Democrats Last Night

A flock of Democratic candidates and associates descended upon our town about noon yesterday, and met many of our people during the afternoon and were given the glad hand by many of our citizens irrespective of party. The candidates were Congressman John Morrow, for reelection, Attorney General Robert C. Dow, for Governor, Mrs. Georgia Lusk, for Superintendent of Public Instruction, Colonel George W. Prichard, a Republican, and a man well known in Lincoln county, and who enjoys a long and intimate acquaintance with the electorate, was with the party, campaigning with it and speaking against the Republican state administration, especially Governor Dillon.

At night a large crowd gathered at the court house and gave rapt attention to every address. Bob Dow, the first speaker, dealt with state affairs almost exclusively; gave instances of extravagance on the part of the Republican administration, in many of the departments, and reiterated the published charge of the enormous increase in the tax rate under the Dillon administration. His remarks were straight, telling and to the point, and made with a knowledge of what he was talking about.

Mrs. Lusk made a very pleasing talk, dealing wholly with school matters. Her talk showed she possessed a clear knowledge of school affairs, and must have convinced her audience that she would make an excellent official, and that her supervision of the schools would bring about a great and needed improvement of the schools of the state.

Congressman Morrow made the most extended address of the evening, as was to be expected, for he had to cover many matters of federal action in which New Mexico was interested. He reviewed the congressional legislation that had been enacted for the people of the state, and the active part New Mexico senators and its congressman took in the enactment of those measures. He closed with a ringing tribute to Governor Smith, the popular Democratic presidential nominee.

Colonel Prichard came next, and he began by announcing his adherence to Republicanism, but explained quite fully, succinctly and definitely why he was campaigning with and for the Democrats, and why he was fighting the Holoman-Dillon ring and all others who wore "rings in their noses," and in his inimitable manner uncovered the extravagance, failure of Dillon, et al. to make their boasts of a "business administration" good and the radical raise in taxation brought down the house many times, and still laughable as they were there was an abiding conviction that the Colonel knew whereof he spoke, and he had the record behind him. It was an innovation, provoking mirth on the part of the Democrats, gloom on the faces of the Republicans. The speaker showed he was acquainted with the conditions at Santa Fe, and had the hardihood to fly in the face of his party organization and tell the people of New Mexico what was going on. The address was convincing—because it was supported by the record—and needed only to be heard to be appreciated.

Announcement

I hereby announce my candidacy for Representative of the 16th District, as the Democratic nominee, and respectfully solicit the support of the voters of Lincoln county.

Mrs. James Kavanaugh.

How Far From "Business" To Bankruptcy?

Before the last election the Republican party promised the people of New Mexico that if they were put into office they would give you a businesslike and economical administration. In a scant two years they have practically doubled the state tax levy, raising it from 3.4 mills to 5.8 mills.

This increase in taxes makes the people of New Mexico pay to the Republican party $762,001.37 more each year than was required to conduct the government under previous Democratic administrations. This increase does NOT include the increased gasoline tax, and does not take into consideration the fact that we are saddled with a burden of interest on money borrowed, and our future taxes mortgaged to pay off the principal.

Republican increases in appropriations amount to a sum of $375,000 annually. This is just a little more than half of the increased taxes, yet the administration faces a deficit at the end of the fiscal year. What has become of the other half of the money we have had to pay? We didn't have to pay it under Hinkle or Hannett, and even the slick publicity writers of the Republicans can hardly tell us why we should have to pay them.

Vote the Democratic ticket this fall, put in Bob Dow to say NO to grafters and hangers-on, and return New Mexico to sanity and safety in government!

DEMOCRATIC STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

Methodist Pastor Resigns Over Politics

Newport, Ky., Sept. 29—Because "the long adhered to policy—the separation of church and state—is being trampled under foot by the church's entrance into this political campaign to defeat Governor Smith," the Rev. Carl Schaben Friday offered his resignation as pastor of the Grace church here.

His resignation was addressed to the Kentucky conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, Corbin, Kentucky.

Badly Scalded

The baby-boy of Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Rowland received very serious burns yesterday, from a fall into a tub of hot water. The baby's arm, side and leg were badly scalded and suffered greatly as a result. The little sufferer's injuries were given immediate attention and he will overcome the burns, and, fortunately, his face and hand will not bear any disfiguring marks.

"Run fast!" he hissed. "To the water-gate!"

Pontiac's voice thundered a command. The Onondaga muttered:

"The Ottawa chief tells his children to watch the gates and the stockade and kill anyone trying to get out."

Once outside the lodge and we were in darkness. Thirty yards away and we had lost ourselves in a wild crowd of savages. But as we pressed on Pontiac's stentorian voice gradually reached an intelligence here and there; and from different points and in all the dialects of the northern and Ohio tribes, the word was passed to guard the stockades and gates.

"Take the man Boland alive!" roared a voice; and I know that Beauvais at last had connected my identity up with my French name and that Beauvais now understood all.

"Why this way?" I asked the Onondaga as we reached the stockade on the river front.

"Stand on my shoulders, white brother, and go over," he directed.

"There's the witch-woman—"

"She's on the other side. Shall we join her, or face about and die like chiefs?"

I scrambled to his shoulders and went to the top of the timber. I reached down a hand, but scolding assistance found Paw swarmed over the barrier. The two of us dropped to the ground within a few feet of the river.

It was very dark and I was completely bewildered.

"This way, mister," called a low voice.

The Onondaga dragged me after him. My hand rested on a canoe.

"Who's there?" I whispered.

"Daughter of witches," was the half-laughing, half-sobbing reply. "But please don't stop to talk, mister."

It was time I scrambled into the canoe, for a chorus of yells was now raised on the other side of the stockade and only a few feet away. I tripped over a rifle as the Onondaga pushed the light craft into the current. I picked it up and found it familiar to my hands.

"Whose rifle is this?" I whispered.

"Hush!" cautioned the girl. Then proudly, "It's yours. I was at the door when the trouble began. I reached in and took it when Mr. Beauvais commenced calling you a spy."

"Talk will kill us," grunted the Onondaga as he pushed a paddle into my hands and began working desperately to reach the slack water along the opposite bank. His warning was timely for I could hear the pop, pop of heavy bodies dropping over the stockade. There came an explosion of mad rage that made my heart wince. The Onondaga proudly informed us:

"They have found Little Wolf in the lodge. I crept under the wall and shot him with his own arrow. He made a choking noise. The Wolf man thought some of those outside would know the truth. There was Pontiac. He talks with ghosts and they tell him secrets. It was he who told Little Wolf to kill me. Pontiac saw me at Detroit and knew my heart was warm for the English. Little Wolf was to shoot me through the hole in the rebar when I danced by. If my white brother had not been in danger, I should have shot Pontiac after telling him to march by with the others."

"They are over the wall; they will take canoes and follow us!" I warned.

"Mister, I spoiled all the canoes. I could find before going to the house where you was eating. They can't catch us with boats."

"You have done well, little woman. What does Round Paw do now?"

"We were at the opposite shore."

"We will go up the river instead of down," he answered. "They will think we went down to the Ohio. If the man Beauvais had not come we would have shown them some new magic."

"You know about Beauvais?" I asked Round Paw.

"The witch-woman told me. She asked my help. She waited outside the house to stop Beauvais from seeing you. It was the witch-woman who said we would leave by water. She was to be outside the stockade by the water-gate. She has a very strong medicine."

"So it was you who saved me, little woman," I said to her.

"Lor's sake! Don't believe nothing that Injun tells you. He saved you, not me. And now I can't go to Canada."

"Wait until after the war, it will be a short war," I told her, little realizing my fallibility as a prophet.

"We must leave the river before the first light," spoke up the Onondaga. "Pontiac will lead the chase. He is a very great man. He knows we took to water. He will send men along both shores to find where our trail leaves the river. He will throw many men between us and Braddock. If the witch-woman takes to the air and flies like a bird, then Round Paw and his brother can walk slowly and laugh at the wild Ottawas."

He was disappointed when I said him the girl could not fly like a bird and that any plans we made must include her. I told him of my efforts to shield Allaquippa's village from attack and expressed my fear that Beauvais would now do the thing I had convinced him he should not do. This furnished the Onondaga with a double errand to the Delaware village; he must warn the woman sachem and tell Cromit to carry my warning to the army that the Turtle Creek route, though rough, would be free from successful ambushes.

"You will take the same talk, but separate from the bonebreaker," I added. "The woman and I will leave you at the mouth of Turtle creek and follow it up for a bit and seek the army in that direction. Surely one of the three of us men will take the talk through to Braddock."

CHAPTER VIII

Our Orendas Are Strong

Half a mile below the mouth of Turtle creek the Monongahela grew very shallow with scarcely more than a ripple of water in places. The three of us held a brief conference and decided that Round Paw should take the canoe to the western bank and make Allaquippa's town afloat. The girl and I waded to the eastern shore.

"Set Me Down! Set Me Down!"

We left the river in the first gray light of morning and ran swiftly, the girl's thin face revealing her determination not to hinder my progress by any display of weakness; and as we ran she spied out the country ahead while I kept watch over our back-track. Every time I glanced behind me I fully expected to behold a dithering form of a savage. We arrived at Turtle creek, a short distance above its mouth, without hearing the Indians' cry of discovery.

We forded the creek and paused for a minute for her to rest. Our breathing spell was terminated by a faint halloo. The voice came from far off, and as it was not repeated we did not agree as to the direction. The girl insisted it was north of us, while my ears placed it as coming from the northwest, at about the point on the Monongahela where we had abandoned the canoe. Thankful it was not ahead of us we resumed our flight.

We had not proceeded more than fifty rods before the girl, who was in the lead, gave a little cry and came to a halt.

"Where?" I whispered, glancing about to find what had alarmed her. "Among the bramble-bushes," she faintly replied, pointing her short rifle toward a thicket and pressing a hand to her side.

I saw it and directed:

"Go ahead a bit and wait for me."

It was no slight even for a border-bred woman to behold unless girls necessarily compelled. After she had passed on I examined the dead man. He had been shot through the body and scalped. He was a Frenchman, for he wore the white uniform with black facings that distinguished the uniforms from the troops of the line, whose facings were blue. As the buzzards had not commenced to gather it was plain he must have met death twelve hours back, or in the evening. An ax was tightly gripped in the right hand and there was a gash in the handle where another blade had struck. In the darkness he and his assailant had fought blindly.

I overtook the girl, who was standing before a thick tangle of pea-vines and trailers. When I would have taken the lead in striking this barrier, she motioned me to wait. Time was too precious to wait, but before I could say as much I heard a faint cry.

"I knew I heard it," she muttered. "But 't is only the howl of a wolf."

"Indian lungs are behind that howl," I told her. "It's up the creek."

"You think a Injun made it, mister?"

The howl was repeated and sounded clearer.

"I'm positive," I said. "As if to guarantee the certainty of my words the signal was answered on our left and again from the direction of the river."

"They are close after us," I whispered. "They're calling to each other to meet on this creek. They'll find our trail. There's but one way open; we must double back by the Frazier cabin, and, if sighted before we enter the forest below it, we can take shelter there and try to stand them off till night."

"If we can find the cabin, we can make a good fight," she stoutly declared.

John Frazier, trader and blacksmith, was a staunch supporter of the English. He had served the colonies more than once as an interpreter, and before coming to the mouth of Turtle creek had lived for twelve years at Venango, or until driven out by the French in 1753. He had been of assistance to Colonel Washington in 1754 and was commissioned a lieutenant in Trent's command when it was instructed to fortify the forks of the Ohio.

"I can find the cabin easy enough," I assured her, and we swung out from the creek and doubled back. As we ran we could hear the "wolves" howling from three points of the compass their signals sounding clearer each minute and proving that several bands would soon come together at the creek. I began to doubt the wisdom of proceeding farther toward the cabin. I feared we would be cut off and surrounded. To turn our backs to the creek and plunge through the dense forest and trust our lives to our legs appeared as being the best plan.

"Are you able to keep going all day through the forest?" I asked her.

"I am very tired," she confessed. "It's so long since I had a good sleep, mister. There was last night—"

"I know," I broke in, for time was all too short. "You couldn't do it."

A glance at her plucked face told me she was fairly exhausted. And in our haste to make good time we had in spots left signs the savages could easily follow at a run.

"The cabin it must be," I said and trying to speak cheerfully, "Frazier will have plenty of powder and bullets. Perhaps some spare trade guns!"

"You could make it alone through the woods to the army," she said, her words coming in jerks.

"I can make it no faster than you can."

"I'm thinking you're telling a lie, mister," she gravely rebuked, but resumed running.

"A quattering cry up the creek made my skin prickle.

"Hang on to your rifle," I ordered as I seized her and threw her over my shoulder, holding her with one arm and carrying my own gun in my left hand. With a fine spurt of speed I covered several hundred yards. She began kicking and squirming, and demanded:

"Set me down! Set me down! You'll get us both killed!"

I did as she requested, not because I was too weary to carry her farther but because her rifle was swinging wildly and striking the bushes and leaving a trail an ox could follow.

Many Old Cloisters in City of London

Ancient cloisters, or parts of them, are still to be found in many parts of London; they are reminders of the days when the city boasted spacious monastic establishments.

In St. Bartholomew-the-Great at Smithfield—relic of a wealthy priory—are some bays of the old cloister. A Zeppelin bomb in 1918 helped to reveal a further portion of this buried under the present ground level.

Cloisters in miniature, with wooden archings, may be seen at My place, adjoining the chapel—all that remains of the palace of the bishops of Ely. The cloister-garth is planted with trees.

St. Paul's has only a few fragments of its old cloisters. They were destroyed with the fabric of old St. Paul's in 1806. It is at Westminster abbey that you may see the finest cloisters in London. Besides the Great Cloisters there are the Little Cloisters, where the monks' infirmary once stood, and the Dark Cloister that leads to the Norman undercroft.

Paint Top and Bottom
In order to last, shaves should be protected with paint or varnish on the bottom as well as the top and sides. Decay is no respecter of surfaces, and will attack and wear away one side as well as another. Therefore, it is best to paint or varnish the entire shaver as soon as it is put up.

HISTORY IS TAUGHT BY MUMMY FAMILY

Scientists Study Remains of Ancient Egyptians.

Detroit.—A family of Egyptian mummies 3,000 years dead are teaching history to a little group of studious Detroiters.

They are telling curious and amazing things about themselves and others of their kind, who walked the earth ten centuries before the beginning of the Christian era, relating strange facts, revealing long sought mysteries, bringing to life again a splendid civilization that vanished generations ago.

Dr. S. Edward Sanderson, Detroit physician, and Benjamin March, curator of Asiatic arts in the Detroit Museum of Art, have joined forces in the study of the mummies. Doctor Sanderson has called upon the X-ray to aid him in his search for further knowledge of these silent spokesmen of the past and March brings a complete and thorough knowledge of the artistic side of ancient Egypt, to aid in the undertaking.

Possibilities Endless.

This is an exceedingly novel and original experiment and both men insist that they have accomplished very little in spite of their intensive studies. Both believe, however, that the possibilities of the venture are endless, and express the hope that something of great value may some day come out of the undertaking.

"If we are to know and understand the men and women of the present, we must know something of those who lived in the past," Doctor Sanderson says. "If we took away all the knowledge we have acquired from our study of dead races and vanished peoples we would be very ignorant indeed."

"Egyptian mummies are especially interesting to study because Egypt was the great melting pot 3,000 years ago. We can prove this reality. The old Egyptian was a masterful man."

"Some of the mummies are so perfectly preserved that it is still possible to detect the presence of food in the stomachs of the children and to tell something of their diet. We find grains, an old form of millet and delicate bits of young mice."

Two passive bodies lie still and quiet upon the dissecting tables in the art museum but even in their silence and immobility they give up many secrets in response to the prying of skilled scientific fingers, the searching eye of powerful X-ray machines.

Brain Tissues Removed.

March describes the procedure of an Egyptian burial. The embalming of the body so perfectly that today, after the lapse of centuries, the bones, the muscles and sometimes the skin are to be seen. The vital organs were removed and placed in four canopic jars, each guarded by its particular god and so placed that it would be easy for the whole body to reassemble itself when the time came to enter into a new life.

The X-ray has accomplished one thing of definite value. It has demonstrated the method by which the brain tissues were removed from the head without breaking the skull. Tiny borings through the nostrils are now believed to have freed the brain substances which were placed in their designated canopic jars.

It has long been assumed by many scientists that this was the method, but it needed the X-ray to reveal it in undisputed actuality. The X-ray plates which demonstrate this method will be loaned to the University of Michigan for class room study.

Holland Turning From Wind to Electricity

The Hague.—Electricity is playing a rapidly increasing part in the industrial life of Holland, as it is being found that, in spite of their picturesque character, windmills are falling very much behind in their output capacity. The capital for financing conversions from wind power to electrical power and for creating electrical power for other purposes is not always available and, therefore, an international finance corporation has been founded, with a capital of 10,000,000 florins, at Amsterdam. The holders of this capital are Phoehl and Gutmann and Teislers de Mattos of Amsterdam; Chase Securities corporation and Speyer & Company of New York; Dresden bank and Darmstadter and National bank of Berlin, and Hambros bank, London.

Activity will not be restricted to Holland, although the idea and the central organization have originated here, but will be spread wherever there is need of capital for electrical enterprises. It is possible that shares in electrical undertakings will be purchased, but the chief aim is to be able to supply loan capital of either a permanent or temporary character.

Howe's Hair Sold

Ticonderoga, N. Y.—A lock of hair, preserved as a memento of Lord Howe, who was killed near here, has been purchased by S. H. P. Fell and placed on exhibition in the museum of old Fort Ticonderoga. The lock was divided among the officers of Lord Howe's regiment, but was later collected by William Lapree, quartermaster of the regiment, from a descendant, of whom it was purchased by Fell.

Dame Fashion Smiles

By Grace Jewett Austin

"Well," remarked the authority, meditatively, "there is a distinct cheerfulness in the patterns for the printed velvets of the present season. And those fascinating little dots in the skirt line, don't forget those."

Grace J. Austin.

Ever since Dame Fashion learned about one of the loveliest brides she ever knew having a "peacock train" on her wedding gown, that word "peacock" has been running in her head. And now you watch with Dame Fashion and see if you do not find that peacock motif in many one of the new styles. There will be evening capes that will float out with the pretty encircling of the spread peacock tail. There is a promise of dipping drapery at the back of many a gown this winter. Do you approve of calling them "fish tails?" Dame Fashion certainly does not. They are altogether too pretty. So why shouldn't they be "folded-peacock-tail" trains?

It is akin to the peacock idea to think of the all-feather hats which are increasingly good this fall. There isn't an inch of anything visible on them except coque feathers, and they are in black or tan.

Always, if there is a chink of time, Dame Fashion delights in listening to whatever she may learn at a button counter. Probably about a million women, back in the summer, when they saw the picture of the victorious Helen Wells, the tennis champion, arriving from Europe, wearing a stylish beret for a hat, with a pretty fox scarf hanging on her arm, and her one-piece tweed frock having as its only adornment a close row of buttons all down the left side, resolved that one of these days they would have just such a gown.

The more Dame Fashion studies the history of fashions, the more respect she gets for Queen Elizabeth. Such a lot of clothes doling date right back to her time, and yet are still in effect today. But then a period that could produce a Shakespeare would be a poor thing if it didn't do something memorable in the costume line. At any rate they say the buttonhole was invented in Queen Elizabeth's day, and that before her time, while many buttons were used, they were just held to be ornaments; rosettes of gold, silver, or even of cloth, sewed on where most effective.

"But, Dame Fashion," put in an objector, "then we have gone back of Queen Elizabeth's time, for aren't buttons now mostly for ornament? And don't you warrant there was a good, sensible row of patent hooks on the under edge of Helen Willis' button row, down to the waistline, or perhaps below it?" And Dame Fashion, adorer as she is of Queen Elizabeth, could not deny it.

The tendency of the showings seems to be toward the molded form of the nineties. One designer shows many costumes with the demure and ultra feminine line of molded or basque bodice and nearly ankle-length skirt draped to sempanniers on the sides or drawn back to fullness and the suggestion of a bustle in back.

The black street suit, of slick finished broadcloth, worn with a white sailor, high-collared blouse, promises to make a strong bid for favor. It sometimes has a matching long coat, making an ensemble costume.

Showing a very handsome coat for the fall season. It is made of manuve chiffon velvet and is trimmed with abalone for collar and cuffs.

Transformed From Day to an Evening Dress

In these days of multiple activities it is well to have a dual dress that will serve for more than one occasion says the Woman's Home Companion. This frock, for instance, may be worn in the afternoon or evening for the sleeves are made on a gumpie that is removed easily if you stay in town for dinner and the theater. Not only is it simply transformed from a day to an evening dress but it is easy to make. The frock itself is straight with set-on ruffles which are cut square so there are no seams and no shaping. The tassels, which are newer than bows, are a Paris origination made of plaited material.

Brilliant Sports Duds Offset Sombre Shades

The new season is to be a black-and-tan one in so far as it is possible to generalize on color tendencies in the clothes Paris dressmakers are showing. Black and brown might be a more accurate description, since coats and dresses for daytime are more apt to be black or some shade of brown than anything else. Offset against this basic principle is a vogue of brilliant sports apparel. Modernistic sweaters are gay with red, green, white, yellow, brown and many shades of blue.

Cinnamon brown is a favorite shade for sports dresses. There are short reefer jackets of tweed or a new beaver cloth which looks much like the real fur to wear with the wool sports dresses. Such jackets are also shown in white for wear with black costumes or a black sport skirt and white sweater.

Black costumes are not always enlivened by touches of white, though they are apt to be. Some lynx fur is used to trim black coats and flat furs, brocade and lamb remain in great favor.

Use of Plenty of Pins to Prevent Stretching

Before basting, place pins the entire length of the seams, at intervals of four inches, at right angles to the seam line. This will keep one side from stretching more than the other. If one side is bias, hold that side on top, when basting. This will help prevent it from stretching.

If French seams are to be used, baste the garment right side out, so that it will not have to be turned before the seams are stitched. When making a garment, baste the shoulder seams first, then test the balance of the underarm seam before basting it.

The back edge of the shoulder seam is longer than the front; ease this in, holding the longer side on top. Very thin or soft materials must be basted carefully or they will stretch out of shape.

It saves time in basting and fitting, to test each seam, before basting, using pins freely to adjust it to place.

Lack of Trimming Is Fall Fashion Feature

A notable theme stressed in the informal Paris openings was the comparative paucity of trimming. It appears that this winter's femininity will reach its goal principally through silhouette, material and ingenious fabric manipulations despite the accustomed role of embroidery in all past phases of feminine fashions. This year's smart gowns will have considerably less trimming than had been anticipated.

FARM STOCK

WELL BRED PIGS MAKE MORE MEAT

Even a hog is susceptible to good breeding, and when he is well bred he will make faster and more economical gains than will his brother who lacks such quality of blood.

"We conducted two interesting tests in 1927 which prove the prevailing opinion, that pigs of good breeding, placed in the proper environment and fed a good ration will produce more satisfactory results than pigs of non-descript breeding," says Earl Hostetler, in charge of swine investigations at the North Carolina State college. "We used 129 pigs in the tests. Sixty-nine were bought in eastern Carolina, and while they were thrifty and in good condition, gave no evidence of any particular breeding. The other 60 were pure bred or high-grade Poland China animals bred on the Blackland station farm near Wenona."

As to results, Mr. Hostetler states that the 60 pigs of poor breeding had an initial weight of 62.3 pounds at the beginning of the feeding period and came out weighing an average of 214.5. The average daily gain was 1.1 pound, and it required 479.5 pounds of feed to produce 100 pounds of gain.

But the good pigs of high-class breeding weighed an average of 103.5 pounds at the beginning of the test and came out weighing 240.5 average. These pigs made an average daily gain of 2.4 pounds and required only 371.89 pounds of the same feed to produce a 100 pounds of gain.

Each group of animals received shelled corn, fish meal and minerals from agit-feeders and were comparable as to rations and environment. Therefore, it is obvious, states Mr. Hostetler, that good breeding had something to do with the increased gains made by the more profitable group. The ability to produce rapid and economical gains from feed consumed is certainly transmitted from parent to offspring in the same manner as is color, form and size, he states.

Protein Supplements for Fattening Lambs

On a trial recently conducted at the West Central Experiment station, Morris, Minn., linseed meal and corn gluten meal at $50 per ton and cottonseed meal at $25 per ton, each proved a satisfactory high protein supplement to corn and alfalfa hay for fattening lambs. No appreciable advantage was shown by any one of these over the others nor by a combination of any two of them. However, the combination of all three did increase the gain somewhat, lowered the feed cost per 100 pounds of gain, resulted in a higher degree of finish, and a higher selling price per lamb.

The feed cost per lamb was lower, when only corn and alfalfa hay were used. Notwithstanding these lower feed costs the greater gains secured with the protein supplements resulted in a higher selling price per lamb and a greater margin over feed costs than was secured with the feeding of corn and alfalfa alone.

Skim Milk Satisfactory as Feed for the Calf

Satisfactory growth of calves is reported from Pennsylvania experiment station on 120 pounds whole milk and 105 pounds dry skim milk. After the initial whole milk period, results suggest feeding dry skim milk reconstituted up to six weeks of age, then gradually changing to a dry mixture containing about 40 per cent dry skim milk, which should be reduced as the calves grow older and consume more concentrate.

Live Stock Items

The horse grows five years and may live thirty.

This looks like a good time for the purchase of young horses, if one is going to be in need.

Anything which lowers the vitality of a hog renders it more susceptible to disease.

There are several crude petroleum products on the market which are effective in the control of hog lice.

Immediately after weaning, the lambs should be fed a limited grain ration. Later, it may be increased until the lambs are getting all they will clean up.

In the feeding of young lambs to make them prime, good milking, well fed ewes are the first essential. This refers to lambs that are to be marketed at weaning time weighing about 80 pounds.

If cholera breaks out on an adjoining farm it will be advisable to immunize your own hogs. Elimination of lice, worms, mange and similar pests will assist materially in controlling disease, in that the natural resistance of the animals can operate fully.

LEGEND EXPLAINS A PETRIFIED FOREST

Navahos Call Stone Trees Bones of Monsters.

Tucson, Ariz.—The Navaho Indians of the southwest have a strange and fantastic legend to account for the great stone tree trunks whose broken columns strewn the desert in the region of the famous petrified forest.

In the early days of the world, the Indians say, the sun did not ride tranquil and undimmed through the sky as he does now. At that time there was a black monster that was continually contesting his supremacy. His name was Yletso, and many were the battles that he and the sun fought.

Lived in a Cave. This Yletso lived in a cave in the big mountains, and from there he would sally forth and contend with the sun. He had long and strongly muscled arms and powerfully clawed hands. And his bones were of stone. When he stood erect he could reach the sun at any place in the sky.

When he was defeated in his fights he would have to rest many days and often even many months before he was able to renew the attack, but he was never vanquished. Also at times during those terrible bouts he would get a finger, hand or limb so broken that he would have to discard it, but he possessed the power to grow a new part in the place of the disabled one. The bones of these disabled, discarded parts, which were of stone, he threw out from the cave over a ridge from time to time as they got in his way, and thus for years and ages the stone-wood accumulated.

At that time a boy by the name of Kee lived in a grass-tiled feather home with his mother, Shemah, and his sister, Zonnie. One winter it got very cold. Finally, as they had no fuel, Kee went to the mountains for pitch wood. As the sun set before he reached the forest he slept out where he was. Then on the next day he went into the mountains and found what he supposed was pitch wood, a quantity of which he chopped.

Bones Instead of Wood. When he reached his home it was growing dark the second night. So he slept outdoors in front of his hogan, where Zonnie found him still sleeping when she came home in the morning. She also noticed the wood, just as their grandmother came out of the house. And instead of pitch wood he had brought bones of Yletso; whereupon his grandmother scolded him and told him to throw the bones away.

In time Kee grew to be a great man. Time and again he visited the mountain where he had obtained the bone-wood, and there he prayed to his god and made sacrifice. Then one day he discovered the cave where the monster lived, and at the rising of the sun on the following morning he told him, through prayer, of the beast's abode.

Just as he was telling the sun the news he saw the great black thing leaping above the mountains to the attack. Quickly Kee called the men of his tribe together and they all prayed for the powers of good to aid the sun in this battle against darkness.

Fight against the face of the sun leaped the monster. It stretched its fierce arms and clawing hands toward the sun's rim. Then the battle began in earnest. The sun attacked him with his millions and millions of rays, and, aided by the prayers of the then good people of earth, he finally overcame it.

In this battle of all battles the sun's rays pierced Yletso's body, and his blood, on reaching the earth, was congealed in lava flows. Finally he fell back to the earth dead, and the sun mounted triumphantly in the heavens, as he spread his invigorating and cheering light over land and sea. And the plateau region is still incredibly covered with its bones, called by the Navahos Yletsobtain, the bones of Yletso.

Trappers Dead Fifty Years Found in Cave

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—A long-forgotten tragedy of the fur-trading days is believed to have been uncovered. A prospector reported that he had found two skeletons and a number of rusted old-fashioned muskets in a cave north of Bruce Mines.

The skeletons were lying by the side of a small, well-hidden lake and, until he found them, A. B. Frazer, the prospector, believed he was the discoverer of the lake.

Frazer said he was positive no one had visited the lake since the men met their death. The muskets were of a type which has not been used in the North for fifty years. No other articles could be found to indicate when the men died or what caused their death.

Amputates Frozen Toes With a Kitchen Knife

Prince George, British Columbia.—A trapper who amputated four of his toes with a kitchen knife when they became frozen last winter has arrived here for professional surgical attention, but was told he had done the job as well as further treatment was needed.

While inspecting his trap line on the upper Finlay river, J. Omers suffered frost bite in his right foot. On returning to his cabin, which is 80 miles from the nearest neighbor, he took three days to perform the operation. He then washed the wounds in antiseptic and bound them up.

SURVIVOR TELLS OF SUBMARINE ESCAPES

Milwaukee Man Was in Four Disasters.

Milwaukee.—After having been in four submarine disasters in five years with the navy, C. H. Redding, twenty-eight, Milwaukee, is still very much alive. Throughout his navy service Redding was assigned to submarine duty as an electrician.

Redding was on the S-48 when it went down with an open hatch off Bridgeport, Conn., with 43 men on board, all of whom were rescued after fighting water and gas fumes for 12 hours. The thing that stands out in Redding's mind is the droll attempt of a machinist's mate to sweep back the ocean with a broom.

"The sub went down for a deep dive, but the hatch had been left open," he said. "Water poured in. This machinist mate was sweeping up water with a broom and was unaware of what had happened, as we all were for several minutes. He kept sweeping and sweeping but the water got too much for him. Finally he went into the control room and told the officers he needed a mop. We soon learned what had happened then."

When the R-6 sank in San Pedro (Calif.) harbor in 1922 after some one inadvertently had opened a torpedo door, Redding was just coming on board for the night.

As he stepped on the sub it began to sink and he stepped off into the ocean and swam to a tender lying alongside. Six men who were asleep were drowned but the others were rescued.

Redding had his head and face burned when a battery blew up on the S-37 in 1923. This accident also happened in San Pedro harbor. Six men were killed by the blast.

He was also on the L-5 which dove with an open hatch off the coast of California during the winter maneuvers in 1920. The crew of 22 men were rescued.

Lighthouse Built Amid Tempests on Coral Reef

Washington.—A successful end to an 18 months' campaign to plant a lighthouse on Tubbataha reef in the Philippine islands, marked by a bitter and ceaseless struggle against the elements, has been reported by the lighthouse service of the Department of Commerce.

A low coral reef set in the midst of a sea of rock shoals, sunbaked and hurricane-swept, has been crowned with a 120-foot tower to carry the light that will warn mariners. Presently the feet will be covered with soil behind the sea wall to make a tiny park under the tower.

Work began on the construction in November, 1920, and was stopped repeatedly by hurricanes which swept the barren, low islet. Many days the sun, beating on the white coral, made labor impossible during normal working hours.

Water had to be distilled out of the sea to supply the gangs struggling with the concrete and steel. Sickness forced retirement of a high percentage of the working force, but the erection of the light has been proven a necessity to safeguard the sea traffic between Manila and Hongkong and Australia, and the Philippine government kept its forces at the task.

Sea Serpent Has Sheep's Head on Body of Eel

Vancouver, B. C.—A nameless marine creature about six feet long, having an eel-like body and a head resembling that of a sheep, was on display at provincial police headquarters here as evidence of the existence of a "sea monster" which many people have reported seeing in Lake Okanagan, in the interior of British Columbia.

The strange creature was caught by the young son of Harry Alexander, Vancouver magistrate, while trolling on the lake.

Tales of the appearance of a monster in the lake have been coming from there for two years.

Most Moral Town

Linx, Austria.—This little town, capital of Upper Austria, claims to be the most moral and best governed in the world. Because of the lack of litigation, the law courts here have closed their doors, the police having reported no crimes or misdemeanors of any kind among the 50,000 inhabitants.

Kemalists Turn Backs on Traditional Hero

Constantinople—President Kemal, follower of Western cultural fashions, has bowed over the George Washington of old Turkey, Sultan Mahomet, conqueror of Constantinople in 1453.

An article in the official press, signed by a prominent Kemalist deputy, heaped insults on the national idol, charging that his only motto was "conquest and booty."

"The attack on the Father of Turkey shows a fundamental change in the national mentality since the war. The author says that if Kemal had been on hand in 1453 instead of the great sultan the European Renaissance would have sprung from Turkey instead of Greece and Rome."

Denver, Colo.—"I have taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and will take more. I am taking it as a tonic to help me through the Change of Life and I am telling many of my friends to take it as I found nothing before this to help me. PROHIBITION There are many Democrats who proclaim opposition to Governor Smith because of his so-called "wet" views, and announce a determination to support Herbert Hoover because he stands on an enforcement platform. So does Smith, and the question naturally arises, is the Hoover pledge, to a Democrat, to be given more consideration than the pledge of a man of their own political faith, whose every public and private act bears the closest scrutiny?

Anyhow they profess to be satisfied with the Republican pledge, despite the fact that it is the only party that has been in power since the enactment of the Volstead law, and there can be few outside the fanatical and domineering Anti-Saloon League—but what must recognize the corruptive influences of the abortive effort—if, indeed, it may be called an effort—to enforce prohibition during the last two Republican administrations.

How much hard "licker" is being distilled and sold can only be conjectured, as distiller and distributor are not submitting accurate reports to the government. Moreover, the amount is known to be enormous, including importations, and it is contended by many that the consumption exceeds that of pre-Volstead days.

Nobody can substantiate this assertion, neither can anyone disprove it. But there is a little closer tab on wine consumption. Ah, the grape-grower is getting his—about five-times as much as in the old days. Prior to the prohibitory laws, which drove small licensed saloons out of business, there was an annual consumption of wine in this country of 60,000,000 gallons. Now, after eight years of Volsteadism, under two Republican administrations, not taking into consideration little batches made in millions of homes, the annual consumption of wine has grown to 200,000,000 gallons. The Democrat who leaves his party to add four years more of the kind of enforcement we've had the past eight must be a glutton for punishment. And it is especially more confusing when it is recalled that Mr. Hoover says that, if elected, he intends to carry out the policies of his predecessor.

It doesn't take a prophetic vision to see that these Democrats are building their hopes upon the sand. Prohibition, as Mr. Hoover has said, may be a "noble experiment," but he might have gone further and said it was fundamentally a bad constitutionally wrong, has not been enforced, and, if the past is any guide to the future, one may with confidence say, it will never be enforced; and anyone who believes Mr. Hoover will make any better showing than has been made by the last two Republican administrations are so saturated with unsuspecting credulity that their gullibility is proverbial.

We don't have to go into national affairs, altogether, to get an insight as to promise and performance on the liquor question. Two years ago Dillor was supported by the prohibitionists because he would enforce the dry law. As governor he signed the "quart" liquor law, passed by a Republican legislature. And yet, the ardent, lip-service, professional prohibitionist has nothing to say in condemnation of that action, for, as heretofore stated, the political prohibitionist is more interested in a declaration of prohibition than in its enforcement—in the form rather than the substance—and a lot of really conceivably prohibitionists are fooled by the chaff.

We quote below just one paragraph from a statement made by Owen D. Young on this particular phase of the subject. Mr. Young is one of the big men of the nation—big industrially, intellectually and morally. He says: "I am not supporting Governor Smith because of his position on prohibition. As a liberal I resent the whole theory of the constitutional amendment and the fanaticism and unreasonableness of the Volstead law, but on the other hand, I, for one, do not propose to take any chance on liquor again obtaining the upper hand in this country. I wish a sane law, wisely administered. I would like to see hypocrisy which now exists in our legislatures and our homes wiped out, but I want to be very patient with this effort of a great democracy in self-discipline. One does not have to be a fanatic to be dry, and unless we destroy the unreasoning and fanatical leadership for a dry America, we will some day wake up to find as a reaction a very wet America. As a friend of temperance I am prepared to support Governor Smith, and in so doing I do not propose to be classified as a wet- or for-liquor because of such support."

The New Senior Six

Universal public acceptance of the new Senior Six models recently announced by Dodge Brothers Corporation is reflected by a bank of thousands of unfilled orders on file at the factory from dealers over the country. Production on the six body types is being pushed on overtime schedules to eliminate all possible delays in retail deliveries.

"Typical Dodge dependability with a new era in motor car style was the verdict of those who first drove the new Senior Six," said Vincent Reil local Dealer. "Its appearance, mechanical refinements and added luxury have made an immediate appeal to the buying public.

"Interior appointments of the car are attracting most favorable comment from women who demand the latest refinements in upholstery and finish. Graceful exterior body lines have been attained at no sacrifice to comfort or roominess for every passenger."

Metropolitan and smaller city dealers alike reported the enthusiastic reception accorded the new Senior when it was first displayed. In many points, sales have depleted the first factory shipment. The car's roadability whether in city traffic or in faster driving along country highways is featured—by ease of control equaled in only the higher priced cars. Increased power has been matched with superior four wheel hydraulic brakes to insure maximum safety.

Mrs. Hubbard and children, Jack, Rosa and David, and J. T. McNeal, of Dexter, came up Saturday to attend the Rodeo and Carnival and to visit with Tommy Hubbard.

County politicians were most conspicuous at the Rodeo, as this was a great opportunity to greet all the voters.

The Rodeo-Carnival staged by the Lincoln P. T. A. was one of the most successful events our little town has ever attempted. The Rodeo and Chuck Wagon Dinner under the able supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pfingsten was all that could possibly be expected, and was attended by a large crowd. The carnival at the old Court House in the evening drew a large crowd, the hall being packed, and the carnival spirit prevailing. The boxing contests, planned by Dr. Woods and Mr. Hubbard, proved the greatest attraction. The committees in charge are to be congratulated on the well-pleased entertainment, a vote of thanks extended to Mr. and Mrs. Pfingsten for their untiring efforts and to the entire valley, extending from Picacho to Carrizozo, for their cooperation and orderly conduct through out the day and evening. We may plan to make this an annual affair and trust you will come again.

ABOUT THE TWO FLIES

"I HAVE some remarks, which I should like to make," said the fly. First he dusted off his hind legs and then he brushed off his front legs and gave his head a good dusting. He did all this without any duster—his wings and head and legs could be kept clean by himself without any outside help.

He didn't care to be too clean—just enough, just enough, that was all.

"Yes," the fly continued, "I have some remarks to make."

Another fly looked at him out of his double eyes and said: "If that is the case you'd better make them."

"Just what I intend doing," said the first fly.

"I see," said the second fly. "You won't go away and keep from speaking to you on that account.

"I wouldn't be a child and get mad at another child and 'not speak' for anything."

"I'm the other way. I don't mind how much I am insulted. And it is about this that I wish to make my remarks.

"People would not stick to each other, if they were told to get away and were pushed aside or brushed aside.

"People would not stick around if they were not wanted.

"People would not like other people if they were not treated well.

"People would not stay in houses where they were not wanted and where they were told they were not wanted.

"But flies will!

"Yes, people can shove us aside when we light upon them, they can talk about us and wish we'd go away, but still we come about.

"The other day I settled on the forehead of a little girl five different times in less than ten minutes.

"She brushed me off and complained about me and said she wished I'd go away and not come back again.

"But back I came.

"That just shows you how much better a friend I was to her than some people would have been if she had talked to them the way she talked to me."

"Still," said the second fly, "you wouldn't have been anxious to show her any real friendship.

"Maybe you'd go back to her and bother her and stick to her but not in any friendly fashion.

"In fly fashion perhaps, but not in friendly fashion."

"True," said the first fly, "but still I remark that that is more than people will do—stick when they're not loved."

"Oh, well," said the second fly, "I can't say anything, as I do the same. I show the same interest in those who show no interest in me.

"I fuss about people who are annoyed by me.

"I don't care whether I'm wanted or not—I'm still the same stick-in-the-mud fly."

"It's the fly style not to object whether we're wanted or not."

And then the two flies began to fly about and buzz and sing this little song:

Two flies are we,
Buzzing with glee,
We're a nuisance, it's true,
But it won't make us blue
If we're used away
At night or by day,
We're not healthy, you know,
But that can't make us go,
When we're having our fun
We wait 'till we're done,
We love to annoy
A girl or a boy,
Two flies are we,
Buzzing with glee.

THE TIME STEALER

By JOHN BLAKE

EVERY important person in the world is constantly besieged by people who want to steal his time.

Stealing the time of a prominent person is often the same thing as stealing his money.

Time stealers are not usually aware that they are thieves. They would bitterly resent any hint that they might be dishonest.

Yet it is something like dishonesty to rob a man of his valuable time and give him nothing in return.

There are many kinds of time stealers. Some may be (big) strangers who want to sell their victim something he doesn't want. Some may be friends who merely want to pass the time of day.

It is because time stealers are so numerous that nearly every prominent man is surrounded by a barricade of door boys and secretaries, whose duty it is to keep the intruders at bay. By the time a visitor threads his way through this vigilant force his business and qualifications for seeing the boss are usually pretty well established.

Nearly everybody is occasionally beset by them. And many kind-hearted individuals allow themselves to be robbed again and again.

It is difficult to be curt when a pleasant stranger tries to sell you something which you may need but don't want. Especially when he tells you that his living depends upon making such sales.

It is equally hard to decline the invitation extended by some dull friend.

Generous people do not like to be rude. And so they put up with the intruder's patter instead of summarily dismissing him. And instead of declining their dull friend's invitations they go to many a tiresome function. As a result much of their time is frittered fruitlessly away. Minutes which might have been turned into money or culture show only a debit of unprofitable ennui.

There is only one way to treat the time stealer, however rude or inconsiderate it may seem. That way is to tell him you are busy and have no time to waste.

If you can prevent his reaching you, do so. That will avert embarrassment on both sides.

But if he does crash in, tell him your time is valuable and that you expect it to show a profit. If you can be polite, so much the better. But don't be afraid of being rude, if that is necessary.

The time stealer does not consider you when he robs you. Why should you worry about hurting his feelings? (Copyright.)

Norway Given Island

Spitzbergen was first believed to be a part of Greenland, and was subsequently claimed by Denmark. Then it was found to be an independent island, and was formally annexed by England in 1914. Of late years Norway, Sweden and Russia have contended for its ownership. Norway finally received it by a treaty signed at Paris in 1920.

Finish What You Start

By F. A. WALKER

THIS world is filled with good starters. But there is an over-supply of poor finishers.

Man of War was the greatest race horse that ever lived, not because he was always in the lead at the quarter, but because he was always first AT THE FINISH.

It isn't the fellow that leads over the first hurdle that gets the check and the medal. It's the boy that has nobody in front of him when he touches the tape.

There are thousands of men, successful-rich-respected-awarded, who started under a good deal of handicap, but who are finishing with heads up and something to spare.

I have young men who hampered at the start by too much money. That's an easy obstacle to get rid of if you have judgment and good sense.

Some are hindered by the expectations and frequently bad judgment of parents who do not know what the boy is fitted for as well as the boy himself knows. That is an obstacle hard to remove.

Some boys make a bad start because they choose the wrong thing. Don't be afraid to change your mind. If you are in the wrong job get out of it and into the right one. No work is worth while that you cannot do earnestly, honestly and in a general way happily.

Don't be hampered at the start by the thought that perhaps there is something about you that hinders success. One of the biggest scientists in the world was a crippled hunchback. One of the big bankers of the West was almost blind. One of the great merchants of New York was totally blind.

If your brain is all right it doesn't make much difference about your hands or feet, your back or your face.

And when you get started and get in front STAY THERE. You don't have to worry much about the fellow that is BEHIND you. Let him do the worrying.

Don't run yourself out. Take a gait that you can hold. Don't endanger your health nor sacrifice your happiness by over effort. The man who runs too fast at the start laps at the finish unless he has extraordinary staying powers.

One morning, over in France, there was a call to go over the top. The officer in addressing the men told them what was to be accomplished and who was to lead them. It was a desperate task that was being undertaken and a pale-faced young fellow was the man upon whom the great burden had been put.

"Why did you choose Jones to head that expedition?" the commanding officer was asked after the attack had proved successful.

"Because," said he, "once he gets started, all hell can't stop him."

That's a great reputation for a man to have on the field or the farm, in the office or out on the job.

Train yourself so that when you get started nothing on earth can keep you from making a finish—winning to yourself and to your job.

The Jonah Superstition

By H. Irving King

THOUGH it is not the custom today to throw overboard people who are suspected of being the cause of storms and disasters at sea, yet the beliefs in Jonah's still flourish, and deep-water sailors still have a lingering opinion that the weather conditions would be vastly improved if the suspected persons were jettisoned. In less enlightened times they would have been—even as was the prophet son of Amittai.

The Jonah superstition is older than Jonah. The prophet was merely the victim of a Phoenician superstition ancient even before his day; but being a "celebrated case" his name has clung to it ever since. It is the old idea of the appeasing of an angry god by a human sacrifice. Human sacrifice to Baal was the main feature of Phoenician worship, and the Phoenicians were the great seafaring people among the ancients, and took their religion to sea with them.

In Jonah's day, the victim appears to have been chosen by lot, but subsequently he came to be designated by personal peculiarities or by coincidence. It is thus that a "Jonah" is indicated today.

The writer once knew a young naval officer who, because of the mishaps which occurred to a series of ships to which he was successfully attached, became known throughout the service as "Jonah" So-and-so. Not so long ago a sailor on a coasting schooner caught in a storm cried out that the tempest was because of his wickedness and jumped overboard. The storm still continuing the sailors threw his baggage after him—and the tempest ceased! Of such stories "the name is legion." The fact that it is getting on to three thousand years now since Phoenicia ceased to exist affords another example of the superiority of the vitality of a superstition over that of empires and races.

OBEDIENCE

By Leonard A. Barrett

WHILE much may be said about the duty of children obeying parents, there still remains a good deal to be said about parents, so conducting their discipline and their personal attitude toward their children as to make them want to obey them. There is a fundamental law in life which is applicable here—"Like attracts like." It is nature's first law. Love attracts love. We are irresistibly drawn toward those whom we admire. The opposite is also true. The hateful repels the lovely and suspicion destroys trust.

The commandment reads that we shall honor our parents. This should be a most natural thing to do and a child should not be impelled to offer any excuse for not doing so. The child is a child and not an adult. You can drive a horse to water but you cannot make him drink. A parent cannot compel ultimate and voluntary obedience by threats of punishment. A temporary obedience, restrained and involuntary, may result in the loss of something that is very essential to the child's development.

There is something very beautiful about the way a child instinctively clings to what may be called home. It is ever so humble that is in place in the world just like it. Why? Because the elementary instincts of human nature had their first expression there. It is within the walls of that place called home, that they are impressed with the "habitus" of life. There they seek acquaintance for the human not only of the body but of the mind and heart as well. No matter how far a man or woman may stray away later on in life, they will not forget the home of their childhood—that is if they really had a home. The garden with its old-fashioned flowers will always remain vivid in memory. The spirit of the place, however crude, is part and parcel of their experience. The more affection manifested in the home the clearer it becomes.

Thwart that element of affection, destroy the spirit of home and something very sacred has been destroyed in the heart of the child. Real obedience is voluntary. Love creates obedience.

Good and Ill Luck

THE following are instances of good and ill luck:

If the wife's keys persist in getting rusty, some friend is laying up money for her.

If meat shrinks in the pot while boiling, it is unlucky; if it swells it is a sign of prosperity.

If a girl likes parrots it is a sign she will be an old maid.

Dogs give warning of death by scratching on the door.

Should the good wife cut the first cake from the oven, all the rest will be heavy; the first cake must be broken.

Do not sweep the dust out the front door, or you will sweep away your fortune.

Spit on the first coin you get in the morning.

If you forget to put down the lid of the teapot, a friend will drop in to tea.

Do not wash your hands and face in the same water as another or you will come to blows.

Do not sweep dust over the legs or feet of a girl; it will prevent her from getting a husband.

If a child cries it is lucky; he will have broad shoulders and blue eyes.

If you walk in a strange garden with your lover, his success will increase.

Little Carolyn, age three, was just learning to chew gum. Her mother had given her two pieces and both were swallowed. Carolyn ran to her mother to get a third piece. Her mother refused and Carolyn kept begging for it until her mother said: "Carolyn, I said 'no.' Don't you understand 'no' when you hear it?" Carolyn, still determined to get the gum, said: "I understand you."

FINNEY OF THE FORCE

A Solution

Is THIRTY the Love Deadline?

Charles G. Shaw was born in New York City in May, 1892, and received his early education at the Friends' Seminary, later entering the Sheffield Scientific school of Yale university, from which he was graduated in 1914. The following year he spent at the School of Agriculture at Columbia and in 1916-17 wrote articles for various magazines. During the World War he trained at Kelly Field, Texas, and served overseas as lieutenant with the Three Hundred and Thirty-fifth aero squadron, A. E. F., returning home shortly after the Armistice. He has been writing steadily since 1921. He has composed over five hundred notes on the subject of love and written under seven different pseudonyms. Mr. Shaw lives in New York and is still a bachelor.

By CHARLES G. SHAW
According to the able and distinguished Dr. Will Durant, love is a hopeless business for him who was ultimately arrived at the great age of thirty. To which asseveration, I make so bold as to object, I object, what is more, for the following crystallized and, I believe, pertinent reasons:

1. Love, among several hundreds of other things, means understandings, sympathy, and consideration. None of these qualities is in the least peculiar to youth.
2. During adolescent love, jealousies, all too frequently, play unhappy but important roles. Neither of the twain involved is at all sure of the other; indeed it is rare that either is even sure of him (or her) self. Doubt and suspicion are the double-headed issue, a destructive offspring and corrosive to romance. Free from these youthful misgivings, the follow of middle-age will necessarily view matters in a more humane and tolerant light. Forgiveness is begot with years.
3. Love means appreciation. The appreciation of youth is never equal to that of middle-age.
4. To a man over thirty, love at once becomes a far more serious undertaking, and, though admittedly a condition less frequently experienced than in the case of a man under thirty, when experienced, cuts deeper into the heart. The younger fellow half the time will cajole himself that he is in love. There is no such nonsense for the other. He knows it.
5. The assumption that a man over thirty is incapable of love is the assumption that love is a mere flash in the pan, an emotional comet. But love is not a question of a few months. Nor, for that matter, of a few years. Love is the study of a lifetime.
6. Love, leans upon beauty. And rare is he who is able to behold in his twenties the beauties that exist for him in subsequent years.
7. The estimable Doctor Durant declares that "a man above thirty may go wild over a blond 'chorine,' and adds: "That is not love." To the latter statement I agree. As to the former, the phrase: "go wild" is for youth, not for middle-age.
8. The doctor is of the belief, too, that one should marry at the "natural" age—in other words, the "ally" age. Yet would it not seem there are already enough divorces due to "ally" age marriages?
9. Love, for a woman, includes a touch of importance in the man. Importance comes to few of us before the first thirty years.
10. For the man over thirty, love assumes a soberer and more stable mien. He has tramped further along the road of experience and, hence, all other things being equal, will fall to succumb with the same degree of ease as his younger brother. Moreover, his falling in love is more exacting. His is the subtler skill also in the tendernesses of amour, which art, incidentally, must be learned as all other arts, for while one's ground-work, garnered in the flush of youth, is undubitably necessary, it is the technique acquired in riper years that leads the essential quality to the prime product. Behind lies that ephemeral period (Doctor Durant's "natural" age), when the first comely wink of a shingle-headed sapper caused our hero to swallow his wad of chewing gum, clutch his coat just below the handkerchief pocket, and rush headlong to the nearest jeweler's.
11. It is a different type of love, true enough, that comes to a man after thirty. But surely it is a sadder, saner, and stancher type—a love, in line, that makes for the possibilities of an ever-enduring devotion.
12. In conclusion, I would note the names of a few men over thirty, who it would appear, have most certainly been capable of falling in love—to wit: Robert Browning, at the age of thirty-three; Honore de Balzac, at thirty-four; Otto Eduard Leopold von Bismarck at thirty-one; Horatio Nelson, at forty; Aaron Burr, at thirty-eight; Heinrich Heine, at thirty-seven; Francois Marie Arouet de Voltaire, at thirty-nine; Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, at thirty-eight; Blaise Pascal at thirty-one; Jean Jacques Rousseau at thirty-three; Napoleon I, at forty-one; Goya y Lucientes, at forty-five; Julius Caesar, at fifty-two; Louis XIV, at forty-two; Wilhelm Richard Wagner, at fifty-seven; Luigi Corbelli at seventy-nine; Thomas Parr, at eighty. . . . But why continue? History, the arts, science, government, industry—life in all its phases—is rich with such examples.

Unpleasant Type of Visitors to America

Mary Roberts Rinehart, who was recently awarded a $1,200 income tax refund, said at a Washington reception: "A thing like that refund makes me feel very friendly toward our country. Everybody, by the way, feels very friendly toward our country nowadays except the third-rate English novelists who flock over here to lecture."

"I said to one of these novelists the other night: 'Well, sir, how do you like the U. S. A.?'

"'O-g-rather thresome,' he answered.

"'Haven't you seen anything that attracted you, sir?'"

"'Well—er—no; can't say I have.'"

"'But take Niagara falls. Have you been to Niagara?'"

"'Spent the day there.'"

"'Well, now, come, isn't Niagara a sight worth seeing?'"

"'It's yawned.'"

"'From the Canadian side—yes,' he said."

Constipated Since Childhood; In Fine Shape Now

"I just couldn't resist any longer telling you of your wonderful medicine, Milk's Emulsion. I have been constipated as long as I can remember. Had typhoid fever when I was eight years old and since then my bowels haven't moved freely. I have taken pills, salts, castor oil, and everything a person could think of.

"Now, whenever I hear anyone say they are constipated I immediately tell them of Milk's Emulsion. I have taken about 12 large bottles, not all of them regular. Now I keep Milk's Emulsion in the house and take it regular. I have taken so much medicine that I thought it was all alike.

"I had a sallow complexion, no color, and felt miserable all the time; but now I have the color of health, and health is something I wouldn't exchange with anyone for a fortune. I wouldn't take ten times the price I paid for Milk's Emulsion for the results I have obtained.

"I am 19 years old and weigh 105 pounds. Have gained 5 pounds since taking your medicine and am still gaining. My face is round and my arms are getting round. Before, people used to hang their hats on my elbows, thinking they were hatracks. Now I am going to keep on with Milk's Emulsion until I weigh 125 pounds.

"You may publish this letter if you wish and anyone that wants to ask me about your medicine may do so. I promise to answer every letter. In fact, I couldn't do enough for Milk's Emulsion to repay them for what their medicine has done for me." ROSEMOND BOWLER, Frontenac, Kans.

Mrs. Frank Abel and Frank, Jr., went to El Paso Saturday, visited with mother and sister and returned home Wednesday.

Mrs. J. L. Bogle leaves tonight for Los Angeles, to visit her sons and daughters. She will be absent the greater part of the month.

Dr. Johnson was called to Santa Rosa last night to attend a brother physician, Dr. Funk, who had suffered a broken rib and other injuries, in an automobile wreck yesterday.

Lon Jenkins and Carl Woods were down from Corona Tuesday. Mr. Jenkins is the Democratic nominee for commissioner from district 3, has lived in Lincoln county many years and is well and favorably known to all its inhabitants.

We had intended to have something to say about the Carnival and Rodeo at Lincoln last Saturday, which we had the pleasure of attending, but our Lincoln correspondent has covered the subject so thoroughly that it would be superfluous to attempt a further description.

Judge S. F. Crews was a visitor from Oscura yesterday. The Judge and Mrs. Crews, as in their custom, will spend the winter in El Paso, but they come back to their Oscura home for the summer and fall months. To them, for fourteen years, our climate has been everything, and they are, as a result, enjoying good health and rightfully appreciate the benefits, from a health standpoint, to be derived from a residence here.

STEEL ECLIPSE Windmill

Starts sooner—pumps longer

Two windmills stood just across the road from each other. With the first sign of a breeze started up smoothly and quietly. When the breeze became a wind, the other started with a groan and lumbered away helplessly as the wind raised a dust in the face. When it stopped as abruptly as it had started, while the other continued pumping far hours longer—then it finally came smoothly to rest with the last trace of the dying breeze.

This is the difference between a slipper windmill and just a windmill. It is the difference between a cheaply machined and fitted gears and the heavy cast gears of the Steel Eclipse Windmill. You will find polished shafts and ordinary steel shafts; the difference between machined and polished bearings and ordinary bearings; the difference between running in oil and running with dry gears.

In other words, it is the difference between the Fairbanks-Morse Self-Oiling Steel Eclipse Windmill and just a plain windmill.

Come in and see this great advance in windmill construction. See the self-oiling feature—the center fit feature—the mechanism that enables the Eclipse to actually pump water during two-thirds of every revolution of the wind wheel. You will form a new idea of how good a windmill can be.
