Ancho Notes

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Turner left Friday for Roswell where they will make their home.

Work is going on nicely on the new house being built by Mr. J. M. Frame. The new structure is of rock.

Oleta Rucker, a six year old child, was taken to Carrizozo Monday seriously ill with pneumonia.

Mr. S. J. Pruett Sr. of Pastura was the guest of his son S. J. Pruett and family Tuesday. Mr. Pruett was enroute home from El Paso.

Mrs. C. C. Belknap is spending a few days in Capitan visiting friends.

Mrs. T. Smart of Carrizozo is taking the place of Mrs. Turner as teacher in the upper grades.

High School Notes

On Thursday Mrs. Mosier visited our assembly as a representative of the churches of Carrizozo. The churches are to send one speaker to the schools each month hereafter.

The local Home Economics Club was well represented at the district meeting held at Corona last Saturday. Not being able to think of fitting adjectives we must borrow Tommy Bangs' favorite expression and say, "Thunder turtles! we had a bang up time."

Friday night the Home Ec. room was the scene of much merriment. The Industrial Art Club entertained the Home Ec. Club at an Irish social. They gave the girls such a good time that it will be a long time before it is forgotten.

The boys are staging a horse shoe tournament. The winners of this contest will play a few contest games with members of the faculty.

Wednesday the Spanish classes gave us a few glimpses of Old Spain. Several students expressed a desire to learn Spanish immediately so they could find out what was said.

We received our Honor Roll plaque from the Hersford-Jones Company recently as a premium for the contract we gave them. The Honor Key, which will be presented to the valedictorian of the graduating class, is also here. The name of the person who receives this key will have their name engraved upon the Honor Roll.

Monday the entire high school took a vacation trip through a few of the national parks by means of moving pictures.

Pioneer Visits Roswell

One of the old time pioneers of this section of New Mexico is in this city today. He is Will Hightower, who lives up on Eagle Creek, where he is in charge of the intake for the Southern Pacific Railroad company.

There is a strange thing about this visit here of this pioneer of New Mexico. He has lived for fifty-two years upon Eagle Creek, ever since 1881, when he arrived in Roswell via Seven Rivers and across the Texas plains, and this is the first time he has visited Roswell since back in 1881.

Mr. Hightower arrived at the little frontier town of Seven Rivers back there fifty-two years ago and there heard that the famous outlaw, Billy the Kid had killed a sheriff in Lincoln County. He came on up to Roswell, where, he says, he remembers there was a store and two dwelling houses. Then he went on to Eagle Creek, planning to go to California, but the mountain life appealed so to him he remained there and there he has been for fifty-two years, not even visiting Roswell in all that time. Today he told people here he saw "some change" in Roswell since that early day back in 1881.

Mr. Hightower is here on mining business.—Roswell Record.

Mrs. Annie Henderson was appointed superintendent.

Mr. Ed. Miller is building a new home about ten miles east of Ancho.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Melton are visiting the P. M. Meltons.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Dr. M. G. Paden has recovered from a severe cold, which kept him in his room several days.

Miss Louise Shelton of Corona visited Miss Helen Strauss here from Saturday until Sunday evening.

T. A. Spencer visited Amarilla Friday, returning via Tucumcari to attend the Cattle-men's convention.

George Strauss and Henry Hoffman left on No. 4 Thursday to attend the S. P. Instruction car.

Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Peters, Mrs. Imogene Booth and Miss Belle Norton of Capitan were in town Tuesday.

A. H. Harvey is improving his service station by putting a new concrete floor from the door to the street.

In the essay contest held last week at the high school, the judges decided unanimously in favor of Ernest Prehm's essay.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Snow entertained a crowd of friends at a party last Wednesday evening. Refreshments were served.

R. E. P. Warden was in town Monday on business. Mr. Warden has his sheep located on some grazing land across the Mal Pais.

Mrs. Frank English left for Roswell Thursday morning to attend the convention of the Eastern Star Lodge.

Messrs. Brack Sloan and Geo. Jeffreys were in town Monday from their sheep ranches attending to business and visiting their families.

Be sure to attend the Program of Dancing at the Lyric theatre Wednesday evening, March 29th. Twenty people will take part. Admission only 15c and 25c.

J. C. White of El Paso, who has charge of the federal bureau of investigation filed a complaint here against James McGee and E. P. D-vine charging them with breaking the seal on a freight car packed with chocolate bars. It is claimed they took six boxes containing about 1,000 bars. The carload of chocolate was being shipped to Los Angeles, and was sidetracked when robbed of the candy.

Dr. Shipman, veterinarian of Las Cruces, who is a friend of Dr. Carl E. Freeman of this place, attended a horse-bitten-by-a-rapid coyote and is now in El Paso undergoing Pasteur treatment himself. Health officers everywhere are issuing warnings about this rapidly spreading menace. People whose children have pet dogs should be very careful.

Judge A. H. Hudspeth has returned to his home in Santa Fe after two weeks spent in the Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore. He has fully recovered and his general health is much improved from the brief rest.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist church had their social meeting at the home of Mrs. T. A. Spencer last Wednesday. The time was spent in sewing. Mesdames Allen and Cleghorn were assistant hostesses. Sandwiches and coffee were served to about 35 members and visitors.

To avoid a recurrence of the quarrel and the hero worshippers, who were now thronging in, Collin left the room and went to his bed above-stairs. He had found new light on the delays in congress. A faction hostile to the Commander in Chief was, evidently, trying to discourage him and force his resignation or create a popular demand for it. The young man had a prevision of a long and difficult struggle ahead against two enemies—a determined foe and a divided people. He went to sleep afflicted with thoughts and regrets as dark as the gloom that covered him. The next morning at daylight he was on his way to New London.

Meanwhile, a bit of curious weaving on the fabric of our history was being done in Cambridge. That morning of Collin's departure Lady Washington, in her working gilette waited for Nancy in the library. The young lady dressed in as innocently as the soft south wind coming through the open windows and embraced the good woman.

"My dear, I was worried," said Mrs. Washington. "An hour ago I heard of that robber on the west road. So I sent a fast rider to find you."

"Thanks. You are like a dear mother to me."

Mrs. Washington smiled. Her needles were working rapidly, as she said, "My child, I have never known a girl so much in need of a mother. While you are here I am going to look after you. You are a foolish child. Life is not all confectionery. You must forget your beauty and put on plain clothes, and go to work or go home. This is no place for play."

Nancy smiled. She was wont to smile at all the icy precepts. She felt a sense of relief when Mrs. Washington arose and bade her go to her tasks.

Joshua Stark, who had been one of the most skillful and trusted men in the secret service of Washington, was then in the hospital. He had received a slight wound in making his return to the army. Nancy Woodbridge had won his heart. He had told her in confidence that he was soon going to Canada—an imprudence caused wholly by her remarkable influence. That night when she went to her room she wrote this letter:

"Dear Pat: I have delivered your letter to Collin Cabot and am here with my brother. We have both enlisted. He is in the army and I am in the hospital. I am as unhappy as I can be and, dear friend, I must tell you why. I was at the beautiful dinner and dance at general headquarters to celebrate the evacuation. Collin took me to dinner and then danced with me. I would not tell you of all the sweet things that he whispered in my ear, and, when we went out to look at the stars and cool off a little after our exertions, he held me and kissed my lips and said that I was 'irresistible.' Your idol is like all the other men, my dear. I think that you should try to be as happy as he is. I wonder if any man is worthy of you. What are girls like you and me to do? Shall we become man-haters and old maids? No, we will marry, but let us not be deceived by the notion that a man can be an angel.

"My dear, does this letter give you pain? I write it because I think it better that your heart should ache a little now than be broken later.

"I am sending this to British army headquarters, in care of General Howe. It will be mailed somewhere in Canada. This is from "Your devoted friend,
"Nancy."

A few days later the rugged young Joshua Stark set out for Fort Ticodogera with Nancy's letter in one of his saddle bags. The girl had praised and flattered him for no other reason than her need of his help. He had traded horses with young Israel Sapp, who had come down from Skeneborough to the army on Collin's solicitation in the last autumn. He had ridden a tireless black gelding which he had bought from Mrs. Dowby. Stark needed a tough horse used to mountain travel. The one he owned was worn. So he gave Sapp a horse and a good sum of money for the gelding.

One day in northern Massachusetts, Stark dismounted to enter a store for food. As had been his custom, he left the horse standing in front of the store. He had always stood without hitching. The animal having come to familiar country, immediately set out on a lonely road for his old home. Stark went on foot following his tracks and hoping to overtake him. The horse had spent three years of his life in Mrs. Dowby's stable. That night, awakened by his tramping and whinnying around the house, she arose, lighted her lantern and went out-of-doors where she found the riderless animal. She took him to the stable, removed the saddle and bags, tied him in a stall and gave him food and water. In the darkness she failed to recognize the horse.

She brought the bags into the house wondering what could have happened to the absent rider. In one of the bags she found Nancy's letter. Thinking that it would give a clue to the identity of the horse's owner, she opened and read the letter which Nancy had written to her friend in Canada. She was naturally astonished by its contents, for she remembered ividly the young man to whom it related and for whom she still entertained a feeling of gratitude and obligation. She put the letter in another envelope, readdressed it and returned it to its place in the saddle-bag.

CHAPTER IX

The Army Moves and Colonel Cabot Feels the "War Tide."

On the fifth of April Collin returned to the big house in Cambridge. Maj. Gen. Charles Lee was with Washington, talking loudly as he was wont to do. A self-made military hero with a title from congress, Lee was a fustled, shabby-looking Englishman of high pretension and bad manners. He had lived for a time among the Mohawks, one of whose maidens became his wife—matter now forgotten. He was tall and scrawny, with restless eyes and a huge aquiline nose.

The resounding promises of this European cast-off, made with a thumping fist, his impassioned review of his own career in Portugal and Poland, his claim that it had won the friendship of Frederick the Great, had naturally impressed the Slim Bottles in congress. He dealt in their kind of talk. They knew that he must be a great man. They listened and crowned him with the highest honor in their gift and sent him to Washington. His rank gave him some excuse for talking loudly. He was sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

There were two people at general headquarters who distrusted this man.

Lee Was a Fustled, Shabby-Looking Englishman of High Pretension and Bad Manners.

They were Martha Washington and Collin Cabot, who had found it difficult to conceal their aversion.

While Collin was waiting for the major general to finish his oration, the Lady Washington came and beckoned to him. He followed her to the library. She had an indignant look.

"That horrid man! He ought to be catching rats or currying horses," the lady began as they sat down. "The General and I have almost quarreled about him. My lord and master smiles and says: 'Oh, he is an honest, well-meaning man and, let us hope, a good soldier. He has a fickle and violent temper but we can bear with that.' Did you find good quarters for us on the way to New York?"

"The best. The roads will be heavy and bad, but you will be comfortable at night."

"You are to ride with me and Captain Farnsworth with a troop of your cavalry to escort us. The General must head the line. We shall have a rider in the escort for that fine mare of yours. Nancy will, I hope, stay at home, whether she and her brother have gone with our baggage."

She began her knitting with a sober and determined look, adding: "She is a rich man's daughter and thoroughly spoiled. A rag doll would be of more use in the hospital. She is an idler dreaming of love and confectionery."

She gave her yarn a violent pull. "Often I have thought of that robber on the road," he said with a smile.

She looked into the young man's eyes and laughed, saying: "The robber was arrested. I reckon you know why."

"No."

"Stop. Don't lie to me," she answered with a smile. "Now go on to your work."

"Collin made his report to the Chief, who considerably said: 'You are weary with hard riding. You shall have the day for rest.' The young man found his friend Amos Farnsworth sitting in front of his lodge with his men cleaning arms. They shook hands. With the drooping look of a sick dog Amos called Collin aside.

"Alas!" he exclaimed. "I ain't a-feelin' awful healthy." His voice trembled a little.

"What's the trouble?"

"Satan has hooded me. He is in my bone an' marrow. I'm mixed in sin which my hope is in the everlastin' arm."

Amos was always frank as to his spiritual condition, but curiously he would never quite admit his physical ill. To say that he was not feeling 'awful healthy' was going far for him.

Collin smiled, saying: "In this case I think that medicine would be better than prayer. I'll send you the address of a good physician."

The guns were hauled to the ships. Tents and stores were packed and loaded on heavy wagons. Guns and bayonets were polished. The bugles sounded and the army began its march. Ahead, the hills shone with its weapons glistening in the sunlight. Everywhere in the line the splash of mud, the splash of black water, the shouts of wagoners, the sound of iron tires slamming over rocks! It was a slow, toilsome journey with many halts. The roads, rough at best, thawed by rain, were here and there a mire of mud. Riding a coach became a contest of endurance. Conversation was limited to exclamations. As the day wore on the young man discovered in the good woman of Virginia an unsuspected capacity for self-expression. He wrote to a friend that her opinion of New England was distinctly unfavorable.

One incident of the journey throws a light on the human quality of the Commander in Chief. He was a splendid figure sitting on his white charger at the head of the troops. As they were passing through a large town with hands playing in the line and the crowd cheering on either side of the way, he saw a little girl run out in front of his horse and march along with a small banner trailing from her shoulder. The child amused him and he ordered a halt, while a man, obeying his request, put her on the saddle in front of the General. She rode with him to the tavern where the staff had their dinner and the men broke ranks for rest and refreshment. A trooper rode back with the child to find her parents.

The army arrived in New York on the fourteenth of April. Much of the baggage and all sick and footsore men had been shipped by boat from points along the shore road. The force had been weakened by detachments sent to Canada. The stores were low and there was great need of tents and clothing. Two thousand of the men in line were without arms.

The first act of General Washington was a requisition on New York, Connecticut and New Jersey for thirteen thousand five hundred militia. They came pouring in by the thousand—strong, patriotic men of little training and no experience in the bloody give and take of battle.

Strong detachments under Generals Putnam and Sullivan were posted on a fortified line in Brooklyn from East river to Gowanus cove behind a range of wooded hills. A line of defense was established from New Rochelle to East Westchester. In these positions the training of raw recruits began.

A little above its business section York Island was then a place of fruitful fields and gardens with many white houses on either side of the rough road going north. Collin notes in his diary that he entered a billiard room one evening and saw two colonels playing in their socks, one of whom was often saying "d—n my eyes!" The incoming host had given to the thriving island town an atmosphere of wild rusticity.

Colonel Cabot's regiment was encamped near "The Tea Water Pump" above the City hall. Put to the task of securing lead, they overturned the statue of King George III on the Battery, in which they found a large quantity of the desired metal. They took more from the roofs of many profane friends of the king. New York being a hotbed of loyalism. Shouting officers were in every open space busy with the training. There was little time for this task. Collin was engaged with squads of militia when he was summoned to report to General Washington for special duty. There had been secret advice of a loyalist plot to kidnap the Commander in Chief.

For a time the sturdy young man was put to work at general headquarters, then at 180 Pearl street. A strong guard of picked men was soon on duty in and around the place. Captain Farnsworth and some of his best troopers surrounded the Chief when he traveled.

Such, briefly, was the posture of things on and around York Island before the British arrived.

The day after Collin began his work at headquarters many of the best people on the island came to drink tea with General and Mrs. Washington. At this function the young man met a crowd of ladies and gentlemen whose names he could not remember. The next day he received a polite letter from the Baroness de Riedesel—mother of a general in the British army—who lived in the fashionable section of Pearl street, inviting him to supper at eight o'clock on a neat date. He showed this to the Commander in Chief, who said:

"I wonder a little at this. Her son is an officer in the British army. She is a leader of the loyalist women in this 'Troyized' city. She is rich, respected and influential. She has eaten the king's salt. I think that I would accept the invitation. They know that you are close to me and what their purpose may be we can only imagine. She may have something to say that will interest us."

The night of the supper Mrs. Washington missed the young man, who was wont to go to their room at eight o'clock for beer, cheese, toasted bread and cold meat.

The General told his wife of the invitation.

"Good land!" she exclaimed. "I hope that you advised him not to go."

"No. I advised him to go."

"Oh, you men! Mark my word, it's a plot of some kind."

The great man was only amused by the suspicion of his wife, who was often warning him of imagined dangers.

"I happen to know that the baroness is a sister of Mrs. Woodbridge," said Lady Washington.

"It is a creditable circumstance."

"And I think that I can see the cunning hand of Nancy in all this," said

Mrs. Washington as she left the room. At that house Collin in his best uniform had almost rung the bell at the front door of the Riedesel mansion, and been admitted by the smart English butler in livery.

The Baroness de Riedesel—a handsome woman about fifty years of age, richly gowned, sat waiting for him in a parlor. She received the young man graciously, saying:

"You are kind to come to our little supper party. There will be three of us and one whom I think you will be surprised and pleased to meet again."

"You are generous," said Collin with a smile. "You honor me with an invitation to your home and you add to it the delight of a mystery."

"Forgive me if I hold you in suspense a moment. I am sure that it is one whom you will be glad to see."

A vision of Pat came to him. Had she somehow got to New York?

"My curiosity is so plucked that more delay would be cruel," he said.

"What a blessing is youth!" the baroness exclaimed as she drew a velvet portiere behind which Nancy Woodbridge had been concealed.

"Beauty is the greatest blessing of youth," Collin answered as he looked at her.

Nancy stood smiling, in a gown of blue silk cunningly fashioned to display her charms. A heavy chain of old wrought gold hung upon her neck. There was enchantment in the look of her. He could not help feeling it. The gallant young colonel was in the midst of a curious comedy in which his part was made for him. At first amazed, he knew not quite what to do. Nancy tripped toward him, saying:

"You dear old thing! I do not wonder that you are paralyzed."

She came offering her red lips to him. He embraced and kissed her. Standing close against him and looking into his eyes, she put the loop of gold around his neck and laughed merrily as she bowed.

"Let me look at this wonderful chain," he said as he ungyved himself. "It is most becoming. I could almost believe that your beautiful hair was woven into it."

Lady Howe, wife of the British admiral, entered the room and Collin was presented to her.

Nancy led the young man to a remote corner of the room and whispered: "Do not mind my affectionate familiarity. She hates rebels and I have had to lie like a trooper to get her to invite you here. It was necessary. You will see why. Later I will tell you my story."

The butler announced that supper was served. The young colonel gave his arm to the hostess and sat between her and Nancy at the small table in a dining room fashioned for generous hospitality. Old Madeira was poured. The Madame Riedesel lifted her glass to Collin, saying: "I hope to see you often at my table. My niece will spend the summer with me."

"Your niece?"

"Dear child! Nancy's mother is my sister."

"I did not know it and I hasten to congratulate both of you."

He drank the toast but after that was discreet with the wine for fear of losing his mental balance.

"Nancy had not told me," said Collin. "She is never inclined to boast."

"I suppose that you have no time for trivial details when you are together," the baroness remarked. "I do not wonder that you attract each other."

The talk consisted largely of "the infinite fatieties that follow youth" and of the dissipation of the fashionable folk on York Island. No word of war or politics was spoken. The conversational steps were as cautious as those of one walking a tightrope. The ladies drank freely and chided the young man for his temperance.

"Dear boy, this wine has been lying many years in my cellar," said the baroness. "Are you a cold-water partisan?"

"Don't misjudge me because I live near the town pump," Collin answered. "Water for horses" is a saying in my regiment. The truth is, I get so much stimulation in the company of beautiful women that I have little need of wine."

"Well done!" the baroness exclaimed. "I was going to offer you milk but now I could not do it."

The ladies were in a cheerful mood when the supper ended. The butler brought tobacco and a small, slender, long-stemmed pipe for the baroness. He put down a golden snuff-box for the Lady Howe.

"You young ones may now leave us. I have not the heart to detain you," said the baroness. "Nancy will be able to find an opportunity to your liking. We old women must be content with the mild dissipation of cognac and tobacco."

The young couple arose. Collin bravely playing his part with these gallant words: "Madame, with the light of youth in your eyes and faces, you misplace yourselves."

"There was a note of mystery in all this only partly penetrated by the shrewd intelligence of the young man. He left the room with no lack of confidence in himself. He was mystified at Nancy here among the friends of the king. What was her story? They sat down together on a sofa in a remote room. He looked first at the crystal candelabra, the carved oak, the tapestry, the hangings, the illumined picture of a nude woman on the wall before them. There was nothing like this grandeur in the houses of Boston. He looked at the shapely form and beautiful head and neck and shoulders at his side. But he held Pat in his mind.

"Have you kept my little token?" she asked.

When Auto Wrecks Train, It's News!

Bay City.—Three men in a light touring car recently charged a Michigan Central freight train at a grade crossing here and tossed the caboose into the ditch, bottom side up.

Joseph Groh, forty-six years old, conductor of the train, was taken to Mercy hospital with severe bruises, and George Atherton, brakeman, was badly shaken up. They were riding in the caboose.

The motorists, George Cuddle, twenty; Clarence Meyer, twenty-two; and Leo de Wyse, seventeen; all of Bay City, escaped with scarcely a scratch, although their rampant automobile was demolished. They were on their way home from a dance.

The train was delayed more than two hours.

PET CROW HOLDS UP TRAFFIC IN TOWN

Bird With Cigarette Startles Visitors in Wisconsin.

Waupaca, Wis.—If traffic halts while a crow with a cigarette clasped in his beak struts gravely across a street here, it may startle the casual visitors, but it's only Amos en route to his favorite restaurant or candy kitchen.

Amos took up residence in Waupaca last spring, a half-grown bird, and took possession of the town. Today he is one of its best known, if not always its most respected, citizens.

Amos gets around town a lot, and the tales of his activities are many. On Fulton street, for example, a housewife reports that Amos called on her as she was raking leaves in the front yard. After studying her methods for a time, he hopped forward, and picking up the brightly colored maple leaves, he placed them in the basket one by one.

Over on Huyalton street, however, Amos is in bad odor. A woman there declares she had just hung out the washing, when Amos arrived and walking down the clothesline systematically pulled out every clothespin, letting the clothes fall to the ground.

Amos' academic interests lead him often to a schoolhouse, where he pecks on a window pane until he is welcomed in. He may then hop about the room, making a collection of bright colored pencils, or attempt to solve the problem of the cork in a bottle of red ink on Supt. G. E. Watson's desk. He likes typewriters and adding machines, too, and will study the clicking keys for minutes at a time.

Amos boards at the Midget restaurant, near the town's busiest intersection. After a meal, Amos' fellow citizens report, he hunts a cigarette butt and strolls along the sidewalk holding it in his beak.

"Traffic regulations mean nothing to Amos. Officer Will Ware regularly holds up traffic if Amos chooses to cross a street.

Woman Doffs High Heels, Walks 16 Miles in Snow

Queens, N. C.—Suffering no serious effects after a tramp of 16 miles in stocking feet through deep snow, Mrs. H. H. Hatch, of Vancouver, has arrived in this British Columbia town with her husband and party.

The party, traveling in two automobiles, were four days and nights on the road between Clinton and the 100-mile House. Unable to travel in high-heeled shoes when their cars were unable to move in the deep snow, Mrs. Hatch took them off and trudged the highway in her stocking feet. Beyond being slightly frost-bitten she is apparently no worse for her trying experience.

The party was without food for 35 hours.

Bandits Fail to Grab Money of This Victim

Sallis, Kan.—Although they repeatedly beat R. W. Hutchins, filling station manager, over the head with a blackjack as he drove to his home, two bandits failed to get his money. The bandits knew Hutchins had been taking the day's receipts home each night officers believe. Attacking him in the driveway, when he refused to surrender the money at first demand, the bandits flew when Hutchins continued to call for help, missing the money sack containing $24 in his car. Hutchins' injuries are not serious.

Drunkard Wants to Go to Jail; Accommodated

Fresno, Calif.—It was quiet in the Fresno police station. Officers dozed in their chairs.

Then came a lusty knocking on the door, a kick, and a shout: "Lemme in!"

In walked J. D. Roberts. "I'm drunk," he announced. "I wanta go to jail."

Officers accommodated him.

When CHILDREN

—don't gain weight
—don't grow strong
—don't keep well

The stomach is not to blame when a child is finicky about food. Nor is every sluggish girl or boy constipated. Instead of a lot of medicine, give a little pure syrup of figs. You'll see a change in twenty-four hours! In a couple of weeks, your youngster will have the appetite of a young animal!

It's true, mothers, for It's Nature. California syrup of figs is bottled health for the little ones.

Pale, sickly children whose tongues are always coated, and who are never really hungry, are suffering from stasis. That means a sluggish colon; a colon clogged with waste. They need the "California treatment." You can give this treatment yourself, any time, anywhere. It's simple. Every druggist has California syrup of figs all bottled, with full directions for a babe of two-years or child in his teens. Its delicious taste makes it delightful to use; no child ever tired of it.

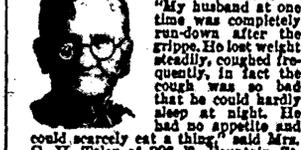

Start tonight, giving enough to cleanse the colon of every bit of poisonous waste. Then a spoonful or so, every other day, until the child's appetite, color, weight, and general health tell you all sluggishness or constipation has been conquered.

When a cold or severe sickness has sapped a child's strength and stamina, remember California syrup of figs.

If you want to get real results, get the real California syrup of figs. Do not accept any bottle which does not say CALIFORNIA Syrup of Figs.

Not in Nature's Scheme
People who are eternally bent on "being happy", at all costs are the foolishest.

Cough... Rindown

Public, Colo.—"My husband at one time was completely run-down after the grippe. He lost weight steadily, coughed frequently, in fact the cough was so bad that he could hardly sleep at night. He had no appetite and could scarcely eat a thing," said Mrs. G. H. Fisher of 222 E. Front St. "A friend recommended Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It wasn't a month until the cough disappeared and he felt like eating. He gained weight and strength, and seemed to be as good as ever." Sold by druggists every where.

Write to Dr. Pierce's Clinic, Buffalo, N. Y. for free medical advice.

MAKES WOMEN LOSE FAT

Mrs. Eva M. Haines of Dayton, Ohio writes: "I weighed 120 and started to take Kruschen. I never was so surprised as when I weighed myself the first week—I lost 7 pounds. I took Kruschen for 2nd and 3rd jar and am down to 110—am still taking them and never felt better in my life." (June 17, 1922).

—take off fat—take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water in the morning before breakfast—one bottle that lasts 4 weeks costs but a few cents—get it at any druggists in America. If this first bottle fails to convince you this is the SAFE and harmless way to lose fat—your money gladly returned.

But be sure and get Kruschen Salts—imitations are numerous and you must safeguard your health.

Lost Spud Find May Bring Growers Gold

Early Development of Peach-blow Colorado's Hope.

By C. H. Metzger, Associate Horticulturist, Colorado Agricultural College.

Colorado potato growers may increase their incomes at least $100,000 yearly within three or four years as the result of the finding and development of an almost extinct strain of potatoes known as dark red Peach-blow or Red McClure.

The lost strain that is believed to have originated 30 years ago was located on the McClure farm at Carbondale, from which it took its name. It was a sport or seedling of the Peachblow potato.

Although this potato was produced in 1908 at a farm near Carbondale, all trace of it disappeared until 1927 when the college in connection with its potato improvement program, collected 250 varieties of potatoes for comparative tests. In this collection was the dark red Peachblow. It had been obtained from a Teller county rancher.

Later the same strain of potatoes, which commands a premium of 10 to 15 cents a 100 pounds on the market because of its attractive color, was found on a farm in El Paso county and a ranch in Teller county.

Farmers' Institutes Are Crowd Bringers in Ohio

Although community funds for farmers' institutes have shrunk from $38,000 to $23,000, or 40 per cent, the total attendance or number of persons served has continued to increase, a rise of 14 per cent in the last two years, according to J. P. Schmidt, supervisor of farmers' institutes for the agricultural extension service of the Ohio State university.

Funds, he says, have decreased but requests for help are greatly increasing. Costs averaged about 8.3 cents per person attending in 1931-32, of which the state paid 2.3 cents. The total attendance was 709,393.

Institutes, which are open to any citizen in the community and which have been publicly supported since 1880, were held in all 88 Ohio counties. Wayne county, home of the Ohio agricultural experiment station, had the largest number of institutes and highest attendance in 1932, 16 institutes with a total attendance of 37,700.

Eighty-four per cent of the 89 members of the present regular farmers' institute staff, Schmidt pointed out, are farmers. The average person in this group rates as successful in some farm enterprise, college trained, or a master farmer or master homemaker.

Twenty co-operating state agencies furnish some talent at no cost or for expenses only. Among these are the state department of agriculture, the Ohio agricultural experiment station, farm organizations, state department of education, Ohio Bankers' association, state department of health, Community Marketing associations, and the Ohio Council of Churches.

Home-Made Brush Burner

A homemade brush burner, which will burn orchard prunings as fast as three men can pile them in, solves one common orchard problem for Clifford and Everett Derby of North Leominster, Mass. The burner is merely a large box, 10 feet by 6 feet by 3 feet deep, made of scrap iron, salvaged from old iron drums and sheet roofing, the pieces fastened together with stove bolts. Ventilation, which was found necessary to keep the brush burning, was provided by chopping a few holes in the sides with an ax. The box is mounted on skids and is pulled through the orchard at the end of the pruning season by a tractor or team, while men pick up the pruned branches from under the trees and pile them in the box.

Spray While You Prune

The home fruit grower can do much while he is pruning his trees toward lessening the number of injurious insects he will have to combat during the succeeding growing season, says a writer in the Rural New Yorker. The close inspection of individual trees necessary for this work makes it impractical for the commercial orchardist, but it is a time and labor saver for the home grower with a few trees and little spraying equipment. While pruning keep a sharp lookout for egg masses, larvae and cocoons. Among the many things to look for, the following may be mentioned: The gelatin-like masses of eggs of the tent-caterpillar, which are usually placed on small twigs; frothy egg-masses of the tussock-moth; the cocoons of the codling-moth which will be found under the loose bark of the tree trunk; pear psylla, minute insects which often hibernates under the rough bark on the trunks; twig-girdlers may be controlled by burning all twigs found on the ground.

The Fima (Ariz.) Waterworks Co. have been granted a $13,500 loan by the R. F. C. for improvements to waterworks system.

Issuance of scrip by clearing house associations of Arizona has been legalized as Gov. B. B. Moeur signed an enabling act sent him by the Legislature.

B. I. Staples of Coolidge, N. M., president of the United Indian Traders' Association, is definitely in the race for the appointment for assistant U. S. Indian commissioner.

Arizona has contributed large amounts of material to the upbuilding of the American merchant marine by furnishing copper, silver, lead, zinc, leather and wool, government figures indicate.

A new $17,500 school building will be erected at Fredonia in northern Coconino county, Ariz., to replace the one destroyed by fire January 25, if a proposed $10,000 bond issue is approved by voters in the district.

A supply of new application blanks for the federal seed loan has been received by the Dona Ana, Ariz., county committee, which is composed of C. F. Knight, chairman; J. C. Robbins, Jose R. Lucero and E. J. Stern.

Nine hundred and five gallons of gasoline and sixty quarts of oil were used by the various departments of the city of Globe, Ariz., during February, according to a report made by Fire Chief Walter Sutor to the City Council.

Five states have received emergency relief loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, totaling over $2,367,000, of which Arizona was granted $201,613. The Arizona loan is to carry for fourteen counties during March.

A two-year moratorium on mortgage foreclosures is in effect in Arizona. The bill passed by the Legislature and signed by the governor, authorizes Superior Court judges to extend for two years litigation resulting from foreclosure actions.

The conference between the Arizona Colorado river commission and federal government representatives on the proposed contract for delivery of water to this state from the Hoover dam project, ended without an agreement being reached.

Protests against employment of Utah workmen on Arizona road projects, financed in part by Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds, have been forwarded to state and federal authorities by the Coconino county board of supervisors and Flagstaff Chamber of Commerce.

Northcutt Ely, representing the secretary of the Interior, was in Phoenix, Ariz., recently from Washington, D. C., conferring with the Colorado River commission of Arizona on the contract for the allotment to Arizona of a certain amount of the water of the Colorado river.

Taxable valuation of Coconino county, Ariz., will be reduced approximately $900,000 upon completion of assessment roles, County Assessor Carl Dickinson estimated. Figuring on the basis of a valuation of $18,875,099 for the past fiscal year, the reduction will total 5 per cent.

After two years of almost complete inactivity, buying of oil and gas leases has been resumed in Roosevelt county, William D. Morris and J. C. Maxwell of Fort Worth, Texas, the Magnolia and Shell Oil Companies, and others, have taken about 30,000 acres of state leases at sales by the state.

Cattle, milk cows and hogs on New Mexico farms and ranches have increased in numbers while horses, mules and sheep have decreased in numbers, compared with a year ago, according to the annual livestock report, issued by bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Albert Mitchell, president of the New Mexico Cattle Growers' Association, announces that a special feature of the nineteenth-annual convention, to be held at Tucumcari March 19-21, will be an informal discussion of problems of interest to cattlemen. One-half day will be devoted to this discussion.

To meet the demands of Globe, Ariz., residents sending money abroad, who do not require the speed of the cable money order, the Western Union Telegraph Company has inaugurated a foreign mail remittance service in conjunction with the American Express Company, from Globe to European countries.

From Mesa, Ariz., report comes that the false chinch bug, the same insect that destroyed flower and vegetable gardens and made lawn sitting at night disagreeable last year, is already making its 1933 bow in the district. War against the pest should start at once if it is to be exterminated. The insect is already up and about, feeding and breeding on wild mustard and other weeds. Spraying with proper chemicals is the best method of extermination.

The annual convention of the New Mexico Cattle Growers' Association will be held at Tucumcari, N. M., March 19-21.

J. S. Ligon, game specialist for the state of New Mexico, released twenty-one prairie chickens at the headquarters of the Jornada reserve. These chickens he brought with him from the Pecos valley, and according to his opinion they should do well in the location chosen, as they are well protected. At the same time Mr. Ligon also released a number of bob-white quail.

How to train BABY'S BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to be constipated, would thrive if they received daily half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's prescription for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train tiny bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, vomiting, crying, failure to gain, and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For this, you have the word of a famous doctor. Forty-seven years of practice taught him just what babies need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep little bodies plump and healthy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and little ones. He attended over 3500 births without loss of one mother or baby.

Governmental Economy

When the Federal Government closed its books for the fiscal year 1932, the American people were shocked to learn that total revenues from income taxes—individual and corporate—did not quite cover all the costs of the Veterans' Administration services for the twelve months just ended.

"If we may assume that existing laws will not be further liberalized,"—to use the word of pension lobbyists in Washington—the grand total of all outlays for World War veterans from November 1918 to the end of 1949 will come to the magnificent figure of $35,000,000,000.

"Let us, therefore, try to visualize it in a way that will convey to our minds just how much money that really is. Picture a house costing $10,000. Very well; the sum would provide 3,500,000 of them. Spaced on fifty-foot lots, they would line a street 33,143 miles long; or, to put it another way, that much money would build eleven solid rows of houses between New York and San Francisco, without allowance for street intersections.

"The job was done chiefly by the ex-service guild, a high-powered minority group which at its maximum membership in 1927 numbered considerably less than 1 per cent of the population. What is more, this group represented a minority of the veterans themselves, for it has never included as many as 1/2 of the total Army and Navy enlistments between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918."

From The Veteran Racket, by Lawrence Sullivan, in the Atlantic Monthly.

Congress Will Stick

Members of congress have taken advantage of a breathing spell to analyze country-wide reactions to President Roosevelt's farm relief program on which they are set for action this week.

Agricultural committees of both houses have plumbed the broad prospects of the complex measure with prospects of action by Monday afternoon. Administration leaders predicted committee approval of the bill without change.

Congress is going to keep at work on the president's new deal until about May 1st.

That is the agreement between congressional leaders and the new president, who has decided he can draft the remainder of his suggestions rapidly enough for the national legislative machinery to get to work on them in 60 days.

statute books the already-enacted reorganization, the new administration will have finished its first step, which was an attempt at budget balancing.

It is not contemplated just now that new taxes will be needed. The hope is that the revenue from beer and increased receipts from existing higher taxes added to the $600,000,000 reduction in expenses through the economy bill and reorganizations will enable the government to pay as it goes.

This week the president will submit his initial employment program, which will propose authorization of a reforestation program to give work to 200,000.

The basis for railroad legislation was seen by some to be the bill introduced yesterday by Chairman Rayburn of the house interstate commerce committee.

The veterans administration has already ordered a suspension of all determinations and awards in veterans' cases, except those of emergency nature. New regulations are to be issued concerning these as soon as the bill becomes law.

School Notes

"Vocational Training"

"Vocational education, home economics and industrial arts, for a large proportion of our children, represent the most valuable activity and materials of learning that the schools have yet devised. If we believe, as the traditional school does, that it is important through our college preparatory courses to keep open the road to the professions for the comparatively small number who can profit by such training, then surely any democratic theory of education makes it equally imperative that the great mass of students who are destined to occupations involving the use of the hands should have equal opportunity for preparation for their vocations. There are a wealth of studies showing a close connection between the lack of a trade and a career of crime. Can we safely take the chance involved in dumping these children into the scrap heap?"

Business Handicaps

Merchants and business men are adapting themselves to new conditions and trying to reach a common level of deflation. Staples are close to that point now. There has been no similar deflation in debts. If this could be accomplished, recovery would be hastened. Political uncertainty also delays recovery; people fear new forms of legislation and taxation that may be enacted. Forty-eight state legislatures and a federal Congress that have piled up public expense out of all proportion to the ability of business and the individual to pay the tax cost from earnings.

Chevrolet Gains More Confidence

A surprising public response to the first showing of new "Standard Six" models last Saturday was disclosed in Detroit by wires from dealers received by H. J. Klingler, vice-president and general sales manager of the company.

Despite the existence of a national bank holiday, dealers almost uniformly reported attendance beyond expectations and all reported retail sales in limited volume, many deals involving payment in gold or bills of the old large size denomination.

More than four hundred unsolicited wires came from dealers everywhere, and the tenor of all, Mr. Klingler said, revealed the field long confident of a spurt in sales as soon as banks reopened and appreciation of the company's decision to go ahead with its announcement despite the unsettled financial condition.

The dealer at Cleveland, Oklahoma, wired that the "Standard Six" introduction created the only excitement here in two weeks. Constant stream of visitors flowed through showrooms first day.

One Buffalo dealer reported 6000 showroom visitors and fifteen orders; another 1500 people, 65 appraisals and five orders. One Philadelphia dealer sold three Standard and two Master models the first day; another at Richmond, Va., had 1000 visitors, made 68 demonstrations and took three orders for Standard and one for Master models.

"Dealers," said Mr. Klingler, "have their thinking straight, and their feet on the ground. Their wires show that. They did not expect big business with their banks closed. But they are going after available business, and they are planning on a sudden rush when business conditions open up."

"One gratifying phase of their wires was the large number who liked our going ahead with our announcement despite the bank holidays. The more, they pointed out, helped put confidence in their own organizations and their own customers. Confidence begets confidence, and it is our hope that the announcement may aid in a crystallization of forward national thought and action."

Economic Highlights

Headline news has surrounded the widespread bank holidays which spread from Michigan and Louisiana to Oregon, California, New York and other states, and finally culminated with the general holiday declared by the president. In no instances were these accompanied by any widespread public uneasiness. There has been nothing even remotely resembling panic. Holidays were declared to give time to prepare and pass legislation designed to protect deposits.

Immediately preceding the general bank holiday trade reviews reported steady improvement in the business picture. Favorable factors outnumbered the unfavorable—a very definite change from conditions of a few months ago. Bradstreet's pointed to better bank clearings, as compared with a year ago, the decline in business failures, signs of stability in the wholesale food price index, and the evident satisfaction of industry in general over action taken to repeal prohibition.

A noticeable strengthening of the public mood—shown, for example, in improved security prices—accompanied the inauguration of President Roosevelt. Further strengthening of confidence resulted from the constructive inaugural address in which the president made a flat-footed stand for sound money.

A note of hopefulness is sounded by leaders of the oil industry. Advances in prices, especially in the mid-continent field, are expected in the immediate future. A good sign is the concerted effort by the industry and state officials to keep illegal oil out of the market.

A bad sign, so far as the industry and most motorists are concerned, is that higher gas taxes—which now range from 3 to 12 cents a gallon—are contemplated in 18 states.

While the wage commission is still deadlocked in the anthracite coal industry's wage dispute, a movement has been gaining momentum among the miners to increase employment and markets through lower wages.

Since 1912 wages of hard coal miners have increased, on the average, 310 per cent. In addition, the eight hour day has replaced the ten hour day. It is widely believed that anthracite can regain its lost market only if the price is lowered—wages must then drop accordingly.

In connection with this, it is interesting to note that a division of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers forecasts that use of oil and gas for energy production will double within 20 years and that use of coal will steadily decline.

Farm prices have been steady. Changes have been small, with cotton, grain and cattle up, and eggs, butter, veal calves, hides and potatoes down.

Agricultural credit extended by the three banking systems under the supervision of the Federal Farm Loan Board, increased by over $35,000,000 last year. A late proposed plan to aid agriculture is that the government lease 50,000,000 acres of land and keep them out of production for a year.

Late reports on major industries show: Railroads—Car loadings good early in 1933.

Lumber—Leaders hopeful of slight improvement in next two months.

Steel—Immediate outlook uncertain, due to almost complete absence from market of the railroads and the indefinite future of the purchasing by the motor industry.

Tobacco—First effect of price cutting by the "big four" 15 cent cigarette makers, was shown in January figures, when rates of "roll-your-own" declined 9.2 per cent as against 3.8 per cent in

Roswell to Have Own Light Plant

Roswell.—Definite proposals for a municipal-owned electric light plant have been perfected and will be presented to the city fathers at an early meeting.

The plans have been drawn by C. C. Henderson, vice-president of the Municipal Power Development company of Minneapolis, who is here and consulted with the members of the city council in his plans.

A tentative contract is now being drawn for submission to the city providing for a complete engineering survey of the city of Roswell, costs of remodeling and construction of the city water plant, and other estimates connected with proposals for a municipal plant here for the distribution of electricity and power.

A municipal electric light plant has been under consideration by the city of Roswell for the past several months and city officials have been in correspondence with the various engineering firms and others in connection with these proposals.

City officials recently announced that they had abandoned former plans of purchasing the properties of the Southwestern Public Service company in Roswell and were now gathering information on the cost of remodeling the city water plant and enlarging the building and equipment to the point necessary to add electricity to the plant.

The plant is to be financed by the issuance of bonds, the plans calling for the retirement of the bonds from the receipts for the sale of electricity.

Roswell has long been dissatisfied with electric rates, and being unable to secure any reduction from the company owning the plant is going to build its own plant as a means of getting rates more satisfactory to the users here.—Tucson News.

Season of Daring Color Schemes

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHATEVER you do, be colorful. Evidently this is the message which fashion aims to convey for the coming months. It's like seeing things through multi-colored glasses to look at the gay spring clothes which are out on style parade. No kaleidoscope could do better than designers of this day and age are doing in this matter of producing unexpected yet withal startlingly beautiful color effects.

You get the idea first of all from the new tailored suits, so many of which combine plaids, checks or stripes with bright monotones. For instance, an ensemble is apt to be worked out with a Tartan plaid wool in green, vivid blue and orange combining with a plain blue dingoal weave. Other equally as intriguing contrasts could be recited by the hundred.

The new giddily striped and plaided taffetas, likewise scarf-printa, are working wonders in the way of contributing vital color to street clothes. If it isn't a giant-sized bow of plaid taffeta tied at the throat then, perchance, the blouse is of gay taffeta with the coat lining saying ditto or possibly all three will flaunt their colorful scheme before your eyes. Then there are the new smart tweed travel suits of the swaggar variety which take on a refreshing this-season's aspect because of their alliance with fancy checks. Sometimes it is the skirt which is of the check. Then again it is the jacket or cape which poses checks over the tweed skirt.

As to skirt and sweater schemes, they fairly hit the eye with their riot of color.

When it comes to simple daytime frocks of wearable type, most every costume is worked out in multi-color or bi-color ways. The illustration tells the story in part as to how some of the color problems are solved. At most every turn the eye is greeted with a blouse of plaid or a bow or a girle of some such. The model to the left conveys the idea. Navy with white is almost outrivalling black with white for spring. The costume centered is done in navy and white. Black with turquoise is the color combination for the model pictured to the right.

Formal modes likewise yield to the mania of color which is taking possession of the fashionable world. At Paris restaurants and night clubs a great deal of white is being worn with bright-colored velvet jackets or perhaps a white gown will have vivid red velvet straps which develop into a huge bow at the back. Patou creates an enchanting formal which involves a tri-color of pale lime green, dark olive and a touch of ripe raspberry.

Even the newest lace gowns are worked with the idea that two colors are better than one.

As to millinery, in its realm bi-color and tri-color schemes are running rampant. Not only are colors worked together in the making of the hat, but plaided and striped ribbons are among the season's smartest trimmings.

JACKET OF FELT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

It seems that Alpine playgrounds are leading inspiration for present-day fashions. You can detect in the smart about-town costume here pictured the influence of the byek little double-breasted waist-length jackets which Tyrolese men wear when mountain climbing. Then too the jaunty beret with its perky tuft of colorful felt at its top crown looks as if the original of its kind may have been worn by some gay mountaineer. In the pictureque Alps. This beret and sleeveless jacket are of pastel blue felt, worn with a taller-finished knitted frock.

Wide Shoulders

Frocks, coats and suits launched by Maggie Rouff show widened accented shoulders tapering to a slender normal waist with such broadening effects as tiny pockets at the hip line.

Hats Low in Back

Coming down are hats in the back, says Orry Kelly, Hollywood designer, who also looks for deeper crowns in the near future.

RETURN OF FRINGE AND CAPES HAILED

When fringes is "out," it is very, very much out, but when it is in, we are once more reminded of that little girl with the curl. At the moment, fringe is just different enough to set one a flutter over the idea of wearing it, particularly if it happens to be one's first fringed frock.

They do say that shawls are on their way back, and while there is no law that says shawls must be fringed, so many of them are that, when one gets to dreaming about those castles in Spain, one is bound to conjure up fringed shawls as well as fringed dresses. Yet the arrangement of the little shawl—or would you call it a cape?—could hardly be described as dashing, an adjective one usually associates with anything of Spanish inspiration. These shoulder shawls are for a Spanish woman when she is not carrying a rose in her teeth or being fascinating according to the old Spanish custom. But when she takes off that cape, she gets right back into character!

Stripes and Checks Due for Run of Popularity

It'll be pretty difficult for you to dodge the responsibility of getting checks this spring (any but rubber) and also stripes as the season goes along. While we could give you bushels of statistics covering the names of ultra-chic women, who are buying checks and stripes, we won't. In humanity's name, burden you. Let it suffice that Lucile Paray in her mid-season collection in Paris emphatically showed her approval, and that J. P. Miller in heaven is going through Virgo, which means stripes and checks will be good 'nuff! September of next year, at least.

Fabrics With Cire Finish Have Brightest Prospects

Fabrics are still dull, so that the occasional appearance of lustrous materials for spring wear attract more attention than in other seasons. Just now it is fabrics with cire finish which appear to have bright prospects for the immediate future.

The cire idea is not altogether new, of course. Cire satins were used in considerable quantity last summer for dress trimmings and little jackets and reappeared in evening gowns and formal afternoon wear last fall.

ART OF MAD LENS GRINDER WILL BE SAVED TO SCIENCE

May Be Permitted to Continue His Delicate Task in Asylum.

Chicago.—Because the law believes with science that the world should not be deprived of a genius, the state of Illinois may build a special workshop within the walls of one of its prisons, or perhaps an asylum, for John E. Mellish.

Mellish, one of four men in the world who possess the skill and the patience and the "soul" for the delicate task of grinding lenses for the most powerful and accurate telescope, is a prisoner in the Kane county jail at Geneva. For ten months he has been awaiting trial on a charge involving a fifteen-year-old girl, brought by his estranged wife, and until recently figured in one of the most peculiar arrangements ever entered into between authorities and a prisoner.

Because several renowned scientists interested themselves in his case and voiced pleas that he be permitted to continue his work, Mellish was, by court order, permitted to spend the days in his workshop adjoining his home at nearby St. Charles, and his nights behind the bars.

Broke His Parole.

Then, the other day, the man who must prosecute him and who insists that he be punished if convicted of the serious crime to which he confessed, met him face to face on the streets of Aurora and promptly had him clapped back in jail for violation of his parole, which forbade him to leave the city limits of St. Charles and Geneva.

Meanwhile, with science clamoring for the opportunity to make use of Mellish's rare ability, the law insisting that he must pay in some way for his alleged crime and alienists declaring that he is the victim of a peculiar mentality and should be sterilized, Mrs. Mellish, for reasons best known to herself, has announced that she will go to California with the little girl in the case and will refuse to testify against her husband or push her suit for divorce.

What to do with this man with a warped brain which cannot distinguish between right and wrong, but yet can go far toward helping the progress of all astronomical science, has become a serious question. Had he not violated his parole, he might have continued indefinitely to be probably the world's strangest prisoner—free by day, but locked up by night.

Satisfy Law and Science.

Now, however, the only thing to do with him to satisfy both the law and science appears to be to put him behind bars and transfer his lens-grinding and polishing apparatus along with him. It is almost a foregone conclusion that he will be found legally insane and therefore sent to Chester asylum, irrespective of the outcome of the criminal charge against him.

Whatever the outcome, it will be a tragic finale to a career which began when as a boy he was presented with a toy telescope and became interested in the stars. He quickly outgrew the toy, bought a better instrument and then, spurred by his desire for a powerful and expensive one and lacking the money with which to buy it, devoted a year to making one himself. When with it he discovered the comet which bears his name, his life as a farmer ended and the Yerkes observatory at Williams Bay, Wis., which he had nozed out of the honor of the discovery, employed him.

Eventually, because it paid highly, Mellish abandoned star-gazing except as a hobby to make lenses through which other men might study space and its worlds. He moved his family to St. Charles, installed his machinery in a shed at the side of his modest home and apparently was content.

Bogus Repair Man Nips Woman's Sewing Machine

enonah, Wis.—When a woman representing herself as an agent of a sewing machine company solicited the cleaning and repairing of the $185 electric machine of Mrs. Everett McNeil, the owner demurred at the $3.50 fee named. Later the woman returned with a man and offered to do the job for 50 cents, saying it would be necessary to take the machine to their repair shop. Mrs. McNeil is still looking for the man, woman, and for her sewing machine.

Queen of Clubs Is Lucky for Negro Theft Suspect

Birmingham, Ala.—The queen of clubs is a lucky card for Orr Sprate, colored. Sprate was arrested on a burglary charge after a detective found two decks of cards in his house corresponding to cards missing with loot in the burglary. The burglar, in his haste, dropped the queen of clubs from the deck. Sprate was acquitted when two queens of clubs were found among his two decks of cards.

Missing Baby's Bones Found in Eagle's Nest

Helsingfors.—A tiny skeleton and pieces of clothing were found in the nest of a royal eagle in the topmost branches of a fir tree when it was felled on a farm near the eastern frontier of Finland. The relics were identified as those of a two-year-old son of the farmer. The child disappeared mysteriously while playing on the farm in August, 1931.

Extras That Add Variety to Menu

Tempting Ways of Preparing Dainties Rich in Vitamins.

I wonder if you use in your meal plans many of what are known as "meat extras." Almost every one, of course, uses liver, especially since it has become so well known as a source of vitamins and of iron. Opinion has certainly turned over in a generation in regard to this meat as a constituent to a child's diet.

It used to be considered no food for children, and consequently many people never learned to like it. One point about its increased popularity is deplored by its older devotees, and that is the fact that increased demand for it has made it increase in price.

Kidneys, although they deserve at least part of the consideration given to liver, from the food value angle, have not become as popular, and they can still be obtained at a comparatively low price. If you like kidney you usually like it very much indeed, and consequently kidney en brochette and kidney stew are among the real delicacies. Just writing about them makes me want to go to the telephone to order some immediately, a household expert writes.

We find sweetbreads are more popular generally than the other meats of this type. They are, of course, more delicate in flavor and are usually among the most expensive meats. Brains, either of calves or of lambs, may be used in any recipe which calls for sweetbreads, and also sweetbreads can be used in any recipe that calls for calves' or lambs' brains. You will find any number of persons who have never tasted brains who would like them very much if they were introduced to them under the guise of sweetbreads.

Tripe, especially honeycomb tripe, has its devotees, but it is not as well known in general as some of the other "meat extras."

While calves' hearts are considered the choicest, the hearts of beef and lamb are also used. They need comparatively long cooking and should be well seasoned. Stuffed hearts are particularly popular.

It is hardly necessary to mention tongue in connection with this group of meats, because it is more generally used and more popular than any of the others. Fresh, corned, smoked and pickled tongues are all available and you can take your choice.

Tongue is usually served with some sort of a sour sauce.

SWEETBREADS IN EGG SAUCE
1 pair sweetbreads
Salt and pepper
1 1/2 cups stock
Few drops onion juice
3 egg yolks
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon minced parsley
8 cream puff shells or patties

To cook sweetbreads, wash them in cold water, cover with water to which one-half teaspoon salt and a tablespoon of lemon juice or vinegar has been added, and cook them gently for thirty minutes. When done rinse in cold water, remove membranes and cut in small pieces. Heat the stock, season with salt and pepper to taste, and add onion juice. Beat the egg yolks, add lemon juice, flour and parsley. Mix well, add stock, and cook over hot water until thickened, stirring constantly. Add cooked sweetbreads, cut in pieces and one-fourth cup of cream, heat well and serve either on toast or in patty or in cream puff shells.

Stetson School

The school yard at Stetson School has been greatly improved by our "get-together" meeting Saturday 18th. About 50 people were present. The men brought tools, wire, trees, etc. They built fence and planted cottonwood and plum trees on the school ground. At noon P. T. A. members served basket lunch with hot coffee. Everyone agreed that the meeting was a success in every way and hoped for a similar gathering in the near future. The ladies are grateful indeed, to the men and boys for their very generous help and cooperation. We say "Hats off to them."

The Livestock Situation

Los Angeles, March 1933—The recent earthquake disaster in Southern California apparently failed to affect the livestock markets or meat consumption in the Los Angeles area. While many were rendered homeless, relief agencies made large purchases of meats and to this was added donations of meat by all of the packing houses. Trading at the Los Angeles Union stock yards was not disturbed and the general price level remains fully as high as during the bank "holiday" period, or substantially better than at the close of February. Remarkable was the confidence displayed in the public market agencies and facilities by western stockmen, not only during the bank holiday period, when spot cash transactions were impossible, but also during the period of and immediately after the earthquake disaster. The stability of the open market was found perfectly sound, even when faced with such unusual and distressing circumstances. Through this splendid co-ordination of effort on the part of all hands, an orderly and sufficient flow of meat food products has been available at all times.

Trading at the open market is again back on a cash basis and transactions made during the bank holidays are being rapidly cleared up through cash payment on bank credits. Thus the confidence displayed by western stockmen is justified. The normal strict requirements as to bonding and other protection afforded by federal supervision of the market are again in force.

There is growing confidence that we have passed through the worst of the long depression. Sad as the plight of earthquake sufferers may be, it must be admitted that many workers have benefited as thousands of formerly idle men have been put to work on rebuilding damaged and ruined structures. Payrolls and costs of supplies will run into millions of dollars. All of this money will go into immediate trade channels.

Your Horoscope

If Your Birthday occurs March 13, 14, 15

You are not in the least lazy, and are always busy at something, if only reading. You do not like enforced vacation, and although you throw up your job, you at once go on the hunt for another. You have the faculty of making friends and keeping them. You do not demand much especial attention. You may not get your share, but this does not signify much to you. You wait until your share is offered you, and if it is not offered, you do not break your heart about it. You are not over enthusiastic in any direction, but in a quiet way get a fair measure of enjoyment out of everything.

March 16, 17, 18.

You are very impractical, and often find it necessary to follow the guidance of another. You are faithful to your employer, have a happy-go-lucky nature, and will bear considerable crowding of work. You are ordinarily satisfied with what comes your way, if you do not see any possible way of gaining more. You are not much given to fretting if things do not come out as you want them to.

How Much Will My Cattle Bring?

A farmer is offered a price for his steers which seems low. He telephones to another buyer and gets a better price. The telephone also saved him a trip to town.

By telephone, the rancher and farmer keeps in touch with his neighbors and customers. He is within quick reach of the fire department, doctor or veterinarian in emergencies. It's a contact with folks who want to reach him quickly. A telephone service costs but a few cents a day.

Miss Beauchamp, well known dancing teacher of Alamogordo, will give a dance recital at the Lyric theatre March 29th. Helen Huppertz and Ernest Prehm, local talent, to appear. Read the program on page 1.

We noticed in the El Paso Times that Raymond Lackland, who formerly lived here, acted as master of ceremonies at an entertainment given to members of the Times' Mickey Mouse club last Monday at the Plaza theater in El Paso.

Passage of the beer bill by Congress has already caused an increase in the price of barley, has given employment and brought orders for all sorts of supplies.

The federal stamp of approval on banks created a much needed confidence in banking institutions. Upon this stabilized structure, there is every reason to believe that we are now due for a climb back to more normal times. Most heartening of all is the fact that the agricultural situation has cleared up. Higher prices for hogs, cattle and grain will go a long way toward restoring purchasing power, not only of farmers and stockmen, but of business in general. It is reassuring to see prices on the upward trend.
