A delegation of Oddfellows journeyed to Alamogordo Tuesday night to confer the second degree for the Alamo lodge, after the invitation had been extended. The Alamo boys displayed their usual courtesies to Carrizozo and after a drill which ended the exercises, refreshments were served. Those attending from here were, District Deputy G. M. Herman Kelt, Degree Master J. F. Tom, J. M. Carpenter, Wm. J. Langston, Lewis A. Burke, Lawrence Barnes, R. E. Kent, A. L. Burke, L. H. Dow, G. H. Dorsett.

Killing at Riverside Camp

Last night about 8 o'clock, at the Riverside Camp 7 miles east of Pecos, when Mr. and Mrs. Jack Dabbs had closed the Inn, Mrs. Dabbs shot and killed her husband with a .32-20 pistol. Sheriff Greisen and Deputy Howlin rushed to the scene, but Mrs. Dabbs was so hysterical that the inquest was withheld and she was taken to a Roswell hospital.

The officers found the pistol which killed Dabbs, one .38 automatic, one .22 calibre pump rifle, one pistol, one .410 shot gun, one .22 revolver, all of which were heavily loaded. Mrs. Dabbs admitted to the shooting, but whether it was accidental or not, remains to be ascertained.

Piano solo "Rancho Grande" Jane Gallacher, Vocal solo "Down Mexico Way" Charlene Page. "A Trip Through Old Mexico" John Hall; Jarabe Dance, LaWana Conley and Richard Dow, accompanied by Lucio Vidaurri. Every number was excellent and those taking part deserve much credit. Mr. Hall's talk was based on his experiences in Mexico the past summer, giving the assembly an interesting description of the beautiful scenery, a graphic insight of the manners and customs of our neighbors to the south, creating a desire of many present to make a similar trip. At the close of program, members and visitors were invited to the dining room where refreshments were served by the committee, Mmes. Hoffman, Kelley, Henderson, Cochran, Sale, Burns, Greer and Misses Pierce and Jones. The next meeting will be held Dec. 15. Mrs. A. V. Swearingen will have charge of program, subject "Hawaii."

Dies Committee Tears Mask From Fritz Kuhn

Latest radio messages Wednesday night advised us much to our satisfaction, that Fritz Kuhn, Bund leader, extortionist, embezzler and play boy, had been adjudged guilty by a New York jury on 5 different counts. The extreme penalty for the crimes he committed can give him a penitentiary sentence of 30 years, but he should be given an added amount on general principles.

He was convicted of defrauding the Bund out of $10,000. He had many women on his string, to whom he made love only to get his clutches on their money. He then jilted them. He was adjudged guilty of several complaints of that nature, having stolen money from all of them. He organized Bund camps over the country and sought to poison the minds of our young men and women with his damnable doctrine. He went hand-in-hand with Harry Bridges, Ma Perkins and others who are guilty of spreading the infernal doctrine among our young people.

Fritz Kuhn, during the trials before the Dies Committee, used language which would have convicted him as a traitor in any other country except this.

When even Congressmen were on the witness stand, Kuhn would call liars and use the most vulgar language in order to attract sympathy from the jury, all of which acted as a boomerang. He will receive his sentence on Dec. 5, according to dispatches—and we hope it will be a good one.

Fritz Kuhn came here under the pretense of wanting to become an American. He received his naturalization papers, but as soon as he acquired them he began his evil work in un-Americanism.

On the witness stand, he cursed the American Legion, and even went so far as to denounce that body of patriots as un-American. He was sent here by Hitler, whom he worships. He comes from that seething mass of corruptionists who denounce God, home, liberty, and Democratic form of government.

To that madman at the head of the German government, Kuhn may allegiance and homage Germany, under Hitler, is a burning hell. Fritz Kuhn came from it and to it, he should be compelled to return after serving his sentence.

DR. BAKER COMING

Because of several requests for my immediate services, I will make a special trip to Carrizozo, supplying the usual high class services and late style glasses, and will be at the El Cibola Hotel Wednesday, Dec. 6, ONLY.—11

Business was entirely suspended yesterday, in observance of Thanksgiving Day, quite in contrast to "Franksgiving Day" of one week ago, at which time, business houses kept open all day and transacted regular business until the closing hours, thus ignoring the "one man show."

THANKSGIVING FOOTBALL GAME

The fighting Carrizozo football team lost to a bigger, heavier Captain team yesterday in a Lincoln County Thanksgiving Day classic, before one of the biggest crowds to witness a Turkey Day game in years.

R. Halfback Moberly caught a long pass in the third quarter for Carrizozo and made a sensational run, scoring for Carrizozo.

Capitan's touchdowns all came from passes after sustained drives, with Couzzen starting.

IN APPRECIATION

Coaches Caton and Stiles of the Carrizozo High School wish to take this opportunity to publicly express their appreciation of the loyalty and enthusiasm of the sixteen young men who so faithfully co-operated with them in the past football season.

Although the team won only two games and tied one out of nine games, we feel that the success of a football season cannot be determined by the size of the scores, but by the teamwork and co-operation of the football squad.

The Grizzlies were severely handicapped this season by lack of heavy material but what they lost in weight and stature they gained in pluck and speed.

Thanks, boys and Carrizozo fans for your fine display of sportsmanship and loyalty.

MORAL RE-ARMAMENT

The Newest Force at Work in the World
Is Based on the Oldest Rule of Living

By Frank Parker Stockbridge
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

LIKE an army with banners marching to war, a company of men and women from every part of the nation and of the world has lately been moving across the length and breadth of the United States. Their banner bears a strange device, four straight lines tapering upward toward infinity, crossed with the letters "MRA." That striking symbol stands for "Moral Re-Armament."

I first encountered the new banner last spring in Washington, and later at a great meeting in Constitution hall. Senators, representatives and high officials of the federal government sat on the platform and in the audience and listened while Americans, Englishmen, Irish, Scots, Finns, Danes, Swedes, Norwegians, Netherlanders, French, Australian, Canadian, Japanese, Chinese, Burmese, Swiss, Indian, Egyptian and South African men and women told what MRA meant to them personally and to their countries.

I met this army in action in Madison Square Garden in New York under the same banner. I saw the flags of every nation paraded by the youth of those nations, young men and women dressed in their national costumes, singing their stirring call to human brotherhood, "Bridge Builders." Two special trains had brought Canadians to New York to take part.

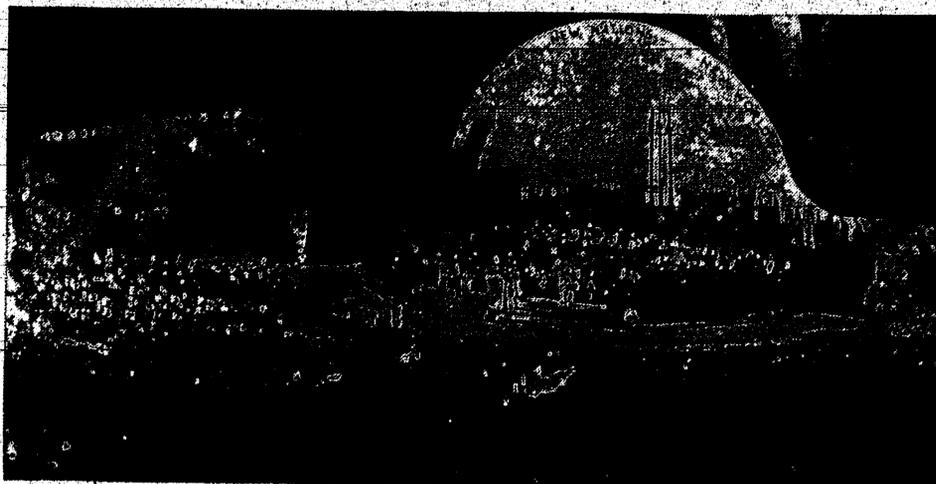

After the Canadians had marched out of the hall and the audience had begun to disperse I tried to get up to the platform, seeking more information about MRA. A thousand others, it seemed, had the same idea at the same time. All around me men and women were asking eager questions of the hundred or more who had taken a leading part in the evening's ceremonies.

What is MRA?
"You've got something that I haven't got," I heard on every side. "What is it? I want to know more about it. Where can I get more information about MRA?"

All they had heard from the platform had been a very simple message indeed. Only that if everybody lived honestly, decently, unselfishly and lovingly there would be an end to the world's troubles. Most of them had heard that simple program of living from their youth up. It had been preached at them from pulpits, taught them in Sunday school and at home. But here they had heard it in a way that made it sound not only true but possible. They had not been preached at, but had heard a score and more of men and women, upstanding, clear-eyed folk, some young, some with graying hair, tell simply, briefly and convincingly how they, each individual, had learned to live by the ancient, accepted code in which everybody believes for the other fellow but an appalling few adhere to for themselves.

But here were people of every land, intelligent people, many of them leaders in their respective spheres, giving tangible evidence of the fact that their lives had been changed by acceptance of the principles of MRA. There was nothing sanctimonious in their manner, no cant, no ranting; just straightforward recitals of personal relationships readjusted, of quarrels and distrust between employers and workers changed to mutual confidence and respect, of racial intolerances and hatreds laid to rest, of class antipathies vanishing when the speakers had learned to be absolutely honest in all their human relations, to discover and admit their own failings before blaming their troubles on someone else, to accept all other human beings as brothers under the All-Father, and to strive as far as was humanly possible to lead personal lives under the direction of God.

And they were happy. It was that note of happiness, unmistakable and sincere, which impressed everybody who heard them, more than what they said. While the rest of us were vainly striving in the pursuit of happiness, these folk had found it. I wanted to know more about MRA. How did they do it? How did these people learn this new way of life? Could anybody do it? Did you have to join anything? How much did it cost? It occurred to me, as I approached the platform, that nobody had "passed the hat." I thought of a thousand questions, the sort of questions which naturally occur to a newspaper man, trained by temperament and experience to be suspicious of anything new which he does not understand, especially in a racket-minded age, to look for the concealed motives behind all human actions.

Buchman the Dynamo.
When I finally caught the eye of the alert, vigorous-appearing man who had acted as master of ceremonies, though he let others do most of the talking, he greeted me as an old acquaintance. He was Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, founder of the Oxford Group, the dynamo of Moral Re-Armament.

"I want to learn more about MRA and try to write the 'inside story' of it," I told him.

"Our next jump is to the Pacific coast," he replied. "Come out and join us there."

So, as soon as I could arrange it, I hopped a plane at New York one evening and landed in San Francisco the next morning. I traveled up and down the Pacific coast for a month with the MRA International Team of workers, sat in their inner councils, learned their inmost secrets, which turned out to be no secrets at all, and mingled with the thousands of Westerners who flocked to the dozens of public meetings, large and small, and came around afterwards to seek more light, to find guidance to enable them to live the happy, untroubled lives which those who flew the MRA banner enjoyed.

The Hollywood Bowl holds 30,000 people. Forty thousand clamored for admission at the first MRA meeting in California. The San Francisco World's Fair on Treasure Island set apart two days in August for special MRA gatherings. Monterey, Pasadena, a dozen smaller cities in the Golden State turned out thousands to hear the message. MRA was front-page news in the daily papers all up and down the coast from Seattle to southern California. Newspaper reporters who came to scoff returned to their offices to write sincerely enthusiastic articles about the movement and its people. The movie colony in Hollywood developed an amazing interest. The radio carried the story of MRA literally to the four corners of the earth; on one day from the World's Fair grounds there was continuous broadcasting by short waves, with men speaking in their own languages to their compatriots across the seven seas.

Change Your Own Life.
The public meetings of MRA, with their crowds and their pagantry, are all for the purpose of stimulating individual inquiry. The answer every inquirer receives is, in effect, precisely the answer which Peter and the other Apostles gave. Each one must first change his own life, by the grace of God; and there is a trained, willing worker ready to teach him or her how to seek and obtain the Divine guidance to bring about the change. There is nothing new about this. It is merely a return to the fundamental principles of Christianity and the ways-of-the-first-apostles.

And that, I learned, is the foundation of MRA.

It is not a new creed or a new religion. No one "joins" anything. It is not an organization but a fellowship of like-minded people. It is not an effort to take people away from their church relations, but rather to put more people into the churches and to help those now in the churches to live in their daily lives the teachings of the church. I met Catholics, Protestants of every denomination, Jews, even some Buddhists and Mohammedans as well as many with no church affiliation, among the hundreds of active workers and the thousands associated in the fellowship.

"How many people are there who have accepted the MRA way of life?" I asked Dr. Buchman. "We have no record," he replied, "but the number is in the millions. We work in 60 nations, and in each country they know that the number is growing."

"Are there many backsliders? Do they all stick?"
One of the other workers answered. "There were twelve disciples and one went wrong. That's 8 1/2 per cent. We have not heard of a higher percentage than that."

No Racial Distinctions.

I flew from San Francisco to Hollywood with Takasumi Mitsui, brother of the head of Japan's leading industrial family. He told me that not only himself but many other influential Japanese were living the new life of MRA. I met a considerable number of Chinese, men and women, who are giving their whole time to the promulgation of the teachings of MRA among their people. Titled men and women from a dozen European nations were working side by side in the International Team, on level terms with dockyard laborers, slum dwellers from East London, manual workers from Scandinavia, school teachers from Burma, and people from all walks of life in America. In MRA there are no racial, class, social or national distinctions. Its foundation stone is belief in the Brotherhood of Man under the Fatherhood of God.

I rode back from Hollywood to San Francisco with Bill Rowell and Ted Sloan, some of the workmen who had been sent over by the sacrificial giving of their labor friends. Bill told me how the Hon. Miles Phillips, young son of a British peer, had come to his house, because Bill was the most notorious revolutionary trouble-maker in the crowded slums of East London, and lived with him for three weeks, sleeping on chairs because there were not enough beds, until Bill had discovered the basic principle of MRA, that the troubles of the world begin with ourselves. When one changes his own life he begins to change the world. Bill changed, his neighbors were changed, and now the London police do not have to double their night patrol in West Ham. The city council found a new spirit, hundreds of families found a new unity, and the power to change others.

In Hollywood I met and got to know well such devoted workers for Moral Re-Armament as George Eastman, former president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, one of those whose staff of employees are demonstrating the vital relation of MRA to the world of industry; John Jukes, president of the Vancouver Stock exchange; Gen. C. R. P. Winsor of Great Britain, whose record in the Boer and World wars is well known; Ruth St. Denis, the celebrated dancer; Mildred Powell, city councillor of Seattle; Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary church, New York; Wilber B. Huston, whom many will remember as having won the first Edison prize scholarship; H. W. ("Bunny") Austin, well-known British Davis cup player; and Marion Clayton, motion picture actress.

How It Began.

It has all come about because Frank Buchman, a Pennsylvanian, met some men in Oxford university in 1921, and was able to show them the way to put their lives under God's guidance. Some of them went out from Oxford to carry the message of this new way of life to young men in South Africa. They, in turn, sent some of their number to other countries. The movement snowballed. Leaders of many nations saw in it the solution of national problems, joined and encouraged it. I have seen thousands of letters, telegrams and cables from national leaders and heads of governments acclaiming MRA as the greatest force for good their nations had ever known.

President Roosevelt, Herbert Hoover, almost every governor, scores of senators, hundreds of representatives in congress, thousands of other Americans in public life have joined in endorsement of the efforts of MRA to bring back into American life the spiritual values and outlook upon which our nation was founded. On Frank Buchman's sixtieth birthday 45 members of the British parliament gave him a testimonial dinner, in appreciation of what MRA under his leadership had done for the nation.

Frank Buchman is still the acknowledged leader of the movement which he started, though he has dozens of able lieutenants ready to take over. He has no title. He draws no salary; nor does anybody else working with him; a bachelor, he has not had a home, an office or even a desk of his own for 15 years. He lives in suitcases, mobilized like hundreds of others in the MRA "teams," ready to jump to the ends of the earth at a moment's notice.

Source of Income.

Where does the money come from? Many have asked if there is not an "angel" somewhere in the background, putting up funds. I was convinced before I came back from California that there is no such angel, no pool of funds to be dipped into at will. When the call to service comes, those who have share with those who have not. Nobody active in the work of MRA is allowed to suffer for lack of immediate material necessities, but there is far more giving than receiving. Most of the International Team crossed the oceans in third-class and tourist and traveled across the continent in tourist trains or busses. Others, as occasion demanded, used airplanes and stopped at hotels according to their means.

I have been a newspaper man for 50 years, and have "covered" all the great social and revolutionary movements of my time. Take it from a veteran reporter who knows his way about, there has not been a movement which held so much hope for the future of the world and its peoples as MRA does, not since the Great Teacher laid down its fundamental precepts 2,000 years ago. It is leading more people than ever before to apply those precepts in their daily lives and to find happiness in their practice.

IMPROVED
UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL
SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON
By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D.
Dean of The Moody Bible Institute
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
Lesson for December 3

SPREADING THE GOOD NEWS
LESSON TEXT—Matthew 10:34-39.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let him that heareth say, Come.—Revelation 22:17.
"Bewilderment." That is the word which the president of a great American university recently said accurately described the present condition of the minds of men. Little wonder that the men of the world are bewildered, for they are like mariners who sail an unknown sea after having thrown away map and compass. Without Christ and without God's Word men cannot be anything but bewildered.

That which gives us even greater concern is that many who are Christians, who really know the Guide and who have the Guidebook, are also declaring themselves to be utterly bewildered. What is the reason? Obviously that they have not read the Book and have not talked with their Lord.

Our lesson for the coming Lord's Day touches on one of the problems which causes many Christians to question God's love and care. They find that their efforts to testify for Him by word or life meet with a violent reaction from a bitter world, and they discover that such a life involves personal sacrifice and frequently results in even the members of their own families turning against them. Can this be God's way of dealing with His people? The answer is found in His Word. The Christian is to be

I. Fearless in a Hostile World (vv. 24-28, 32, 33).

Note carefully that he is not to be silent (vv. 32, 33). "We deny our Lord when we fail to speak for Him when we ought to do so. Christianity is not something to be hidden in one's own bosom, a fire to warm one's own soul. It is good news which is to be proclaimed even from the housetops.

But, someone will say, when I do speak there is opposition; they call me names, they threaten to kill me. Yes, and what of it? "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his Lord" (v. 24). They called Jesus a devil. They even crucified Him. Should we then expect to be borne to glory on flowery beds of ease? God knows all about this, yes, even about the hidden and whispered plottings of evil men (v. 25). He will deal with them and judge them in due season.

We need not fear men. The most they can do is to kill the body. Let us consider the eternal God, who not only may take the life out of the body, but is also able to cast both soul and body into hell (v. 28). God is not as a theory, a bit of pious imagination. He is real, He is all-powerful. Why then should we be fearful if we serve Him in faithful devotion?

II. Fearless in Personal Life (vv. 29-31).

It is one thing to be bold in the midst of battle. It is quite another thing to be fearless in the quiet of one's own room, or of one's own heart. Satan is expert at that point. He comes to us with his humiliating accusations of our unworthiness, yes, of our worthlessness. Sadly enough our own knowledge of ourselves confirms his dismal judgment.

But wait! If we are Christians we are not our own. We are bought with a price, the precious blood of Christ. We belong to Him. He is our advocate with the Father. Let Him meet our accuser. What does He say? He tells us that He has numbered the very hairs of our head (v. 30), that even a dying sparrow concerns Him, and that we are worth more than many sparrows (v. 31). We are His and He is our Saviour, Friend and Brother. Let us look up and be without fear.

III. Fearless in the Family Circle (vv. 34-39).

Here, after all, is the acid test of discipleship. Christ did not come in order to stir up needless strife between members of the family, but He well knew that divisions would come as the result of true discipleship. Men who are ordinarily kind and cultured in their dealings with their friends and families but who do not know Christ, can become like veritable demons against any one in that circle who hears the call of Christ and follows Him.

No human tie, no matter how intimate or precious, is to be permitted to stand between the individual and his devotion to Christ. If it does, Christ is evidently no longer first. He is no longer Lord of all in the life, and if He is not Lord of all, He is not Lord at all.

While it seems almost paradoxical to say it, Scripture teaches and experience demonstrates that if you keep your life for yourself and your own interests, it will die in your very hands and you will lose it. If you give your life in glad abandonment to God, on the other hand, you will receive it back from Him transformed, enriched, and glorified by His grace and blessing.

"A Lightning Shave"

HELLO EVERYBODY: Now this is the story of a close shave—the closest shave John Pisano of Clifton, N. J., ever saw in his life. If I'd said it was the closest shave I had ever seen—well—that might not mean anything at all. But when Johnny Pisano says it he speaks with the authority of a man who has been seeing close shaves all his life—and giving them. You see, Johnny is a barber.

Johnny has been a barber for the last 17 years, but he says he'd never had anything exciting happen in his shop until the summer of 1934. And how come Johnny waited until now to tell us that story? Well—you see, Johnny was just a bit skeptical about us. Here's how he explains it:

"My wife," he says, "has been buying your paper ever since we were married, but neither one of us ever believed in contests. We thought they were all faked. Then, my wife tried one and won a prize, so we had to change our minds. Now she wants me to try my luck in your department."

And now let's take a look at Johnny's yarn. He says it wasn't as terrifying as some of the stories he's seen printed in this column because it happened so fast and was all over so soon. But just the same, it was a bird while it lasted, and it left Johnny in such a state of jitters that he didn't want to do any work for the rest of the day.

Back Door to Shop Brings Bad Luck.

Johnny's shop has a front and a back door—the back one leading to a pool room that is no longer used. That back door, Johnny says, is always kept closed in winter, but in the summer when it's warm, he opens it to give the breeze a chance to circulate. Johnny used to keep that back door open all summer long during business hours. Nowadays, though, there are times when he keeps it closed. The minute more than two small clouds appear in the sky together, Johnny shuts it—and it takes a darned good customer to talk him into opening it up again.

Johnny's wife is a little bit afraid of lightning. She had often told him about that door. She said lightning followed a draft, and that he ought to keep the back door closed whenever it began to thunder. But Johnny never paid any attention to her. If he had—well—then he'd never be telling this yarn to us today. And take my word for it, it's the dog-gonest thing that ever happened to any barber while at work at the tonsorial art.

It was along in the afternoon, and the sky was cloudy. There was no one in the shop but Johnny and his helper, and they were thinking about sitting down to a game of checkers until the sky cleared and the customers came out of their holes again. Thunder was rumbling in the distance and coming closer with every rumble. It started to rain—and just as it did, a man came in. He sat down in the first chair and ordered a shave. So Johnny forgot about the checkerboard and began working up a lather in the old shaving cup.

Before the soap had begun to cream up, the storm broke. The rain came down in sheets, and the thunder, which had been a distant rumble before, now sounded like the report of a 16-inch gun going off right alongside your ear. But that didn't bother Johnny. His wife might be afraid of lightning, but he wasn't. He scooped up a big wad of lather on the brush and began rubbing it over his customer's face.

He spread the lather and rubbed it in. His helper was standing at the window, idly watching the water collect in the gutters. There was another crack of thunder—louder and closer than any that had come before. Imperturbably, Johnny finished lathering the man in the chair and picked up his sharpest razor.

Customer Becomes Rigid, Unconscious.

Johnny picked up the razor—brought it down on his customer's face for the first long, sweeping stroke. Then, in the next second, everything in the world happened!

Johnny felt a sudden, numbing sensation in his right arm. A bright light blinded him momentarily, but as it died out a bit, he could see what had caused it. A shower of bright, yellowish sparks COMING OUT OF THE END OF HIS RAZOR.

The next thing Johnny knew, the razor was wrenched from his hand. It fell clattering to the floor. Johnny looked down at his customer. He lay in the chair rigid—stiff—and totally unconscious. And Johnny stood beside him, his face white, his whole body shaking—feeling as if he'd like to pass out himself.

He stood trembling until his helper came and led him to a chair. Then he sat, dazed, while the helper soaked a towel in cold water and applied it to the face of the man in the chair. In a few minutes the customer opened his eyes. He looked around the shop, and then at Johnny sitting in the chair. He sort of looked as if he expected Johnny to finish shaving him—but not for Johnny. For all the rest of that day he couldn't hold a razor in his hand. His helper finished the job he had started.

So now, whenever the sky begins to cloud up, Johnny shuts that back door. And one of the things he and his wife agree most closely on is that little matter of lightning.

Strange Superstitions Surround Foreign 'Wash Days'

To Americans, there isn't much romance in wash day. It rolls around regularly and necessarily without any particular fuss. To people in many foreign lands, however, where wash day happens once a year or so, the business of soaping and rinsing and drying is a real event that is closely linked with the traditions of the past.

Among certain tribes even the day of the week has a special significance. Thus, Tuesdays and Fridays are unlucky for washing, says the Mohammedan from Morocco. Tuesday's wash will shrink, he claims, and the waste water from Friday's laundry may hurt the "jinn" when poured into the drain. Saturday is a bad time, too, for clothes washed on that day will soon become soiled. Of course, a good Moroccan must attend to his own laundry some other day in the week, for according to tradition "he who does not wash his clothes, writes his own letters, or slaughters his own animals is an object of mourning before his own death."

Among some Moroccan tribes, washing is taboo at times of mourning. It is believed that serious consequences will result if anyone in the village uses henna, armony, walnut root, or soap for several days after a death. The nearest relatives of the deceased must refrain from washing their clothes from 15 days to a year depending upon the law of the community. The nearest female relative must abstain from washing her face or clothing until the period of mourning is past. Her neighbors then bathe her, wash her clothes, and make her presentable again.

In pre-revolutionary Russia, the peasant housewife who attempted to cleanse her linen at Whit Sunday deliberately invited bad luck. At this holy time, the water sprites were supposed to have sat in the forest asking for linen to be washed, and woe to the offender.

Night Baseball, 'Fads' Hit by Yankee Chief

By ROBERT McSHANE

EDWARD G. BARROW, president of the New York Yankees, in his latest communique from the baseball front, has evidenced complete disinterest in the many save-the-game-from-oblivion suggestions made by various diamond messiahs. The president of the world champions seems quite well satisfied with things as they are. In fact, he remarked that "Outside of a couple of young pitchers, you can say I'm almost tempted to go along as is."

Returning from a southern vacation, Barrow was emphatic in stating that he is not interested in getting Hank Greenberg from Detroit, in night baseball for the Yankee stadium during the 1940 season, in other "fads" or in breaking up the Yankees or "selling 'em, either."

Barrow believes the Yanks can win their fifth straight pennant without making a single change. A lot of club owners, incidentally, go along with him on this belief. He does admit that the Yanks may have to bolster a bit here and there, but only after winning five straight.

Six-day weeks, night baseball and post-season play-offs or major league Shaughnessy play-offs, were rapidly disposed of by Prexy Barrow. He pointed out that gate receipts for baseball have increased 100 per cent in the past 20 years. Why, then, he asked, go in for any new-fangled ideas? The game has prospered through regularity and dignity. To tinkering with these factors would be dangerous to the welfare of the game.

Lighting a Fad?

He has little fondness for either night baseball or the day-off. "The idea of a six-day playing schedule has nothing particular to recommend it—night baseball is a fad and upsetting to the players, the umpires and to the newspapers, not to mention club officials."

Their fellow-townsmen, the Giants, who had been among the foremost opponents of night baseball, have capitulated. The success the Brooklyn Dodgers have had with night ball, plus the fact that their own attendance fell considerably last year, have made the Giants see the light. Prior to this they not only were opposed to night ball in New York, but were the only National league club that wouldn't play it on the road.

The Giants broke down when they saw the Dodgers' attendance figures. That club played to more than a million customers, and more than 200,000 of them were counted in the seven night games played in Ebbets field. In cash that amounted to $270,000—exactly 270,000 reasons why Master William Terry decided to play ball under the mazdas.

Yanks Can Wait

Terry was the Giants' strongest holdout against night ball. Horace Stoneham, the president, and Leo Bondy, vice president and treasurer, were believed to have been in favor of the innovation.

Barrow isn't pressed by the necessity of installing a lighting system. Other ball clubs may have to resort to artificial devices to drum up box office trade, but the Yanks continue to be one of the most talked of baseball teams in the game's history. As long as they can keep on winning championships they'll get crowds. Barrow knows that, and as a business man is shrewd enough to let other clubs conduct the experiments.

If, as is thought in some quarters, night ball is just a fad, then the Yanks' management will have saved a suitcase full of money. At any rate, the champs are sitting in the golden seat at the present. They can continue to play championship baseball and attract crowds whether they play in the afternoon or at night. And if the experiment for night baseball is still in that stage—proves successful, the Yanks will climb on the kilowatt band wagon.

But Mr. Barrow would do well to remember that the horseless carriage was considered a mere fad long after old Dobbin first ran away at the sight of one.

The Violent Vols

DIKELAND football enthusiasts are calling Major Bob Neyland of Tennessee university the greatest coach since Knute Rockne. And they're terming this year's Volunteers the best team in the proud history of the school.

The 1938 Vols were a great football team. It piled up 276 points against 16 to defeat 18 straight opponents, beating Oklahoma, Big Six champions, 17 to 9, in the Orange Bowl.

This year's record is equally impressive. Jock Sutherland, former Pittsburgh coach, saw the Vols whip Alabama and described them as the nearest thing to a "perfect team" he ever saw.

From 1924 to 1932, seven consecutive years, Tennessee teams missed perfect records by the margin of only one heartbreaking game. The seven year record was marred by two losses and five tie games.

This year, though, Tennessee's schedule wasn't as tough as most of the nation's outstanding teams, no one will deny the Vols the glory that is theirs.

BOWLING Made Easy

By NED DAY National Match Game Champion

(This is the third of a series of bowling lessons by Ned Day of Milwaukee, Wis., national match game champion and recognized as an outstanding bowling authority.)

HOW TO HOLD THE BALL.

There are several styles and each has its own champions. One good thought to keep in mind, however, is to do things as naturally as possible. Try to make each finger do some work in the delivery.

The "non-working" fingers should be spread slightly so they can aid in carrying, delivering and imparting spin to the ball. Practice will help determine your natural grip.

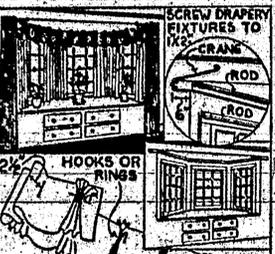

The thumb may be inserted to any depth desired because it is a flexible digit; however, it is not considered advisable to "bury" the thumb to the bottom of the hole. Rather, insert it about three-quarters of the depth of the hole, so that a free release may be executed.

Keep in mind that the secret of a hook ball rests in the principle of releasing the thumb ahead of the fingers—so be sure to use a fairly loose thumb hole and not grip the ball too tightly.

between the top of the windows and the top of the bay made it impossible to hang the draperies as desired. A 1 by 2-inch strip of wood nailed next to the ceiling of the bay and extending 6 inches over the walls at the sides as illustrated will solve the problem.

The cranes for the side drapes may be screwed to this strip, and the rods for the pinch pleated valance fastened to it. The rods for the glass curtains may then be attached in the usual way to the tops of the window frames.

WITH the holidays almost at hand everyone seems to be giving curtains a thought. An enthusiastic reader of Sewing Book No. 3 writes, "I have a bay window in my dining room that has always been a problem to curtain. Right now I would like to make pinch pleated drapes of figured damask to hang from cranes to the floor. I would also like a valance." With this letter all the window dimensions were given. European War Doing More Damage To American Industry Than Good

Some Lines of Business Are Profiting, While Others Are Declining; Efforts to Boost Cotton Exports Fail; American Merchant Marine Affected.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

WNU Service, National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—Although our nation is not mixed up in the European mess, and its people will not permit any administration to drag us in, it strikes me that the war on the other side of the Atlantic already has done a lot of things which ought to be reviewed. There has been much laughter about the "phony" war and the "stidown strike" of the enemy armies, because thus far there has been no real fighting. I do not propose to discuss that phase of the situation. There are some things which have happened and are happening here at home, however, that surely are worthy of consideration.

When steel began to flash abroad, there were thousands, if not millions, of Americans who believed a conflict overseas would pull us out of the depression. Visions of exports amounting to millions of tons were seen by many of the unthinking and misinformed persons. Higher prices—it is hardly necessary to recall how excited some folks got about the prospects of higher prices and there was talk about shortages and all of that sort of thing. There was the usual effort of a certain type of business interests to grab off extraordinary profits. Most of the price hysteria has collapsed and quite a few persons lost their shirts in the speculation to which they turned with the excitement of war talk.

It is true that there are some industries which are profiting from the war. Some, but not very many. Statistics are tiresome, but close examination of them does reveal, in this instance, how thoroughly spotty the anticipated war boom actually is. In my own appraisal of the situation, based on all of the facts I can obtain along with opinions of experts, I have come to the conclusion that the war thus far has done our American business—agriculture, commerce and industry—more damage than it has done good. That is to say, if it were possible to balance the increase due to the war against the further decline in other lines, the total business of the United States would show an actual loss.

Airplane Manufacturers And Rail Lines Benefited

It can be pointed out, for example, that airplane manufacturers are doing a thriving business. They are selling airplanes for war purposes and they are selling them here, as well. Likewise, the official reports show how the industries producing airplane parts and equipment and certain other types of war material are rushing their products through to a finished state.

The rail lines have benefited. Through a stretch of six consecutive weeks, car loadings—an accurate business barometer—have exceeded 800,000 cars for each seven day period, and then dropped off. In this case, car loadings have shown a vast bulk movement but one must examine the commodities hauled to calculate what conditions are. It is to be noted that there were exceedingly heavy shipments of stuff usable in war included in the 800,000 total. A good deal of this had been ordered previously. It could not be sent out until the so-called arms embargo was removed. Experts appear to believe that a large portion of the shipments may not be repeated. At least, not in such quantities. All of which is to say that shipments of normally domestic products, consumer goods, must still be very much below par.

Respecting the market for so-called consumer goods, mention may be made of apples and what a drug they are on the market these days. This may not be the same in all parts of the United States, but it certainly is true in the great apple growing sections of Virginia. One large grower told me that he had not sold a single apple for the British market where he usually is able to ship several hundred carloads in the course of a season. Imports of all fresh fruits have been banned in England.

The industrial conference board, a private organization which is quite accurate in its reports on business conditions and trends, said lately that our exports to Canada are due to fall with a dull thud. In 1933, Canada acquired 69 per cent of all of the things she imported right across the border in the United States. It is to be remembered, too, that about 40 per cent of all exports from the United States in normal years go to Canada.

What Has War Done to American Merchant Marine?

But the situation is changing rapidly. Canada is going industrial as rapidly as she can under the stress and strain of war. Being a part of the British empire, does any one think that the British war office is going to seek supplies in the United States that can be bought in Canada? Obviously not. To show how Canada has developed her capacity to take care of empire requirements, I believe it is necessary only to report that the Canadian industrial capacity was 67 per cent greater in 1937 than 20 years earlier, or in the midst of the World war. The World war started the trend in Canada; the present European war has given it new impetus and the indications are that exports to Canada hereafter will continue to get smaller.

And what has the war done to the American merchant marine?

Our government has spent a good many hundred millions in building ships and in helping private shipping companies to build ships. It has been a policy of subsidy. But about the same time our ships begin to attract attention on the high seas and in international trade, along comes new war conditions and our flag is forced to stay out of the trade routes that produce the greatest revenue because traffic is heaviest. Of course, it is a policy of the administration that has brought this about. President Roosevelt has felt that adoption of a system of selling goods to belligerents upon the docks of this country—come and get it, pay cash and carry it away in your own ships—is wise. Congress agreed with him.

The same legislation provided that no ships flying the American flag may enter what is called combat zones. So, trade in our ships is confined to those nations not engaged in warfare. It happens, however, that the three greatest buyers who use ships (since Canadian exports are largely by rail) are the three nations now fighting in Europe.

Transfer of Ship Registry Raises Stink in Washington

The latest development with respect to the shipping industry is the effort of one of the great shipping companies to transfer the registry of its ships to Panama—to fly the Panama flag. That action, of course, is like changing your own American citizenship and becoming the subject of another nation. It can be done under the law, but it has raised quite a stink in Washington, because this course of action simply circumvents the so-called cash-and-carry law. Under the Panama flag, those ships could sail into war zone ports which they cannot do as long as they fly the Stars and Stripes from their masthead. It does not mean a great deal, I believe, except it shows the influence of the European war. (Incidentally, the fuss about those ships recalls how difficult it is to make a law that will not have loopholes in it or means of getting around it.)

The war in the Far East has upset practically all trade relations between the United States and Japan and China. There is a quantity of exports yet moving in that direction, but I am told by persons who know the facts that when that war is over, Japan will be without any money and her purchases in the United States will be next to nothing for years to come.

Citation of example and trend and opinion could go on quite at length in this situation. Taken all together it seems to be one of the really important things, next to our own unemployment rolls, because it looks from this data as though the United States is face to face with the necessity of a gigantic readjustment. It seems to me the problem cannot be dodged. Changes must come within our own national economy. We will have to learn just what to produce and how much, because I fear that a large chunk of our export market is gone forever.

Our Cotton Exports Are Continuing to Decline

We have witnessed the spectacle of our secretary of agriculture seeking to get our cotton or some other farm product into foreign markets by use of various forms of cash payments to the producers. While he has been passing out checks, our exports have declined and are continuing to decline, and there is nothing that can be done about it. Other folks have learned to grow cotton and they are not going to stop. We cannot control them by a law saying a farmer must plant only so much, or that there must be six million little pigs killed off.

I was asked recently for my own opinion on the outlook for business. My reply was that I disliked making gloomy predictions. Pollyanna stuff is much more pleasant. On the other hand, President Hoover tried hard to get prosperity to come around the corner, and he looked rather ridiculous when he stayed just around the corner through more than nine years up to the present time. Secretary Hopkins, of the department of commerce, is trying now to induce the coy young woman to come around the same corner. His department has been issuing statements about bulges in production and in sales and in shipments. But I could not read the figures the same way the secretary read them.

New 300-Mile Neutrality Zone Extends American 'Boundaries'

'Sovereignty of Seas' Problem Raised in Western Hemisphere.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

A 300-mile "neutrality zone" off the coasts of the Western Hemisphere, and President Roosevelt's statement that American territorial waters extend as far as American interests dictate, call attention to the age-old question of jurisdiction over the sea.

How far outward from its coasts any nation's sovereignty extends has been the subject of argument since a thousand years before the Christian era. In that period Minos, king of Crete, "made himself master of a great part of what is now termed the Hellenic sea," according to the Greek historian, Thucydides.

Today no nation claims absolute control, under ordinary conditions, over any part of the sea more than a few miles from its coasts. Territorial waters of the United States extend out three miles from shore, while some other nations fix the limit as much as six miles out.

The three-mile limit was adopted by the United States and Great Britain toward the close of the Eighteenth century because it represented the maximum cannon range of those days. Today, however, the range of coast defense guns is 20 miles or more.

Although the three-mile limit is generally recognized as the boundary of United States territorial waters, there actually are several other "limits" in existence for special purposes. Treaties between the United States and other nations permit U. S. coast guard cutters to stop and search vessels suspected of smuggling at various distances from shore up to 12 miles. Some treaties also permit suspected smugglers to be stopped within one hour's sailing distance from shore; thus a coast boat might be considered to be outside American territorial waters after traveling only five or six miles, while a fast one might have to go 20 or 25 miles to get beyond the "limit."

Many of these treaties were made during the time of national prohibition of the sale of liquor and were aimed primarily at liquor smugglers. If a vessel is ordered to stop by a coast guard patrol within American territorial waters, and refuses to obey, it may be pursued, stopped and searched even though it succeeds in reaching the high seas. Ships engaged in piracy or the slave trade may be legally stopped anywhere on the high seas by warships or patrol vessels of any nation.

The idea that a nation might exercise legal control over the seas adjacent to its coasts grew out of former attempts of nations or their rulers to claim sovereignty over all the oceans.

The people of Tyre were declared to have "brought the sea under their dominion for a long time, not only the neighboring sea, but wherever their fleets went," and the expression "Tyrian sea" came to mean a body of water over which control was exercised.

The League of Nations once proposed that all countries adopt a uniform limit of six miles from shore for their territorial waters, and that within this area they also would have control over the air above and the soil and subsoil beneath.

Food Allergy Or Appendix? Hard to Tell

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON. WHEN a hurried call is sent to a physician to attend a patient with vomiting and severe abdominal pains, his first thought is likely to be that the condition is appendicitis and, if life is to be saved, immediate operation is necessary. It is certainly a wiser choice to operate than to wait too long and allow the appendix to burst.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

But vomiting spells and severe pains in the abdomen may be due to poisoning by a certain food to which the patient is allergic or sensitive. Instead of sneezing, large hives appearing on the skin, swollen face, thickened tongue and mucous membrane, the food may cause such severe abdominal pains that pus in the gall bladder or in the appendix may be suspected, which conditions require immediate operation.

The symptoms of food allergy may appear on the skin, stomach and intestines, nose and throat, bladder, nerves and elsewhere in the body.

In most cases the patient and family know that food allergy or sensitivity exists because there have been previous attacks of head colds, migraines or one-sided headache, abdominal upset, hives and other symptoms which cleared up promptly with or without treatment by use of adrenalin epinephrine or other remedies.

Nourishing Foods Disagree

I have spoken before of the work on food allergy reported by Drs. Walter Alvarez and H. C. Hinshaw, Mayo clinic, in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The foods that most commonly disagree with people are really among the most nourishing foods eaten. The list in the order in which they cause symptoms in any group are: (1) wheat, (2) chocolate, (3) eggs, (4) milk, (5) beans, (6) peas, (7) potatoes, (8) tomatoes, (9) corn, (10) beef, (11) onion, (12) pork, (13) fish, (14) nuts.

Is there any simple way that one can find out which food is causing the symptoms that so much resemble appendicitis or serious abdominal trouble?

Cod Liver Oil Is 'Bottled Sunshine'

The taking of cod liver oil to build up resistance to colds and other infections is now a well-established custom in many families and preparatory schools. This is especially true during the days when there is not much sunshine. Cod liver oil is sometimes called "bottled sunshine."

A few years ago surgeons found that in old injuries to bone, where infection was present, scraping away the dead bone and tissue and filling the space with cod liver oil brought about more rapid healing. This cod liver oil treatment for old wounds is now a recognized procedure in many countries.

A still further use for cod liver oil in what may be called a "surface" infection is recorded by Dr. I. A. Manville, Portland, Ore., in Northwest Medicine. One of the mean and persistent afflictions is ulcerative colitis, an ulcerated condition of the large intestine or colon. There is alternating diarrhea and constipation with pus and blood, symptoms which resemble cancer, as there is also the loss of weight. Treatment by injections of boric acid and other preparations bring disappointing results in many cases.

Manville's Method.

Dr. Manville devised a method of applying the cod liver oil to the lining surface of the last two or three feet of the large intestine (colon). The apparatus is composed of an ordinary paint gun as used in applying paint by the spray method. The only difference is that the nozzle is especially designed so that the tip will barely protrude beyond the end of the sigmoidoscope—the instrument which dilates or widens the last few inches of the bowel for examination purposes. The air pressure is adjusted by the use of an air pressure reduction gauge so that it is barely sufficient to deliver a spray at the top of the nozzle. After preparing the patient with a cleansing enema, the sigmoidoscope is inserted full length, the nozzle of the spray gun placed in position, and the pressure released. The entire apparatus is slowly withdrawn, thus leaving a thin coat of cod liver oil applied directly to the lining surface of the lower bowel.

The patients treated by this method, though not large in number, have been distinctly benefited.

Tiny Islands Near Estonia Are Coveted

Soviet Forces Allowed to Occupy Saare and Hiiuma.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Two little-known, but historic islands, Saare and Hiiuma, that guard the west coast of little Estonia, suddenly have leaped into news prominence with the Russian-Estonian agreement permitting Soviet forces to occupy the islands.

Saare and Hiiuma together are only half again as large as the tiny Duchy of Luxembourg, and practically unknown to the world at large; but these two low, flat islands are of tremendous strategic importance in the politically stormy Baltic sea.

Saare and Hiiuma are only a few score miles from the coast of the important Baltic points. They stand just south of the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, across which Tallinn, capital of Estonia, and Helsinki, capital of Finland, face each other only 80 miles apart.

Just 150 miles to the west across the Baltic is Sweden's capital, Stockholm. About 100 miles to the northwest are Finland's Aaland islands, which Finland and Sweden recently suggested should be fortified. The Aalands guard the entrance to the Gulf of Bothnia, the northward-stretching arm of the Baltic, between Sweden and Finland.

MAP SHOWS location of the two tiny islands, Saare and Hiiuma, that guard the west coast of little Estonia. These islands are now occupied by Soviet forces and are of great strategic importance in the Baltic sea.

1,000 square miles in area, and Hiiuma about 300. Both have forests, interspersed with rough pasture and farm land. The highest point on Hiiuma is 223 feet, and on Saare only 88 above sea level. Saare somewhat finds room for several lakes and small rivers within its narrow confines.

Meteorite Iron Fragments. Several small craters on Saare, with fragments of meteorite iron scattered about, give evidence that sometime in the remote past several meteorites of considerable size fell from the sky upon this obscure corner of the world. Apparently the craters were formed when the fragments, exploded upon striking the ground.

Saare's chief claim to fame consists of its therapeutic mud baths, which were patronized by the royal family of Russia in the old days of the czars. The mud, taken from the shallow seas off the coast, is reported to be radioactive and contains various ingredients declared to be helpful for rheumatism and other ailments.

Jane smiled at him with her chin tilted in her bird-like way. She was really having the time of her life. She was thrilled and fascinated by the beauty of her surroundings, and gradually Frederick began to take on something of the fascination.

"After dinner they sat in the great drawing-room—a portentous place—with low-hung crystal chandeliers—pale rugs—pale walls—with one corner redeemed from the general chilliness by a fireplace of yellow Italian marble, and a huge screen of peacock feathers in a mahogany frame.

"I call this room the Ice Palace," Frederick told her. "Mother furnished it in the early eighties—and she would never change it. And now I rather hate to have it different. I warmed this corner with the fireplace and the screen. Edith always sits in the library on the other side of the hall, but Mother and I had our coffee here, and I prefer to continue the old custom."

Jane's eyes opened wide. "Don't you and your niece drink your coffee together?"

"Usually, but there have been times," he laughed as he said it, "when each of us has sat on opposite sides of the hall in lonely state."

Jane laughed too. "Baldy and I do things like that."

"Really?" Adelaide Laramore was appraising Jane. A shabby child. From the threshold she had had a moment of jealousy. But the moment was past. Frederick was extremely fastidious. He adored beauty and this Barnes child was not beautiful.

Jane was unfastening the earrings. "Aren't they heavenly, Mrs. Laramore?"

"The sapphires?" Mrs. Laramore sat down on the couch. Her evening wrap slipped back, showing her white neck. Her fair hair was swept up from her forehead. She had a long face, with pink cheeks and pencilled eyebrows. She was like a porcelain doll, and she knew it, and emphasized the effect. "The sapphires? Yes. They're the choice of the lot."

She went on to speak of Eloise. "She is simply hopeless. She has told the most hectic tales and all the papers have sent men out to the Inn."

"Well, they escaped. They started early and have been hung up at Alexandria."

"Eloise and Benny and the Captain dined with me. She was still in a classic coiffure, was like some radiant witch, exultant of evil. "You mustn't scold me, Frederick. It was terribly exciting to tell them, and I adore excitement."

"They aren't there."

"Where are they?"

Frederick chanted composedly. "We three know . . . but we will never tell."

"Adelaide will, when I get her alone."

"I will not."

"Then Miss Barnes will. Do you know how young you look, Miss Barnes? I feel as if you'd tell me anything for a stick of candy."

They roared at that. And Jane said, "Nobody ever made me do anything I didn't want to do."

And now Benny and the Captain looked at her, and looked again. What a voice the child had, and eyes!

Eloise, on the couch, hugged her knees and surveyed her gold slippers. "They are putting my picture in the paper and Adelaide's. They saw one on my desk—"

Mrs. Laramore cried out, "Benny, why did you let her do it? And there was a great uproar—in which Eloise could be heard saying:

"And they are going to have a picture of the Inn, and one of your brother, if they can get it, Miss Barnes."

Jane began to feel uncomfortable. She was, she told herself, as much out of place as a pussy-cat in a Zoo. These women and these men reminded her somehow of the great sleek animals who snarled at each other in the Rock Creek cages. Frederick did not snarl. But she had a feeling he might if Eloise kept at him much longer.

It was in the midst of the hubbub that Edith entered. She walked in among them as composedly as she had faced them at the Inn.

"Hello," she said. "You sound like a jazz band." She went straight up to Frederick and kissed him. "I suppose Eloise is shouting the news to the world." She tucked her hand in his arm. "There are more than a million reporters outside. Mr. Barnes is keeping them at bay."

"Where did they find you?"

"Heard of us, I suppose, at the Alexandria hotel. We didn't realize it until we reached here, and then they piled out and began to ask questions."

Frederick lifted her hand from his arm. "I'll go and send them away."

Eloise jumped up. "I'll go with you."

And then Frederick snarled, "Stay here."

But neither of them went, for Baldy entered, head cocked, eyes alight—Jane knew the signs.

"They've gone," he said. "I told you I'd get rid of them, Miss Towne."

He nodded to them all. Absolutely at his ease, lifted above them all by the exaltation of his mood. Finer, Jane told herself, than any of them—his beautiful youth against their world-weariness.

Edith was smiling at Jane. "I knew you at once. You are like your brother."

They were alike. A striking pair as they stood together. "It is because of Mr. Barnes and his sister that we got in touch with Edith," Frederick explained. He had regained his genial manner.

"Oh, really?" Adelaide knew that she and her friends ought to go at once. Edith looked tired, and Eloise at moments like this was impossible. But she hated to leave anyone else in the field. "Can't I give you a lift?" she asked Jane, sweetly, "you and your brother."

But it was Frederick who answered. "Miss Barnes lives at Sherwood Park. Briggs will take her out."

So Adelaide went away, and Eloise and the two men, and Edith turned to her uncle and said, "I'm sorry."

Her face was white and her eyes were shining, and all of a sudden she reached up her arms and put them about his neck and sobbed as if her heart would break.

And then, and not until then, little Jane knew that Edith was not like one of the animals at the Zoo.

In Jane's next letter to Judy she told her how the evening with the Townes had ended. And that she had invited the Townes and Follettes for tea the next afternoon.

When she had written the last line, Jane sat very still at her desk. She was thinking of Evans. She hadn't seen him for three days. Not since the Sunday night she had gone to the Townes. That night in the fog had impressed her strangely. She had felt for Evans something that had nothing to do with admiration for him nor respect nor charm. His weakness had drawn her to him, as a mother might be drawn to a child. His struggle was, she felt, something which she must share. Not as his wife! No. That kind of love was different. It only he would let her be his little sister, Jane.

He had not even called her up. When she had invited him and his mother to tea with the Townes, Mrs. Follette had answered, and had accepted for both of them. Evans, she said, was in Washington, and would be out on the late train.

When he arrived ahead of the others on the afternoon of her tea, Jane said, "Where have you been? Do you know it has been four days since we've seen each other?"

"Weren't you glad to get rid of me? I've thought of you every minute." He dropped into a seat beside her.

She was gazing at him with lively curiosity. "How nice you look."

"New suit. Like it?"

"Yes. And you act as if somebody had left you a million dollars."

"Wish he had. I bought this outfit with a first edition 'Alice in Wonderland,'" he laughed and explained. "I've been getting rid of some of our rare books. I feel plutocratic in consequence. Five hundred dollars, if you please, for that old Hogarth, with the scathing Ruskin inscription. And I'm going to open an office, Jane."

"In Washington?"

"On Connecticut Avenue. Same building, same room, where I started."

"Evans, how splendid!"

"Yes. You did it, Jane."

"I? How?"

"The night of the fog. I never realized before what a walking-stick I've been—leaning on you. Henceforth you're the Lady of the Lantern. It won't be so fatiguing."

He was smiling at her, and she smiled back. Yet quite strangely and inconsistently, she felt as if in changing his attitude towards her, he had robbed her of some privilege. "I didn't mind being a walking-stick."

"Well, I minded. After this I'll walk alone. And I'm going to work hard, and play around a bit. Will you have tea with me tomorrow, Jane? At the Willard? To celebrate my first tottering steps."

She agreed, eagerly. "It will be like old times."

"Minus a lot, old lady."

That was the way he had talked to her years ago. The plaintive note was gone.

"Take the three-thirty train and I'll meet you. I'll pay for the taxi with what's left of 'Alice.'"

"Don't be too extravagant."

young-lady. In private life she's all set to marry Vaughn Paul as soon as she's legally of age. And Jane Withers and Edith Fellowes kept right on acting, very successfully.

For those who don't do it, the awkward age is a tragedy. They have years of drawing down huge salaries, then suddenly the money stops, and all that they can do is to wait—and face the prospect of not being able to score a second success, when they are ready to work again.

Edward Small plans to bring to the screen a number of the world's greatest stories, but so far he seems to have found a gold mine in the works of Alexandre Dumas, and the other great writers will have to wait until he gets around to them. Small rang the bell with "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "The Man in the Iron Mask," and now he announces that he's going to screen "The Corsican Brothers," the principal characters of which are a pair of Siamese twins.

It seems safe to predict that even people who haven't liked Greta Garbo in her other pictures will be delighted with her in "Nimotchka." It's a delightful comedy, perfectly directed by Ernst Lubitsch, presenting a Garbo who is an enchanting comedienne. Melvyn Douglas and Ina Claire give excellent performances, the rest of the cast is good.

It's grand news that Connie Boswell is walking once more. The gallant little star of radio and movies was crippled in an accident when she was a child, and for years she went everywhere in a wheel chair. People wanted to stand up and cheer when she arrived at a football game or a theater—it put new heart into them, to see how gallantly she carried on in spite of what, to most of us, would be an unconquerable handicap.

With her sisters, Martha and Vet, she made a name for herself on the stage and on the air. Since her sisters married, a few years ago, she has continued by herself, and has made a new record for a woman singer in the number of her recordings that have been sold.

She can walk now—only a few steps, it's true, but a few steps mean a lot when you haven't been walking at all. She can swim, and ride a horse. First thing you know, she'll be dancing.

Arlene Harris, the "Human Chatterbox" of the air, had a handicap to overcome, too, but she was too young at the time to realize it. For the first three years of her life she didn't talk; when her parents consulted physicians they learned that she was deaf as well.

A trip to Vienna and an operation cured the deafness, and from then on she could talk. "I've been making up for lost time ever since," she says—and the way she shatters on the Al Pears programs every Wednesday night proves it.

ODDS AND ENDS—Cal Tinney, producer of "Youth vs. Age" says that most of the applicants to appear on his program come from elderly people. . . . Campfire Girls, Girl Scouts Like Nature Study

"Smaller than a robin—gray, a black cap, a black chin. What is it? A chickadee, of course."

"A flag of Belgium on each wing, from the cattail hear him sing! What is it? A red-winged blackbird, as any Camp Fire girl or Girl Scout who has followed nature trails at the Cleveland Museum of Natural History will tell you, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Guided by the animal highway charts, they go from bats to butterflies. They play a game with the charts, and find out what kind of an animal a mouse is, or a grasshopper or a snake."

Or they go to the insect room on the second floor and learn the eight orders of insects, count insect legs and discover that "an insect is an animal without bones and has six jointed legs." Perhaps they go to the taxonomic room and learn that "some trees, like some people, are easy to tell by their shapes." Or perhaps they visit the rock room and discover a few of the elements of which minerals are made.

Then they go to the Hanna star dome on the second floor and sit on the floor in group of 25. When they are able to point it and name seven constellations, seven stars.
