Merlin Clymer Killed in Wreck

Mr. and Mrs Les. Harmon received a telegram Wednesday morning to the effect that their son-in-law, Merlin Clymer of Fairbanks, Arizona, had been killed near Tombstone, Arizona in an automobile wreck Tuesday night. His sister, Gwynn was also injured and is in a Bisbee hospital. Merlin was to be buried in the Odd Fellows cemetery at Bisbee yesterday afternoon. He was born at Montoya, New Mexico twenty-four years ago; came here with his parents, when quite young and lived here until they moved to Arizona last spring. He was employed at Reil's Garage for several years, and was an excellent mechanic. In May, 1930 he was married to Miss Mabel Harmon, who survives him, together with a little son, Gerald Lee, aged ten months; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Clymer; and one sister, Gwynn. Friends here regret the untimely death of this clever and popular young man.

In the final contest Mr. Cooper and Mrs. Warden were the winners. The music furnished by "The Revelers" was a big factor towards making this a grand climax to all recent dances.

Out of his eyes the tenderness died. They grew hard and cold as ice. Involuntarily he straightened his shoulders. Then he sat down on the edge of the cot to wait.

Wilson stopped in the doorway of the office, taken by surprise. The woman he saw was not the one he had expected to see.

Ann Gifford, pallid to the lips, came forward eagerly.

"Can you save him?" she asked.

"We'll try," he promised.

"He didn't do it. I did. I can't let them kill him. It's awful." Her eyes closed for a moment, so that he thought she was going to faint. But she caught at the back of a chair and steadied herself. "I want to give myself up. If they must hang somebody, why—"

The young man's eyes picked up two others in the room, Jim Yerby and Phil Stark. He passed the question of her guilt as immaterial for the moment. The mob was in a hanging temper and would disregard any evidence she might offer, no matter whether true or false.

"You boys here to help Mike?" he asked crisply.

"Tha's whatever, Wils," Yerby answered promptly for both.

"Good." Wilson turned to Mike. "If Miss Gifford's story satisfies you, why don't you turn Stone over to me as deputy to slip him outa town? I'll be responsible for him."

The jailer rasped his chin dubiously. "That ain't a bad idea either, if it's not too late. You mean for the rest of us to stay an' hold the jail."

"Make a bluff at it, yes."

"Question is, have they got the jail surrounded? They've got a dozen men with rifles strung out in front." This came from Phil.

"I just got in the back way, by the creek bed," Wilson said. "But we'll have to hurry. Get Stone, Mike—an' don't waste a second."

The Irishman nodded and left the room almost on the run.

To young Stark his inherited enemy gave orders. "Get Miss Gifford away from here. I'll have Mike let you out the front door. There won't be any trouble with the guards outside. They'll let you through, except maybe to ask some questions. Take her to the hotel. If yore sister isn't there they will know where she is at. Get hold of my brother Lyn an' tell him to come up the creek with what men he has gathered. When we hear an owl hoot twice we'll know he's there an' open the back door for him."

Ann demurred. "I don't want to go. I'd rather stay here so I can go out and tell the mob he didn't do it. I mean, if you and he don't get away."

"That would sure do a lot of good, about as much as tryin' to persuade a hungry tiger not to make its kill," Wilson scoffed. His harsh voice softened. "If you want to help, there's a way. Go to the hotel and tell yore story. Or wherever Miss Stark is now. She's likely gathered a few good citizens. Stir 'em up to help."

"Well," she agreed doubtfully.

Rand came into the room with Stone. The prisoner's face was hard and impassive as rim-rock. He looked round the room and nodded to those present.

"Ready?" asked Wilson.

The deputy sheriff handed a revolver to Stone. "Me, I believe this young lady's story. But I'm askin' you to give yoreself up whenever Hank calls for you, Dave."

"Yes," the Texan promised.

Rand led the way to the back door through the corridor. He unlocked the heavy door and stepped outside. A bullet flattened itself against a boulder two feet from him.

"Nothing doing, Mike," a voice called from the brush across the creek. "We've got you covered good an' plenty."

The deputy stepped back into the corridor and closed the door. "Too late. They'd get you both sure," he said.

"Yes," agreed McCann. "No chance."

They returned to the office. "They're watchin' the back way," Rand explained. "Now what about Miss Gifford? Do you reckon she had ought to go?"

Stone and McCann answered "Yes," simultaneously.

"The sooner the quicker," Yerby added.

"We'll call out first an' tell those in front she is coming, so there won't be any chance for a mistake," McCann said.

Ann looked piteously at the Texan and followed Mike without a word of protest. Her heroic gesture to save the man who had come to play so large a part in her life was under a veto of general masculine opinion. No doubt their view was a common-sense one, that the mob would listen to no explanation she made, but none the less she longed to try what still seemed to her the only simple way that might save bloodshed.

To the watchers outside, the deputy sheriff explained in a shout that a woman was leaving the jail accompanied by a friend.

"Let 'em come straight down the walk an' we'll meet 'em both, Mike," some one answered. "Hands in the air all the time an' no shenanigan. We're not takin' chances."

Phil and Ann were let out and the door locked behind them.

Hands up, they moved forward to meet the guards. The man in charge of the jail blockade did not intend to let any trick be played upon him. He had heard of prisoners escaping dressed as women.

When he recognized Ann he took his hat off. But he held her for a short examination.

"What you been doing there, ma'am?" he asked.

"I went to give myself up. This afternoon I heard Mr. Stone had been arrested for killing Tom McArdle. I shot him myself."

The man laughed, grimly. "That's a new play, hidin' behind a woman. I wouldn't hardly have expected that of Dave Stone."

"But that isn't true," Ann cried. "I did shoot him. Jasper Stark and that Gitner saw me riding away afterward. Ask them. They can't deny it."

"We can't ask them. They've lit out somewhere, an' that's funny, too. Know anything about it?" he asked suspiciously.

"No. But it's true, Mr. Stone hadn't anything to do with shooting Tom McArdle. I did it. I shot him because—because of what he did to my sister. I was coming home from one of our camps when I met him. He tried to make up to me, so he could come and see—come and visit at the house. We quarreled—and I shot him. You don't believe me, and it's the truth before God," she cried desperately.

"No, ma'am, we don't believe you. We think you're tryin' to save Dave Stone," the leader said, not unkindly. "No man confesses to a killing he didn't do. That wouldn't be reasonable. We'll tell Dave you done yore best for him. If you'll take my advice you'll light right outa town. It's no place for you tonight."

He turned to Phil. "Who's up at the jail with Rand? Anybody else at all?"

"Four others."

"Who?"

Phil looked him hardily in the eye. "I've forgot their names."

"Meanin' you won't tell?"

"Meanin' just that."

There was a short silence. "How come you mixed in this, Stark?"

"If Dave killed McArdle it was in a fair fight an' he was justified. I know that. Dave never shot anyone without givin' him a chance."

"He's just a kid, Phil is," someone spoke up. "You know how kids are about gunmen."

"I wouldn't call Dave a gunman exactly," Phil protested. "He's absolutely square—an' he's game."

Ann broke down and between her sobs begged for the life of her friend. She kept repeating that Stone did not kill McArdle, that she had done it herself, that he was sacrificing himself because he was trying to protect her. The net result of her passionate entreaty was that in their minds she convicted herself only of being in love with the Texan.

Phil escorted her, still shaken with sobs, to the hotel. They passed groups of hurrying, excited men. The question they heard repeated several times was as to what had become of Jasper Stark and Gitner.

Ann found the hotel a nucleus of activity for the few who opposed mob law. Julia was here, and Sam Sharp and Lyn McCann. But the leader was a lean grizzled brown man, a trifle bow-legged, with hard eyes and shaggy brows. Peter McCann had been enlisted by Julia to support his son Wilson. With sharp incisive questions he drew from Phil the situation at the jail.

"You say yore brother an' Gitner are there, too?" he asked after the boy had told the facts.

"Yes, as prisoners." Phil answered a little sullenly. He did not enjoy surrendering command to these McCanns, as he had been forced to do both at the jail and here. "Yore son got 'em there somehow. Arrested the two of 'em, one at a time."

"Walked into their crowd an' took them away?" asked Peter incredulously. "He couldn't do it. No single man could."

"All right. He didn't do it, then," snapped the boy. "All I know is that Mike Rand says he did an' claims to have Jas an' Gitner locked up in cells for inciting riot."

Peter's eyes were shining. If this was true—if Wilson really had carried through this cutting out adventure and arrested the leaders of the mob—he certainly would be proud of his boy.

Ann had been talking to Julia, who now interrupted McCann by leading the owner of the sheep ranch to him.

"Do you know Miss Gifford, Mr. McCann?" she said by way of interruption. "She has something to tell you."

Again Ann told her story of the trouble with McArdle that had led to his death. McCann listened and believed. It was possible that Stone's story was true, too. Perhaps she had missed the range rider and he had been killed later in a fight with the Texan. Or perhaps, which was just as likely, the little gunman had made up the story to protect her. In any event, it was clear to him that Tom McArdle had earned his doom and that he had not been murdered but shot down after due warning.

There were half a dozen men in the room in addition to Phil and the owner of the Flying VY. To them Peter gave instructions.

"There's two ways of doing this job, boys. One is for us to get inside the jail an' stand off the mob. We can do it, but there might be bloodshed. The other way is for me to step in an' take the leadership in this job. That last is how it will be. You boys will sift in among the crowd an' talk me up as boss of this rodeo. They're millin' around out thar and don't hardly know where they're at now Jas Stark an' Gitner have gone. So I'll take charge. When I make a play you back it strong."

"But—what are you going to do?" Julia asked.

Peter looked at her, flushed and bright-eyed and quivering with life. She was a lovely picture of youth, and at sight of it his eyes for a moment played tricks with him. The girl he saw was the one he had loved and lost twenty-odd years before.

"I'm figurin' on playing their game. But we'll change it some. We'll be vigilantes and not lynchers. That calls for a trial. Don't you worry, Jessie. It'll work out fine."

Julia understood now, when inadvertently he had called her by her mother's name, much that had puzzled her in Peter McCann's attitude. In his eyes, while he had been staying at the Circle Cross, she had more than once seen an expression she could not fathom. But she knew now what it had meant. She was very like her mother, and when he looked at her the hatred for her family was no longer in his heart. The memory of Jessie Farwell made it impossible.

"Can you save him that way?" Ann asked.

"If you'll come through with yore story clean, if you'll tell what Tom McArdle did to ruin the lives of yore family."

Ann shrank back, white-faced and trembling. "I couldn't—before everybody."

"Just enough so they'd understand," he said gently.

Julia put her arms around the other girl. "I'll be with you, Ann," she whispered. And to McCann she said: "Leave it to me."

The old cattleman nodded. He judged her competent to handle that end of the situation.

CHAPTER XI

Dunwig's Park

Mesa boasted a band of six pieces, called upon for music on all patriotic occasions such as ball games and Fourth of July celebrations. The man who played the big drum was Medford, clerk at Basford's emporium. Him the owner of the Flying VY pressed into service.

They repaired to the steps of the courthouse.

"Let her go, son," McCann ordered. "Kinda slow an' steady."

With heavy measured strokes Medford beat the drum. The sound of it filled the night. It arrested the attention of every man and every group within hearing. All knew it was a call to gather for concerted action. Within three minutes the courthouse square was full.

The slow reverberation of the drum died down. Peter McCann began to speak. The gift of winning an audience was native to him, perhaps inherited from the ancestors who had come across from the Emerald Isle.

Before he had been speaking three minutes he was not only one of the mob but its accepted leader. His assumption, to begin with, was that Stone must pay the penalty of his crime. But Mesa was, he claimed, a law-abiding community. It did not intend that killers should come in and shoot down its citizens. All it wanted was to make sure of the fact before it proceeded to summary justice. To that end a court must be organized and the accused man tried. If he was found guilty of dry-gulching Tom McArdle, of murdering him without giving the range rider a chance for his life, he ought to be executed promptly.

"What's the sense in wastin' time on a trial when he admits he did it?" a voice shouted. "We'll hang him first an' you can try him afterward."

"Come up here, Kelly Brown," the big voice of McCann boomed. "Don't hide back there, but come up and tell me that to my face."

The man was hustled forward, against his desire. He was one of the hangers-on at Pedro's place, and his reputation was not good.

Peter caught him by the arm and dragged him up to the top step. "Now tell us yore idea of what's the right thing to do," he ordered.

"Well, he's guilty, ain't he? What's the use oratin' about it?"

"I'm talkin' about a trial. You say hang him first an' try him afterward. Is that giving him a square deal?"

"Did he give poor Tom a square deal?" the man asked doggedly.

"That's what we're here to find out. How about the time you were arrested for blotting the Circle Lazy H brand? Would you have enjoyed being hung first an' tried afterward?"

A laugh went up at Brown's expense. "Better give him a trial, I reckon," he conceded sullenly, caught in a trap from which there was no escape.

When McCann appealed to the amused crowd a few moments later his suggestion was carried by a large vote. After all, there would be more entertainment in trying the Texan before they hanged him.

A committee was appointed to guard the prisoner when he should be brought out, after which Peter McCann went to the jail alone, waving a white handkerchief.

The deputy sheriff admitted him. McCann followed the officer to the room where Stone, Yerby, and Wilson were waiting. He explained the facts briefly.

Rand shook his head. "No, sir. I ain't givin' up my prisoner to be tried by any mob. If you want him you'll have to come an' take him."

"How about it?" asked the ranchman, appealing to Stone. "I named the committee that will guard you. Good men, all of 'em. They'll stand put. Question is, have you got a case good enough to stand a fair trial? But I'll tell you this straight: it's that or lynching, and you take yore choice."

"I killed him because he needed killing. I'm willing to stand trial on it any time. Tha's why I gave myself up," the Texan said quietly.

"Seems to be up to you, then, Mike," the older McCann said bluntly. "Will you bring him out for trial? Or shall we break in an' get him."

The deputy surrendered. "All right, I'll bring him out, but I'll be beside him all the time."

A huge bonfire had been lit in the square and by the light of it Stone was tried. Fletcher, the only lawyer in the town, acted as judge after a formal protest against vigilante proceedings. A cattleman named Haskell prosecuted. Peter McCann called upon someone to offer himself as attorney for the defendant.

After a pause his son Wilson spoke. "I reckon I'm no lawyer, but if Dave will stand for me I'll do my best."

The Texan nodded imperturbably. "Suits me."

There were only five witnesses. Jasper Stark and Gitner, released from military confinement, told of finding the body and of Stone's suspicious actions. Wilson cross-examined them very briefly, asking the same questions of each.

"Did you mention yore suspicions to anyone then or later?"

Both of the witnesses remembered one or two to whom they had spoken their doubts, but the persons named were hangers-on at Pedro's place, loafers of no reputation in the community.

"If you thought Stone killed Tom why did you tell Sheriff Le Page about Miss Gifford?" young McCann asked Jasper.

"I figured she might be in it with him. I hadn't a thing to go on but suspicions," he growled.

"Have you anything more to go on now?"

"He up an' confessed, didn't he?"

"We'll hear his story. I'm askin' you for yours now," Wilson cut back curtly.

"Well, he'd told us he was allowin' to bump off Tom on account of being jealous of him."

"When did he tell you that?"

"Several times."

"Who was present when he told it?"

"Carl Gitner."

"Anybody else?"

"Not far's I recollect."

"What did he say he was jealous about?"

"About Tom's stand-in up at the sheep ranch."

Jasper's manner was sulky and unconvincing.

"Did you or didn't you tell the sheriff your suspicions about Stone."

"No, I didn't," snarled the badgered man. "Tell you I hadn't a thing to go on but suspicions."

"How come you to wait nearly three months before you told the sheriff about meetin' Miss Gifford near the scene of the killing?"

"I hated to bring her name into it, she being a woman."

Wilson had talked with his father a few minutes while the jury was being chosen. Roughly he knew the facts as to Jasper's relations with the Gifford sisters.

"Now Tell Us Yore Idea of What's the Right Thing to Do," He Ordered.

"Ever have any trouble with Miss Gifford?" he demanded.

The witness hesitated. "Well, she didn't like it when I said I reckoned I'd have to tell what I knew."

"Did she order you off the place and tell you never to show up there again?"

"She was some excited. I won't say she acted friendly."

Young McCann moved a step closer. He waited a moment, to give full effect to his question. "Did you tell the Gifford girls that unless Miss Ethel would marry you her sister would have to go to the penitentiary?"

"No, sir," blustered Stark. "I never said any such a thing. If they claim I did—"

"Never mind that." Again Wilson waited for absolute silence before he spoke. He was sending a shot in the dark, but he guessed shrewdly it would strike home. "Is there any reason why you an' Gitner want Stone outa the way, any reason why you're afraid of him, anything he knows you're scared he might tell?"

Jasper's jaw dropped. For a moment he stared at his questioner. Apparently he felt the impression his near-collapse had made, for he tried to strengthen his denial by iteration. "Why no, w-what do you mean? I—I—we ain't scared of him tellin' a thing. If he claims he's got a thing on me he's a liar."

McCann's next question seemed to be far afield, but nothing he could have asked would have so startled the crowd with a sense of impending drama. The words of the sentence seemed almost to be spaced in their measured evenness.

"Were you and Gitner together between ten an' eleven o'clock on the morning when yore father was killed?"

Bermudians Still Seek Spanish Treasure Trove

Spanish treasure may yet be found in the Bermuda islands if ancient records and traditions still current among the people are to be believed. Most of it must have been buried prior to 1609, when the islands were colonized, at the time when Spanish ships, both pirate and authorized, were carrying stores of wealth from Central and South America.

The early settlers in Bermuda were considerably excited over the possibility of recovering some of the gold, and in 1663 made a determined effort to discover it. Several witnesses before the governor spoke of remembering a triangular heap of stones on one of the outlying islands and a yellow tree to which an engraved brass plate was affixed, while others testified to a wooden cross which pointed toward a mysterious stone pile. One man swore on oath that he had seen a phantom ship cross the harbor and that "fire drakes" had alighted upon it. An earlier governor had attempted to find the treasure with the aid of a mystic white stone, but the expedition's work was stopped because some of the citizens "thought it not lawful to find it that way." Somewhat later a Bermudian purchased a whole island from the proprietors of the Bermuda company with a lump of ambergris, because he was sure that he had located the treasure trove. And Bermudians still call a certain point Moneypiece rock, because several strange coins had been found near the spot.

Loose Language

Recently a public speaker preparing to make an accusation about something of which he was ignorant began with the statement: "I venture the assertion." There is a phrase contradictory in its very make-up. An assertion is a positive affirmation. It is not a suggestion, a probability, a possibility or remote contingency; so it is not a venture into the realms of doubt—a mere personal and prejudiced opinion. Yet whenever one "ventures the assertion" he is getting ready, nine times out of ten, to make a wild and unfair speculation. He is merely expressing an unsupported opinion in a noncommittal way. It is a funny phrase, and it ought to be abolished for incompetency.—Pathfinder Magazine.

A whirlwind near the home of Stanley Mucha, in Ware, Mass., caused several men working in his hayfield to gaze in wonder when a pile of hay they had raked up, ready to be loaded on a truck, was seen to rise in the air and sail along for some distance, apparently without any reason. The haypile was carried up in the air about 200 feet and remained in a compact mass for a considerable distance before dropping to the ground.

FEW GREAT NOVELS FREE FROM ERRORS

Descriptions by No Means Infallible Guides.

The reports that recent archeological discoveries in Palestine confirm in many respects the Biblical descriptions of ancient cities gave to a commentator an opportunity to take a dig at writers of later days, whose descriptions, he said, would not be such infallible guides for succeeding generations. He called attention to the error of Shakespeare in putting Bohemia on a seacoast, of Byron in saying that he stood on the Bridge of Sighs, "a palace and a prison on each hand," and of Hugh Walpole in placing a character of one of his historical novels in a town not founded until 200 years after the date of that character's birth. Last summer the Lorna Doone country had as visitors many readers of Blackmore's romance, and as the author had described with considerable detail the scenes of the story his admirers considered his book a guide. A critical visitor, however, declared that the descriptions were often faulty and that, as an instance, it would have been impossible for Lorna and John Ridd to carry out their plan of arranged signals. Dr. James Muirhead, editor of several travelers' handbooks, wrote to Blackmore years ago of the discrepancies between the actual features of the Doone valley and the description in "Lorna Doone," and, says Doctor Muirhead in the London Times, the novelist replied that "if he had had any idea his novel would become so popular he would have taken pains to be more faithful to the scenic facts instead of embroiling them."

On account of the haste with which he produced most of his novels Sir Walter Scott was forgiven for many of the mistakes which he permitted to creep into his works. In one story he has the sun setting in the east; in another he gives two horsemen six days to make a journey at their fastest speed, and then a few pages further on he has the same distance covered in a day, and in "Ivanhoe" he set, according to critics, a task for the mount in a tournament which no horse could possibly perform. In his introduction to "The Talisman," written in July, 1832, two months before his death, he forestalled criticism by saying that he wrote of a country of which he was unacquainted. "I labored," he said, "under the incapacity of ignorance in which, as far as regards eastern manners, I was as thickly wrapped as an Egyptian in his fog." The guides on the field of Waterloo placed little credence in either Byron's or Thackeray's description of the ball the night preceding the battle, but they will show the spot where Wellington shouted, "Up, guards, and at them!" and also quote the duke's words, "Waterloo was won on the playing fields at Eton." When told that Wellington disclaimed either as his words they reply, "That's what the novelists say." No one seems ever to have pinned them down to who were the novelists.

Another among the great novelists who confessed to mistakes was Thackeray, who declared he never reread a page of his composition but that he found "a fault or two, a half dozen." His geography of Virginia must have been somewhat faulty when he gave to the Esmonds the vast tract that extended from the Potomac to the James, with ports on both streams; he must have forgotten his law when he has one of his characters living in America arrested in church for debt, an unlawful proceeding, and he casts some doubt on the dean of Winchester's good deed in writing a letter in the ninth chapter of "Henry Esmond" after he had him die in the sixth. Dean Swift wrote that Pennsylvania "wanted the shelter of mountains," since it was open to the northern winds from Hudson bay's frozen seas, and a writer of the last century wrote of "an overseer on a Massachusetts cotton plantation." Geography was a puzzle to many other novelists; Charles Lever put Andalusia in Portugal, and the usually correct Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch placed Bombay on the bay of Bengal, eastern coast of India, instead of on the Arabian sea and western coast. Even Thiers, the French historian, slipped when he wrote of a great European battle: "Throughout the day torrents of rain poured down and twenty thousand Austrians bit the dust."—New York Sun.

Koo Koo Bird

Dr. Edward C. Elliott, president of Purdue university, whose store of witty stories is a source of constant enjoyment to students at the university, recently told the following one at a dinner in Indianapolis:

Soybeans Good for Building Up Soils

Also Have Great Number of Other Virtues.

By C. R. HUDSON, Farm Demonstration Worker, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Soybeans are vigorous in growth, easy to cultivate and mature in a short time. Usually they do not decrease the crop of corn when planted with it, and are often worth as much as the corn crop itself. The beans are used for grazing live stock, especially hogs; mowing for forage; turning under for soil improvement, and are harvested for seed, leaving the vines and stalks on the land. They make a fine quality of hay and cure more readily than most hays. They stand wet weather better than cowpeas and are not badly injured by dry weather.

As a sales crop, the hay and seed both bring good prices. In many communities of eastern Carolina farmers are building up their soils with this crop, while at the same time they are selling seed and hay.

Nor is the soybean confined to eastern Carolina. Plantings are being increased rapidly in the western part of the state as farmers learn of their value.

It is not generally known that North Carolina gave the soybean to the nation. A campaign to increase the popularity of the legume was conducted in the state several years ago when only a small acreage was planted in the extreme coastal section. Now the crop is one of the most popular in the mid-west corn country.

Result of Experiments in Livestock Feeding

An acre of corn in the form of silage will produce more beef or mutton than if fed in any other way. Tests have shown bean straw to be 12 per cent more efficient than cane in the fattening ration for lambs.

Sudan grass cut very early before the heads appear contains 10 per cent protein, or 4 per cent more than alfalfa. When cut late this grass has only 7 to 9 per cent protein.

Russian thistles fed to lambs gave surprisingly good results, and had almost as good a feed replacement value as cane. Although generally considered as a weed pest on the plains, these thistles make a fair emergency "crop" when other feeds are scarce, if cut before they become woody, and stacked.

The feeding value of limestone plus a protein such as cottonseed cake, as a substitute for alfalfa hay, has been recommended.

Then the Alfalfa Grows!

Summer fallowing for alfalfa is becoming a generally accepted practice, even in eastern Kansas. A good stand usually results; the practice conserves moisture, aids in the formation of available plant food, and puts the soil in ideal physical condition. Ralph Ross of Valley township, Linn county, prepared a field in that manner in 1930; his first cutting last spring averaged two tons an acre!—Kansas Farmer.

Soybeans in Hog Rations

The high oil content of soybeans that give them their value in commerce is an actual handicap to their value as a feed for swine. The residue resulting from the removal of the oil, known as soybean oil meal, is therefore a better hog feed than the original beans. The oil meal contains approximately 42 per cent protein and 6 per cent ash. As a supplement to corn, soybean oil meal has about two-thirds the value of tankage per pound.

A conservative estimate for the United States places crop reduction due to weeds at about 20 per cent.

Trees and shrubs may be moved either in the fall or spring. Fall planting may give good results, but the chances are better for moving in the early spring.

A Marinette (Wis.) county farmer builds a sheep shed, 26 by 40 feet, 6 feet high at the eaves, with poplar and pine logs cut from his woodlot, for a cash outlay of $7.40.

More than 2,300,000 bushes of the common barberry have been destroyed in Ohio since 1918, because they scatter black stem rust to wheat. Some have been found in every county in the state.

Low grade roughage is fine for wintering steers and dry cows, but animals being fattened for market should receive only the dry roughage which they will clean up after the concentrates are fed.

More bushels per acre mean lower cost per bushel, and low cost wheat is the only wheat worth growing.

A little time spent in giving serious thought to the most adequate ration is certainly a worth-while effort before cattle or lambs come into the feedlot.

To get the best cure in the storage houses and the best market price under present conditions, careful handling of sweet potatoes during harvest is necessary.

TALES OF THE CHIEFS

By Editha L. Watson

POPE

A man may rise to power, but if he is not able to keep it from going to his own head, his fall will be greater than his rise.

The Pueblos had never taken kindly to Spanish rule. Misunderstandings, prejudice, and ignorance had widened the breach from both sides. The Indians were discontented; they grumbled and plotted.

It remained for a San Juan medicine man, living at Taos, to precipitate events. Pope had given the matter much study, and he gradually evolved a way to unite the Pueblos in rebellion. This was done slowly. Haste did not seem to bring results for the Indians.

Pope began to preach the independence of the Indians. Why should they bow to the white men? They were many more in number, and if they would act at a given time, they could quietly kill every foreigner in the land, and go back to their own ways; and no one would be the wiser.

The idea took root among the Pueblos. One bold stroke, and the trouble would be over, they thought. Even the far-off Hopis of Arizona were inflamed, and joined the plan with enthusiasm.

August 13, 1680, was to be the great day of Pueblo freedom. Runners were sent with knotted cords to show the date. The news spread to all the participating Pueblos (the Piros, for some reason, were not included), and suppressed excitement beat in every Indian heart.

Since a woman in love has neither conscience nor judgment, and lest some Indian maid might love and talk to a white man, no women were admitted to the plot. Every possible precaution was taken. Pope even put his own brother-in-law to death, because he was not sure of him.

Yet somehow the plot became known, and the only thing to do was to strike at once, before the Spaniards could prepare counter-plans. Six days before the selected date, then, the concerted uprising took place.

There were 33 missionaries in the Pueblo country. Twenty-one of these were killed, and about 375 other colonists, nearly a sixth of the total number. The missions were torn down. Furnishing which had been brought many weary miles—some, even, from Spain—were destroyed. The records of the churches were burned.

Governor Otermin, at Santa Fe, gathered the remaining Spaniards into the government buildings. These were strongly built, and although 3,000 Indians besieged them for ten days, the walls held, and a desperate sortie finally forced the Pueblos back, with considerable loss. Then, on August 21, about 1,000 Spaniards began the long retreat down the Rio Grande to El Paso, and left the country to the Pueblos, from whom they had taken it. It remained Indian territory for 12 years.

Pope was now at the height of his glory. Richly dressed in the finest ceremonial garments, he made a triumphal journey through the Pueblos, and was hailed as a savior of his people. The Indians returned to their ancient ways. Those who had been baptized took a ceremonial cleansing bath in yucca suds; every destroyable thing left behind met its fate, and the Spanish language and even Spanish names were forbidden. All this was Pope's order, and the Indians, delighted at the success of their rebellion, hastened to obey their brilliant leader.

But Pope had been given too much power, and he was not strong enough to handle it. He became a despot; those who did not obey every whim were put to death. He demanded all the most beautiful women as his right. From being the deliverer of his people, he became their burden.

Then drought came on the Pueblos—that ancient enemy of the southwestern people. The crops shriveled in the sun, and famine waited, grinning, only a little way off. The Apaches and the Utes, who had been afraid of the Spaniards, now felt that there was nothing to fear, and resumed their raids. Civil war, also, broke out, and the Pueblos divided and fought each other. What a dreary, sorrowful freedom they had won!

And Pope was the cause of it all, they thought. "Those Above" were angry at him, and at them for obeying him, and had sent drought, and enemies without and within, as punishment. Pope had become a sort of king, unreasonable, petulant, altogether intolerable. He could not help them in this trouble. They deposed him.

A new ruler for the Tewa and Tanos was elected, and he tried as well as he could to bring order out of Pope's chaos. In 1688, however, Pope tried a come-back. He reminded his people of their deliverance, and of who had planned it. He wanted to try again, and they gave him the chance.

But Pope's power and glory were departed. He had sat upon the throne of all the Pueblos; he was now an elected ruler of two of them. The great authority had been taken from him, and he was little better than any tribal chief.

One thing alone was left him: he died before Diego de Vargas reconquered the Pueblo country in 1692, and he never knew but that his country was eternally free.

Bronchial Troubles Need Creomulsion

Bronchial troubles may lead to something serious. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (Adv.)

Frank Vesely

(Silver City Independent)

Many residents of New Mexico have yet to become acquainted with Frank Vesely. When they survey the type of service which he will render them in the office of land commissioner, we who know him so well here, are satisfied that they will entrust him later with even greater public responsibilities and duties.

Frank Vesely has a heart as well as a head, and we know of no one more capable of dealing justly with those of both high and low stations. Not only that he will be able to view their problems with sympathy. Best of all, and the most important factor in his make-up is his downright honesty. That is a quality that the people demand today in their public servants. They have found such in Frank Vesely, and we predict that in a short time others will agree with the opinion of his neighbors here on main street in Silver City and Grant county.

"Public officials, whether in the legislative or executive branch of the government, are essentially trustees. They are trustees for the citizens of their own country. They are not free to give away the property of the beneficiaries of the trust. An individual can do what he will with his own property. A public official, however, must keep firmly in view that he is dealing not with his own property but with property intrusted to his care by the citizens of his country."—From Sec. Mellon's speech, May 20, 1926.

What High School Students Think of Their Teachers

A questionnaire suggested by Dr. F. W. Hart, Professor of Education at the University of California, was submitted to the students of Carrizozo High School. Each student was asked to designate the teacher he liked the best as Teacher A, and the teacher he disliked the most as Teacher Z, and if neither A nor Z proved to be the most effective teacher he was to designate that teacher who was the most effective as Teacher H. The questionnaire was to include grade school and high school.

Dr. Hart submitted the questionnaire to 10,000 high school seniors in California. 80 per cent of the students designated Teacher A as also Teacher H. ½ per cent designated Teacher Z as Teacher H, leaving 19½ per cent to choose a third teacher as the most effective.

Quoting from replies received from students of Carrizozo High School, Teacher A may be briefly described as follows:

"He does not make the student ful explanations are given concerning all puzzling questions or theories. He's a great guy."

Another example: "She's always kind to everybody and helps her pupils in their lessons."

More examples: "She is cheerful and always ready to give one a fair chance, even going out of her way to help one."

"Teacher A is extremely human, has a good sense of humor, enough patience and is just generally a good teacher with a distinct personality." One of the good qualities is treating the pupils as human beings."

"Teacher A knows you and speaks to you out of the classroom."

"I like Teacher A because she can laugh and take a joke."

"Teacher A has a fine character. One thing that stood out was her sense of humor. She had not only teaching sense but good "horse sense."

Teacher A gives everyone a fair chance and is always ready to help anyone."

"Teacher A treats you fair and square and does not show partiality."

"Teacher A kept the pupils orderly, and they didn't run over her."

"When he did scold he was right and had a cause. He was a good teacher because he knew his business."

"When you go to one of her classes you get something out of it. She is humerous, I like that, and she minds her own business."

"Teacher A is always willing to stop her own work and help you with yours."

Consider these remarks carefully as they are direct expressions from the students themselves. Watch next week for Teacher Z.

Contracts have been awarded to the low bidders on two of the four projects on which the state highway commission opened bids, according to State Highway Engineer W. R. Eccles, the concrete paving between Los Lunas and Isleta, on the west side of the Rio Grande, and the construction between Carlsbad and the Texas line.

All Bids were rejected on the Border hill job, between Roswell and Hondo. The Commission felt that all bids were too high. The project is to be readvertised.

Chairman Frank Butt of the commission and Eccles were authorized to let the contract for the Espanola-Abiquiu construction to H. C. Miller, of Denver, the low bidder, if they see fit after an interview with the contractor. Lallier is to be there Monday.

Safe Silence

A naval officer fell overboard. He was rescued by a deck hand. The officer asked his preserver how he could reward him. "The best way sir," said Jack, "is to say nothing about it. If the other fellows knew I'd pulled you out, they'd chuck me in."

Swift Company Uses Chevrolets

Detroit, Mich. Nov. — An example of how great American business organizations are maintaining their service at a high standard of efficiency despite general business conditions is shown in the purchase by Swift and Company of more than 1000 new Chevrolet Six cars and trucks for the twelve months period ending October 1st.

These Chevrolets, delivery of which were made throughout the year, are being used in every state in the union at the various Swift branches and subsidiary companies to expedite delivery of the company's numerous food products.

At present there are approximately 2,500 Chevrolets in the fleet equipment of Swift and Company. This ranks them as one of the largest operators of Chevrolet fleets in the United States.

P. T. A. Program

Dec. 2, 1932

Violin Solo, Ardeane McCammon accompanied by Helen Huppertz. What Christmas Means to Me, Rev. L. D. Jordan. The Gift and The Giver, E. M. Brickley.

The grade room or the high school class having the largest percent of parents present each month at the P. T. A. meeting will be given a prize. This will be determined by a committee appointed by the president.

The Parent-Teacher Association year is the same as the school year, beginning September 1st. Therefore a new P. T. A. year has begun and the annual dues are to be paid at this time. We hope the present members will all join again and bring new ones with them. The P. T. A. has already been a big help to the school and community, so let's keep it going.

Flu seems to be rather widespread in some parts of the state. Five hundred cases were reported in Santa Fe county alone, last month according to a report printed in the New Mexican.

The average committee of three has one member that does the work. The other two turn in the report.

Will Rogers says that the preachers have quit praying for the sinners and gone to praying for Democrats and Republicans. They should quit all of that and go to praying for the country.

A man will look for half a day for the cause of a slight rattle in his automobile and when he gets it going noiselessly will go down the street with his muffler wide open.

Mrs. Laura Z. Becker supreme deputy of the Order of Rainbow for New Mexico passed through here Monday enroute to her home in Belen. Mrs. Becker had been to Roswell, where the Rainbows had a special meeting last Friday. Quite a number of the local Rainbow girls attended the meeting. Mmes. Blaney, Lemon and Snyder acted as chaperones.

The Methodist Church

Rev. John L. Lawson, Pastor.

One hundred and seventeen in Sunday School last Sunday; forty at Capitan, and forty five at Angus. A good crowd was in attendance at the combined Epworth League and church service in Carrizozo last Sunday evening. Please remember that the combined Epworth League and church services begin promptly at seven fifteen. We are trying to keep the service as nearly within the limit of an hour as possible. We believe that this is a worthwhile service, and as many of the older people as possible ought to meet with the young people. Next Sunday the Presiding Elder, Reverend S. E. Allison, will be with us for both the morning and evening services. He will hold the First Quarterly Conference after the evening service. This is an open service and all are invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. M. U. Finley left Monday for Nogales, Arizona, to spend the Thanksgiving holiday with their piece. They will cover a considerable portion of the state on their return trip, visiting Phoenix, Tucson and other points of interest. Mr. Finley said when he got to Nogales he intended to drink in Mexico and eat in the United States.

THE 20th day of December, 1932, at the Hour of 10:00 O'Clock, A. P. T. A Minstrel

December 9th, 1932.

1 Coming out song, "Look Who's Here." They've decided that they have kept you in suspense long enough.

2 "Gentlemen be seated." If you are not a gentleman you can get by by sitting down.

2 Musical reading. Dia Heringa and Mrs. Lemon. It may be "lemon," but it will surely be sweet.

4 Gags. Not the accepted gangland or underworld gags, by which methods one's mouth is kept closed. These gags will keep many, oh so many, mouths wide open in reverberating (boy what a jaw breaker) laughter.

5 Song by Mrs. Abel and Raymond Price. They are very able and the price is right.

6 More gags and they are the cat's whiskers. Inter. and Bones.

7 A dawnce. Jean Branum and Mrs. Walker. "Oh they take no chance in the Hula Hula dance."

8 Some Whataman jokes by Inter. and Tambo. Come with artificial respirators.

9 Song. Mrs. Don English. It will take the sleeves off your vest.

10 More jokes. Just a bit better than the best ones you've ever heard, or if you have never heard any wash your ears and come on along.

11 Song. Hale and Hearty. Oh we mean Hale and Price.

12 Jokes, this is getting to be a joke. But as long as they keep us laughing we shouldn't kick.

13 Song. Murel Burnett, the deep-voiced home town boy who some day is going to the city and make good.

14 Oh Lord! Jokes!

15 Finale. Chorus, Dixie Parody.

Between the acts, a dark mysterious something is going to occur. Bring your body-guards. Nature unknown.

VISITOR TO ALAMO GETS REAL THRILL

Historic Structure Filled With Relics.

Perhaps the best known of all places of interest in San Antonio, Texas, is the Alamo. This famous building faces Alamo plaza, a parkway two blocks long by a block wide, in which grow palms and various other semi-tropical trees and plants. The Alamo is a small building of adobe, surrounded by a court, inclosed with a high stone wall.

The thrill of the Alamo comes as you first place foot on its floor. The very atmosphere of the place—the recollection of the deeds of valor enacted within it—quickens the blood.

To stand in the small room where Colonel Bowie lay ill when the fort was surrounded, brings the struggle for Texas independence very close to the present day—to see the line across which the defenders stepped to indicate their choice when the question of defense or abandonment of the mission was put to them by their commander—to go into the room in which Davy Crockett was slain—all these give the stranger a clear conception of why the Sons and Daughters of the Texas Revolution are justly proud of their state, their history, their distinguished ancestors and its shrines.

The Alamo is filled with relics of early Texas history—each with an explanatory card. A half day can be spent in the Alamo inspecting the mementoes of that period of Texas history, American history and world history too often unnoticed in the busy work-a-day world.

Another interesting sight in downtown San Antonio is San Fernando cathedral. This remarkable old church was built in 1731. It is in an excellent state of preservation and services conducted in Spanish are held in it every Sunday.

Next door to it is a modern structure of twelve stories, and as one stands across the square and contemplates the two, one cannot fail to be struck with the contrast between the busy, thriving city of today and the Spanish world that flourished once at San Antonio and is gone forever.

Find Centuries-Old Tree

Quite recently some white birch trees which had been buried for centuries were discovered in the vicinity of the village of Riviere St. Jean, Quebec, by a field officer of the topographical survey, Canadian department of the interior. The remarkable thing about these trees was their state of preservation. Specimens were presented to the forest products laboratories, department of the interior, at Ottawa, whose officers state that preservation was due to a surplus of water and a deficiency of air, conditions inhibiting the growth of wood-decaying fungi.

Relief From Neuralgia In Few Minutes

Quick Dissolving Property of BAYER ASPIRIN Starts Relief 3 or 4 Minutes After Taking

Think of a headache going in three or four minutes. The pains of neuralgia, neuritis or rheumatism being eased, often, in that little space of time!

Due to important, scientific developments in the famous Bayer Aspirin laboratories, millions of people are enjoying this almost unbelievably quick relief from pain.

That is because Bayer Aspirin dissolves almost instantly in the stomach. And thus almost INSTANTLY starts to ease pain. The average headache, for instance, eases in as little as four or five minutes. Think of what a time saver this is to busy people.

Remember it is Genuine BAYER Aspirin which provides this unique property. So see that you get the real article when you buy. See that these three words "Genuine Bayer Aspirin" are on any box or bottle of aspirin that you buy. And that the name "Bayer" is stamped in the form of a cross on any tablet that you take.

Remember that when you buy. And remember, too, that Genuine Bayer Aspirin cannot harm the heart. Take care you get the genuine.

NO TABLETS ARE GENUINE BAYER ASPIRIN WITHOUT THIS CROSS

Youthful Wine-Bibbers

School teachers in the Hungarian village of Lentilhegy were shocked when their young pupils, some of them only five or six years old, staggered to their desks, began to bawl and shout and give every evidence of being drunk. They were. The village well, its only source of water supply, had dried up, and the children drank the rich Tokay wine of the district instead. Wine is cheaper than water in some parts of Hungary, and several cases have been reported recently of wine being used to put out fires.

"I might as well admit it," remarked Cactus Joe. "As a cowboy I'm a failure."

Which do you want ...

DID YOU KNOW THIS... that half of all your motor wear occurs while you're starting your car and letting it warm up!

Here's why: Your motor makes 3,000 to 5,000 revolutions before oil circulates from the crankcase to all parts of the motor. Your motor runs with vital parts receiving no oil from your crankcase reservoir!... What protection do other oils offer you against this half of your motor-wear? The best of these oils "reach all parts in the shortest time," say their makers.

What protection does Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil offer? It is already in and on every part and lubricates safely from the second you step on your starter! A "Hidden Quart" of Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil stays up in your motor and never drains away! Other oils drain away during idle periods, leaving parts "dry." Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil actually penetrates and combines with metal surfaces and never leaves any part unlubricated. It cuts starting-wear to the minimum and gives your car longer life!

Like other good oils, Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil is thoroughly dewaxed and circulates freely at subzero temperatures.

Avoid the terrific wear of winter's long warming-up periods. Change today to Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil... 30c a quart.

Democrats Control Both Branches of Congress

The next congress will be both Democratic and wet.

The house will be overwhelmingly Democratic, and a comfortable Democratic majority in the senate was assured by Tuesday's voting.

President Roosevelt should have a congress working harmoniously with him to carry out his program.

Among familiar faces that will be missing in the United States senate after March 4, it appears, will be the following:

Hiram Bingham of Connecticut.
Reed Smoot of Utah.
Otis F. Glenn of Illinois.
James E. Watson of Indiana.
George H. Moses of New Hampshire.
Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa.
John J. Blaine of Wisconsin.
Samuel M. Shortridge of California.

Bingham, Smoot, Glenn, Watson and Moses lost in election. Brookhart, Blaine, and Shortridge were defeated in the primaries.

In Illinois Roosevelt's plurality is estimated at 410,000. Horner, for governor, led the Democratic landslide with an estimated 650,000 plurality over Small. The rest of the Democratic ticket, with the exception of a few congressmen and legislators, won by substantial margins. For United States senator Dieterich's plurality over Glenn is put at 225,000.

Indiana—Senator James E. Watson, veteran Republican legislator, was defeated for re-election by Frederick Van Nuys. Paul V. McNutt, former American Legion commander, Democrat, was elected governor.

In a neck-and-neck race Governor Roosevelt and President Hoover fought for the electoral vote of Michigan, which had not gone Democratic in 80 years. Latest returns gave Roosevelt a lead of about 5,000. For governor, William A. Comstock, Democrat, was victor over Gov. Wilber M. Brucker, Democrats led congressional races.

The Democrats swept Missouri's 15 house seats, all of which were elected at large. They picked up two in Connecticut, four each in Missouri, New York and Pennsylvania, one each in Rhode Island, Virginia, South Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma and Illinois, on the basis of incomplete returns.

Former Senator James W. Wadsworth, Republican, was elected to the house from the Thirty-ninth New York district.

Speaker John N. Garner was elected from the Fifteenth Texas district, but plans to resign from the seat when he becomes Vice President on March 4.

Election Oddity

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—Unaware that she was a candidate, Miss Mildred Vanacek, twenty-one and comely, was elected justice of the peace for Garner township, Pottawattamie county. Her margin of victory was three votes—the total cast for her. Miss Vanacek, clerk in a local law office, was notified her name had been written in on three ballots.

Lions Bred for Market by Astute Californian

A farmer of El Monte, Calif., some years ago learned that there was a steady demand among circusses, zoos, and moving picture corporations for the king of beasts, so he purchased several adult lions and set up a lion farm. The original lions were imported from their native haunts in Kenya colony, Africa. The lions of the California farm have spacious runways, guarded by stout steel fences too high for them to hurdle. They have shelters to which they may retreat in rainy weather, though most of their time is spent basking under the rays of the warm California sun. The climate of southern California is very much the same as that of the high plateaus of Kenya, so the lions of the farm feel perfectly at home. There is a ready market for young lions.

Germany's Charm

The periods of the Renaissance and the Middle ages were not alone in creating a prodigal abundance of imposing buildings and monuments of art leaving them as impressive memorials of former splendor. In the Eighteenth century, when the other great peoples had long since achieved internal unity—thereby gathering all energies in the mighty capitals, in London, Paris, Madrid—Germany was still an old, fantastic mosaic. It was in this period of princely dominion that the singular dispersion of German cultural life manifested itself, crystallizing around a multitude of great and small spots. This evolved a brilliantly variegated picture whose magic charm persists to the present day.—Exchange.

Alpine Geyser

The Alps have just produced their first cold water geyser. It came into being during the course of sounding operations near the bath resort of Schuls-Tarasp. The geyser erupts regularly every fifteen minutes, the jet attaining a height of more than thirty feet.

Stronger than He Was at Twenty

FIFTY-FIVE years old, and still going strong!

Do you want the secret of such vitality? It isn't what you eat, or any tonic you take. It's something anyone can do—something you can start today and see results in a week! All you do is give your vital organs the right stimulant.

A famous doctor discovered the way to stimulate a sluggish system to new energy. It brings fresh vigor to every organ. Being a physician's prescription, it's quite harmless. Tell your druggist you want a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin. Get the benefit of its fresh laxative herbs, active senna, and that pure pepsin. Get that lazy liver to work, those stagnant bowels into action. Get rid of waste matter that is slow poison so long as it is permitted to remain in the system.

The new energy men and women feel before one bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin has been used up is proof of how much the system needs this help.

Get a bottle of this delicious syrup and let it end that constant worry about the condition of the bowels. Spare the children those bilious days that make them miserable. Save your household from the use of cathartics which lead to chronic constipation. And guard against auto-intoxication as you grow older.

Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin is such a well known preparation you can get it wherever drugs are sold and it isn't expensive.

Death Ring Story Revealed

What is the fatal influence of the ancient Mizpah ring worn by Frederick Vusthoff, who shot himself to death recently at his home on Newcastle-in-Tyne, England? That is what Newcastle police are trying to fathom. Unlike other Mizpah rings, which are supposed to bring good luck, this one has brought tragedy. Before Vusthoff acquired it, it belonged to a Newcastle merchant who dropped dead on the street. Its previous owner committed suicide.

Scientists feed 50 babies...

to help you feed yours

YOU can't nurse your baby? Then read of a recent feeding test conducted by two eminent baby specialists.

Let their findings help you decide—what milk for my baby.

For a test, fifty average babies were chosen. Into their bottles—through the months of the test—went a milk known to millions of mothers and grandmothers in this country as a wonderful baby builder.

That milk was Eagle Brand. Eagle Brand was the only food these babies received, except for the usual supplementary foods* now given even with mother's milk.

And how those babies were studied! Regularly, X-Ray pictures of bones were taken. Tooth development was watched. Weights and heights recorded. Blood counts made. And all these results were compared with other groups of babies, similarly fed on other foods.

What the test showed

At last came the verdict: Measured by every scientific test, the result was favorable to Eagle Brand. This simple diet—Eagle Brand with the usual supplementary foods*—had proved equal to the building of 100% babies.

Send for FREE baby booklet

If you cannot nurse your baby, try Eagle Brand. Next to mother's milk, it is the easiest form of milk in the world to digest.

Millions of babies have been raised on it—babies whose strong, healthy constitutions—sound teeth—straight bones—firm muscles—are living proof of its benefits.

Just follow simple directions on label. And send for "Baby's Welfare", an 80-page guide-book on raising a baby.

A report of the physicians' test will be sent your doctor, on request.

*The usual supplementary foods, of course, are orange or tomato juice, and cod liver oil or other source of the anti-rachitic vitamin D.

We call to mind a clerk in one of the local stores, who though he is not a head liner in the salesmanship business and perhaps never will be, is one of the most popular clerks that we know. Everybody likes him. Everybody wants him to wait on them when they go into the store in which he chances to be employed. He is accomodating with a capital A and gracious and obliging, three qualities that has sold his firm more goods than all the shrewd salesmanship could possibly have done if coupled with an irritable, resentful, unobliging disposition. He has discovered the secret of success in his hire and is daily adding to his firms list of friends by his cheerful tact and skill.

A Pleasant Surprise

On Wednesday evening, about seven thirty, cars began stopping in front of the Baptist Pastor's home, and the good ladies began knocking on the door. As they came in each one was loaded with a generous donation for the pantry. Some had potatoes, some parsnips, some pumpkins, others brought chickens, apples, flour, lard, canned goods of various kinds, in fact, when it was all assembled in the kitchen, there was a grand display of good things to eat, for all of which we are deeply grateful. We feel that indeed our "lot is cast in pleasant places." While the intrinsic value of the donation was considerable, the thoughtfulness of these good people means a great deal more to us than the cash value of them.

To each one who had a part in this very generous act, we wish to say, Thank You, and may Heaven's richest blessings be yours.

Two Minute Sermon

(By Rev. Geo. Henry)

Who's Foolish?

I sat in a hotel office. I was trying to write. An old man was at my side discoursing to a more or less attentive audience on the subject of superatition. "Consider the Christian religion," he said, "that is mere superatition. Why do some people believe in the devine origin of Christ? In all the literature of the world there is only one book that pretends to speak with authority and to give us authentic information concerning him. People certainly love to be humbugged." I touched the old man on the elbow and said, "Excuse me, but trying to write and listen to you at the same time, I am somewhat rattled; what year is this?" With a laugh he answered, "Why this is the year 1928." "Nineteen hundred and twenty-eight years since when?" I asked. He hesitated and I fancied he felt a little emarassed, but he replied, "Since Christ." "If I were you," I said, "I would use some other method of computing time. Why pay this tribute to Christ? Why do some people believe in him? Why do millions who now live believe in him? Why have other millions who are now dead believed in him? You say there is only one book that pretends to give authentic information concerning him. Will you prove to me that it is pretense; that it is not authentic?" And he said—I really hate to tell just exactly what he said—but he said, "Oh, you're a damn fool." I leave it to you, my friend, to decide who was most foolish.
