Lincoln County Democrats Name Strong Ticket

The Democrats of Lincoln county assembled in a regularly called convention at Capitán, Saturday, September 27, 1930. Mrs. Ellen C. Sellars, county chairman called the convention and announced its purpose.

William E. Kimbrell was chosen temporary chairman and Louise H. Coe temporary secretary. A motion was adopted authorizing the appointment of three committees; to-wit: Credentials, Resolutions, Permanent Organization and Order of Business, after which a recess was taken until 1:30 p. m.

At the appointed hour the convention reconvened, and the committee on credentials reported 90 delegates present or by proxy, and the report was adopted.

The committee on Permanent Organization Order of Business, recommended the election of E. M. Barber as permanent chairman and Louise H. Coe permanent secretary, and the order in which nominations should be made. The report was adopted.

For commissioner from the first district the names of John Kimbrell and Charles P. Fritz were presented, Fritz receiving a majority of the voter, was declared the nominee.

In district No. 2, Leo Smith, of White Oaks, and Sid Jones, of Corona, were presented as candidates. The ballot resulted in favor of Jones and he was declared the nominee.

The name of M. U. Finley was presented from the third district, and there being no other nominations, he was named by acclamation.

Mrs. Ellen C. Sellars was nominated by acclamation for county treasurer.

For the office of sheriff, three names were presented, viz: James Gatewood, Claude Braum and James H. Jackson. The ballot resulted in a majority for Braum, and he was made the nominee.

William E. Kimbrell was the only candidate presented to the convention for assessor, and he was nominated by acclamation.

Leo Smith was nominated for clerk without any opposition.

James M. Dow was named for the office of probate judge by acclamation.

Mrs. S. H. Nickels was named for county superintendent of schools by acclamation amidst great enthusiasm.

Mrs. Marie Cavanaugh was nominated for member of the legislature for the 16th district, and the mention of her name for representative brought forth round after round of applause.

The Resolutions Committee made its report, which reads as follows and which was unanimously adopted.

Be it resolved that this convention heartily endorses both the State and County tickets and that we urge support of our tickets in their entirety; for we must stand together and work for each and every one of our candidates if we expect to beat the Republican machine and money at the next election, Nov. 4th.

Resolved that we thank Mr. Kimbrell and Mrs. Coe and Mr. Barber for their efficient services today, and we are grateful for such good officers to give us their time.

Resolved that we are indebted to the Missionary Society and the ladies of Capitán for preparing dinner for us, thereby eliminating crowding and confusion at the hotels.

Resolved by the Capitan delegates that we feel highly complimented for this Convention to meet here again. While we are not so fortunate as some of our neighbor towns in accommodations, still we trust that each delegate has been made to feel at home and it is our hope that you will remember us in the future when choosing a meeting place.

Resolved that we extend our thanks to the good people of Capitán for the courtesies and hospitality extended us during this convention.

Whereas the temporary chairman of the State Republican Convention, in defense of the large expenditures of the Republican State administration during the past three and a half years on roads, declared in defense of said action that a different era had taken place and that the old mud road had vanished. We respectfully invite his attention to the roads of Lincoln County and wish to call his attention to the corrugated condition of every road in Lincoln County, every one of which is a mud road whenever it rains and almost impassable during such seasons, with one exception; that being a short stretch of about three miles of Federal road on the Raidoso, which was built and is being maintained by the U. S. Forest Service; and notwithstanding this deplorable condition of the Lincoln County highways we witness with great degree of dissatisfaction the employment of hundreds of men on highways in return for the small benefits that accrue to the traveling public. We recognize the purpose of the employment of these men, because it is generally understood and the indefensible practice is known to be one that such employees must be Republicans or must agree to support the Republican ticket. Such practices we condemn and will forever hold that it is the duty of every citizen of every department in the State that results shall be obtained for money spent in all public works and we utterly oppose the system of the State Highway department and its satellites in Lincoln County in the construction and maintenance of roads in said Lincoln County and declare that such action is contrary to and detrimental to the interests of the Tax paying public of the County and such action we thoroughly condemn because we have no sympathy with the building of roads on paper nor the employment of loyal Republicans just before the vote is cast on Nov. 4th.

Too Much Hoover

Washington, Sept.—Philip F. La Follette, younger brother of Senator La Follette, who was nominated for Governor of Wisconsin on the Progressive Republican ticket over Governor Kohler, an Administration Republican, by a majority of 110,000, made the Governor's support of Mr. Hoover at the Kansas City convention and his allegiance to the Hoover administration thereafter an issue of the campaign, according to press dispatches recording La Follette's overwhelming victory.

The successful candidate accused the National Administration of responsibility for depression, and stressed the "full dinner pail" issue declaring that Kohler's support of Hoover before and after the Presidential election should cause all workers to turn on him," according to the press dispatches.

The effect of these campaign utterances is shown by press dispatches which said that "at Kohler's headquarters party leaders attributed the Governor's defeat to 'a burden of carrying Hoover'."

Saga of Billy the Kid

The above caption is the title of a picture, a talking drama, that will appear at the Crystal Theatre November 26-27-28. The following, which is taken from the press sheet, pretty clearly outlines the features that have been reproduced, which portray the stirring times of the "Lincoln County War."

"Can you imagine a land without law?"

"Can you conceive of a boy of 18, brave, courageous, set down in such an environment?"

"Then," said John Mack Brown late All-American half-back of the University of Alabama, "you are able to judge some of the mental gymnastics I went through in trying to change my mental attitude to that of William Bonney, who, before his death in 1881, 21 years old, had become the reputed 'most dangerous man in the West'."

"It was not as hard a job as I had thought, changing my ideas into those of 'Billie the Kid,'" said Brown as he lounged through noon hour at the studios. "I simply said this to myself, 'John, supposing that at 12 you had been taken to a Western city where men were shot in the streets every day? Supposing further that, filled with the lawless spirit of the times, you avenge an insult to your mother and fled from the law? Suppose, finally that in some sections of your State certain peace officers had become more murderous and more thieving than the worst of thieves? Johnie, under such circumstances, what would you do?'"

"Answering those questions in my mind, it wasn't difficult to understand why William Bonney proceeded as he did, why he became the most courageous, the most dangerous and the most tragic man of all the West."

"William Bonney was not naturally a bad boy. In other times and other places there isn't the shadow of a doubt he would have become a leader of men obeying the law and respecting it. But he was the product of his times. He lived when to obey the law was the unusual thing, and inevitably he had to take the consequences of this attitude."

"Personally, I think every growing boy should be made to see King Vidor's presentation of the life of 'Billy the Kid'. Certainly it is an enduring lesson in the unbreakable rule of life that breakers of the laws of men and God never go unpunished."

"William Bonney was a laughing, likeable boy, well groomed, polished in manner. Every one who met him liked him except his enemies. Billy the Kid's hand and gun was turned against these. He thought it was the only way, and he had to die to discover his mistake."

"Likewise as Sheriff Pat Garrett, Wallace Berry shows youngsters what the duty of a police officer is. Garrett really loved Billy. They were great personal friends, but William Bonney became a menace to the community and there was but one course for Garrett to follow."

"I greatly enjoyed doing this picture. Actors get ahead only through great parts, and this is just about the finest man's role I have ever seen. More important, however, it is not a fictional character. Billy the Kid was a real person, and he left behind him memories in the minds and hearts of hundreds which have come through clearly to this day."

"As a story 'Billy the Kid' is very melodramatic, with a three-

$135,000,000 Loss to Federal Treasury

Washington.—In contrast to the optimistic forecasts of returning prosperity by administration spokesmen and to the denials of financial extravagance in the conduct of the government from the same source, are the Treasury Department figures showing that since the beginning of the present fiscal year on July 1 up to September 11, there was a decrease of $96,108,005 in receipts and an increase of $39,162,264 in expenditures, exclusive of public debt payments. This was a loss of $135,270,269 compared with the same period a year ago.

Expenditures of the principal departments for current operations were $25,129,430 more than for the same period of 1929 and all other expenses increased the total to $39,162,264. A part of the increased expenditures was the sum of $26,000,000 for the Farm Board. Another increased expenditure was the postal deficit, which is about $10,000,000 larger for the 1930 period than for that of 1929.

In the meantime, the President is reported hopeful of continuing the one per cent reduction in income taxes made last year, but Treasury officials are reported as skeptical. This reduction, however, if possible to be made, would affect only a small per cent of the people.

"Dad," said son, who was reading the automobile news, "do you think they will ever find a substitute for gasoline?"

"They have one now, son, and I wish you'd give it a trial."

"Hub?" queried son incredulously. "I've never heard of it anyway?"

"Shoe leather," explained dad.

I wish to announce to the voters of Lincoln county that the Democratic party has again honored me in this district. Having served the people of this county the past two years in this capacity, I invite an investigation of my record and upon that record, I would still be great, but as a responsibility to the support of the voters of Lincoln county at the polls November 4

Have Confidence Prepare to Win, and Then Go Ahead.

The story is told that one day an experienced golfer came in the course of his game, to a very difficult's hot. A large pond of water lay between his ball and the green which was his objective. A friend playing with him exchanged the ball with which he was playing, for an older ball, with the remark, "I expect this will fall in the water anyway and I might as well use the old ball. It is about done for anyway." He shot and fell short. The other put the used ball with which he had been playing, into his pocket and took from his golf bag a brand new ball, with the remark, "I am going to make this one." His shot landed safely on the other side of the water.

The secret of his success was his confidence that he could succeed and then his determination to proceed as though success were assured.

This is often true of the individual.

It is also true of a town. A town that believes it can progress and secure the things it desires, and goes ahead on this basis with a definite goal in mind, will, in the majority of cases, succeed in attaining its goal.

For the Legislature

I wish to announce to the voters of Lincoln county that the Democratic party has again honored me in this district. Having served the people of this county the past two years in this capacity, I invite an investigation of my record and upon that record, I would still be great, but as a responsibility to the support of the voters of Lincoln county at the polls November 4

Exhibiting Byrd's Antarctic Relics

Admiral Byrd's Antarctic expedition ship, the City of New York, has been converted into a temporary Antarctic museum which is attracting many visitors along the Atlantic coast. Capt. Ashley McKinley, aerial photographer of the expedition, is seen explaining some of the exhibits to a group of boys.

We All See What We Expect to See

By M. K. THOMSON, Ph. D.

A GROUP of people are talking. You hear voices but cannot distinguish what they are saying. Let one of them mention your name and you hear it distinctly. You are all set and ready for your name even though you are deeply interested in other things. There is a high degree of coordination among all the machinery involved in the ear, the brain centers, and all the neural connections. Years of practice and constant repetition have produced in you an automatic response to your name.

What concerns us personally. The mention of the name is a signal which releases the mechanisms of interest and effort.

Similarly, a mother is set for the cry of her infant. Her child is in the background of her mind at all times. This type of interest quickens the senses by a tenseness and accommodation very much like the lifeline displayed by the rabbit with cocked ears listening to a strange sound that may prove to be a danger signal.

The proofreader's keenness for misprints, the railroad man's for signals from the engineer, the customs officer's remarkable knack of catching smugglers are further illustrations of seeing what we expect to see. In the newspaper game the uncanny way reporters have of getting hold of unusual news, often referred to as having a nose for it, is a still further instance of the same sort of thing.

Thus, for similar reasons though in a milder degree of efficiency, we all see what we expect to see. The idea in mind, the image of the thing, quickens our senses and puts us in tune with that object. We see it more quickly and accurately because the stage is all set for that very purpose.

JUST A PUPPY'S STYLE

By Douglas Malloch

I OWNED a puppy in my youth. That puppy taught me many a truth. Of course, I haven't any now. For dogs are things, wives won't allow. But anyway a pup I had when I was just a little lad. And many things he taught to me that served me well, as you shall see.

There isn't time to tell them all, but here is one that I recall: He overwhelmed me when we met. He tore my clothes, he splashed me wet.

But I forgave him, for I knew, whatever damage he might do, that that was just a puppy's style. The rascal meant well all the while.

Friends frankly speak, and some advice. And relatives will criticize. But if they didn't love me true they wouldn't take the trouble to try to help and often hurt. Just like that puppy splattered dirt. But do these things, I still recall, because they love me, bless them all!

Some Winsome Autumn Dishes

As some lone miser visiting his store, stands at his treasure, counts, recounts it o'er. Boards after boards his rising captures fill. Yet still he sighs, for boards are wanting still. Thus to my breast alternate passions rise. Pleased with each bliss that heaven to man supplies. Yet still a sigh prevails and sorrows fall. To see the hoard of human bliss so small.

A SKYROCKET'S SALUTE

Skyrocket was beginning to feel a bit impatient. He had been lying there on the shelf of that little cluttered shop for what seemed to be years, waiting and waiting.

"Here it is the Fourth of July," he sputtered to himself, "and here we are imprisoned in this old shop, while outside all sorts of exciting things are happening. Oh, why doesn't somebody buy me?"

"Keep still!" said the sharp voice of a red firecracker nearby. "Of course, if you had such a handsome cylindrical shape as I have and were wrapped in a tight red jacket, there might be some excuse for your wanting to show yourself. But just look at you! Nothing but a stick of wood with a head and a tail."

Skyrocket raised his tissue-capped head in question and spoke with righteous indignation.

"You don't know what you are talking about! When a match is set to my tail, I 'soar high up in the skies and then I blossom out into a shower of red, white and blue stars. Sometimes I let fall a lovely spray of golden balls. Members of my family show their beauty in many ways. Why? You don't even leave the ground."

"No such thing," retorted the firecracker.

"Oh, hush, both of you," interrupted the slow, deep voice of a Roman Candle.

"There is no comparison of either of you with me. When I am lighted I give a deep, red light and last pretty nearly the whole evening." Upon saying this he gave a scornful look around him at the torpedoes, the electric sparklers and the giant crackers. The firecracker started to say something more, but just then the door of the shop opened and in walked a boy.

"Give me a skyrocket, please," he finally said, and laid the money on the counter.

The shopkeeper's hand went toward the shelf piled high with fireworks of every length and size. His hand grasped Skyrocket firmly.

"Thank you, sir," said the boy, and walked out holding the happy Skyrocket.

"Good riddance to bad rubbish!"

said the Red Firecracker, spitefully.

"Ah, well," said the more kind-hearted Roman Candle, "he was young and wanted to see life. You can't blame him."

In the meantime, Skyrocket was rejoicing in his new surroundings. He glared in the music of a big brass band nearby, and in shouts of children.

"Why, it's getting dark!" he exclaimed. "But then, I will show off all the better against a dark sky." His thoughts were rudely interrupted as he felt himself fall to the ground and heard the footsteps of the boy running off.

"Am I to be left here until the rains come and beat me into the ground?" he sighed. "This isn't what I was made for. I would much rather have been left in the shop than on this damp ground." Long minutes passed. Then suddenly the voice of Skyrocket's owner came to him again.

"It's almost sundown. We'll send it up as a salute to the Flag before it is furlled for the night. See that tall building with the flat tin roof and the big flag above it? I am going to send this skyrocket past and above that flag. Watch now!" With quick fingers the boy set the end of the skyrocket into the ground. Then with a piece of punk he lit the fuse.

"Stand back, boys!" he cried. The flame crept up the length of the fuse. Then it touched the powder and—Bang! Skyrocket was off at last on his great adventure.

Through the darkening sky he sped, up, up and up. He met several of his smaller relatives on the way, who flickered at him and disappeared into space. Sure enough, he was headed for that roof.

"Ah," he sighed, "at last I am to flower into my true self. I only wish Red Firecracker could see me now."

At that very minute something went puff! and he exploded into a pattern of lovely red stars which floated in the air and there near Skyrocket was the big Flag, waving proudly.

"Good evening," said Skyrocket, politely.

The flag fluttered quietly in answer. "It isn't evening. If it were I would be lowered from the standard and put away. It is considered dreadful to leave a Country's Flag up after the sun goes down."

"Oh, I'm sorry," puffed Skyrocket. He hated to be caught in such a piece of ignorance.

As he spoke there was another little explosion and he appeared this time in twinkly white stars.

The flag didn't show the least bit of alarm at the sudden changes. He was used to skyrockets.

"Your career is short but brilliant,"

THE HUMBLE PEACOCK

Once there was a peacock whose feathers were a dull mud color.

Seeing his companions in their glorious green and blue plumage, the homely peacock was indeed unhappy.

When he drew near, the other peacocks disdainfully stirred their feathers and left him to play with an ugly pig.

The pig was sad because his tail refused to curl and his fellow porkers had deserted him for this reason.

"Pig," quoth the brown peacock, "I sympathize with you in your sorry uncurly thingamajig."

"Peacock," returned the pig, "I grieve for you in your mud colored feathers."

Along came a lovely lady in a brown gown. Cried the lovely lady, "Oh, you adorable peacock! You match my dress perfectly. Come right along with me to the King's party. You are a rare and wonderful bird—the only brown peacock in the world. All the court will envy me for having you."

"Thank, lovely lady," said the peacock, "I would like to walk by your side, but please do not leave behind my poor dear friend."

"Of course the pig will come along, too," smiled the lovely lady. "His straight tail will be just right to hold my golden bracelet when I swim in the royal pool. Let me see how it looks."

She hung her golden bracelet on the straight tail of the pig, and he was the proudest, happiest pig that ever gruffed and grooped.

The lovely lady, the peacock and the pig made a great stir at the King's party. The lovely lady took first prize for having the most original pets.

he said, "It is not your fault that you have but a moment to live."

"That moment is glorious," replied Skyrocket. "I give it all to my country!"

And even as he finished there was a final burst of glittering stars, blue like those in the flag. Then—in the way of skyrockets—his light went out, his brilliant moment of patriotism was quite done.

Measuring Help Only By the Need

By JEAN NEWTON

A WOMAN who gives much of her time as well as money to charities and social work was telling a group of friends something of how the other side lives.

After wringing their hearts with pictures of want and need and misery which are the daily fare of the social worker, my friend said she would tell us a funny story.

"I had a call," she said, "to visit a family where the children could not go to school because they had no shoes. Since it is our policy to give relief first and investigate afterwards, we immediately sent for the two boys in the family, two complete outfits of shoes, socks, underwear and little suits with button-on blouses.

"When I visited the family I found, while it was true that there had been considerable illness in the family, the father having just been released from the hospital, that they occupied a very comfortably furnished five-room apartment without any signs of need."

"I asked the mother if the package of clothes sent them had proved of assistance, and she replied that the shoes and socks for the boys were too large.

"Very well," said I. "If you will wrap them up and give them to me, I shall be very glad to have the smaller size sent to you at once."

"And the underwear," she added, "is too long."

"Let me have that, too," I said, "and I shall send you shorter pieces tomorrow."

"And you know, little Jimmie doesn't like the kind of suits you sent with the button-on blouses. He likes the kind that don't button. So would you mind taking them back and exchanging them, too? And while you're at it, he likes the Peter Pan kind of collar."

The blouses were not exchanged, my friend told us.

"But I'm surprised that you didn't just drop them," said a woman in the group who was listening to the story. "People who are so unappreciative and ungrateful don't deserve to be helped."

A humorous and understanding smile played about the eyes of the woman whose life was one of service and helpfulness.

"If we were to limit our charity only to those who properly appreciated the vitality of our work would be lost. We measure our help only by the need. We give with thought not of gratitude, but of the need involved."

That spirit would mean much to many people outside the lanes of organized charity. Many problems in families, many questions of right and conscience and being satisfied with one's self would be helped by that principle of measuring help "only by the need."

County Health Service

Through the help of the Commonwealth Fund of New York, the State Bureau of Public Health, the county and the Carrizozo Woman's Club a county health service is being established for Lincoln county with a permanent full time health nurse.

"The health of the child is the strength of the nation," says a poster from Washington. It is the understanding of health laws and the forming of good health habits that is going to gradually prevent illness and build up the strong race.

The first contact of the nurse in this county is through the schools. Teaching, examining, weighing, measuring and vaccinating and urging parents of children, who need defects corrected, to go to their doctor or dentist; for the following up in the schools and homes of the examinations and suggestions is the only way to give the child his full chance to develop.

There will be a county health office in the court house where the nurse may be found certain days for consultation, weighing of babies, literature on child care, etc. The opening of the office to the public will be announced later. County Nursing Department.

STEEL ECLIPSE

Starts sooner—pumps longer

Two windmills stood just across the road from each other. With the first sign of a breeze the one started up smoothly and quietly. The other became a windmill, the other started with a great deal of fuss and noise, as the wind raised a dust in the air. Then it stopped as abruptly as it had started, while the other continued to pump for some time—then it finally stopped. It was ready to rest with the last trace of a breeze.

The difference between a super windmill and a windmill. It is the difference between accurately machined gears and ordinary cast gears; the difference between turned, ground and polished shafts and ordinary steel shafts; the difference between machined and polished bearings and ordinary bearings; the difference between running in oil and running with dry gears.

In other words, it is the difference between the Fairbanks-Morse Steel Eclipse Windmill and just a plain windmill.

Come in and see this great advance in windmill construction. See the self-lubricating feature—the center lift feature—the mechanism that enables the Eclipse to actually pump water during two-thirds of every revolution of the wind wheel. You will form a new idea of how good a windmill can be.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Ernestine is hurt because Will insists he must take Poole, who is drunk, home and leave her in care of his friend, Tucker. It brings their first quarrel.

"Undress and get in bed," said Will. "What do you mean, sitting here, without more clothes on, in this room? Do you wish to harm yourself?" She laughed. "You are concerned about my welfare, aren't you?" she taunted him, and for answer he seized her shoulders and gave her a quick little shake. "Ernestine," he demanded, "will you do as I say?" She stood trembling, fighting down the stupid well of tears, reaching out after her departing nigger. "Will," her voice was as low as a vital as his own. "I'm in such a rage that I have got to talk to you. You can't treat me this way. You can't leave me to the courtesy of strangers. You can't take me to such places—where there's drunkenness and immorality. You have got to be a better husband to me than that. I have given up everything for you—everything." "When you are in bed, I'll talk to you," he answered, as he threw off his coat and went to the wardrobe and brought her her warm dressing gown, nightgown and fur-lined moccasins. He undid the fastenings of her dress and before she could arm herself against him, he lifted it off over her head. The satin slip, the silken underthings—her body was like cold marble. In a moment, it seemed, she was in nightgown and dressing gown, in bed, and he was drawing off her gossamer hose and chafing her feet in his own cold hands until the mottled skin showed red with blood. Then he tucked her under the covers and brought a chair and sat down beside her, not touching her. Ernestine laughed again. "If you really cared," she said, her eyes dark with anger and pain, "whether I were warmly in bed you might have come with me to see." He was silent. He was very pale. Small beads of perspiration stood upon his forehead in the cold room. "I am not likely to be ill," she said scornfully. "Don't be afraid of that." Still he did not speak, but looked at her as though he were trying to arrange some momentous decision in his mind. He took a cigarette from his pocket with hands trembling so that when he lighted it he burned himself, and lunged the match away with an angry exclamation. "Ernestine," he said, turning to her, "there is one thing that I will never take from you. You are hysterical now, but no matter how angry, how sick or upset you are, there is one thing that you must never say to me. Never again. I won't take it from you." He drew the smoke into his lungs with an effort at self-control, while she stared up at the blur of him, her dark eyes swimming with tears. "I didn't know that you gave up anything for me," he said. "I thought this marriage was on both sides the satisfying of a strong need. I never asked you to make a sacrifice for me. At least, that is not the way I thought of it, and I don't think you did either. But if you made one, I will never ask you to continue it. Any time you want what you left you have only to put on your hat and go back and get it. This must be understood between us. You are under no compulsion to stay with me. If you gave up other things, it was because this was something you wanted more. Either our marriage was a gain for both of us, or it was a mistake." "Why don't you go ahead and remind me that I proposed to you?" she said, too helpless in her own emotions to be scathing. "Did you?" he asked, coldly. "I thought the matter was spontaneous. I thought it was inevitable. Don't cheapen yourself with such a thought. But however it happened, it was not a sacrifice. I will not be sacrificed for. I don't want anybody to give up anything for me. Understand?" There was a moment of silence, and he went on smiling. "It may be that before we are through with this business of marriage it will be really hard for us. I don't know that I'll ever be what your family considers essential in a husband—a good provider. I may never make more than a small living for me. Sometimes, like now, I feel such power as me that I could go out and take the life by the throat. I feel as though there are big things in me, Ernestine. But perhaps all human beings feel that way. There are other moments when I'm not even sure that I can hold the job I have. What then? Maybe there is worse ahead of us, instead of better. What of that? Do we love each other, or don't we? Are we married, or are we simply having a lovely time and will go home when the party is over? You can do as you like. I will not interfere with your actions, but neither will I come home and account for my own. If Mr. Poole is drunk and it seems necessary to me to go home with him, you must allow me the exercise of my own judgment. I didn't leave you unprotected. In reality, you left me." "It wasn't only that." She was actually defending herself. "It was everything. Lillian and Loring coming in on us, and Mr. Pastano—"

Half weeping, still partly in the hold of anger, she told him all that Mr. Pastano had said to her. He listened attentively, but made nothing of it. "What do you care," he exclaimed, "what that bully says? It's only a compliment. It's only a denial of his whole code of morals. The fact that you could sit in his dirty place and still be so clean that even he could see it, gives the lie to all he says." "I don't understand anything," wailed Ernestine. "Only I was so hurt—I had to go off alone with them. You might have come with me. I was so happy, so thrilled, and then everything was spoiled without any warning. I can't adjust myself to things like you do—I don't understand. Of course I care what Mr. Pastano thinks. I don't want him to think you would take me out to associate with prostitutes!" He sat on the edge of the bed now and held her hand and smoked another cigarette and thought about this. But they had come back into a calmer place. He began to reason with her in his steady voice, looking down at her with his kindled, intelligent eyes. "You see, Ernestine, he's got the old line on things, and we, I believe, want the new. Pastano's morality and virtue are only for women. I've been there often, and he's made me very welcome. How unreal it is. Virtue a woman's prerogative, and a stone wall about her to insure it. A harem! You don't believe in walled gardens for wives, do you, Ernestine? After all, no man can protect his wife's virtue for her, if she is determined to throw it away." "You think then that a husband has no responsibilities at all?" "I didn't say that. Certainly he has responsibilities. He is to provide for her to the best of his ability. He is to share all his earnings and his honors with her. He is to shelter her and speak kindly to her and love her and not find fault. He is to be faithful in word and thought. He is to be natural in his relationship with her and avoid sentimentality. But also, she is to be a woman grown and unafraid, his equal, not a child for him to protect like a child." "You are so hard," she wept, "so hard with me." "He bent and kissed her and pressed his face to hers. "It's life," he said. "We have to grow up. Life is hard." Ernestine awakened next morning to find that the pain and confusion of the night before had vanished into a new and not unhappy perspective on her life.

Copper Mines of Chile Worked by the Incas?

What is now the world's largest known copper ore deposit was worked by the prehistoric Incas, judging by remains that have been found at and near the copper mines of Chuquibambilla, Chile. Within the mine, primitive tools have been found from time to time, such as stone hammers and wooden shovels, as well as unworked remains of early Indian miners, one of which is now at the American Museum of Natural History in New York. The ruins of Pucuro, an ancient fortified city destroyed by the Spaniards during their first invasion of Chile, are 20 miles from Chuquibambilla. Ancient graves belonging to this prehistoric city have yielded beads and other articles of copper as well as bead necklaces made from brochantite and azurite, minerals characteristic of the Chuquibambilla deposits. The Incas, reputed as pre-Columbian, America's best miners and metal workers, conquered this part of Chile about 1483. It is reliably estimated, and the old mines may, therefore, have been worked at least ninety years before the discovery of America.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Reason Enough
The Japanese have no swear words. Thus we know they never get out of a bath to hear an apologetic voice saying: "Wrong number."—Chicago Republic.

For the first time she could see what a blow it had been to mamma and papa to have her living in Erie street, with no margin, no possessions, no possibility of restraint or economy. How difficult it was—perhaps for their sakes she ought to co-operate with mamma and papa to do something for them. Enough money for a decent flat—a small comfortable house—it would be so much easier for mamma.

But Ernestine felt again the cold wind on her cheeks, remembered vividly how she had wept, and how she had said, again and again, "I promise, Will—I promise." He had asked her for no such statement. She had done the bargaining. Whatever it cost—to her family or to herself—she would keep that promise to Will, and live on what he brought her until he himself told her to do otherwise.

Ernestine began to wonder if she would be as good a wife and mother as Elaine Briceland, when the time came that Will had made good.

She paused to consider this thought and smiled happily, for now she saw that for the first time she was entirely confident of WETC success. It had been as much longed for a conviction before, but now she was sure. How hard he was! His hardness brought only admiration this morning, the practical respect of a practical person. "If you want to go back, you've only to put on your hat and do it!" She wondered how many men had the courage to take a stand like that.

She did not regret the quarrel at all. Her marriage had attained a new reality. She knew that she was not simply having a good time. She knew that she could not go home when the party was over. They had advanced from the honeymoon period into permanence.

In what way, here and now, could she make this new feeling practical, make it effective?

How would they meet the obligation of childbirth? Would she go home to mamma or to some hospital? They would have to plan without mamma if they were to be consistent. She understood that babies were frightfully expensive. She had read articles in magazines about them. Yet thousands of women with no more money than she possessed had babies. She would have to find out how they managed.

She would have to see a doctor, ask questions, answer them. She would have to find out the rates at different hospitals, under different conditions. And after she had investigated the matter and decided on her own plan, she would have to begin to save a definite amount every week, out of Will's pay, so that they might meet the emergency. That would be fun—to have money in her hand, when her time came!

She decided to say nothing to Will about this, until she knew. Like her mother, she must exercise her virtue privately and let results speak for her. She had a few dollars with which to open a savings account. There was a bank nearby, a branch of a downtown bank. She would get a metal coin chest for herself and Will.

Her mental activity now became physical, and she rose and dressed, kissed Will lightly on the cheek, and left a note on the dresser for him, lest he think she had taken his advice and gone home. Downstairs she found a box full of roses for her, and a card in it with a few words written in an erect elaborate script: "To beg forgiveness for my rudeness, and to express the hope that we may be real friends some day.—L. S. Pastano."

Ernestine gave the roses to Mrs. Bennett without comment and went out.

Last April she had been a school-girl. Now she was filled with the solemn importance of wifehood and motherhood. The sweet air filled her with happiness. Her husband's face fled before her mind's eye, down the long curve of boulevard, an indignant countenance, fery, strong. Her heart contracted within her at the thought of him and his love.

The visit to the doctor's was prolonged, but she reached mamma's house in time for lunch, and found the two women so full of Lillian's plans that she kept her own secret.

Determined to make the day complete she left early and set out for the long tiresome street car ride to the Northwest side. She was ashamed to realize how few were the visits she and Will had made to the little house where his mother and father lived. She was at her mother's home two or three times a week, but they had not been to see Will's mother half a dozen times in the months of their marriage. It was not intentional neglect, but it always seemed to work out that way, and Will had been as lax as she about spending his one day a week on that long journey.

A DIPLOMAT

That a certain young man is wise beyond his years was proved when he paused before answering a widow who had asked him to guess her age. "You must have some idea," she said.

"I have several ideas," said the young man, with a smile. "The only trouble is that I hesitate whether to make you ten years younger on account of your looks or ten years older on account of your intelligence."

The love of a Portland (Maine) man for his dog, which led him to institute a search extending from Maine to the Middle West, was rewarded when Tam, the Scotch terrier of H. Ben Eastman, which disappeared from Portland simultaneously with the departure of a circus on June 3, was found following with the other animals of the circus menagerie in Dayton, Ohio. Tam was in the possession of an animal trainer, who said he purchased the dog for $10 when the circus played Portland.

After 40
Bowel trouble is Most Dangerous

Constipation may easily become chronic after forty. Continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles—and a host of other disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. When they need help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot grip; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, your tongue is coated; when-ever a headache, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Next time just take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative. See how good it tastes; how gently and thoroughly it acts. Then you will know why it has become the world's most popular laxative. Big bottles—all drugstores.

VACCINATION OF PIGS PAYS WELL

North Dakota Expert Says It Is Good Business.

Many farmers are wondering whether or not vaccination is necessary or worth the expense.

Dr. G. S. Weaver, extension specialist in animal disease at South Dakota state college, believes that it is good business management to vaccinate the pigs.

"Considering the number of outbreaks of cholera at the present time, there seems to be plenty of chance for exposure, he says. Probably fewer older hogs are now immune than for several years, which would mean a more serious outbreak if the disease gets a real start.

"The best time to vaccinate is when the pigs average about 40 pounds in weight, or when they are about six to eight weeks old. It costs less to vaccinate pigs of this size than it does older hogs, and the pigs are easier handled. They are just about the right age to insure a permanent immunity in case a pig dies after treatment the loss is not great at this age.

Successful vaccination depends on the thriftiness of the pigs, the skill of the operator and the sanitary conditions. Pigs that are affected with 'nervous' or infested with worms will not get along as well after vaccination as thrifty pigs. The man who puts in the serum should know his business and up a general rule the veterinarian is best qualified. Pigs that are kept in dirty pens and lots cannot be expected to do as well after a vaccination since unsanitary conditions help them lose their resistance. A thrifty pig properly vaccinated will do well after vaccination if kept in a clean pen and fed on a light diet.

A Girl Named Jean

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

"SILAS, I want you to meet Jack Blake—I don't know whether you remember him or not, he used to come and spend holidays with me when I was at prep school—we used to have bully times!" Silas Meade ran off and left his sister to receive the tall, handsome young man with the grave eyes.

"Sit down, Mr. Blake, and do you care for tea? It is so hot today that I made it iced—sugar?" She gave him the tall fringed glass fragrant with lemon slices and orange pekoe tea. "Do you like these nut cookies? I adore them—" she gave him the plate, took a cookie herself and pushed the tea wagon aside. "Please pour a little, Mr. Blake. Silas says you write the most wonderful stories and books, and will soon be a social lion."

"Help!" he said feebly, and took another cookie. "Same nut cookies, same blue plates, same muffin stand, same shady lawn—I have never forgotten a thing, even to the beds of mignonette and pansies!"

"They are all the same, now and forever!" laughed the girl. Then she added sympathetically, "You were somewhat alone, weren't you? We used to love to have you here."

He looked embarrassed, as if he were trying to recollect her—pierce her in those earlier days. "I was a lonely little beggar. My mother died when I was quite small, and father traveled a lot, and I was reared among all my cousins and aunts and uncles. This was more like a real home to me—I loved it."

Suddenly he added, "There was a girl named Jean." A most enchanting child—I suppose she is married by this time," he added regretfully. "In those days my highest ambition was to be worthy to marry little Jean when I grew up!"

She joined in his laughter but her eyes were like stars. He could not see her face for she sat in shadow.

"Where are your sisters?" he inquired.

"They're both married. You'll meet them tomorrow," she murmured.

He could press her no further, and he dared not question Silas, who was a graceless young man, and would have screamed with mirth at the idea of old Jack losing his heart to one of his sisters.

"I remember your sister Jean, Silas," he did venture to remark, as they went for a walk along the sea wall that bordered the property.

"Jean? Oh, yes—she's a good scout!"

"I have been hoping that she would come home soon," said Jack boldly.

"Home from where?" demanded Silas.

Jack Blake stared. "Home from wherever she is—that is, she's alive, isn't she? Nothing happened to her?"

It was Silas' turn to stare. "Out with it, Jack! You knew my sister Jean when she was a little kid—I used to be jealous of her fondness for you. Remember that time she fell off the fence and scratched the corner near her eye—not the corner of the fence, you idiot! I saw you kissing it to make it well again. You know we went back to prep that night, but the folks told me afterwards that Jean positively refused to allow nurse to wash that particular spot on her face for fear she would wash away your kiss! And then years afterwards, when I had that stunning picture of you in uniform, Jean swiped it, and to this day it is on her dresser!"

"Say, you ought not to be giving your sister away like that!" blurted out Jack, very red in the face. "You see, I've always thought she would grow up."

"Come on down to the beach. Bathing's good, and Jean will be there."

In five minutes they were flashing through the greenish water, bronzed arms lifting with each stroke, while a girl in a bathing suit stood on the distant float and watched them wistfully. She waved a hand and they climbed on the raft. Jack shook himself like a big dog, and then looked eagerly at the girl.

"Here we are, Sir!" panted Silas. But Jack only stared.

"Isn't it glorious today?" asked Jean, blushing under his adoring eyes.

"Why—why—" he stammered. "You were Jean all the while!"

She nodded. "I didn't understand why you did not recognize me." But he did know that she always sat in shadow so that he could not see her blushes or her telltale eyes. Suppose he had forgotten her? She had been such a romantic child, and very impressionable. It was wonderful that he had seen her here so many years. Silas glanced dispairingly at them. "Oh, mamma!" he grunted flatly, and dived into the next big sea.

"Of course you would not remember the last time I saw you," Jack said wistfully.

"I might," said Jean shyly. "It rained, I think," she hastened to say. "Rained tears when you fell off the fence. Some day, may I remind you more about that day?" he whispered. "Some-day," whispered Jean softly.

Use Creosoted Planks for Hog House Floor

It is at all possible, either pressure or tank creosoted lumber should be used for the sills and floor of a hog house, because it will last several times as long in contact with the ground, is immune against damage from termites or white ants, and the creosote discourages the harboring of lice and other individual and colony hog houses made entirely of creosoted lumber are now on the market at prices probably below what the farmer can buy lumber for and build them himself; while in other cases the sills and floor boards are creosoted and the rest heavily painted.

In some localities pressure creosoted lumber is available, or the farmer can cut his timber, ready to put together and then creosote by the tank method, using a tank galvanized tank. If neither of these seem practicable, several heavy brush coats of creosote just before the parts are put together will help a great deal to prolong the service obtained.

Wise Farmers Raising Colts Well for Future

Since farmers are not raising quite enough colts to take care of their future needs it is wise to grow what are raised, well. The colts should be fed in addition to the mother's milk. When three or four weeks old, the youngster will start nibbling grain from the mother's feed box. In a little while it will take grain from its own box. Increase the allowance to take care of what the colt eats.

Then exercise the youngster. Let him run with the mare at night in the pasture or with other colts during the day when the mothers are at work. Do not allow it to follow the mare through the day when she is at work as the colt then gets more exercise than it should have.
