Hang Up Another Rag

The Pennsylvania Recruits of the Fort Stanton Triple C Camp invaded Carrizozo last Sunday and raced the "would-be" Carrizozo team "to death." The trouncing was so decisive that to mention the score, you would think they had been playing at the bowling alley instead of the baseball park. Four of the regulars were absent and Manager Miller filled in the gaps with golfers, musicians and other artists. Golfer Sat Chavez was the hero for Carrizozo, when he nabbed a hard drive in the outfield. Sat smilingly responded to the "Bronx" cheers by saying that he just didn't find time to get out of his way, and he had to do something—or else! Sat also complained as to the dimensions between a baseball bat and a golf club. All right, Sat, "every monkey to his rope."

Previous to this encounter, we had beaten Fort Stanton twice.

The Alamogordo News of last week gave preferred space on its front page and published the picture with a complimentary footnote of Miss Mona Huss, Queen of the Firemen's Kid Rodeo. In the picture, Miss Mona sits authoritatively on her pony, "Dun-ny," and her saddle was also an Alamogordo product, having been made by Jordan & Son, saddlers of that city. Miss Huss is a sister to Mrs. R. M. Daugherty, Mr. Daugherty being the meat-cutter at the Economy Grocery and Meat Market of Carrizozo.

The Die Is Cast

On the eve of going to press, word comes from abroad that Hitler has not only declared war on Poland, but is already shelling Warsaw and a portion of the city is in flames.

Great Britain has censored all news of a military nature, but it is safe to presume that she is doing plenty, right now.

So we regret to say that the war is on, and it is our business to stay out of it. To see your boy arrayed in brilliant military costume, going away to the Front, is one picture—to see him return from the field of so-called honor with only one leg, one arm, perhaps blind or gassed so as to make his future life one of misery and without hope in the world, is quite another.

We Americans are not cowards, neither are we savages. We love peace and abhor war. To say we will keep out of war is not cowardice, for it takes a lot of manhood to stay out of a conflict, for we still have the fighting blood of our fathers left in us.

As much as we would love to see Democracy triumph over Communism, Fascism and Bolshevism, yet for the sake of our young men, let us avoid foreign entanglements.

As long as they don't tread on the tail of our coats, let us keep our senses and obey the advice of Washington and Jefferson.

As free Americans we take this position in the face of present conditions. In view of the fact that war now exists, our sympathy goes out to the nations who believe in God, peace, home and native land, and against, not the German people—but the one man, Hitler, who as we see it, is wholly responsible for what will happen.

His is a "one man show," for the German people are opposed to war and love peace. Mr. Chamberlain says, "God forbid that we should be first to slaughter women and children." Hitler says, "anyone offering either in word or intention, to do otherwise than follow what I have decreed, the men are to be speedily shot and the women, beheaded."

R. E. P. (Pick) Warden is here from Albuquerque, visiting his daughters Mary Pickett Compton of the Gladys Hicks Beauty Shop, Maudie Warden and local friends for a short time.

Miss Della Ward, popular instructor in the Carrizozo High School, will arrive here the last of the week from Garden Grove, Calif., where she spent her vacation.

On August 26, two hawks fought a desperate battle in the air at Port Falls, Idaho, and finally, both died. In the midst of their fight, they got their claws fastened and fell across a live electric wire. This resulted in a short-circuit and cut-off electricity over the whole district. Finally, the hawks fell to earth in flames. The district was in total darkness for several hours before the line was repaired.

Last Friday at the Bonito Dam, Lester Runnels saw what he at first thought was a man swimming on the opposite side of the dam, but it finally disappeared. The next morning, he saw the same object near the shore on the east side and with the aid of a long pole, succeeded in getting it to shore. It was a large trout, which measured 37 inches in length, 20 inches in circumference and weighed 25 pounds. In the opinions of Floy Skinner and A. B. Zumwalt, at the head of the water service, the trout died of old age.—As told by R. A. Walker of the Lyric Theatre.

On a farm near a village in the northwest of Cape Province, Africa, is a tame baboon which accompanies a flock of goats to the grazing ground every morning and drives them home every evening. The baboon was captured by the farmer when it was quite young and was reared by a goat. When it became frightened, it would jump on the goat's back for safety, after the manner of its kind. Now that it is full grown, it rides to the meadow on its foster mother's back and remains all day to protect the flock. He scampers about through the day, hunting insects and digging for tender roots which he eats with a relish. The goats regard him as a devoted shepherd and express no fear as long as he is at hand.

A working gopher brought good luck to Tom Jameson at Marysville, Mo., a short time ago. Tom was riding horseback and returning from town to his farm, when he stopped under a shade tree to rest, an active gopher, working close by, came directly under Tom, so that he felt the upheaval and rolling over saw a roll which looked like money. He grabbed and opened it, to find 10 $5 00 bills. The gopher had pushed the roll out to view as he was running his furrow.

For the first time in the history of this nation, women must state their true age when registering in Mississippi. When a sweet Miss wishes to register, she cannot say her age is 18 when perhaps she has reached 28. Because of a recent corrupt practice act, the exact age of each one, man or woman must give the correct date of birth and the age on the next birthday. Imagine a young lady having to give her age at, say 21, when she has already told the young man on the registration board, who has

The article further stated that this cooperation was given to Dr. R. E. Blaney, President of the Highway 54 Association, who was present at the meeting. Dr. Blaney, the article further said, would call a meeting of Carrizozo boosters for a date in October, said date being not as yet designated.

Out of the 12 men on a jury in Jacksonville, Fla., last week, one man held back a just verdict. The other members argued and even threatened him, because he had no good reason for his stubbornness. At 6 o'clock in the evening of the third day, the bailiff opened the door to the jury room and yelled out, "what do you fellows want for supper?" The foreman answered and said, "order 11 good wholesome suppers and one bale of hay for a backing jackass." That settled it and the stubborn member gave in.

Recent Death of an 88-Year-Old Kansas Woman Recalls Gen. Custer's Dramatic Rescue of Two Captives From Cheyenne Indians 70 Years Ago

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

SHE died the other day and her passing snapped a living link between the present-day, modern America and an era in frontier history which now seems almost as remote as the days when Kentucky was the "Dark and Bloody Ground" and a "Narrative of an Indian Captivity" was a familiar type of American literature. Yet it was only 71 years ago that she was kidnaped from her home in Kansas by a war party of Cheyenne Indians, suffered indescribably while held a captive by that tribe and was finally rescued by Gen. George A. Custer and his famous Seventh cavalry in one of the most dramatic incidents in the whole thrilling history of the Wild West.

Her name was Mrs. Sarah Brooks but back in 1868 she was Sarah White, the 17-year-old daughter of Benjamin White, who had brought his wife and 10 children from Wisconsin the previous year to a homestead on Granny creek, a tributary of the Republican river in northern Kansas. On the morning of that fateful day, August 13, 1868, Benjamin White and his three sons had gone to the meadows along the Republican to cut hay, leaving his wife, Sarah, their oldest daughter, and three smaller children at the cabin.

Presently a party of six Cheyenne Indians appeared, professing friendship and asking for food. Mrs. White prepared a meal for them and as they started to leave they seized young Sarah and dragged her out of the house. One of the Indians leaped upon his horse and with the aid of another savage pulled her, fighting desperately, up beside him. Then, followed by the horror-stricken gaze of her mother who ran after her with outstretched arms, they rode away.

Meanwhile, another party of the same band of Indians had discovered her father and brothers working in the meadow near the Republican. The boys escaped by running to the river and hiding in the bushes along its banks but the Indians killed Mr. White and rode away with his team of horses. That night when these Indians rode into the Cheyenne camp on Buffalo creek, young Sarah White recognized her father's horses and wept bitterly over this evidence that he and her brothers were dead.

A Stratagem That Failed.
In the camp on the Buffalo she found an old newspaper which she hid in her dress. The next day, as she rode along, she tore off bits of the paper and dropped them unobtrusively, hoping that this might mark a trail which a party of rescuers could follow. But it was a vain hope, for seven months were to elapse before she was to be released from the horrors of her captivity.

Three months after she had been captured, her misery was shared by another young woman—Mrs. Anna Brewster Morgan, the 19-year-old bride of a young farmer in the Solomon valley. He had been attacked while working in the field by Indians who shot him with arrows, left him for dead, and, dashing to his cabin, seized his wife and bore her away. This party of Cheyennes traded her for some ponies to the band which held Sarah White captive.

The Indians made slaves of the two girls and subjected them to all sorts of indignities. The squaws, who were jealous of them, were especially cruel to them. They forced the white women to cut wood and carry it until their shoulders were raw and sore and when they sank down with exhaustion they were lashed with whips until the blood ran.

Sheridan Takes the Field.
These two unfortunate women were only two of the victims of a series of raids by Indians through Kansas that year during which several hundred settlers were slain and members of their families carried away as captives. As a result of these depredations, Gov. Samuel N. Crawford called upon the federal government for aid and Gen. Phil Sheridan was ordered into the field. For the difficult task of punishing the Indians and rescuing their captives, Sheridan relied mainly upon the Seventh cavalry, led by Lieut. Col. George A. Custer.

Meanwhile, Governor Crawford had raised a regiment, the Nineteenth Kansas Volunteers, resigned temporarily from his post as governor and led the regiment to a rendezvous with Sheridan at Camp Supply, 100 miles south of Fort Dodge. In March, 1869, Cus-

The three Cheyenne Indians who were held as hostages by Custer for the surrender of Mrs. Morgan and Miss White and who were later taken to Fort Hays where two of them were killed by their guards. There is much confusion as to the identity of these Indians. Custer gives their names as Fat Bear, Bull Knife and Big Head and those are the names accompanying the above illustration (a wood cut made from a photograph taken at Fort Dodge, Kan., March 13, 1869) which appears in Mrs. Custer's book "Following the Guidon." Grinnell, quoting different Cheyennes as his authority, names them as Younger Bear, Chief Comes in Sight and Island (or Lean Man) but elsewhere in his book, "The Fighting Cheyennes," says that the two who were killed by their guards at Fort Hays were Slim Face and Curly Hair.

ter, with 11 troops of the Seventh and 10 of the Nineteenth Kansas, set out to find several bands of the Cheyennes who were still on the warpath.

A short time before a young man applied for permission to accompany the expedition. At first Custer refused but when he learned that the boy's name was Brewster and that he was the brother of Mrs. Morgan who was still held captive by the Indians he permitted him to go along. Young Brewster did not know which Indians had carried his sister away but he hoped that Custer's command might find them and that, by being with it, he might aid in her rescue, if she were still alive, or at least, learn what her fate had been.

Discovers Cheyenne Camp.
Moving out from Fort Cobb Custer's command struck a fresh trail and followed it to the north fork of the Red river in what is now Wheeler county, Texas. There he discovered a camp of Cheyennes under the leadership of a chief known to the whites as Medicine Arrow but called Rock Forehead by his own people. A little farther down the stream was the camp of Chief Little Robe, a noted "friendly." Sometime during this march Custer had learned that two white women were captives in

Mrs. Sarah Brooks (from a photograph taken in 1934 and reproduced here by courtesy of the Kansas City Star and the Concordia (Kan.) Blade-Empire.)

Medicine Arrow's camp and henceforward their rescue became his main objective.

As the commander of the Seventh, accompanied by an orderly, approached the camp, he began making the customary Plains signal of his desire for a conference—by riding around in circles as he advanced. As he drew near, he was met by Medicine Arrow and several other chiefs who invited him to come into the camp for a council. Although Custer was fearful that they had a treacherous intent he agreed to their proposal and entered the camp accompanied only by Colonel Cook of the Seventh. The result was that the soldiers camped near the Indian village and a series of councils ensued.

The testimony as to subsequent events is very contradictory. The version which Custer gives in his book, "My Life on the Plains," is sharply at variance in many details with the Indian version, as given in George Bird Grinnell's "The Fighting Cheyennes." Custer tells how a large party of Indians entered his camp and strove to distract his attention while the remainder made preparations to take down their lodges and move the village away before the troops realized what they had done. Thereupon, he seized four Indians—"chiefs and warriors of prominence." Custer calls them—to hold as hostages for the surrender of the two white women.

"The Indians insinuate that Custer acted treacherously in seizing these men while they were making a friendly visit to his camp and that they were old men of no particular importance. However that may be, the fact remains that when Custer sent one of his four captives to the village bearing a message, that he would hang the other three if the captives were not delivered up to him, the Indians, after protesting that the women were not in their camp, finally sent Chief Little Robe to Custer's camp to arrange for the exchange of prisoners.

Escape of the Captives.
Custer tells a dramatic story of the arrival of the two women in his camp the next morning—how he sent three of his senior officers forward to escort them into camp and how young Brewster, unable to restrain his eagerness to see his long-lost sister, raced forward past the officers and clasped Mrs. Morgan in his arms. "The appearance of the two girls was sufficient to excite our deepest sympathy," writes Custer. "Miss White, the younger of the two, though not beautiful, possessed a most interesting face. Her companion would have been pronounced beautiful by the most critical judge, being of such a type as one might imagine Maud Muller to be. Their joy at their deliverance, however, could not hide the evidences of privation and suffering to which they had been subjected by their cruel captors. They were clothed in dresses made from flour sacks, the brand of the mills being plainly seen on each dress; showing that the Indians who had held them in captivity had obtained their provisions from the government at some agency.

"The entire dress of the two girls was as nearly like the Indian mode as possible: both wore leggings and moccasins; both wore their hair in two long braids, and as if to propitiate us, the Indians, before releasing them, had added to the wardrobe of the two girls various rude ornaments, such as are worn by squaws. About their wrists they wore coils of brass wire; on their fingers had been placed numerous rings and about their necks strings of variously colored beads. Almost the first remark I heard young Brewster make after the arrival of the two girls was 'Sister, do take those hateful things off.'"

The women were placed in an ambulance and the Seventh started on its march to Fort Dodge, taking with it the three Indian captives whom Custer determined to hold until the Cheyennes came in off the warpath. Mrs. Morgan was overjoyed to learn that her husband was recovering from his arrow wounds in the post hospital at Fort Hays. Later they went back to their home in the Solomon valley and lived there for several years. But the memory of her captivity preyed upon her mind which at last gave way and she ended her days in a Kansas state insane asylum.

Miss White also returned to her home and while engaged in teaching school met E. O. Brooks, a veteran of the Civil war. They were married and made their home near the White homestead where she had been taken captive. There she lived for more than 70 years, reared a family of six sons and six daughters and tried to forget what she had suffered for seven months as an Indian captive. Death came on May 12, 1936, to end the ugly nightmare of those memories.

Six years after the capture of Mrs. Morgan and Miss White by the Cheyennes and their rescue by Gen. George A. Custer, occurred a similar incident in which the same tribe of Indians was involved and in which another famous Indian fighter, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, played the role of rescuer. That was the capture and release of the German sisters during the war with the Southern Plains tribes in 1874-75.

On September 10, 1874, a covered wagon, drawn by an ox team, and accompanied by two men on horseback, halted on the banks of a small stream in western Kansas. The party was composed of John German, a native of Blue Ridge, Ga., and a veteran of the Confederate army, his wife, Lydia, their son, Stephen Wise German, and their six daughters—Rebecca Jane, 20; Katherine, 17; Joanna, 14; Sophia, 12; Julia Arminda, 7; and Nancy Adelaide, 5, called "Addie" by her sisters. They were on their way to Colorado where they were going because of German's poor health, and they expected to reach Fort Wallace, not far from the Colorado border, the next day.

The next morning their camp was attacked by a war party of 19 Cheyennes who killed and scalped Mr. and Mrs. German, their son and two of the girls, Rebecca Jane and Joanna. Then they carried the other four daughters away and held them as captives until November 8 when the camp of Chief Gray Beard was attacked by a detachment of General Miles' army, led by Lieut. Frank D. Baldwin.

When the Indians fled, taking Sophia and Katherine with them, they left the two little girls, Julia and Addie, who were found by the soldiers in the deserted camp. "When rescued they were the most emaciated mortals I have ever seen. Their little hands were like birds' claws," writes General Miles in his memoirs.

They were sent to Fort Leavenworth under the care of an army physician and there the women of the garrison nursed them back to health. On returning to Miles' command, the doctor brought with him a photograph of Julia and Addie and when Miles saw this it gave him an idea. On the back of it he wrote this message:

Headquarters Indian Territory Expedition in the field, January 26, 1875. To the Misses German:
Your little sisters are well, and in the hands of friends. Do not be discouraged. Every effort is being made for your welfare.

NELSON A. MILES,
U. S. Army
Colonel and Brevet Major General Commanding Expedition.

Then he gave the photograph to a Delaware Indian scout and told him to find the Indians who still held Sophia and Katherine and give the picture to them secretly. He was also ordered to tell Chief Stone Calf that no mercy would be shown his band if the girls were not returned alive and unharmed. The Delaware scout set out over the snowy plains and after a remarkable journey of more than 400 miles, found the Cheyenne camp on the Pecos river in New Mexico and managed to deliver his message to the captives who had begun to despair of ever being rescued.

By this time the Cheyennes, who had been kept so constantly on the move by the vigorous campaigning of Miles and Col. Ranald S. Macdonald, and who were nearly destitute, were quite willing to listen to peace overtures. So Stone Calf took the two girls from their captors, placed them in a lodge next to his and treated them with special consideration on the journey back to the Cheyenne agency in Indian territory. There they were surrendered to Miles.

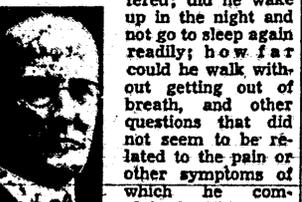

A short time later the four German sisters were reunited at Fort Leavenworth and on the recommendation of General Miles the sum of $10,000 was deducted from the annuities given to the Cheyennes and $2,500 placed to the credit of each of the girls. Miles became their guardian and served thus until they came of age.

Addie, who became Mrs. Frank Andrews and mother of 11 children, was, at the last account, living near Bern, Kan.; Julia, now Mrs. Julia Brooks, was living near Humboldt, Neb., and near her lived her sister, Katherine, and Katherine, now Mrs. Katherine Seedorfer, was living at Alameda, Cal.

Patient Should Tell Physician All Symptoms

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON
THERE was a time when our humorists liked to say, "The patient has had his tonsils and all his teeth removed but he still has his rheumatism." We do not hear this joke any more because practically every family has seen the very satisfactory results obtained by removal of teeth and tonsils in preventing further attacks of rheumatism although joints damaged by chronic rheumatism can hardly be expected to be free entirely of pain and stiffness.

Another joke on the medical profession was based on the "foolish" questions the physician asked the patient—his parents' and grandparents' age when they died and any illnesses from which they suffered; did he wake up in the night and not go to sleep again readily; how far could he walk without getting out of breath, and other questions that did not seem to be related to the pain or other symptoms of which he complained. This questioning or getting the "history" of the patient before making the examination is not considered a joke any more because only the patient can accurately describe his pain or other symptoms. Thus a patient, much worried about his heart as it seemed to be beating too rapidly, visited a heart specialist. He expected the physician immediately to use the stethoscope, the sphygmomanometer (blood pressure machine), the electrocardiograph, which records strength and regularity of the heart, and the fluoroscope, which enables the physician to actually see the heart.

Exercise Test Made.
Instead, the physician had him walk across the room and asked him how far he could walk at this rate without getting out of breath. When he told the distance that he could walk without getting out of breath easily, the heart specialist told him he had no heart disease, and to worry no further about it. An examination with stethoscope, blood pressure machine, electrocardiograph and fluoroscope was made, however, and the heart was pronounced normal.

Thus the simple question, "How far can you walk without getting out of breath?" gave the heart specialist the information that it was not the heart—that was causing the symptoms.

Mucous Colitis Held Incurable

When a research physician who has studied the intestinal tract—stomach, small and large intestine—for many years tells us that no case of colitis (inflammation of the large intestine) is ever cured, it may sound discouraging to the thousands of individuals who suffer with this ailment, the outstanding symptoms of which are soreness across abdomen, pains, colic, jelly-like substance on wastes from bowel.

Dr. Walter Alvarez, Mayo clinic, professor of medicine, University of Minnesota graduate school of medicine, at a meeting of the American College of Physicians said: "Do not spend much time and attention on the colon (large intestine) in cases of mucous colitis, which might better be called sensitive colon. Find out what kind of person the patient is (most of them are women); how they complain; what it is—physical, emotional or spiritual—that upsets them and then try to remedy these conditions if possible. Listen to the patient. The trouble may be food allergy—sensitivity to certain foods, a fit of anger, a 'cold' or almost any type of physical, emotional or mental stress and strain.

Cases Begin in Childhood.
"Many of these cases begin in childhood due to bad early training and 'no case of colitis is ever cured.' The patient simply has to 'live with his disorder.'

"These patients must be listened to with attention and treated with sympathy, understanding and tact. "The thought then is that mucous colitis is caused by the nervousness or the emotions, and it is the nervousness and the upsets that must be treated, not the colon itself. And just as the pernicious anemia patient must always use liver or liver extract and the diabetic patient use insulin or protamine insulin, so must the mucous colitis patient always remain or try to remain calm in spirit if he wishes to keep free of the symptoms of mucous colitis.

"In the meantime, avoiding rough foods, and using plain water containing a teaspoonful of salt, or plain water enemas, will help to prevent symptoms."

200,000 Descendants Sat on Their Liquor Simple Life on Coins

The total number of descendants of any colonial family that settled in this country between 1620 and 1640 is estimated to be more than two hundred thousand.

England's aleconners, who practiced their profession of testing ale and beer up to a few years ago, determined the sugar content by pouring some of the liquor on a wooden stool and then sitting on it. If their leather breeches stuck, they considered the brew satisfactory.

All fees of American attorneys are not left to their discretion. The United States Code, for example, prohibits a lawyer from charging his client more than $10 for prosecuting and obtaining a claim for a pension.

Today many oil tankers plying the West coast do not have to "come in" for loading, reports Collier's. They get their cargoes through a buoy-marked flexible hose attached to a huge pipe that runs out into the Pacific from a point near San Luis Obispo.

Instead of dignifying their new coins with engravings of political heroes, the Irish make them gay with pictures of pigs, hens, plants, and other farm produce.—Collier's.

"Two Kinds of Death"

HELLO EVERYBODY:

This is the story of a man who had a choice to make—a choice between two kinds of death. One of those deaths was certain—and unpleasant. If he chose the other, he'd at least have a chance.

But he chose the death that was unpleasant—and certain! Anthony A. Hensler is his name, and he lives in New York City. Tony is an aviator, and one day in the latter part of July, 1927, he had a call from Andy Andrews, who was then senior pilot at Curtis field out in Mineola.

Andy wanted to get hold of somebody who could take a blimp up in the air and put it through test flights. There were few men available in the East, at that time, who knew enough to test fly a blimp, and Tony Hensler was one of them. Andy asked him if he would do the job.

Tony said it was all right with him, and Andy took him to meet a fellow named Hamza who owned the blimp. The arrangements were made and Tony went to work. He did a little tinkering with the machinery and finally had the big gas bag whipped into shape for a first hop.

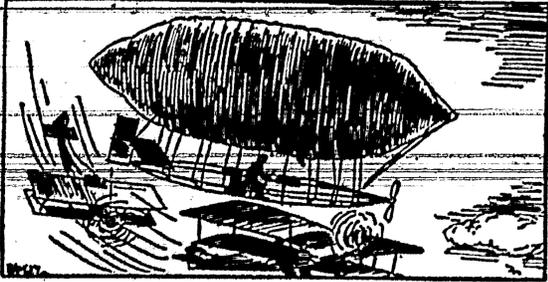

The department of commerce lays down certain rules by which various types of aircraft are tested, and the rule in regard to blimps was that the first hop had to be a fixed flight. That means that the blimp is sent aloft with a line attached to the ground, so that if anything goes wrong it can't get away, float over the city and kill somebody or damage property in coming down.

Tony Decides on a Second Fixed Flight.

Tony made that fixed flight. He adjusted the controls and centered the stabilization. But just to make sure everything was in good shape he decided to make a second fixed flight a few days later while he checked those controls over again. And three days later, on the third of August, he did make that fixed flight. And it nearly fixed Tony for good.

Tony climbed into the blimp all set for what he thought was going to be just another routine test in a captive balloon firmly anchored to the ground by a land line. But the trouble wasn't long in starting. No sooner was the blimp in the air than the land line snapped and the big gas bag started shooting upward.

"She went up to 6,000 feet before I got the motor started," Tony says, "but the motor, a two-cylinder, high-speed motorcycle engine, finally began to turn over, and for a while everything went swell. But not for long. I was just over Manhattan, with my spirits as high as my ship;

They were creating a wind of their own that was slowly turning the blimp's nose around.

when things began to happen. And what I mean, everything happened at once. My controls began to go sour. The big bag began to hog badly. And to make matters worse, a large hole appeared in the nose of the ship.

"I shut off the motor for fear of an explosion. I had carried 15,000 cubic feet of hydrogen when I left the airport, and if a motor spark ever got into any of that leaking gas it would blow me and the blimp to bits."

The ship was losing altitude fast. The city seemed a long way down, but it was getting closer with alarming speed. And then Tony took a desperate chance—did the only thing he could to save himself and avoid crashing on a tall building or in a crowded New York street. He climbed out on the narrow catwalk and pulled on the foremost suspension cords, doubling the cloth over the hole in the bag's nose to prevent any more hydrogen leaking out of the balloon.

The Blimp Wallowed Helplessly in Mid-air.

"After securing those ropes," he says, "I felt a little better, for I then knew that the ship wouldn't crash in the crowded city. But I still didn't dare start the motor, and the blimp was wallowing helplessly in mid air. And what was worse still, the wind was carrying me out to sea."

And right there was where Tony had to make his choice—his choice between two kinds of death. There was a slim chance that he might bring that big bag down safely in crowded New York. On the other side of the picture was the prospect of blowing far out to sea and drowning in the Atlantic. Drowning wasn't a pleasant thought. It would be much better to try and make a landing in New York—for Tony. But what about those other people down there—those scurrying humans that looked like ants as they crawled along the crowded streets? If Tony landed among them there was a pretty good chance that a lot of them would be killed.

So Tony made his choice, and he chose the sure, unpleasant death rather than taking a fighting chance and perhaps killing someone else. He sat still and did nothing while the wind carried him out to sea!

Tony Recognizes a Woman Pilot.

Out across New York harbor he floated—out toward Sandy Hook and the ocean—and his doom! And then, from over toward the Jersey shore Tony saw two planes coming in his direction. As they neared him, he recognized one. It was the plane of Thea Rasch the famous German woman pilot.

The two planes came closer and closer. They couldn't take Tony off that blimp in mid-air. In fact, it didn't look as though there was much they could do for him, so they returned to the airport from which they had come, and sent help. But Tony wasn't counting on the largeness of Thea Rasch. She headed straight for the blimp until Tony thought she was going to crash into it—until he could feel the wind of the plane as it dived under him. The other plane followed suit. They were creating a wind of their own that was slowly turning the blimp's nose around—pointing it back to land.

About that time, too, the wind that was blowing him out to sea shifted to another quarter. Aided by that, and by the two planes, Tony finally landed at College Point, L. I., and there he was met by a crowd that would pack the Yankee stadium, including the College Point police reserves.

"None, I wasn't locked up," says Tony. "But if it hadn't been for the backwash of those two planes I'd have blown out to sea and never found again."

Earth's Motion Interferes With the Law of Gravity

If you make a deep hole in the earth you can't drop anything to the bottom, because the earth moves on and the side of the hole stops the falling object. This has been proved by experiments in the deep shafts of the American copper mines. Tools dropped from the mouth of a shaft were not found at the bottom but wedged against the side of the shaft, and this led the Michigan college of mines to make experiments. The object being to discover how far the earth's motion interfered with the usual effect of the laws of gravity. The tests employed included suspending marbles by threads just below the mouth of the shaft, the threads were then burnt by the flame of a candle and the marbles allowed to fall. Investigations showed that after dropping some 500 feet the marbles in all cases came to rest on the east wall of the mine,

AT the studios of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer there is renewed interest in the filming of "Pocahontas"—if they do, they predict that early American history will come in for its rightful share of the spotlight. They've selected that continental glamour girl, Hedy LaMarr, to play the part of the Indian girl, Pocahontas, who captured the heart of Capt. John Smith when she, "whom no entreaty could prevail, got his head in her arms and laid her own upon his to save him from death," when he was captured by her father, Powhatan, and was about to have his brains beaten out.

You probably know any number of people who claim that they gave this or that motion picture star the push that started him or her on the road to fame and fortune. All too frequently those star-starters actually had nothing to do with the person's success.

There are two men who can shine in reflected glory, if they want to, but they're so busy shining in their own glory that they can't be bothered. One is a well-known tailor in Hollywood, Eddie Schmidt.

Adolphe Menjou went to him when he first tackled Hollywood. He knew the value of good clothes, but he hadn't any money. He wanted to make a bargain. If Eddie Schmidt would make him six suits, and trust him for them, he'd tell everybody where he got the clothes. That wardrobe was the thing that turned the balance in Menjou's favor.

The other star-maker is Sardi, who owns the famous restaurant in New York where screen and stage players eat every day in the week.

Not so very long ago William Gargan was stoney broke. He hadn't had a stage engagement for ten months, his wife was in the hospital. But he had to be seen in Sardi's, so that the theatrical world would know that he was still about.

Sardi had noticed him, and had faith in him. He invited the young actor to eat at his expense, also to entertain anyone who was important to him. The investment came to about $800 altogether. Leslie Howard was influential in helping Gargan to make a tremendous success in the stage version of "The Animal Kingdom." Hollywood snagged a contract—and Gargan was set. Both Menjou and Gargan paid their backers' bills the first moment that they had the money.

Isabelle Sheridan, Mary Pickford's cousin, is in the movies yet not in them—and she has no desire to step before a camera.

She's a stand-in—which means that she wears a star's costumes and stands patiently while lighting is tried out on her and the camera man figures what he wants. She's stood in for Constance Cummins, Merle Oberon, Virginia Bruce, Sally Eilers, Joan Blondell and various other actresses. At present she's doing it for Joan Blondell in Hal Roach's "The Housekeeper's Daughter."

Looks as if Jon Hall would go on playing native of the South Seas for the rest of his screen career. "Hurricane" started him, you may recall, and Edward Small's "South of Pago Pago" will keep up the good work.

Bette Davis' performance in "The Old Maid" is so good that people who've never liked her on the screen before are now admitting that the girl can act. And Warner Brothers' plans for screening "The Miracle" have been speeded up and put into production, after three years of discussion—and preliminary work. Miss Davis will have the coveted role of the Nun.

ODDS AND ENDS—Sol Lesser is allowing Principal Productions employees an extra half hour for lunch, on condition that they'll play badminton during their additional time, on the courts across the street from his offices at Selznick-International. . . . After trying for a year, Charles Correll of "Amos and Andy," has taught his dog to talk over. . . . Irene Dunne thought you the public wouldn't like her as the hard-boiled heroine of "Honey" Page's so she's being re-written. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

'Swing Style' Reading Not New; The Greeks Had a Word for It

Every now and then, the newspapers report a "brand new" idea or a "brand new" discovery. Take, for instance, the report about "swing reading." According to recent headlines, "swing reading" is the latest thing imaginable—the invention of two smart eye doctors in Los Angeles.

As the papers say, the doctors disclosed their "idea" a short time ago at a national convention of the American Optometric Association. Advocating a new system of printing in "swing style," the doctors said they had something that would help the eyes. In short, they urged this type of thing:

Many of the convention delegates a ref. knoeses dennuls yadrossey day on the golf course. The weath- enif saw re along the next, and so on. Well, we don't like to make ourselves seem scholarly, but the doctors have unwittingly dug up something pretty old. As a matter of fact, the ancient Greeks had a word for it, used the system and gave it up. They called it houstrophedon, and you can find the word in a good dictionary even to this day. Pronounced hoo-stro-fee-don, with the accent on the third syllable, it means literally "turning like oxen in plowing." It is a compound of two Greek words—bous, meaning ox, and strephein, meaning to turn.

P. S. Incidentally, the excerpt quoted above reads normally this way: "Many of the convention delegates yesterday shunned sessions for a day on the golf course. The weather was fine."

Anybody else got a new idea?—Pathfinder.

Finally Name Was O. K. Though Not 'O,' but 'K'

A gentleman had completed his purchases, and the clerk, in filling out the sales slip, asked: "What is the name, please?" "Jepson," replied our hero. "Sixteen twenty-one West—" "Your first initial, please." "Oh, K."

"O. K. Jepson." "I said 'Oh.'" "O. Jepson." "No. Rub out the O." The clerk began to look hard. "Your initials again, please?" "I said 'K.'" "Pardon, you said 'O. K.'" "I said 'Oh.'" "Just now you said 'K.'" "I said 'Oh,' because I didn't understand what you were asking me. I didn't mean it was my initial. My name is Kirby Jepson." "Oh." "No. Not O, but K. Here, give me the pencil and I'll write it myself. There, I guess it's O. K. now."—Annapolis Log.

LABOR SPEAKS

If only as a matter of self-interest, every wage-earner and salaried employee would do well to ponder the searching analysis of the recovery problem which is made in the current "Survey of Business," published by the American Federation of Labor. It should be of equal interest to every employer. Says the A. F. of L. statement:

"If business does not expand substantially before next spring, we shall have a further demand for Government spending, with its danger of inflation and consequent losses to wage earners."

"Action for business expansion on a sound basis is, therefore, urgent. Shall we advance on a cooperative basis, providing for the needs of all groups, or shall we accept Government domination?"

"Today the chance of succeeding in business is said to be only about 50% as great as in pre-depression years, and the rewards of success are about 20% less. In addition, those who have succeeded are forced to give a larger part of their income to the Government through increased income taxes. This explains why venture capital runs to shelter in safe and tax-free investments like Government bonds."

"Our great need today is to give business men the kind of assurance that will enable them to look forward to the future with confidence."

"Wage rates are higher than ever before in our history. The average of 64 cents an hour in industry as a whole today and 66c in manufacturing, compares with 56c in manufacturing in 1929. As soon as industrial plants are back on a full-time schedule, this wage rate will automatically provide higher buying power."

"Labor is better organized and more able to keep the wage level rising as increases in production and profits make this possible. Therefore, once a vigorous production increase is started by the flow of private capital, we shall no longer need outpourings of Government funds to increase consuming power."

President Hits Top in Precedent Breaking in Thanksgiving Change

Stirs Up More Comment Than Any Statement Ever Emanating From a Chief Executive; Element of Uncertainty Injected Is What Makes It Harmful.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt's ability to keep things stirred up has been demonstrated numerous times since his accession to the White House.

It appears, however, that Mr. Roosevelt reached a new peak in precedent breaking when he changed the date of our annual Thanksgiving day.

In announcing his plan, the President said he was desirous of rearranging the November holiday so that "holidays will be more evenly spaced."

Thanksgiving Day Change Stirs Up Unusual Comment

Whatever the reason for the change, the announcement broke out all of the hissing steam that was pent up Business interests here and there tried vainly to show a united front.

Let us look at the thing, however, from a practical standpoint: Mr. Roosevelt made his announcement without consulting the state department.

There is no national statute fixing the date. It is a traditional ceremonial day, a day which, to Americans, means actually the connection between our economic life and the Almighty Power that guided our nation from its inception.

For the reasons of its establishment, it strikes me that there ought not be a national law on the subject. It is a sacred thing.

Arouses Fear That All Our People Are Being Regimented

Mr. Roosevelt surely could not have guessed the repercussions, the backfire, that has greeted his announcement and that has continued in unabated fury.

repetition here. The remark recalled that King George, on his recent visit to North America, reset his birthday so that it could be celebrated while he was in Canada.

There is more to that remark than just a laugh. Behind the thought is an indication of a fear that all of our people are being regimented.

Now, lest I be misunderstood, I hasten to say that I believe there was no such thought as those in Mr. Roosevelt's mind.

Take a Look at Practical Side of the Situation

Again, on to the practical side and the results flowing from the breaking of another precedent.

Let us consider first the lithographing and printing industry of the country. There are thousands upon thousands of other businesses that use the product of the lithographer and the printer.

Take the transportation industry. Officials begin planning many months ahead for tours, special rates, excursions. Public events and ceremonies have been scheduled.

Element of Uncertainty Is What Makes Change Harmful

And that brings us to the crux of this situation. It is the element of uncertainty that Mr. Roosevelt injected into our national life by his change in our holiday date that is harmful.

Our nation has grown up, not in one piece, but in many pieces, each one fitted to another as smooth working as the gears of your automobile.

FARM TOPICS

INSECTS CAUSE MAN-CONSTANT WARFARE

Nature's Balance Often Upset by Cultivated Fields.

By DR. LEE A. STRONG

Civilized man, with his cultivated fields and domesticated live stock, often upsets nature's balance and gives some insect species a profitable inning.

This he may do by setting one insect to prey upon another, by changes in farming practices, by developing resistant plants and animals, or by the use of insecticides.

Insects in other lands may be checked by natural enemies—birds and animals, other insects, or even disease. If in this country they threaten agriculture, the entomologist sometimes can check them by introducing their natural enemies.

However, insecticides are the main reliance of the entomologist. The problem is not simple. The 6,000 insects of this country that are actually pests differ so in physical characteristics and live under such a variety of conditions, that an insecticide that is death to one may not affect another.

Scale insects cannot be poisoned by placing poison on their food. Their mouth parts are a sucking tube which they thrust through the poison into the unpoisoned plant tissue beneath.

Sour-Cream Important In Good Buttermaking

The sourness of the cream used in butter making is one of the main factors that influence its keeping qualities.

Before washing the butter, the temperature of the water should be taken. It should be about the same as that of the cream.

After the salt is added the butter should be worked just enough to distribute the salt evenly. Excessive working destroys the wax-like texture of the butter and also injures its keeping qualities.

Apples Popular

"Certain it is the apple has, on the whole, no rival among fruits. There are fruits of more pronounced and even of more delicious flavors.

Picking Pullets Fed Oats

The picking pullet's desire to eat up her sisters is easily overcome by adding oats to her diet, says the Washington Experiment station.

Contour Plowing

Thomas Jefferson pioneered a theory of government that has had millions of followers since he was President of the United States.

Tension Eased As Managers Sign Contracts

By ROBERT McSHANE

MANAGING a major league baseball club used to be a job that made football coaching seem like a civil service appointment.

Now, however, it begins to look like the fellows in the managerial positions are going to have a chance to unpack their traveling bags.

Not long ago, during a lull in the pennant races, the sudden signing of Oscar Vitt by the Cleveland Indians and Del Baker by the Detroit Tigers was announced by the powers that be.

Prior to that, Jimmy Dykes had agreed to a new two-year contract with the Chicago White Sox and Fred Haney was given a vote of confidence by the St. Louis Browns.

Safe for a Year

In the National League things are much the same. Bill McKechnie is already under a long-term contract to the Cincinnati Reds.

That leaves two managers in the National circuit. Gabby Hartnett of the Chicago Cubs and "Pie" Traynor of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Hartnett has been managing a team of crippled old men. The Cubs' outstanding pitching and defensive power evaporated this year.

A situation so favorable to incumbent managers practically is without precedent in the big leagues.

Vitt Reign Continues

Oscar Vitt had been long rumored on his way out. Alva Bradley, president of the Indians, resigned him as manager as an answer to what he considered unfair criticism of Vitt by fans and even players.

Walter O. Briggs, owner of the Detroit Tigers, made substantially the same statement in regard to Del Baker, who had also been rumored as through.

The best managers need time to build championship ball clubs. None of them can take a weak, faulty team and win pennants.

Sport Shorts

THE St. Louis Browns, after being offered a bonus of $10,000 if they finished sixth, $15,000 if they finished fifth, and $20,000 if they finished fourth, dropped the next nine games.

Dean has earned about $154 an inning, based on a two-year salary of $40,000.

Dr. L. M. Gullinger, whose Peter Astra won the Hambletonian, never owned a trotter good enough to run on the Grand circuit until this year.

What's in a Name?

SOME day an enterprising, ambitious individual is going to think up a bookful of new names for race horses—and thereby make a fortune.

The 15-letter rule was made because 15 units are the maximum which can be handled in a racing chart without getting the typographical layout out of kilter.

Owners of thoroughbreds have so many difficulties finding names that haven't been used that they often send in a list of a dozen or more for each arrival, and the Jockey club uses the first original one.

Hal Price Headley has a good stakes winner named "Menow." Headley had named horses for every member of his family but himself, so he figured it was "now," about time to name a horse after "me."

Scrambled Eggs was a youngster by Upset and Goose Egg. Hash was by Questionnaire and Delicacy.

Sky Raider, the son of Man O' War and Top Flight, was named in a newspaper contest, and the name won from a list that included thousands.

Gridiron Topnotchers

This is the first in a series of articles featuring outstanding football players from schools throughout the nation.

He's a throwback to the halcyon days when Minnesota teams were dubbed the "Giants of the North," but he's an indispensable cog in Bernie Bierman's streamlined 1939 Gopher machine.

His name is Win Pederson and his football story reads a little bit like a Hollywood scenario.

Win Pederson

That hurt, and to redeem himself he deeded football legs for the first time during his senior year.

He fully demonstrated his courage last season when he played 420 out of a possible 480 minutes—a playing time equal to seven complete games.

The past summer, determined to make a successful bid for the tackle job left vacant by the graduation of Lou Milder, Pederson found a job unloading farm machinery at a warehouse.

But it must have been a quarter of an hour after Clint heard the garage-door roll back before he saw a light in the garage. Then he heard a starter grind, and a car backed out of the garage, its headlights swinging as it turned.

Clint stood frozen in attention. The car followed the drive around the house on this side, the lights for an instant shining almost directly toward where Clint stood. Then it went on toward the road.

So Asa was gone; Clint felt a faint relief. He wondered what had become of Inspector Tope, and he hissed a signal, but had no reply.

Then he heard the car returning! He saw no lights; but he did see, dimly, a dark moving bulk as the car rounded the corner of the house yonder. It moved fast, dangerously so.

He heard a great crash, a shattering of glass, a tinny crumpling of metal—a great crash, then silence.

And then Tope's voice, yonder, in imperious summons: "Clint! Quick! Here!"

And a police-whistle, shrill and long.

CHAPTER XIV

After that crashing impact and Tope's cry, and the shrill blast of his whistle, silence descended. Clint took one bound toward where he guessed Tope to be; then he checked, and turned. June from the window above him spoke softly: "Clint, you all right?"

"You'd better come," he said hoarsely. "It was a matter of seconds only, until she stood beside him. Her fingers caught his.

"Here, you take this!" she bade him, and pressed Tope's old revolver into his hand.

He saw Tope kneeling beside a man who lay here on the ground. The flashlight illuminated his countenance. Rab Taine. His cheek was knifed. Blood from a cut on his head had flowed out over his ear and trickled down his brow and face. He lay limp and lifeless.

"Dead?" Clint asked hoarsely.

Tope shook his head. His hand was on Rab's wrist, feeling for the faint pulse that fluttered there. "Not dead yet," he said.

June pressed close to Clint, and she said miserably: "It's Asa. Oh, what is it, Clint? What happened?"

Clint shook his head, staring at Asa Taine, who sat here under the jammed wheel of the car. Asa was unconscious; and there was something mysteriously frightening in his posture. His hands hung down limp by his sides; and the bent steering-column pressed the wheel itself against his body, so that he seemed to bulge in the middle. His head was in a grotesque and unnatural position. Cricked to one side, it rested against the frame of the door. His head was erect, even tilted backward, but his chin seemed to be pressed down on his chest. It was as though he were frozen in the very act of a hic-cough.

Tope said reflectively, as though thinking aloud: "I guess he pined into that tree faster than he meant to. He must have seen me, and that would surprise him. I guess he lost his head, stepped on it. He didn't mean to hit so hard."

Rand and another policeman in uniform came panting through the rain. "What happened?" Rand gasped.

Without explanation, Tope said crisply: "One of you watch the other house. Rand, you go call Inspector Heale. If he's not too sick to move, get him up here."

Since they first discovered Asa here, Inspector Tope had not left the man's side, had kept him fixed in the flashlight's beam. Now they saw that his lips began to stir and mumble. Then he blinked. The light was in his eyes.

June cried softly: "We'll get you out in a minute, Asa."

Mrs. Taine came running out of the kitchen door, brushing past Rand as he entered, drawing some wrap around her. She reached the side of the car. "Asa!" she cried, and caught at his shoulder, tugging at him.

"Oh," he whispered. It was like a whistle of pain. "My head. Neck. Don't touch."

Mrs. Taine whirled on the Inspector. "Quick," she commanded. "Get him out of there." And she looked all about. "Where is Rab?" she cried.

Asa muttered through stiff lips; his lips were blue.

"Sorry, Mother," he said, and tried to smile. "He dodged in front of me. I ran right into him. I couldn't help it."

His lips closed and opened again. "I couldn't help it," he repeated. "We both dodged the same way."

"It was going to town," Asa murmured. "But my headlights went out as soon as I hit the road. I came back to get a new fuse—"

His words were spaced widely:

there were long pauses between them.

Mrs. Taine did not understand. "What does he mean?" she protested. "Where is Rab?"

Tope said gently: "Rab's hurt too, ma'am. We'll need the Doctor bad. Quick, you call him up!"

Understanding, she obeyed him, she hurried away, and after a moment they heard her voice, within doors, demanding that Rand yield to her the telephone.

Asa asked some hoarse question, indistinguishable. "My neck hurts," he complained. "Rab? He's dead? I tried to miss him."

And Tope answered him, in slow stern tones. "You didn't hit Rab, Asa," he said. "I pulled him away from time. I pulled him away from the tree, where you'd propped him up."

"It's Asa—Oh, what is it, Clint? What happened?"

His voice had in it the inexorable ring of doom.

"He's alive?" Asa asked slowly, carefully, his mouth twisted.

"He'll come around," said Tope. "He'll be all right by and by."

Without any movement of his head, Asa's eyes swung to seek out their countenances. He peered in the darkness, and his lips writhed so that his teeth were hideously bare. Then he moved. It was as though he leaped, as though he would have sprung to action. His lips set hard; his shoulder rose; his whole body contorted; one hand darted down. It whipped up, and a gun showed in the flashlight's gleam.

Inspector Tope, leaning into the car, sought to seize the gun.

But before he could touch Asa, could grasp the weapon, the need for action passed. When the hurt man thus leaned sharply forward, his head was tardy in following his movement. It seemed to hang back, and then to be jerked aside as though by an invisible hand; and this was a strange, unnatural thing to see. Asa's head turned at a grotesque angle, as though it had slipped; and instantly Asa himself was smaller, like a pricked balloon.

Clint whispered: "For God's sake, Inspector! Is he dead?"

Tope nodded slowly. "Yes, dead," he said, in a low tone.

CHAPTER XV

For a moment more these three stood silently by the car with a dead man at the wheel. Then Rand returned.

"Heale's coming," he reported. "Right away."

Tope nodded. "This man in the car is dead," he said. "Stay by him. Don't touch anything."

And he turned back to where Rab lay on the ground. Then Mrs. Taine came running from the house. "Doctor Cabler will be here at once," she gasped; and she cried: "Where's Asa? What have you done with him?"

June put her arms about the older woman, held her away. "Rab needs you now," she urged. "Rab, Aunt Evie."

"Asa?" the older woman demanded.

"He's dead," June told her, mercifully frank.

"Who killed him?" There was a dreadful challenge in the slow, soft tones. "He was alive a moment ago. Talking to me. Who killed my son?"

"He—just died," June told her. "Please. We must take care of Rab now."

But Mrs. Taine swung toward the car. Tope with his flashlight bent on the hurt man on the ground, heard the mother brooding over Asa, calling his name, pleading with him—then June compelling her to turn this way. There was strength in the girl's tones; she was able to command Aunt Evie at last, to fetch her here where Tope and Clint knelt beside the unconscious man.

"We'll carry Rab to the house," said the Inspector. "Out of the rain. Clint, you take his legs."

They bore him into the house, where Tope knelt beside him, and with careful fingers appraised his hurts. Mrs. Taine stood still as ice, watching, and June held her fast.

Tope looked up at last. "Just a bump on the head, ma'am," he told Mrs. Taine. "I can't feel that the skull's broken."

Mrs. Taine began suddenly to cry; and this was a strange thing to see in that woman of iron.

June said: "I'll make her lie down." She led Mrs. Taine, submissive, away.

When they were gone, Clint knelt by the Inspector's side, asked the question he had not dared ask before. He nodded toward the door, toward Asa outside in the rain.

"You think he—did it?" he whispered.

Tope assented gravely. "But I liked him," Clint protested. "He was the best of them all!"

The doorbell rang; Clint went through the dark hall; lighted the gas, opened the door. Doctor Cabler.

Clint came back with the physician on his heels; and Doctor Cabler, with no more than a nod toward the Inspector, knelt beside the man on the floor.

Presently he finished, tipped back on his heels. "Concussion," he said. "I shall make a spinal puncture, try to relieve the pressure on his brain. Otherwise the young man may die without recovering consciousness."

And he directed: "Help me. Push those two tables together. Put water on to boil. Where's Mrs. Taine?"

"In the front room," said Tope. "With June." And he explained: "Asa's dead, in the car, outside. He ran into that pine tree. Neck broken, I believe. Alive at first. Talked, then he tried to move, his head twisted to one side, and that was the end of him."

"Well, such things have happened," the doctor confessed, after a moment. "Some shock dislocates the vertebrae without dislodging them. Then a movement, an attempt to turn the head, and the big neck muscles drag one vertebra across the other like a pair of shears. Snap the cord."

Doctor Cabler and Mrs. Taine, Clint and June could do all that was needful here. Tope watched them for a moment; then he went to the telephone, called Miss Moss and told her guardedly that Rab was hurt and Asa dead.

She whispered: "Asa dead?"

"Yes," he said.

"Is his wife there?" Miss Moss asked. "Lissa?" And at Tope's negative: "She would want to be. She has a right to be. I'm coming out. I'll bring her."

He was full of a deep comfort to know that she would come. "All right," he assented. "Do."

He looked at his watch and returned to the veranda. As he did so, Inspector Heale came hurriedly across the lawn from the road.

Heale exclaimed: "Tope, what's happened here?"

Tope said slowly: "Rab's hurt—got a bad crack on the head. Doctor Cabler's working on him."

He added: "And Asa's out in the car with a broken neck."

"Broken neck?" Heale echoed. His voice was husky. "Is he dead?"

"Just as dead as if he'd been hanged," Tope assented. He said it with something like contentment in his tones, as though he perceived a seamliness and order in the world: "They don't hang in this State any more; but I always said it was the thing for murderers, I mean."

Heale ejaculated: "Murderers?" And Tope told him briefly: "Yes."

Night of the Big Wind Dated Lives of Irish

Many Americans whose grandparents were born in Ireland have heard these elders speak of the night of the big wind. As some of the ancestors referred to it as the date of their birth the youngsters may have regarded it as a bit of frivolous avoidance of fact. But there was such a night, recalls the New York Sun.

It began about 11 o'clock on the night of January 6, 1839, and continued until after daylight the next morning. Limerick and the Dublin neighborhood suffered heavily. Two hundred houses were blown down and as many more were burned. Twenty persons were killed in these catastrophes and 100 were drowned. The coasts of Ireland and western England were lined with wrecks.

As Ireland did not keep vital statistics until 1860, the night of the big wind was used as the base of many claims made under the old-age pension act 30 years ago. The Irish Digest reprints some paragraphs from "Things Past Redress," a book by Augustine Birrell, who went to Ireland as chief secretary in 1907:

"It was a wonderful wind! Dickens alone could have done it justice. It ought to have blown itself out in 1839, but there it still was, sweeping pension officers and local government officials off their feet in 1908. Question any old man as to his claim, and you learned that his age had gone astray on him, but he was a fine, hardy lad on the night of the big wind!"

As news distribution, like the collection of vital statistics, was in its infancy in 1839, the readers of the Sun did not learn of the calamitous happenings in Ireland until the arrival of the packet ship Cambridge on February 13, and that news was limited to what had happened near Liverpool, whence the Cambridge sailed. Three days later the Great Western reached New York with further details, but these were not as lively as the announcement of Victoria's engagement to Albert, which also arrived on the Great Western.

Climbing Kangaroos
Members of the American Museum of Natural History Expedition to Dutch New Guinea have discovered 11 specimens of tree-climbing kangaroos. They are five to six feet over-all length and come from the slopes of the Cyclop mountains, just behind Hollandia. These rare kangaroos climb like the natives reaching up with their front paws, then hoisting themselves as the rear paws follow.

He and Rab had an argument to-night, in the garage. He hit Rab with a monkey-wrench, propped him against that pine tree by the corner of the drive, got out his car. He drove to the road and turned around and came back again. He meant to run into Rab, finish him.

"But I was there. Before Asa got back, I'd dragged Rab away from the tree. Asa saw me. Seeing me must have startled him so that he stepped on the gas. Anyway, he rammed into the tree so hard it snapped his own neck."

Heale stood in an incredulous amazement, and Tope concluded: "Didn't kill him right off. He came to. He thought he'd hit Rab, and he told us it was an accident, that Rab dodged in front of the car. When I told him he hadn't hit Rab, that Rab was alive, he went for his gun."

"But when he moved, his neck snapped. Finished him!"

Heale was almost wordless. "Gun?" he repeated.

"Here it is," said Tope, and delivered Asa's weapon to the other man.

Then Doctor Cabler came out to them. "Gentlemen," he said, satisfaction in his tones, "Rab is showing signs of returning consciousness."

"He'll live?" Tope asked.

"Oh, that, certainly," the physician confidently agreed. "And I think by morning he may be able to talk to you."

He went back into the house; and Heale roused from his paralysis of surprise. "You think Asa did the rest of it?" he asked.

"I've known that, since this morning," Tope replied.

"Why didn't you tip me?"

"Knowing isn't proving," Tope reminded him; and Heale ruefully assented.

"I guess I'll call Derric," he decided at last. "Have him up here in the morning!" And he confessed a little grudgingly: "You've made a double-barreled fool out of him, Inspector."

CHAPTER XVI

The Inspector's call had come to Miss Moss like an expected summons. Before she dressed, she telephoned for a taxicab; and when she came out it was at the door.

"The Providence road," she directed. "I'll tell you when to stop."

When she rang the doorbell of the house behind the garage, it was far into the small hours; the rain still sheeted down.

A window opened above her head, and Thayer called a question.

"I must speak to Miss Thayer," Miss Moss explained.

The garage man himself came to the door with his daughter, sleepily protesting and bewildered. Miss Moss hesitated, unwilling to betray to him the girl's secret unless she must. Yet there appeared no other way. "Miss Thayer," she said. "I have bad news for you. Young Mr. Taine—"

She saw Lissa white in the dim light hall.

"He is—hurt," Miss Moss explained gently.

"I'll come," said the girl quickly. Thayer put a swift protecting arm around his daughter, so that Miss Moss understood he had known the truth. "If Lissa's going, so am I," Thayer suggested. "Send your cab away. I'll take my car."

Miss Moss assented. And presently they started up the hill, Thayer driving. In the seat behind, Miss Moss held the girl close.

"There, there, my dear," she whispered comfortingly.

ISAIAH: A LIFE DEDICATED TO GOD

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 6:1-13. GOLDEN TEXT—Here am I; send me—Isaiah 6:8.

Crisis! We have had so many of them that they have almost become commonplace. There has been one war crisis after another. There have been world crisis and domestic crisis until the word has almost lost its meaning.

In the life of the individual, however, the times of crisis are very real and important. In a critical illness one knows when the crisis comes, and he who safely passes that hour is on the road to recovery. More vital than a physical crisis is a spiritual crisis, when a man meets God face to face and his future destiny is determined by the response which he makes to God's call. Isaiah had such an experience when he came to realize God's glory, confessed his own unworthiness, and sought cleansing of life as a preparation for commission to service.

I. "I Saw the Lord" (vv. 1-4). King Uzziah, who had begun well but had forgotten God, was at the end of his life, a leper because of his sin, and dying in disgrace. Israel which had known unprecedented prosperity under God's blessing now hardened its heart nationally against God and was also about to go into eclipse. God needed a man to speak for Him in such an hour, to bring to His people a message of judgment and also of blessed invitation. To prepare that man, the great Isaiah, God gave a remarkable manifestation of His glory and power.

It is essential that the man who speaks for God should first see the Lord high and lifted up and to hear of His holiness and glory. The negative tone of the present-day message, the lack of enthusiasm and interest in holy things, the low standards of personal holiness, the failure to preach boldly the truth regarding God's holy standards are to be explained by the fact that there has been no vision of the eternal holiness and glory of God. The need of the people today is the same as it was in the time of Isaiah. Where are the men and women who are ready for a vision like his and for the commission which will follow?

II. "Woe Is Me! for I Am Undone" (v. 5). To see the holiness of God is to be immediately conscious of one's own sin and unworthiness. The obvious conclusion which one draws from that fact is that anyone who is proud, who is not concerned about his own sins and the sins of his people, is living far from God and has either never known or has forgotten about His divine holiness.

Isaiah spoke of the pollution of his lips, thereby confessing that his heart was not right. Whereof the heart is full, thereof speaketh the mouth, for we read in Matthew 12:34 that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Remember that even though Isaiah was a believer he recognized the need of cleansing.

III. "Then . . . He Touched My Mouth" (vv. 6, 7, R. V.). "Then"—what an important word! When Isaiah called out in humble confession, "then" he was cleansed. The turning point is right at that place for any life. Only when we come to the place of confession and contrition which Isaiah knew, can we expect the Lord to send the cleansing fire and the enabling power.

None but God can give this cleansing. Man is unable to wash himself clean. "For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord" (Jer. 2:22. See also Jer. 13:23). Reformation, turning over a new leaf, character development, all commendable in their place, are not sufficient. There must be divine cleansing of the life if there is to be a commission to service.

IV. "Here Am I; Send Me" (vv. 8-13). God had a difficult and unpopular message to be delivered but now He had a man who was ready to carry it. Isaiah had to proclaim to Israel that because they had turned from the sunshine of God's love, which would have melted their hard hearts, it had for them become the sunshine of His wrath, which could only progressively harden them and turn them from Him. The same sunshine that melts the wax hardens the mud.

The work of God in our day awaits the man or the woman of vision—the one who has been prepared by confession and cleansing and who has then received the divine commission.

Faith
Of all the forces at the disposal of humanity, faith has always been one of the most tremendous, and the gospel rightly attributes to it the power of moving mountains.

Two Souls, One Thought—Escape—Stirred Them

Two explorers, bearded and soiled, met in the wilderness, and crouched over a fire of brushwood.

Said the first: "I came out here because the urge to travel was in my blood. The drabness of the towns irked me, and the ever-present smell of exhaust gas sickened my rebellious heart! I wanted to see the sun rise over mysterious horizons, hear the scured flutter of birds hitherto strangers to human footsteps, leave my footprints on sands unmarked before I came along, see Nature in the raw. . . . Why did you come out here?"

Said the second: "My wife's taking vocal."

WAR SCARE

In the present status of affairs in Europe, which seems to be growing steadily worse, we are bound to hear more and more propaganda to the effect that we ought to gird our armor again and fight to make the world safe for democracy.

It is true that our first effort along this line was a sorry failure. We did win the war, of course, but democracies are fewer now than before the struggle.

The United States can indeed help to save democracy (for the Democrats?) But it can do this best by keeping out of war in Europe, and seeking to preserve and maintain democracy in the U. S.

There are subversive forces in our own country who have a design on our own brand of American democracy.
