A view of the parade ground of Virginia Military Institute, the "West Point of the South," with its 700 cadets staging their final review before the summer quarter begins. In the background are the barracks where they live.

ITS official name is the Virginia Military institute but down in Dixie everyone knows what you're talking about when you refer to the V. M. I. For this school, which is celebrating its centennial this year, is the "West Point of the South" and back of it there is a tradition as full of glory as the honored legends which cluster around the school on the Hudson and one in which all Americans, North as well as South, can take pride.

Although it is officially only 100 years old this year, its history really goes back to 1798 when the general assembly of the state of Virginia provided for two more arsenals for the preservation of state arms in serviceable condition. The location of these two arsenals was not decided, however, until the end of the War of 1812 made them a necessity. In 1816 it was decided to place one of them in the city of Lexington and a reservation of about seven acres overlooking the north branch of the James river was set aside for this purpose.

Here about 30,000 stands of arms and other munitions were stored and it was not long before the citizens of Lexington began discussing the idea of a military school at the arsenal.

Roosevelt to Speak.
So the assembly passed legislation establishing the Virginia Military institute there. The first corps of cadets was mustered into service on November 11, 1839, and it is on November 11 of this year that the climax of the centennial celebration will come with President Roosevelt going to Lexington to deliver the principal address.

There were only 23 young cadets at first, then 31, and gradually the enrollment increased. Although only 58 men had been graduated from V. M. I. when the Mexican war broke out, 25 of these went into service at once and distinguished themselves in that war.

On August 13, 1851, there came to Lexington a man whose name was destined to become a part of V. M. I. tradition. He was Brevet-Major Thomas J. Jackson of the First Regiment of United States artillery who had made a brilliant record in the Mexican war. He had been appointed "professor of natural philosophy and artillery tactics" and a furlough for nine months to accept this position and finally in February, 1852, resigned from the army to remain at V. M. I.

At the outbreak of the War Between the States, there were 1,902 living former cadets at V. M. I. and although 94 per cent of these served in the Confederate army, it is recorded that 15 of them put on the Union blue. When Virginia seceded from the Union in April, 1861, the corps of cadets marched to Richmond to enroll in the Confederate service and they marched there under the leadership of their "professor of natural philosophy and artillery tactics." Three months later this professor was to win immortality as "Stonewall" Jackson at the Battle of Bull Run.

The cadets were used to instruct and drill volunteers but many of them rapidly advanced in rank in the various branches of the Confederate service. It soon became apparent that the South would have need for a training school to supply skilled and trained officers for the Gray army so V. M. I. was reopened at the beginning of 1862.

Here's Schoolboys.
Two years later the cadets were called upon for another service and as the result of it V. M. I. is the only school in the world entitled to wear an active service pennant on its flag. It won that right in a battle which was fought just 75 years ago last May—the Battle of New Market, where the repeated charges of these beardless lads was one of the most heroic incidents in American military annals.

It came about in May, 1864, when Lee had just commenced his death-grapple with Grant which was to end within a year at Appomattox. All of his available forces had been engaged in the Peninsula campaign and concentrated for the defense of the Confederate capital. Valuable supplies for this great army were being furnished by the rich Valley of Virginia, "the Granary of the Confederacy."

Early in May, the Federal commander, General Sigel, with about 12,000 troops proceeded southward down the Valley Pike to cut off this source of supply. General Lee detailed Gen. John C. Breckenridge with less than 3,000 men to stop this advance and to protect the lines of communication from Staunton to Richmond.

On May 10, 1864, the superintendent of V. M. I., General Smith, received an order from General Breckenridge to send to him at Staunton the cadet corps and a section of artillery. At midnight the long roll was sounded the corps assembled in front of barracks and an order was read, directing the corps to take up the line of march to Staunton.

The next morning a battalion of four companies of infantry and a section of three-inch guns left Lexington for Staunton, arriving in Staunton the evening of the twelfth. The corps left Staunton at daylight on the thirteenth, marching 18 miles, moving at daylight on the fourteenth for another 16 miles. At midnight on the fourteenth, the corps received orders to march immediately without beat of drum and as noiselessly as possible and at 1:30 a. m., on the fifteenth took possition in the general column in rear of Echols brigade.

After proceeding up the Valley pike a distance of some six miles, a halt was called, the troops remaining on the side of the road two or three hours. The Federal troops failing to advance as had been expected, General Breckenridge proceeded to attack the enemy at 12:30 p. m. in the general vicinity of New Market.

General Breckenridge formed his infantry in two lines. Wharton's brigade of infantry constituted the first line, Echols brigade, including the battalion of cadets, the second. The cadets were next to the last battalion in the second line of the left flank, the second line following at an interval of 250 paces in rear of the first. The battle lasted from 12:30 until 6:30 p. m., by which time the Confederate forces of less than 3,000 men had completely routed the 12,000 opposing them, the Federals retreating across the river.

Three Cadet Charges.

The fighting lasted only six hours, but it was hot and furious and the Confederates carried everything before them by impetuous charges, the cadet corps being called upon to make three separate advances all under most withering fire. Out of 225 men engaged, the corps lost 56 killed and wounded. It is a well-known fact that a casualty of 10 per cent will strain the morale of seasoned troops and yet on this occasion, the cadet corps suffered a casualty of nearly 25 per cent without wavering.

As a battle, New Market was Inextricably woven with the story of V. M. I. is the story of one of the greatest military geniuses that America ever produced—"Stonewall" Jackson. An interesting view of this great soldier, while he was "professor of natural philosophy and artillery tactics" at that institution, is given in these reminiscences of a former student at Washington college (later Washington and Lee university) which appeared many years ago in the Wheeling (W. Va.) Register. He writes:

"My first recollection of Stonewall Jackson is when I was a college boy at Lexington, Va., in the fall of 1860. I am not able to say whether it was the peculiar carriage of the stiff, military looking institute professor who daily passed the college grounds, that was of chief interest to the students of Washington college or whether the stories told of daring and reckless courage in his early military life, invested him with a halo of romance and made him an object of hero worship in their youthful minds."

"'Old Jack,' as he was familiarly called by the cadets and students, was so plain in manner and attire, there was so little effort at show, his feet were so large and his arms and hands fastened to his body in such an awkward shape, that the cadets didn't take much pride in him as a professor. They feared him in the lecture room, they paid the strictest deference to him on parade, but in showing a stranger the sights about the institute, a cadet was never known to point out 'Old Jack' as one of the ornaments of the institution. He was more popular with the college students . . .

"The next spring the fires of war threw their lurid glare over the entire land. Then it was Jackson took a final farewell of Lexington, never to return until he was brought back to be buried, according to his dying request, 'in the Valley of Virginia.'

"The cadets were ordered to the field. Major Jackson was selected to command them. After the passage of the ordinance of secession on the seventeenth of April, 1861, the war spirit was at fever heat in Virginia. The steady-going old town of Lexington had suddenly been metamorphosed into a bustling military camp. Volunteer companies were being organized, and every preparation being made for a horrible war. But no event of that memorable period has left a more vivid impression upon my mind than the departure of the cadet battalion from the military institute.

"It was a bright Sabbath morning early in May, and a vast concourse of people had gathered on Institute hill to see the youthful soldiers start for the war. The baggage and camp equipments had been put into the wagons, the horses hitched in, the drivers mounted, with whip in hand, waiting for the command to pull out. The cadets were in line, their cheeks aglow, and their eyes sparkling with the expectation of military glory awaiting them. Poor boys! Little did they know as they stood there, in their bright uniforms and gilt guns shining in the morning sunlight, how few of them would be left to answer at the last roll call of the Army of Northern Virginia.

"As they stood thus, Major Jackson, mounted on an ordinary-looking horse, rode up. His face was as calm and unmoved as ever, the thin lips tightly compressed, and looking just as he looked at Kernstown and Manassas. Riding up to the side of an elderly looking gentleman in clerical cloth, standing in front of the main entrance to the institute, Major Jackson wheeled his horse, and facing his battalion as he raised his cap, said 'Let us pray.'

"The venerable Dr. White, pastor of the Presbyterian church, then stepped forward, and bared his gray locks to the sun, pouring forth a feeling prayer. It was a memorable scene. Just as the clergyman pronounced the 'Amen,' Jackson wheeled his horse, and in a short, crisp manner, gave the command, 'Forward, march.' Waving a silent adieu to the assembled crowd, he rode off at the head of the column. That was the last time his gaze fell upon the town of Lexington."

Catarrh May Result From Bent Septums

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON
MOST physicians pay little or no attention to bends in the septums—the partition between the two nostrils. As a matter of fact, a nose with a straight septum is almost rare. It is estimated that perhaps one in every five or ten is about the average finding.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

The reason little or no attention is paid to a bent or deflected septum is that the physician figures that there is no difference in air space between 50 and 50 each side in a straight septum and 60 and 40 with a bent septum; they both add up to 100. This, of course, refers to slight bends or deflections.

What about severe bends or deflections of the septum? Can the severe deflection cause symptoms?

When the deflection is so severe that it actually closes up one side of the nose there will not be any air going to or coming from the lungs on that side. This means lack of ventilation of the sinuses on that side of the head and lack of draining of any mucous from the sinuses.

Dr. W. S. Syme of Glasgow, whom I have quoted before, in the British Medical Journal, tells us that middle ear and catarrhal conditions are found very often with deflection of the septum. When severe, it may cause pain by pressing against the side wall of the nose. However, the blockage of the little opening from sinus into the nose prevents mucous or pus from draining out into nose and throat, causing severe pain from pressure. In these cases the bend or deflection is high up in the nose due to injury—football, boxing, or a fall.

The point about this is that while most of us have a bent septum and no treatment is required, in cases of sinus trouble, catarrh or middle ear conditions where good ventilation and drainage is necessary, one with a bent septum is more likely to have severe pain and require operation than one whose septum is straight.

A bent or deflected septum, even if badly deflected, which is causing no symptoms requires no treatment.

Causes of Chronic Arthritis

Despite our knowledge of preventing rheumatism—arthritis—by removing infection from teeth, tonsils, sinuses, gall bladder, together with proper rest, diet and exercise, there are many cases which become chronic before infection has been removed. The infection in joints has caused changes that often cannot be repaired or corrected and the patient is afflicted with stiffness, pain, and some degree of deformity.

In speaking of these cases of chronic arthritis, Dr. Robert T. Phillips, Boston, in the New England Journal of Medicine, tells of the help that can be given by "physical" medicine or treatment—rest, exercise, massage, and electricity.

Dr. Phillips points out that rest is needed by chronic arthritis because of the long drain on their nervous and physical energy caused by the infection. The suggestion is an hour's rest after meals. Two positions are taken. For the first 30 minutes the patient lies on his back, stretched well out, a pillow under lower back and the knees but not under the head. For the second 30 minutes he turns face down, supported by a pillow placed crosswise under his abdomen.

Joints Should Be Straight.
In regard to exercise, arthritis must not allow joints to remain in a bent position. No matter what the degree of arthritis, the patient can carry out some exercise—lying, standing, sitting, walking—to move his joints and strengthen his muscles.

In regard to heat Dr. Phillips suggests the use of hot water applications by means of some wooten material covered with a towel or blanket to hold in the heat.

The massage is done by the use of long, smooth strokes in a direction toward the heart as it is the return circulation of the blood that needs help. If pain is present, massage should be gentle. Heat should be applied before or during the massage.

In regard to electricity, it is unfortunate that physicians do not give more attention to acquiring the knowledge of the proper methods of using electricity in the treatment of chronic arthritis as it gives excellent results in skillful hands. When proper treatment by electricity is not available, the use of the other "physical" forms of treatment—rest, heat, exercise, and massage—faithfully carried out will give satisfactory results.

Great Britain's Protection To Women and Children

As one would view the present war across the seas, he may see what he might term barbarity on one hand, but from another viewpoint, he may behold acts of civilized Christianity. War and all that goes with it is an evidence that we still cling to the caveman stuff. The caveman used the cudgel, where we use the machine gun, bomb-dropping airplane, poison gas, etc.

With some nations, the lives of women and little children are sacrificed without the least sign of remorse; with others, human sympathy for the helpless takes precedence over everything.

In spite of war, the world is growing better; in spite of bloodshed, nations which at one time clamored for war, are now remaining neutral.

The proclamation issued by the President on Tuesday morning declared this country neutral to the extreme. Italy, Spain, Japan, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland and other countries have announced their neutralities. The facts are already established that before many years, war will be a thing of the past.

"The day will come when the only battlefields will be the market open to commerce and the mind open to new ideas. The day will come when bullets and bombshells will be replaced by votes, by the universal suffrage of nations, by arbitration of a sovereign senate, which will be to Europe what the Parliament is to England, the diet is to Germany, the legislative assembly is to France. The day will come when a cannon ball will be exhibited in public museums just as instruments of torture are now

"The day will come when the United States of America and the United States of Europe shall be seen extending hands across the ocean, exchanging their products, arts, genius, clearing the earth, peopling the deserts, improving the creation under the eye of the Creator and uniting for the good of all these irresolvable and infinite powers—the fraternity of men and the power of God."

Along that particular line, we were deeply impressed with the precaution taken by Great Britain just before war was declared on Germany. In the city of London alone, nearly 4,000,000 children, from infants to 15 years of age were marshalled together and taken to places in the country where they would be safe from the ravages of shot and shell.

Teachers have accompanied the children and after teaching a certain portion of the day, the remainder is given over to amusements of different kinds, pleasing to children's hearts. The mothers have also gone with the children so as to prevent homesickness. There is to be no talk of war and the children are to be saved from the awfulness of the contest. All they know is that they are enjoying a big summer vacation.

France has also taken precautionary measures like Great Britain, but there is nothing of that nature been heard in Germany. Thus does nations who honor God, seek to preserve the helpless, where in places where rulers have blotted out the sunlight of Christianity, no such humane thought is given to the innocent.

Bruckart's Washington Digest

International Affairs Likely To Influence Party Politics

Upon Turn of Events Abroad May Depend Strength or Lack of It Shown by Presidential Aspirants; Domestic Life in U. S. Will Feel Effects.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—There is an interesting offshoot of the several European crises that has begun to attract attention among political leaders.

It may be that, in the short space of time between the writing of these lines and their publication in your local newspaper, another European crisis will have arisen and actual hostilities will have been started.

The condition warrants thought on the basis that it touches private lives. Private lives are concerned not only because of the ever-present possibility when war stalks in the world that there may be blood shed by some of our people.

When Political Leaders Took Wrong Side of Question One needs to go back only to 1920 to recall what happened to political leaders who took the wrong side of a question—the wrong side from a majority of the people.

If there were complex conditions to be considered by voters and thought through in advance of the election of Warren G. Harding over James M. Cox at that time, the conditions then must be regarded as simple to what confronts America at this time.

The candidates now going about the country herding in delegate pledges or having their representatives do so have thus far proceeded, quite naturally, upon the basis of purely domestic questions.

Jealousy and Distrust No Matter What Happens

Now, let us assume that actual hostilities have started abroad and that they extend into next year. Of what use is the political strategy now being employed by those seeking pledges of support?

Whatever the conditions may be a year from now, there is no way that I can see by which the United States can avoid consideration of policies to meet the circumstances generated by these several influences. Why?

Take agriculture, for example. Our crops long have entered into world markets, although the outgoing shipments have sunk into insignificance lately.

It is far from being simple. One can despise and distrust his neighbor on the next farm or in the next block, but he still has to pass his house on the highway or go down the alley behind his house.

Campaign Strategies, Plans Must Undergo Revision

None knows, for example, whether the agreement between Stalin and Hitler is going to give the Russian lion a free hand in the Orient. That is to ask: can Stalin's forces now align themselves with China and force the Japanese back to their island homes?

Thus, I think we are brought forcibly to the conclusion that the records made by the two major political parties thus far may constitute only a part of the things which the ever-puzzled voter may have to consider next year.

There seems to be no doubt that developments between now and next June, for example, will have a vital effect upon Mr. Roosevelt's political fortunes.

May Call Congress to Revise the Neutrality Act

There is talk that Mr. Roosevelt will call congress into extra session to deal with international problems—and acting with Roosevelt suddenly, he may have issued the call two hours after this is written.

As I am able to examine the puzzle of the future, therefore, I can see only a very difficult time ahead for those who want to have a voice in their government. Of course, there is going to be a percentage of voters, as always, whose convictions will be those of their political party.

Burma, Important British Colony, Provides 'Back Door' to China

'BACK DOOR' OPEN. Map shows the route of the recently completed highway running from Rangoon, Burma, to Chungking, capital of war-torn China.

Recently Completed Highway Used for Shipping War Supplies.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Burma, where demands for independence are reported to be growing steadily more insistent, is an important link in the British Empire chain.

East of India, Burma touches on the north the border of Tibet; on the east that of China proper, French Indo-China, and Siam.

From Burma runs the recently completed highway that is China's vital back door entrance for supplies, now that many of her eastern ports are closed by Japanese occupation.

The Burma section of the route, about one-third of the entire distance to Chungking, is mostly by rail, which provides communication between Rangoon and Lashio, near the western border of China.

Through Rangoon, as capital and chief port of Burma, flows most of the country's foreign trade, now reported to include incoming trucks, gasoline, machinery, and munitions destined for the Burma-China road as a result of the war in China.

Rangoon, accessible to river navigation 900 miles inland, is also known in the international transport field for its excellent airport, where three major lines converge.

Burma is strictly agricultural country with rich soil and plenty of rainfall. It is more fortunate than many of its oriental neighbors; for with little more than 14 1/2 million people to support in an area of about 261,610 square miles, there is an adequate food supply of the East's chief staple—rice.

A largely one-crop economy, however, of secondary importance are other products such as peanuts, cotton, millet, sesame seeds, presents problems of its own.

Without Caste System. The Burmese have developed into a group different from either Indian or Chinese, yet with traces of the influence of both.

only two years ago. Today this country, as a crown colony of Great Britain, has its own senate and house of representatives, although the legislation of these bodies is subject to veto by the English governor who also controls national defense and foreign relations.

Odd Regulations Give Protection To Auto Driver

Traffic Safety Rules Vary on Highways of Foreign Nations.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

While many traffic safety regulations are similar the world over, some countries have evolved unusual and even comic measures for the safety of their people.

In England there is no speed limit on highways except in the congested areas. In Bucharest authorities have recently instituted a drive for pedestrian control.

The traffic board of Calcutta not long ago passed a rule banning radios or phonographs in automobiles as distractions to motorists and therefore traffic hazards.

NOISELESS COP. You can't blow your automobile horn in Rome, and the traffic cops don't have any whistles, but they stand on a pedestal in the middle of the street.

Several countries have adopted the use of posters as a means of reducing accidents. In Sweden posters are used to combat jaywalking.

Flashing red and green signals are the usual world-wide traffic symbols denoting stop and go. However, there are found many and amusing variations in style and color.

In Singapore the traffic "cops" have a long horizontal, white board attached to their backs. To regulate traffic, the policemen turn not a light, but themselves.

Speaking of Sports

War of Words Continues With Ambers' Victory

By ROBERT McSHANE

SADLY enough, the recent 15-round lightweight bout which saw the championship pass from Henry Armstrong to Lou Ambers, proved to be little more than a minor incident in an unholy squabble which embraced managers, contestants, the National Boxing Association and Referee Arthur Donovan.

The fight was a disappointment in more ways than one. To begin with, Deadeye Donovan managed to spot five fouls committed by Lil' Henry, defending champion. As a result, Ambers was presented with five rounds by official scoring.

Donovan's score card read eight and seven in favor of the challenger, indicating that had he failed to rule Armstrong guilty in just one of those five fatal rounds he might have voted for a draw or else a victory for the defender.

Al Well, Ambers' manager, and Eddie Mead, mentor to Armstrong, added very little to the evening's decorum. Both of them were guilty of violating rules for seconds' conduct, and their continual hickering with Referee Donovan between rounds was an unpleasant feature, flagrant enough to warrant censure from the commission.

A 'Plot' Revealed

Events prior to the fight were not especially charming. Mr. Mead, whose conversational speed is at least equal to his fighter's ring pace, spent a great deal of time before the match hinting of a sinister plot directed against his man.

Double Loss

Armstrong, who entered the ring holding both the lightweight and welterweight titles, may be shorn of all his honors. The Ambers bout was billed for only the lightweight championship, with the pre-fight agreements providing that in the event Ambers should win they would meet in a return match for Armstrong's welterweight championship.

It was the kind of a fight in which the outcome never will be settled to the satisfaction of everyone. Judged solely from a statistical standpoint, there can be no quarrel with the judges' decision.

Donovan was well within his rights. He called the shots as he saw them, and not even the most rabid Armstrong supporter could expect him to ignore all the rule infractions.

So, until a return bout settles the matter, the argument will continue. The Ambers faction can rejoice in a lightweight championship. The Armstrong patriots can claim a moral victory.

Sport Shorts

THE Philadelphia Phillies will have five scouts touring minor leagues next year. . . . Golt Rast, Alabama end, has licenses to fly both land and sea planes, with 50 hours solo flying to his credit.

Jack Doyle, Irish heavyweight, plans to appear in grand opera. At least he's taking vocal lessons, and has hopes. . . . Walter Hagen is a skilled taxidermist, a crack shot, and an expert fisherman.

Roller skate hockey will make its debut in Washington, D. C., on an organized scale for the first time this fall. . . . Paavo Nurmi, great Finnish runner, believes the standard of international performances is too high.

Endurance Champs

SPEED, and plenty of it, was needed recently when two Edwardsville, Ill., softball teams established a new marathon record by playing 1,601 innings in 21 hours and five minutes.

To call the game softball would be sacrilegious in the eyes of thousands of players. Though it was a marathon. There's no arguing that point.

The pitchers were instructed to toss the ball in easy, and the batters were expected to ground or fly out on the first pitch. Three pitches were usually enough to retire a side. Anything more than that was looked upon as unsportsmanlike.

Players all ran to and from their positions. It took only 47 seconds to play an inning. The nine runs each side batted in came as the result of a few accidentally made hits past the outfielders, who played in close.

The manager of one team had to quit after 7 1/2 hours of play. He had to get back to work, but only after pitching 500 innings.

One other harler was on the mound for 500 innings. Then a relief pitcher saved his arm, it set the game.

The game was played on four diamonds, with lights available for night play. By shifting from one diamond to another, the players seldom had to face the sun. Sandwiches were furnished during the game, and some startling retrieves were made by players who clutched a ham-on-rye between their teeth and a ill pickle in one hand.

The previous record was held by two New Philadelphia, Ohio, teams which played 1,435 innings in 24 hours.

All of which means very little.

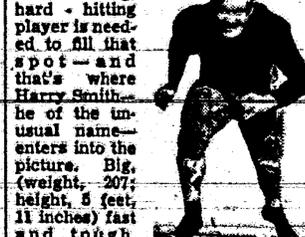

Gridiron Topnotchers

This continues a series of articles featuring outstanding football players from schools throughout the nation. Watch their records during the coming season.

IN BEING named All-American I left guard last season, Harry Smith of the University of Southern California merely maintained a tradition.

Previous years saw such Trojan guards as Johnny Baker and Aaron Rosenberg accorded the same high honors.

Under the Trojan system the left, or running, guard leads the interference. A fast, hard-running, hard-hitting player is needed to fill that spot—and that's where Harry Smith.

Harry Smith

he of the unusual name enters into the picture. Big, (weight, 207; height, 5 feet, 11 inches) fast and tough Smith is the answer to any coach's prayer.

His defensive work is on a par with his blocking, for he plays in the center of the line. Only two touchdowns were scored against Southern California last year on running plays.

Smith's best game last year was played against the University of California. Harry played 60 minutes of ball in true Frank Merriwell fashion, knowing that his substitute, Floyd Phillips, was injured. The hapless Bears were held to two first downs, both coming in the last six minutes and both of them on passes.

This coming season will end Smith's college football career. But his record will live as long as those of the 16 other Southern California All-Americans developed since 1926 by Coach Howard Jones.

THREE SHUTTERED HOUSES

By BEN AMES WILLIAMS

"Is Rab dead?" Lissa asked pleadingly.

"Rab?" Miss Moss echoed. "You mean Asa?"

Lissa straightened, quick hope in her eyes. "No, no," she protested.

"Rab is mine! Is he all right?"

Miss Moss tried to collect her wits. "Rab is hurt, but he will get well," she said then, and she felt new life flow into this girl. "But Asa is dead."

"Oh, I'm glad! I'm glad!" Lissa cried, and she demanded to know what had happened. Miss Moss told her swiftly as much as she knew; and having done so, she ventured a question in her turn. So Lissa, clinging close to the older woman, poured out all her story.

"Rab and I were married over a year ago," she confessed. "Father and Mother knew; but we didn't tell anyone else, because Rab's people would disown him."

"I knew Asa too, and he used to make love to me. So finally, to make him stop, I told him Rab and I were married. But it didn't do any good. He kept after me just the same, and when I threatened to tell Rab, he said I-I did, he'd tell old Mrs. Bowdon we were married. So I didn't tell Rab; but last night Asa kissed me, and Rab saw him, and was furious with me, so I had to tell him. Then he was wild at Asa."

She broke off, for they were come suddenly to the top of Kenesaw Hill, to the Taine house. Inspector Tope hurried across the lawn.

Miss Moss saw how tired he was, and held him hard for a moment. "There," she whispered, "dear man! And she asked: 'Where is Clint? Where is June?'"

He pointed to the Bowdon house a little way off, where there was a lighted window on the second floor. "They're asleep up there. Miss Leaford is in bed with a blanket over her; Clint in a chair beside her, holding her hand."

There was a deep exhalation in her; then turning to Tope she said: "So it was Asa? You know, I picked Rab, all the time."

Tope shook his head. "He was in Providence last night, when the fire started," he reminded her.

"I thought he might have gone down there and registered, and then come back to set the fire, raced back to Providence again. There was time."

"No, he'd put his car up for the night," Tope insisted. "He was there, all right." He added awkwardly: "I didn't tell you, but he had a girl with him. They registered as man and wife."

She remembered, suddenly, Lissa Thayer, and turned back to the car.

Lissa and her father were no longer there; so Tope and Miss Moss went toward the house. They met Doctor Cabler with Mrs. Taine in the hall. Doctor Cabler explained: "I'm sending Mrs. Taine to bed. She must rest."

Mrs. Taine protested wearily: "Rab needs me."

"He's all right," the Doctor assured her. "His wife is with him."

And he and Mrs. Taine went on upstairs.

"His wife?" Tope echoed incredulously.

"Of course—Lissa. She was the one with him in Providence," she whispered.

Tope and Miss Moss withdrew unnoticed. They went out on the front porch together, and Tope sat down. He shook his head helplessly. "Well, that's one name," he confessed. "I guess I'm getting old. I was sure she was married to Asa."

"So was I," she admitted, eager to comfort him now. "Till she told me the truth, on the way up here. Now tell me about tonight."

And she listened while he recited the tale. "I blame myself," he declared at last, "for holding off, waiting to be sure." And he said in a somber tone: "Asa was mad, drunk with killing. He had a ladder ready over there. He must have meant to come back tonight, climb to June's room, kill her and old Mr. Hurder too." And he explained: "Mrs. Taine gave June milk tonight. I think Asa had drugged that; but I spilled it, like a clumsy fool."

"Cabler says Rab can talk now," Heale told them a little later.

Rab had a twisted frown between his eyes. Lissa bent over him, and Miss Moss saw his fingers tighten on her hand.

"Where's Mother? I don't want her to hear."

"Asleep," Doctor Cabler assured him.

"The hurt man nodded. 'Where's Asa?' he asked then. No one answered him, but he seemed not to notice this neglect. "It was about Lissa," he repeated. "You see, she and I were married. We kept it secret, because Asa and June and I weren't supposed to get married without permission. It was in Grandpa Bowdon's will, and Grandpa Hurder's too, that if any of us married without Grandpa Bowdon's consent, we were outcasts, disinherited."

And he said: "But Asa was making love to Lissa whenever he caught her alone. I didn't know it, till I saw him kiss her, last night. She'd been in Providence with me. We used to go away together whenever I had business out of town."

He looked up at the girl beside him with a deep fondness. "I saw him kiss her," he explained. "And she slipped away, and I found her crying, in the woods behind the barn. He'd hurt her, his hands on her arms. So she told me how he'd persecuted her for months, and I came back to do something to him."

His eyes met Inspector Heale's. "And then you told me someone had killed Aunt Kitty, and set that fire, and I forgot about Asa for a while. But tonight I meant to have it out with him. So on the way home, I made him stop, and we went into the garage, out of the rain."

"I told him he'd got to leave Lissa alone, and he laughed at me, said if I made a row, he'd tell the folks we were married."

He hesitated, continued grimly: "But I found out, last week, that Asa had been stealing trust-funds in the office. I told Grandpa Bowdon about it, the day he died. It upset him terribly, may have killed him. But I told Asa last night that I knew about that, and that if he didn't leave Lissa alone, I'd send him to jail."

He grinned ruefully. "Asa didn't say anything. I thought I'd stumped him; and I was fool enough to turn my back on him, and the next thing I knew, my light went out. This crack on the head. That's all I remember. What does he have to say?"

Inspector Heale was about to speak, but Tope touched his arm quickly, restraining him; and Doctor Cabler said gravely:

"You've talked enough, Rab. Get some rest now."

He cleared the others briskly out of the room. Tope and Heale moved on through the hall to the front veranda; and as they emerged there, Tope said briskly:

"I've had my eye on Asa ever since he produced that bottle. What reason had he to go looking for it in the cellar, in the laundry-chute? The answer is, there wasn't any reason, unless he had some other business in the cellar."

"You think he did find the bottle there?" Heale asked.

Tope said explicitly: "Yes. Justus Taine dropped it down the chute. He left the Hurder front door unbolting that night, slipped back over there to get some of Mrs. Leaford's sleeping-tablets. There were only two in the bottle, so he took them, and dropped the bottle out of sight in the handiest place. With so few tablets in the bottle, she'd miss them in the morning; but if the whole bottle was gone, she'd just think it was mislaid." He added honestly: "Part of this is guessing; part I know."

And he went on: "So here's what we've got: Asa Taine was a thief; and he needed money. You heard what Rab said, that if any of the young ones married, they were to be disinherited. Well, Rab was married and Asa knew it; and Asa bought June new clothes, encouraged her to marry Clint. If she did, with the old gentleman dead, and Kitty Leaford dead, and June married—or dead—and Rab married and so disqualified under the will, Asa'd have all Bowdon's money, and Hurder's too."

Heale listened grimly, and Tope went on:

"There are three elements in every murder," he said. "Motive, and opportunity, and capacity."

"Money was motive enough for Asa. As for opportunity, he had plenty of chances to steal some of Kitty Leaford's pills, and he had a chance to drop some of them into her milk that night, when he went to the kitchen for a glass of water. And he had a chance to dope the milk the Hurders drank, too. He came for a cup of tea, in the kitchen, that night—got himself some milk out of the bottle, could have drugged the milk then."

"I don't know whether he did that or not. It doesn't matter. But I know he started the fire. He was alone on the ground floor of the Bowdon house, his mother and Mrs. Bowdon upstairs. He slipped out and came over here. There's an electric light above the Taine's back door. You'll find the bulb is broken and the edge of the socket is fused. Asa made a short-circuit there, and then he raced back and got into the Bowdon dining-room again before Mrs. Taine came downstairs."

"And he proved tonight that he was insanely ready to kill, that he had murdered in him. He tried to kill Rab, and he'd made his plans to kill June and Mr. Hurder too. Asa convicted himself tonight." He added sternly: "And—executed himself too. Saved you the trouble, Heale."

Heale stood silent awhile; the day brightened, and the sun began to burn away the clouds. The man said at last: "You know, I kind of hate this. I'm sorry for these folks up here. Four of them dead, in less than a month. They've had about enough, it looks to me."

Tope smiled faintly. "Yes," he agreed; and he said gravely: "Outside of a few people who won't talk, this thing tonight might pass as an accident, Inspector. Cars have smashed into trees before."

As Heale considered this, Tope added: "You've never charged Mr. Leaford, have you? Nothing in the newspapers?"

"No, just held him," Heale replied. "He was willing to stand for that, wait till something happened."

Tope nodded; and then he looked toward the road and chuckled. A car had stopped in front of the house; young Doctor Derrie swung to the ground and came briskly toward them across the lawn.

The Medical Examiner greeted them cheerfully.

"What's wrong, Heale?" he asked. "More trouble up here?"

Heale hesitated. "Why, they had a smash-up—car piled into a tree," he explained. "Asa Taine's dead, and Rab got a crack in the head."

Derrie nodded. "Bad," he said gravely. Then he looked at Tope and grinned. "I suppose you're trying to make a murder out of this too," he suggested in amused derision.

But Tope shook his head. "Why, no, Doc," he said mildly. "No, it was an accident, I guess. Matter of fact," he added, "I've come around to your way of thinking on Mrs. Leaford too. Guess you were right. Guess it was an accident, just the way you said."

The young doctor chuckled. "Sure," he agreed triumphantly. "I told you so. You've been seeing goblins in the dark, old man." He said: "Well, I'll go in and take a look at them."

He turned into the house, and Inspector Heale looked at Tope.

"What do you aim to do now?" Heale asked; and Tope hesitated, but Miss Moss said cheerfully:

"Why, I think we'll wake Clint and June, and go down and get her father out of your jail, and go home."

Heale chuckled. "I'll telephone down, fix that for you about Mr. Leaford," he agreed. He went into the house to do so.

Tope stood still, suddenly tired. But Miss Moss hugged tight to his arm, and she smiled proudly up at him, and her eyes were shining.

"You know, my dear," she said, "you're a grand man!"

He grinned uncomfortably, wiped his mouth with his hand; and she rose on tiptoe to kiss him. Then they went together across the lawn to rouse Clint and June.

★ Drama for Carole

★ Sing Your Choice

★ Two Blind Pianists

By Virginia Vale

WITH practically everybody liking "The Wizard of Oz" very much indeed (and those who didn't like it getting almost violent on the subject, saying that it couldn't even be compared with "Snow White"), the picture got off to a flying start.

Judy Garland and Mickey Rooney, who play the leading roles, made personal appearances with it when it opened in New York. They arrived at the theater at 8:45 in the morning, and remained there until almost midnight. Meanwhile young people of the same ages as the stars lined up outside the theater, waiting to get in—and because of the enthusiasm of these young fans, Judy and Mickey had a body guard when they did get out for a breath of fresh air and a look at the city.

They gave five shows daily except on Saturdays and Sundays, when extra performances were scheduled. She sang, he did imitations, and the fans cheered till the rafters rang.

In "In Name Only" Carole Lombard shows that she could give Bette Davis some rather stern competition as a dramatic actress if she put her mind on it. The girl who has been playing g-ga comedy roles with such zest ever since the public acclaimed her as a comedienne in "My Man Godfrey" has turned in a bit of acting that makes her a promising candidate for one of those Academy statuettes, next time they're awarded.

Now that Nelson Eddy is back on that coffee program on Sunday evenings his program-makers are busy once again. He selects his songs chiefly by the number of requests from listeners. His secretary tabulates the requests every two weeks and delivers the final count to him. If possible, he sings the songs for which there are the greatest number of requests. The only difficulty is that people keep requesting the same old favorites over and over.

Although she is still on vacation, Kate Smith is preparing to return to the air in her role of commentator; she is so popular in that role that she's added it to her duties as singing mistress of ceremonies on the "Kate Smith hour."

So she'll begin commenting on October 9 from 12 to 12:15 Eastern standard time, over the Columbia Broadcasting system, while her regular hour brings her back to the microphones three days earlier. She'll discuss the news of the day and also her own personal experiences.

Alec Templeton, the blind pianist whose Tuesday night program is so popular, is not the only blind pianist on the air. Virg Bingham, of Kansas City's station WKB, is equally popular with those who have heard him. His interest lies chiefly in developing radio talent; the new one is composed of two girls and Bingham himself, and is the eleventh radio trio that he has developed.

"Susan and God," the play in which Gertrude Lawrence appeared so successfully on the stage, will probably require a good deal of re-writing before it's fit to be screened. For "Susan and God" poked fun at the Oxford movement, without actually saying so, and you can't poke fun at any religious movement on the screen without bringing in a swarm of protests.

Greer Garson, the English girl who made such a hit in "Good-by, Mr. Chips," will have the Lawrence role.

ODDS AND ENDS—Tex Ritter, the cowboy star, was injured the other day when he had a bad fall from his mount—not a horse, but an automobile. . . . Norma Shearer will do another costume picture, "Pride and Prejudice," and will make it in England. . . . Fred Astaire, Eleanor Powell and Eddie Cantor will co-star in "Girl Crazy." . . . Edward Arnold made his first plane trip recently, from coast to coast, and plans to take planes instead of trains from now on. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

These Smart Patterns Look Ahead to Fall

DO YOU take a woman's size? Then here is a lovely dress for you, (1799) youthful yet sophisticated, with clever bodice detailing, to create a round-bosomed effect, and a paneled skirt that makes your hips look narrow. It's a perfect style for luncheons and club affairs, yet not too dressy for street and shopping wear, too.

Flat crepe, thin wool and rayon jersey are smart materials for this.

Princess Lines and Shirring. Business and college girls will like the slim lines and simplicity of this very attractive dress (1780), with princess skirt cut high in the front, shirred shoulders, and flaring revers that frame your face becomingly. For this, choose flat crepe, taffeta or thin wool, with revers in white or a pastel tint.

The Patterns. No. 1799 is designed for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, and 46. Size 34 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39 inch material. 1/2 yard of lace for vestee. ### Moral: It's an Art To Know When to Fight

A loud, noisy and particularly objectionable skunk, obsessed by its own prominence and the attention paid to it, challenged a lion to single combat. The challenge was promptly declined by the lion. "Huh!" sneered the skunk. "You're afraid to fight me." "No," answered the lion, coolly, "but why should I fight you? You would gain fame from fighting me, even though I gave you the worst licking of your life, as I would do. How about me, though? I couldn't possibly gain anything by defeating you while on the other hand, everyone who met me for a month would know I had been in the company of a skunk."

Odd Uses for Plants and Trees in Distant Lands

A cousin of the familiar pea-flower, called Tephrosia, is used in the West Indies and Polynesia for a very unorthodox form of angling. The crushed leaves and stems are thrown into the river, where the fish are quickly stupefied and easily caught.

Another West Indian, the hog gum tree, is so called because wounded hogs rub the injured parts against the tree to smear themselves with the abundant resin it exudes, which heals their wounds. This resin is so powerful that the natives make torches of the branches. Another light-giving plant is the candleberry tree, a native of Polynesia related to our common spurge, notes a writer in London Tit-Bits magazine. The kernels of the walnut-like fruit are so rich in oil that they are stuck on reeds

The rejuvenated Carrizozo baseball team made a journey to Fort Stanton last Sunday afternoon, headed by Manager Harry Miller and returned home with the bacon, by defeating the Pennsylvania Recruits by the close score of 5-to-2.
