Highway Without a Rival

Traveler in California Can Journey for Many Miles Beneath Majestic Redwood Trees That Have Flourished for Thousands of Years.

I doubt if there is any highway in the world to match the beauty of the great Redwood highway which California has built through the mountains and along the sea, up toward her Oregon frontier. For two hundred miles you travel, most of the time, beneath redwoods which have the vertical majesty of the Empire State building's columns and a towering green dignity and simplicity which no man-made building can rival. They are immense; the eye takes time to adjust to their height. Sometimes the rugged trunks stretch skyward for two hundred feet without a branch; sometimes the branches almost touch the ground. And they are abundant; these are no lone trees, relics of bygone age, but whole forests of giants, with few trees but redwood saplings in their shade. The "Founders' Tree" on the Dyerville flats, 304 feet high, labeled "the world's tallest known tree," seems little taller than its neighbors.

even along the Klamath river, where the mountain walls are solid with redwood and the river is full of dead redwood snags, I could hardly bring myself to feel that the Indians, using redwood for fuel, were less than desecrators. And the national bank and "movie" house at Scotia, built as imitation Greek temples with solid redwood logs for columns, seem a cruel waste. The Scotlans, of course, had merely used the cheapest and most abundant wood of their neighborhood.

A few of the best groves, even directly beside the Redwood highway, are still in private hands, and some day may yet be sacrificed to the value of board feet of lumber. But most of these groves are state parks, saved, unless from fire, forever. You pass through the Lane grove, the Mather grove, the Williams grove, and other groves dedicated to heroes of the long fight, and finally even through the California State Federation-of-Women's Clubs and the Garden-Clubs-of-America groves, dedicated to other groups of warriors.

Such names at first seem ludicrous; they are, of course, no siller than the Mobilio bay which Sir Hubert Wilkins dedicated to a patron of his Antarctic flights or the Charles V. Bob mountains which Admiral Byrd first dedicated to a doubtful benefactor, then erased from his maps. They are close kin to Virginia, Carolina and Georgia names of our Atlantic coast. Age lends dignity to the most violent eccentricities of grateful nomenclature—when it does not simply forget them.

The big trees lead the mind back into the prehistoric past of California. The giants were giants before Columbus sighted American land; some of them were titans when Cæsar ruled Rome. For the redwood begins life violently, then takes its time. A fifty-year-old tree is as big as an eastern veteran; after its second century the redwood grows slowly, and the tree which may be twenty-five hundred years old today seems little vaster from the base than a tree a thousand years its junior.

The tall ferns, the oxalis and the little star flower, and the flesh-colored western azalea and pink rhododendron which peek out from beneath the big trees along the Klamath river cannot be much different from the ferns and forest flowers and shrubs which have been opening, to the morning dews of California from time immemorial. But beyond their own shade the big trees look out on a changed prospect. The Yurok Indians still cut redwood to make the dugout canoes by which they still travel along their peaceful river. But they are fewer than they were; and the chug-chug of white men's motorboats begins to be heard, even up-river, in fishing season.

Every year the craze for good roads sends the long white fingers of machine civilization further and further into what has remained, deep into the Twentieth century, the wild country of northern California. Sometimes I think that those groves of redwoods, dedicated to the founders and the money-raisers, as they look down on the long streams of motor cars that wind along the new Redwood highway, must feel lost and lonely. Where does a redwood fit in a world of stream-lined cars and managed currencies and international balances of trade?—Lewis Gannett, in the New York Herald Tribune.

Freak Thunder Storm Made Weird Spectacle

In the log of the British steamer Moravian, Capt. A. Simpson described a thunder storm on December 30, 1902, just within range of Cape Verde lighthouse. At 1:30 a. m. a warm puff of dust-laden wind came off the African shore. Lightning, at first distant on the northern horizon, became almost continuous, with loud thunder.

All the stars were visible; only upper clouds, no cumulus, in the sky. Captain Simpson had never before experienced a severe thunder storm without cloud. Charles Fitzhugh Talman, who describes this freak thunder storm in his Science Service feature "Why the Weather?" goes on: "For fully an hour the sky was one blaze of lightning, and wire ropes, mastsheads, yardarms, derrick ends, etc. were lighted up. All the stys seemed to have glow lamps three to four feet apart, and the mastsheads and yardarms a bright light at their extremities.

"The most remarkable part of the phenomenon was the extraordinary sound emitted throughout. It was, says the log, exactly like the noise of the sparks from the carbons of an arc lamp; or as if several thousands of cicadas had taken up their quarters in the rigging; or the crackling of burning grass or twigs.

"This noise was not local near the bridge, but the officers reported it all over the ship, even in the neighborhood of the noisy steering gear."

Doomsday

The end of the world is in sight, according to the inhabitants of Pitcairn Island, and they are making no provision for the future, says the Montreal Herald. They are not planting young coconuts this year nor storing up anything for the future. The 193 people of the island are the descendants of English sailors who mutinied on the warship Bounty in 1790 and Tahitian women. Because of their isolation in mid-Pacific, the islanders are self-supporting. Coconuts and other fruits brought to the island by the crew of the Bounty are still growing there. Some of the agricultural implements still used were made from the iron of the Bounty. Visitors are not allowed to smoke there. Neither are they permitted to drink alcohol or wear shorts.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, receives a Christmas ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Bruce tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her father is killed in an accident. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. To her dismay Barbara learns that she and her two brothers and small sister are to be separated. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake. Stephen Drake, bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of Barbara's mother, whom he had loved sixteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the children arrive and the proposal is interrupted. Stephen feels his heart warm to the small daughter of his early love, but he tells her he must send them all back. Kit is taken ill. Stephen finds himself unable to resume his lover-like feeling for Emily. The children's relatives appear, highly annoyed and vociferously disapproving. Stephen pacifies them. The youngsters become a recognized part of the household.

"You have reason to be," she decided, after an interval of thought. "Maybe we could pay you back. There'll be some money when they sell the Provincetown house."

"That's a good idea," Stephen agreed. "I'll present you with all of the bills."

"Promise?" she asked very gravely. "I promise," he gravely agreed.

A day or two later he took them shopping, leaving the office at noon with no explanations, which caused Miss Finch to wonder more than ever what had happened to Mr. Drake.

Stephen wondered, too. The children, he thought, were discovering for him qualities which he did not know that he possessed. He was suddenly interested in hats and dresses and slippers, jealously wanting to do everything for Barbara's children himself as long as they were with him. He did it for her—the Barbara he had loved.

He was a little embarrassed, at first, by the suave salesladies in the shop Natalie had recommended. But the embarrassment gradually merged into interest and pride. Gay was enchanting in the frocks which the salesladies selected.

"Sweet!" they murmured to each other, loud enough for Stephen to hear. "A real little beauty!"

Gay wore her look of a little girl who had just given her shoes to an orphan. But Stephen knew she had heard the admiring comments. She was an artful little miss but she was also a beauty. It embarrassed, and pleased him, too, when she flung her arms around his neck and cried happily.

"Oh, Uncle Stephen, aren't they perfectly sweet!"

"We can't afford much for me," Barbara said when they had selected frocks for Gay and a coat with a squirrel collar and a cap banded with soft, dark fur.

"Try them on, anyway," Stephen suggested, seeing the wistful expression in her eyes.

They changed her amazingly, he thought. He had not realized the magic of pretty clothes. In these frocks, cunningly cut and fitted, she looked older—until he saw her eyes. Then she looked like a little girl dressing up.

"We can't," she protested when Stephen would have instructed the saleslady to send the enchanting frocks.

"One or two?" He smiled at her. "One or two," she agreed, quickly returning the smile.

The saleslady displayed a short fur jacket the color of coffee with cream. "Gracious!" Barbara exclaimed. "I can't buy fur coats, Uncle Stephen!"

"Try it on," he suggested. She slipped her arms into the coat. "Will you let me buy it for a present?" Stephen asked when the saleslady had disappeared in quest of other temptations.

"I can't, Uncle Stephen," she said. "You've done so much for us. I can't let you buy presents like this."

"Barbara," Stephen said, "do you know what a godfather is? He's a second father. Now, will you let me buy you the coat?"

"But you've done so much, Uncle Stephen."

"I like doing things for you," Stephen said gently. "It gives me a great deal of pleasure."

"Then I'd let him," Gay advised. Barbara finally agreed. "Thank you," she said, when they had decided that she should wear the coat. "I guess I have a frivolous disposition. I wish—" She paused and a wistful expression crept into her eyes. She wished Bruce could see her in the fur jacket with the muff and the soft little pull-on hat.

Stephen saw the wistful expression. He thought she wished that her father might see her. Or her mother, perhaps. Stephen, of course, knew nothing at all about Bruce.

first time, the painting which hung above the fireplace in Stephen's room. "I wanted you to see me," she said, standing in the open door just before time for dinner. She wore one of the frocks they had selected that afternoon, a frock the color of a tea-rose, which fell to her ankles in graceful folds.

"You look very nice," Stephen said, feeling a strange disturbance in his heart.

And then she saw the painting; red rocks, blue sea, distant rust-colored sails, a girl with the wind blowing her skirt against her bare brown legs.

"Father did that!" she said, moving toward the fireplace.

"Yes," Stephen said. "It's Mother." She stood looking up at the painting, her lashes misted with tears. "It isn't Mother's face exactly but the rest of it is."

"Yes," Stephen said, again. "She was lovely, wasn't she?"

"Very lovely." Was it memories of the Barbara he had loved, Stephen wondered, or was it the Barbara in the tea-rose frock that caused the strange disturbance in his heart? He saw her, standing there in the firelight, as he had not seen her before. She seemed, for a moment, a woman old enough to be loved as he had loved her mother.

Emily came to see Barbara and the children. The visit was not entirely a success. She came one rainy Saturday afternoon and Henry took her directly up to the schoolroom. Stephen was there with the children. The room was in an uproar. They had been playing some sort of a noisy game. All of this, she thought, must be very upsetting to Stephen who liked quiet and order.

Stephen did not appear to be upset. "You're just in time," he said. "We're playing a very exciting game."

He had wanted Emily to see the children. He had thought that she would be friendly and gracious. She was—but with a difference. Her manner was playful and slightly condescending. She made the fatal error of calling them "Stephen's kiddies."

"I Like Doing Things for You," Stephen Said Gently.

"Will you let me play the game with you?" she asked, smiling a shade too brightly, Stephen thought. They weren't babies, these children of his. They were intelligent. Why must Emily cause that patronizing tone?

The children lost interest in the game. They were reserved and very polite. It was apparent that they did not intend to include Emily in the happy intimacy which Stephen shared. Stephen had wanted Emily to see the children at their best. They would be very appealing. Now they looked like bored little puppets whose strings weren't working well.

Barbara joined them, presently. "This is Barbara," Stephen said, thinking how pretty she looked.

"How do you do, Miss Trent," Barbara said, poised and self-possessed. "I'm father dippy. I'm afraid. I've been walking in the rain."

She wasn't a child, Emily thought, resenting Barbara's poise, resenting her glowing cheeks and the curly soft brown hair. Her manner was gracious and reserved. She was a very pretty girl.

"Conversation became increasingly difficult.

"Are you having a nice visit?" Emily asked.

"Very nice," Barbara answered. "Very nice," Gay echoed, trying to be tactful and polite.

"Chips" advanced, baring his teeth in what Jamie called "a smile." Emily drew herself into the depths of the chair. She was timid about strange dogs.

"Here, 'Chips'!" Jamie called, withering scorn in his voice. Couldn't this lady see that "Chips" was smiling and wanted to be friendly? He wished she would leave so they could go on with the game.

Emily had brought Kit a book—"The Motorboat Boys in Southern Waters." Kit thanked her politely and laid it aside. Emily felt that something was wrong. And then she noticed that "Moby Dick" lay on the table beside Kit's chair. The book she had brought was too juvenile, though the clerk in the bookshop had assured her that it was a favorite with boys of any age. She grew pink with confusion. She wished that she had not come.

She wanted to be charming to the children. All the way out she had pictured herself winning their immediate affection. But everything was wrong. She introduced subjects which she thought might interest them. They were polite but bored. Emily became increasingly nervous. Her head ached. She felt as though she were getting a cold.

That evening Barbara saw, for the first time, the painting which hung above the fireplace in Stephen's room. "I wanted you to see me," she said, standing in the open door just before time for dinner. She wore one of the frocks they had selected that afternoon, a frock the color of a tea-rose, which fell to her ankles in graceful folds.

If your elephant wants to ride on top IT'S ALL RIGHT WITH A CHEVROLET

CHEVROLET We didn't actually plan on elephants when we chose the bodies for the new Chevrolet. But we did choose bodies rigid enough, and strong enough, to support six tons of elephant, or anything else you can name. . . . Fisher bodies . . . steel bodies plus a hardwood frame . . . exactly the same type of bodies used on all 12 and 16-cylinder cars. Steel alone is not enough to make you as safe and secure as we want you to be in a Chevrolet. A steel body, welded into a solid wall of protection plus resilient hardwood reinforcing to take up stress, absorb shocks and prevent the steel from following its natural tendency to buckle under pressure makes the sturdiest body of all--the kind used on the Chevrolet, and on no other low-priced car. Remember that when you buy a car. Be sure to get all you pay for . . . the super-safety of a steel-plus-wood Fisher body.

Spots of Charm in "Bonny Scotia"

Little Lossiemouth Among Others of Interest to Traveler.

British Prime Minister MacDonald was referred to by many American newspapers, during his visit to Washington, as the "son of Lossiemouth." A bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society, tells of this little Scottish town and the country round about it.

"Lossiemouth, where the prime minister was born, and where he still spends his infrequent holidays, is a tiny fishing village in northeastern Scotland," says the bulletin. "It lies on the southern shore of Moray firth, a long arm of the North sea which reaches westward to Inverness. On clear days one can see across the firth the blue hills of Cromarty and Dornoch, while beyond them rise the faint, jagged lines of remote highlands in Sutherlandshire.

"The small industries of the town are boat building and rope making. It also serves as the port for Elgin, a clean and prosperous little town, five miles inland on the Lossie river. The ruins of Elgin cathedral are the most picturesque north of the border abbeys. It is called the 'Lanithorn of the North,' and dates from 1224.

"Morayshire, the country around Lossiemouth, is low and rolling, bordered by the white sands and blue waters of the firth. Strong winds from the North sea sweep across the wild heaths, covered with sturdy heather, coarse grass, and prickly whin. It was on such a heath that Macbeth met the three witches of Forres.

"How far is't called to Forres?" The answer today is that it is only a few miles west from Lossiemouth, where the Findhorn rushes through wild, rocky glens to pour into the firth. Here Duncan held his court, and here Shakespeare made Banquo's ghost appear before Macbeth.

"Forres is one of the most ancient towns in northern Scotland. Sweno's stone, carved with runic knots and figures of warriors, is supposed to commemorate a Norse victory of the Eleventh century. Nearby is the old witches' stone, where Forres witches were burned.

"Continuing south and west along the shore of Moray firth, past Nairn and Cawdor castle, one reaches romantic Inverness, capital of northern Scotland and watchtower of the Highlands. The city's history reaches far back into primitive times, when it served as a stronghold for Pictish kings. Columbus paid a visit to Inverness in 1493, hoping to convert Bruce, then king of the Picts.

"Built on a steep hill in the center of the town, Inverness castle commands a magnificent view from the shining waters of the North sea in the east to the mysterious, blue peaks of the Highlands in the west. Below the castle, and dividing the city, flows the quiet River Ness, spanned by four bridges and crowded with green islands.

"Inverness castle, traditional scene of the murder of Duncan, has been destroyed and rebuilt countless times. It was burned by Donald of the Isles, captured by Bruce, occupied by Mary Queen of Scots, seized by the Jacobites in 1715, and blown up by Prince Charlie in the rebellion of '45. Rebuilt once more, it serves today as courthouse and government seat for Invernesshire. In the plaza before its gates stands a statue of Flora MacDonald, maid of the Isles, who so gallantly aided the fugitive Prince Charlie, escaping to the Hebrides with a price of thirty thousand pounds upon his head.

"A single cairn of stones marks Culloden moor, near Inverness, where the prince and 5,000 hungry, ill-clad clansmen met lasting defeat at the hands of 9,000 British regulars, under the duke of Cumberland. Rough stones, carved with the names of the clans; MacLean, MacLachlan, McGillyray, mark the graves of the 1,200 Highlanders who fell. In an adjoining cornfield stands a tablet to the fifty Englishmen who were slain.

"Inverness today is the distributing center for the Highlands. It is here that the annual sheep and wool markets are held. Industries include the manufacture of tweed, brewing and distilling, lumber manufacture, granite cutting, and some shipbuilding. Climate and location have made it extremely popular for summer holidays. Shakespeare discovered that in Inverness, 'the air nimbly and sweetly recommends itself unto our gentle senses.'

"A further attraction for tourists is the 'Northern Meeting,' or Highland Gathering held in September. Athletes from all Scotland gather for games and contests. Men in kilts and tartan plaids crowd the narrow streets, and the ringing notes of the 'pibroch' echo from the castle walls."

Child-Eating Witch Terrifying reports of a reputed child-eating witch have put the Indian and native districts of Durban, South Africa, in a turmoil, says the Montreal Herald. Some stories credit her with eating their raw and others with unking baby broth, but all are firmly believed, and the police have actually made a search for the mysterious woman. It is claimed she can vanish into thin air at will. She has a mysterious power over children and she can escape from any police cell by turning into a being without substance and walking through the locked door or floating through the cell window. No one is able to find any trace of the woman or of any babies that have disappeared, but the reports persist.

Ugly, Disfiguring Pimples Covered Face Cuticura Healed

"My entire face was covered with ugly, disfiguring pimples and they were very painful. They were very hard, large and red and they gave me such pain by itching that I scratched and made them worse. For four months they were so bad I could hardly rest.

"Everyone suggested remedies but to no avail, and I became so disfigured I would not go out. Finally I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they made my face feel refreshed, and after using three cakes of Cuticura Soap and four boxes of Cuticura Ointment I was healed." EASY DISHWASHING

Three times a day—21 times a week—30 times a month, more or less, we have dirty dishes—starting us in the face to be washed. But you will find if you use the same granulated soap which you use for your cottons and linens that even pots and pans may be washed with surprising ease.

As you empty pots and pans fill them with warm water, sprinkle in granulated soap and let them soak until you have finished the dishes—little or no scouring will be needed to get them gleamingly clean.

For the dishes—scrape and pile them—this well done is half the battle. Then make hot suds in your sink or dishpan with granulated soap.

Have hot water for rinsing. A good order for washing is the glasses first, next the silver, then the dishes, and finally the pots and pans.

Wipe the dishes with clean, lintless towels, or allow them to drain dry after rinsing in hot water.

A New Old France

The rebuilding of the devastated areas of France presents several interesting contrasts. Albert, for example, was rebuilt on exactly the same old plan, including awkward street corners and houses occupying inconveniently shaped sites. Wherever the former residents have returned to their towns, with true French fidelity they have refused to pay any regard to the advice of modern town planners and reproduced as nearly as possible their pre-war surroundings. But where new industrial centers were being created, those responsible have studied the latest ideas of town makers in all parts of the world, and added thereto many touches of French thrift and originality.—Contemporary Review.

ALL FOR NOTHING

She watched the door of her new establishment open to admit her first client. Business had started! A good impression must be created upon him! Hurriedly she grasped the telephone receiver and became engaged in an animated conversation. Then, an appointment having been arranged, she replaced the receiver, and, beaming on her customer asked: "What can I do for you, sir?" A moment's pause, and then: "If you please, ma'am, I've come to connect the telephone!"—London Tit-Bits.

The shop assistant wrapped up the customer's parcel and deftly handed it to him.

"There you are, sir," he said, "and if the goods are not just to your liking we will cheerfully refund the cash."

Farmer Giles smiled. "Don't tell me such a yarn, young man," he replied.

"Eh? What?" exclaimed the assistant, momentarily taken off his guard.

"Ye might gi'e me my money back," said the farmer, "but 'tain't human nature to be cheerful about it.—London Answers.

Dependent on Neighbors?

It's embarrassing to be dependent upon a neighbor's telephone.

It is humiliating for you and inconvenient for them—especially when they have company or are resting, having meals or retiring earlier than usual.

You can have a telephone of your own for a few cents a day—to use whenever you want.

Any employee will take your order.
