Carrizozo Hi School Notes

(By H. S. Reporter)

On behalf of ourselves and the students accompanying us on this trip, Mrs. Multer and I wish to extend our sincere thanks to the people of Carrizozo and to Mr. Groce for the many courtesies extended to us during the last days. In our four years of traveling over the state we can never recall having been shown more consideration than we have received here. I should like particularly to congratulate Carrizozo High School on its splendid orchestra. The orchestra did not win first place because its members had not had sufficient orchestral experience nor had they had sufficient time for rehearsal. If the same students remain in the orchestra another year Carrizozo with its splendid instrumentation should give a very good account of itself.

This is the first contest of its sort that we can recall where the people of the community attended the contest from 1:30 until 6:30 in the afternoon, and returned at 7:30 to remain until 12:00 and then encore a violinist in order that they might prolong the entertainment. This fact is a significant indication of a love of music and of the support which this community gives its High School in its competition.

The contest was in every way a tremendous success. There were four high schools entered which had never previously participated in the High School Music Meet. This is a very encouraging indication to the face of "The depression" which now exists. The contest brought out several facts that should be borne in mind in formulating plans for state contests in the future.

First: Most of the performers played numbers which were too difficult. This fact in itself marred many of the performances. A plan must be worked out which will enable a student to stay in the class determined by the number of years he has studied or by the degree of technical proficiency reached.

Second: In Carrizozo grade school and in the high school some how or other more time should be allotted to part practices and the training of individual members of groups whether orchestral or choral. Walter Damrosch himself could not give an artistic performance with players or singers who lacked a thorough knowledge of the numbers they were to play or sing.

Musical tastes are formed by a child when he is between the ages of one and fourteen. It makes no difference how splendid your high school supervisor of music may be, how excellent the conductor of your orchestra, if he has undeveloped material to work with, his success is limited before he begins his work. If the Carrizozo orchestra is to improve, its success depends on the number of the players that you train in, say, the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades. If you take care of the supply you will not have to worry about the number of players you graduate four years from now, because you will have others coming into high school from the eighth at that time.

With the splendid support the citizens of the community seem to be giving Carrizozo should go forward in music.

W. L. Multer, Director of Music.

District Commercial Contest
 The District Commercial Contest was held Friday, April 15 at Carrizozo High School. Each school was allowed three contestants in each event. Pins were given for first, second, and third place in each event.

Tularosa won both first and second in Bookkeeping and Alamogordo won third. Carrizozo had no entrants in this event since all contestants were required to be regular students and the members of the bookkeeping class were all special students.

In the Novice Typing, Tularosa won first place; Alamogordo second; and Billie Hurt of Carrizozo, third.

In Amateur Typing, Alamogordo won first place; Tularosa second; and Ruth Kelley of Carrizozo, third. Ruth missed winning second by three tenths of a word.

In the shorthand Alamogordo won first and third; Tularosa second; and Carrizozo fourth.

The pins were awarded through the instructors during intermission in the District Meet.

Track Meet
 The meet was, from the start, all Las Cruces! If they had not been invited to the meet, the event would have been a close one between Alamo, Tularosa and Carrizozo. Carrizozo placed in the following events: 100 yd. dash, 220 yd. dash, pole vault, shot put, discus, high hurdles, and mile. The boys did not win any event, but they were all trying.

The day was hot and sultry, and affected them considerably. This was their first meet of the season and with the experience that they gained in this one they should do better in their next one, which is to be held in Roswell this week-end.

"Not primarily," said Stanton. "I wouldn't ask you because I'd be fairly sure you would tell without being asked. In my way—do a lot of guessing. My guess would be that Blair succeeded Trembley with you, and that he has tried to break with you."

"I suppose that would be simple to understand," she said bitterly. "And I guess you are right. I sat in the hotel looking at myself and there wasn't much to see. Not exactly broke but the next thing to it. Buck on his way, alive or dead, so far as I was concerned. I certainly would never live with a man after I had put a killer on his track. I'm not that low. Dunn was dead. My prospects weren't cheery. Blair came back. He looked like a pal to me. I was that dependent. There's a great deal of attraction about Blair. For some women he's irresistible. I've got some self-control, maybe. He has manners when he wants to use them. He said Brown was dead. He smiled when I asked him about Buck. You know Buck's finish."

"I went with Blair. We went back to New York. I thought maybe the panic would be over. There was only Roberts, Ashley and Blair left. Roberts wouldn't hurt anyone. Ashley and Blair seemed to like each other. The three of them had sixty thousand each. That was too much for Blair and Ashley. It gave them what they needed but didn't give them anything to do. They needed to get it by going after it. That's their nature. There never was enough action in gambling for them, not enough to interest them for any time. Ashley occasionally liked to show the professionals a few tricks, but it didn't satisfy him. When the stories of the Turner will and of Clayton, Buck and Brown were printed it amused them, but I believe it set them after Roberts and they knew, I guess, if they got him, they'd have to fight it out between themselves. "As you know, I am getting even with Blair. I've told you what I know. You have nothing on Ashley, but maybe you can get something on Blair. I sent him to Lac Vieux. You know what happened up there. "I'm afraid there's still no case," said Stanton. "We know the story, but there's no proof. Blair's lawyers would laugh at us. But there's Roberts. Now, if he's dead, how was it done? There may be something. "I'll know tonight," she said. "If you want me to I'll plant Ashley where you can hear the story he tells. "Thanks," said the lieutenant. "That won't be necessary. "The telephone bell rang. Malsie looked at the lieutenant. "There's no one that can possibly be but Ashley," she said. She went to the telephone. "Yes," she said, taking the receiver. "All right. Come up. "Blair I leave you?" Stanton asked. "No," she said. "Stay here. Ashley's a sociable creature. He'll be glad to find company."

CHAPTER XII

The Death of Roberts

At a ring of the bell Malsie opened the door to Ashley and to a boy with ice water. "Hullo, sister," said Ashley, laughing. "How's the old girl? You look like a rose in June. Time hasn't a chance with you, hasn't a chance." Ashley had entered the room and closed the door when he saw that Malsie had a caller. "How do you do," he said, and then perceived that it was Lieutenant Stanton. His astonishment was only for an instant, his composure being reliable. "Hullo, Lieutenant," he said. "You've found Malsie, I see. You police devils! I'm beginning to be afraid of you. If a fellow didn't stay right and inside the law I believe he'd get into trouble. And Malsie's found a new boy friend and a big boy in blue. I've always been thankful for a clear conscience. His glance at her was fittingly malevolent, but he laughed. "All right, Malsie. I certainly walked into whatever was waiting for me. How did you get hold of her, Stanton?" "I turned myself in, Howard. I asked the lieutenant to call. I wanted to talk to him."

"Fair enough. I know of my own knowledge that he's been wanting to talk to you ever since he had the pleasure of knowing about the rest of us. It's all right, Malsie. We're all clear, clear and aboveboard. There's never been a time the lieutenant couldn't come right in and sit down. Always been glad to see him, haven't we, Lieutenant? We could have a drink or two, try to help one another out, talk things over and part friends. That's right, isn't it, Lieutenant?"

"Mrs. Trembley tells me Roberts is dead," said Stanton. "That's true, Lieutenant. Unfortunately, that's true. You passed out in San Francisco just before he was to have taken the boat. He had planned to go into the Far East. You may have known."

"Tell me how he happened to die," said the lieutenant. "He was in excellent health the last time I saw him. "He was in excellent health up to the last minute," said Ashley, "although he was flutery. You recall he was flutery when you saw him. If anything, he was even more flutery in San Francisco. First, get this right. We're not implicated in his death. We're as innocent as children, although you might say we caused it. In a way that could be true, but there was no responsibility attached to us. Not a flicker of suspicion. There couldn't be. There were witnesses who saw everything and we were right in the clear."

"That's interesting," said the lieutenant. "Of course it was understood in San Francisco that the Turner will was and that the three of you were the surviving beneficiaries?" "No, I don't think it was," said Ashley. "We didn't inquire. No one mentioned it. Very likely it wasn't understood."

"If it had been known in your right mind there had been more interest in your responsibility." "There might have been more curiosity, Lieutenant, but it couldn't have changed the facts. The coroner's jury found the death accidental. You haven't heard the story, I guess. Roberts fell out of a window in his hotel room. Luckily for us, there couldn't be any question about it. A bellboy had just brought him some ginger ale and ice and was in the room. The chambermaid was making his bed. His room was in a courtyard. A man was standing at a window across the way. It was all in the open. He fell backward out of his window."

"It was murder," said Stanton. "What did you go to his room for? What were you doing in San Francisco?" "Traveling," said Ashley, grinning. "There's no law against that. California particularly encourages it. Read the ads in your newspaper. We went to call on Roberts. Old friend of ours, also in San Francisco. Now, Lieutenant, I'll tell you something you won't believe. We'd just about decided that the panic was over. It was a panic. If you think a fellow's about to bump you, what do you do? Bump him first, if you're in luck. These boys were panicked. But as I said to Blair, what was the use? What was it going to get us? Our reputations are not too good. Even you were suspecting us. You'll not deny it."

"I'll not," said Stanton. "There you are. Then what do you think other people were saying? As I told Blair, it would get to the police in the end, and it wasn't worth the trouble. Blair seemed to give in. I'll not say he was really convinced, but he seemed to be. We know Roberts was at the Portula, and we knew he was sailing on a Japanese boat that afternoon. We went up to call on him, to say good-by. A bellboy with ginger ale was knocking at his door. We waited until the boy had gone in, and then we opened the door and said 'Hullo, Ron.' At that he gave a yell and backed right out of the open window and fell six stories."

"The bellboy saw it. The maid saw it. A man across the way saw it. No one could have been more innocent. After the coroner's inquest we buried Roberts, as his nearest and best friends. We never did know anything about his people. He never talked of any."

CHAPTER XII

The Death of Roberts

"I can do this fairly well from memory," he said. "You won't mind if it's not so scale. This is Peru. I like to draw maps. We'll say this is Huachuco to the north. This is Salinas bay, and here's Salinas promontory. Then we come down by Ancón bay to Callao, and then here's Lima. Now, you're saying what's all this about, and the answer is that I like to draw maps, and I like to have Malsie lean over like she's doing. Stick around, Malsie. We're just starting for the mountains and the jungles. Here's the Mantaro river, there's the Apurimac and here's La Sol mountains. The mapmakers run their town out about to the Apurimac, and then they dismiss the rest of the country by marking it Indians. And never let anyone tell you they are not right. But you've got to know what Indians mean in Peru. It's not Sioux in the Dakotas or Apaches in Arizona. It's poison, fever, jungle, moutain, pestilence and all the plagues a white man dreads and will wade into for money. I got to put Peru away. Here's the moules. Now, Stanton, if you haven't the good sense or taste to like these little friends of man I'll throw Peru into the bus-boy's arms, and that will be the end of that."

"Take a piece of the French bread, Mr. Stanton," said Malsie, "and dip it in the sauce." "Take a hunk," said Ashley. "Man, you're about to eat something." Stanton did, and they watched his expression. "Fall to, Malsie," said Ashley. "The steak's a success even without the steak and onions." Stanton conceded that. An hour later when the table was cleared except for the coffee Ashley spread out his napkin map again. "Up here is Cerro de Pasco, and on here is Puerto, Bermudez, then the Ucayali river, and here's Malsie, and then to the southeast is the Tamaya river. If I could draw I'd put a little bunch of men in this region here between the Ucayali and the Tamaya, but I'm not artist enough for that, and even if I could make figures I couldn't make jungles. So you'll have to draw your own. "One of them—I'll make some dots—is Turner. He's the big dot. Then this one is Dunn Clayton. He's sitting over here smoking a pipe. This one is Buck Trembley, and here's Preston Brown. You'd recognize this one, because he's more fidgely than the others, so he's Ron Roberts. And this one's me. You'd recognize me in a second, wouldn't you, Malsie? Even the lieutenant would after while. You can see something bold and dashing about that dot. There's a man! What a man! That's me. And this one, I'll make him bigger, almost as big as Turner but not quite, you'd guess maybe—" "That it was me." They looked up from the table and saw Blair leaning over Ashley's shoulders. "What's the idea?" Blair asked unpleasantly. Stanton thought there was a distinct suggestion of murder in the way he loomed over Ashley who was half-turned in his chair to look up at him. "You know Malsie, Acton, of course," said Ashley. "Yes, I know Malsie, and I know the copper here. What I do know is your idea."

CHAPTER XIII

Ashley-Draws a Map of Peru

At seven-thirty the lieutenant entered a West side restaurant, in Blue Island avenue a half-mile or so from Halsted street. Ashley had given the street number in telephoning as agreed and had asked Stanton to meet him and Malsie there. Following the stout head waiter around the curve of the room, he saw Ashley and Malsie at a table. "I don't know this restaurant," he said as he greeted them and sat down. "You should," said Ashley, "for two reasons. It has the best food in town and more 'hoods' and opera singers than get under any other one roof. It also has the best dance orchestra. I think there's a coke peddler works a racket in the rear. You can get cockle sauce with your spaghetti, and with your veal you can get a real Fransenli. You're not here as a copper so you can forget the 'hoods' you see. Most of them know you. I told Parsimonis—he's the head waiter; his name's something different—you were coming. He was flattered. He'll be here in a second to take our order himself in person. You're a celebrated fellow, Stanton."

"Mister," said the lieutenant, "don't kid a copper." "Here's Parsimonis. What are you going to eat, Stanton? Parsimonis says they have moules. Malsie and I wouldn't pass that up." "What are moules?" Stanton asked the woman, "and why more than one oven for three?" "They could be anything from the way Howard pronounces it. It's moule, Mussels. They're cooked in a sauce or broth, in their shells. You dip your bread in the broth. It's delicious. You'll like them, Lieutenant. Take a chance."

"I will, but don't expect refinements of the palate of me. I'm a steak-and-onions man." "That's all," said Ashley. "Moules for three. A steak for the lieutenant, a two-inch steak that the chef himself has pounded in the French manner. And onions, golden brown onions for the lieutenant. Cat's head and feet for Mrs. Trembley and me." "Good lord," said the lieutenant. "I'm having dinner with a couple of cannibal tribes. Say the word, and I'll shoot you a nice young 'hood' or a tender snowbird."

"I didn't try to get you as a customer for the calf's feet," said Ashley, "but man, you're missing another bet. Parsimonis, get on with the moules. We crave them. Now, Lieutenant, I'll draw you a map. I promised you, two things." He spread a napkin on the table and began to draw. "I can do this fairly well from memory," he said. "You won't mind if it's not so scale. This is Peru. I like to draw maps. We'll say this is Huachuco to the north. This is Salinas bay, and here's Salinas promontory. "You know Malsie, Acton, of course," said Ashley. "Yes, I know Malsie, and I know the copper here. What I do know is your idea."

"Sit down and join us, Acton. I'm telling Malsie and the lieutenant about the time we were down in Peru with Turner. You remember that time, Come on and sit down." "You're a d—n cool, Ashley," said Blair. "I didn't know you were so pleasant." "That it was me." They looked up from the table and saw Blair leaning over Ashley's shoulders. "What's the idea?" Blair asked unpleasantly. Stanton thought there was a distinct suggestion of murder in the way he loomed over Ashley who was half-turned in his chair to look up at him. "You know Malsie, Acton, of course," said Ashley. "Yes, I know Malsie, and I know the copper here. What I do know is your idea."

"I'm told you were talking about Peru. Come and sit down. The lieutenant wanted to know why Turner left us so much money. I'm telling him. All right with you, isn't it?" Blair scowled for another second and then began to smile. "Sure it's all right with me," he said, "but I can't sit down. I've got another table. I saw you here and came over to say hello. I'll be getting back. Adios, Malsie, Adios, Lieutenant." He turned and walked away. Ashley instantly put his pencil on the map. "I was at Blair, wasn't I? Don't look around after him now. Pretend you're interested in the map. This dot is Blair. The poor sap! He hasn't a chance. You know I've got to feel sorry for any poor sap who doesn't give himself a chance. I guess we're through with this map, aren't we, Lieutenant?"

"Have we begun with it?" Stanton asked. "I'm as curious as Blair. What is your idea, Ashley?" Ashley leaned back in his chair and laughed. "I wanted Blair to find me doing this," he said, "and I knew he would. I've been fond of the big fathead. I guess, I had to put him a little on his guard. Even if it won't do him any good. A sucker never gets a break, but Acton thinks he's on to me now. You'd not be surprised, would you, Lieutenant, if he got me tonight? He won't, but he thinks he'll do it some time, and he thinks I've given him reason and cause. So you see I'm playing square, but you can't play square with a fellow who never has a chance." "Come clean, Ashley. That was a promise." "What do you want details for? Honestly, I was using you and Malsie a bit tonight. I knew Blair would be here. You would know, wouldn't you, Stanton, that Blair and I would have to finish what Trembley began when he met Dunn Clayton in the Dutch Mill? You wouldn't have any illusion that Blair and I could live in sweetness and light? You can start a panic easier than you can stop it. What call have I to trust Blair and what call has he to trust me? You can't live always wondering when your old pal's going to stick a knife in you if you don't stick a knife in him. As a matter of fact, Lieutenant, any other combination of the six might have come to a trustworthy agreement better than Blair and I could. He's a simple sort of brute. It might take him six months to realize that he was going to kill me. That's taking too much time in the case of me, because as soon as Roberts went out of the window backward I knew that I had to kill Blair. Now I've a clear conscience." (20. 22. CONTINUED.)

"What do you mean by that?" "Take a chance and find out." "Take him up, Lieutenant," said Malsie suddenly. "Accepted," said Stanton. "When and where?" "Good scout. Be at your desk at seven o'clock. I'll telephone you."

CHAPTER XIII

At seven-thirty the lieutenant entered a West side restaurant, in Blue Island avenue a half-mile or so from Halsted street. Ashley had given the street number in telephoning as agreed and had asked Stanton to meet him and Malsie there. Following the stout head waiter around the curve of the room, he saw Ashley and Malsie at a table. "I don't know this restaurant," he said as he greeted them and sat down. "You should," said Ashley, "for two reasons. It has the best food in town and more 'hoods' and opera singers than get under any other one roof. It also has the best dance orchestra. I think there's a coke peddler works a racket in the rear. You can get cockle sauce with your spaghetti, and with your veal you can get a real Fransenli. You're not here as a copper so you can forget the 'hoods' you see. Most of them know you. I told Parsimonis—he's the head waiter; his name's something different—you were coming. He was flattered. He'll be here in a second to take our order himself in person. You're a celebrated fellow, Stanton."

"Mister," said the lieutenant, "don't kid a copper." "Here's Parsimonis. What are you going to eat, Stanton? Parsimonis says they have moules. Malsie and I wouldn't pass that up." "What are moules?" Stanton asked the woman, "and why more than one oven for three?" "They could be anything from the way Howard pronounces it. It's moule, Mussels. They're cooked in a sauce or broth, in their shells. You dip your bread in the broth. It's delicious. You'll like them, Lieutenant. Take a chance."

"I will, but don't expect refinements of the palate of me. I'm a steak-and-onions man." "That's all," said Ashley. "Moules for three. A steak for the lieutenant, a two-inch steak that the chef himself has pounded in the French manner. And onions, golden brown onions for the lieutenant. Cat's head and feet for Mrs. Trembley and me." "Good lord," said the lieutenant. "I'm having dinner with a couple of cannibal tribes. Say the word, and I'll shoot you a nice young 'hood' or a tender snowbird."

"I didn't try to get you as a customer for the calf's feet," said Ashley, "but man, you're missing another bet. Parsimonis, get on with the moules. We crave them. Now, Lieutenant, I'll draw you a map. I promised you, two things." He spread a napkin on the table and began to draw. "I can do this fairly well from memory," he said. "You won't mind if it's not so scale. This is Peru. I like to draw maps. We'll say this is Huachuco to the north. This is Salinas bay, and here's Salinas promontory. Then we come down by Ancón bay to Callao, and then here's Lima. Now, you're saying what's all this about, and the answer is that I like to draw maps, and I like to have Malsie lean over like she's doing. Stick around, Malsie. We're just starting for the mountains and the jungles. Here's the Mantaro river, there's the Apurimac and here's La Sol mountains. The mapmakers run their town out about to the Apurimac, and then they dismiss the rest of the country by marking it Indians. And never let anyone tell you they are not right. But you've got to know what Indians mean in Peru. It's not Sioux in the Dakotas or Apaches in Arizona. It's poison, fever, jungle, moutain, pestilence and all the plagues a white man dreads and will wade into for money. I got to put Peru away. Here's the moules. Now, Stanton, if you haven't the good sense or taste to like these little friends of man I'll throw Peru into the bus-boy's arms, and that will be the end of that."

"Take a piece of the French bread, Mr. Stanton," said Malsie, "and dip it in the sauce." "Take a hunk," said Ashley. "Man, you're about to eat something." Stanton did, and they watched his expression. "Fall to, Malsie," said Ashley. "The steak's a success even without the steak and onions." Stanton conceded that. An hour later when the table was cleared except for the coffee Ashley spread out his napkin map again. "Up here is Cerro de Pasco, and on here is Puerto, Bermudez, then the Ucayali river, and here's Malsie, and then to the southeast is the Tamaya river. If I could draw I'd put a little bunch of men in this region here between the Ucayali and the Tamaya, but I'm not artist enough for that, and even if I could make figures I couldn't make jungles. So you'll have to draw your own. "One of them—I'll make some dots—is Turner. He's the big dot. Then this one is Dunn Clayton. He's sitting over here smoking a pipe. This one is Buck Trembley, and here's Preston Brown. You'd recognize this one, because he's more fidgely than the others, so he's Ron Roberts. And this one's me. You'd recognize me in a second, wouldn't you, Malsie? Even the lieutenant would after while. You can see something bold and dashing about that dot. There's a man! What a man! That's me. And this one, I'll make him bigger, almost as big as Turner but not quite, you'd guess maybe—" "That it was me." They looked up from the table and saw Blair leaning over Ashley's shoulders. "What's the idea?" Blair asked unpleasantly. Stanton thought there was a distinct suggestion of murder in the way he loomed over Ashley who was half-turned in his chair to look up at him. "You know Malsie, Acton, of course," said Ashley. "Yes, I know Malsie, and I know the copper here. What I do know is your idea."

"Sit down and join us, Acton. I'm telling Malsie and the lieutenant about the time we were down in Peru with Turner. You remember that time, Come on and sit down." "You're a d—n cool, Ashley," said Blair. "I didn't know you were so pleasant." "That it was me." They looked up from the table and saw Blair leaning over Ashley's shoulders. "What's the idea?" Blair asked unpleasantly. Stanton thought there was a distinct suggestion of murder in the way he loomed over Ashley who was half-turned in his chair to look up at him. "You know Malsie, Acton, of course," said Ashley. "Yes, I know Malsie, and I know the copper here. What I do know is your idea."

"I'm told you were talking about Peru. Come and sit down. The lieutenant wanted to know why Turner left us so much money. I'm telling him. All right with you, isn't it?" Blair scowled for another second and then began to smile. "Sure it's all right with me," he said, "but I can't sit down. I've got another table. I saw you here and came over to say hello. I'll be getting back. Adios, Malsie, Adios, Lieutenant." He turned and walked away. Ashley instantly put his pencil on the map. "I was at Blair, wasn't I? Don't look around after him now. Pretend you're interested in the map. This dot is Blair. The poor sap! He hasn't a chance. You know I've got to feel sorry for any poor sap who doesn't give himself a chance. I guess we're through with this map, aren't we, Lieutenant?"

"Have we begun with it?" Stanton asked. "I'm as curious as Blair. What is your idea, Ashley?" Ashley leaned back in his chair and laughed. "I wanted Blair to find me doing this," he said, "and I knew he would. I've been fond of the big fathead. I guess, I had to put him a little on his guard. Even if it won't do him any good. A sucker never gets a break, but Acton thinks he's on to me now. You'd not be surprised, would you, Lieutenant, if he got me tonight? He won't, but he thinks he'll do it some time, and he thinks I've given him reason and cause. So you see I'm playing square, but you can't play square with a fellow who never has a chance." "DAKOTA DAN" IS STILL FIGHTING FOR RECOGNITION

Claimant of Melrose Riches is Now Seventy, but Plans Court Battle.

Boston.—"Dakota Dan," who battled vainly a quarter century ago in Massachusetts' longest Probate court hearing, will fight again for recognition as Daniel Blake Russell and a share in the estate of the late millionaire, Daniel Russell, first citizen of Melrose.

At the age of seventy years, the claimant to the Russell estate will try once more in Massachusetts courts to have himself recognized as the long lost son, according to word received in Melrose.

"I want to die in the same name in which I was born," he wrote to a Melrose friend. "I have always gone under the name of Daniel Blake Russell, the name given me at birth, but the courts of Massachusetts have ruled that that is not my name. I am a man without a name until I prove my identity."

Call of the West.

Half a century has passed since Daniel Blake Russell ran away from his Melrose home and people lost all trace of him until "Dakota Dan" returned in mature manhood, first to proclaim his identity and later, after he had turned all of his holdings as a Dakota ranchman into cash, to spend all of his own money and much more raised by his friends, in a vain battle for the estate.

For a time, after he lost his court battle, he remained around Melrose but the call of the West was too strong and he left. He asserted he would make another fortune and return to reopen his fight.

Since Middlesex Probate court heard the long trial, many of the witnesses, both for and against "Dakota Dan," have long since passed to their reward. The ranks of "Dakota Dan's" witnesses are very thin today, but from them, and from stenographic evidence taken more than a score of years ago, "Dakota Dan" expects to prove he is the genuine Daniel Blake Russell.

Stirred Memories.

JAMES L. CARRON, 35 1/2 OLM STREET, Melrose, who now and then writes a poem about the old-time days in Melrose, wrote one about the Old Red Mill, which many years ago stood at the junction of West Wyoming avenue and Fellaway East.

In some manner a copy of the poem found its way into the hands of "Dakota Dan," then living in Old Harbor, Wash. It stirred memories of Melrose in his breast and to Cassell came the first of the letters received by Melrose friends.

Two Eagles Rout Plane in Battle Over Rockies

Colorado Springs, Colo.—How two eagles routed an airplane in a battle of the air high above the Rockies is being related by Mrs. Griffith Lloyd, prominent Colorado aviator.

Mrs. Lloyd and Stuart Vandell, veteran mountain pilot, narrowly escaped a crash, they said, when the two big birds charged their plane. The pair started as the craft soared over a peak nearly 15,000 feet above sea level. Below them the pilots saw the eagles attacking a flock of Rocky mountain sheep.

Mrs. Lloyd, flying the plane, nosed down and soared above the eagles to frighten them from their prey. The eagles wheeled and charged. They narrowly escaped smashing into the whirling propeller, and one of the birds brushed low over the cockpit, striking Mrs. Lloyd. She lost control of the plane and it dove several hundred feet.

Finally, convinced the eagles would wreck the plane unless the battle ended, Mrs. Lloyd turned the ship and fled.

King of Timber Wolves Is Killed by Farmer

Sudville, Ontario.—Three years of defiance has ended for the famous "king of the timber wolves." Captured in a snare by Orland Sequin, a farmer, the animal fought so fiercely that it had to be shot. Two broken snares about its neck testified to the futile efforts of Ontario's best rangers and wolf-hunting equipment. The animal was more than seven feet long. It had taken a heavy toll of north country game and cattle, and earned the title of "king" among Ontario farmers.

Seize Burglar and Find He Is Warden of Prison

Budapest.—A burglar, caught in a factory in Temesvar, admitted that he was a warden in the prison at Arad.

He declared that as the Rumanian state had not paid the employees' wages for some months his family were destitute, and in desperation he had taken to committing burglaries during his off time.

Miner Slides 400 Feet Down Shaft and Lives

Grass Valley, Calif.—Joseph Hobson, miner, knows how it feels to fall 400 feet—and live. Working in a Pennsylvania mine, Hobson slipped and fell down the shaft. While the fall was not perpendicular, the shaft was so steep he was unable to check his descent. Hobson suffered only minor bruises.

Women Inventors Increasing
The number of applicants from women for patent papers has increased greatly in recent years. When the last detailed analysis was made, women were applying for patents at the rate of about 600 a year, but it is known to have increased considerably, since recently a large number of women have entered industrial life. As might be expected, the highest percentage of inventions of the number studied a few years ago confined themselves to domestic devices, but a great many applications are now from the realms of metallurgy and other higher technical fields.

Young Democrats State League

The work of organizing the Young Democrats of New Mexico is going forward in a most satisfactory manner. Much enthusiasm is being shown throughout the state by younger voters toward the coming elections, state and national. It is the hope of the active clubs at this time to have a Young Democratic organization in every county of the state, and to insure a large vote among the younger members of the party.

Another step forward in the statewide development of the Young People's Democratic Club was the organization of an active club in the Estancia Valley, at a meeting held April 2nd in Estancia county seat of Torrance County. Over three hundred citizens attended this enthusiastic meeting and ninety-six young democrats were registered as charter members of the Torrance County organization. This meeting will be followed by assemblies and registration in Lincoln and Chaves counties at an early date. A large delegation of young democrats is expected at the state democratic convention to be held in Clovis May 16th, where further plans will be discussed for their future activities.

The purpose of the Young People's Democratic Clubs of New Mexico is to support the Democrats in the approaching campaigns and to enlist the interest of every young democrat in the state, especially those who have lately become eligible to vote in the state and national elections. It is the hope of the organization that the work of these clubs will insure a more enthusiastic and beneficial participation by the young people of New Mexico in the public affairs of their state and nation.

Democratic Economies

Santa Fe—While the national administration and Congress have been theorizing and arguing over ways and means to effect governmental economies, necessitated by depressed economic conditions in the nation, the New Mexico Democratic state administration of Governor Arthur Seligman has from its inception on January 1, 1931, been practicing strictest economy and has saved for the taxpayers of the state approximately $2,500,000. This saving does not include those made by institutions or various state boards. It is made up of three items—the actual decrease in expenditures by state departments the expenditures approved by the last legislature and vetoed by the Governor, and the reduction in the cost of motor vehicle license and taxes.

These figures were made public in a report by William J. Barker, Democratic State Chairman, in connection with his survey of economies being effected by the administration. The total saving effected by various state departments, exclusive of institutions or boards in the calendar year 1931 as compared with the calendar year 1930 was $445,360.80, according to Mr. Barker's report. Appropriations made by the 1931 legislature, which were vetoed by Governor Seligman as being unnecessary and excessive at this time totaled $1,617,973. The reduction in fees covering auto licenses and taxes, based on the total number of licenses issued for 1932, amounts to $498,147.86, it is shown in a report made to Chairman Barker by the motor vehicle department. These three items alone total $2,562,481.66.

Some of the items of decreases in expenditures for 1931 as compared with 1930 are as follows: Governor, $7,192.35; Secretary of State, $9,522.75; Adjutant-General, $4,260.68; Tax Commission, $55,237.22; Gas Tax Department, $3,110.40; Motor Vehicle, $14,668.32; Capitol Custodian, $1,411.36; Land Office, $12,948.83; Bank Examiner, $1,822.11; Supreme Court, $3,359.77; Game Department, $5,888.72; Highway Department, $308,079.02; Bureau of Child Welfare, $3,372.75; State Engineer, $31,265.25.

The items vetoed by Governor Seligman from appropriations consisted of the institutional building debentures section of the appropriations bill amounting to $1,250,000; direct appropriations, $221,615; special road bills, $97,358; and water investigations, $49,000. In vetoing these proposed expenditures the Governor adhered to his policy of refusing to spend public money for improvements that "while desirable, are not absolutely necessary."

"This record", said Chairman Barker, "is undoubtedly the best showing of economy that has been made by any administration in the history of New Mexico. It is entirely proper that it should be so when we consider the financial stress upon all of our people. There have been many other savings effected by various institutions and boards which do not enter into this enormous total. Every institution and department without exception is operating within its budget and income. Governor Seligman has insisted that this be done with the result that the economies shown will not turn up later in the form of deficits to add to the indebtedness of the state and a future tax burden on the people."

Spain's New Tariff Shuts out 14 Products

Washington, April.—Spain's retaliatory tariff, which puts prohibitive duties on 14 American products, is declared to be a sequel to the passage of the Hawley Smoot tariff bill" by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It says: "Following the example of other countries which have enacted retaliatory tariff laws as a sequel to the passage of our Hawley Smoot act, Spain has put prohibitive duties on 14 classes of imports, including automobiles, telephone equipment and other products heretofore purchased in the United States. Spain has been one of our good customers, spending $82,000,000 here in 1929 and $57,500,000 in 1930.

"We can make better automobiles and telephone equipment than the Spaniards, and they would like to have them, but they cannot do so if they are not permitted to pay for them, at least in part, in goods of their own make. In raising tariff walls to meet ours, our foreign customers are only engaging in self-preservation. When a country buys more elsewhere than it sells, the deficit must be paid in cash. It cannot continue to do that indefinitely without impoverishing itself.

"As Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover was accustomed to point proudly to our mounting foreign trade. As President, he signed a law whose effect is to kill or cripple that trade. That is a piece of acrobatics that defies rational analysis.

Traylor Finds Too Much Silence Responsible for Business Slump

Chicago Banker Traces Crash to Failure of Leaders to Give Warnings

Danger Signals Disregarded

Speaking before the International Chamber of Commerce at Washington, Melvin A. Traylor, President of the First National Bank of Chicago, said in part:

Business management, however, is not alone responsible for the course it has followed. Unfortunately, it has had the cooperation of finance and government and will likewise have to have their cooperation in adjusting its affairs to a saner course. What, in fact, did the leaders of finance do to encourage the expansion which took place in the last decade?

What, if anything, did they do to prevent such expansion with the consequences which they certainly did know or should have known would follow?

I believe their record in that connection is not an enviable one. As early as 1927, it was clearly obvious to anyone having experience with the granting of credit that if the situation was allowed to continue, and if expansion and speculation were carried on unchecked, there could be but one end—disaster. Yet the record of American financial leadership and of responsible government officials was regrettably one of too much silence.

Sounded Few Warnings
Few warnings were issued, and few attempts were made to attract public attention to the danger that threatened. Credit for the expansion of productive facilities to meet temporary demands was granted to business without adequate consideration of the consequences. Credit without stint was furnished to consumers to buy consumable goods, thereby further increasing false purchasing power and multiplying debt. No one called a halt. Every kind and character of combination and consolidation was made, regardless of its economic advisability or the possibility of economies in management or increased profits therefrom. Little or no consideration was given to the nature of the businesses involved; in one instance, for example, soaps and candles were united. Such combinations and mergers were promoted and securities were sold on the theory that temporary earnings derived from a false demand would not only continue, but would forever increase.

Furthermore, these securities were not sold to those in a position to buy, or who could buy for investment purposes, but rather to those less able to buy—to men and women fascinated by high-powered salesmanship and an in-born desire to gamble for big profits. Was such financial leadership calculated to inspire confidence, or make for an economic stability which insures social welfare? I am afraid not. But financial leadership did not stop there. It actively promoted the purchase of equity stocks and split its own unit of stock par in order, as it said, to bring its market values within the reach of the small investor. May I add, parenthetically, that such action would have been unnecessary for their purpose had they waited only a few months.

Financial leaders organized and promoted so-called investment trusts to give the small investor a chance to profit from wise financial leadership, made foreign loans of speculative value, and, altogether, followed the procession obviously intent upon getting theirs while the getting was good.

Must Chart New Course

Are we to have a repetition of this kind of financial leadership? If it be true—as I believe it is—that credit is the life-blood of the nation, and that there can be no economic stability or social progress without a sound financial structure; and if it be true—as I also believe—that no financial system is sounder or more useful than its management, then financial leadership in this country must take stock of itself turn over a new leaf, and chart a new course of conduct for its future guidance.

If it be objected that not all financial leaders are guilty of such misconduct—and certainly there are some who are not—the indictment, nevertheless, stands. As far as the record discloses, not one had the courage to fight in the open against the tendencies he knew were wrong and to demand a right-about-face. Knowledge is one thing, but courage of leadership is another.

To Destroy Cut Worms

Cut worms are coming! That is the word of agriculture experts who base their prediction on the mid winter. There has been no cold weather to freeze out these pests, and agriculture researchers are predicting that they will cause more damage this year than in many years. The lady-like winter left them alive; the early spring is going to prove equally encouraging. They are apt to be a real menace to garden and truck crops, corn, and tobacco. The worms, it is said, are especially fond of crops growing in freshly turned soil where the ground is soft on the feet and easy to bore into.

The only effective remedy for these pests is a poison bait scattered over the ground. The easiest way to prepare such a poison bait, according to The Tittsworth Co. Inc. local Purina Chow distributor, is to dissolve three pounds of paris green in three gallons of water and sprinkle it on 100 pounds of Purina-Burky-Las. The mixture is then shoveled over and there is enough bait for five years. At sundown bait is scattered on the ground. The cut worms come up at night to feed, attracted by the odor of the moistened Burky Las. It tastes good. The worms eat heartily... go home happy. That will be their last public appearance.

Many car loads of Burky Las are used each year in the United States and Canada, says the local Purina dealer for this purpose. It is the easiest way of preparing a poisoned bait, because Burky Las is already sweetened and when mixed with paris green and water makes a bulky mixture which is easy to scatter over the ground. It may be either broadcast or scattered along the rows at the base of the plants. It is suggested that the Burky Las poison be scattered on a seed bed before garden or truck crops are planted, especially before transplanting. It will save many plants as the cut worms will be cleaned out.

Introducing George Marsh and Our New Serial Story

Here is a brief introduction to our readers of the noted American writer whose latest story will be our next serial. The story is "Under Frozen Stars" by George Marsh.

George Marsh is a lawyer who likes the writing of stories more than pleading cases before the bar, and who prefers the romance and adventure of the Far North as themes for his stories. He was born at Lansingburgh, N. Y., but has resided in Providence, R. I., for many years, where he practiced law before he began writing stories. He served as a member of the state legislature for two terms, served in the army air service during the war on the Meuse-Argonne front, and was a member of the U. S. A. of the Aero-Convention of the Peace-conference at Paris. His long list of stories includes such as "Flash, the Lead Dog," "Men Marooned," "The Valley of Voices," "Pollers of the Trails," and "Sled Trails and White Waters," all of them tales of the Far North. He is one of America's popular writers of swift action fiction.

"Under Frozen Stars," is, we believe, the best of Mr. Marsh's long list of far northern stories. It has that swift moving action that attracts and holds interest. You will like Jim Stuart as a hero, and you will love, as Jim Stuart did, petite, Auroro Le Blond, the flirtatious heroine.

While rivalry among fur traders is not a new subject, but George Marsh, with his intimate knowledge of the characteristics and superstitions of the Indian of the North, gives us new scenes and new character delineations. From the time Jim Stuart sets out with trusty Omar Bolsvert, his half-breed friend, to win back the lost fur trade, until his final victory over his unworthy rival, there is never a momentary lull of adventure or interest.

In securing publication rights on this unusual story we know we have provided a real treat for every one of our readers, and we urge all of them to read, and enjoy it.

Getting along is often a question of management. We have all heard of people who declared they could not save and could not get along with less, but when a salary reduction came, found out that they could get along by better management.

Two things show the real qualities in a man: Prosperity and depression. Prosperity shows up his common sense and level headed management and a depression shows up his faith and courage.

The Kitchen Cabinet

SUITABLE FOODS

Some day when there is a bit of cold meat, such as chicken, ham, or in fact, any good well-seasoned meat, put it through the food chopper and use as filling for the following dish:

Stuffed Onions.—Take six large onions, peel and remove enough of the center to form a cavity to hold the following mixture: One tablespoonful of minced green pepper, one-half cupful of meat, one tablespoonful of butter, paprika and salt to taste, with the centers of the onion finely minced. Stuff with this mixture and place in gem pans with a little hot water in each, baste while cooking with cream or butter and water and serve with a rich butter sauce poured over the onions. Sausage makes a fine stuffing for the above.

Honey Ice Cream.—Blend one tablespoonful of cornstarch with one-quarter of a cupful of cold milk, add two and three-fourths cupfuls of scalded milk and cook until smooth and thickened; cook in a double boiler 15 minutes. Mix two beaten eggs, one cupful of honey and one teaspoonful of salt, add gradually to the hot mixture. Cool and freeze as usual.

Mineral Oil Mayonnaise.—Here is a recipe for the overweight person: Mix one teaspoonful of mustard, one-half teaspoonful of salt, small pinch of pepper, and paprika and one egg yolk. Beat in slowly drop by drop one cupful of mineral oil, adding a little vinegar occasionally until two tablespoonfuls are added. Keep in a cool place.

Molded Chicken Salad.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold chicken stock, heat one and one-half cupfuls of stock and add the gelatin to it, add one-half a teaspoonful of salt, cool, and when nearly set fold in two and one-half cupfuls of "diced cooked chicken, one-fourth cupful of chopped green pepper, three-fourths of a cupful of dried celery, one-half cupful each of mayonnaise and cream, whipped. Turn into a mold and serve with whipped cream and mayonnaise.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Quixotic

FOR this perfectly good English word there is explanation in no study of etymology that ever was on land or sea. No method of prefix, suffix, root explanation will serve here.

For the word comes to us from a literary character whose name was the title of the work in which he is immortal—Cervantes' "Don Quixote."

In this chivalrous romance in which, according to some opinions, Cervantes wished to burlesque the old Spanish knight errantry, the author presents a lovable character—Don Quixote, courteous to all, gallant, generous, childlike in his extravagant romanticism. In other words, he was anything but practical.

Although it is over 300 years since Don Quixote took printed form—his name is pronounced Key-o-tay—we have unglorified him, and to this day when we want to describe something as foolishly impractical we call it Quixotic.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

There is a wealthy widower in New York, one of whose daughters lives with him in his rather elaborate home. He is a man of quick temper and strong will who, when he is crossed or if anything occurs which is not to his liking, roars like a couple of lions. Invariably, he eats one egg for breakfast, and has done so for years, but for some reason he likes to see more than one egg on the platter. Perhaps he likes to make a selection. I don't know. At any rate, his cook apparently got tired of seeing the other eggs returned and one morning sent up a platter with a single egg on it.

The head of the house took one look at it and then began to roar in his best manner. He demanded to know why in the blue blazes he was served with a single egg. His butler, an old retainer, told him frankly that he had not in the memory of the oldest inhabitant eaten more than one egg and that the cook undoubtedly had concentrated on cooking that one in the best possible manner. The man roared that he would have things cooked and served in his own house as he gold-dinged pleased and said to the butler: "You go out there and tell that fat, addlepated excuse for a cook to poach eggs and keep on poaching eggs, until I send her word to stop."

The butler delivered the message, the man ate his egg, and then departed hastily for his car, waiting to take him to his office. Pretty soon his daughter appeared for breakfast. Practically covering the table were platters of eggs. She asked what it meant and the butler explained. She asked how many eggs the cook had poached and the butler said he thought the count had reached about three dozen, and that supplies were running low. The daughter, who was not in the slightest afraid of her father, for all his roaring, smiled a wicked smile.

"Send out for more eggs," she said, "and tell the cook to keep right on following orders."

About an hour later she telephoned her father. "Don't you," she said, "think it's to neighbors he had put the $3,000 in bills right in his trouser pocket, where it would stay. Then two men carrying revolvers came into his room. "Give us those $3,000 bills you've got in your pocket," they said. Grakos obeyed.

"about time to tell her to stop?" "What in blue blazes are you talking about?" demanded the head-of-the-house. "I'm busy." "Oh, all right," said his daughter sweetly. "Only the table is covered and the sideboard is covered and there are platters of eggs on all the chairs and out into the living room, and on the piano. You gave the order, so of course I don't want to interfere. There are ten dozen poached eggs here waiting for you now, but you know your own capacity."

And she hung up the receiver.

When Gene Tunney was traveling in England, he was accosted by a small boy who produced a little book and asked for the retired heavyweight champion's autograph. Tunney gave it to him, and the kid thanked him and said:

"Of course, I don't know a lot about you, but I have Joe Beckett's autograph in here."

As Joe Beckett ended most of his fights lying down, Tunney was not complimented. Gene used to receive a big mail in England, and a large portion of it was from persons offering to sell him public houses. Bombadier Wells owns a bar, and does a good business.

French May Use Skis in Sahara Sand Hills

Algiers.—It is no longer necessary to risk pneumonia to enjoy the sport of skiing, for General Dechaux has announced here that there is perfect skiing in the heart of the Sahara, where the sun always shines and there is no danger of wet feet. Sand replaces snow for the sport.

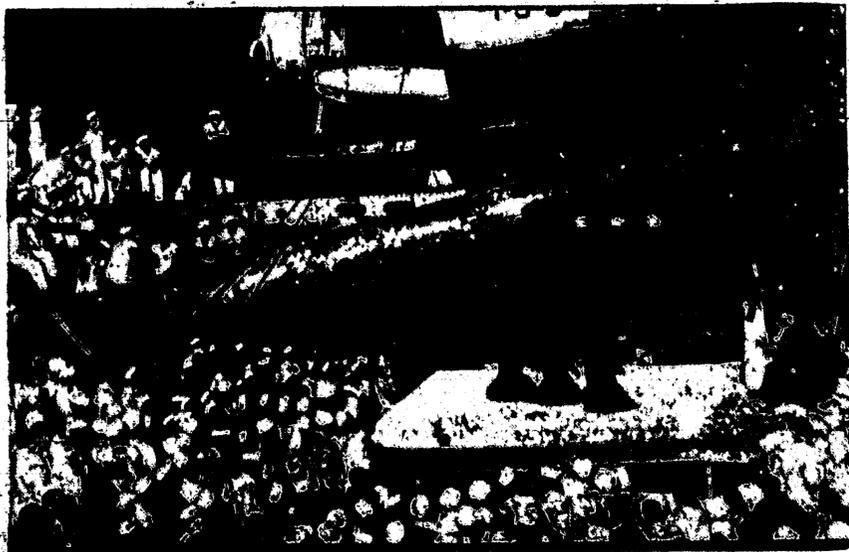

Encouraged by Algerian sports federations, Charles Lee, famed ski jumper, experimented on the sun baked sands near El Golea. Without danger he succeeded in skidding down the great dunes often in places where camels were unable to walk.

The results were particularly interesting to the French colonial forces.

Jobless, He Breaks

Into Penitentiary
Topeka, Kan.—An unemployed man, twenty-eight-year-old Lester Johnson, literally "broke in-to" the Kansas penitentiary, where he will be fed, clothed and given the medical treatment he needs. Johnson, against the advice of even prosecuting attorneys, pleaded guilty to check forgery. It first was necessary for him to visit three courts to determine whether he had been charged with the crime. "I need a doctor and have no money," he said, in entering his guilty plea. He received a sentence of not more than ten years.

TIES SON TO NECK, JUMPS TO DEATH

Man Drowns, but Infant Boy Is Saved by Witnesses.
Atlanta, Ga.—A Georgia father tied his infant son about his own neck and then plunged off a bridge into the Chattahoochee river. The father perished, but the baby was rescued. W. D. Smith, Jr., is the survivor. His father made the leap at Bolton, Ga. The baby cannot remember the breath-taking thirty minutes during which a pulmonator in the hands of Dr. W. B. Rhodes revived him. The cord binding the infant to the man had been cut and the baby taken from the father's lifeless form. The infant is only nine months old. His father was forty-nine. The baby is in the Grady hospital here, object of loving attention from doctors, nurses and his mother. The child contracted a cold, which, added to the shock, made his recovery doubtful at first, but he is now expected to get well. Smith left a note, saying: "To whom it May Concern: "Please call Main 0201 and ask for Mrs. Annie Smith. Tell her that W. D. Smith and W. D. Smith, Jr. went overboard into the river off the Marietta road bridge. We live at No. 8 Charleston avenue, Lakewood Heights." Mrs. Smith assigns responsibility over unemployment as the cause of her husband's act. Smith, who was a former railway train news agent, had been out of work for several months. Smith is survived by two daughters by a previous marriage, Mrs. D. Hardy and Miss Marion Clarke.

Prison Opens to Let Dad Give Blood to Daughter

Trenton.—Prison doors were opened by a federal judge here to let a father offer his blood to save the life of his six-year-old daughter. Federal Judge Kirkpatrick, sitting in Philadelphia, sent Charles Ogilts back to Mercer County prison for ten months for parole violation. Ogilts had been started to the prison here in a car with two deputy marshals, when the jurist learned the man's wife and daughter Evelyn, had been burned in a fire at their home in Pottsville, Pa. Mrs. Ogilts seemed to be recovering, but doctors had decided the girl needed blood from her father's veins, the judge was told. He sent a probation officer to catch the marshals' car. But Ogilts was in prison when the speeding probation officer arrived. The officers telephoned Judge Kirkpatrick. He ordered them to rush Ogilts to Pottsville. Escorted by two motorcycle policemen, Ogilts and his prison guard arrived at Warner hospital, Pottsville. Doctors found Ogilts' blood was acceptable.

Trimming Ideas for Wash Frocks Beauty Talks

SPRINGTIME is here, which brings thoughts of the sewing campaign which is and ever will be at this season of the year.

Here's a timely word of advice, be sure to stock your work basket and your sewing cabinet with a goodly assortment of crochet hooks and crochet threads and yarns, for a touch of hand-crochet is the call of the hour. Paris is all enthusiasm for the crochet subject and so is every style-wise American woman and her next-door neighbor.

It is taken for granted that you have been buying up all sorts of pretty wash materials in anticipation of this annual sewing bee, for who can resist the lure of the perfectly lovely cottons, rayons and linens and washable silks which have been so temptingly on display throughout the various fabric departments this many a day.

As usual the "still small voice" is blinding mother to consider the needs of the little folks of the household first. Which is the reason why we are showing this group of interesting styles for children. Seeing that hand-crochet is so exceedingly popular, why not adorn little daughter's bright washable-print school frock with neck-trim and sleeve bands of hand-crochet. They will give an air of distinction to her gown such as only handwork can give.

These little "fringed" pieces are so easy to do that an entire set like that which adorns the frock to the left in the picture can be made in one evening while listening in on the radio. The short story hour would afford sufficient time for the stitch is easy and the strips are straight. Since the tub material selected for the frock shown is brown with orange and ecru they figures, the thread for the neckband and cuffs is also an ecru shade. The french mesh, flit, or even the modified Irish-crochet stitch may be employed with equal effect. Use 80 to 60 mercerized crochet thread and a No. 10 or 8 steel crochet hook.

The neckband and cuffs are applied with a trim sitch thread in one of colors of the design in the fabric. The trim sitch is done on the machine. Use the coarsest of machine needles, and set the gauge for nine or ten stitches to the inch. Bias trim in orange shade outlines the clever yoke effect at the waistline.

Speaking of bias trim, any young girl will be most delighted with a plaid gypsy girle with head band to match, such as is worn by the seated figure sketched above to the left. The idea is to stitch bias trim in vigorous colors outlining a plaided design as is shown. This is really a unique idea and one which can be worked very effectively in a trimming way. Blue, scarlet, plum blue, orange and black bias trim make a striking combination when plaided as suggested.

Just as novel and interesting is the braided bathband and girle which the other young miss is wearing. This set is also made of bias trim, such as can be bought by the bolt at any notion-counter. Fold the bias trim in half, and fasten the ends with thumb tacks to a desk blotter or pad. Then interlace the strips firmly, continuing with pins to hold in position as you proceed from mid side to the other. The hat band may be made a little narrower than the belt, using five instead of seven strips.

The little girl who is going step-ping in the foreground of the picture, has her pretty white blouse smocked to perfection, in gay colors.

COLOR FEATURE OF SPRING ENSEMBLES

The color theme is a predominating feature of many of the new spring ensembles. A dark coat with a light touch is worn with a light frock that boasts a dark note to match the coat, and there is the ensemble. Of course, it is not quite as simple as all that, but this color scheme is certainly extremely popular here.

You will like the new ensembles, for they certainly are different from almost anything shown for many a season, most attractive and wearable, and refreshingly new. Fine materials and furs are used. The frocks often boast a very complicated cut and yet the outcome is an apparently simple costume, without any trace of the opulent or lavish.

Pale Beige Is Favored for Spring Ensembles

Beige may be announced with authority as one of the smart shades for spring. It returns to fashion very pale after an absence of several years. Many a woman will give thanks for this return, as it is both a becoming and a practical shade.

The bright colors that have been high style items for more than a year are being seriously menaced by beige and other neutral colors. It looks as if these gaudy shades might be pushed out of the style picture in another few months. They've had a pretty good day, and may well have run their course.

Be that as it may, though, you will do well to keep this prophecy well in mind, beige is to again. It is being used by the great French dressmakers for jacket ensembles that are going to be smart next spring and that may be worn under the fur coat instanter.

CORDUROY PRINT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Corduroy goes printed for this smart pajama ensemble which is carried out in the ever good-looking black and white combination. The strictly tailored lines are featured this season for pajama costumes which go cruising or strutting on the beach, or which enter into sports of any description.

Jackets, Jackets!
Jackets are an integral part of the season's dress. They range from bolero to finger-tip lengths.

Beauty on Every Hand

HOW many times, I wonder, have you and you and you been shocked by an ugly hand hiding behind a trim and stylish love. Were it not for the protection they give and the finished look they add to the costume ensemble I would be all for abolishing gloves. For time and again it has been proven that exposure is the incentive to greater beauty.

The very first rule to remember when handling yourself beauty is that the hands must match your face in general tone and texture. Never cream your face without doing as much for your hands. When you cleanse, tone, nourish or bleach the face and neck take a minute to follow the same beautifying process for your hands, too. It will be time well spent, I promise you.

It is a very stubborn sort of skin that does not respond to a week or two of kindly care. Rough, chapped hands soon take on a satin smoothness if treated to a nourishing cream, a hand lotion or a soothing balm. This should be smoothed into the hands at night just before one retires, and also several times during the day after the hands have been washed.

For red and rough hands the old formula of glycerin and rose water, or equal parts of glycerin and spirits of ammonia should prove both bleaching and nourishing.

Hands that are chapped should avoid soap and water for a few weeks. A cleansing cream is both soothing and cleansing.

And every hand—from the loveliest to the ugliest should receive the proper protection before it is sent outdoors. In the winter the chill blasts will reddens and roughen and chp the skin. In the summer the sun's heat saps the skin of the natural oils making it dry and leathery looking. A finishing cream smoothed over the hands and a dusting of powder to top the loveliness is sufficient to carry smooth, white beauty through a busy day.

Fruit juice stains are not new to the homemaker. The lovely lemon is a handy thing to have about if you are seeking hand beauty. A bit of tomato juice will also remove fruit stains.

The hands of youth and beauty present a beautifully healthy skin tone, clear, transparent—not a dead white but the proverbial peaches and cream loveliness. The hands of youth and beauty are hands you love to hold for their satin smooth loveliness. No wrinkles, no discolorations, no ragged nails ever mar the hands of youth and beauty. Hand yourself beauty and remember that beautiful hands are also on the march in the spring fashion parade.

Make-Up Need Not Make You Look Bizarre

IN ADDITION to the many women who have not yet adopted cosmetics, there is still another group. The group consists of women who are under the mistaken impression that rouge, rouge or powder will make them look too obviously "made up." They associate make-up in general with an eccentric, exaggerated effect.

Make-up is a subtle art. To use none at all is to commit as grave an offense against beauty as to use too much. The pallid, haggard woman is almost as much of an eyesore as the too-obviously painted lady. But by choosing the right rouge and powder—a shade to match the skin, texture to make blending easy, a quality that will in no way hurt the skin—and by applying these touches skillfully one can achieve not only a natural but a beautiful effect as well.

To achieve a natural effect the first requisite is to select a shade of rouge that blends perfectly with your natural coloring.

If you have so little natural coloring that you are in doubt what it is, there are several ways of determining it. When you are flushed, notice your color, or when exercising, the blood will rush to the surface, or after patting with skin tonic, notice the color as well as the color outline, that is just where the "key" or deepest shade is and notice how it fades away gradually.

The next step is to blend the rouge to simulate the natural color outline—apply it to the "key spot" then blend it so that it fades away. Edges should never be definitely outlined, but softened so that they are scarcely perceptible. A cream rouge is best suited to this blending process and achieves a warmer, more natural, glowing and healthful effect.

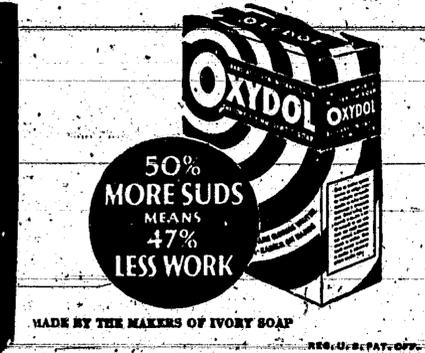

Powder should also match the skin and should harmonize with eyes and hair. Choose a good quality powder and one of good texture. When applying the powder do not rub it into the skin. Pat it on in an upward and outward direction, then gently smooth it over.

And while on the subject of make-up, let me urge you to adopt a lip-paste or lipstick, too. Rosy cheeks and pale lips do not conform with natural order of things.

A too-obvious make-up should be avoided. But a natural make-up will only serve to enhance your beauty, to make you look more healthful, more alive.

WIFE'S RIGHT TO SHARE IN INCOME

Should Mates Be Real Fifty-Fifty Partners?

Women's rights, it seems, was not settled when political equal suffrage was adopted. Equal rights for women is still the most important question in American home life today, according to a questionnaire conducted among 6,000 women by the editorial staff of the County Home.

Fifty-one per cent of all the women who answered the questionnaire selected this as the "gravest and most important question" of a long series submitted for their selection. Most of them narrowed their interest down to money matters—the right of a wife as a partner to share fifty-fifty in the family income.

The arguments brought to bear on the subject were many and varied. A Kansas answer carried the following endorsement: "When I was thirty I would have stuck up for the old idea that a man is the natural head of the family. But now, at sixty-two, I am convinced that an actual partnership with the wife would be the salvation of many homes that otherwise will be wrecked or wrecked. Experience has demonstrated that, under our present system of equality in education and opportunity, woman is not only man's equal mentally but often his superior in business acumen; and she is entitled to full participation in everything pertaining to the welfare of the home."

An Indiana woman wrote: "I have traveled the whole road. This very question almost broke my heart. I let my husband get hold of all the money I got from my parents. He spent it all for his farm and his good. I have no modern conveniences, with an electric line right in front of our farm home. I have no water in the house. I draw cistern water. I had seven children for him and had to raise chickens to clothe myself and the children. And what good was it all? There are no pockets in a shroud."

Famous English Hotel

One of World's Oldest

"Ye Olde, Griffin hotel," at March, Cambridgeshire, England, one of the best known hotels in the eastern counties, dating back to 1000, has been sold. It was a noted house in old coaching days, and the coaches at times drove through the space where the front doors are now into the courtyard-at-the-back. An offer of $5,000 has been made and refused for the remarkable paneling in the commercial room.

The walls of the hall are of Indian carved teak, and all the ceilings are supported by the original massive oak beams, while the ancient card room is still in existence. The bath is of real Italian marble, hewn out of the solid stone, and was originally used by the Italian monks, and subsequently brought to England. The hotel has been the subject of articles by Charles Dickens, G. K. Chesterton, Malraux Helloc, and others, and is visited by many distinguished people during the season.—Detroit News.

Chinese Leaders Split on Educational Plans

China, unlike most nations, has nothing that can really be called a national sport. Japan, in much the same circumstances, adopted baseball; but baseball in China has never caught on to any great extent. Mission schools and Y. M. C. A.'s, however, have done much to teach terms of sport to elementary and middle school students, with the result that basketball, tennis and football are beginning to prove fairly popular, but only among an extremely small percentage of the nation's many millions of youths. As far as the revival of folklore (twich) is being considered by the social education department of the ministry of education is concerned, it is expected that the ministry will encounter difficulties. China is rich in folklore, but while with one hand the government is trying to encourage its revival, with the other hand the government is launching a bitter campaign against superstition. Much of China's ancient folklore deals with supernatural beings, and with historical and mythical characters endowed with supernatural powers. What is needed, according to educational leaders, is the development of a critical faculty among students and the populace which will enable them to disassociate themselves entirely from the millon and one popular myths which form the basis of their mental texture, if not of their religious beliefs.

OIL Gone...

He Drove from Banner to Sheridan on the GERM PROCESSED "Hidden Quart"

The driver for the Sheridan Motor Bus Company was ready to leave Banner, Wyoming, for Sheridan with his big Reo bus loaded with passengers.

Then he made a discovery. The oil line had been accidentally broken, allowing the Conoco Germ Processed Oil to drain out; and the crankcase was empty. With all Banner closed for Thanksgiving, he could not get oil and had to drive the 16 miles to Sheridan without oil. At Sheridan, inspection showed that the "Hidden Quart" of Conoco Germ Processed Oil had saved the motor from damage!

If Conoco Germ Processed Oil can protect a heavy bus with the crankcase empty, it will certainly give you sure, safe lubrication in everyday driving. It is the only oil that actually penetrates and combines with metal surfaces. That's why a "Hidden Quart" stays up in your motor and never drains away. It cuts down wear in the starting period, when other oils drain away and leave parts unprotected. It gives your motor longer life, with fewer repair bills.

Have this extra protection. Change to Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil at the sign of the Conoco Red Triangle.

We neither encourage "dry crankcase" experiments nor guarantee success under all conditions. But unsolicited letters from motorists, now in our files, tell of this and hundreds of other runs with empty crankcases but without damage.

Mr. Brickley is the only representative from New Mexico who will sit in the National Executive Council. Car Turns Over

Last Tuesday morning about 11:30 a car containing two ladies, Mrs. Lillian Bess, and Mrs. Lee Snyder who were enroute, from El Paso to their home in Tucumcari turned over twice on the highway east of town. They were traveling at a high rate of speed and were unable to make the curve. Mrs. Albert Snow and others went to their aid. Both of the ladies were badly hurt and Myer Barnett took them to the Johnson hospital where their injuries were attended to. They went on to Tucumcari by train. Mrs. C. A. McCammon, of this place drove home with Mrs. Manning who was driving just ahead of Mrs. Bess in another car.

About three years ago a gentleman whose name we do not recall met with a similar accident at the same spot. He also lived in Tucumcari.
