. J. Barnett of Carrizozo. The prize was $5.00.

Nu-Way Cleaners

The cleaning & pressing proposition which has been annoying the people of Carrizozo for some time was clarified the latter part of last week, when Wade Lane, expert in that line, came in with a load of the latest, improved machinery and located in the building formally occupied by L. A. Jolly, who now has a state position at Las Lunas. Mr. Lane has remodeled the building to give room for his equipment which is of the latest type for the above particular purpose.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Burns are with Mr. Lane. Mr. Burns being also an experienced man in the business. Mrs. Burns will attend to the remodeling and altering of ladies' wearing apparel and men's suits. They have a hidden lined press and finishing iron for delicate ladies' wearing apparel and the latest deodorizing machines. They extend an invitation to the people of Carrizozo and vicinity to call, inspect the plant and facilities for doing the work. An absolute guarantee goes with every piece of work. No need to send work away from town now, folks. See the announcement in this issue.

NEEDED

A Curfew Law

A curfew is badly needed in this town and parents are to blame for allowing children to be on the streets until late hours in the night. Unfortunately, we have no curfew law to prevent this, but the Town Council is considering such a measure. Last Saturday night and until Sunday morning, that is, after the midnight hour, children were on the streets and would congregate in front of the saloons, where they could hear all kinds of conversations which should be kept from the tender minds of the children. The parents are solely to blame for such conditions, not the Town Council. If parents cannot keep their children at home after reasonable hours at night, let's have a curfew law that will prevent them from being exposed to things they should not hear. Keep the children off the streets at night and put them to bed.

Carrizozo Lodge No. 41, A. F. & A. M. held its monthly communication Wednesday night at the Masonic Temple. Masons will please note the change of meeting nights from the First Saturday of each month to Second Wednesday of each month. Consult the lodge card.

Carrizozo Lodge No. 30, I. O. O. F. held its regular weekly meeting Tuesday night at which James M. Carpenter was installed as Noble Grand, Bradley Smith was installed as Past Noble Grand and G. H. Dorsett as Vice Grand.

BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB

Held their weekly meeting at the S. P. Hotel Wednesday evening, there being an attendance of 16 members and 12 visitors. Editor Reynolds of Collier's Weekly gave a 30-minute talk on conditions in Germany as he viewed them when on his visit to that country. His subject was: "What is It to Us?" and was of much interest to the assemblage.

Lou Fink and the Boys at the Free Dance at the Yucca tomorrow night, Aug. 12. Prizes given for the best dancers.

Twilight of the New Deal

The New Deal received another set-back this week, this time in Kentucky, where Keen Johnson, candidate for Governor, whom the A. F. of L. and Gov. Happy Chandler supported, badly defeated John Young Brown, who was not only supported by Alben B. Barkley, but was also backed by the New Deal administration and the C.I.O., with John L. Lewis at the head of the movement. Senator Barkley, it will be remembered, was the President's pet when he, the President went into the state and advocated his election as he did others in several different states and Barkley was the only one elected, the others whom the President recommended being badly beaten. This, with other things which are looming above the horizon, would indicate twilight of the New Deal.

Coming as it did just on the eve of the Kentucky contest, the attack made by Lewis on Vice-President John N. Garner, helped greatly to defeat Brown. Another, which contributed largely to his defeat was that he was a favorite of the President. Kentucky, as with other states, has had enough of the President's "purge" tactics and the result of this nomination was a strong indication of their resentment against the "whip" and "purge."

In the closing days of the last session of Congress, there was not only an absence of harmony among the Democrats, but a radical revolt which will increase after the Senators and Representatives have been at home long enough to fully inform their people of conditions at Washington, when they had to form a coalition with Republicans in order to keep the ship of state from going on the rocks. The huge four billion dollar appropriation which was proposed by the President was knocked into smithereens, but he fails to see that those officials are representatives of the people of their various states and districts and their actions were based on the will of the people instead of the will of a would-be dictator, who would throw the people's money away like the proverbial drunken sailor, heedless of the day when the debts must be paid. His ambition is a third-term and his intention is to have it, even if he has to get us into war to accomplish his desires. But thank God, this is still America.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hendren of Fort Stanton were visitors in town Saturday. "The 4th of July Celebration at the Stanton was a financial success. It was everybody's picnic," Mr. Hendren remarked. - And it didn't rain there on July 4th.

Mrs. Jimmie Jones, daughter of School Supt. J. M. Carpenter, is visiting in Albuquerque this week.

Pat Murphy of the White & Murphy ranch near White Oaks was a visitor Saturday.

Norman-McKinley

Last Sunday, August 6, at High Noon at Belen, New Mexico, Miss Edith Norman of Carrizozo, N. M., became the bride of William E. McKinley of Albuquerque. The ceremony was solemnized by Rev. Stover, Baptist Minister.

The bride is the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. S. Norman and was born and reared in Lincoln County. She attended the Carrizozo Schools and was graduated with the class of '36. Miss Norman attended the University of New Mexico for two and a-half years and taught school at Richardson last year.

The groom is a native of Kansas City, Kansas. He received his college education at the University of Kansas. He came to Albuquerque three years ago and has been employed since coming to Albuquerque by Hendrie & Bolthoff Supply Company, where he is Assistant Manager. He is also a member of the Variety Club Orchestra and is an accomplished musician.

After the 15th, Mr. and Mrs. McKinley will be at home to their friends at 1006 E. Copper Avenue, Albuquerque. - The Outlook joins in wishing our home girl the best of everything.

4-H Club Party at Hondo

The 4-H Club party held recently at Hondo was attended by 65 parents, guests and club members. The party was given in honor of the parents of the club members. The program was conducted in the form of a regular 4-H Club meeting, with C.M. Pruitt, President, in charge.

A demonstration on the culling of poultry was given by C. M. Pruitt. Betty Pfingsten, Margaret Bell and Leona Mae Esgers gave a demonstration on the kind of stitches learned in club work this year. Talks on advantages of 4-H Club work were given by F. Montes, Local Leader and Carl P. Radcliff, County Agent.

After the program, a number of games were conducted by the 4-H Club sponsors and Betty Pfingsten, 4-H Club Recreational Leader. Refreshments were served by the girls under the direction of Mrs. S. G. Hester, Local Leader.

Mr. and Mrs. George Harkness returned the first of the week from their vacation, spent visiting relatives and friends at different points in Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hall, Sr. of the Ancho country made a trip to Socorro Monday, returning with two of their grandchildren, the Halls, who will spend a short time on the Hall ranch near Ancho.

Dan Conley, who has been seriously ill for the past week, is up and around, we are pleased to report.

Eighty Years Ago England and United States Were on the Verge of Another War—and It All Was the Result of the Killing of a Pig!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

IN VIEW of the recent visit of the King and Queen of England, with all the British-American good will which it is supposed to have engendered, it is interesting to recall that just 80 years ago the two countries, who had been opponents in two wars, were on the verge of another. And it all started with a pig!

Of course, this animal, which was the property of a Briton, was only a minor actor in the international drama. But its death at the hands of an American proved to be the first incident in a chain of events which, for a time, seemed to be leading inevitably to hostilities. The crisis came about in this manner:

During the 10 years which followed the close of the Mexican war, the rapid settlement of California and the Oregon country by the Americans resulted in considerable friction between them and the English residents of the Pacific Northwest.

So it came about that San Juan Island, which lies off the coast of the present state of Washington and over which the Hudson's Bay company asserted a proprietary right, became a reason for dispute when some American farmers and small merchants, some 25 in number, settled there, firm in the belief that it belonged to the United States. Disagreements over the most trifling things arose almost immediately. It is impossible to say who was most to blame for the bad feeling that sprang up between the arrogant Hudson's Bay men and the truculent Americans. But affairs gradually drifted from bad to worse.

Finally one spring morning in 1859 a certain L. E. Cutter, an American, found a pig belonging to the Hudson's Bay company rooting in his cornfield. In the first flush of his anger he shot the beast, then decided he had acted too hastily. So he went to the local H. B. C. agent and offered to pay him the value of the pig. His offer was refused and when the matter was reported to Superintendent Dallas at Victoria on Vancouver Island, Dallas immediately hastened to San Juan Island and threatened to arrest Cutter and take him back to Victoria for trial under British law.

No Arrest for Him.

Of course, such a threat was a veritable red rag to the American. He seized his rifle and told Dallas that if he tried to make an arrest he would suffer the same fate as the "British pig." Dallas was sufficiently impressed by Cutter's determined air so that he hastily returned to Victoria.

Meanwhile the other Americans on the island sent a message to the military commander of the department of the Columbia at Fort Vancouver, Wash., telling of the indignities they had suffered at the hands of the H. B. C. agents, including Dallas' threat to arrest Cutter, and demanding that their government give them protection. The department commander was Brig. Gen. William S. Harney, a successful Indian fighter and typical hard-boiled officer of the "old army." Also he was a man accustomed to acting promptly, if not always wisely.

So without waiting to consult his superiors in the war department, Harney ordered a company of infantry to San Juan Island to protect the inhabitants from the depredations of the northern Indians who had been troubling them; "to afford adequate protection to the American citizens in their rights as such. Also, to resist all attempts at interference by means of force or intimidation in the controversies of the abovementioned parties by the British authorities residing on Vancouver Island."

Accordingly on July 27, 1859, Company D of the Ninth United States Infantry, commanded by Capt. George E. Pickett, landed on San Juan Island welcomed by the huzzas of the Americans on the disputed terrain. Immediately afterwards, Captain Pickett, showing a fine disregard for diplomatic amenities, issued a proclamation placing the island under the jurisdiction of the United States. Then he selected a good defensive position for his camp "with a view to the establishment of a force of five or six companies for a long stay."

Of course, the news of his action was carried to the British at Victoria immediately and it caused a great stir there. Everyone, from Sir James Douglas, governor of the crown colony of British Columbia, down to the lowliest citizen declared that Capt. Pickett's action was not only a violation of the treaties between the United States and Great Britain in regard to settlement of disputes over title to the northwestern country, but, all in all, it was a most unheard-of proceeding.

Sir James Douglas had at his disposal enough troops to sweep the insignificant little American force into the sea and if the Yankees were foolish enough to resist, they would jolly well deserve the treatment that they got, etc., etc. All of which was duly reported to Captain Pickett who calmly went ahead putting his camp in order.

British Warship Appears.

On July 30 his orderly told him that a ship was in sight and at the same time handed him a letter. When Pickett stepped out of his tent he saw a British warship bearing down upon the island. It was the Tribune, a 31-gun frigate from the naval station at Esquimalt near Victoria.

This looked as though the British really meant to make good their threats. But Pickett was undaunted by this show of force. Ordering his men to run their only piece of artillery, a little six-pounder, to a place where it could sweep the island's only wharf he instructed his force of 60 men to stand to arms, ready for instant action.

But suddenly the sails of the Tribune were furled and she dropped anchor, broadside on, a short distance off shore. There she lay grim and foreboding while Pickett, seeing that no immediate trouble was likely, tore open the envelope the orderly had handed him. In it was a letter from the agent of the Hudson's Bay company informing him that San Juan Island belonged to the company and ordering him to leave immediately. If he did not, the letter said, the company would appeal to the civil authorities at Victoria to force him to go.

The captain wrote a letter in reply in which he denied the right of the Hudson's Bay company to dictate his course of action, pointed out that he was there upon orders from his government and affirmed his intention of staying until he was recalled by the same authority. Then he wrote a report of what had happened to Harney and ended it with a request for a supply of window sashes and doors which he said were needed to make his men comfortable during the autumn and winter!

On August 3 two more British warships dropped anchor alongside the Tribune. They were the Satellite, 21 guns, and the Plumper, 19 guns. Pickett's only response to this bigger threat was to bring up two mountain howitzers, place them beside his six-pounder and train them on the ships.

Thereupon Captain Hornby, the senior British naval officer, invited the American captain to come aboard the Tribune for a conference on this matter of who owned San Juan Island. Pickett declined the invitation but asked the three naval captains to a conference in his camp. His invitation was accepted and the British officers demanded that the United States troops be withdrawn.

When Pickett declined to do that they next proposed that troops of both nations occupy the island jointly. Pickett refused to accept any such arrangement and added that until he could communicate with his government and receive its instructions on the matter, he would oppose with force any attempt of the British to land troops on the island.

Seeing that they could neither bluff nor persuade the American captain, the Britons returned to their ships. The parting was amicable enough, with many expressions of respect and esteem on both sides. Meanwhile the H. B. C. had been busy and prevailed upon the civil authorities of British Columbia to summon him to appear before a Victoria magistrate. Pickett's reply to that move is not recorded in the official correspondence of this whole affair—it was probably a bit too warm to be entrusted to paper.

A week passed with the British on Vancouver Island in a turmoil over the situation. Pickett calmly sat tight as though unaware of all the fuss that his British neighbors were making. It was all rather ludicrous but it is doubtful if Pickett's men saw the humor of the situation. There was no telling when the British might launch an attack.

A Critical Situation.

Of course, if they did, the first shot fired would be a declaration of war and would brand them as the aggressors. But that would be small comfort to the 60 infantrymen if a "blast" from the British cannon snuffed out their lives. They probably thought of that when two more British ships joined the three already at anchor off the island. Now there was a force of five ships, carrying 167 guns and 2,140 men, 600 of them marines and engineer troops, trying to intimidate them and force them to evacuate the island.

But the British evidently didn't realize the caliber of this man Pickett. He just wouldn't be bluffed! Neither would General Harney who, from distant Fort Vancouver, sent dispatches by the Shubrick, a small vessel commanded by Captain Alden of the United States navy, approving of Pickett's action and taking the responsibility if an armed clash should result. He also engaged in a fierce but dignified correspondence with Governor Douglas in which he steadfastly maintained his right to keep his troops on the island.

On August 10 the tension lessened somewhat for Pickett when reinforcements, consisting of four companies of infantry, commanded by Lieut. Col. Silas Casey of the Ninth infantry and a battery of eight 32-pounders arrived at San Juan. Because of a dense fog they could not get up to the wharf near which lay the British men-of-war. So they landed on the beach—a short distance away and the first intimation that the British had of the arrival of help for the Americans was when they saw their tents pitched beside those of Pickett's 66 men. With the arrival of the lieutenant-colonel, the young lieutenant's responsibility ended, for Casey immediately assumed command of the whole force on the island. Four days later three more companies of infantry arrived. With the opposing forces more nearly equal, the danger of a conflict was lessened.

Eventually the diplomats arranged for a joint occupation of the island by both nations, each keeping one company of soldiers there. But when the final settlement was made San Juan Island became a part of Oregon territory. Today it is a part of the state of Washington.

The San Juan Island pig, whose death nearly precipitated a war between the United States and Great Britain, wasn't the first to be the central figure in an "international incident." Just 100 years ago there was a similar case down in Texas.

At that time Texas was a republic to which the United States, England and France sent official representatives. The French charge d'affaires was Count DuBoise de Saligny who, upon his arrival in Austin in 1839, lodged at the leading hostelry kept by James Bullock. After a time the French diplomat, called for his bill. When it was presented he declared indignantly that it was too high and refused to pay it.

So arbitrators were appointed and they reduced the bill to a sum which Bullock refused to accept because he said it was much too low. Meanwhile De Saligny had moved from the hotel to a wooden structure which became the official French embassy building. Being a fastidious gentleman, the count furnished it beautifully and had his servants cultivate an attractive garden around it.

Not only did Mr. Bullock run the principal hotel but he also owned a number of hogs which he permitted to roam at large. One morning Count de Saligny glanced out his window and was horrified to see some of the Bullock hogs rooting in his garden. He hastily sent his servants to scare them away. But no sooner had they returned to the house than the hogs returned to the garden. Again they were chased out and the count, thoroughly exasperated by this time, gave his servants orders to shoot every pig that ventured into his garden thereafter.

A short time later Bullock missed some of his hogs and, blaming the French diplomat for the loss, complained to the government of Texas. James S. Mayfield, secretary of state, addressed a formal inquiry to the count. In reply the Frenchman wrote bitterly of his sufferings "from the many hogs with which this town is infested" and particularly those of Mr. Bullock. He declared that his servants had used no less than 140 pounds of nails in repairing the palings of his fence—"which these animals have thrown down for the purpose of eating the corn of my horses and destroying my garden." But he didn't deny responsibility for the disappearance of Bullock's hogs.

GEN. W. S. HARNEY

Thereupon the keeper of the hostelry flew into a rage and when he encountered Eugene Pluyette, one of the count's servants, on the street he gave the man a thrashing. The result was a formal demand by De Saligny upon the secretary of state for protection due a foreign minister and his retinue. Although Bullock was indicted for the assault it was evident that the Texas officials were sympathetic to him and had little intention of punishing him.

Irritated by their stalling tactics, De Saligny complained to the French government. But he soon had an even more serious matter to report. The choleric Mr. Bullock proceeded next to thrash the French emissary himself. When the officials of Texas refused to take official cognizance of this attack, the indignant count rushed off another complaint to Paris, pointing out how the honor of dignity of France itself had been injured by this ruffian of a hotelkeeper.

More than that he announced to his friends in Austin that the French government was sending a fleet of warships to the Texas coast to see that proper apologies were made for the humiliating assault upon the honor of France. Next he demanded his passports and went to New Orleans to await developments.

It so happened that about this time the government of the United States sent a squadron of its warships to the Gulf of Mexico. Whether this was done as a warning to France, which may or may not have intended to make good De Saligny's threat, is unknown. But the fact remained that no French warships appeared off the coast of Texas although it is a matter of record that, because of the indignities which her ambassador had suffered, France declined to make a loan of $5,000,000 which Texas was trying to float in that country at that time.

★ Remembered for Another
★ Right Up Raft's Alley

By Virginia Vale

"THE Women," the movie version of the very successful play of the same name, is going to be something to see. Norma Shearer, Rosalind Russell and Joan Crawford head the cast, which includes those excellent actresses, Phyllis Povah and Florence Nash, and one hundred others, all girls.

Women will want to see the picture, if only to see the clothes—super-special frocks have been whipped up for their benefit. One of Joan Crawford's is black velvet, split to the waistline, and worn over very tight black knickers.

And men will want to see it, both to see some of our best screen actresses trying to outshine each other, and to see what cut-throat battles women can get into over men.

If there were any other cut-throat battles while the picture was being made—little things like arguments over billing, scene-stealing, and things like that—the great public will never know.

Roscoe Karns has played featured roles in more than 100 motion pictures, but is best remembered for one he didn't play, in a series of pictures in which he didn't appear.

For years his friends and his fans have insisted on remembering him as the "right manager" in the "Leather Pushers" series, in which Reginald Denny starred. But it was not Karns, but Hayden Stoverman, who played the right manager. The two men don't even faintly resemble each other.

Karns is mystified, but at last is resigned. Just the other day, when he arrived at the studio to work in "Everything's on Ice," an assistant cameraman hailed him with, "It's been a long time, Roscoe, since we worked in the 'Leather Pushers' together!"

George Raft's performance in the new James Cagney picture, "Each Dawn I Die," won him a new contract and an assignment to do a remake of "The Patent Leather Kid" (in which Richard Barthelmess once made a come-back), as his first picture. He is to make three a year. The hero of the picture is a prizefighter, which is right up the Raft alley—in his days as a fighter he fought 22 professional bouts.

News of radio programs that take the air in the fall is coming in regularly. Tommy Riggs will be back with "Quaker Party," Bob Becker will resume his dog talks, and the Screen Actors Guild show will have its old time on Sunday nights—with $10,000 for each broadcast going to the Motion Picture Relief fund.

Paul Whiteman's band is Alma Mater to nine men who are now leading their own orchestras, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, Henry Busse and Ferde Grofé among them. They were with him 18 or 11 years ago. Another member of the band at that time was Bing Crosby, who sang with the band but couldn't play; just sat holding an instrument, so that he'd look as if he belonged there. Too bad they can't all be gathered together for one more performance, with the great Whiteman leading the baton.

J. B. Priestly, author of "The God Companions," has been commissioned to write a novel for broadcasting, the first ever to be written directly for radio.

ODDS AND ENDS—Robert Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck, preparing to take a vacation, were requested by their studio to spend it anywhere but in New York... The thing that people seem to remember about Alec Templeton, the blind pianist and composer, but the fact that until he was nine years old he did not know that he was blind... Tallulah's old enough so that two girls are arguing over which one has the right to call herself "The First Lady of Television"... With Hedy Lamarr's first film since "Algiers" put on the shelf and the next one having to make trouble, it's a question whether she's as good an investment as Hollywood thought when she made her first debut here... Pamela Bruce feels that "Rage" at Washington Square has invaded her rights of privacy, declared of her character, and is an appropriation of her life story, without permission.

Portugal, Former World Power, Begins Recapture of Prestige

New Life Stirrs Historic Homeland of Ancient Trade Builders.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Four centuries ago Portugal changed the map of the world by her epochal achievements in discovery. The vast wealth that poured into her treasury did much to shape the course of European affairs.

No unsupported bombast was the title assumed by the monarchs: "King, by the grace of God, of Portugal and of the Algarves, both on this side of the sea and beyond in Africa, Lord of Guinea and of Conquest, Navigation, and Commerce of Ethiopia, Arabia, Persia, and India."

Then, too, there were the Azores, Madeira, and gigantic Brazil, whose riches proved even greater and more permanent than the commerce Portugal pioneered in the Far East. But lean years came. Energetic Netherlands traders captured many of the Orient's markets; Indian monopolies vanished; Brazil waxed strong and became independent. Wars, internal confusion, and imprudent rulers contributed further to her decline. During the last century Portugal has seen much of economic depression.

New National Life.

In the past 10 years, however, new life has stirred in this historic nation. Though less spectacular than sailing the seas in search of the mysteries of Africa or the wealth of the Indies, Portugal's program of rehabilitation has been scarcely less impressive.

Today new foundations have been laid in the Estado Novo, or New State. Portugal has been able to maintain a balanced budget. Ports, roads, municipal corporations, civic welfare, schools, and public enterprise have felt the quickened pulse beat of the new order. Leader of this government is Premier Antonio de Oliveira Salazar.

Many New Highways.

Passenger vehicles now operate on more than 5,000 miles of major highways—this in a country only 350 miles long and 125 miles wide. In recent years they have carried enough people to approximate two rides yearly for each of the 7,280,000 inhabitants.

Walking, however, is by no means a lost art. Seeing women, graceful as Greek goddesses, with heavy water jars or baskets or produce perched on their heads emphasizes that fact. Most market-going peasants still ride sloped-eared donkeys rather than "flivvers."

Although progressive innovations increase, traditional customs and Old World scenes prevail. A visit to Portugal savors of a pleasant interview with the gracious occupants of a historic family manor.

As your ship steams into the Tagus river (Tejo) at dawn, you have the feeling of moving along a hallway filled with treasured heirlooms. On your port, a slender ray of sunshine, piercing a cloud, seeks out the quaint waterside tower of Belem—half Moorish, half ornate Manueline in design—which stands as a symbol of Portugal's early ventures beyond the seas.

Golden Age Beyond.

A short distance beyond the dome and white stucco spires of the old monastery of Jeronimos, an artistic crystallization of the country's Golden Age opulence.

There, in a tiny mariner's chapel that formerly occupied the site, Vasco da Gama and his crew said prayers the night before they hoisted sail to beat around the Cape of Good Hope and blaze the sea trail to India. There, beneath lofty arches in one of the transepts, his body now rests. Another of Portugal's heroes also shares that quiet: Luis de Camoes (Camoens) whose epic poem, The Lusads, sang of the dauntless Vasco.

High on the opposite hills loomed the remains of old forts and crumbling castles, appearing like faded paintings through the morning haze. At the end of a seven-mile-long corridor the Tagus broadens into a wide marine anteroom. Greeks, Phoenicians, Romans, Moors, and visionary Crusaders, as well as hardy Portuguese navigators, have anchored their ships along its shores. Here have come rich articles, bearing spices, silks, and porcelains from the East, and gold from Brazil.

PORTUGUESE POSSESSIONS. Here is the worldwide extent of Portugal's empire. Four hundred years ago this tiny nation changed the map of the world by its achievements in discovery and exploration. Modern Portugal is now attempting the comeback trail in the field of world prestige.

Armada's Port of Call.

From these waters, in 1588, when Portugal was a vassal of Spain, sailed the invincible Armada to suffer defeat by British force and raging storms. Some of the boats that ride there today, like the craft that came to the Tagus of old, have upturned Phoenician prows or the sloping lateen sail of Arab dhows.

As you swing into the lakelike estuary, a freshening breeze conspires with the mounting sun to sweep away the obscuring fog from Lisbon, as if a curtain has been suddenly drawn aside.

Lisbon, or Lisboa, as it is locally called, is the nearest continental capital to Washington, D. C. It is approximately the same size and lies at almost exactly the same parallel as our national capital. Its stead of a "city of magnificent distances," however, Lisbon is a city of magnificent hills.

This five-mile multihued panorama of cliff terraces rearing above the Tagus river comparison with Naples and Istanbul. As background it lacks a Vesuvius or the spearpoints of minarets; yet it still achieves the spectacular with its bright buildings, sprawling palaces, subtropical gardens, and old fort.

Historic Sights Ahead.

Between the somber battlements of St. George, once a Moorish stronghold, and the modern wharves more than eight centuries of visible history are spread in impressive array. Many other centuries, dating back to Phoenician and Roman occupation, have been covered by its growth.

Once ashore, we gain new perspective of the city's hills. Instead of the single curved range that appears from the harbor, there are several separate eminences. Lisbon spreads over more hills than did ancient Rome. And they are steep. Venture away from the Praca do Comercio, the Rocio (Rossio), and the long Avenida da Liberdade, which cleaves the city in half, and one must climb.

Motorcars take circuitous routes, and even then often have to growl up in low gear. Tramways and cog-wheeled cars run everywhere, but they climb uncanny slopes and twist around unbelievable corners. On the narrow, precipitous streets men are stationed at each curve with paddles painted red on one side and green on the other to flash stop and go signals, for passing is impossible.

Jimmy Dykes, Miracle Man, Revamps Sox

By ROBERT McSHANE

ONE of baseball's present minor miracles is the way in which the White Sox have managed to keep well up in the first division of the American league pennant race.

The Yankees, of course, are right at home in top position. First place is automatically theirs by virtue of DiMaggio, Dickey, Gordon, Rolfe and Selkirk—not to mention the strongest pitching staff in either league.

Number two position is held down, logically enough, by the Red Sox. They reached that status through the aid of Fox, Cronin, Groves, Williams and a few more of like caliber.

But it's not in the book for the Chicago White Sox to be in their present position. With the exception of Luke Appling, there are no big names in the Sox line-up. And, incidentally, Appling isn't having his best year by any means.

There are additional reasons why the Sox should relinquish their first division spot. The services of Monty Stratton, their best hurler, were lost to them through a hunting accident. They have been minus the services of their regular second baseman most of the season, and Hank Steinbacher, rookie hitting sensation of last year, is battling less than 300. Their catching staff is as green as it is ambitious.

Regardless of logic, the Sox refused to be downed. And there's one outstanding reason for their present position in the American league scheme of things—that's the trading genius behind their success—Manager James J. Dykes.

Successful Trades

Four men are largely responsible for the surprising showing of the White Sox. They are Gerald Walker, Eric McNair, Joe Kuhel and Mike Tresh. Each of the four was added to the roster through the trading enterprise of Manager Dykes.

The Chicago swapping king got Walker and Tresh, along with Marvin Owen, from Detroit in a deal for Dixie Walker, Tony Piet and Vernon Kennedy. Walker has driven in enough runs this season to take third place in the league, behind Ted Williams of Boston and Hank Greenberg of Detroit. He is getting regular, and excellent, service from Tresh.

Detroit, on the other hand, retains none of the original three men they drew in the six-man swap. Dixie is now with Brooklyn. Kennedy was traded to St. Louis, and Piet has retired from baseball.

Eric McNair came to the Sox from Boston in return for Boze Berger. McNair's hitting ability has been more than welcome by the Sox. Since joining the Red Sox, Berger has worked only as a substitute.

Dykes picked up Kuhel in a trade which sent Zeke Bonura to Washington. Kuhel had a poor season in 1933, but hit his stride this year. In the meanwhile Bonura was waived out of the American league. His departure from Washington left Bucky Harris talking to himself.

Second Rate?

The Sox have more than their share of supposedly nondescript, shop-worn players. Mike Kreevich, center fielder, was turned down by the Cubs; the Red Sox couldn't use Pitcher Johnny Marcum; the Athletics rejected Rip Radcliff, reserves outfielder; George Renna, second-string catcher, was first tried by Detroit, and many others were found wanting by other clubs.

But those shop-worn baseball artists have managed to win ball games, and in winning have had more fun than any other team in either league. They seem to get a tremendous kick out of playing ball—and not as though the pay check is a secondary proposition. No other team has the hustle and the spirit of the Sox. What they lack in mechanical playing ability is made up for in the old college try.

Baseball addicts throughout the country are anxious to see the Sox come through. Since the unforgettable scandal of 1919, the Sox have been riding in hard luck. Maybe luck has changed for the better.

Sport Shorts

ONE of the longest baseball games on record was played at Eagle Pass, Texas, July 4, 1926. Two local teams started playing at 10 a. m., and played until 7 p. m., when the game was called at the end of the sixth inning with the score 129 to 119. One of the short-stops made 24 errors in one inning. . . . Ted Lyons, veteran White Sox hurler, says the four toughest hitters he ever faced are Al Simmons, Charley Gehrigger, Jimmy Foxx and Bill Dickey. . . . Joe McCarthy says that managing the All-Star team is a headache—because he has to try to please all eight cities. . . . Davey O'Brien, quarterback for the All-Star football game, worked his way through Texas Christian doing janitor work. . . . Carl (Swede) Anderson, Indiana university line coach, recently exhibited his pack of fine fox hounds at a Kentucky dog show, and won several honorable mention prizes. . . . Grover Cleveland Alexander calls Pat Moran of the 1915 Phillies the best manager he ever played under.

Joe DiMaggio, who recently wrote a piece for Collier's magazine, says Mel Harder is the toughest pitcher for him to hit. A friend compiled his average against Harder—it was only .210 at the time of writing. . . . Largest known price paid for a horse is $300,000 given for the famous French thoroughbred, Nearco. . . . Only 71 players have made a total of 4,000 or more hits during their careers, according to a survey of the 84 seasons during which batting statistics have been kept. . . . Baseballs cost big league clubs a dollar each, and an average of 25 are used each day.

The Washington Senators' home games will not be broadcast next season, according to Owner Clark Griffith. . . . The late J. Louis Comiskey, who owned the Chicago White Sox, hit safely in 25 consecutive games while in high school. . . . Tube Thompson of Augusta, who led Little Nineteen pitchers for three years while playing for Illinois Normal, is under contract to the White Sox.

Lightweight Golf

JOHN Q. GOLFER can't expect his caddy to become very enthusiastic about an inventor which will, if it becomes popular, probably relieve him of his job.

The new gadget is a golfing kit, and its inventors expect it to replace the conventional and cumbersome set of clubs and the heavy bag. The kit is so designed that it requires only one shaft to which is attached the head needed for each shot on the course. The outfit weighs some four pounds as compared to 14 pounds for the bag.

A Chicago golf pro experimented with the kit and found it practical. The club heads are all arranged in slots and a zipper compartment provides space for balls. The club heads all screw onto the single shaft, and the experimenting pro found that the heads provide a firm hitting surface. When the club head meets the ball the impact serves to tighten the head since the golfer is hitting against the groove of the screw.

The length of the shaft is not adjustable, but a compensating factor makes the putter properly short and the distance clubs suitably long. The hosel length controls the entire club length. The heel on the putter is practically non-existent, that for the three iron and woods is extremely long.

That the kit will ever attain a high degree of popularity is doubtful. Most golfers will prefer the conventional set of clubs. For the traveler, however, it means freedom from a bulky bit of luggage. For the golfer who prefers to play without a caddy the new set eliminates a heavy, unwieldy bag.

Luckman Signs

SID LUCKMAN, Columbia university's triple-threat half back, has finally decided to play professional football with the Chicago Bears.

With the signing of Luckman, the Bears have two of the three outstanding passers of this year's college graduating class. Billy Patterson had already signed with that club. The third man, Davey O'Brien of Texas Christian, belongs to Philadelphia.

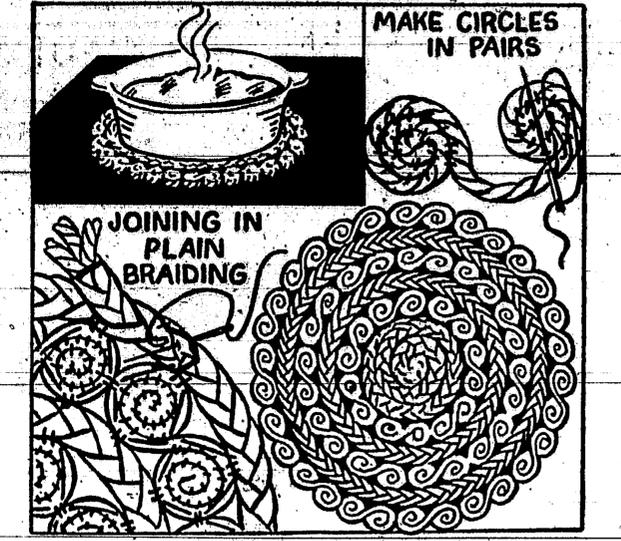

George Halas signed a great player in Luckman. His passing record is one of the best. Last year he threw 132 passes, completing 66 for nine touchdowns and 866 yards. He completed 10 out of 17 forward flips against Yale for 169 yards. In 92 times carrying the ball he gained 428 yards, averaging 4.6 yards each attempt.

Luckman is six feet tall and weighs 195 pounds. He possesses all the physical requirements for stardom, and Halas will give him ample opportunity to try his hand at carrying as well as passing the ball.

The Ivy league lad didn't leap at the chance to turn pro. He seemed to take much greater pride in his academic training than in his athletic ability. It took quite a bit of persuasion to get him back in mole-skins, and signs of relief were distinctly audible when he affixed his signature to a two-year contract. # HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Hot dish mats of cable cord. SO MANY requests for copies of these directions have been received, they are being printed again to accommodate those who neglected to clip and save them when they appeared before.

The mat is made of heavy white cotton cable cord such as you buy at the notion counter for seams and trimmings. The design is copied from a luncheon mat made years ago of corset strings! There was a fad at one time for sewing these in braided and scroll designs with fine stitches on the wrong side of the mat.

Follow the directions in the sketch, making the circles in pairs, using No. 40 cotton thread to sew them. Braid three cords together and then sew the braided strip around and around to make the center of the mat. Sew a row of the circles to the edge of this center part; then add another braided row, being careful to "ease in" the inside edge just enough to keep the mat flat. Continue adding alternate rows of circles and braiding until the mat is size desired. To join the ends of the braided rows, pull one end through the braiding to the wrong side of the mat; then trim the ends and sew them flat.

NOTICE: Every Homemaker should have copies of the two books containing 96 How to Sew articles. You may secure SEWING, For the Home Decorator; and GIFTS, Novelties and Embroideries; both for 25 cents; and your choice of the Patchwork Quilt Leaflet showing 36 authentic stitches; or the Rag Ruff Leaflet FREE, while the supply lasts. Don't delay, as the offer of both books at this low price will be withdrawn soon. Send your order at once to Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

Centerpiece for Child's Party Table.—A bouquet of lollipops in many colors makes an attractive centerpiece for the children's party table. The lollipops may be fitted into a flower holder that is placed in a bowl or low basket.

Keeping Mayonnaise.—Mayonnaise should be stored in covered jars on the upper shelf of the refrigerator, since it is likely to separate if it is kept in the coldest section.

Beaten Egg Whites.—Never leave egg whites after they have been beaten still. If let stand they will flatten and will not beat up again.

When Bureau Drawers Stick.—If doors or bureau drawers stick in hot weather, a little wax rubbed on the surface where friction occurs will end the trouble.

Repairing Last Year's Bathing Suit.—If last year's bathing suit is found to have a hole in it, the hole may be repaired and then covered with a small aquatic figure, such as a fish, diving girl or duck which may be purchased inexpensively.

Bolled Frosting.—If you have trouble making bolled frosting, try boiling the sugar and water until it forms a soft ball in the water, instead of till it spins a thread. Most people cook the sugar and water too long.

Lasting Paper Dolls.—Children like to play with paper dolls. Try pasting them on coarse muslin and they will last much longer.

Treat Favored by Fishermen
Great strength and a fighting heart in a small body make the trout a favorite of fishermen. No fish as small fights so long when hooked. It protects itself by changing color to blend with that of the bottom of a stream. It is something of a weather prophet, too. Eight or nine hours before a freshet, caused by rains miles away, floods its home stream, a trout stops feeding.

The Fountain of Youth
The Bahama Islands belong to the Bahama group. It was here that an old woman told Ponce de Leon of the Fountain of Youth, which was reputed to exist in Florida. The tradition probably originated from the story of a fresh water spring in the ocean near the Florida coast. A Spaniard who drank from this spring is said to have attained a new life—a sort of physical rejuvenation to his youth.

Charleston Claims Many "Firsts"
Charleston was settled in 1670. Fort Johnson and Fort Moultrie, near Charleston, played decisive parts in the American Revolution. Fort Sumter, in Charleston harbor, drew the first shot of the Civil war. Charleston claims more "firsts" than any city in the country, among them the first fireproof building in America, the first museum, first prescription drugstore, first regular steam railroad, first fire insurance company, first apartment house and first legitimate theater. The Charleston Chamber of Commerce, organized in 1773, was the first city chamber of commerce.

HEADLINES FROM THE LIVES OF PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELF!

"Death in the Eeltrap"

HELLO, EVERYBODY:

A fisherman takes his living out of the water, and at times the water is pretty generous. But it's a treacherous element when it wants to be, and there are times when it takes back more than it has given. Sometimes it drives a mighty hard bargain.

Judd O'Rourke, of Hartford, Conn., made his living for eight or nine months by wheedling it from the Saco river in Maine. Judd didn't take any too much from the river. Darned little more than he needed to live on. But when the river came around to collect, it wanted Judd's life in payment for those few months of subsistence.

It was in the spring of 1929 when Judd started to wrest a living from the river. He was digging clams and fishing for eels, down at the mouth of the stream. Eel fishing took quite a bit of equipment. One set line alone cost about eight dollars for material and a day's work putting it together.

A set line is a long rope, with weights on it every 20 feet to keep it down at the bottom of the river, and three or four hundred shorter lines attached to it at intervals. The shorter lines are baited to catch the eels which swim along near the bottom of the stream on their way out to sea with the ebbing tide.

Set Line Anchored by Concrete Blocks.

Judd's set line stretched clear across the river. It was anchored by concrete blocks a few feet out from either shore, and at one end there was a float that told Judd where he could find it when he wanted it. You never take a set line entirely out of the water. When you want to gather your catch, you haul the line up at the buoy and work your way along it in a rowboat, pulling the line up in front of you and letting it fall back in the water behind.

All through April and May, Judd made his living digging clams and tending his set lines. And then, on the morning of June 7, Old Man Elver presented him with a bill for what he had taken. The bill was for one human life, and Old Man River didn't pull his punches when he started collecting them.

That morning, Judd and his friend, George Croft, were rowing out to some mud flats for bait. On their way, they passed one of Judd's set lines and stopped to see if there was a stray eel or two on it. Judd caught the line at the buoy, pulled it up, and started working along it toward the other side of the river. He worked along until he was about half way across, and then the line stuck.

Judd figured it was caught on a snag on the river bottom. Try as he would, he couldn't pull it up, so the two men gave up and rowed on to get their bait. But on the way back, Judd began thinking that he didn't want to lose a new eight dollar set line and decided to have a try at diving for it.

The river was only about 14 feet deep at low tide, and all the clothes Judd had on were his boots and a pair of old pants with legs cut off at the knees. He took off his boots, and then tied the boat's anchor rope to his waist and gave the other end to George Croft to hold. That rope was for safety's sake. The waters on the Maine coast are ice cold, even in June, and if Judd got a cramp he wanted George to be able to haul him up. But sometimes the contraptions we rig up for our safety are the things that do us the most harm.

Judd Finds Where His Line is Snagged.

Judd dived. He found his line and began working his way toward where it was snagged. He found the place. An old water-logged tree stump, rolled downstream by the current, had lodged on top of it. Judd couldn't budge the stump. His lungs were bursting, so he rose to the surface. The only thing he could do now was to cut the line on each side of the stump and save as much of it as possible. Taking his fishing knife he dived again.

He reached the bottom, cut the line on one side, and then, after rising to the surface for another breath of air, he went down again. But this time, he miscalculated his distance. He reached bottom on the wrong side of the stump and had to work his way around it. "That took a few precious seconds," says Judd, "because now the current was becoming stronger and it was getting increasingly hard to hold my feet on the bottom. But at last I found the line. I cut it quickly, doubled my knees under me and shot toward the surface."

Anchor Rope Caught on Bottom.

But Judd didn't reach the surface. He shot up about five feet, and then stopped with a jerk that took the air out of his lungs. That jerk scared Judd. "The first thing I thought," he says, "was that a large squid had me. To this day I don't know why I should have thought that, for the largest squid I have ever seen weighed only a pound and a half. Then I looked down and saw that it was the anchor rope, tied to my waist, that was holding me. I knew it must be caught on the bottom, so I grasped it and hauled myself downward, hand over hand."

Judd's lungs were aching now. The air was gone out of them, and he knew it would be a long time before he could manage that rope and get to the surface. Would he make it? Well—he was doing his best. That 10 feet of rope seemed like 500. His heart was beating and his head was spinning. At last he reached the point where the rope was snagged, and then—calamity! As he reached the snag, the rope suddenly tightened, drawing him up close against the stump. Up in the boat, George Croft had picked that moment to become alarmed and try to haul Judd out of the water. And with the rope caught in the snag, George was hauling him down instead of up—down to his death!

Judd began to struggle. But the rope only pulled him closer to the stump. It was so tight that Judd couldn't possibly free it from the snag, and there weren't many more seconds left in which he'd be able to free it. His lungs were bursting and his stomach felt as if it were turning inside out. He began swallowing water—and at that moment he thought of the knife he had brought down to cut the set line. It was in his belt. He got it out, cut the rope—and that was the last Judd remembered.

When Judd woke up, he was lying in the bottom of the boat, and George was giving him artificial respiration. George had had the scare of his life when the rope suddenly went slack and Judd's body had come to the surface and then started to go down again. He had fished Judd out with a gaff and then worked over him until he brought him around again.

Pain in Front Of Ear Often Boil Symptom

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

A PATIENT may feel a little pain or soreness in the ear, which later becomes so severe that when he telephones his physician the latter has almost made up his mind that he will find a severe ear infection and that the very severe pain is likely due to the formation of pus in the mastoid—the spongy bone behind the ear.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

He finds the patient in great pain, but is relieved to find that the pain is not behind the ear, and the mastoid is not painful when pressed. The pain is really in or in front of the ear and is increased when he moves the ear about.

What is usually the trouble when the pain is in front of the ear, and moving the ear increases the pain? These are symptoms of a furuncle or boil in the canal going in to the outer side of the drum of the ear—not in the ear proper at all.

The pressure of the boil and the inflammation in this small round canal causes intense pain. In speaking of these boils or furuncles in the outer ear canal, Dr. F. S. Wrigley, Manchester, in The Practitioner, says that the majority of cases do not call for operation and a soothing and "waiting" or palliative treatment often gives the better result. The canal should be packed with half-inch ribbon gauze moistened with some antiseptic preparation such as 2 per cent carbolic in glycerin, and fomentations (warm and moist medicated liquids) over the whole ear give greater relief than dry heat in any form.

When the boil comes to a "head" and it can be seen to contain pus, opening should not be delayed. As opening a boil in this region is often very painful, Dr. Wrigley states that a general anesthetic should always be given.

Some physicians clean out the canal with equal parts of peroxide and warm water, dry the canal with absorbent cotton, and then insert a few drops of Keith's dressing (one part carbolic to 16 parts glycerin). If the boil is small and "ready," it is opened with a wooden toothpick that has been dipped in carbolic. It is important to remember that when pain is in and in front of the ear and is increased when ear is moved, the trouble is likely due to a boil in the canal.

It is only natural that a patient who is consulting his physician for all manner of small ailments causes the physician to feel that the patient is just nervous and "imagines" many of the symptoms of which he complains. And even when there is some slight organic condition present, such as a slight heart murmur, the physician knows from exercise or other tests that this condition is really causing no symptoms. The symptoms are due to nervousness.

Similarly with symptoms occurring in the stomach and intestines. "The digestive tract is so exceedingly sensitive to nervousness, worry, anger, and fatigue that the physician must learn something of the patient's temperament, of his sorrows and his problems of life in home, office, and shop. Actually, even when an organic disease is found, such as an ulcer in the duodenum (the first part of the small intestine into which the stomach empties) it still may be necessary for the physician to delve into the patient's private life to learn such things as financial reverses, domestic unhappiness, or bad nervous habits which commonly give rise to an ulcer of stomach or duodenum and later help to keep it active."

Tell Doctor Your Troubles. In other words, it is the home, office, or shop life that is causing the symptoms whether or not the ulcer or other condition is present, and if present, is causing the symptoms to continue day after day and week after week. No medical or even surgical treatment can cure this condition as long as his nervousness and upsets continue.

The thought then for patients is to tell their physician about the things that are worrying or upsetting them. The physician may be able to help the patient to overcome these conditions. Of course, it is not hard for the physician to recognize the ordinary neurotic or fussy individual who is described by Dr. Walter Alvarez, Mayo clinic, thus: "We physicians all dread meeting the woman with so many complaints that she comes to the first interview with a written list of them; we know immediately that she hasn't much seriously wrong with her and we know that our treatment is not likely to be of much help to her."

Lewis' Violent Blast at Garner Wrecks Influence as Labor Leader

Resentment Spreads Quickly and Things Begin to Happen; Reaction in House Labor Committee Is Immediate; Strengthens Political Position of Vice President.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—There have been so many instances in history where one act or one expression, or one omission, has changed the course of events that it is necessary here to make mention only that such things happen. Everyone has seen them. In only a few instances, however, have those on the scene been able to make a guess as to the far-reaching consequences. On the other hand, a number can be recalled which obviously were going to raise Cain from the start. It is one of the latter type about which I write now.

When John L. Lewis burst forth with angry violence and referred to Vice President Garner as "a labor-baiting, poker-playing, whiskey-drinking, old man," he wrote "finis" for his long career as a labor leader. Even with his ability to shake his bushy hair and wrinkle his bearded eyebrows and evolve the most biting of all language into a description of his enemies, even with this capacity and a million or so workers paying him dues, John Lewis is through as a political influence in behalf of organized labor.

It is not meant here that Lewis will not continue to shout and tear his hair and accuse everyone of being unfair to organized labor; he still has his vicious tongue, and he is still president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. As long as he has that title he can go places and make speeches and drive home threats and yell "bloody murder," and, of course, he will get newspapers to print his statements. What I am saying is, however, that Lewis has created such resentment around the capitol building as seldom has been seen, and instead of having weasel congressmen obey his dictates, their greetings to him hereafter are likely to be of the thumb-to-nose variety.

Reaction Comes Quickly

In House Labor Committee

As an illustration of how these things react, mention may be made that immediately after the Lewis eruption of political lava, the house labor committee decided to go forward with legislation amending the federal wages and hours law—amendments to which Lewis was violently opposed. True, there was no member of the committee had the guts to give Lewis a call-down in the hearing, but they did vote to send the legislation to the floor for debate and, in effect, tell Lewis to take his marbles and go home.

It was the second time that Lewis has pulled stupid boners, actions so dumb that they seem inexplicable when they come from a man who has had the build-up given Lewis as a labor leader and politician. It will be recalled how, a year ago, Lewis walked into the office of Speaker Bankhead of the house, and announced what the house must do about some labor legislation. Mr. Bankhead, a thoroughly level-headed Democrat from the deep South, fixed things right up for the labor leader—to make sure that Lewis would lose out. One would think that Lewis would have learned his lesson from the dictatorial arrogance he displayed on that occasion, but he came back for more.

Perhaps, the circumstances of the Lewis statement should be related to give a clear picture of the consequences that seem certain to flow from his personal attack on Mr. Garner. The house committee invited Lewis to appear as a witness to give the C. I. O. views on the amendments that were proposed. Lewis spent a few minutes in discussing the text of the amendments and then launched into a sourpuss tirade about the Democratic party. He asserted that the party, after having accepted labor's gifts—C. I. O. having supported President Roosevelt with money and men in both presidential campaigns—had now turned out as a traitor. He argued that he never had looked for help from most of the Republicans but had believed the Democrats would stick by him and his dues-paying workers.

But through the last year or more, however, Lewis found someone in the Democratic party who was "searching for the heart of labor" and that individual, he shouted in red-faced anger, is "a labor-baiting, poker-playing, whiskey-drinking, evil old man, named Garner." The vice president was the "genesis" of a great campaign against labor, so Lewis declared.

News Traps Rapidly and Then Things Begin to Happen

Well, I have witnessed fast traveling of news around the halls of the Capitol many times, but I never have known word to get from office to office and to the far corners of every building any faster than the Lewis statement. And things began to happen.

Before the afternoon was over, the Texas delegation had met and had taken a resolution condemning Lewis and expressing the "deep resentment and indignation" at his "bitter, personal attack" upon the vice president. There was talk around the house and senate later about a proposition to bar Lewis from any further appearance before congressional committee hearings but that faded away. Nevertheless, my guess at this stage is that if and when Lewis does appear before any congressional committee again, he will be subjected to a grilling that will tan him to a deep brown.

Now, thus far, this column has dealt only with Lewis. There is more.

Wherever politicians gathered around Washington during the week following the intemperate action by Lewis, one could not fail to hear conjecture as to its effect upon the movement to make the vice president the Democratic presidential nominee next year. The feeling was almost unanimous that "Cactus Jack" could have had no better break, politically. That is to say, an attack by Lewis, who led the sit-down strikers and who has been tied in like a hand in a glove with certain of the radical elements, could not fail to avert support behind Garner. Most of the politicians know now that the C. I. O. is a crumbling and disintegrating mass of badly led workers. Throughout the rural areas and in the small towns, he has hurt the cause of union labor beyond compare.

Factions of Democratic Party Split Further Asunder

The influence of the Lewis statement does not stop there, however, for there is a definite cleavage in the ranks of the majority party already. It is to be remembered in this connection that the backbone of the Democratic party has been the "solid South." The South, generally speaking, has clung to conservative ways and modes of living and has maintained traditions which have served its people well. That viewpoint is quite contrary to the New Deal and to the President's advisors of this month. Nor have the President's advisors enjoyed the knowledge that a lot of Mr. Garner's friends have been pushing him very hard for the party nomination in 1940. Naturally, these folks around the White House are the leaders in the plan to have President Roosevelt seek a precedent-breaking third term. They do not like to see a man become too popular or who might offer real resistance to a Roosevelt nomination.

From these facts, it becomes more or less obvious that the Lewis attack on Mr. Garner constitutes something of a bombshell in splitting the two factions of the Democratic party further asunder. With the Lewis record of support of everything new dealish, it can not fail to convince voters of the brand of Garner democracy.

There is still a further phase or sphere of influence to be mentioned. Mr. Garner has long been known as a conservative Democrat and he has long been powerful in the councils of his party. To enter upon an assumption, then, that he may be the Democratic nominee next year, where does that leave the Republicans? Republican leadership has been steering to the right, to the conservative side, as far as they have shown their hand. The question to be asked after that statement is, where does that leave the New Dealers?

Lewis Does More Harm to Labor Than Any Other Man

One could follow these questions on down into the state political situations and a merry time would be had by all. I have no guess as to which way the thing will come out. Probably Mr. Garner will not be the Democratic nominee at all. But these conjectures I have been making have been thrown more as proof of the assertion that Lewis demonstrated his lack of political ability than for any other reason. And in making that statement, I still entertain a belief that Lewis has done more harm to organized labor's cause than any other one man in America.

One has only to realize that the Lewis prestige already was on the down grade. The leadership he has been exerting has been shown in its true colors. When these are coupled with the fact that he stooped to make the personal life of a national figure the subject of his remarks, some think he started the machinery to drive himself into oblivion. I have known Mr. Garner many years. I believe there can be no question about his integrity. His ability long has been recognized. If, then, by any chance, Mr. Garner should be the Democratic nominee, where does that leave John L. Lewis? From this rail fence, it appears that Lewis has led his faction of union workers into another blind alley.

Strange Facts

Business of Dueling Self-Esteem Hanging Around

In several European countries today so many gentlemen still have to settle "affairs of honor" with a sword or pistol that dueling arenas constitute a profitable industry. Of the large number in Budapest, one arena is known to have booked a duel on an average of every 33 hours since it opened its doors in 1897.

The incredible self-esteem of ex-Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany was typically expressed on his pilgrimage to Jerusalem in 1898. Feeling that he was too important to pass through the city's regular gates like a "common person," he had a special entrance made for himself in the wall.

As groups, women have swum the English channel in less time than men. Based on accepted records, the 11 men averaged 17 hours and 39 minutes, while the seven women averaged only 15 hours and 57 minutes, or a difference of one hour and 42 minutes.

Up to the Nineteenth century in England, so many crimes were punishable by hanging that the numerous gibbets scattered throughout the country almost always had the body of a malefactor hanging from them as a warning. Eventually these objects became so common that artists painted them into their landscapes as an accepted part of the scenery.—Collier's.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 35 to 40), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men. The woman about her 40's, long of eye, dimly spotted, must not be moody and nervous. Get more frank air, 3 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Dr. E. F. Fitch's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vitality to every fiber and makes common daily annoyances and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. WELL WORTH TRYING!

PASSING the BUCK
 Let Private Capital Promote Prosperity, says Roosevelt.

Pres. Roosevelt is preaching "Economy" now.

Chic Mexican Aprons for inexpensive, useful gifts at the Burke Gift Shop.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York made a jitney bet that Roosevelt would not run for a third term. He made the bet with Rep. Randolph, Democrat, of West Virginia.

 Roosevelt to Bolt if Conservative is Nominated—Headline.

—And be a candidate on the New Deal ticket? He has it in the blood; remember what Teddy did to poor old Taft?

"See Baker and See Better."
 Dr. Baker, southwest's popular optical specialist, will be at the El Cibola Hotel, Thursday and Friday, Aug. 17 and 18. Remember the dates.

JOHN LEWIS BREAKS PICK
 By his recent highly-published attack on Vice-President Garner, calling Garner a "whiskey-drinking, poker-playing old man," etc.

In the Kentucky governor's race, John Y. Brown, backed by the C. I. O., came out far behind. P. S. He'd look better at the business end of a shovel, we'll say.

 For the Tiny Tot at the Burke Gift Shop.

S. P. Conductor C. C. Whittington, seeing the gorgeous sight of the Mexican Heavenly Blue morning glories last year at the rear of the Burke residence, asked for some seed. We granted his request. He says "they are the prettiest sight in El Paso." Mr. Whittington resides in that city.

Your commentator sent his old friends Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Williams and daughter Miss Dorothy of Huntington, West Virginia, "a living remembrance of New Mexico"—some Mexican Heavenly Blue (giant size) morning glory seed. They were delighted with the massive, sky-blue flowers which bloomed in abundance. Miss Dorothy, only 18, is quite a pianiste, appearing on the concert stage and is director of several orchestras of note.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams played with your commentator at the Orpheum Theatre orchestra in Lexington, Kentucky, seasons of 1918 to 1914. Mr. Williams played drums, orchestra bells, xylophone and tympani (kettledrums); Mrs. Williams played the piano, while the writer played trombone.

Two brothers in California named Raspberry have applied to the court to have their name changed.

So, Heats la Vieta (until we meet again) from the Land of la Masana or tomorrow.

Walter Krohne, Jr., came in the latter part of last week from Los Angeles, and will remain over for this month visiting relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Norman left last Saturday for Albuquerque from which city they went to Belen to be present at the wedding of their daughter Edith, particulars of which will be found elsewhere in this paper.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Garrison and children were on a short vacation the latter part of last week, going to their old home in Texas. They didn't stay long, for Jess is about the busiest man in town.

Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Taylor were here from Roswell, visiting at the home of Mrs. Taylor's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Hobbie, returning home Sunday evening. Mr. Taylor is a foreman in the Biological Survey Service.

Correction—In the Martinez-Navarro wedding of July 29, the bridesmaid was Miss Mabel Mackey, instead of Mrs. Vigil.
