Cost of Hoover Administration in Two Years Equals Two-thirds Present Public Debt of U. S.

Washington, March.—Commenting on the appropriations made by the 71st Congress, covering the first two years of President Hoover's administration, Senator William J. Harris, ranking Democratic member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said:

"The last two years of President Coolidge's administration $9,298,814,741 was appropriated, an average of $4,649,407,270. The $10,249,819,000 of appropriations and authorizations for the Congress just closed under President Hoover equals about two-thirds of our total public debt at this time (more than sixteen billion dollars) most of which was left over from the World War."

The appropriations of the Hoover Congress, the Senator says, means a tax of about $31 on every one of the 122,735,046 persons in the United States, or about $405 on every family. The average family income, the Senator adds is only $738 per year.

American Foreign Trade for February Continues on Down Grade

Washington, March.—American exports and imports continue their downward trend as shown by the preliminary figures for February issued by the Department of Commerce.

Exports, compared with the previous month of January, dropped $21,667,000 and imports fell off $8,213,000 on the monthly comparison.

The decline in export trade for February compared with the same month of 1930, was $122,852,000, while imports on the same comparison declined $106,708,000 a total loss of $229,559,000. For eight months of the fiscal year ending February, the drop in exports was $1,134,166,000 and on imports $1,022,524,000, a total loss in export trade for eight months of the present fiscal year of $2,156,690,000.

If the same ratio decline be continued for the remainder of the fiscal year, the decline in American foreign trade would approximate three billions, compared with 1930, a low year.

Will Evened Things

Jay House, columnist for a Philadelphia-New York paper, on his annual visit to Kansas brought an interesting story about Will Rogers. He says Mr. Rogers was invited to a dinner party at the home of a very wealthy oil magnate. He naturally assumed the role of entertainer, was the life of the party. A couple of days later the magnate received a bill from Rogers for $1500. The magnate turned the bill over to his secretary who called Rogers on the telephone and asked him what the charges were for "entertaining at the dinner party." "But you were a guest at the party, Mr. Rogers," said the secretary. "not a paid entertainer." Whereupon came the unexpected answer: "I noticed that the other guests at the dinner had their wives with them; mine was not invited." The bill was paid and it will be a long time before that particular oil magnate takes Will Rogers for a sucker.

Have Saved Sodom

A well known writer says there are three kinds of people in the world—the Can'ts, the Won'ts and the Wills. The Can'ts fail in everything, the Won'ts oppose everything, and the Wills accomplish everything.

Every town has a sprinkling of each kind mixed in with the I Don't Cares.

The I Don't Cares never do anything. They are content to let things drift with no effort to better them or to improve conditions. They don't want to be bothered.

Every now and then the few Wills in the town rise up and try to do something to add to the progress of the town or to better conditions.

They are opposed by the Can'ts and the Won'ts who immediately get busy and make the task harder.

If any good comes to a town it is because of the Wills and in spite of the Won'ts and Can'ts.

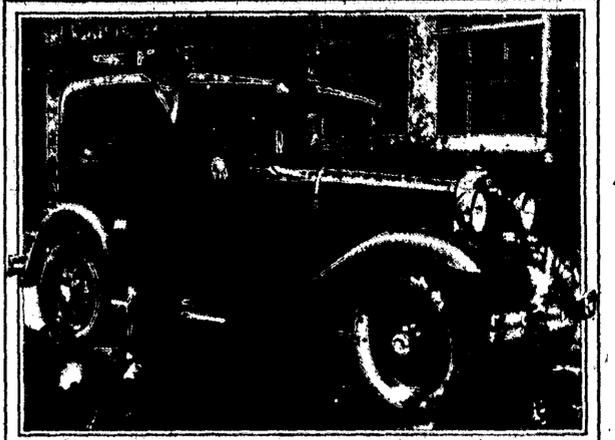

The Lord, probably knew it would happen just this way, hence he has arranged it so that a few determined Wills can whip a whole army of Can'ts and Won'ts and stir into action the most sluggish group of I Don't Cares.

Fortunate indeed is the town that has even one determined, energetic Will—for like the one righteous man who could have saved Sodom he can save a town and wake it from its lethargy of indifference and make it known far and wide as a live town.

Spring is on the way and with it comes the thought of a more beautiful town. Now is the time to begin to plan to plant a tree or shrub or a bed of flowers to improve and beautify the home. A beautiful city is merely a number of beautiful homes. One carelessly kept place can mar the beauty of an entire block.

"We must inexorably pursue the present policies of economy in government."—From Herbert Hoover's campaign speech at Elizabethton, Tenn., Oct. 6, 1928.

OLDEST FORD DRIVER

J. M. Crow, 89, of Ethel, Miss., the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi, traversed the historic old Natchez Trace in a covered wagon eighty-seven years ago.

As rugged today at 89 as the age in American history he so picturesquely typifies, J. M. Crow of Ethel, Miss., is the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi and one of the oldest in the United States.

When as a babe of two years he rode with his parents in one of a train of 30 covered wagons out of Cobb county, Georgia, into Mississippi, the old Natchez Trace followed by the brave little band was still infested by the swashbuckling ruffians whose bloody outrages gave that era its place in this country's history as "the outlaw years."

One of his vivid memories is hearing, as a boy of six, the news of General Scott's victorious assault on the heights of Chapultepec which ended the Mexican War in 1847, and his proudest memory is of honorable service as a Confederate soldier during the Civil War. When the southern cause collapsed, Crow was compelled to trudge 400 miles on foot to the old homestead at Ethel where he settled down to rear a family.

In the intervening years he has seen the lumbering stagecoach give way to the first automobile and the comfortable motorbus, the soggy gumbo and rough corduroy roads of his childhood to the wide, paved roads of today, and although he was long past middle age before the modern automobile became commonplace he is an enthusiastic driver as youngsters who can boast less than one-quarter of his years.

Five generations of Crow's family are frequently seen together in his Model A Ford, the second of its type Crow has owned and driven.

Smoot-Grundy Tariff Reduces Number of American Jobs, Says Henry Ford

"Who wants this high tariff bill? We certainly don't. . . . You say it is the contention of those who are backing it that it will revive industry and cure unemployment. I say it will have precisely the reverse effect. It will stultify business and industry and increase unemployment. When you prevent your customers from purchasing your goods, you are absolutely throwing men out of work. I know something about employment and I say that tariff reduces the number of American jobs."—Interview with Henry Ford, May 20, 1930.

Arbor Day

Governor Seligman has issued a proclamation designating Friday, April 17, 1931, as Arbor Day in New Mexico.

Concerning the purposes and the desirable accomplishments to be obtained from the observance of the day, the Governor says in part:

"On this day, and in fact during the entire year, children should be taught at school and at home that trees are their friends; that trees are not only of rare beauty but that they afford us the hospitality of cool shelter from the heat of the summer sun and protect us from the icy winds of winter; that trees are the natural home of song birds and a shelter for the wild life of forest; that without trees the world would be one vast stretch of desolation, with no recreation fields, wilderness areas, no majestic forests such as now invite tired mankind into their imperial silence for rest and spiritual inspiration.

"Trees should be planted as living memorials to our heroic dead, the boys who paid the supreme sacrifice in the defense of our country. Trees should border highways named and dedicated to this sacred cause.

"Arbor Day is set aside not only for the planting of trees but for teaching the importance of the conservation and preservation of tree life. I respectfully suggest that the school children of the state and citizens in general cooperate with our forestry service in the prevention of forest fires. Such fires not only destroy great domains of beautiful trees which cannot be replaced within a lifetime, but carry with them the destruction of useful timber, water sheds, mountain streams, rob the soil of productivity, kill a great variety of game and drive it from its natural home. It should be pointed out that such ruin and loss is nearly always brought about through someone's carelessness.

When the Housewife Goes to Market

By NELLIE MAXWELL

"The pity of it is that so far as we are concerned, most of the beauty of this world goes to waste. We have no time to look at it and enjoy it. The woman who can look out from her kitchen window while she washes the dishes and see a glimpse of any of nature's beauties, even if it is nothing but a shrub or a happy bird, lifts herself in the enjoyment, above drudgery."

IT IS a heartening sight to visit the big city markets and see the handsome, high-powered cars lined up at the curb and the lady of the house walking from stall to stall choosing the food for her family, along with the housewife of the poor man who must count every penny.

One of the hardest things for the average woman to do is to regulate her purchases to the amount she has to spend for food. It takes real self-denial to pass by the attractive delicacies for the table and confine one's self to the urgent needs. Shopping and marketing are fine things to develop self-control.

In too many households the marketing problem is left to haphazard buying or the last minute order, and so it is either a feast or a famine to which the family look forward.

The tender cuts of meat do not contain any more nourishment and they lack the extractives which are found in the more active muscles and so they lack the flavor. Cheaper cuts which are used for meat are often thrown away because of the idea that they have lost their food value. The fact is all the food value is still there, the lack is in the flavor or extractives, which may be supplied in various ways—adding flavorful vegetables, meat, sauces and condiments, thus making palatable and nourishing dishes from meat left from broths.

When we learn that marketing is a household science which needs study and observation and that extravagant buying, however full the purse, is never to be indulged, we are in a fair way to improve in that part of household management.

We are told by those who have made a study of family needs that before a pound of meat is bought a quart of milk should supply the daily need of every child in the family. Milk may be used as a drink, as a main dish, in puddings, sauces, with cereals for breakfast and supper.

Fear Distorts and Exaggerates

By JEAN NEWTON

A NEWS ITEM tells of a woman who killed herself in fear of being caught in a lie by the census bureau. It seems that at the 1920 census this woman recorded her age three years less than it was. This time she intended to correct the error, but became obsessed with fear that the discrepancy would be discovered. Anticipating the visit of the census taker recently, it is said that the mere ring of the door bell was enough to send her into hiding.

Although this woman had been naturalized in this country twenty years ago, and therefore was an American citizen, she wrote in a note which was found in her home, we are told, these words: "I am afraid the President will deport me."

(One's first comment, in, of course, of being discovered in a census fib is not so badly out of proportion as it would seem to the terrible damage that is daily done by fear, to people who are intelligent enough to know better.

English Ministries

The life of an English ministry is seven years unless interrupted. Frequently on a major proposal a member of the opposition will move a vote of "No confidence" or of censure. In the event of this motion being carried, a general election will be held throughout the country, and the result will determine whether the present minister remains in power or whether the king will call some one from the opposition side to form a cabinet.

Prison Costumes

Stripes were formerly characteristic of prison dress, partly because they were believed to contribute to the deterrent effect of prison and also to make it more difficult for a prisoner to escape. In most prisons, however, stripes have been done away with entirely or reserved for third-grade prisoners. Shaving the prisoner's hair is partly for sanitary reasons and also partly for identifying purposes.

The Miami Crowdad

By Hugh Hutton. (Author of Notty Natural History.)

THE crowdad was discovered by a band of realtors hunting in the Everglades four years ago, and was taken to Miami where its energetic singing was used to accompany the orators on the new subdivisions. Its ability to clip coupons was soon discovered, and in nearly every office a crowdad can be found holding a coupon in one claw and clipping it with the other. The creatures do not have to be tied, as they cannot travel far, since they are usually left-handed in one of their hind legs and must go in circles. The head of the crowdad is a fluff, with peanut kernel beak and ears. To the body are fastened tooth-pick legs, tail, and neck. Split almond kernels form the claws, while the hind toes are cloves.

SOME HINTS ON HOUSEHOLD BUDGETING

By BETSY CALLISTER

ONE of the simplest ways of carrying out a household budget is by means of what most housewives call a house purse, and some sort of purse or box in which a stipulated amount of money was placed for every day's or every week's expenses was often used before the present vogue for budgeting began.

One way of going about it is to have a purse containing several sections, with money in each. When any is spent for food it comes from one section, money spent for household supplies such as soap, kitchen utensils, dish cloths, etc., which should be considered as part of operating expenses, comes from another section, while money spent for sewing materials comes from another section.

Another way to go about it is to make a practice of putting a little slip of paper in the purse whenever money is spent, indicating the amount and purpose. So, if you have put $15 in the purse on Monday you can balance accounts on Saturday by listing these slips, adding the total figure to the amount of money that remains and making sure that this equals the

MOUSSELINES PARTNER WITH VELVET FOR FORMAL DRESS

IN THE new fashions, the contrast theme is as much a matter of materials as it is a matter of color. Designers, in their endeavor to feature contrast show no hesitancy in combining weaves which are entirely foreign to each other. In fact, the more out of the ordinary the alliance, the smarter the results, according to the modern way of thinking.

Even the most conservative cannot but acquire a taste for these new effects as fashionists are presenting them this season. It is interesting, for example to see filmy white mousseline sheer lace bodices are likewise given promotion and as for the bakers and the tojo panamas, the panamaques and such, they are as exotic and as plentiful as ever.

Straws of glaring high luster contrast those with no luster at all. As for color, straws have gone riotous. Black and navy comes first generally relieved with white or light blue. Then there's brown which is the demerit cri for spring. Emphasis is also placed on striking contrast, such as white straw interwoven with black cellophane, or in tri-color effect as black, made up with black velvet, the flounces on the skirt alternating the two materials as shown to the right in the accompanying illustration. This charming evening dress is none other than a Worth creation.

For the "formal dress" ensemble also shown in the picture, Vionnet tops a white mousseline frock with a little tuxedo jacket made of sheer velvet in a deep red tone.

This feeling that two materials are better than one is so wise confined to the formal evening mode, but the sentiment prevails throughout all fashiondom. Gingham partners with sea organdie, chiffon in the form of deep yokes tops the afternoon crepe frocks, and the unusual ways in which designers are trimming dark gowns with lace is a revelation. Vision, for instance, a black crepe two-piece dress, with little pleatings of white lace not only about the sleeves and the neckline, but white and red, orange, brown and pale beige, navy, white and gray, the latter an especial favorite with smart Parisiennes at the present moment.

Just as thrilling are the shapes of the new chapeaux. Crowns are different, being that shallow they set the hat way back on the head. And brims! Well, what's coming in the way of flatter and versatile brims words fail to describe. There is this much we know, the hat with a bandeau which tilts the brim a la Watteau leads in the race at the present moment.

The little hat at the top to the right is a Watteau. It lifts its brim enough to reveal a flower-trimmed bandeau. The coiffe to the left is a baku in natural color. A cluster of green, red and blue soft quills on the bandeau take the place of flowers.

In order to place the accent on its facing of blue grosgrain ribbon, the brim of the hat centered to the right edging the hemline of the overblouse as well, emphasizing the effect by introducing a few frills of the lace front underneath the hemline of the skirt, quite suggestive of a petticoat if the truth must be told.

And there's this matter of tweed and novelty woolen coats, they are stressing the idea of contrast via pipings and linings and scarfs and trimmings in general of gay plaid or stripe effects.

Most outstanding in this campaign for contrast which fashion is waging is the jacket costume which makes the skirt of one material and the little bolero or double-breasted jacket of something entirely different—a velvet jacket with a plaid skirt for instance, and it is very new indeed to wear a light jacket with a dark skirt.

The New Millinery. In discussing millinery as is and will be for this spring and summer, one must speak, for the most part, in terms of straw, for the straw hat is its multiple interpretations is far out-selling any other type. No matter what sort of straw, just so it's straw is apparently the theory being put into practice.

Five millions are as important as rough velvet bows. Formal hats of white and red, orange, brown and pale beige, navy, white and gray, the latter an especial favorite with smart Parisiennes at the present moment.

A Present for the President

War-time Capt. Phillip Browne of the Quartermaster corps, National Army, had been a peacetime police officer on the force at Washington, D. C. In the course of his ordinary duties he often waved an official greeting to the chief official of the nation, President Woodrow Wilson. The two were, you might say, "business acquaintances."

On June 7, 1918, an air raid warning of the approach of hostile airmen, sounded behind the lines where Captain Browne was stationed. From their places of safety the French inhabitants and Captain Browne watched the German flight in action. Shortly, Allied planes ascended to give battle. One of the German ships, a Fokker triplane was forced low enough for anti-aircraft batteries to get the range and was hit by a shell fragment.

The German aviator fought to retain control of his plane but finally was forced down in a wheat field. Imagine his embarrassment to find Captain Browne, who had followed in an automobile, covering him with his service revolver. Imagine then, immediately after, his complete annoyance when the former policeman fished from his pockets a pair of handcuffs and snapped them on his wrists.

Having fastened the "bracelets" he had brought from private life, Captain Browne proceeded to possess himself of the surprised aviator's cap and one shoulder strap. These, after careful wrapping, were mailed President Wilson by his "business acquaintance," the ex-policeman.

A "Palestinian Guards" Officer

Irvin Cobb, the humorist, is known most widely today for his writings of fiction for which he laid the groundwork by newspaper reporting in his native Paducah, Ky., and in New York city. When he began to be famous, Cobb was called the "Duke of Paducah," and in the early part of the war his Kentucky origin won for him the rank of colonel on the staff of the governor of Kentucky.

Cobb's commission was received shortly before he embarked on a war correspondent's assignment overseas. He assembled various and almost unmatchable parts of a uniform and donned the outfit on his way across. Shortly after landing Cobb was interviewed by a serious-minded London journalist who made the inquiry:

"Would you tell me, Mr. Cobb, just what uniform it is you are wearing?"

"Well," replied the humorist, "you see, I am an officer on the staff of the governor of Kentucky, but the uniform—ah, yes, the uniform is that of a field marshal in the Palestinian guards!"

And so, duly chronicled in the files of a London paper, is recorded Cobb's high rank in behalf of old Palestine, as faithfully reported by the London Journalist.

"We Meet Again"

What does an M. P. think about—that is when he's not inspecting a soldier's leave order, or his pass, or something like that? Well, in early 1919, Lieut. Albert Mackey of the Two Hundred and Sixty-third M. P. corps was on duty at the stockade erected for American prisoners in the Bois du Boulgnois, Paris.

The site originally was intended for a French officers' hospital. Just outside Lieutenant Mackey's doors flowed traffic along one of the most exclusive drives of the world, the road to Versailles. Restaurants, whose fame extended beyond Europe, flanked the stockade. Directly across the road was the aristocratic Longchamps race course.

An odd site, at that, for a prison camp. Lieutenant Mackey reflected as he assembled a burial detail to proceed to the beautiful cemetery at Suresnes-sur-Seine, also nearby, where most of the Americans who died in Paris are buried. Once at the cemetery, Lieutenant Mackey and his men waited. It was to be a double burial, for military authorities are efficient that way, and one of the bodies was yet to arrive from Paris.

While he waited, Lieutenant Mackey strolled among the new-made graves. What does an M. P. think about? Well, he thought of earlier days of the war, his far-off home at Vankegan, Ill., of the folk which had made him a military police, subject to the repeated gibes: "Who won the war?" And particularly he thought of a school-boy chum, Lieut. Wm. C. Pope, with whom he'd discussed the war in 1917. Pope, he recalled, had gone overseas. He'd never heard from him since.

Then a nearby grave attracted the officer's attention. He walked over and there was the name: "Lieut. William C. Pope."

What does an M. P. think about? (A 1921, Western Newspaper Union)

Hyde Park in London

Although there are towns all over America named Hyde Park, the first was and is a real park and not a town. With its neighbor, Kensington gardens in London, it comprises about 600 acres and is the city's chief breathing space, belonging to the monks of St. Peter's, Westminster, but fell to Henry VIII, when the monasteries were abolished.

Like Color . . . the best Gasoline is Blended

THE artist stands before his canvas with color-laden palette. Blues, greens, white and touches of warmer tones are blended by his inspired brush as the waves of the seascape take form. His genius tells him that only through the blending of just the right colors is the ideal result achieved. Otherwise his most painstaking effort could only result in a monotonous, wholly lacking in brilliance.

Artistry and genius have their place in the making of CONOCO Gasoline. CONOCO engineers long since have found that the ideal gasoline is a balanced blend of the three types containing the elements most desired in a motor fuel. There is highly volatile Natural Gasoline, to give quick starting. There is Straight-run Gasoline, to give power and long mileage. There is Cracked Gasoline with its well-known anti-knock quality.

Like the artist with his colors, CONOCO refiners take these three types of gasoline in balanced proportions and blend them. The result is as pleasing to the car owner as is a Rembrandt to the art connoisseur. Of course the genius of "knowing how" is the vital element and it is here that CONOCO refiners excel.

Convince yourself of the merit of CONOCO Blended Gasoline. Try it today. You will find this triple-test motor fuel wherever you see the CONOCO Red Triangle.

Nothing but Hard Cash for English Lecturer

They do say that back in the dim ages of half a hundred years ago, when the great poet and essayist Matthew Arnold, was in this country scattering sweetness and light from the lecture platform, he reached Philadelphia one evening just an hour or two before he was to fill an engagement there. When the welcoming committee had properly received, honored and lodged their distinguished guest he informed them that he had to have his $2,000 for the lecture paid in advance. They graciously proceeded to write him a check for the amount, but to their consternation the great poet informed them that a check would not do—that he had to have cash, and in advance.

The banks being closed, the committee did not know where they could lay their hands on such a sum in so short a time. The happy thought occurred to them to get the personal promise of payment and indorsement of some of Philadelphia's best-known millionaires, who, in fact were known all over the world. They got such an indorsement, but that, too, was flatly refused. The poet was taking no chances. He laid down the ultimatum that he had to have the $2,000 in cash in hand and beforehand or the widely advertised lecture would not be delivered. The committee then scurried about town borrowing small sums here and there and thus succeeded in meeting the exacting demands of the visiting

This Woman In 4 Weeks Lost 17 Pounds of Fat

Here's a letter written October 21, 1920, by Mrs. Fred Barringer of Lewistown, Montana, that ought to be read by every overweight woman in America.

Gentlemen: I started taking Kruschen every morning as directed as I was very much overweight and wanted to reduce.

I had tried going on a diet but would get so hungry that my diet would not last long, so I decided to give "Kruschen Salts" a fair trial. The day I started to take them I weighed 155 lbs., and at present, which has been just four weeks, I weigh 138 lbs. And must say I feel better in every way, besides looking much better.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are best for liver, bowels and stomach. One little Pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic.—Adv.

Many a man is out in the backyard bemoaning his luck when fortune knocks at the front door.

May all large people, both men and women, who want to reduce in an easy way, give Kruschen Salts a fair trial. I am sure it will convince anyone.

A bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts four weeks costs but 80c at any drugstore in America. Take one half teaspoon in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. To help reduce swiftly cut out pastry and fatty meats and go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar.

The Kruschen way is the safe way to reduce—Try one bottle and if not joyfully satisfied—money back.—Adv.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried, because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria—made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Cast. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Secretary Was a Writer

Washington, March, — Referring to a news story written by Mr. Theodore Joslin, the newly appointed Secretary to the President, in which Correspondent Joslin of the Boston Transcript had predicted Republican defeat and had declared that "Mr. Hoover has lost prestige," the Baltimore Sun says:

"It would appear that the Argus-eyed secretariat has again failed the Chief." The Sun doubts whether Mr. Hoover would have appointed the writer had Mr. Joslin's story been called to his attention.

"How could the man who wrote that sentence ever provide that comfort and sense of self-esteem which it is the duty of the perfect secretary to provide?" The Sun asks. "For Mr. Joslin's equivoque we have no fears, since he was once close to Mr. Coolidge, and must have learned to take it on the chin. It is Mr. Hoover's uninterrupted peace of mind that concerns us.

"Of course, the one thing that Mr. Hoover needs more than anything else," The Sun continues, "is a secretary capable of predicting disaster for the Republican party and of saying something tart about such stupid performances as the hiring of Ku Klux orators to aid Southern candidates. It would be splendid if Mr. Joslin should turn out to be that kind of a secretary. But the prospect is dim. In spite of the potent blessing conferred upon Mr. Hoover by the inattention of his other secretaries, we fear it will be lost. After about two speeches in the manner of his Transcript comments, Mr. Joslin, it is a six to one bet, will learn the exceeding wisdom of sticking exclusively to 'Chief, that's a great idea.'"

Truck Sales Growing

Increases in Chevrolet Motor Company truck schedule by which output of some models has been doubled is made necessary by orders being received, H. J. Klingler, vice president and general sales manager announces.

"There has been a steady upward trend in our truck business since the first of the year," Mr. Klingler declared this week. "Both in January and February we were compelled to increase production beyond that planned. In March, output was moved up twice to take care of demand. April indications are for continuance of this activity.

"We interpret this large and increasing buying of trucks as economically significant. Increases in truck demand paint a better picture of improving business conditions than do similar increases in passenger car sales.

Chevrolet's truck manufacturing activities now are nationwide. The motor and chassis are built in the company's various plants. This method, inaugurated last Fall, has added several thousand to Chevrolet's payrolls and has permitted the company to expand its commercial car division to the point where it now produces 19 models on three wheelbases.

Gather at Gallachers

Something more than 40 years ago, Will Gallacher arrived on this old planet; liked it, and has been here ever since. Wednesday evening, April 1, was the anniversary of his arrival, and in recognition of the event, about 70 friends gathered at the Gallacher home at the head of the mal-pais, to wish Bill another cycle of happiness and prosperity. Many mementoes and gifts were presented by those assembled. Dancing and cards furnished the means of entertainment, and about midnight a most delicious lunch—it might be more appropriate to call it dinner, because it could easily be dignified as such—was served, and the appetizing viands and attractive manner of the service banished every thought but one, which was to fall to and satisfy every inner want. Dancing and games were renewed following the feed but, like all things, there must be an end, and the merry-makers very reluctantly took their departure, some in this neck of the woods not reaching home until about the hour Peter heard that rooster crow, on a fateful morning in Judea. May you have many more birthdays, Bill, and may we have the pleasure of being with you and yours during each recurring anniversary indelibly.

STEEL ECLIPSE

Windmill

Starts sooner—pumps longer

Two windmills stood last across the road from each other. With the first sign of a breeze, one started up promptly and quietly. When the breeze became a wind, the other started with a groan and lumbered away only to stop at the wind's first gust. Then it stopped abruptly as it had started, while the other continued pumping for some time—then it finally came to rest to rest with the last trace of the drying breeze.

It is the difference between a super windmill and just a windmill. It is the difference between accurately machined and cast gears and ordinary cast gears. It is the difference between ground and polished shafts and ordinary steel shafts.

The difference between machined and polished bearings and ordinary bearings is the difference between running in oil and running with dry gears.

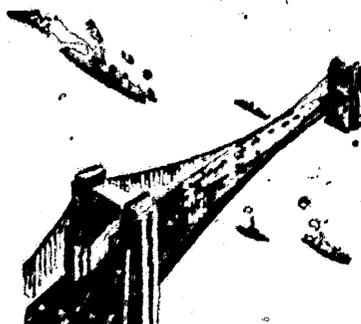

In other words, it is the difference between the Fairbanks-Morse Steel Eclipse Windmill and just a plain windmill.

Come in and see the great advance in windmill construction. See the special feature—the center lift feature—the mechanism that enables the Eclipse to automatically pump water during two-thirds of every revolution of the wind wheel. You will form a new idea of how good a windmill can be.

Bungalow Type of Home Planned to Fit Into Narrow Building Lot

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

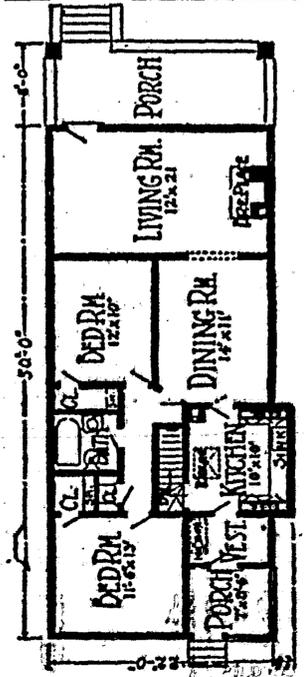

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The bungalow type of home appeals to many home builders, especially those who build in cities and suburbs. This is, because the man with small capital does not have to invest in a large lot to accommodate the building, and less capital is invested in the home. In reality the average bungalow is nothing more nor less than the first floor of an apartment building—the room arrangement usually is about the same as in an apartment, there rarely is more than six rooms and usually five in such a home.

What probably makes the bungalow popular is the artistic effects that may be gained in exterior appearance and the convenience to the housewife of having all the rooms on one floor so that the housework can be done more easily. The interior is arranged so that the living and dining rooms and kitchen are in one unit and the bedrooms in another.

For the exterior walls of the bungalow stucco is most popular. It may be applied over metal lath, expanded metal, wood lath or any of the stucco bases that are on the market. Metal lath is fire-safe and will not expand or contract with moisture, so that there is little danger of the walls cracking, providing, of course, it is applied by a skilled workman in this material.

The stucco bungalow shown in the illustration is a good example of this type of home design. The building itself is only 22 feet wide, which makes it ideal for the narrow city lot. The foundation walls form a rectangle and are straight with the one exception of the jog for the bay window in the kitchen. This makes for economy in construction costs.

The simplicity of the treatment of the outside walls and the straight lines of the roof and porch make this bungalow attractive in exterior appearance. The overhang of the hip-roof and the dormer at the front help in this simple scheme of design. Another good feature is the wide porch, 22 feet long, with the high wall giving it the advantage of semi-enclosure.

The appearance of the rooms and their sizes are shown by the floor plan that accompanies the exterior view. The living room, which is exceptionally large—12 by 22 feet—extends across the whole front of the house. At one end is an open fireplace, located so that it may be seen through the double-cased opening that connects the living room with the dining room. Four windows opening onto the porch and a double window at the end make this a light, cheery and easily ventilated room.

Directly back of the living room at one side are the dining room, 11 by 14 feet, and the kitchen. A series of four windows light and ventilate the dining room, while the bay projection in the kitchen gives a well-lighted space for the sink and work table and wall cases for kitchen utensils and dishes. Back of the kitchen is a vestibule and farther back is a rear porch, which is as large as the ordinary back porch. By screening this porch it makes a comfortable, secluded sitting room in summer.

The two bedrooms are toward the back and are reached through the dining room. One bedroom, toward the front of the house, is 10 by 12 feet, while the other, at the corner, is 11 feet 6 inches by 13 feet. The bathroom is between a convenient location. The size of the house, 22 by 50 feet, gives opportunity for a large basement for the heating plant, fuel storage and other storage rooms. This is an excellent bungalow design, whether the exterior walls be of stucco or brick or of frame. The rooms are large and conveniently placed, while the appearance of the house is all that can be desired.

Reroofing Over Old Shingles Popular Now

To those who realize that mechanics make the final decision as to whether or not a new idea of construction is to be adopted it will be good news to learn that the principle of reroofing right over the old shingles has been definitely accepted.

Practical experience has shown carpenters and roofers that there are great many advantages to be gained by putting a new roofing material over old shingles or other types of roofs which have served out their terms of usefulness. Perhaps most important among these advantages is the utilization of the insulation which the old roofing provides.

The house owner who has installed a new roof of composition shingles over old wooden shingles finds that his house is much cooler in summer. In the winter time he buys much less coal. This is because wood is one of the best of the common insulating mediums. It prevents the passage of heat either from the inside out or from the outside in.

From a mechanic's point of view, as well as from the house owner's point of view, the fact that the old shingles are not removed is good because it greatly simplifies the operation, is economical and prevents any possibility of damage to the house because of a sudden rainstorm during the process of the work.

When the idea was first advanced, after many experiments, mechanics all over the United States were interested, but insisted upon being shown. There were many more difficulties to be overcome than the ordinary householder would see. Is it possible to reroof over old shingles with permanent roofing and make a good-looking job? Granted that the old shingle roof was in pretty bad shape so that it leaked, with curling shingles, shingles split, shingles loose, was it possible to lay other shingles over them successfully? How much extra work would be entailed in making a neat job of the overhang of the roof at the eaves and along the barge board?

But this was several years ago and now the consensus among roofers and contractors who do this kind of work shows that all of these questions have been answered and that the decision is in favor of reroofing directly over the old roof without removing it.

House owners have found that their dwellings, so renewed, have been worth in the open market a new, increased valuation, much greater than the cost of the new roof. Depreciation has, of course, been greatly lessened. But perhaps most important of all is the fact that when reroofed with harmonious shades of plain gray, red or green, the appearance of the dwelling so treated is remarkably enhanced.

Cleaning Will Keep Furnace Working Well

The importance of the chimney to efficient home heating cannot be over-estimated. The chimney is to the heating plant what the lungs are to the human body—it is the means of air supply. If the chimney has the "croup," so to speak, is congested and clogged, the fire does not receive enough air and sufficient oxygen to support combustion. It takes about 200 cubic feet of air to supply sufficient oxygen for the thorough combustion of one pound of coal. If the chimney is dirty, of improper design or in poor physical condition, an effective draft cannot be developed. If your heating plant doesn't seem to "work right," the practical thing to do is to have the chimney and the heating plant cleaned.

Metal Weather Strip Aid to Any Window

It is difficult to make a casement window wind and water proof unless waterproof metal weather strips are used. With the metal weather strips this difficulty is wholly overcome. Metal strips improve any kind of window, no matter how well it appears or how well it may have been made.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tontour seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulgains are returning from a visit to the Tontours. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulgains in their isolated home. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tontour, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tontour home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tontours go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flares. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain. He goes to the seigneurie and finds the manor destroyed and Tontour and his servants dead.

Against this clouding of his senses he felt himself struggling as if swimming in an empty space. He picked up his hatchet and his bow and rose to his feet. He had not lost sound of the mill wheel even when Toinette's wobbling had seemed to be at his side. It was crying at him now, but before he turned toward it his eyes rested on Tontour's wooden peg. It was half cut off, a mark of grim humor on the part of a butcher. The mill wheel was forcing his attention to that fact. "Look—look—look!"—it said, and then repeated the old song, calling him an English beast.

He faced it in a flash of resentment, not because of the wheel alone but on account of what lay at his feet and what he knew he would find nearer to the walls of the manor. His mind was hurling anathemas at the wheel. He wanted to tell it that it lied. In this hush of death he wanted to cry out that he was not of the murderous breed who had sent the killers. Proof was over there, in the valley which at that was well named. His mother, his father, his Uncle Hepsibah. Not one of them were dead by his hand. He had been left alive—by chance. That was proof. The wheel was wrong. It lied.

He looked at Tontour again, strengthening himself to go a little farther and find Toinette. He knew how it would be. Toinette's young body, even more pitiful than his mother's. He forced himself to turn toward the smoldering walls. Toinette—dead! His father might die, and Tontour, and all the rest of the world—but these two, his mother and Toinette, inseparable in his soul forever, the vital sparks which had kept his own heart beating—how could they die while he lived? He advanced, pausing over one of the slaves, a woman almost unclothed, inky black except the top of her head, which was red where her scalp was gone. In the crook of her arm was her scapless infant. White, black, women, babies—the loveliness of girlhood—it made no difference.

Jeems scanned the earth beyond her, and where the smoke lay in a white shroud he saw a small, slim figure which he knew was Toinette. Another young body might have lain in the same way, its slenderness crumpled in the same manner, a naked arm revealed dimly under its winding sheet of smoke. But he knew this was Toinette. The dizzying haze wavered before his eyes again, and he put his hand to hold it back. Toinette. Only a few steps from him. Dead, like his mother.

Odd went ahead of him halfway to the still form and stopped. He sensed something Jeems could not see or feel through the smoke mist which undulated before their eyes. Warning of impending danger confronted the dog, and he tried to pass it to his master. In that moment, a shot came from the mill, and a flash of pain darted through Jeems' arm. He was flung backward and caught himself to hear echoes of the explosion beating against the forested hills and the wheel at the top of the mill screaming at him. He answered the shot by dropping his bow and dashing toward the mill. Death might easily have met him at the threshold, but nothing moved in the vaultlike chamber he had entered, and there was no sound in it except that of his own breath and his racing heart. Odd went to the right of him, row steps which led to the tower room and told Jeems that what they sought was there. Jeems ran up, his hatchet raised to strike.

He must have been an unforgettable and terrifying object as he appeared above the door into the light which forced its way through the dusty glass of three round windows over his head. There must have been a little of the monster about him. He had left some of his garments with his mother and father, and his arms and shoulders were bare. Char and smoke and the stain of earth had disfigured his face. He appeared to be painted. His hair was a greenish fire glittered in the eyes that were seeking for an enemy. Blood dripped to the oaken planks from his wounded arm. He was a Frankenstein ready to kill, dishevelment and fury concealing his youth, his stature made appalling by his eagerness to leap at something with the upraised hatchet.

If the hatchet had found a brain, it would have been Toinette's. She faced him as he came, holding the musket which she had fired through a slit in the wall as if she still possessed faith in its power to defend her. Her eyes had in them a touch of madness. Yet she was so straight and tense, waiting for death, that she did not seem to be wholly possessed by fear or terror. Something unconquerable was with her, the soul of Tontour himself struggling in her fragile breast to make her unafraid to die and giving to her an aspect of defiance. This courage could not hide the marks of her torture. Death had miraculously left her flesh untouched in passing, yet she stood crucified in the mill room.

Expecting a savage, she recognized Jeems. The musket fell from her hands to the floor with a dull crash, and she drew back as if retreating from one whose presence she dreaded more than that of a Mohawk, until her form pressed against the piled-up bags of grain, and she was like one at bay. The cry for vengeance which was on Jeems' lips broke in a sobbing breath when he saw her. He spoke her name, and Toinette made no response except that she drew herself more closely to the sacks. Odd's toenails clicked on the wooden floor as he went to her. This did not take her eyes from Jeems. They were twin fires flaming at him through a twilight gloom. The dog touched her hand with his warm tongue, and she snatched it away.

She seemed to grow taller against the gray dusk of the wall of grain. "You—English—beast!" It was not the mill wheel this time, but Toinette's voice, filled with the madness and passion which blazed from her eyes.

With a sudden movement she picked up the musket and struck at him. It had been loaded, she would have killed him. She continued to strike, but Jeems was conscious only of the words which came from her brokenly as she spent her strength on him. He had come with the English Indians to destroy her people! He and his mother had plotted it, and they were alive while every one who belonged to her was dead! The barrel of the gun struck him across the eyes. It fell against his wounded arm. It bruised his body. Sobbingly, she kept repeating that she wanted to kill him, and cried out wildly for the power with which to accomplish the act as he stood before her like a man of stone. An English beast—her people's murderer—a fiend more terrible than the painted savages.

She struck until the weight of the musket exhausted her and she dropped it. Then she snatched weakly at the hatchet in Jeems' hands, and his fa-gers relaxed about the helve. With a cry of triumph, she raised it, but before the blow could descend she sank in a crumpled heap upon the floor. Even then her almost unconscious lips were whispering their denunciation.

He knelt beside her and supported her head in his unwounded arm. For a moment it lay against his breast. Her eyes were closed, her lips were still. And Jeems, sick from her blows, remembered his mother's God and breathed a prayer of gratitude because of her deliverance.

Then he bent and kissed the mouth that had cured him.

CHAPTER VI

Toinette was alone when she awoke from the unconsciousness which had come to ease the anguish of her mind and body. It seemed to her she was coming out of sleep and that the walls which dimly met her eyes were those of her bedroom in the manor. That a truth whose evidence lay so horribly about her could be reality and not a dream broke on her senses dully at first and then with a swift understanding. She sat up expecting to see Jeems. But he was gone. She was no longer where she had fallen at her enemy's feet. But Jeems had made a resting place for her empty bags and must have carried her to it. She shivered when she looked at the musket and the stain of blood on the floor. She had tried to kill him. And he had gone away, leaving her alive!

As had happened to Jeems, something was burned out of her now. It had gone in the sea of darkness which had swept over her, and she rose with an unemotional calmness, as if the tower room with its dust and cobwebs and store of ripened grain had become her cloister. Passion had worn itself away. If a thought could have slain, she would still have wreaked her vengeance on Jeems, but she would not have touched the musket again that lay on the floor.

She went to the head of the stairs and looked down. The son of the English woman had left no sign except the drip of blood that made a trail on the steps and out of the door. Exultation possessed her as she thought how nearly she had brought to the Bulgains the same shadow of death which they and their kind had brought to her. The thrill was gone in a moment. The red drops fascinated her, painted brightly by the sun. Jeems Bulain—out there with her dead! The boy her mother had tried to make her regard with bitterness and dislike from childhood—a man grown into an English monster! She struggled to bring back her power to hate and her desire to kill, but the effort she made was futile. She followed the crimson stains.

All about her was the haze of smoke, soft and still in the air. In the distance, obscured by the fog which ran from the smoldering ruins, she saw a form bent grotesquely under a burden. It was a shapeless thing, distorted by the sun and the smoky spiridrifts dancing before her eyes, but living because it was moving away from her. Behind it was a smaller object, and she knew the two were Jeems and his dog.

She watched until they were blotted from her vision, and minutes passed before she followed where they had gone.

Jeems must have seen her, for he reappeared with the dog like a werewolf at his heels. He had found a coat somewhere and did not look so savage, though his face was disfigured and bleeding where she had struck him with the barrel of the musket. She tried to speak when he stopped before her. Accusation and a bit of ferocity remained in her soul, but they were impotent in the silence between them. His eyes meeting hers steadily from under the lurid brand of her blow, seemed less like a murderer's and held more the gaze of one who regarded her with a cold and terrible pity. He did not put out a helping hand though she felt herself swaying. He was no longer youth. He was not even Jeems Bulain.

But his voice was the same. "I am sorry, Toinette." (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Comprehensive "By and large" has about the same meaning as comprehensively, on the whole, or everything considered. For instance, Mark Twain says in "Old Times": "Taking you by and large, you do seem to be more different kinds of an ass than any creature I ever saw before."

Towns With Short Names Two towns in the United States are easy to remember. They are Al, in Georgia, and Us, in Kentucky.

Legal Precedent One legal authority says: "In the Anglo-American legal system a decision by a court, made on a question of law arising in a case and necessary to its determination, is an authority, or binding precedent, in the same court or in other courts of lower rank, in subsequent cases where the same question is again in controversy." This is called the doctrine of precedent, or "stare decisis et non quleta movere," which means "to stand by the decision and not disturb what is settled."

Hobbies Benefit Children Encourage your child to develop a hobby. No matter that the hobby does not interest you, if it will develop initiative, artistic or construction ability, something that the child will grow along with, encourage him in it. Wholesome hobbies like carpentry, photography, billiards, chess, radio and modeling keep the youngsters off the streets and at home where they belong.

Early Cooking The old-fashioned outside oven had a domed chamber built of brick and heated by means of light wood and sticks were burned inside. When the bricks were well heated, the ashes and embers were raked out and the floor swept and the food to be cooked introduced by a flat, wooden shovel with a long handle and the door was then closed.

Myrtle in History Medicinal virtues are attributed to the myrtle, and its oil had a place among the drugs of the apothecary in the days of chivalry and incessant warfare. Now, however, it is esteemed chiefly for the beauty, and sweet fragrance of its foliage, and as such is planted freely about the palaces of eastern potentates, as has been the rule from remote antiquity.

Above All, Be True! He that is habituated to deceptions and artificialities in trifles will try in vain to be true in matters of importance, for truth is a thing of habit rather than of will. You cannot in any given case by any sudden and single effort will to be true. If the habit of your life has been insincerely.—F. W. Robertson.

Fratricide A fraternity lad who had been suspicious of a brother's maneuvers was calling on his regular date. The small lad of the household, who was entertaining him while his sister put on the finishing touches to her toilet, said: "I see you have a pin just like the guy who comes when you're not here."

Horsehound Candy Horsehound candy is flavored with an extract from the leaves of the plant known as horsehound. This plant belongs to the mint family and was called horsehound or horsehound because of the white, downy appearance of the stem and leaves, suggesting hoar frost.—The Pathfinder.

Ring It Up A Westinghouse scientist says one noise can be used to silence another. The little bell on the cash register, for instance, stops the sound of moaning.—Los Angeles Times.

Age of Soldiers According to statistics compiled by the Veterans' bureau, out of 500,000 United States officers and enlisted men serving in the World war, the average age was 24.35 years.

Indian Castles It is not known definitely just when castles originated in India. Records are not available until the Vedic Aya period, about 1200 B. C. Castles were then in existence.

Specialists Seeking to Extend Use of Honey

Ancient literature, telling of the adaptions of honey to suit the varying tastes and needs of past centuries, provides clues which scientists are now following to revive old uses and to develop the present possibilities of the product.

The early Romans in their writings often mentioned the honeybee and honey. Among the products they mentioned frequently are water honey, salt-water honey, water mead, rose honey, honey foam, and honey vinegar.

The United States Department of Agriculture is studying the chemical properties of honey and methods of inducing chemical changes in it that will open the field for new honey products. Specialists are perfecting methods of making honey candy, and some manufacturers already have secret processes for making this confection. Many housekeepers now use honey to sweeten beverages, cereals, and cakes and generally in cooking. It is also used as a sirup on waffles and hot cakes. Eminent physicians proclaim that honey contains the most beneficial of the sugars.

Chinese Lipstick in 1730 Among the Chinese paintings on glass recently shown in a London gallery was that of a Chinese young woman at her toilet in a well-to-do home. Although the date of this picture is about 1730, the miss was using a lipstick with all the skill of a modern sapper.

Childhood and Youth

Week A Success

A large and happy crowd of Sunday School children were in attendance at the children's party in Community Hall Saturday night, and all report a joyous time. We hope to have more such parties in the future. There was a large increase in Sunday School attendance Sunday morning. We are not sure as to the number in the Baptist School, but we know there was a substantial increase in attendance and interest. There were ninety five in the Methodist School. Five pupils received gold pin awards for perfect attendance for one year, Lorene Stimmel, Leslie Boughner, Alice and Agnes Deguer and Daisy Harmon, and a number received silver pins for nine months attendance.

The young people from both Sunday Schools had charge of the morning worship at the Methodist Church. During which there were several special numbers of instrumental and vocal music by the Baptist and Methodist pupils. Misses Louise Sweet and Vena Louise Snow rendered violin solos. And the R. V. J.
