Hoover's Desertion of Farm Board Cited Exhibition of Irresponsible Government

Following the demand of Senator David A. Reed (Rep., Pa.) that the Federal Farm Board be abolished, and the declaration of Representative Will R. Wood (Rep., Ind.) that the board is "a fish in the pan," President Hoover issued a statement concerning that body of his own creation, which the Baltimore Sun calls a "flagrant exhibition of irresponsible government." The Sun says:

"President Hoover washes his hands of responsibility for the Federal Farm Board. The Board makes its own policies," says a statement from the White House. "It was given authority to handle the situation. . . . It is an independent body."

"Thus another step is taken," the Sun declares, "toward the climax of one of the most flagrant exhibitions of irresponsible government in the history of the country. Congress did not favor Mr. Hoover's Federal Farm Board scheme. It had other plans for farm relief. Mr. Hoover would not approve these. So to get something done Congress knuckled down and accepted his plan . . . but there was the slightly extenuating circumstance that Mr. Hoover had given assurance that there were certain things the Farm Board would not do."

For example, the Sun quotes President Hoover in outlining his scheme to Congress:

"No government agency should engage in buying and selling and price fixing of products, for such courses can only lead to bureaucracy and domination."

"Thus Congress had reason to believe" the Sun continues, "that in trusting enormous powers to a Farm Board of Mr. Hoover's creation it would not do these things which he so clearly condemned. It is true some others were skeptical of Mr. Hoover's position. Some thought price-fixing inevitable under his scheme. But Congress professed to believe. The Board, however, has bought and sold and price-fixed on a gigantic scale. And now, when it has produced a mess which is a serious menace to the entire country, the White House blithely announces that it is none of the President's concern, because the Farm Board is an 'independent body.' What could be more irresponsible?"

As to Mr. Hoover's "great reverence for 'independent' bodies, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission to which he likens the Farm Board," the Sun points out that Mr. Hoover suggested not long ago to the Interstate Commerce Commission what ought to be done about railroad consolidation.

"The difference here is," says the Sun, "that the Farm Board is in a mess that Mr. Hoover would like, if possible, to avoid, whereas in the case of railroad consolidation he believed he had a good trick up his sleeve."

The Martinez Concert

Samuel Martinez, the violin artist, accompanied by Mrs. Geo. Franger at the piano, gave two concerts here Tuesday—one in the afternoon to the school, and at night, in the auditorium, to the public. The violinist greatly pleased his audience by his mastery of his delicate instrument and the beautiful strains that followed his touch. His auditors here join in acclaiming him as a ranking artist, which promises, with age and training, to make him one of the truly great.

Pioneer Builder Dies

Charles B. Eddy, pioneer cattle man of the Pecos Valley and later the guiding mind in the building of two railroads in this section of New Mexico, died in New York Monday afternoon, April 13.

Mr. Eddy was in the cattle business in what is now Eddy county, then a part of Lincoln county, during the 80's and later built a railroad from Pecos, Texas, to Eddy. Still later this line was extended to Roswell and further northeast to connect with and became a part of the Santa Fe. Afterwards he organized a company and built the El Paso & Northeastern, which was completed to the Capitan coal fields in September, 1899. In 1905 Mr. Eddy sold the E. P. & N. E. line to the El Paso & Southwestern, which later passed into the hands of the Southern Pacific Company, the present operators.

Since the sale of the El Paso line, Mr. Eddy had been engaged in many activities, one of which took him to Spain, where he built a railroad Lincoln county and the Pecos Valley owe much to Mr. Eddy who pioneered in this section in railroad building and the development of the territory through which his roads were constructed.

Economist Sees Relief of Depression Through Reducing Tariff to Revive Foreign Trade

Washington, April—The high tariff as a factor in bringing on present depression and as a means of relief was the subject of an address recently by Benjamin M. Anderson, Jr., economist of the Chase National Bank, New York before the Foreign Policy Association at Philadelphia.

"The most serious obstacle in the way of early recovery is the state of our foreign trade," says Mr. Anderson. "The most serious obstacle in the way of the revival of our foreign trade is our high protective tariffs." Therefore, he declares, "the quickest way to get out of the existing depression is to reduce our tariffs" and thus stimulate foreign trade.

Mr. Anderson told how Europe bought from the United States upon a large scale in 1919 and 1920, as this country would give her credit, only to find she had bought recklessly; in fact, had overbought manufacturers and merchants who had extended credit found themselves in debt and unable to collect in Europe, so that "our seeming prosperity of 1919 and early 1920 passed quickly into the great crisis of 1920-21."

"But, we learned no lesson from this," Mr. Anderson said. "Instead we raised the tariffs in 1922, and for six and a half years sold in large volume, credit made possible by the inflow of the free gold in the world."

The change in the gold situation in 1927-28, greatly reduced our ability to take foreign bonds, he continued, so that "in the latter part of 1929, the ability of the outside world to buy from us sharply and violently diminished."

In time, he said, this country and the world could readjust itself to the present tariff situation, but this would mean to curtail agricultural production, abandon farms, reduce production of automobiles, of copper, of oil, of cotton, of agricultural machinery and other important export lines, and crowd more of our population into lines engaged in producing for the domestic market.

"But this," Mr. Anderson declares, "is a slow process and a painful process, and an unnecessary process."

"We can cut through and make this readjustment unnecessary if we restore our foreign trade, and we can do that by lowering the tariffs."

The Methodist Church

By Rev. Jno. L. Lawson

Eighty nine at Sunday School There is a class, a place and a welcome for you there. We are somewhat crowded for class room, but don't let that keep you away; we'll make room for you somehow. Mrs. J. M. Beck favored us with a very much appreciated solo during the morning church service. And Miss Louise Sweet will treat us to some more violin music next Sunday night. And by way of comment on Miss Louise's talent let me say that when some people draw the bow across the strings they play a fiddle that is just ordinary music but when Miss Louise plays the violin it is violin music, and of the best. She is our own home girl, and is with honor in her own country. And let me call your attention also to the fact that there seems to be an increased interest in things spiritual and worthwhile in Carrizozo. Let us keep up that interest. The best is none too good for us, and the more of it we have the better we are.

Remember Sunday School next Sunday morning and church services in the evening. Church service at Capitan in the morning. We have a good Sunday School there also under the capable leadership of Mr. Pitkin of the Capitan High School.

Lecture on Prohibition

The following short, but strong lecture on prohibition is illuminating, if not harmonious;

"The Democrats are splitting over prohibition and next the Republicans will be wrangling. The prohibitory law is a fool law, brought about by fool people who will not behave and so everyone must pay for the folly of a majority of human beings. The best way to settle the liquor problem is to make it free, no taxes on it and no profits, and then educate people how to use it. Education is the only way to make prohibition a success anyway."

Employment Production

Indianapolis, Ind., April—The speed of modern industry is illustrated by the announcement today that production of the new Chevrolet commercial body plant has totaled more than 22,000 bodies since Oct. 15. On that date, when the plant was taken over by Chevrolet, designs for bodies to be built here were not yet in existence.

Sixteen different types are already in volume production, and plans are complete for building three additional types.

Since acquiring the plant, formerly operated by the Martin-Perry Body Corp., Chevrolet officials have renovated the buildings and grounds, replaced obsolete equipment, schooled workmen in precision methods of manufacture called for in the body designs, and placed in operation 52 body assembly plants at as many zone points.

The project adds over a million square feet of floor space to Chevrolet production facilities, and is particularly in that it was made during a time of general business slackness. The development here consists of forty acres of ground, and 700,000 square feet of plant and storage space. The zone assembly plants, all now in operation, add nearly a half million square feet of space to the expansion.

While the plant last year, under previous ownership and management, operated on a slack schedule, employment is currently running around 650 men, according to J. A. Jamieson, general manager. The zone assembly plants employ several hundred additional men, and add to the payrolls in their localities.

The speed with which the development got under way has few counterparts in modern industry, and rivals the achievement of 1923 when the Chevrolet production plants were made ready almost overnight to build a six cylinder car after ten years of four cylinder cars manufacture

Cutting Down Motor Accidents

(National Industries News Service)

The licensing of motor car drivers after examination and test is a practical step in the direction of reducing the number of motor vehicular accidents in this country, in the opinion of the Silvertown Safety League.

The states which have the mandatory examination and driving test for prospective drivers are Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and West Virginia as well as the District of Columbia.

The states which prescribe "Licenses" without the mandatory examination and driving test, or making them optional with traffic authorities, or using them chiefly for revenue raising purposes, are Indiana, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska, South Carolina, Washington and Wisconsin.

The rate of accident increase in the States which license drivers by examination and test has been 29 per cent less than during the same time in the states which do not license drivers.

The Goodrich Silvertown Safety League is cooperating with various organizations which are playing a part in the attempt to check the number of motor vehicular accidents. The League is pledging motorists to exercise every precaution in driving.

Motorists are invited to call at Goodrich dealers where they can sign pledges and receive in return emblems for their cars.

About Pies, Cakes and Cookies

By NELLIE MAXWELL

"It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that many matters which agitate the public mind are not worth a thought in comparison with dietary questions to which a thought is seldom given."

HERE is a cottage cheese pie that everybody will like, because it is different.

Cottage Cheese Pie

Beat three eggs, add one cupful of cottage cheese; nine tablespoonfuls of sugar, one cupful of freshly grated coconut, one teaspoonful of nutmeg, a cupful of coconut milk and a cupful of rich milk, or use as much of the milk as the nut contains and add enough cow's milk to make two cupfuls of liquid. Add a pinch of salt and more sugar if it is not sweet enough. A grating of lemon peel may be used instead of the nutmeg if that is not liked. Pour into a deep pastry lined pie plate and bake as for custard pie.

Crisp Molasses Cookies

Take two and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour, one-fourth cupful of bread flour, one teaspoonful each of baking powder and salt, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, then sift all again. Heat one cupful of molasses, add one-half cupful of butter and two teaspoonfuls of soda. Add the flour gradually and when well mixed, chill. Roll very thin and cut with a cookie cutter. Bake ten minutes.

Orange Sponge Cake

Beat two egg yolks with four tablespoonfuls of orange juice and one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice until thick; mix three-fourths of a cupful of sugar with one-half teaspoonful of grated orange rind and add gradually to the egg yolks; add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and cut and fold in one cupful of flour, sifted four times with one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda. Pour into a buttered cake pan and bake in a moderate oven.

Lemon Pie

Take one and one-half cupfuls of bread crumbs, cover with one cupful of boiling water and let stand until soft. Mix one cupful of sugar and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of cornstarch, add two egg yolks well beaten and the juice and grated rind of a lemon. Combine the mixtures and make in an crust.

SUPERSTITIOUS SUE

In India when a couple are about to be married, they swear eternal fidelity to each other by peering milk on their heads—maybe that is where the milk of human kindness originated.

Some Neighborly Suggestions

A SOFT varnish brush with a string or wire through the handle to hang it by is a desirable utensil in every pantry to be used for brushing bread, rolls and pastry with melted butter.

Instead of squeezing lemons whenever a drink of lemonade is wanted, squeeze several lemons at a time, strain the juice and keep it in a bottle for future use.

Save all lamb fat. It makes excellent shortening for gingerbread and cookies.

Grease stains on leather may be removed by applying benzine or pure turpentine. Wash the spots afterward with the well-beaten white of an egg or a good feather reviver.

THE TIME TO SAY YES

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I KNOW no words that you can say Before an altar that will hold Your hearts together; know no way, Not even this bright band of gold, To keep you one in that far day When you grow old.

To marry you must more than wed, To marry means some stronger bond,

To marry you must look ahead, Up life's long hillside, and beyond, Oh, can you, youth and beauty fled, Still be-as food?

Your yes must be the yes of years, Of years you cannot know or guess, Remember all the sighs, the tears, Misfortunes and unhappiness, And, if the thought but more endears, "Ah, then say yes.

Doing Something to Help the Bashful

By JEAN NEWTON

ALL the world wants to help the bashful. They seem so helpless, they fill us with a sort of protective feeling; and particularly bashful swains—those who are backward about coming forward to get a wife—many of us have long since felt that something ought to be done about them.

And now we learn that a little old village in Germany, St. Goar, has gotten ahead of us by a few hundred years!

For it is an old custom in St. Goar that every spring the maidens of the place are "auctioned off" so that bashful swains may get at least an option on a sweetheart.

According to the terms of the "Auction for the Bashful," each girl taking part must agree to keep company with the man who chooses her for the following year. During that year she may not dance or associate with any man other than her "purchase."

Many of us will rejoice that there is one place in the world where bashful men may be encouraged and aided in this way. But it is my personal opinion that the terms at the St. Goar auction are a bit extreme. To forbid a girl to even dance with any other man for a whole year may be said to be stacking the cards in favor of the bashful; and then, too, it may not be as good for them or for the romance of the town as they think. There is such a thing as too much of a good thing. The young man who is forced upon a girl for every single dance for a whole year may find that it might have been better for his cause had the reins been a bit looser!

But anyway we must take our hats off to St. Goar, which, by the way, nestles on the River Rhine not far from the rocks of the Lorelei maidens, for taking the initiative a long time ago and doing something to help the bashful. On less rigorous terms the girls of some of our modern communities might not be averse to adopting the idea.

"Some people are so dumb," says Rudolph Kureth, "they think hookworms are what you use when you go fishing."

THE TEUTONIC SCHWEINHUND

By Hugh Hutton

(Author of Nutty Natural History.)

HERE is a creature that has been shamefully neglected by most natural history experts, although there was probably no animal mentioned in the press so often during the war. The term was applied by the Germans to the British soldier, although he in no way resembles the true Schweinhund.

It was not until this year that a genuine Schweinhund was captured in East Prussia by an expedition from The American Museum of Nutty Natural History, and mounted in the museum as shown above. Little, however, is known of its habits.

A coconut forms the body of the Schweinhund, to which is fastened a paper-shell pecan head with split navy bean eyes and clove horns. The tail and legs are toothpicks and the feet are split almond kernels. The museum has an expedition out now to collect more Schweinhunds and if possible a Teufelhund.

Things to Make

1. A Bulletin Board.

Find a board or piece of heavy cardboard about fifteen inches by six and plane it until it is smooth. Stain or paint it brown or green. Hang the bulletin board in the kitchen or in your playroom. On the hooks put your best school papers, any pictures you draw or paint and anything interesting you find in a newspaper or magazine. Change the news on your board every week.

2. Soap Carving.

From a bar of hard white soap you can make heads, boats, houses and many other things. Even a small piece of soap may be carved into a clay dog, a bird or a fish. You may do some of the carving with a knife and use sharp pointed pieces of wood to outline the designs and rub away the soap.

3. Popcorn People.

When you pop corn next time save some of the kernels and do not butter them, for these are to be used to make some people. Probably you can find some short pieces of wire in the attic or cellar, or in the tool box. Twist three pieces of wire together to form a figure with wire arms and legs. Then cover the wires with popcorn, beading the ends a little so the last kernels will not slip off. You can twist the heads and arms and legs in different positions and your popcorn people may be standing or sitting, dancing or running. Perhaps with a pencil you can make eyes, nose and mouth on the top kernel. Make some tiny popcorn people for sister's doll house and a tall father and mother with small children for your games. These polite white people will ride on your animals, march with your soldiers and help you keep store.

A DOCTOR'S ADVICE for Stubborn Bowels

"Drink at least six glasses of water daily—preferably before meals. Eat bulkier foods, such as vegetables, fruits and coarse breads. Use a mild laxative as needed."

That is Dr. Caldwell's advice to people with stubborn bowels. He specialized on the bowels; treated thousands for constipation and its ills. The prescription he used over and over in his practice has become the world's most popular laxative! "Syrup Pepsin," as it is now called, was tested by more than 47 years of practice.

Today you can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore in America. It is always the same; made exactly according to the original prescription, from laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients. Nothing in it to harm even a baby. It does not gripe, sicken or cause any discomfort. But it moves the bowels; it gets rid of all the souring waste which clogs the system; makes you bilious, headachy, gassy, bloated, weak, half-sick. A doctor should know what is best for the bowels. Syrup Pepsin is a famous doctor's choice of a safe, pleasant, effective laxative for men, women, older folks, babies and children.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 47 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

"Let there be light!"
For years and years the practical meaning of this Biblical expression was lost to the farmer. True, he may have got some spiritual consolation from it, but there was a significance that had not dawned upon him. He kept hard at it, working his long hours each day and far into the night with little of the comforts of home that make it a solace and comfort after the day's work is over. His first consideration was a barn. And after he had built a structure that was not to be excelled in the neighboring country, he built a hoghouse or sheep barn. All the while he was living in a makeshift shelter which he called home.

But the light was coming, coming to show the way in the darkness. The light that abated the real value of a home, the absolute economy of the idea, and its influence on the future of the boys and girls who were growing up. As they began to desert the farms, to leave their parents to go to the lights of the city, the farmer began to think, and as he thought, he began to see the gleam that was to enlighten him. He realized that to keep his boys on the farm, to get the maximum joy out of life, he would have to build a regular home as well as a substantial barn.

And with the home came many of the conveniences that are now available in the city. With the home came running water, bathrooms, and electric light, the light that was to lead the farmer down the road to ideal home life.

You would have to travel far and long to find a modest farm home that embodies more real comfort, more convenience and labor-saving inventions than the house shown here with floor plans. It is not at all elaborate, being of the familiar, practical and economical square or box type, as it is often called, frame exterior set on a firm concrete foundation with high cellar for heating plant and storage room. A farmhouse without plenty of room for a large laundry, vegetable store room and modern heating plant, is not worth while and certainly not practical.

Across the entire front extends a wide, open porch, an ideal recreation place for the family in the warm weather and cool evenings. In the summer it can be screened in to keep out pests and dirt.
The front door opens into a small vestibule in which there is a clothes closet for outdoor clothes, umbrellas, etc. The reception hall opens into the large living room, 13 by 16 feet 6 inches, arranged in the manner in which modern buildings are, with fireplace and side wall bookcases. Windows in front and side provide plenty of light. It is also important to note in these floor plans that all electrical fixtures and outlets are indicated.

From the living room, one enters the dining room through a doorway rather wide and plain. In the dining room provision is made for a central lighting fixture over the table, and smaller wall fixtures around the room. This room gets light from a triple side window. Crossing over, we find the door to the kitchen, a small, compact room of modern design and arrangement. Off the kitchen are pantry and wash-room, the latter a necessary room in the farmhouse plan, a place where the men coming in from the fields can wash up before stepping into the house proper. In this way much of the dirt that used to come into the farm kitchen is left out. Off the dining room to the rear is a bedroom for those who have to wash early. There is also a lavatory in connection with the wash-room.

This arrangement leaves the upper floor entirely to bedrooms, of which there are four in this plan, with a rear screened-in sleeping porch and balcony. The two front bedrooms are 13 feet square, while the two rear ones are 12 by 13 feet. They all have clothes closets.

In short, we have a modern farm home, well constructed, containing all of the conveniences and comforts of the city home. It is the antidote for the poison that is gnawing at the vitals of the youth on the farm and driving them to uncertain conditions in the great cities. There is no excuse for the old-fashioned home any more. The snap of a button or the turning of a switch gives the best light there is at small cost. Running water from faucets allows the soothing vigor of a bath and relieves the farmer's wife of the hard task of hauling from the well or pumping it via the kitchen.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

No Delusions of Grandeur

It happened late in September, 1918, when the Seventy-seventh division was given the job of driving the Germans out of the Argonne forest as the Allied forces pushed on toward Sedan and Mezieres. The Three Hundred and Sixty-eighth Infantry, a regiment of colored troops, formed the connecting link between the French Fourth and the American First armies, a position which would place it in the forefront of the attack.

But there was one soldier in that outfit who had no delusions of grandeur about the part he was going to play in the historic encounter which was to be fought on the morrow. The night before the battle the following conversation, according to Thomas M. Johnson, war correspondent of the New York Sun, took place between two members of the Three Hundred and Sixty-eighth:

First Negro Soldier—Well, guess we're gwine show 'em tomorrow. Hear dey got fifty thousand white troops heh! us an' when we bu's de line for 'em, dey goin' right through.

Second Negro Soldier—Yeah?
First Negro Soldier—What yo' so gloomy about? We're gwine be in all de newspapers tomorrow. What you reckon dey'll say?

Second Negro Soldier—What dey'll say? Why, dey'll say "Fifty Thousand White Troops Tromped to Death." Dat's what dey'll say!

The Litany of the Poilu

The Germans had their "Hymn of Hate" but the French had their "Litany of the Poilu." And that may have had something to do with the final outcome of the war. It was a trench jest which is said to have originated somewhere along the Aisne, a bit of humor which helped break the strain and suspense of waiting under shell-fire. Could there be a more perfect philosophy for the soldier than this:

"Of two things, one is certain: Either you are mobilized, or you are not mobilized.

"If you are not mobilized, there is no need to worry; if you are mobilized, of two things one is certain: Either you're behind the lines, or you're on the front.

"If you're behind the lines, there is no need to worry; if you're on the front, of two things one is certain: Either you're resting in a safe place, or you're exposed to danger.

"If you're resting in a safe place, there is no need to worry; if you're exposed to danger, of two things one is certain: Either you're wounded, or you're not wounded.

"If you're not wounded, there is no need to worry; if you're wounded, of two things one is certain: Either you're wounded seriously, or you're wounded slightly.

"If you're wounded slightly, there is no need to worry; if you're wounded seriously, of two things one is certain: Either you recover, or you die.

"If you recover, there is no need to worry; if you die, you can't worry."

When the Shells Fell Short

Great consequences often result from small acts, and some insignificant object may change the destiny of thousands of human beings. A small defect in some American-made explosive supplied to the British during the World war may have saved the lives of thousands of Germans and cost the lives of an equal number of English.

Up to a certain time the shells which came from this munition factory had been very accurate, the timing regular and the percentage of error small. Then the British gunners began to notice a difference. The timing and the bursting of the shrapnel shells was very short. The ministry of munitions realized the seriousness of the situation and Sir Ernest Meier, a member of the council, was sent to America to investigate. He visited the factory and made a thorough investigation without being able to locate the difficulty.

Then quite by chance it occurred to him that there might have been some change in the manner of handling the powder, and consequently a change in the voids between the particles of the powder. When the head of the munition factory was asked if there had been any such change, he replied: "Why, yes. We have been making an addition to our factory and have had to bring the powder in trucks over temporary roads instead of by railroad as formerly."

Immediately Sir Ernest saw his problem solved. The powder had been shaken more in the trucks than it had been in the railroad cars. Consequently the voids between the particles were less, the quantity of air in the powder less and the rate of burning was quite definitely affected. So at his suggestion the rough method of transport was abandoned, and from that time on there were no complaints.

Old Spanish Dance

There seems to be some confusion in regard to the English equivalent of the Spanish Zapateado. Professor Shields says that "jig" comes nearest to expressing it, as it is a solo dance. A "clog dance" also approximates the Zapateado when particularly animated.

REGULAR PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month. If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women.

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, so use it freely.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. Neuralgia, Neuritis, Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Rooster "Firebug"

A Brunswick (Maine) farmer had a firebug on his farm in the form of a rooster. He reports that while on the way to the barn he smoked a cigarette and placed the lighted end on a well curb before entering the barn. A moment later the rooster entered the barn with the cigarette, still burning, in his beak. The farmer shouted and as the rooster turned and ran it dropped the cigarette into chaff, which burst into flames. The blaze was stamped out before it had spread far.

SWEETEN ACID STOMACH THIS PLEASANT WAY

When there's distress two hours after eating—heartburn, indigestion, gas—suspect excess acid. The best way to correct this is with an alkali. Physicians prescribe Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water neutralizes many times its volume in excess acid; and does it at once. To try it is to be through with crude methods forever.

Be sure to get genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. All drugstores have the generous 25c and 50c bottles. Full directions in package.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine.

Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Like Coffee... the best Gasoline is Blended

THE sun beams cheerfully through an eastern window. The subtle fragrance of the morning coffee adds zest to the morning air, advance notice of the joy to come as you give the "cap top" to the coffee blend of your choice. Coffee roasting is important, of course, but the most skillful roaster cannot make a popular coffee from just one type of coffee bean.

The coffee connoisseur would not deign to drink coffee made from a single type of bean. Neither should the thoughtful motorist allow an unblended gasoline to go into his fuel tank. Gasoline must be blended if it is to possess all the vital properties contained in the three types of gasoline.

CONOCO Gasoline is blended, just as carefully as the finest coffee.

In CONOCO blended gasoline you'll find: Natural Gasoline, for quick starting; Straight-run Gasoline, for power and long mileage; Cracked Gasoline, for its anti-knock qualities. Motorists are fast learning that this is so. The result is a fast increasing group of gasoline connoisseurs who have added to their knowledge of the good things of life the fact that good gasoline must be blended.

The CONOCO Red Triangle marks the spots where CONOCO Blended Gasoline may be found. Try it today.

Don't Get the Breaks

The theory that men are rewarded in this world according to their deserts is largely bunk. There are men in every community who have received large reward who are shallow, superficial, selfish and have contributed little if anything to the community. They have merely got the breaks as they say. On the other hand there are men in every community who are possessed of every fine, sound, worthwhile trait who have an exalted idea of service and who give largely of themselves to the community and those about them who have not been adequately rewarded with this world's goods at the hand of the public, and they never will be. They are the draft horses of the community who are carrying the load while some of their fellows often less discerning, are riding in the chosen seats in the band wagon. The theory is not popular with chautauqua lecturers and writers, but look about you, and check up for yourself.

"We do not particularly thank the Republican National Committee for 'butting into' the affairs of New York State and seeking to make Republican capital out of the present situation in regard to an investigation of New York City government. In the first place, the blame for the lack of such a thing rests upon the shoulders of a Republican boss and to Republican State Senators; in the second, we don't want to see any more political partisanship in it than we have to have. ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF FORD VALUE

Bright, enduring RUSTLESS STEEL is used for many exposed bright metal parts of the Ford.

WHEN YOU BUY a Ford you buy enduring beauty. The body finish is made to last for the life of the car and practically all exposed bright metal parts except the bumpers are made of enduring Rustless Steel.

This Rustless Steel has great tensile strength. It is the same bright metal all the way through. A salt test equivalent to forty years' service under the severest weather conditions failed to have any effect on its brilliance. It never requires polishing. All you do is wipe it with a damp cloth, as you do your windshield.

This is just one of many features that show the substantial worth of the Ford. In speed, comfort, safety, economy and long life—in the richness of its finish and upholstery—it brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

Making Up School Budget

The specialists were here this week to make up the school budgets for Lincoln county for 1931-32. In the group were R. H. Grissom, the new State School Budget Auditor, T. B. Magruder, assistant land and tax agent of the Southern Pacific, Hugh Sawyer, representing the N. M. Taxpayers Association, and T. M. DuBois and J. A. Brubaker, members of the County School Budget Commission.

The meeting was opened Tuesday morning in the Superintendent's Office and Mrs. French, Superintendent and Secretary of the County Board, presented the County Budget as made by the Board at its regular meeting April 6th. These figures represented the schedule of small increases in salaries for teachers whose services have been satisfactory in the past and were in line with the policy in force during the past two years. Mrs. French recommended to the Commission that the general outline of County Board Budget be followed, including the small raises to competent teachers.

In outlining his position on new budgets Mr. Grissom stated that the Tax Commission would allow no raises in salaries of teachers or bus drivers.

The Budget for each district was worked over and approved the same as last year. No cuts were made in salaries and no raises allowed. Direct charges were not materially changed. Where enrollment met the legal requirements extra teachers were allowed.

The emergency fund for next year, to take care of increases in attendance and transportation for families outside the three mile limit, is less than one half that allowed for the current year.

District Commercial Contest at Alamogordo

The Commercial contest of this district was held at Alamogordo Friday April 10. Those entering from Carrizozo were:

Katherine Kelt, and Marguerite English, amateur typists, Carol Hines, novice typist, and George Young, bookkeeping. Alamogordo took first place in the contest and Carrizozo took second. Individual awards were made to the following Carrizozo students; Katherine Kelt, third, Carol Hines, second, Marguerite English fourth and George Young fifth, in their respective contests.

The District Contest will meet at Carrizozo next year and some of the students are already planning on what they will enter. This is the first time Carrizozo has ever placed in this contest. It is perhaps the most friendly contest we have due to the fact that it is graded on merit alone and papers are graded once by the students and twice by the teachers and the last two grades must check. All enjoyed the trip and were well treated by the Alamogordo High School.

District Court

Judge Frenger, accompanied by his official family, arrived Sunday evening, and opened the regular spring term of District Court for Lincoln county the following morning. The petit jury was empanelled Wednesday, and the first jury trial occurred yesterday. Salamon Aragon was the defendant, charged with killing a beef. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty. Although no grand jury was summoned at this time, there is, nevertheless, a rather heavy docket, and the term promises to last well into, if not over, the third week.

Roadmaster Shot

Hood Brown, roadmaster on this division, was shot and seriously wounded at his home in Duran Monday evening. His housekeeper being charged with the act. Local railroad surgeon Johnson was called from here, gave the injured man all the relief possible and sent him to the company hospital at El Paso, and from which point various reports as to his condition have been received.

School Board Elections

The interests manifested in the selection of rural directors in Lincoln county last week was greater, perhaps, than ever before. Contests were waged in a number of districts, and in some cases, a larger vote cast than at any time in the history of the locality, even in a presidential election. This was particularly true of the Corona district, where the contest brought out a vote of 309. Tom DuBois was reelected, however, receiving 218 to his opponent's 91. A contest that could bring that number to the polls, at least, shows a hearty interest.

Songs the Cowboy boys Sang

"On the Western Trail"—A cowboy group, the work of the famous woman sculptor, Sally James Farnham, recently exhibited in New York.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE of the current Broadway stage successes is a play which bears the title of "Green Grow the Lilacs," and sophisticated Gotham, which doesn't usually think a song is worth singing unless it came out of Tin Pan Alley, is delighted with the songs in that play. And the majority of them had their origin, not in New York, but in the Southwest—they are songs which the cowboys used to sing!

This incident is another example of the increasing interest of Americans in the folklore of their country. That interest has manifested itself in various forms—in the popularity of the negro spirituals of the South, in the revival of singing of ballads of past generations (ballads which prove conclusively that, although many of them trace back directly to the old English ballad, America had a native balladry) and in the wider dissemination of the legends of Paul Bunyan, Pecos Bill and John Henry, myth heroes created in the fertile imaginations of the lumberjacks, the cowboys and the negro railroad workers, respectively.

The play referred to above takes its name from a song, "Green Grow the Lilacs," which has been sung in the Southwest for generations. Its origin is veiled in obscurity. One critic has ventured the opinion that it traces its ancestry back to Robert Burns' poem, "Green Grow the Hushes." If so, perhaps somewhere in the line of descent may be found a song popular with the American soldiers during the Mexican war, "Green Grow the Hushes, O!" and there is a legend that the Mexican name for Americans, "gringos," is a corruption of the words "green grows."

Another of the songs of this play which is said to have been an old favorite in the Southwest, hence was well known in Oklahoma, the native state of Lynn Riggs, author of the play, is "My Name is Sam Hall." There is no doubt about the origin of this song for it comes from London where it was a cellar ditty. In 1849 W. G. Ross, a Scotch low comedian, was singing in Cider Cellars in Maiden Lane, Covent Garden, (the original, incidentally, of Black Kettle in "Pendennis") and "My name is Sam Hall" was one of his "hits."

How did this song find its way to the old Indian territory? Did some adventurous Cockney carry it there or did some disgraced "younger son," who could not live in England and who had fled to the American frontier where no questions were asked about a man's past, first sing it along the banks of the Canadian or the Cimarron? No one knows! But the cowboys once sang it on the Oklahoma range and it is their version, slightly changed from the original English version, which is being sung on Broadway today.

In reality, though, this is not so unusual for an examination of the collection of old cowboy songs, made by John A. Lomax of Texas several years ago, will show that many of the favorites among the cowboys, especially those of the more sentimental type (and the cowboy was strong for the song which dripped with sentimentality) closely resemble some of the old English ballads and probably trace directly from them. Some typical ones, given in the Lomax collection, are those which bear the titles "Bonnie Black Horse," "Fair Female Moor," "The White Bonnet Moor" and "Young Charlotte."

More than that, investigators of this type of folk song have revealed the fact that many of the best known cowboy songs are nothing more than adaptations of sentimental ballads of an earlier day. This is true of one of the most famous of them all—a song variously known as "The Dying Cowboy," "The Cowboy's Lament" and "The Lone Prairie," a song of innumerable verses and of many variations both as to the wording of the different stanzas and the chorus which follows each stanza. In practically all versions the first stanza is the same:

"Oh, bury me not on the lone prairie,
These words came low and mournfully
From the pallid lips of a youth who lay
On his dying bed at the close of day.

By making allowance for much "local color" it is easy to see how "The Lone Prairie" song was adapted from the song, "The Ocean Burial," words by W. H. Saunders, music by G. N. Allen, which appears in "The Nightingale," a book of songs for "Juvenile Classes, Public Schools and Seminars," compiled by W. O. and H. S. Perkins and published by Dilson in 1860. The first verse of "The Ocean Burial" tells how:

"Oh, bury me not in the deep, deep sea,
The words came low and mournfully
From the pallid lips of a youth who lay
On his cabin couch at close of day,
And his other numerous verses describe the deathbed scene minutely and with a wealth of detail, only, of course, the scenes are laid on the "deep, deep sea" instead of the "lone prairie-ee."

Nearly as famous a cowboy song as "The Lone Prairie" is another also variously called "The Cowboy's Lament" and "The Dying Cowboy," which has this chorus:

"Oh, beat the drum slowly and play the life slowly,
Play the Dead March as you carry me along;
Take me to the churchyard and lay the sod o'er me,
For I'm a young cowboy, I know I've done wrong.

Different authorities on cowboy songs and other native American ballads credit the authorship of this song to various persons and the usual statement is that "it appeared on the range in the early eighties." Although it is difficult to determine the authorship of a ballad, since such a song usually represents the contribution of a succession of amateur bards rather than the work of a single poet, it is my belief that, as nearly as the authorship of "The Cowboy's Lament" can be determined, credit for it belongs to the late E. H. Maynard of Colorado Springs, Colo., an old-time cowboy. Here is his story as he told it to me several years ago:

"During the winter of 1876 I was working for a Grimes outfit which had started north with a trail herd from Matagorda Bay, Texas. We were wintering the herd on the Salt Fork of the Arkansas river on the border of Kansas and Indian territory, waiting for the spring market to open at Wichita.

As I walked down by St. James hospital, St. James hospital, so early one day, etc., etc.

"I had often amused myself by trying to write verse and one dull winter day in camp, to while away the time, I began writing a poem which could be sung to the tune of 'The Dying Girl's Lament.' I made it a dying ranger or cowboy instead of a dying girl and had the scene in Tom Sherman's barroom instead of a hospital.

"Tom Sherman was a noted character in the old cattle trail days, a big strapping fellow six feet six or six feet seven tall, who first ran a dance hall and saloon in Great Bend in 1873 and then moved to Dodge City where he ran the same sort of place until some time in the '80s. All of the cowboys who came up from Texas knew Tom Sherman.

"After I had finished the new words I sang it to the boys in our outfit. They liked it and began singing it. It became popular with the boys in other outfits who heard it after we had taken our herd to market in Wichita the next spring and from that time on I heard it sung everywhere on the range and trail."

So "The Cowboy's Lament" is another example of a favorite cowboy song which was an adaptation of an earlier ballad. Mr. Maynard's version, written in 1876 and thus antedating other versions by five and possibly ten years, had for its first verse the following:

As I rode down by Tom Sherman's barroom,
By Tom Sherman's barroom so early one day,
There I espied a handsome young ranger
All wrapped in white linen, as cold as the clay.

"I see by your outfit that you're a ranger,"
The words that he said as I went riding by,
"Come, sit down beside me, and hear my sad story,
I'm shot through the breast and know I must die."

CHORUS:
Then muffle the drums and play the dead march;
Play the dead march as I'm carried along;
Take me to the churchyard and lay the sod o'er me,
For I'm a young cowboy, and know I've done wrong.

The version of this song, as given in Lomax's collection and as it is often reprinted, starts out:

As I walked out in the streets of Laredo,
As I walked out in Laredo one day,
I spied a poor cowboy wrapped up in white linen,
Wrapped up in white linen as cold as the clay.

"Oh, beat the drum slowly and play the life slowly,
Play the Dead March as you carry me along;
Take me to the green valley, there lay the sod o'er me,
For I'm a young cowboy and I know I've done wrong.

I see by your outfit that you are a cowboy,"
These words he did say as I boldly stepped by,
"Come, sit down beside me and hear my sad story,
I was shot in the breast and I know I must die."

From which it will be seen that in the years in which the fame of this "peer cowboy who done wrong" has spread the scene of his untimely demise has been changed to Laredo, Texas. But before it is too late, I want to register this footnote to history and say that it took place in Dodge City, Kan. I know, because the man who killed him (in a song) told me so!

Anne Was Always Overlooked

By RUBY DOUGLAS
(© 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate, (WNU Service))

ANNE was not exactly a Cinderella in the Owen family of girls; but she was the most unselfish of the quartette and was, therefore, frequently to be found at home while the others were enjoying themselves at this diversion or that.

The old Owen homestead lay a few miles out of town and it was a good many years since Mr. Owen had contributed anything to the family income. He considered his work done when he sold out his business to a far-seeing buyer and had little realized that to bring up four daughters would take a steadily increasing income instead of a waning one.

But with two girls teaching nearby and Grace in the county clerk's office in town they managed to live well. Anne was at home all day with the mother and, much as she would have liked to go out to find employment that would make her more independent, it was agreed in family counsel that she was needed at home. As a consequence, it was Anne who had the fewest clothes; Anne who was invited out least often; Anne who did this and that when the others were too busy making their own way or having a good time.

The girls had various men friends that came and went but none had assumed a serious turn toward matrimony. For, to give the young women their due, they were not in a hurry to leave the old home with a man who was just a man.

When the extensive new road-building in the county began, there happened, among the score of overseers, workers, foremen and engineers, to be a young man of unusual personality. His name was John Haven. He took up residence in the town at the old-fashioned boarding house known as The Place and it was not long before he was deluged with invitations to this hop and that party and all the gatherings of the young folks in the community. He danced well; he was good to look at; he played tennis and golf and made himself generally agreeable.

At the subscription dances held in the Neighborhood house he was a regular patron and he showed no partiality among the girls. One night he was dancing with Grace Owen and he asked her, much to her surprise, if she had a sister, Anne.

"Why—yes," admitted Grace, readily. "Doesn't she dance?" he asked.

"She doesn't go out very much. She would rather read," Grace told him.

Anne next day was called to the telephone.

"Hello," she called.

The voice over the wire had a familiar ring. And yet it was three years since she had heard it—and then not on the telephone.

It was John Haven. He was reminding her that during his college vacation he had been in charge of a book caravan that had visited the Owen homestead frequently and she, Anne, had taken several volumes from him.

"That is why I came back to this section to take charge of this end of the road building. I am an engineer, now, and do not need to peddle books to pay my way through college," he was telling her. "But—may I come to see you? I have met your sisters but always, when I have looked over those who were at the parties and dances, you have been missing. I have been fearful lest you had—married."

"Oh—no!" cried Anne. "I am still the quiet one of the family who remains in the chimney corner to read."

"You do not answer my question as to whether or not I may come to see you."

Anne hesitated. She did not know why. Perhaps it was a feminine instinct that made her seem not too eager.

"Yes," she said, at last. "But—won't you do this?"

"Anything," he assured her, interrupting in his eagerness.

"Come to see me some night when you have seen my three sisters at a dance—they're always there. Mother and father will have gone to bed and I shall be waiting for you. It will seem more—more like the old days when we used to spend an hour together talking books."

It was less than a week later that he went to the usual dance and found the three Owen sisters dancing as usual. He danced with one of them and disappeared, without a word to anyone.

Farmers Not Raising Enough Foals to Replace Horses.

Foals born this spring will prove to be good investments if they are properly grown, says A. L. Harvey of the division of animal husbandry at University farm, S. Paul, Minn. At the present rate of production, he says, farmers are not raising half enough colts to replace losses of horses by death; consequently the impending shortage of horses will tend to increase the demand and the prices. In view of this situation, it will pay the farmer-breeder to give careful attention to the growing colt.

First of all the foal should be given feed in addition to the mother's milk. Most colts will start nibbling a little grain out of the mare's feed-box when they are three or four weeks old. Soon they will eat out of a box of their own. Increase the amount of grain fed as the colt is able to handle it.

Exercise is another essential, but in many cases this is overdone. Colts may get the proper amount of exercise in two ways—by being allowed to run with the mare at night in a grass paddock, or by allowing two or more colts the run of a small lot during the day while the mares are at work. If the latter method is followed, it is a good plan to run the colts access to a dark, cool, box stall where they can get in out of the heat and sun when they wish.

Tuberculosis of Swine Is Shown Preventable

Allowing hogs to follow infected cattle, is the chief cause of swine tuberculosis, which inflicts heavy losses in the United States, according to information in Farmers' Bulletin 781-F, Tuberculosis of Hogs, just issued in revised form by the United States Department of Agriculture. Hogs also become affected by feeding on tuberculosis carcasses of various animals, including fowls, or on infected garbage.

Prevention lies in allowing hogs to follow only cattle that have passed the tuberculin test and in cooking carcasses, garbage, and offal before feeding them to hogs. Disposal of tuberculosis poultry prevents the spread of this type of the disease to hogs.

Where tuberculosis already exists in a herd of hogs the best plan is to remove all affected animals from the farm, the bulletin shows. Send the hogs to a slaughterhouse which is under federal inspection. Give the tuberculin test to cattle remaining on the farm after removing them to clean quarters. Thoroughly clean and disinfect the pens and stables used by affected animals before using them for healthy animals. Copies of Farmers' Bulletin 781-F may be obtained on application to the Office of Information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Low Influence of Boar Upon Size of Litters

It should be understood that the boar will have little or no direct influence upon the size of the litters which he may sire, except in so far as his general vitality may have an influence on the vitality of the male cells. It is a fact that frequent matings of a boar within a short time simply tends to lessen the vitality of the male cells, consequently double or multiple services are likely to decrease the size of litters rather than increase them, yet pasture or barnyard breeding is rather a common practice. Pasture breeding is also undesirable from another angle since in such cases no records are usually kept of the farrowing date of the sows, which may result in unnecessary loss of pigs at that time.

Live Stock Facts

With cheap rye, pigs do well for 50 to 60 days.

Virtually all pastures that have been utilized for some time by cattle can be improved by fertilization with phosphates and lime.

A run-down, emaciated condition in sheep, and a lack of color in the skin and mucous membranes, are signs of intestinal parasites.

Worms are all that more insidious because their toll in dead lambs does not usually come all at once, but is spread over several months.

The modern method of ridding a horse of worms is to withhold feed for 36 hours and then have a veterinarian administer for or five drams of oil of chenopodium in a gelatin capsule and follow immediately with a quart of raw linseed oil.

Ergot of rye, timothy, and June grass, etc., causes lameness of the salivary of tiny blood vessels, notably in the extremities of the animal, with the result that circulation is greatly lessened so that the affected part may become gangrenous and slough.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bu-Jain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tontours seigneurie. As the story opens the seigneurie is returning from a visit to the Tontours. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tontour, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tontour home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tontours go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flares. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain. He goes to the seigneurie and finds the manor destroyed and Tontour and his servants dead. Believing him an enemy, Toinette wounds Jeems and denounces him as an Englishman. Jeems returns to his murdered parents and the girl follows him. She becomes convinced her suspicions of Jeems were wrong.

And then he knew what had touched his shoulder in the darkness—Toinette's cheek pressing against it for a moment as lightly as a feather.

He felt her trembling. When she looked at him, her eyes rested on the brand of the musket barrel which lay in a red stripe across his forehead. The stars seemed bigger and clearer when at last they came to the half mile of abandoned road which ended in Lussan's clearing. It was the road down which Jeems had watched Tontour and Paul Tache and a proud little princess ride to the safe years before. Now the princess walked unsteadily at his side. She was white and fragile in the starlight, and her strength was gone. Her dress was torn by briars and brambles, and the tips of her shoes were almost worn from her feet. She struggled bravely as they entered the clearing, with the ruin of the house ahead of them. Both were so tired in soul and body that their minds seized upon this end of their journey as a relief from longer supporting the burdens of the flesh. In a way, it was like coming to a home which they had forgotten. For this was Lussan's, a place filled with memories of hope and triumph and bitterness out of which it built a welcome for them even in its loneliness. Toinette's lips almost smiled, as if she saw Madame Lussan at the threshold of the door calling to her above the laughing voices of men and women, above her father's cheery greetings to friends and neighbors, above the restless stamping of her horse's hoofs and the crying of the auctioneer. She might have seen and heard these things but yesterday; now there was sleep—a dark and lifeless ghost of a house, crickets rasping their wings in the tangled grass, a jungle growing where before there had been a broad and level green.

Both were children now, seeing the ghosts as only children could see them, wide-eyed and a little afraid at first, and yet comforted by the nearness of that yesterday in their lives. The stars and the crickets and the rustling grass and the wind in the trees seemed to listen and more to the cautious tread of their feet. A rabbit ran ahead of them. An owl flew off the roof of the house. A bat dipped in spirals and curves before their eyes, and thorns caught playfully at their shoes and clothes. And they felt safe. A warmth crept through their blood, and with it a relaxation of nerves and eyes and brain. Here was sanctuary. Rest. Peace. They sensed these things without speaking as they approached the building. The door was open. Starlight splashed like the golden glow of candles on the floor. They entered and stood silent as if listening anxiously for the voices of sleeping ones whom their entrance might arouse. Emptiness was here, a spectral vacancy, but with it were neither death nor fear.

They were a little apart, and Toinette looked like a broken flower ready to fall.

"Wait for me here," said Jeems. "I am going for an armful of grass."

He made a bed in a corner of the room, and Toinette sank upon it. He covered her with his father's coat which he had brought from the valley and went outside to watch and guard with Odd.

He could hear her sobbing as tears came at last to give her comfort. He fought back a thickening in his throat and a hot flame in his eyes as the boy in him called out for his mother. He, too, wanted this easement for his grief. But he stood—a man. Odd watched tirelessly and sleeplessly with his master.

After a long time, there was silence in the old house, and Jeems knew that Toinette was asleep. He went in quietly and replaced the coat about her. Her face was white and lovely, and wet lashes glistened on her cheeks. Timidly his fingers pressed the silken braid of her hair. He brushed a wisp of hay from her forehead. Unconsciously his lips moved. Hope and faith and prayer seemed to stir in the room as he dared to raise the soft braid to his lips, and then he returned to his place outside with something like a glory enshrined with his sorrow.

He sat on the ground with the house at his back and his bow and sheaf of arrows and the English hatchet within reach of his hands. The stillness seemed a live thing that had barred all sound from solemn hours of meditation, and he soon began to feel its influence. Slowly and irresistibly it brought the desire to close his eyes and sleep, and he rose to his feet in a struggle to keep awake. Odd's teeth clicked and his eyes gleamed with undimmed vigilance.

For hours they watched together and marked every changing shadow. They skirted the edges of the open, advancing a step at a time and with as little noise as the owl wings that now and then floated about them. They scanned Lussan's meadow, and Jeems climbed a tall tree to see if he could discover a glow of fire. At intervals he returned to the house and looked in at Toinette. It was after midnight when he sat down again, and soon the stars seemed to be laughing at him and to be drawing nearer as if they had beaten him in a game. They closed his eyes. Odd rested his heavy jaws between his forepaws and gave a deep sigh. Exhaustion—then sleep.

With an effort, Jeems roused himself. He saw Odd at his feet. Day had come, and the sun was rising. He sensed these things first, in a flash of wakefulness, and then felt a weight against him and the softness of his mother's hair on his cheek. Only it was Toinette and not his mother. She must have come to him before the dawn broke. Her head was resting on his shoulder and his arms were about her as they had been about his mother. His movement had not awakened her, but now a slow tightening of his arms brought a tremor to her lashes and a deep breath to her lips. He kissed her pale face, and her eyes opened. He kissed her again, and the act did not seem to disturb her any more than it amazed or shocked him. There was a responsive greeting in her eyes.

Then she sat up straight beside him and faced the rising sun.

The air was so cold that she shivered. Every shrub and briar and blade of grass in the clearing glistened with frost. The coat she had brought from the house slipped from her shoulders, and Jeems drew it about her again. They stood up, and strength returned into the cramped limbs. For a little while they did not speak.

That they belonged to each other was a truth which pressed itself on them without effort or confusion. Toinette was not ashamed that she had come to him nor that her act had proclaimed what pride and false prejudice had so long hidden from him in her heart. Her eyes glowed with a light which shone softly out of fathomless depths of pain and grief. She wanted him to know how completely the folly of her pride was gone and how glad she was that it was he who stood beside her now. They might have been years older, so calmly did the sense of surrender and of possession hold them. Except for the tenderness in her eyes, Toinette was unchanged. But Jeems felt himself taller at her side and something had entered him which was like the spirit of a conqueror. It was another world now. A vast mystery ahead of him. Something to fight through, to win from, to live for. Mysterious, it was still very real. It set his heart throbbing with an unappalled and challenging force. Yesterday, black with tragedy and grievous with its pain, was a long time ago, but, with Toinette, today had become a tremendous living present. Gently her fingertips touched his shoulder. Then she looked with him toward the east and the Richelieu—and what lay beyond.

From the moment they had risen to their feet, Odd had stood as rigid as carved wood in the white-coated grass with his muzzle leveled toward Lussan's meadow. Something definite had come within his reach, which made it unnecessary for him to measure the wind, and suddenly there rose above other sound the wild and raucous crying of a blue Jay, and a cawing of alarm among the crows. A second, and a third blue Jay joined the first, and their tumult came to an end when a piercing bird call terminated sharply in a single screeching note.

"That was an arrow," said Jeems, beginning to string his bow. "More than once I have had to kill a noisy blue Jay when creeping up on game."

He drew Toinette into the shelter of the house and called Odd. A few minutes later—swiftly moving, somber horrors in a world of shimmering white—they saw the Mohawks come out of the edge of Lussan's meadow.

CHAPTER VII

The spectacle of death marching back over its trail brought no terror to Jeems. He had watched for it, had half expected it, and in a way it was like the answer to an unvoiced prayer which had followed his awakening when he had found Toinette in his arms. To fight for her now, to rush forth from the house with a battle cry on his lips, and to be cut to pieces in her defense was not a prospect which dismayed him, but which, instead, inspired in him a fearless exaltation. It was Toinette who saved him from whatever folly was brewing itself in his brain as he stood with a long hunting arrow fitted to his bow. With a breathless cry, she drew him away from the broken door, and there, safe for a moment from the savages who were entering the clearing, she flung her arms about his shoulders. For in these tragic seconds a look had come into Jeems' face like that which had frightened her in the tower room of the mill, a look hard and vengeful with the desire to kill.

"Jeems, dear, we must hide," she pleaded. "We must hide!"

The futility of trying to conceal themselves when their footprints were clearly left upon the frosty ground did not occur to him at once. It was her voice and the name it claimed for him that broke down the resolution which soon would have betrayed them.

"I know of a place," she was saying. "We must hurry to it!"

She ran ahead of him and he followed her into another room where a stair was falling into ruin. The red killers had paused at the edge of the open. They stood motionless, like stone men, listening and watchful, the upper parts of their bodies still unclothed until colder days and glistening with grease and paint. Toinette did not allow Jeems to pause, and the steps made complaint as they trod upon them. Jeems looked down from the top and saw the marks of their feet in the dust below. Their fate was certain if the Mohawks came this far, but with only the narrow stair for their enemies to ascend he was determined. In this event, that each of his twenty arrows should find a home.

Toinette preceded him into the room above. She went directly to a panel-like board which held a wooden peg and in a moment they were peering into the dusty gloom of a huge black hole under the roof, which the Lussans had used as a garret.

"Madame Lussan brought me to this room after your fight with Paul," she whispered. "I hung my spoiled clothes far back in there!"

Even with the savages so near, pathos and memory were in the tremble of her voice.

Jeems faced the narrow aperture in the wall which Lussan had left as a window and a gun hole for defense. He went to the window, and Toinette came close to his side. No eyes could see them as they looked through the rectangular slit shadowed under the eaves. The Mohawks had not moved, and from the steadiness of their attitude Jeems knew they had come upon the open unexpectedly. Not a hand among the silent savages had moved to hatchet, bow, or gun.

This fact drew a hopeful whisper from Jeems.

Impressive Scenes in Fijian National Dance

The meke, or national dance of the Fijians, plays an important part in all ceremonies on the islands. As many as two hundred young natives, most gorgeously dressed, will take part in a meke, which may be described as a legend told in song and dance. Sometimes it deals with a famous tribal battle of old.

The dancers carry either spears or clubs, and go through many of the movements of the battle—the stealthy approach to the enemy's lines, the hurly-burly of the combat, and then the triumphant return when the warriors are greeted by their chiefs, their wives, and their women. For an hour or more, without the least interval, a meke will continue its way, every action explaining itself, every step most precisely executed.

The leaders of the mekes are always particularly fine men, and they wear wonderful tappa robes with trains four to five yards long, which they manage with all the grace of a court lady.—Montreal Herald.

Ancho News

Saturday evening, April 12th, four Ancho families united in a Progressive dinner, beginning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Kile, where a most delicious fruit cocktail was served. The color scheme of lavender and white was beautifully carried out with ribbon, place cards, candles, etc. on two tables set for the twelve guests. The party next went to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Frame, where Mr. Frame was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Pete Frame, in serving a steaming oyster stew, etc. The table was a picture with its green color in place cards, etc. the centerpiece being a mound of pinoon points. The salad course was found at Mrs. Belknap's, where a table in T shape was a riot of orange and yellow. Huge yellow chrysanthemums held the place cards, while the same flowers in flat bowls held comic "fortunes" for each guest. Vegetable salad molded in yellow aspic, sandwiches, and cheese, with lemon soda were served. After a pause to enjoy the Sunday program of Seth Parker over the radio, they progressed to the Pruett home for the desert, where Mrs. Pruett, being a marvelous cake-baker, served a delicious caramel cake with whipped cream topped by a cherry, and coffee. Her color motif, rose pink, was most beautifully carried out in rose nut cups, rose candle holders and a huge bowl of roses as a centerpiece. At a late hour the party dispersed, happy with its good-time and delighted with a unique experience. Guests of the four families were Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Straley, Mrs. Bill Reynolds, and Louise Bogdon.

Ancho Woman's Club members and other friends gave Dr. Frame a delightful surprise party on the evening of her birthday, April 8th. About thirty were present and many games and other amusements enjoyed. Besides capturing one of the prizes, Mrs. Frame was the recipient of a number of birthday gifts and a beautiful birthday cake. Other prize winners were Mrs. Hightower and Mrs. Pruett. At a late hour refreshments of sandwiches, cake and coffee were served, after which the merry making continued, the participants seeming loath to terminate a very pleasant occasion. Mrs. Frame is one of Ancho's most popular teachers, admired and beloved by all her pupils and patrons, and has been active in social and community affairs as well as up to date and progressive in her school room.

High School Chorus and Orchestra Concert

On Friday, April 24, in the high school auditorium, will take place the last concert of the year given by the high school chorus and orchestra. The program will consist of two groups of well varied numbers by both the chorus and orchestra. Along with the larger groups will appear four soloists: Truman Spencer, Saxophone; Wayne Van Schoyck, Flute; Ansel Swearingen, Trumpet; and Eva Vigil, Mezzo Soprano. The first three were prevented from entering in the district meet because of the shortage of time for preparation for the event. They are now ready to appear before the public. Persons who attended the last concert in January can expect to find the two organizations have made at least twenty-five percent improvement over their last appearance. The proceeds of this concert will go toward paying for the sweaters and music purchased this year. Buy your tickets from members of the orchestra or chorus and help them end this year with a clean slate. Tickets can be purchased from Reid Dudgey at Holland's Drug Store at any time.
