Houts Evangelistic Party

An evangelistic party, as shown in the cut above, will be here the first of the week, and begin services at the Methodist church. The first meeting of the series will be at 7:45 Sunday evening, at which time more definite announcements will be made.

The party is composed of Rev. and Mrs. Roy T. Houts and their two boys. All are musicians and music will be a special feature of every service. It is planned to have the meeting run two weeks. This evangelistic party comes highly recommended to the local Methodist authorities and an interesting and profitable meeting is expected. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend and take part in these services.

Nevada Cave Discloses Ancient Civilization

The story that follows was furnished by the Chevrolet Motor Company. A plat, which we are unable to use, accompanied the story, showing how the cave might be reached, and the route taken by a Chevrolet six which covered the heavy sands over the road to the cave without difficulty. It is a most interesting story and discloses an archaeological condition of the greatest importance. The story, partly legend, but based on discoveries made, reads:

Situated in a small peak forming a part of the Humboldt mountains and overlooking the Humboldt Lake, in Nevada, is the Lovelock Cave. Its outward appearance, like any number of other caves in the dry desert country of Nevada, gives no inkling of the important find made there since 1911.

The northern Paiute Indians who live in the vicinity of the cave have a legend which relates that the cave was once the home of a tribe named Sai-i. The same legend says they were exceedingly unpopular with the neighboring tribes because of their habit of capturing the women of other tribes and carrying them to their own stronghold. Finally this tribe of Indians, the legend of which says they were red headed, were driven to this cave and exterminated by fire. In 1911 the cave was located as a mining claim for the purpose of removing large quantities of bat guano which had a great deal of value as fertilizer. In the moving of the pre-historic Indian civilization were found, and Mr. L. L. Loud of the University of California went there to begin exploration of the cave. He found a structure approximately 150 feet long and 35 feet wide at its widest point, and at varying levels of 2 feet to 15 feet were found evidences of this lost civilization. Mr. Loud's explorings gave to the University of California Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology much valuable evidence in the form of baskets, bows and arrows, flints, knives, blankets, etc. In 1924 a second exploration of the cave was made by Mr. M. R. Harrington, who obtained additional Indian objects. In all approximately 15,000 specimens from the cave have been recovered.

The preservation conditions in Lovelock Cave are similar to those of Egypt and Peru are equal to only a few sites discovered in North America. The material has been shown by study to be of the pre-Caucasian period, and this ancient culture has a strong relationship to the native culture of West in historic times. It gives a picture of culture far more vivid because of the richness of the whole series of objects and of the findings intact of baskets and wooden implements which have scarcely ever been found in any archaeological sites. Some of these objects suggest the "basket-maker" culture which preceded the Pueblos, previously thought to be the earliest civilization in the West.

From Ancho

Thomas Almon Knight is two old Monday afternoon, the 24th, Mrs. Almon Knight entertained all the children in the vicinity of Ancho at a lawn party under the shade of the big trees of the Pruitt home, in honor of her son Tommie after a game of chance won by Edwin Peters and Archie McArthur. Mrs. Knight provided the children with balloon whistles which furnished them with fun and much noise as they romped over the spacious lawns.

In the house, a surprise had been arranged for Mrs. Belknap whose birthday was close. She was presented with a beautiful cake, decorated by Mrs. Pruitt, and a basket full of lovely gifts. A game of "Age?" followed, Mrs. L. L. Peters winning first prize and Mrs. P. A. Melton, the consolation.

Then came the shower of gifts for Tommie, who was placed on a table and nearly covered with an avalanche of useful presents and toys. With much serious consideration, young Tommie selected a small red hammer as capable of doing the most man-seized damage.

After cutting Tommie's cake with two wee candles, and the big cake with its many candles, ice cream and cake were served until not one child was able to ask for "more!"

Out of town guests arriving especially for this event were Mrs. J. E. Frame with Amaryllis and Billy from Tucuman; Miss Mary-Catherine Penix from Corona; Mrs. Marion Pruitt, with Marian, Ralph and Dorothy from Duran; Mrs. Brack Sloan, with Joyce, Helen and Bessie Sue from Carrizozo; Miss Willie-Day Standhardt from Roswell; and Mrs. Joe Roscoe with Archie McArthur from El Paso.

1918—There, little bar room, don't you cry; you'll be a drug store by and by.

1928—There little drug store, don't raise a row; you are a bar room, practically now.

Among the most interesting of the relics found were a group of decoy ducks perfectly preserved even to the feathers, which were interwoven with the tule forming the structure. It is almost inconceivable that such a savage tribe, (legend says that they were cannibalistic) should develop such an artistry and perfect technique in the imitation of birds for the purpose of killing game. Their whistles, a number of which were found, were made of the hollow bones of the deer. Blankets in a perfect state of preservation were found, made from hundreds of meadow mouse skins closely sewed, and quite beautiful. Even in these earliest times, their spear heads were carefully sharpened and chipped of flint, and bound by thongs to wooden shafts. These Indians were experienced in burial, as is shown by mummified skeletons, in most cases buried with their worldly possessions and wrapped in nets which during the Indians' life were unquestionably used for fishing.

The Lovelock Cave is not far from the Victory Highway, or what is known as Route 40. It is 22 miles south of the town of Lovelock. The objects of this early civilization have all been removed to the Museum of Anthropology at the University of California.

Farm Relief Bill Condemned

The farm relief bill, just enacted at the special session of congress, fails to measure up to the demand of the farmers, and, according to the Corn Belt Committee, the promise of the Republican party in the last campaign "becomes utterly farcical." The resolution of this committee reads:

"We, the members of the Corn Belt Committee, which speaks for more than a million organized farmers, desire to say that, in our opinion, the so-called House farm relief bill * * * does not manifest the slightest effort to make the tariff effective in behalf of our surplus farm commodities, and without this the pledge of the Republican party to assure equality for agriculture in the last campaign becomes utterly farcical."

Commenting on, and in support of, the farm committee's strictures, the Democratic position is outlined in the following language:

"The tariff bill which the Republican majority of the House, acting under a gag rule, passed and which is now being considered by the Senate, is even more objectionable to the farmers than the farm bill itself. It not only adds from six to eight hundred million dollars a year to the cost of living of the American people, but actually increases the disparity between the little protection the farmer gets and the high duties on commodities he must buy, including steel, farming implements, clothing, and other necessities. That Republican members of the House who represent agricultural districts will be punished for betrayal of their constituents in voting for the House tariff bill is made clear in the Corn Belt Committee's resolution on the subject of the tariff. The resolution says:

"With reference to the House tariff revision bill, we desire to go on record as saying that it is the most indefensible measure of the kind ever offered in the history of Congress. Pretending to revise the tariff in the interest of agriculture, certain selfish interests have been promised new advantage which are without conscience or reason and which, if enacted into law, will mulct the consumer, farmers included, out of hundreds of millions of dollars of additional tribute per year. In connection with both the pending farm relief and tariff legislation, we have a feeling bordering on contempt for certain Corn Belt Congressmen who, throughout the special session, have acted as mere messenger boys for special privilege."

The sustained argument, as to whether there is enough or not enough mucilage on postage stamps reminds us of an incident that occurred one day in the local postoffice. A man walked up to the window and asked for a stamp. He passed in the two cents with a head so dirty it looked like a bear's paw. The tobacco juice was trickling down the corner of his mouth through a week's growth of whiskers into his collar. He gingerly picked up the stamp by one corner and with an expression of deep loathing said, "I always did hate to lick a postage stamp."

I crept up stairs my shoes in hand
Just as the night took wing—
And I saw my wife four feet above
Doing the same darn thing.

Two-Minute Sermon

By REV. GEORGE HENRY
BALANCE

I know a man who laughs and laughs. He was using a hammer the other day and the head flew off and hit another man on the ankle. He laughed uproariously on beholding the look of agony on the other fellow's face. He sees only the funny side of life, but he is not a humorist. He calls himself an optimist. I call him a half-wit. On the other hand, I know a man who never laughs. He has no sense of humor. He looks backward with regret and forward with foreboding. He expects the worst to happen and therefore is seldom disappointed. He has no ambition. If he had, he would not expect to realize it. Balance is the greatest thing in the world. Sabatier said of Jesus Christ, "In Him alone optimism is without frivolity and seriousness without despair." God grant us a mind like His; open our eyes to see the good and the beautiful, but forbid that we should close our eyes to the sadness and need; and may we find happiness in service.

Still a Need for a "Safe and Sane Fourth"

All Photos by International.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DESPITE the determined effort that has been made in recent years to reduce the number of casualties which seem to be an inevitable part of our celebration of Independence Day; despite all the warnings and cautions that are issued by the authorities before that day each year; despite the constantly increasing prohibitions on the use of explosives, the fact remains that America is still a long way from a "safe and sane Fourth," concerning which we have been hearing so much in recent years.

Did you know that more people have been killed celebrating American Independence than were in acquiring it?

Did you know that Fourth of July celebrations in the last four years have taken a heavier toll of American lives than did thirteen of the most important battles of the war in which our independence was won?

Perhaps you did not, but here is the bitter history of Independence Day celebrations which annually takes the lives of both children and grown-ups—mostly children—blinds them, maims them, or inflicts upon them dreadful burns. In 1923 a total of 250 deaths resulted from Fourth of July celebrations. In 1925, 70 died; in 1927, 30 were killed; their deaths while celebrating our nation's birthday and last year the Independence Day toll of death was 200.

Official records of the Revolution show that 7 Americans were killed at the battle of Lexington; 49 at Concord; 31 at Princeton; 12 at Cowpens; 92 at the siege of Charleston; 145 at Bunker Hill; 11 at Ft. Mifflin; 72 at Monmouth; 51 at Stone Ferry; 20 at Stony Point; 30 at Bennington; 22 at Saratoga and 2 at Trenton. That is a total of 534 Americans who gave their lives in winning American liberty. From 1923 to 1929 some 450 Americans gave their lives, needless, in "celebrating" the winning of that liberty.

Take two Fourth of July celebrations at random and the records show that during one of them, 22 were killed and 437 were injured. For the other the casualty list read 150 dead, and 80 injured. The total for these two celebrations is 150 killed and 417 injured. Add to this the casualty list for any Fourth of July celebration since 1900 (about the time when this "safe and sane Fourth" agitation started) and the total will be greater than the losses suffered by the Continental army when it was defeated at the battle of Germantown or during the siege of Yorktown which ended successfully the American struggle for liberty. The sufferings of the Continental army during the terrible winter at Valley Forge have become traditional. Yet, since 1925, more Americans have lost their lives during Fourth of July celebrations than were lost among the soldiers who shivered in the cold on those bleak Pennsylvania hillsides.

Statistics based on government records show that there were 4,044 killed and 6,044 wounded during the six years of the Revolution, when there was scarcely a day in which there was not fighting of some character going on somewhere in the land. In comparison with that record, look at the figures compiled by the American Medical association and the American Museum of Safety in regard to Fourth of July celebration casualties. During the last 30 years—and that means 30 Independence days—there were 4,300 Americans killed in fireworks accidents and 26,000 injured. How lucky it was for our nation that George Washington's Continental army merely had to fight for American Independence! If that same had had to celebrate the winning of independence according to our modern methods, it would have been wiped out of existence in a very short time indeed.

Now, these figures quoted above are for fireworks accidents alone and do not include the many deaths occurring after July 4 as a direct result of fireworks accidents or drownings and deaths from accidents to motor cars.

From 1903 to 1915 the American Medical association compiled statistics of Independence day fireworks casualties and found 1,902 deaths and 42,060 injuries were attributable definitely to fireworks. It was an average of 143 deaths and 3,237 injuries each year. In the celebration in 1908 of the "Glorious Fourth," 215 persons were killed and 5,000 injured. The fire loss that lay was $1,000,000.

Last year the National Museum of Safety ordered newspaper reports of fireworks casualties from all parts of the country for June and July. The result:

Killed	101
Injured	2,205

Included in the list of dead, were 62 children less than five years old; 54 persons turned to death by fireworks or bonfires; 20 children burned to death by "harmless" sparklers, and 21 children died from eating fireworks. "Unloaded guns" or stray bullets injured 32 persons last year; 30 persons lost one or both eyes, and 300 persons suffered injuries to their eyes.

Recently the country was horrified at the casualty list of 123 in an explosion in a hospital in Cleveland, Ohio. It has also been horrified from time to time when a fire in a school, a tornado, or a flood snuffs out from 100 to 150 lives. Yet it seems strangely unconcerned that every year more than 100 persons die and more than 3,000 are seriously injured in celebrating the "glorious Fourth." Fireworks are generally held responsible for the appalling death list while as a matter of fact, firecrackers, snuffs, plowbees, bombs and skyrockets account for not more than 5 per cent of the Independence Day casualties. Nor have all of the deaths been due to the explosions of these fireworks. Many of them result when sufficient care is not taken to keep fireworks from the smaller children. Many children have died from eating poisonous powder pellets, such as are used in dynamite canes. Even the so-called "safety" sparklers have proved fatal to youngsters who have eaten them, believing that they were candy.

But aside from the dangers of celebrating the Fourth there are other reasons why this is an occasion for a high mortality rate. The Fourth of July is the one national holiday in the year when the entire population drops all its work-day cares to swarm to the beaches, the mountains and other places of recreation. The result is an appalling number of drownings and deaths in automobile accidents which far exceeds the number recorded on any other day in the year. So it is apparent that although a great deal of good has been accomplished by those organizations which have sponsored this "safe and sane Fourth" idea and which calls upon every American to assume the responsibility of being a "safety engineer" on July 4, there is still much to be done in making the celebration of this day more in keeping with the spirit of the occasion. One hopeful sign lies in the fact that recreation is displacing fireworks to a certain extent. For the character of Fourth of July celebrations is changing, and for the better, according to a survey recently made by the Playground and Recreation Association of America. Without losing sight of the small boy and his need for "a good show" on this holiday the association has sent out suggestions for what it calls constructive community programs which have been tried and approved by various cities and towns during recent years.

Substantial progress has been shown, according to this survey, in changing the former Sunday Independence Day demonstration into occasions that, in some degree at least, intercept the local, state and national events from the standpoint of history and citizenship.

The Parent-Teachers' association has recommended a rural program as follows:

At 8:30 o'clock in the morning a band drawn on a truck moves throughout each neighborhood in town. A man with a megaphone calls out that games will begin at the school playground at 10:30 o'clock. These games are followed by a parade to picnic grounds, where there is a program of community singing and a speaker. A two-hour luncheon period follows. Then there are contests, baseball and story telling for children, followed by a patriotic pageant, the celebration concluding with a block dance.

The Playground and Recreation Association of America has emphasized that the paramount opportunities of community celebrations of the Fourth of July are:

"To recall with pride and reverence the courage, sacrifice and vision of the founders of American independence; to re-emphasize the principles of justice, democracy and tolerance upon which this government was founded and to encourage their continuance in the present and future; through appropriate ceremonies to dramatize the entrance into citizenship of native-born, who have recently come of age and of the foreign born who have just been naturalized; through games, sports, picnics, pageantry, festivals and other spectacles, through music and brief addresses, to bring neighborhoods and communities together in unified programs of recreation and entertainment suitable to the day; to promote safety, especially among children, by substituting wholesome and harmless recreation for the use of dangerous fireworks.

Is there still a need for a "safe and sane Fourth"? Let the following Associated Press dispatch, dated July 5 of last year, answer that question:

The lives of 265 men, women and children were a nation's sacrifice to the celebration of its 152nd birthday anniversary yesterday.

Fireworks claimed their share of victims, as they always have since the United States first began observing Independence day with skyrockets, pinwheel and cannon crackers. There were eleven such deaths in the entire country, according to the Associated Press tabulation.

Lakes and rivers, however, exacted the heaviest tribute of human life on the holiday. 148 drownings being reported. Motor car deaths ranked next in number with 44. Heat took 13 lives and lightning 5, while 4 were killed in plane crashes. In addition there were 15 deaths attributed to other causes directly connected with America's observance of the Fourth.

Two densely populated areas—the middle Atlantic states and the midwest—had more than half the country's total deaths for the day. In the former there were 55 fatalities, which was 5 more than occurred in the midwest.

The mountain states and the northwest had the best national records, with five deaths in each division.

Everywhere through the midwest the temperature was high, contributing both to deaths by heat and by drowning. The midwest led the country in the number of drownings with 35, although the middle Atlantic area had only two tawer.

The airplane accidents were at Joliet, Ill., where a pilot and two passengers plunged to death when the wing of their plane snapped, and at Beaumont, Tex., where one was killed.

Three of the motor car deaths came in Texas, drivers being killed in Oregon, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

The number of persons injured, many probably fatally, ran into the thousands. Fireworks exploded in a truckload of fireworks at Lamar, Mo., injured 24 persons as 2,500 gathered in the public square to witness the display. In the larger cities the hospital list of persons injured is observed at the day ran into the hundreds.

Thousands of Clocks

Must Tick in Unison

The British post office can claim to have the biggest collection of clocks in the kingdom. More than 20,000 timepieces have to be kept perfectly synchronized, although thousands of these are "behind scenes" and are used only for timing junction and trunk telephone calls. Every day at 10:00 a. m. and 1:00 p. m. Greenwich time is telegraphed to chief post offices in England, Scotland, Wales and North Ireland. In point of size the second collection in the kingdom is probably that distributed among the royal palaces. There are 1,000 pieces, of which Windsor castle and Buckingham palace have most. At Sandringham all clocks have been kept half an hour fast ever since the time of King Edward. In the houses of parliament there are about 500 clocks, necessitating a great deal of winding and vigilant synchronization.

Money From Cotton

When James Coats began to make thread in the little town of Fergussie, Paisley, Scotland, 104 years ago, few could have realized the enormous profits that would accrue to the family. Nine "cotton kings," headed by Lord Glentanar, who left an estate valued at $4,624,203, died millionaires, and the recent death of Mrs. Coats-Boyd, who left $748,118, brings the total to $21,293,274 for ten members of the family. Of this amazing sum amassed from the sale of reels of cotton, the state has claimed $3,104,523 in death duties.—Montreal Family Herald.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Table Is Work of Art

Three years of tireless effort have made Burton W. Blair, of Marion, Ohio, the possessor of a library table that is regarded as a work of art. Without the use of a single nail or screw, Burton has made a table that many collectors would like to own. The top is constructed of 1,537 pieces of wood, seventeen kinds being used to give the desired color effect. The table contains three designs, the Masonic square and compass, composed of sixty-two pieces of wood, and the American Legion emblem. Blair is a World War veteran. He began work on his table the day ground was broken for the Harding memorial at Marion, October 3, 1923.

Hill May Look Steep

We have all had the experience while out riding of approaching a hill from a distance. The hill looks very steep and difficult. We find often if we go ahead that as we approach the hill it seems less steep and if we keep on climbing, the first thing we know we are on top. It hasn't been nearly the task that we thought it would be.

Many difficulties that lie in the way of progress of a town appear, from a distance, to be insurmountable. As we look forward at the things that lie in the path of Carrizozo's progress we are prone to believe that it is futile to attempt to overcome them. They seem too large and difficult for our small means.

But, like the hill in the road, if we will resolutely push forward and look only at the object to be attained, the difficulties will seem less and less formidable. The way will open up if we will but persist, and if we gather together all of our energy and resource and use it for the building up of our home we can accomplish wonders for it and for every business in it.

Somewhere, someone has said: "If you don't give up too soon, you're bound to get what you go after, no matter if the whole world says you can't do it."

Disappointing

(Deming Headlight)

We haven't been able to grasp the facts, all the facts, concerning the oil row that has been the center of attention for weeks. However, we can and do remember certain things about the business—things that we can discuss without understanding any of the oil situation.

Governor Dillon had a notion that President Hoover's ideas were all to the mustard. Later he had a notion these same ideas are no good. And, since he retracts neither statement, it is supposed that he stands by his guns on both opinions.

One day Mr. Woodward (is he still lieutenant governor?) was against everything—next day he led the singing. When this same gentleman did his immelman turn concerning the labor commissioner bill last January or February darned if we didn't think he'd be caught by some of the legislative nicksers. Maybe he was, but we don't think so now.

So dangerous is "oil" that we can understand a child's dislike to the east or branch of the subject. When a product is so treacherous as to put men of Sinclair's power in jail and then heap additional sentences upon the same man is bad medicine. And when our state officials go to turning through themselves in an effort to be always with the wind—well, that lets us out.

Bitten by Rattler

A little three-year-old boy was bitten by a rattler, at one of the construction camps, on the railroad below here, last Monday. The little fellow was brought to the Paden hospital within 20 minutes after the snake had bitten him, the poison extracted and antidotes applied. The quick relief administered, no doubt, saved the child's life, as the effects of the poison were quite evident when the hospital was reached.

Cold Room Tests

The cold room of General Motors Research Laboratories designed to put cars through tests in freezing temperatures is one of the chief reasons for the heralded ability of the Chevrolet six to start easily and quickly no matter how frigid the weather. The cold room was the first of its kind in the automobile industry and was originated and developed six years ago by General Motors engineers, since which time it has been used as a pattern by other manufacturers.

The object of the cold room obviously, is to furnish Chevrolet engineers an opportunity to study at intimate range the reaction of the Chevrolet car to the temperatures an automobile must withstand in winter, weather left overnight in an unheated garage or parked for hours alongside the curbing of a street. It is, in short, an indoor "proving ground" where winter "weather" can be produced at will. Through the use of ammonia gas, such after the manner in which it is employed in cold storage plants or in establishments devoted to the manufacture of the thermometer readings can be raised or lowered by the engineers within a short space of time.

The use of an electro dynamometer, which is both motor and dynamo, is a part of the program which follows when a Chevrolet car is lowered on an elevator and rolled into the cold room. By means of the dynamometer it is possible to furnish a road torque for the car, when its rear wheels are placed against a set of steel rollers set in the concrete floor of the room. The torque can be made to parallel the resistance the car would encounter when driven outdoors on a highway in the same temperature. In other words, the car be made to haul its load in the cold room. To add to the severity of the test a blast of air is directed against the radiator, to simulate the wind resistance which the car would have to conquer on traveling in the open.

Experiments in the cold room can be made singly—and are with any unit of the car—the manifold, the universal joint, the action of the rear axle in low temperature, the performance of the fan, the starter, the carburetor, and so on. Likewise, the engineers are able to make a detailed study of how the motor itself reacts to the frigid atmosphere, and what effect 45 degrees below zero has on the lubricants and on the gasoline that are in the machine.

The "cast of characters" in the cold room consists of capable engineers garbed in aviators' suits, even to helmets, patterned after the costumes worn by round-the-world fliers, as the temperatures in which their work is done is on a par with the bitter cold which our fliers are made to undergo at an altitude of 10,000 or 20,000 feet.

Chevrolet engineers are constantly engaged upon experiments similar to the one outlined. Not all of these, however, are conducted in the laboratory. General Motors Proving Ground is used summer and winter for test purposes so that the car will be as nearly a perfect product as automotive science can produce.

News of the death of J. N. Bailey, at Washington, D. C., June 20, reached here the past week. Two granddaughters, Mrs. P. E. Johnson, Carrizozo, and Miss Amelia Fritz, Capitan, had gone to Washington to pay their grandfather a visit and while there their grandfather passed away.

Issac N. Bailey was born at Cleveland, Ohio, June 7, 1850. He went to Texas soon after the Civil War, as a mere youth, with a detachment of troops, serving in a semi-civilian capacity and came to Fort Stanton, as government blacksmith, in 1883. He lived in Lincoln county twenty-four years, and twenty-two years ago went to the Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Henry Fritz, Capitan, six granddaughters and great-granddaughter, who are recipients of many sincere condolences over the passing of the well known veteran and pioneer of Lincoln county.

It was our pleasure to have had an intimate acquaintance with and friendship for the deceased during his residence in Lincoln county, and our association with him in those early days was a delightful one. His open, pleasant manner, genuine compassion and perpetual good humor were outstanding characteristics that will long remain a pleasant memory to those who knew him best.

"Why do you tease me?" he groaned.

"Because men like you are made to be teased."

"Cells, you didn't really see any one, did you?"

"I swear I did. What I said, if I said anything—which I don't admit—I shall keep to myself."

A moment later Cells left on Bill's arm.

"Quarrelling?" he asked.

"I see too much of him," she said. "I think I shall fall in love with you again, shall I?"

"My duties don't permit," he laughed. "You look tired. Why not go to bed early?"

"How quickly you tire of me!" she mocked. "I looked for something subtler from you. Les couldn't have done worse."

Bill Feltham smiled. Evidently she was fonder of Les than she had admitted. She looked at him dancing with her mother, but Les would not even smile.

"She's hurt him," said Bill to himself.

"I'll take your advice," Cells said yawning. "Night-o, Bill!"

She had hurt Leslie more than she guessed, and much more than she would have done if she had known how miserable he was.

"It has been lovely to be here all this time," Les said presently.

"Les, that doesn't mean that you are leaving us?"

"I'm afraid I'll have to."

"Is it something Cells has said?" Leslie lied as calmly as he could.

"Not a thing! I've promised to run down to the Water Gap for a few days."

"You'll be back soon?"

Dina was distressed. She liked the boy, and hoped that Cells would marry him. Junior liked him. They all liked him, and yet Cells teased him almost to madness at times.

In his room Leslie composed a letter to Cells filled with that note of minor melancholy which drips from the pens of lovers with such exquisite ease. He told her he would be gone before she was up. He ended by saying, very darkly, that he had taken her advice and "jumped off the rock."

Leslie smiled bitterly as he reread it. It sounded like a veiled threat of suicide.

All the others had gone to bed when he finished. He put the letter in his pocket, and went out to see if any wild fauna was prowling about the Gray house grounds. Cells's encounter might have been fact or fancy. One could never be sure of Cells.

He gained the hall quietly, unbolting the door, and walked silently toward the abandoned swimming pool by the tennis courts.

"I'll be d—d!" said Leslie.

By the pool stood a very tall man—physically more splendid than young Barron, as Leslie himself would not have denied. The intruder heard no footfall on the grass. He was aware of another's presence only when Leslie tapped him on the arm.

He seemed far more embarrassed than Leslie.

"What's the idea?" he started, trying to shake off the other's grip.

Leslie was instantly reëstated. Apparently Cells had not heard the godlike stranger speak, for his speech was of the East side unrefined.

"I don't want you to disappear in your cloud of star dust until I've had a little talk with you. What are you doing here?"

Leslie snapped the question out in a threatening tone.

"I lost my way," replied the wild fauna.

"Don't lie!" said Leslie.

The wild fauna frowned a little. The white moonlight showed his heavy face to be capable of readily expressed emotion. Leslie saw, too, that for some reason he wished to make his story good.

"I was trying to find a short cut," said the intruder.

"You must make a habit of it. People don't lose their way two nights in succession when the moon is full. You were here last night, why?"

"H—!" said the wild fauna. "Is this Buckingham palace or the White House? I didn't see a sentry at the gate. If you don't like it, I'd better be on my way."

He turned away, as if to walk toward the drive.

"Not yet!" cried the younger man. "There's a little explaining to be done first."

Perceiving himself to be at a loss verbally, the stranger revised his tactics. This co-operating young man in evening dress must be taught a lesson.

"Be," said the wild fauna coldly. "I don't like your face!"

With that he brought his powerful right arm across with the idea of bodily striking the other of altering the color on his opponent's features to an expression of fear and agony. He was not quick enough. A left jab caught him on the nose.

"All right!" he said. "If you want it, you can have it!"

He made a vicious spring at Leslie

Barron. Anger beclouded him. Leslie's footwork irritated him. He asked his foe to stand still and gave it out man to man. He addressed him as a dancing master, and by other more opprobrious terms.

Finally he measured his distance for a blow that would end it all. The jab in evening dress could box, and was annoyingly active. He had played for the godlike body of a wild fauna, and was inflicting hurt.

Just as the strong arm of the intruder was drawing back, there came the sudden sharp cry of an owl, repeated three times. He paused for a second, and turned away his head. It was a tactical error, of which he was conscious too late. Leslie saw his opportunity and made the most of it. He landed a clean blow on the point of the jaw. The wild fauna dropped, and, in falling, his head struck the base of an Italian garden marble.

Leslie knelt at the side of his fallen foe. He was undecided whether to alarm the house by calling for help, or to try to carry this big bulk in himself.

A shadow came out of nothingness, and Leslie looked up into the bland face of Mr. Appleton. Since young

Mr. Appleton gave a skillful imitation of the cry of an owl. From afar came the call of another night-flying bird. The owl that was Mr. Appleton hooted again. Gradually the other cry came nearer. Presently there was a rustling in the thicket, and a bullet head was thrust through. "Luigi!" called Mr. Appleton softly. "Come at once!"

The man who wriggled out of the bushes was short, but of tremendous breadth. His exclamations and gestures when he saw what seemed to be a pair of dead men were stayed at a word from the other.

"Carry Jim below, and come back for this."

Luigi shouldered the two hundred and twenty pounds that was Jim with ease. He had been gone no more than five minutes when he returned and picked up the lighter man.

The bird sanctuary received Leslie Barron, heir to a great fortune, Luigi Bartoli, in whom the police were interested, and, last of all, Mr. Appleton, who breathed more easily as a heavy shower began. It would smooth out the trampled earth and make tracking impossible.

CHAPTER VIII

When Leslie Barron came again to consciousness, he thought he was in a prison cell. It was a small stone room, electrically lighted. He had been placed on an iron cot. A bandage was about his head, and his crumpled shirt front was blood-stained. Except for bruises and a throbbing head, however, he found that he was unharmed.

He reconstructed what had happened since he went in search of the wild fauna, and was forced to admit that the event which stood out most vividly was the inexplicable knavery of Frederick Appleton. The little man had always been so courteous, so respectful, so flattering. He had expressed his regard for the Barron family repeatedly. He had once embarrassed Leslie by comparing his head with that of the Hermes of Praxiteles; and then, inconspicuously, he had brought a loaded shotgun down upon it with such force that death had not been very far away. What was the wild fauna to Mr. Appleton, that he had sprung thus amazingly to avenge the unknown intruder?

The Lad in Evening Dress Could Box, and Was Annoyingly Active.

Barron had not shared the Hanby's confidence, he assumed that their former guest was still in good odor, a friend of the family, and now most certainly a friend in need.

Quickly Leslie explained what had happened. He did not want the little plump man to be frightened. At the moment, he regarded himself in rather an heroic light and Mr. Appleton warmly commended his courage.

"Ah, youth, youth!" apostrophized the little man, whose years had long bereft him of it. "Magnificent!" He stooped down almost timidly. "We must not alarm our good hostess," he said. "Let us carry him to the garage and awaken a chauffeur. I will take the ruffian's feet. You, as the stronger, take his head. I will satisfy myself that he has no weapon concealed."

From the stranger's pocket Mr. Appleton drew a short, heavy blivet of wood. He balanced it in his hand, frowning.

"I think this is what is termed a life preserver. It stamps its owner as a criminal by profession. You will probably be entitled to a reward, Mr. Barron. Now, if you will kindly take your end, we will remove him."

Obediently young Barron put his arms under the shoulders of the wild fauna. When Appleton remained standing, Leslie looked up. Staring down at him, the little man might have been his Uncle Russell.

Too late, Leslie saw his danger. The life preserver caught him squarely on the head, and he pitched forward over the other unconscious man.

Mr. Appleton smiled happily.

"Very neat!" he murmured. "For a first attempt, very neat indeed—oh, dear me, yes!"

Leslie rose from his cot and walked to the door. It was of heavy wood, metal covered. He could not escape.

No one answered his shouts. Leslie sat down again on the bed.

In his career as a somewhat reckless driver, he had more than once had to wait in a jail cell until he paid his fine. In every instance there had been a penetrating and unpleasant odor about these places. This cell had no such effluvia; nor, as he examined it more closely, had it the appearances of the regular jail. Yet it was plain that it had been constructed for no other purpose than to imprison.

Leslie called to mind his talks with Junior as to the threatened dangers surrounding the Gray house. In the beginning they had thrilled him; but then, as pleasant day succeeded pleasant day, Junior and he began to feel annoyed that they had ever anticipated peril.

Leslie was not yet nervous about the outcome of the adventure. The eldest son of Granley Barron could not disappear without a nationwide investigation. It would be proved that he had gone from the Gray house into the grounds. Cells would understand why he had gone. He had disappeared in evening clothes, leaving his other effects untouched. The whole neighborhood would be combed by detectives. In the end, his father might have to pay a huge ransom.

This last thought rather amused Leslie. Appleton was probably a professional blackmailer or kidnaper. None would suspect the suave, modest, hard-working little man. Had not Leslie seen the descending black-jack in his hand, he would not now have believed him guilty.

When Leslie Barron came again to consciousness, he thought he was in a prison cell. It was a small stone room, electrically lighted. He had been placed on an iron cot. A bandage was about his head, and his crumpled shirt front was blood-stained. Except for bruises and a throbbing head, however, he found that he was unharmed.

He reconstructed what had happened since he went in search of the wild fauna, and was forced to admit that the event which stood out most vividly was the inexplicable knavery of Frederick Appleton. The little man had always been so courteous, so respectful, so flattering. He had expressed his regard for the Barron family repeatedly. He had once embarrassed Leslie by comparing his head with that of the Hermes of Praxiteles; and then, inconspicuously, he had brought a loaded shotgun down upon it with such force that death had not been very far away. What was the wild fauna to Mr. Appleton, that he had sprung thus amazingly to avenge the unknown intruder?

Leslie rose from his cot and walked to the door. It was of heavy wood, metal covered. He could not escape.

POUR COOL WATER ON HEAD OF HOG

Icy Liquid on Animal's Body Will Do Much Harm.

When a hog gets overheated, pour cool water on his head, but not on his body, warns J. W. Wulchiet, extension specialist in animal husbandry at Ohio State university. "Pouring water on the body of the hog is for some reason very likely to kill him," says Wulchiet. "Pouring water on his head cools him off and helps him."

Hogs should be protected from any necessity for violent exercise during hot weather, Wulchiet says. There should be no reason why they should be compelled to run about or even to move more than necessary. They should have plenty of shade, and cool water available at all times.

"The hog has very little natural protection from the sun, and consequently some artificial protection must be provided," says the specialist. "Natural shade probably is best, but it is not always available in the hog lot. Where it is available a covering about four feet from the ground and open on all four sides will usually prove satisfactory. In some localities it may be advisable to give additional protection on the side in the direction of the prevailing storm. The shelter need not be elaborate. Almost any sort of open framework over which straw, fodder, or similar material is placed, will suffice."

"Many hog men use a wallow as an additional protection against overheating. If properly constructed and handled, the wallow is a great aid. There is one possible objection to its use for the man who is shipping hogs in the summer time. The hogs which are accustomed to the wallow will suffer more severely when they are loaded in cars for shipment, and the loss from this source will be greater than if the hogs had been inured to hot weather."

Give Additional Feed to Pigs in a "Creep"

When about three weeks old, the pigs will begin to eat grain from their mother's trough. It is important that they be now supplied additional feed, where the sows cannot get at it. This is best done by providing a "creep" in a corner of the paddock or pasture, with openings of such size that the pigs can run in and out while the sows are excluded. At first a little cracked corn seems about the most palatable feed. Later they may be fed a suitable mixture of concentrates, either being hand-fed all they will clean up twice or three times a day or else being fed by means of a self-feeder. For young pigs skim milk and buttermilk are easily the best of all protein-rich feeds. Nothing else aids so greatly in keeping them growing fastly. The concentrates fed pigs at this time should consist of the farm grains, with a considerable proportion of protein-rich feeds like middlings (standard middlings or preferably flour middlings), linseed meal, and tankage. If there is an abundance of skim milk or buttermilk, relatively little of other high-protein feeds need be used.

Live Stock Notes

The sow and pigs should not be kept in the individual pens longer than ten days.

Pigs will usually begin to eat a little feed when they are three to four weeks old.

Cattle and alfalfa make the best combination to keep fertility on the soil so let both be taxed alike.

Pigs fed semi-solid buttermilk gain faster than those fed skim milk. A possible explanation of the fact may be that the skim milk was too bulky.

Calves that have had no grain, but have suckled good milking cows, may be sold direct to the butchers at seven and nine months old at attractive prices.

A lamb that is kept gaining from birth until ready for the market will produce its gains at a lower cost than if it is allowed to fatten away its time on part of a ration.

Barley, in an experiment recently completed at Colorado Agricultural college, proved slightly superior and a little cheaper as a feed for hogs than corn for making gains.

Cattle feeders rarely do need a little protection because the cattle market fluctuates so much.

Hogs are very susceptible to both internal and external parasites. They must be guarded against these, or profit may be easily turned into loss.

As soon as the lambs are able to nibble at grass and hay, provide a creep for them where they can eat undisturbed by the ewes. This is very important from the standpoint of economical returns.

Lift Head Slowly After Driving

OFTENTIMES one is advised to keep the head down with the eye glued to the spot after the ball has been dispatched on its way. Usually this comes from an amateur, well meaning no doubt, but it is very bad advice. If one attempts to keep the head down during the follow through he will check the pivot, a most important thing to the completion of the shot.

The right shoulder cannot possibly find a way to do its part of the work as long as the head remains stationary and blocks it off. This is all right on a short shot where guidance is required, but it is not so good when one strives for a long wooden shot or a long iron. This is a very good point to remember. Turn gradually—not too soon, nor too late.

THIS IS THE IDEAL PUTTING STANCE

Correct and Most Effective Style of Putting

THE proper putting stance is of course the one which brings the best results no matter how awkward it may be. We all strive for perfection and naturally seek the easiest way of doing a thing.

Hagen, Jones, the late W. J. Travis, Jerome Travers, are examples of putting perfection. The easiest way to get the ball in the hole is to stand in a position in which no putt will be slighted. We should strive hard to make every putt, no matter how short. Long putts take care of themselves, as they are more or less of accident.

Take command of the club with the right hand and make sure that the weight of the body is on the left foot. Stroke the ball. Do not jab at it. Keep the club going through in a straight line and your putting will be improved 50 per cent.

THE SMALL BALL IS LIKELY TO FIND A CREVICE

A Large Ball Helps the Average Player

NOW there is talk of changing the golf ball. Those who play the best golf find the present small ball a help to them. Long hitters would not want a larger or lighter ball, despite the fact that it stands up on the grass better and does not seek every little crevice in its path.

The duffer, or Mr. Average Player, will find that the large ball will help his game at least 25 per cent. There is more surface to hit and the golfer thereby gains more confidence.

ARTIE

His Adventures in Love, Life and the Pursuit of Happiness
By GEORGE ADE

That's All, Mr. Wilson!

AT NINE o'clock the front room was gently baking with heat from the open fireplace, and the bridge lamp cast a mellow glow. On the marble-topped table was the photograph of a tense young man with plastered hair. The picture lay against a uerful prop of fanciful design which was intrenched between the ash tray and a copy of "The Rubaiyat." The overstuffed furniture was a bit ornate and confined in cloth.

The crayon portrait of Mamie's father looked down benignly on this room. The portrait represented a bearded, top with a fantastic forelock, a necktie polka-dotted with great accuracy and a shirt-front bearing a lump of gold.

On two occasions in his life, Mamie's father had borne an approximate resemblance to the man in the frame. One occasion was that of the visit to the photographer's and the other was of the Social Reception to the Big Noise of the Union. In the picture Mamie's father was clean and unwrinkled and he bore a placid, maiden-like expression which Mamie had seldom observed in him.

The crayon portrait had originally been a bargain for $2.50 and the agent who delivered it had put it in a frame at $14.00. The frame was a boiling foliage of white and silver. With such a picture in the house there was no chance for Mamie to lose regard for her father. As for the father, he escaped an affliction of pride by remaining in other rooms of the house.

"This crayon portrait dwarfed the 'Mona Lisa,' 'The Pantheon,' 'Sir Galahad' and the others. It was the luminous thing of the front parlor, and it was to the portrait that Artie Blanchard addressed himself as he that you did not speak when I met you last Sunday eve. If you have anything against me I would like to know in what regards I have not treated you right and like a lady, I am, very truly, your obedient servant.—Grant Wilson."

Artie—That wins the diamond capopener! I wonder where he got that fancy pass about "severn" friendships! I'll make that foxy boy think somebody's severed him if I take a crack at him! Did you answer it, Mamie?

Mamie—Not yet. Would you?

Artie—Sure. I'd send him one that'd burn a hole in the mail sack. You get your little old sheet of paper and I'll tip you off a few things to tell that boy. I'll bet you all kinds of money that I can send him something that he'll talk about in his sleep. You get the paper.

(Mamie goes to the next room and returns with writing material. She sets herself at the table ready to write. An attack of the giggles.)

Artie—Chop the laughs! Go on and write to him. I'll tell you what to say, just begin this way, "You're all right but I can't see you with a telescope."

Mamie—No, no, Artie, please no. I don't want to say it that way. Besides, I've got to address him first. Now, what shall I call him?

Artie—You could call him a good many things and make no error. I'll tell you these.

Mamie—I know, but shall I say "Mr. Wilson, Sir," or just "Dear Sir?"

Artie—Now, cut out the blarney! Get in plenty o' rough work right from the start. Burn him up. Call him "you poor egg." You've got to burn up one of them boys to make 'em understand. Just say, "Get out o' town and keep quiet and you may live to see the flowers again." If you give him that easy talk he'll think you're scolding him on. Let me write to his nob and I'll fix him. (Artie takes the pen and writes for a few moments. Mamie watching him and suppressing giggles.)

Now, how's this? This is the real stuff. (Reads.)

Dame Fashion Smiles

By Grace Jewett Austin

Grace J. Austin, becoming and continue to wear them with pleasure." Dame Fashion thinks this is just one of the clear sign boards to show that the world is on the way to great good sense.

Somebody this season has made one of those puzzling sentences that go forward and backward; "Style is the Thing, the Thing is the Style." That leaves the most of us poor mortals no wiser at all, if we said, "Style is the thing I want, and the thing that looks well on me is style for me." It might be a sensible interpretation of the mystic saying.

You remember that psychological story of the practical jokers who planned to meet a man, in succession, and tell him he looked nearly dead—and presently he was dead. So if ten women should tell you your hat was unbecoming—even though it suited you to perfection—by that time it certainly would be unbecoming, because all unconsciously your face would be so twisted up with chagrin that no hat would be becoming. There ought to be a society formed (always the first thought of an American) whose members would pledge to meet their friends with some such remark as "How becoming your new hat is to you!" "I like your new dress so much," and within a year, if that society gained a large membership, the beauty of the dwellers in this world would increase to a noticeable degree. We might try joining it without waiting for constitution and by-laws.

Dame Fashion thought the other day when gazing with admiration at an especially elaborate black silk pajama suit, all rich with embroidery in color, and remembering how a friend who had spent some weeks in a woman's clubhouse declared that pajamas were the universal wear there, that there has really been the most dramatic change in women's night wear since the early eighties. In all the list of changing fashions. For there was a time back in the seventies when many women wore bobbed hair—only they called it "shingled" at that time—while many nationalities of women in Europe have worn short skirts for centuries.

Colored ribbon bows, touches of color-embroidery, were ways in which the tide of color sent in little waves over lingerie, until it was at last all submerged by breakers of brilliant hues. Of course Dame Fashion is not forgetting the gay red flannel underwear which was once upon a time supposed to hold such value, but she still insists that no one in the eighties was brave enough to suggest red or black or gold for night wear.

Beginning with Paris, it is well to close with it. This summer Paris is supposed to "love" the nasturtium shades. And now ask any lucky grower of that cheerful flower how many shades that represent!

Used Flour Bag Makes Water Bag, Pad Covers

Covers for the hot water bag or its new cousin, the electric pad, are almost essential from the standpoint of hygiene. It is well to put on a fresh cover each time the bag is given to an invalid. Then, too, the rubber bags are not so slippery and elusive if they are covered, and the felt casing of the electric pad needs protection or it will very soon become soiled and unsanitary.

These covers can be made with very little effort and expense. A single used flour bag will make two such covers. The bags can be had from any bakery for a few cents apiece. The

Color of Hat Follows Color of Dress, Coat

The color of the hat follows the color of the dress or wrap with which it is to be worn. If it does not match, the dress should at least match the accessories, says a fashion writer in the Washington Star. Black hat or hats of natural-toned straw are best for general wear, since they look well with almost any ensemble. There are wide-brimmed straw hats of black for beach and country wear that are smart and unusual.

Straw or light felt hats or capucine or nasturtium shades are sometimes chosen to wear with dresses of those tones. Buttercup yellow is smart for wear with dresses in which the yellow note occurs. Some of the new fine straw yellow hats are trimmed with a soft brown.

Chartreuse hats have met with considerable approval among well-dressed women for wear with printed silks in which the chartreuse tone occurs. Lipsick red has been spoken of and so have Alouet and Persian blue.

Especially attractive are some of the wider-brimmed shapes of fine straw in soft brown tones. Small pink-and-white apple blossoms trim one of the most attractive of these.

Natural-colored lace is used to trim some of these fine brown straws and is also used on black straw or cria. A trimming arrangement ascribed to Rebours is that of placing gardenias at the back of the hat. A small shape of fine black straw has flat feather trimming of chartreuse.

Tough straws of the sort that were worn at Palm Beach and other resorts frequently have colored linen ribbon bands and bows to match the linen dresses with which they are worn. Sometimes a band of pique is used in this way when a pique dress is to be worn.

Bakou, bangkok, ballbunt, sisol, perle viaca, milan, tuscan are some of the straws most highly spoken of this season. Cris, which is light of weight, crisp and transparent, is often combined with crowns of more substantial material. Leghorn in natural tone in wide-brimmed, picturesque shapes has come into favor in parts of the country where shade hats have been called for.

Excellent Reason for Welcoming New Baby

Everyone had a good laugh during tea at Annapolis the other day when a socially prominent young matron made her first appearance since the advent of the family son and heir. She brought her five-year-old daughter.

Conversation naturally turned to the new baby and finally some one said to the little girl:

"And what do you think of your little baby brother?"

To which sophisticated Young America promptly replied:

"I'm glad it was a boy 'cause daddy was getting sort of dished with just mother and me around."—Los Angeles Times.

A Warning

Ellnor Glyn said at a Hollywood tea:

"Daring dress isn't necessarily the most becoming. A wife said to her husband one day:

"John, would people say if I went to the mask ball as a ballet dancer in tights?"

"They'd probably say, 'John answered, 'that I married you for your money.'"

String to Legacy

Provided she is found to be "industrious, sober and not given to jazz" when she reaches the age of twenty-five, Beatrice Coleman, of Philadelphia, will inherit an estate of several thousand dollars under the terms of the will of Mrs. Rebecca Rolan Williams.

Act Promptly

There is no moment like the present. The man who will not execute his resolutions when they are fresh upon him can have no hope from them afterward; they will be dissipated, lost, and perish in the hurry and scurry of the world, or sunk in the slough of indolence.—Maria Edgeworth.

Good Markets for Cars

Australia, now the leading foreign market for American motor cars and trucks, has a car for every ten of its population. New Zealand is running it a close second, with a car for every eleven people.—Gas Logic.

Blister, but Effectual

Humility is the true cure for many needless heartache.

First thing a poet needs is vocabulary.

Replanting Forests

Reforestation is gradually coming into its own, and during the last three years, 1,035,638 acres have been added to the state and community preserves. The state of Washington led in the increase, with Pennsylvania second. Three states which had not had state forests prior to 1925—Delaware, Georgia and South Carolina—have fallen in line.

The total of public-owned forests now is in excess of 12,000,000 acres.—Washington Star.

Radium Prices May Drop

Prices of radium are expected to drop with the development of the new radium mines in Portugal. Until now most of the world's supply has been obtained from mines at Kantsaga, in the Belgian Congo, which are owned and operated by a Belgian company. The present quotation is about $20,000 a gram, or approximately $1,700,000 an ounce.

Gretna, Ia.—"After my first child was born I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a reasonable condition. I could not walk across my room at times, I was so weak. A friend induced me to take the Vegetable Compound. Since that time I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Pills for Constipation, and I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanitary Wash. I am a housekeeper and I am still taking the Vegetable Compound as a tonic to enable me to do my work."—Mrs. E. F. VICKMAN, 829 Hancock St., Gretna, Ia.

"Oh, What Would He Think If I Sent Him a Letter Like That."

came in from the hallway, with his arm lingering at Mamie's waist, halfway between a caress and a hug.

"Hello, old boy," said he, and then he asked Mamie, "How does the old gentleman stack up?"

"He's back there now, reading the paper."

"All right. I wasn't lookin' for him." Artie pulled out a chair and seated himself in it sideways. He happened to see the photograph on the table.

Artie—Well, I'm not turned to the wall, eh?

Mamie—Don't begin talking that way.

Artie—I was just kiddin', Mamie. How's the ma-mah?

Mamie—She was asking about you today.

Artie—Say, on the square, has she got any time for me?

Mamie (warmly)—Why, of course, she likes you!

Artie—Well, the ma-mah's got a cold up in her head. I think she wants to marry you to a duke or something.

Mamie—Fooh.

Artie—How about the finger?

Mamie—What's that?

Artie—You know that crasher you were goin' to can. Have you written to him?

Mamie (excitedly)—You mean Mr. Wilson? I haven't told you, have I?

Artie—Well, I should say not. Has he been trillin' you again?

Mamie—No, but he wrote to me! It's the funniest thing you ever read. I'll get you the letter.

Artie—Gee, that boy's a stayer. If he don't keep off o' my route there'll be people walkin' slow behind him one o' these days. Let's see what he says. (Mamie goes to the adjoining room and returns with a letter and offers it to Artie.)

Mamie (with a pretty giggle as a preliminary)—Well, he begins by saying, "Miss Mary Carroll, My Dear Madam."

you taken for a ride. You are worse than a stranger to me. By joining the marines you will see more of the world and I will see less of you, and oblige."

Mamie (on the verge of hysterics)—Oh-h-h, what would he think if I sent him a letter like that?

Artie—He'd think he was up against the cold outside, and that's where he is, huh?

Mamie—Of course. You know that. (Artie drops the pen, and with great caution wraps his arm around her waist.)

Touch of Melodrama Appealed to Daudet

One morning about a decade ago, Leon Daudet found his sixteen-year-old son dead in a taxi cab, probably by his own hand, but he preferred to charge the police with staying him because of the monarchistic activities of his newspaper. He was given a jail sentence for defamation of public officials, but barricaded himself in his office with hundreds of his monarchist students. They had pistols, rifles and machine guns, but confined their hostilities to throwing glass bottles at policemen.

Jean Chiappe, head of the Paris police, did a little thinking, then called out every available piece of fire apparatus and stationed it prominently around the neighborhood of Daudet's paper. The firemen were lined up in military precision beside their equipment. Chiappe then called the leader of the revolt to the balcony and showed him the overwhelming superiority of the besiegers. Dramatically he asked that Daudet avert bloodshed. Given the opportunity to display his own melodramatic oratory, Daudet replied that he would not shed French blood in a personal quarrel—and surrendered.—Detroit News.

Lafayette Relic

A letter written by General Lafayette and addressed to Rev. William C. Woodbridge was found recently in the bottom of an old trunk in possession of T. R. Woodbridge, a descendant who lives at Upland, Calif. A dollar banknote of 1865, issued by the Bank of Vergennes, Vt., also was found.

Gossip Like Feathers

A peasant with a troubled conscience went to a monk for advice. He said that he had circulated a vile story about a friend only to find out that the story was not true.

"If you want to make peace with your conscience," said the monk, "you must fill a bag with chicken down, go to every doorway in the village and drop in each one of them one fluffy feather."

The peasant did as he was told. Then he went back to the monk and announced that he had done penance for his folly.

"Not yet," replied the monk. "Take your bag, go the rounds again and gather up every feather that you have dropped."

"But the wind must have blown them all away," said the peasant.

"Yes, my son," said the monk, "and so it is with gossip. Words are easily dropped, but no matter how hard you try, you can never get them back again."

The utmost care should be used in handling firecrackers of the giant variety. They are powerful enough to cause personal injury or serious damage to property. The latter was illustrated this week, when one of the windows in the Phipps' store was broken by the impact of a large firecracker exploding near it.

STEEL ECLIPSE

Starts sooner—pumps longer

Two windmills stand just across the road from each other. With the first sign of a breeze one started up smoothly and quietly. When the breeze became a wind, the other started with a groan and lumbered away only as long as the wind raised a dust in the road. Then it stopped as abruptly as it had started, while the other continued pumping for some time—then it finally came smoothly to rest with the last trace of the dying breeze.

That is the difference between a superior windmill and just a windmill. It is the difference between a superior windmill and a windmill. It is the difference between a superior windmill and a windmill. It is the difference between a superior windmill and a windmill.

It other words, it is the difference between the Fairbanks-Morse Steel Eclipse Windmill and just a plain windmill.

Come in and see this great advance in windmill construction. See the steel casting feature—the central lift feature—the mechanism that enables the Eclipse to act as a pump motor during two-thirds of every revolution of the wind wheel. You will form a new idea of how good a windmill can be.
