Regimentation Disastrous To American Liberty

Under the Constitution of the United States, the aim and object of its framers was to regulate all laws so that no creed, sect or organization should have rights which would work detrimental to others with which they would come in contact. To observe and practice that policy had always been carefully observed by both houses, Senate and Representative, until the Wagner Act became a law of this land.

What is to follow is aimed at no political organization, because it could as well happen under one administration as another. But as Americans, we should examine the acts of other countries which have laws similar to the Wagner Act and see what results we obtain. Men, regardless of political party affiliations, are pretty much alike and therefore, are liable to be led into paths which would give one organization the balance of power to the detriment of others and lead the people into channels which have out people of the old countries into penal slavery.

Legislation for the past several years has been enacted wholly, we might say, to the side of the labor organizations. So much so that it gave artificial courage to the "sit-down strike," wherein workers took charge of property which belonged to their employers and prevented the owners from even entering their own places of business. This was finally declared unconstitutional, but in its place came the order from John L. Lewis, changing it to the "slow-down strike," preventing output of products.

"Gunsling" their jobs, so as to make the demand so great above the output that some firms and corporations were forced to give in to their demands. That condition of affairs was brought about by the Wagner Act and the same was an un-American piece of legislation made to deceive the workers. Let's see if we are right or wrong. A Hitler gained power in Germany, his first act was to place the workers above the employers, then placed them under government control, which made them subject to a system of regimentation. Paying them the highest wages ever paid in the country, he now has reduced them to penal slavery, thus deceiving them into thinking he was their benefactor.

The Wagner labor act has made the workers rulers of their employers, but for a time only. They are led to believe that the world is theirs with a fence around it, but they are being deceived. The Wagner Act, like the law of Hitlerism, is a snare and a delusion. Will the workers see the handwriting before it is too late? President Green of the A. F. of L., has already seen it and is coming out for an extreme modification of the act. But Lewis holds his tongue, because he is a communist and regimentation would make him a supreme dictator over the working classes, making him a King demagogue at the expense of the common people. Wherein it has worked in Germany, so will it prove itself to be in this or any other land. Again, let us repeat that this is not politics, but the bare facts of the situation. Don't take our word for it—think for yourself. All you need to do is to take the history of Hitlerism, compare it to the Wagner Act and judge from your own conclusions. Regimentation is in force in Germany, Italy and Russia. The Wagner law as a fore-runner of regimentation in American, is a fact, not a theory. Unless the act is stripped of its foreign mask, making it as fair for one as another, workers of this country will find that they have been tricked into a dead-end, deprived of their American freedom and reduced to regimentation and Hitlerism.

Local Mention

Mrs. Gussie Johnson is a guest of her sister Mrs. Stebbins at Salina, Kansas, and we presume she will remain until after the holiday season.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Williams and Mrs. Ethel Skinner of Malaga, N. M., were here last week and were guests at the ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Greer in the San Andres mountains, Mr. Greer being a brother to Mrs. Skinner. Did they get their deer? We say they did—for with Lester for their guide, they were sure of it.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Fink and daughter Verda Elizabeth of Colorado Springs, Colo., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lou Fink for three days this week. On Tuesday, they were guests of Mrs. Fink at the Girls' Camp and left Wednesday for El Paso and a trip to Oklahoma City, before returning home. ### Rotten Apples

WERE you ever a youngster back East, where they bought apples by the barrel and stored them in the cellar over against the long winter evenings? When winter came, did you spend most of your Saturdays sorting over the barrels of apples, picking out the rotten ones so they would not make the whole barrel that way?

And didn't you and the family eat nothing but rotten apples the next week?

Isn't life like that?

And didn't you live in the kitchen, because the parlor should not be mussed up? And isn't it the truth that you lived in the kitchen all your life?

And didn't you always wear your old clothes, because you had to keep the good ones to go to meeting on Sunday?—And as a result, weren't you run down at the heel and patched on the seat most of the time?

And did you ever get over it? Haven't you gone through life with an inferiority complex, holding musty ideas and most of the time the same old worn-out notions until they were ready for the grab-bag? Do you still wait for somebody else to step ahead and do the pioneering?

You do—if you're still eating rotten apples.—W. L. Y. Davis, in Los Angeles Tribune.

Gems of Thought

NOR deem the irrevocable past as wholly wasted, wholly vain, if rising on its wrecks, at last to something nobler we attain.—Longfellow.

Happiness never lays its finger on its pulse. If we attempt to steal a glimpse of its features, it disappears.—Alexander Smith.

As a moth gnaws a garment, so doth envy consume a man.—Chrysostom.

Better it were, that all the miseries which nature owns were ours at once, than guilt.—Shakespeare.

Be at war with your vices, at peace with your neighbors, and let every year find you a better man.—Franklin.

Courage does not consist in the absence of fear, but the subjugation of fear.

It is as easy to call back a stone thrown from the hand, as to call back the word that is spoken.—Menander.

Home Folks Fed Up on War Talk; Want to Know About Tax Problem

Considerable Transition From Interest in European Affairs To Domestic Concerns on Part of Public Is Noted; Treasury to Borrow More Money.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART
WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—Observers, here in Washington, have a little way of their own by which they are able to forecast the trend of public thought and interest. It is a method that was developed solely from experience. Most of us who attempt to serve you, outside of Washington, as eyes and ears have learned to watch the demand for speakers and subjects upon which public men are asked to talk. It is not an infallible method, but it is usually correct. The only fly in the ointment is that we must learn to distinguish between the propaganda preachers and the legitimate desires of groups to have government questions explained to them.

It is to be noted here, by way of review, that three months ago the bulk of the speeches by men from Washington had to do with war, our chances of getting involved, neutrality, etc. There were interspersed with these, of course, the usual truckloads of guff from Secretary Wallace and the other self-appointed spokesmen for agriculture, rinds and cracklings from Secretary Ickes, and about the usual quantity of mouthings from the "superior minds" whose owners are greatly concerned in development of culture, liberal thinking. But it was about the war and related subjects that most people wanted to know.

The scene is changing now; indeed, a considerable transition already has taken place. Home folks are getting fed up, at last, and are desirous of knowing more about home problems and what the government intends to do about them. It is a trend most pleasant to contemplate. There simply can be no doubt about the fact that if the people of the United States forget about that war in Europe and pay attention to their own business, we will be able to stay out rather easily.

Another Group Includes The Concealed Levies

But there is another group of taxes—a long list of items that include most of the sneak-thief taxes, unseen and concealed levies—that really is bearing down. These general and special sales taxes, federal stamp levies, excise and license taxes were responsible for slightly more than one-fourth of all money paid into treasuries of government. This money came from tobacco, liquor, gasoline, sales taxes of various kinds which you saw only by close examination or could not discover at all, licenses, etc. The gasoline tax was the largest revenue producer. Federal, state and local governments obtained $981,000,000 because most of us burned up gasoline through use of the motor cars. Liquor revenue amounted to $838,000,000. It is said by some authorities that this type of tax has about reached its peak. To increase it more will mean that bootleggers can begin to operate once more, because added taxes will send the price of liquor to a point where bootlegging becomes profitable. Such is not the case with the other taxes in the group; you pay them and like it.

Comes an Awakening to The Problem of Taxation

With this background, then, let me call attention to the number of persons who appear at long last to have awakened to the problem of taxation—federal, state, county and city. Obviously, when there is an interest in taxation there is a parallel interest in what government does with the money taken from its citizens. This interest surely exists now to a greater extent than at any time within recent months. More and more inquiries are being received, more and more requests for discussion of the subject are reaching officials in Washington. And if my information from outside sources be correct, there is a similar interest being shown in the states and cities.

In this period of changing interest, Secretary Morgenthau announced that the United States treasury is prepared to borrow more money. In the next two months, according to the Secretary, the treasury will borrow an additional half a billion dollars. It will refund something like a billion and a quarter, also, but that process is simply trading new bonds or notes for old ones that fall due. The borrowing is "new" money, in the sense that new bonds will be sold and the proceeds used by the treasury to meet expenses, and naturally the national debt will be increased by that amount. It is well to remember that, as of November 1, the public debt was $41,139,971,217, and that there are several other billions of bonds issued by such agencies as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Home Owners Loan Corporation and debts guaranteed by agencies like the Federal Housing Administration, for which the treasury is morally, if not actually, responsible.

It is not curious, therefore, that folks are asking each other: where is this spending going to stop? or, how are we going to pay off that debt? or, what are our taxes going to be in the future?

Tax Receipts for Nation Astounding in Magnitude

I am indebted to the federation of tax administration for some totals of tax receipts for the nation that are not only astounding in their magnitude but startling in the implications they give.

The statistics disclose that the American people paid $14,811,000,000 in taxes in 1938. This money was collected by the federal, state, county and city governments and some odds and ends of special taxing districts which levied taxes for special purposes. Of this amount, the federal government collected $8,034,000,000; state governments collected $3,887,000,000, and local governments took a toll of $4,920,000,000.

One of the new taxes—the tax on payrolls to maintain pensions and unemployment—yielded in excess of $1,500,000,000, or almost one-tenth of all of the money taken by the tax collector. Its total seems to give substance to the complaint that this tax is a tremendous burden on any one who hires workers. The payroll tax, according to the administrators' analysis, was the third largest of single items of taxation—only the property tax and the income tax brought in more money for the spenders of federal, state or local governments.

Property taxes, levies on everything you own, your house or farm or horses or automobile, paid a total tribute of $4,745,000,000. If you are good at figures you will find that sum to be 32 per cent—almost one-third—of all of the taxes paid by the United States last year.

Income taxes ranked second in the sums produced for governmental use. The income taxes laid by federal, state and city governments supplied $3,242,000,000, and that is 22 per cent of the revenue.

Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland are going to go with one—and on, and on—as a team, because the public likes them. "Babe in Arms" has decided that; it pairs them musically as well as romantically, finishing the work begun in "Love Finds Andy Hardy" and "Thoroughbreds Don't Cry." Incidentally, people who meet him like the Rooney had a lot better than they did for a while, when he was accused of having a swelled head and all the things that go with it. He's grown into a likable chap, modest rather than pompous, and he and the pretty Judy make such a nice pair that the people who pay to see them on the screen seem to want them to stick together.

There's a tradition in radio that the first actor to try out for a part is sure not to get it. Dorothy Knox has proved that it isn't so. She competed with 27 other actresses for the role of "Frieda" in "The Life and Loves of Dr. Susan"—was the first to enter the audition room and the last to leave it—and she got the part.

Major Bowes is rapidly becoming a public benefactor. Not long ago he presented St. Patrick's cathedral in New York with 11 Schwedler maples and four English elms—a gift which cannot be appreciated by anyone who does not know how barren New York is of trees, or how some of its inhabitants long to see one. The trees are magnificent, a living tribute to the Major's thoughtfulness.

Now he has given his estate, Laurel Hill, at Ossining, N. Y., to the Lutheran church for a retreat for the clergy and laity of New York and nearby states. The 10-acre estate is a show place, filled with memories for Major Bowes; he and the late Mrs. Bowes, who was Margaret Illington, the famous actress, bought it in 1927, and through the years they landscaped it, installed a swimming pool, and did everything they could to make it beautiful.

Major Bowes not only gave the estate to the church, but added a substantial gift to help equip it.

ODDS AND ENDS—Charles Beyer is to come to this country on a propaganda mission for the French government. Greta Garbo is not only going to be a comedienne in her new picture, "Ninotchka"—she's going to do a scene in which she drinks just a bit too much champagne. Andrea Leeds was married recently to Del Monte, Calif., to Robert S. Howard, whose father owns a famous racing stable. The British government wouldn't grant Edward Small permission to film some of the scenes of "My Son, My Son" against the actual backgrounds in Manchester, London, and other cities, so the entire film will be made in Hollywood. ## Star Dust

★ It's Micky With Judy
★ First Up Gets It!

—By Virginia Vale—

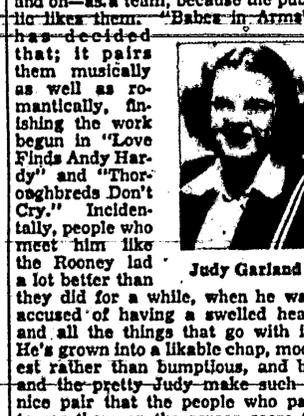

WHEN an actress who is famous for wearing beautiful clothes beautifully wants to get a bit of extra publicity, it's usually a good trick for her to announce that she'd just love to have a role in which she wore rags. Usually, too, she hasn't the faintest desire to wear rags, or anything faintly approaching them; she'd scream and gnaw the woodwork if anyone suggested it. But women who can't dress as she does on the stage or in pictures are supposed to like her better for saying that she's tired of being a clothes horse.

Joan Crawford is proving that she really wants to be something more than a modiste's mannequin. In "Not Too Narrow, Not Too Deep," her new picture in which Clark Gable plays opposite her, she has just one dress. There may have to be replacements, it's true, for she has to do quite a bit of dashing about in a South American jungle, but technically it will be the same frock. That is, according to the present announcements it will be.

As for Gable, he's to be a really tough egg; escapes from a prison colony and all that sort of thing.

With some of these ladies of the screen it's a calamity if the public doesn't see through that ostrich-with-its-head-in-the-sand disguise of dark glasses. Not long ago your correspondent lunched with one, in New York. We just went in, sat down and ordered luncheon. Dismissed, the lady glanced around. "Isn't anybody looking at me?" she asked, in anguished tones.

Major Bowes is rapidly becoming a public benefactor. Not long ago he presented St. Patrick's cathedral in New York with 11 Schwedler maples and four English elms—a gift which cannot be appreciated by anyone who does not know how barren New York is of trees, or how some of its inhabitants long to see one. ### THE STORY THUS FAR

Young, pretty Jane Barnes, who lived with her brother, Baldwin, in Sherwood Park, near Washington, was not particularly impressed when she read the high, attractive Edith Towne had been left at the altar by Delafeld Simms, a wealthy New Yorker. However, she still mused over it when she met Evans Follette, a young neighbor, whom the way had left completely discouraged and despondent. Evans had always loved Jane. That morning Baldwin Barnes, on his way to work in Washington, offered assistance to a tall, lovely girl in distress. Later he found a bag she had left in the car, containing a diamond ring, on which was inscribed "Del to Edith—Forever." He knew then that his passenger had been Edith Towne. Already he was half in love with her. That night he discussed the matter with Jane, and they called her uncle, worldly, sophisticated Frederick Towne. He visited them at their home, delighted with Jane's simplicity. He told them, Edith's story. Because her uncle desired it, Edith Towne had accepted Delafeld Simms, whom she liked but did not love. She disappeared immediately after the wedding was to have taken place. The next day Jane received a basket of fruit from Towne, and a note asking if he might call again. Mrs. Follette, widowed mother of Evans, was a woman of indomitable courage. Impoverished, she nevertheless managed to keep Evans and herself in comparative comfort by running a dairy farm. Evans, mentally depressed and disillusioned, had little self reliance and looked to his mother and Jane for guidance. Edith Towne phones Baldy in answer to an ad. She asked him to bring her postbook. Jane calls on Frederick Towne in his elaborate office. He gives Lucy, his stenographer, a letter to Delafeld Simms, in which he severely criticizes him. Unknown to him, Lucy and Simms are in love with each other. Towne takes Jane home in his limousine. She introduces him to Evans, who is jealous of Towne. Baldy goes to meet Edith Towne at her hiding place. He convinces her that she should return home and face her friends. She is interested in Baldy. Later they eat in a restaurant, where Edith sees several friends. She knows they will see to it that the news is spread.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

On this same afternoon little Lucy Logan was writing to Delafeld Simms.

"It seems like a dream, lover, that you are to come for me in February, and that then we'll be married. And that all the rest of my life I am to belong to you."

"Del, it isn't because you are rich. Of course I shall adore the things you can do for me. I am not going to pretend that I shan't. But if you were poor, I'd work for you—live for you. Oh, Del, I do hope that you will believe it."

"The other day, Mr. Towne said in one of his letters that you had always been fickle, that there had been lots of girls, Eloise Harper before Edith. And I wanted to scream right out and say, 'It isn't true. He hasn't ever really cared before this.' But of course I couldn't. But I broke a pencil point, and as for Mr. Towne, who is he to say such things about you? I haven't taken his letters for the last three years for nothing. There's always somebody—the last one was Mrs. Laramore, and now he has his eye on a little Jane Barnes, whose brother found Miss Towne's bag and the ring. She's rather a darling, but I hope she won't think he is in earnest."

"And now, my dear and my darling, good-night. I wonder how I dare call you that. But I am always saying it to myself, and at night I ask God to keep you—safe."

CHAPTER VII

Jane, in Baldy's absence, dined on Sunday with the Follettes, in the middle of the day. In the afternoon she and Evans went for a walk, and came home to tea in the library. Stretched in a long leather chair, Evans read to Jane and his mother "The Eve of St. Agnes."

At the moment, Mrs. Follette was weighing seriously the fact of Jane as a wife for Evans. She was pretty as well as cheerful. Had good manners. Of course, in the old days, Evans would, inevitably, have looked higher. There had been plenty of rich girls eager to attract him. He had had unlimited invitations. Women had, in fact, quite run after him. Florence Preston had rather made a fool of herself. And Florence's father had millions.

But now—? Mrs. Follette knew how little Evans had at the moment to offer. She hated to admit it, but the truth was evident. Watching the two young people, she decided that should Evans care for Jane, she would erect no barriers. As for Jane, marriage with Evans would be, in a way, a rise in the world. She would live at Castle Manor instead of at Sherwood Park.

It was after five when Baldy telephoned triumphantly: "Jane, Edith Towne has agreed to go home to-night. And I'm to take her. I called up Mr. Towne and told him and he wants you to be there when we come. He'll send Briggs for you and we are all to have dinner together."

"But, Baldy, I don't know Edith Towne. Why doesn't he ask some of her own friends?"

"She doesn't want 'em. Hates them all, and anyhow he has asked you. Why worry?"

"I'll have to go home and dress."

"Well, you're to let him know at once where Briggs can get you. I told him you were at the Follettes."

Jane went back and repeated the conversation to Evans and his mother. Mrs. Follette was much interested. The Townes were most important people. "How nice for you, Jane."

But Evans disagreed with her. "What makes you say that, Mother? It isn't nice. It will simply be upsetting."

"I don't see why you say that, Evans," Jane argued. "I am not easily upset."

"But with all that money. You can't keep up with them."

"Don't put ideas into Jane's head," his mother remonstrated; "a lady is always a lady."

But Jane sided now with Evans. "I see what he means, Mrs. Follette. I haven't the clothes. I haven't a thing to wear tonight."

"Oh, I wasn't thinking of your looks," Evans got up and stood on the hearth-rug. "But people like that! Jane, I wish you wouldn't go."

She looked up at him with her chin tilted. "I don't see how I can refuse."

"Of course she can't. Evans, don't be so unreasonable," Mrs. Follette interposed; "it will be a wonderful thing for Jane to know Edith."

"Will it be such a wonderful thing for her to know Frederick Towne?" He flung it at them.

Jane demanded, "Don't you want me to have any good times?"

He stared at her for a moment, and when he spoke it was in a different tone. "Yes, of course. I beg your pardon, Janey."

Mrs. Follette, having effaced herself for the moment from the conversation, decided that things between her son and little Jane Barnes might reach a climax at any moment. "I believe he's half in love with her," she told herself in some bewilderment.

As for Frederick Towne, she didn't consider him for a moment. Jane was a pretty child. But Frederick Towne could have his pick of women. There would be nothing serious in this friendship with Jane.

Jane called up Towne. "It was good of you to ask me," she said. "I am at the Follette's, but I'll go home and dress and Briggs can come for me there."

"Come as you are."

"You wouldn't say that if you could see me. I took a walk with Evans this afternoon and I show the picture of it."

"Evans? Oh, Casablanca?"

"What makes you call him that?"

"I thought of it when I saw him waiting for you at the top of the terrace. The boy stood on the burning deck—" he laughed.

"I don't think that's funny at all," said Jane, frankly.

"Don't you? Well, beg your pardon. I'll beg it again when I get you here. Briggs will reach Sherwood at about seven. I would drive out myself, but I've an awful cold, and the doctor tells me I must stay in. And Cousin Annabel is sick in bed with a cold, so you must take pity on me and keep me company."

Jane hung up the receiver. It would, she decided, be an exciting adventure. But she was not sure that she liked Frederick Towne.

Evans walked home with her. The air was warmer than it had been for days, and faint mists had risen. The mist thickened finally to a fog which rolled over them as if blown from the high seas. Yet the sea was miles away, and the fog was born in the rivers and streams, and in the melting snows.

They found it somewhat difficult to keep to the road. They were almost smothered in the thick gray masses. Their voices had a muffled sound. Evans' hand was on Jane's arm so that they might keep together.

"Jane," he said, "I made a fool of myself about Towne. But honestly—I was afraid."

"Of what?"

"That he might fall in love with you."

"He's not thinking of me, Evans, and besides he's too old."

"Do you really feel that way about it, Janey?"

"Of course—silly."

He could not see her face—but the words in her laughing lovely voice gave him a sense of reassurance.

"Janey," he said, "if I could only have you like this always. Shut away from the world."

"But I don't want to be shut away. I should feel caged."

"Not if you cared."

There was in his tone the huskiness of intense feeling. She was moved by it. "Oh, I know what you mean. But love won't come to me like that—shut in. I shall want freedom, and sunshine. I'll be a gull over the sea—a ship in full sail—a gypsy on the road—but I'll never be a ghost in a fog."

His hand dropped from her arm. "Perhaps you'll be a princess in a castle. Towne can make you that."

"Why do you keep harping on Mr. Towne? I don't like it."

"Because—oh, I think everybody wants you—"

And now it was she who caught at his arm in the mist, and leaned on it. "I'm not the least in love with Frederick Towne. And I shall never marry a man I don't love, Evans."

When they came to the little house they found old Sophy nodding in the kitchen. She always stayed with Evans when Baldy was away. So Evans said "Good-night" and started back.

He found the path between the pines, walked a few steps and stumbled. He sat down on the log that had tripped him. He had no wish to go on. His depression was intense. Night was before him and darkness. Loneliness. And Jane would be with Frederick Towne.

He had for Jane a feeling of hopeless adoration. She would never be his. For how could he try to keep her? "I'll be a gull over the sea—a ship in full sail—a gypsy on the road—never a ghost in a fog."

And he was just a ghost in a fog!

Oh, what was the use of ever "climbing up the climbing wave"? One must have something of hope to live on. A dream or two—ah, ahead.

How long he sat there he did not know. And all at once he was aware of a pale blur against the prevailing gloom. And then he heard Jane's voice calling, "Evans? Evans?"

He answered and she came up to him. "Your mother telephoned—that you had not come home—and she was worried."

She was holding the lantern up to the length of her arm. In her orange cloak she shone through the veil of mist, luminous.

"My dear," she said, gently, "why are you sitting here?"

"Because there isn't any use in going on."

She lowered the lantern so that it shone on his face. What she saw there frightened her. "Are you feeling this way because of me?" she asked in a shaking voice.

"Because of everything."

"Evans, I won't go to the Townes if you want me to stay."

He looked up at her as she bent above him with the lantern. She seemed to shine within and without, like some celestial visitor.

"Would you stay, Jane, if I wanted it?"

"Yes."

He stood up. "I don't want it. Not really. I'm not quite such a selfish pig," his smile was ghastly.

She was silent for a moment, then she said, "I'm going home with you, Evans. Wait until I tell Sophy to send Briggs after me."

He tried to protest, but she was firm. "I'll be back in a minute."

She returned presently, the lantern in one hand and her slipper bag in the other. "I put on heavier shoes. I should ruin my slippers."

As they trod the path together, the light of the lantern shone in round spots of gold, now in front of them, now behind them. The fog pressed close, but the path was clear.

"Evans," said Jane, "I want you to promise me something."

"Anything, except not to love you."

"It has nothing to do with love of me, but it has something to do with love of God."

He knew how hard it was for her to say that. Jane did not speak easily of such things.

She went on with some hesitation. Her voice, muffled by the fog, had a muted note of music.

"Evans, you mustn't let what I do make you or break you. Whether I love you or not, you must go on. You—you couldn't hold me if you weren't strong enough, even if I was your wife. And there is strength in you, if you'll only believe it. Oh, you must believe it, Evans. And you mustn't make me feel responsible. I can't stand it. To feel—all the time that I am hurting—you."

She was sobbing. A little incoherent.

"And you are captain of your soul, Evans. You. Not anyone else. I can't be. I can't be a help, and oh, I will help all I can. You know that. But—I love you like a big brother—not in any other way. If anything should happen to you, it would be dreadful for me, just as it would be dreadful if anything happened to Baldy."

"Janey, my dear, don't," for she was clinging to his arm, crying as if her heart would break.

"But I do care for you so much, Evans. I was frantic when your mother telephoned. I wasn't quite dressed and I made Sophy get the lantern, and then I ran down the path, and looked for you."

He stopped and laid his hand on her shoulder. Her weakness, her broken words had roused in him a sudden protective tenderness.

"My little girl," he said, "don't. God helping me, I'm going to get back. And you are going to light my way. Jane, do you know when I saw you coming towards me with that dim lantern it seemed symbolic. Hope held out to me—seen through a fog, faintly. But a light, nevertheless."

"Oh, Evans, if I could love you, I would, you know that."

"I know. You'd lie up the broken wings of every bird. You'd give crutches to the lame, and food to the hungry. And that's the way you feel about me."

He had let her go now, and they stood apart, shrouded in ghostly white.

"God helping me," he said again, "I'll get back. That's a promise, Janey, and here's my hand upon it."

She gave him her hand. "God helping us both," she said.

He lifted her hand and kissed it. Then, in silence, they walked on, until they reached the house.

Plates Are Most Sought of the Steel Products

Plates of iron or steel are, historically, the oldest of the industry's rolled products; commercially, one of the leading tonnage products, and functionally among the most widely used and more indispensable.

In an ordinary year, three million or more tons of steel plates are produced, says Steel Facts. Major uses include the construction of ships, railroad locomotives and cars, oil tanks, gas holders, water tanks and a variety of other articles essential to modern industry such as floors for bridges and buildings, standpipes, etc.

Plates, sheets and strip steel are all flat rolled products, of different thicknesses and widths, and it is difficult to define exactly where one product stops and the other begins.

The two principal classes of plates are sheared and universal, the names deriving from the type of mill on which the plate was rolled.

Mills which have only horizontal rolls and produce a plate with uneven edges and ends are called sheared plate mills. Products of these mills must be sheared on all four edges to produce a rectangle.

Universal mills have in addition to horizontal rolls, at least one pair of vertical rolls so placed as to roll the edges of the plate straight and parallel. Some types of universal mills align plate edges with grooved rolls like the rolls of a bar mill.

Regardless of the mill on which they are finally rolled, all plates are rolled from slabs or slab ingots. Slabs, which are a semi-finished product rolled from conventional square or rectangular ingots, are always more than twice as wide as they are thick. Slab-ingots are cast with their width greater than twice their thickness.

Both types of ingot are "broken down" by being put through a slabbing mill to reduce their cross-section, after having been heated slowly and uniformly in soaking pits.

This heating operation must be done very carefully in order to prevent excessive scaling, which will injure the surface of the plate, and to insure proper grain refinement which enhances the ductility of the steel.

Life of Big War Guns

The war department says that the life of a big gun is 200 to 500 rounds. This does not mean, however, that the gun is absolutely worthless after 500 rounds, only that it has to be relined. A big gun would be considered a 14 or 16 inch gun.

Gland Trouble May Be Cause Of Baldness

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

ANY individual or organization that can produce a method of growing hair on bald heads would make millions of dollars every year. It can be easily understood then that when in 1931 Dr. Bengt

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

Norman Bengtson, Maywood, Ill., in an article in Clinical Medicine and Surgery told of his success in growing hair by the use of extract of pituitary gland (said article being accompanied by the most convincing photographs) he was swamped with inquiries and tremendous offers of money for the rights to market his "product."

However, Dr. Bengtson pointed out that, while his study had extended over five years, he had used the pituitary extract on but 16 individuals and while the results were gratifying in some and spectacular in two cases, he would prefer to work a while longer and with more cases before he could say definitely that pituitary extract (from sheep) would restore lost hair.

Now, in 1939, Dr. Bengtson in Clinical Medicine and Surgery, gives further details of his work with pituitary extract.

"A large clinic was established for me at the Research and Educational Hospitals of the University of Illinois. Every known type of hair disturbance was placed at my disposal through the favorable effect of the tremendous publicity in the newspapers that followed my first report."

Large Supply of Data.

Together with the results of his own investigations Dr. Bengtson has the questions, comments and observations of 700 physicians from all over the world, and their results with pituitary treatment in from one to 100 cases each. About 2,000 cases in all have been observed.

What has been the result of all the investigation?

In a great many cases small light colored hairs appeared and in a number of cases, particularly in those with dark hair, patches of normal hair appeared, but in a few weeks, in most of these cases, this "normal" hair disappeared. In other words, for the present, at least, the use of pituitary extract to restore hair has not been successful.

However, the fact that it does grow hair on a few, grows hair on some which later disappears, would show that there is something in the makeup of those who lose their hair early—gland disturbance, acid-alkali balance, or other disturbance—which interferes with the action of their pituitary glands.

Rest Is Needed After "Thrombosis"

About the first thing that happens when blood is pumped out of the heart into the big artery (aorta) to go to all parts of the body is that some of this blood goes directly from the aorta to supply the heart muscle itself.

There are two small vessels called coronary or heart vessels which carry the blood from the aorta, one to each side of the heart. It is by means of these two vessels and their branches that the heart gets its supply of blood to strengthen its walls so that these walls can continue to pump blood. If anything obstructs or blocks these vessels, then the heart fails to receive enough blood to do its work. These two vessels must carry enough blood to the heart at all times to enable it to pump the ordinary amount of blood to all parts of the body and also the extraordinary amounts that must be pumped when the individual is doing hard work, is digesting a large meal, or is fighting an ailment.

Any Blocking Is Serious.

It can readily be seen that anything that blocks these vessels or their branches is a serious condition and may cause complete heart failure. The blocking may be done by a little bit of tissue from vegetable-like growths on valves of the heart, by spasm which closes the mouths of the coronary vessels and prevents blood getting to the heart muscle to nourish it, or to what is called "thrombosis," where the lining of the coronary blood vessel becomes thickened and blood cannot pass through. When the heart blood vessels are affected usually all the vessels of the body are affected. In thrombosis, a small part of the heart muscle becomes soft (no blood going to it) and scar tissue replaces the muscle tissue. It takes a number of weeks for the spot to heal and that is why rest in bed for six to eight weeks is prescribed after an attack of coronary thrombosis.

Now for the Mirror And Old Piano Stool

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THE illustration shows what became of the mirror and piano stool which the bride had left over last week. To the mirror and stool were added two wooden boxes from the grocery. These were placed on end about 18 inches apart and a shelf of 1/2-inch pine screwed to the top. A frame was then screwed to the back of the boxes as shown here. A curtain rod was placed across the top and the mirror hung lengthwise under it. An arm was then hinged to the front of each box. White paint was used next. The flowered chintz in tones of rose and blue-green with narrow frills of the plain blue-green tone matched the window curtains.

The dressing table skirt was made with a one-inch heading at the top and tacked along the ends of the table and the hinged arms with thumbtacks through a double strip of the plain material.

The services were in charge of the Masonic order, to which he was a devoted member.
