CARRIZOZO, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, MARCH 31, 1933

NUMBER 36

Executive Office Santa Fe, New Mexico A Proclamation by The Governor

Whereas, the Seventy-second Congress of the United States, at its second session, begun and held at the City of Washington on Monday, and fifth day of December, One Thousand and Nine Hundred and Thirty-two, passed a Resolution of Congress, entitled:

JOINT RESOLUTION PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, which resolution is as follows to-wit:

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment, to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE
"Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory or possession of the United States for delivery or use thereof of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"Section 3. This article shall be imperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several states, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

JNO. N. GARNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES CURTIS
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

AND,

Whereas, a certified copy of said Resolution of Congress was received by the Governor of the State of New Mexico upon February 23 1933 from the Secretary of State of the United States, with the request that the Governor of New Mexico submit said Resolution to a convention in the State of New Mexico, for such action thereon as may be had, and

Whereas, the Eleventh Legislature of the State of New Mexico passed an Act entitled:

"AN ACT TO PRESCRIBE THE DATE, MANNER, AND FORM DELEGATES TO A CONVENTION TO RATIFY OR REJECT A PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES SHALL BE CHOSEN IN THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO; PRESCRIBING THE MANNER AND FORM OF ORGANIZING AND HOLDING SUCH CONVENTION; THE METHOD OF VOTING AND MANNER OF CERTIFYING THE RESULT OF THE VOTE AT SUCH CONVENTION AND PROVIDING FOR THE COMPENSATION OF THE DELEGATES OF SUCH CONVENTION."

Whereas, said act, having been approved by the Governor of New Mexico upon March 15, 1933, being an emergency act, became effective to all intents and purposes on said March 15, 1933, and,

Whereas, under and by virtue of the provisions of said act, it now becomes the duty of the Governor of New Mexico, by public proclamation, to call a convention for the purpose of ratifying or rejecting the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as hereinbefore set forth as the "Joint Resolution Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States," and such proclamation to set forth the purpose, time and place of meeting of such convention; and the manner, time and places of choosing the delegates to such convention, and

Whereas in said act it is provided the delegates to a convention, for the purpose of adopting or rejecting the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, shall be elected at a special election to be held on the 19th day of September 1933 held for such and other purposes

NOW, THEREFORE I ARTHUR SELIGMAN GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO, do hereby proclaim and call a Convention to be held in the Senate Chamber at the Capitol at Santa Fe, New Mexico, upon November 2nd, 1933, at the hour of 12 o'clock noon on said day, there to be organized by the delegates thereto as by law provided for the organization of Presidential Electors, said Convention, on such day and at such time and place, and as organized as herein provided by law provided, shall proceed to ratify or reject said proposed constitutional amendment to the Constitution, same being as follows, to-wit:

SEVENTY SECOND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA;

Began and held at the City of Washington on Monday the fifth day of December, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two.

JOINT RESOLUTION Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several states:

ARTICLE

"Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory or possession of the United States for delivery or use thereof of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"Section 3. This article shall be imperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by Congress."

Jno. N. Garner

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Charles Curtis
Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate."

IT IS MY FURTHER PROCLAMATION, that a special election be called, held and conducted as hereinafter provided to elect delegates to the Convention hereby called to be held at Santa Fe, New Mexico, as hereinafter set forth. The manner, time and place of choosing such delegates, and the manner of calling, holding and conducting such election shall be in accordance with the law relating thereto and as follows, to-wit:

1. Within ten days after the date hereof, the Secretary of State of New Mexico shall publish this proclamation once in such newspapers as published notices of the last general election.

2. The number of delegates to said convention shall be three (3) in number, and the names of those persons; not in excess of three, pledged respectively to ratify or reject the proposed amendment who shall have first filed proper nominating petitions with the Secretary of State, as provided by law, shall be placed on the ballots as candidates for the office of delegates to said convention.

3. The ballots for such election shall be prepared in the manner and form prescribed by the laws of this state relating to such elections. Said ballots shall be distributed, cast and canvassed in the same manner and form and under the same requirements as nearly as possible as is required by the general election laws of this state.

4. Said election shall be held throughout the state upon September 19 1933, and the polls shall be opened at nine o'clock in the morning thereof and remain open until six o'clock in the evening, and after such time no ballot shall be received.

5. The three candidates receiving the greatest number of all votes cast throughout the state shall be declared elected and shall constitute the convention.

6. Certificates of election shall be issued as provided in the election laws of this state and shall contain the pre-election pledge of each delegate; Provided, however, that the County Canvassing Boards shall canvass the returns of such election within six days after September 19 1933, and thereupon certify the results thereof in the manner provided by the law relating to general elections in this state and the State Canvassing Board shall meet in the State Capitol upon the fourth Monday after September 19, 1933 and shall at that time and place canvass and declare the results of such election and issue proper certificates of election in the manner and form as provided by law.

7. Any citizen of this state, who is a qualified elector, shall be qualified to vote for delegates to said convention, and any citizen of this state qualified to hold the office of Presidential Elector shall be qualified to hold the office of delegate to said convention.

8. Registration for said election and the appointment of election officials shall be had and done as provided for in Chapter 135 of the 1933 Session Laws of New Mexico.

Done at the Executive Office this 23rd day of March, 1933 Witness my Hand and the Great Seal of the State of New Mexico.

(Seal of the State)

Wednesday's Program at the Lyric

All those who failed to witness the program of dancing at the Lyric theatre last Wednesday evening missed a rare treat. The program consisted of fifteen numbers and was brimful of interest from first to last. Twenty people took part and each feature showed excellent training and practice. Space forbids the mention of each number, but it was an all-star program and was enthusiastically applauded.

There will be a P. T. A. program and business meeting at the High School Auditorium next Friday night. Everybody welcome.

Prosperity vs. Depression

With Clear Vision, keen brain power and steady nerve, you will have more pep and vim, and would make "Bad Boy Depression," look sick. Have your eyes fitted with Baker's wonderful glasses. Dr. Fred R. Baker, West Texas Leading Optical Specialist, will be at the Elizabeth Apartments Friday P. M., only April 7th. Several years' service to people of this section; many references furnished upon request. All New Styles at Depression Prices

High School Notes

Five students of the Carrizozo High School recently submitted manuscripts in a state and national essay contest sponsored by the Gorges Memorial Institute of Washington, D. C. Only those of Junior and Senior rank were eligible to enter the contest. The subject was "The Problem of the Mosquito and Other Insect Life in Relation to Sanitation, Health and Industry." In the local contest the following students participated:

Althe Haskins, Mrs. Laura Sullivan, Ernest Prehm, John Jackson and Lawrence Hicks. Local judges were Dr. Shaver and Mrs. S. H. Nickels. Ernest Prehm was declared the winner in the local contest and his manuscript has been submitted to Washington to be entered in the state contest. The state prize essay will be entered in the national contest.

The Science Club held its last meeting on Monday. They presented a special program on sound and electricity for the benefit of the Physics class.

All clubs discontinue meetings after this week. Every student is anxious to make his credits and more studying must be done.

The girl's Physical Education class gave an exhibition in assembly this week. There were exercises, human pyramids, a human pedestal, strange marches, and songs. The audience enjoyed this immensely.

Of Interest to Golf Club Members and Everybody

The Carrizozo Golf Club has recently reconditioned and greatly improved the home links, making the greens and tees perfect so far as screened sand and oil can make them. Springtime is here; this summer-like weather makes us feel the need of a play ground and out-of-door exercise appeals to every one. It's good for everybody. Let's get out and enjoy the soft zephyrs that nature has provided. Get your membership card at the Chico apartments. M. U. Finley, Secretary Golf Club.

Free Music Recital

Friday evening, March 31st, at the High School Auditorium a vocal and instrumental recital sponsored by the music teacher of Carrizozo will be given without charge to the public. The students and their teachers are anticipating a large audience.

Dance

At White Oaks, April 8th, 1933. Music Furnished by the Lincoln County Ramblers.

The Senior Play

Reserve Wednesday evening, April 5th, so that you may witness an intensely interesting three-act comedy featured by a selected cast from the Senior class. You will find mystery, intrigue, robbery and romance delightfully blended. A performance you can't afford to miss!

Dr. T. H. Williams of Chickasha, Okla., who has been here the past week as the guest of his brother-in-law, Dr. Paden, left for Santa Rosa, Tuesday to hold a dental clinic for school children, after which he will return to his home.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Snow and children visited Ruidoso Sunday.

Since the arrival of spring people are improving their property in many ways.

Mrs. Albert Ziegler, Mrs. Deglitz, Mrs. Geo. Dingwall and Frank Lesnet motored to El Paso last Wednesday.

The Harvey Service station has new cement driveways and all the camp houses have received a brilliant new coat of paint.

Tax paying time is here and County Treasurer L. J. Adams, and his assistant, Wayne Zumwalt are kept pretty busy.

Miss Dorothy Dozier of Tucumcari visited friends here Wednesday and took in the dance program at the Lyric.

Mrs. Roy Richard has been quite ill this week and unable to be at her post of duty in the phone office.

Word was received here Saturday night that the dining room of the Navajo Lodge located at Ruidoso was completely destroyed by fire Saturday. Navajo Lodge is popular with summer visitors all over the state.

Raymond Lackland of El Paso was in town from Tuesday until Wednesday making arrangements for the P. T. A. Charity Ball to be given by the orchestra of which he is a member.

Mrs. Pulidora St. John and son-in-law, Andy Padilla drove to Los Cruces Tuesday where they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall St. John and little daughter, Eva Jane, returning home Wednesday.

Frances Charles came up from Alamo Wednesday evening to visit her mother and to attend the dance recital given by Miss Beachamp's dancing class.

M. E. Berget of Denver, Advertising manager for the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Co., was in town Tuesday.

John Harkey has made quite an improvement in his lawn, by planting trees and using a lot of malpais rock to ornament the border and flower beds. He has also extended the border about fifty feet.

An eight pound boy arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Phillips at Angus March 21st.

Mr. McQuillen and Mr. O'Neil, the Mountain States lineman from Denver, have been spending most of this week over at Lincoln and Hondo fixing up the telephone lines.

FOR SALE—Used pump engine at a low price. The Titsworth Co., Inc.

The P. T. A. will give a charity ball at Community hall tomorrow night. Music will be furnished by Harold Davies' 12-piece staff orchestra. Raymond Lackland who formerly lived here is a member of the personnel and will be glad to meet his friends on this occasion. Radio fans hear this orchestra broadcast frequently from El Paso. A two hour broadcast is planned here Saturday night.

Last Wednesday, Mrs. Doyle Reinfrow received a message from Albuquerque that her father Mr. Reufessey was dangerously ill. Mr. and Mrs. Reinfrow left at once for that point. Word was received this week that her father passed away Saturday.

"Yes, I thought that I would put your superstition to the test and see what came of it."

"Well, I hope it may convince you soon or late. Keep it and see what happens. I shall never cease to be grateful to it."

"Did it lead you to the one man?" he asked.

"To the man I love as I can love no other. When I think of him I forget father and mother and friend. She looked down at her pretty face and there was a note of sadness in her tone as she asked:

"Have you not seen Pat?"

"No. And I fear that I may never see her again."

"Too bad! War is cruel. The chances now are all in favor of Harry Gage. He is terribly good-looking."

"I agree to that."

"I am even more deeply in love than you—and I am frightfully jealous," she said as she arose and surveyed herself in a mirrored panel, lightly touching her hair.

"I cannot believe that you are really in love."

She turned upon him with a pretty indignation in her eyes, saying: "Is it not love when I am thinking of him and laying plans for his happiness day and night? My husband can be a British peer if he will. My aunt has promised her influence and she is a friend of the king."

"And you are an American!" he exclaimed.

"That would not stop my thinking of his welfare. This stupid war cannot last for ever. I hope that before you go tonight I can introduce you to him."

"Is he expected here?"

"Yes and I want you to know him. I suppose that he will be like all other men," he answered with a laugh.

"No, he is not like any other man. He stands alone. I must win him or my life has failed."

"No doubt he has taken you across the kissing bridge."

He referred to a famous bridge that crossed a creek on the Bowery much frequented by young people, for in crossing it boys and girls had long had the habit of saluting each other.

"No, but he has smacked me more than once," said Nancy with a smile. She arose and brought a beautifully bound and illustrated volume of Boccaccio and opened it as she sat close beside him.

"What a play girl you are!" he laughed. "There could be no picture like you."

"Do you prefer to look at me?" she asked, her face lighted with joy.

"I do. Still it's like looking at red wine and one may drink too freely with one's eyes."

The scene was interrupted by a rap at the door. Colin arose and opened it. The butler stood before him saying:

"A messenger is in the hall, sir, to see Colonel Cabot. He says that his business is urgent, sir."

Colin went out to the front door, where he found Colonel Tighman, an aide of the Commander in Chief, who said:

"General Washington wishes you to report immediately at his office."

The young man returned to Nancy saying: "I am summoned to headquarters. Please give my thanks and compliments to your charming aunt."

"Must you go?"

"At once. It is urgent."

"Oh, that little old woman!" the girl exclaimed, as she stamped her foot impatiently. "Does she know that I am here?"

"I am sure that no one at general headquarters knows of your being here."

She followed him to the door, saying: "Don't tell them, please. Let it be one of our secrets. You will come back to me soon. Will you not?"

"They may send me away," he answered, not wishing to commit himself.

"Then I shall try to find you." Again she offered her lips. He kissed her and they parted.

"God! Even the darkness is red!" he exclaimed in a whisper as he walked eastward. It reminded him of things he had heard in the gossip of the camp. Officers who had served in Europe had said that the primal urge was always at its worst in wartime. He had heard Samuel Langdon tell of the spring tide of lawlessness that swept through the spirit of a race at war and turned the dikes and barriers of restraint into melancholy wreckage. The brooks, the rivers and the seas no longer knew their places.

He congratulated himself on the timely interruption of the proceeding under the roof of the baroness. The spell of Nancy's weaving had been broken. He would keep away from her. A man's purpose must not be like the dew and the morning cloud. In his time it was thought that "love and war" gave one some excuse for a temperament like that of cats and dogs but this vulgar philosophy was not for him. School, church and home had been fighting it. Yet the heart of youth could never be quite secure. After all there was some truth in what Amos had said of the need of fear and trembling.

The Lady Washington sat with her knitting in a corner of the great hall in the company of two staff wives. She was looking for the young man, in whom she felt a deep, motherly interest. Her shrewd intuitions had told her that something was amiss. Familiar with all the gossip of the ladies in Cambridge, she had learned that Nancy was a niece of the baroness. She went to the young man and led him aside.

"Dear boy! I was uneasy," she said. "You know that we women have a nose for danger. I took it on myself to send for you. I am too superstitious."

"My dear second mother, you are always right and I thank you. Pardon me if I say no more."

"It is now half after ten. Go you directly to bed. Tomorrow will be a busy day."

As soon as Colin had finished his breakfast in the morning, Billy came into the office and said that Mrs. Bowly had called to see him. He found her in a parlor. They sat down together. She and her husband had come with General Schuyler by boat from Albany.

She said to him: "The ride down gave me a chance to be with my husband. But that is not my only reason for coming. I have something to tell you."

"Well, if you have something to tell me, I am sure that it will be worth hearing."

She told him of the letter signed "Nancy" which came on the riderless horse and of her reason for reading it. She had a vivid memory of its contents and quoted it almost word for word.

"I saw or thought that I could see the motive behind the letter and it worried me. I have been sorry that I did not burn it."

She had seen the frown gathering on his brow and the changing color of his face.

"So it went on," he whispered.

"Yes, it went on the next day. She may have read it by now."

"Could you get a letter into Canada for me?"

"If necessary, I will take it myself."

"When do you go north?"

"The ship sails tomorrow morning at seven."

"Good! I will give you the letter and some money tonight at eight o'clock."

In his letter he told the whole truth of his meeting with Nancy, of the dinner, the wine and the diversions that followed them in the celebration at Cambridge. He spoke of Nancy's letter and of how his knowledge of its contents had come to him through Mrs. Bowly.

"I am human," he wrote, "and the girl is a most bewitching creature. I cannot claim to be a saint. I am of the common clay, and you will have to take me on that level if at all, but I am no comrade of Anacron. Always I have thought myself unworthy of you but I swear that I love you. My soul and body are for no other in this world. As to Nancy's motive, we can only guess and your guess may be as wrong as mine. Even extreme provocation cannot make me forget the restraint with which a gentleman should speak of a lady. Let us credit her with intentions looking to your welfare. It is a world of change and perhaps your heart has changed. If not, wait for me and be sure that I am waiting for you. I love you. I have made a sacred promise and I will not lay my honor in the dust."

General Washington, out of his own pocket, had lately paid Colon his salary three months overdue. That night he put the letter in Mrs. Bowly's hand with a ten-pound note.

"I shall go with it myself," said Mrs. Bowly. "I want to see that girl. I may find her in Montreal or Quebec."

Within a week, on a May day, the woman set out from her inn for the near lake with a pack on her Amazonian shoulders. A man carried her light canoe.

CHAPTER X

The Birth of a Giant

Probably because of certain of the events above recorded, young Colonel Cabot was immediately sent to Philadelphia with messages to congress and a letter to Mrs. Adams from Mrs. Washington. There he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Adams. At a dinner in their house he spoke with rare discretion, knowledge and eloquence of the character of the Commander in Chief and the condition of the army. It was his familiarity with the spirit of the men in line which convinced Mr. Adams that the young man could render a service in Philadelphia. This leader in the congress advised the Chief by post of his purpose and detained the colonel.

Colin wrote to the Lady Washington:

"I have sat at table with the jolly Doctor Franklin and drunk out of his famous rolling punch keg that rumbles around his board. The keg is like his jokes that have stimulating punch in them. The admirable Mr. Richard Henry Lee of Virginia remarked that he was surprised to find such extravagance in the home of Poor Richard."

"Well, it is easier to recommend economy than it is to practice it," said the doctor. "Moreover it is not as important to me as it once was. A time has come when we should all praise the virtue of generosity and practice the art of letting go."

"Often I see men who are considerably but always decently drunk at these Philadelphia dinner parties.

"Of all the great men I have met I think that Franklin is the wisest. I would like to sit humbly at his feet for a year and listen. I get the feeling that he is somehow connected with the great inexhaustible source of wisdom. One evening I sat alone with him on the porch while Mrs. Lee's guests were dancing. Looking up at the stars our talk had become serious. I asked him if he believed in angels.

"Why not?" he asked. "From an elephant down to an oyster one sees a gradual diminution of faculties and powers so small in each step as to be scarcely perceptible. There is no gap but the gradation is complete. In ascending from a man to the Infinite One there must be also a long gradation of beings of whom we can have no comprehension."

"Late one afternoon Mr. Adams and I went to call on an elderly prominent citizen. We found him on his front porch with friends. He wore a white-lined purple coat with wide cuffs and gold buttons and cambric wrist ruffles. There was a great silver tankard on a table surrounded by glasses. The dear old gentleman was much engaged with the pouring. Often he would say:

"Oh, my friend, what is the top of the glass for?"

"The servants are mostly Dutch Redemptorists and Africans dressed in homespun stuff. When their terms expire the ladies have to do their own work until other servants can be engaged. In many streets there are wells in every doorway."

"The best people ride in coaches with heraldic designs emblazoned on their sides. In one of them I was taken for a drive through the near country where there are many large and beautiful houses on well tilled farms. We saw Cliveden, Stenton, Belmont mansion, Buck Hill."

"As an American, I feel a certain pride in this handsome city of thirty thousand people. It is a big city yet every man seems to know every other man and his dog. Its library, its hospital, its workhouse, its fire house and wagon tank and volunteer company are monuments to the wisdom and public spirit of Doctor Franklin and other good citizens. Christ church is an imposing structure. All the pious folk despise the Southwark theater where we went to see a performance of Romeo and Juliet by admirable local talent. It gave me melancholy thoughts of my own romance. May it have a better ending. So thinking of Pat and of you, my dear lady, who have a tender interest in our welfare, and lastly of my beloved General, I sign this hurried letter."

"With affection,
"Colin Cabot."

In a day of the debate on the resolution for independence Colin sat beside Doctor Franklin. Mr. Patrick Henry, soon to go to Virginia as its governor, was present. He was dressed in a peach-blossom coat. A black wig curled over his ears. His aquiline nose supported a pair of spectacles. He sat silent and demure. His rather square-looking head slanted very gradually to quite a prominence in the rear.

"Will you kindly tell me what is in his background?" Colin said to Franklin.

"Many kinds of failure," the doctor answered. "An idler in his youth. Loved fishing and hunting better than study. A bit wild. Worked in a country store. Married at eighteen. Failed twice in business. Tended bar for a while to earn a living. Took to the flute and violin. A hopeless bankrupt he began to study law. In practice at twenty-four he found himself. A master persuader. He can forgo and sling aphorisms that are like thunderbolts. The spirit of America is in him."

Richard Henry Lee with his Caesarian head, perfectly molded features, erect figure and courtly manners, was the most attractive man in that large group who were helping to make a new nation. He was a delight to eye and ear when he arose to speak.

Mr. Thomas Jefferson, fastidious in his dress, sat quietly reading a book, while a proxy man from the far South was making an unnecessary display of his opinions. Jefferson was a tall bony man. He had the face of a scholar and arms abnormally long with large wrists and hands. He was then thirty-three years old. There was a little sparkle of white in the wavy, reddish-brown hair that crowned his head.

Of John Adams the doctor said: "Always an honest man, sometimes a great man, but now and then his indignation mounts to madness."

"What do you think of Simcoe Betty?" Colin asked.

"His mind reminds me of a horse's belly," the good doctor answered. "Often troubled with intellectual colic. He is like the holes in that curious dyel of yours—loaded with black sand. Nothing to do here but wear out the seat of his trousers. He and others have been caught speculating on the necessities of the army."

The young man sat through much of the noisy contention that followed the resolution of Richard Henry Lee. At last he saw the spirit of America, defying the gallows and the firing squads, and lifting his voice in a courageous declaration of human rights. It was a quiet scene ending in a deep solemn silence. Yet Colin knew that the fight hand of God was shaking the world. The Colonies had broken their moorings. A new nation was born. A sense of the greatness of that moment spread through the hall. Then, suddenly, a mighty tumult of voices! The bell in the tower was ringing. Other bells were shouting the news. For more than a hundred years of peace and prayer and plenty the soul of a people had been meditating. In this deep had been the throbbing fetus of an aspiration.

These thoughts were in the mind of Colin Cabot as he witnessed the wild enthusiasm in the hall.

He came out of the hall with Mr. Adams, who said to him: "Now we are committed and the gates of hell cannot prevail against us."

Immediately Colin set out for New York to take the good news to the Chief. He rode as rapidly as his mare could carry him and was less than two days on the road.

General Washington read the report from Mr. Adams with deep interest. Solemnly but calmly he listened to Colin's account of the proceeding in congress. He said with a smile: "My boy, this news is welcome and I am much pleased that Mr. and Mrs. Adams have a good opinion of you. We have now to resolve to conquer or die relying on the goodness of our cause and the Supreme Being."

At one time and another Colin had observed a like note of faith in the talk and conduct of the General. He was always at sermon and prayers and once in an anxious time at Cambridge when Colin went to find the Commander in Chief with an important dispatch he discovered the General kneeling in prayer at his bedside. Once the young man had heard him say that if the cause was not worthy of the help of Providence it ought not to succeed.

Colin thought of the great downpour of rain in Boston which had prevented the charge of Howe's formidable force until the defenses of Washington were finished. Here was an evidence of intervention but to the young man it was not convincing.

Mr. Laugdon had taught him that the earth and its fullness was only an adjunct—a setting of the unseen, inner world whose main currents were watched by the great eye of God and directed by His mighty hand. Could it be true? Alone at night in the secret sessions of his thought he had felt a faint conviction of this in the devotion of the mistreated army. Still the posture of his mind may be described as skeptical—but open.

Mrs. Washington gave him a hearty welcome and invited him to her apartment. Like a mother she fondly embraced and kissed him saying: "Dear boy, I am proud of you. Nancy came to see me. She is very humble. I think better of her. Poor child! She made me her mother confessor. If I had been Abigail Adams, I can imagine what would have been said to her."

Here she took up her knitting and laughed as she adjusted her needles. "I am not such a strait-laced Puritan. I pitied the girl. Men and women are as they are and none of us are any too perfect. Have you had no word from Pat?"

"None."

"Well, she is very far away and I suppose it's impossible for letters to come through." The Lady went on with a sigh. "We don't know what may happen."

There was a moment of solemn silence in which it occurred to Colin that Nancy was, indeed, on a better footing with her Ladyship. She pulled her yarn and started on a new layer of stitches.

"Tell me about Mrs. Adams' parties."

He gave her a vivid account of the guests, the servants, the silver and the tablecloths and shortly went to his tasks.

He was at work in the office at headquarters until the ninth of July, when the army assembled for review and cannon were fired and Colin read the Declaration of Independence to the troops and told of the day of its birth in Philadelphia. Then a shouting and a roaring of cannon that shook the skies! More than fifteen thousand men joined in an outcry, like the breaking in of many waters, while caps flew upward and tears were streaming from their eyes. In the enthusiasm of these men and in their faces was a prophecy of things lying deep in future years.

Mrs. Washington and Nancy stood near Colin Cabot, their handkerchiefs at their eyes. The Lady came to his side and pressed his hand.

"It was well done, my boy. Poor Nancy cannot speak. She wishes me to say that hereafter no one will ever doubt that she is an American."

In a handsome uniform of buff and blue and white, a wide red sash looped over one shoulder and diagonally spanning his waistcoat, the great Captain of the army stood calm and motionless—a living statue, looking down at the troops. Like Jeremiah of old he stood as an iron pillar.

MONEY MERELY ONE FORM OF EXCHANGE

When a schoolboy swaps his gajuses and an apple for some choice marbles or butts of a cigarette he is engaging in a trade practice which goes back pretty far in history. Reuben D. Cahn says, writing in the Chicago Tribune. Direct exchange of commodities known as barter was the means by which the earliest exchanges were effected.

But barter makes difficult the division of labor; that is, that scheme of having some folks do some things and other folks other things. The bartering shoemaker who is in need of some feed for his horse must not only find the farmer who has feed, but one who also wants a pair of shoes. But it isn't that simple. The farmer with a stock of feed while in need of footwear, may have a still greater need or desire for some article other than shoes which he expects to procure in trade for his horse feed. And there is also the question of the relationship of feed to shoes: how much oats equals a pair of kicks?

Barter is a waste of time in that it introduces the necessity not only of finding an individual who has what you want and wants what you have, but one that you can strike a bargain with.

Man wasn't long out of the tree before ways were found for surmounting these difficulties. In every tribe some commodities came to be generally prized and acceptable to nearly all persons. These came to be used as the means for expressing the value of other things and for effecting trades. Those who had articles to dispose of would accept the commonly prized articles, and those who would buy knew that they could do so by offering in trade a certain amount of the article of generally recognized value. The shoemaker could sell shoes to the weaver for some of the medium of exchange and at his own convenience he could use his receipts to buy from the farmer and from others. Such was the origin of money.

A great variety of articles have served as money. When white men came to America they found the Indians using strings of wampum as a medium of exchange. These strings of beads had value and were acceptable to every Indian, because every Indian desired to be decorated. Among other hunting tribes, skins of animals were the medium of exchange.

Among pastoral peoples, cattle and sheep were generally recognized as valuable, and were used in making exchanges. In Africa, cubes of salt have been used. Tea has been employed for the purpose in parts of Asia. In Virginia, tobacco long served as the standard of value. Other commodities which have constituted money, include rice, dates, coconuts, cowry shells and many metals.

The most common misconception of money arises from a failure to recognize that money did not originate with the government. It was an article of such generally recognized worth that it would be effectively used for a medium of exchange. Its use as such developed from the customs of individuals.

Money was and is a commodity which circulates by weight, as do other commodities. It has value because of its intrinsic worth, not because of what a government may call it. The very name of coins can be traced back to units of measurement. In the case of metals, units of weight. The shekel of the Hebrews was a weight. The as of the Romans was originally an ingot of copper, supposed to weigh an as. The livre of the French, the Spanish peso, the English pound, the German mark, were all originally names of weights.

If in their later years the monetary units did not weigh as much as origin of their names suggests, the fault lies with the kings who debased the coins below their original weights.

Colin thought of the great downpour of rain in Boston which had prevented the charge of Howe's formidable force until the defenses of Washington were finished. Here was an evidence of intervention but to the young man it was not convincing.

Mr. Laugdon had taught him that the earth and its fullness was only an adjunct—a setting of the unseen, inner world whose main currents were watched by the great eye of God and directed by His mighty hand. Could it be true? Alone at night in the secret sessions of his thought he had felt a faint conviction of this in the devotion of the mistreated army. Still the posture of his mind may be described as skeptical—but open.

Mrs. Washington gave him a hearty welcome and invited him to her apartment. Like a mother she fondly embraced and kissed him saying: "Dear boy, I am proud of you. Nancy came to see me. She is very humble. I think better of her. Poor child! She made me her mother confessor. If I had been Abigail Adams, I can imagine what would have been said to her."

Here she took up her knitting and laughed as she adjusted her needles. "I am not such a strait-laced Puritan. I pitied the girl. Men and women are as they are and none of us are any too perfect. Have you had no word from Pat?"

"None."

"Well, she is very far away and I suppose it's impossible for letters to come through." The Lady went on with a sigh. "We don't know what may happen."

There was a moment of solemn silence in which it occurred to Colin that Nancy was, indeed, on a better footing with her Ladyship. She pulled her yarn and started on a new layer of stitches.

"Tell me about Mrs. Adams' parties."

He gave her a vivid account of the guests, the servants, the silver and the tablecloths and shortly went to his tasks.

He was at work in the office at headquarters until the ninth of July, when the army assembled for review and cannon were fired and Colin read the Declaration of Independence to the troops and told of the day of its birth in Philadelphia. Then a shouting and a roaring of cannon that shook the skies! More than fifteen thousand men joined in an outcry, like the breaking in of many waters, while caps flew upward and tears were streaming from their eyes. In the enthusiasm of these men and in their faces was a prophecy of things lying deep in future years.

Mrs. Washington and Nancy stood near Colin Cabot, their handkerchiefs at their eyes. The Lady came to his side and pressed his hand.

"It was well done, my boy. Poor Nancy cannot speak. She wishes me to say that hereafter no one will ever doubt that she is an American."

In a handsome uniform of buff and blue and white, a wide red sash looped over one shoulder and diagonally spanning his waistcoat, the great Captain of the army stood calm and motionless—a living statue, looking down at the troops. Like Jeremiah of old he stood as an iron pillar.

A good many people who are inclined to blame the depression for their misfortune can if they look back find many places where they fail to conserve their resources when times were better. In many instances if they had they would have funds to carry them over a year or two of hard times. This is also true. This depression will pass and will be followed by a period of even greater prosperity than that through which we have recently passed. This period of prosperity will be followed by another depression. Notwithstanding the hard lesson and bitter experience of the present depression many will forget it in the next wave of prosperity. It is perhaps a good thing that people do not remember their troubles for long though in some matters it would be to their advantage if they did.

A long time ago someone said that if a man makes a better mousetrap than anyone else the world will beat a path to his door. This may have been true in the day that it was said, but it isn't true today. The world is traveling too fast to ever find a crooked pathway to someone's door. The difference between today and the day in which this was written is that instead of the world beating the path, the producer must beat the path from his door to the world. The generally accepted means for this pathbeating business today is advertising.

The Livestock Situation

Los Angeles, March 27, 1933.—There is a distinctly better tone in the live stock markets than has been the case for many months. Prices of both hogs and cattle have strengthened, as is evidenced by the fact that steers sold during the past week up to six cents a pound, the highest price paid on the Los Angeles market since last December. Grain fed hogs sold up to $4.60 a cwt., the highest price since last October.

There is a definite feeling of optimism in the livestock market bolstered by the belief that improvement in business, industry and employment is well under way. Clearing up and stabilization of the banking situation was undoubtedly the most important factor in restoring public confidence and stimulating credits and business generally.

To my mind, it would be unfortunate if the Federal government should attempt to enact legislation to artificially boost farm and livestock prices. No matter what sort of legislation is enacted, it means the addition of more government expense, more taxes. What is really needed is a general cutting down of government effort and lower taxes. I believe that the rank and file of farmers and stockmen would be well content to be left alone, and that relief measures should be limited to reduced taxes of all kinds, and if practical, lower interest rates. We are treading a path strewn with failures when we attempt to legislate better prices. The history of price stabilization efforts on the part of the Federal Farm Board is a history of failure and outright prolonging of low prices. Nothing will be of more assistance to the producer than broader buying power which must come with improved business conditions along sound lines. There is no real hope for improvement in agricultural commodity prices until the way is paved for greater employment and broader purchasing power in the urban districts. It seems, too, that our foreign markets should be opened up as quickly as possible so that in some way we can be getting something back for all the money we have loaned abroad.

The most effective relief to farmers as well as all interests, would be a more courageous attitude towards tax reductions on the part of legislators in the states, counties and local governmental units. The national administration has shown that governmental costs can be cut and the attitude of the public generally illustrates that such action is popular.

Last week in our local column we stated that Mrs. Maude L. Blaney had been ill at her home for two weeks; we should have said two days.—New Mexico State Record.

Of course when we made that correction we knew some of the editors on the exchange list would take notice and smile, but we didn't suppose any of them would have the tenacity to smile audibly. Oh, well, we'd rather have them smile about our extreme honesty than have them consider us careless of the truth.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

THE BORDEN MYSTERY

THOUGH there have been crimes which stirred the public feeling more deeply, the mystery connected with the murder of Andrew J. Borden and his wife, wealthy residents of Fall River, Mass., contains elements of the unusual which lift it far above other similar problems and make it a fit subject for a critical examination by the most distinguished detectives of fiction—aleuths who are always far more successful than those of real life.

Andrew Borden was seventy years of age. His wife was sixty-four, and although they were afterwards found to be worth some $300,000, they lived modestly in a comparatively small house, and employed only one servant, Bridget Sullivan. This maid of all-work, and Lizzie Borden, Mr. Borden's daughter by his first wife, were the only persons in the house at the time the murders were discovered, and suspicion naturally attached itself to the stepdaughter, as Bridget had not the slightest motive for the crime.

After breakfast, on the morning of August 4, 1892, Mr. Borden left the house to attend to an errand in the neighborhood, and Mrs. Borden went upstairs to arrange the guest room in preparation for some expected visitors. Mrs. Borden, as was afterwards brought out at the trial, left the first floor at 9:30, and it was the last time that she was seen alive.

Both Lizzie and Bridget Sullivan were in the kitchen at ten o'clock when Mr. Borden returned to the house, and finding the front door—the only other entrance—locked, came in through the back way and went up to his room which communicated only with the back part of the house and could not be reached from the front. It was about fifteen minutes later that Lizzie Borden went upstairs, and a moment later, shrieked out that her father had been killed. Both the old man and his wife had been murdered, practically chopped to pieces, for there were no less than twenty-nine wounds on the two bodies, while the rooms in which they were found were spattered with blood almost to the ceiling. Investigation showed that Mrs. Borden, whose body was discovered in the guest room, had been struck down while Lizzie Borden was talking to the servant on the first floor, only a short time before; while Mr. Borden had had time only to reach his room before being felled by a blow that severed his skull.

In spite of the lack of evidence against her, Lizzie Borden was arrested and charged with the two murders—but was acquitted on the first ballot of the jury, as it was shown that it would have been impossible for her to have killed her step-mother, changed her blood-spattered clothes, returned to the first floor where she talked to Bridget Sullivan for half an hour, and then to have gone upstairs, killed her father and again change her clothes before giving the alarm, to say nothing of disposing of the weapon which she had used.

On the other hand, as the prosecution pointed out, there was no other person who possessed both the motive and the opportunity. Lizzie Borden had quarreled with her step-mother some time before. Her father's will left the major portion of his property to his wife, unless he survived her, in which case it was to go to his daughter. The front door and all the windows on the first floor had been locked. Therefore no one could enter without passing through the kitchen, where both Bridget Sullivan and Lizzie Borden were at work. Finally Lizzie Borden had discovered the crime—which at once led to the suspicion that she had committed it. But even the counsel for the state had to admit that the blood-spattered walls and the total lack of any blood stains on Miss Borden's clothing presented an insurmountable obstacle, so far as her guilt was concerned.

Her acquittal, however, not only added another classic to the mysteries of crime, but presented two questions apparently impossible of solution by any reasonable hypothesis: How had the murderer entered the house when the only available entrance was through the kitchen where the two women were working? How had he managed to commit two crimes of this nature and escape, with clothing which was certain to have been thoroughly blood-stained, without attracting the slightest notice?

National Advertising

Contributed

Most of the great national advertisers have slashed their advertising appropriations and an examination of the leading local papers have suffered the biggest cuts.

The "depression" is universal, but the reduction in what is called "the purchasing power" of consumers is greatest in the large centers. But it is in these large centers of population that the major portion of the present-day national advertising is being placed. Through the columns of metropolitan dailies and general publications and over the radio the large industries are competing with unusual vigor. Their efforts seem to be directed toward selling their products to the public in larger cities. One peculiarity of the situation is that it looks like a mass movement to "get blood out of a turnip."

There are good local newspapers printed in 6,000 to 10,000 first class communities in the country. None of these papers are thrown away at the end of a ride on the subway or an electric line; but each paper goes into a home. These are the newspapers that thoroughly cover one-half of the population and perhaps two-thirds of the territory of the United States.

If someone will tell us why the national advertisers have laid off buying a normal amount of space in these newspapers that serve the best potential consumers markets we will offer them in exchange just as consistent an explanation as their own of the mystic deeds of a magician who takes a jack rabbit out of a hat, or, as a second choice we'll tell them how to work a 600 piece jig-saw puzzle in twenty minutes.

There is nothing wrong about the advertising expenditures that are being made in the metropolitan centers. It undoubtedly pays, but if it only keeps half of these national industries running part time the way to pull up the slack would appear to be to spread the advertising efforts that are being confined principally to the cities out beyond their present narrow limits to the United States proper.

Many executives of national industries seem to be suffering from a considerable loss of memory, because their own books and trial balances will show them that their fortunes were reaped as a result of the great wealth of a great country, and they seem to forget in these bumpy times that the way to reach the part of the country we are talking about is through representative newspapers printed in representative towns and small cities, everywhere.

The witticism of the late Vice-President Marshall that "what this country needs most is a good five cent cigar" no longer applies to the present time, as that class of smokes are being sold, three for ten. But cigar sales have dropped to prewar figures. Chewing gum, cosmetics, canned and package goods, cotton, silk, rayon and wools have suffered. The automobile industry, the railroads, and banks haven't any corner in hard luck--It strikes everywhere. Still, the heads of national industries who are supposed to be wise men--and they can find out anything they don't know from their bankers--are chasing themselves around in circles in the metropolitan centers. In these centers their salesmen are so thick that the public has set up an unusual sales resistance. How about renewing friends in the broad country that spreads out beyond the city limits?

In that broad country there is lots of newspaper space to be had. Any national advertising campaign is incomplete unless it includes the leading local newspapers of the country.

Ancho Woman's Club

Crowded out last week.

Mrs. Allen Kite and Mrs. John Straley entertained the members of the Woman's Club, Saturday March 18th, with a four course luncheon. The tables were beautifully laid with green and white covers and appointments. The place cards of white with shamrocks were the handiwork of Mrs. Kite, as were the head bands worn by the members. Speeches were made between courses by the past presidents, Mesdames Wilson, S. J. Pruett and Drake. Gifts were presented to the outgoing officers by Mrs. Kite. Business meeting was called to order by Mrs. Wilson, after reading the Club Collect and the verse of the day, roll call was responded to by brief talks on character and reputation. The study hour was conducted by Mrs. Belknap on Chaco Canon. Many interesting facts of the inhabitants and their dwellings and mode of living were revealed. In the absence of the social leader, Mrs. Hightower, Mrs. Kite conducted the contests. Mrs. Belknap won first prize and Mrs. Drake the consolation. Miss Strawbridge played several numbers on the violin and Mr. Straley favored us with a jig dance. Special guests were: Miss Strawbridge, Mesdames Harry Straley and George Straley. Assisting the hostess were Mesdames T. J. Straley and George Straley.

WOMEN "STARS" ON FIELD AND TRACK

No doubt about it, the feminine side of the Olympic track and field competition added a touch to this great international spectacle that was looking until the bars were let down in Amsterdam four years ago. Seventeen countries sent women athletes to compete in track and field, swimming, fencing and gymnastics at Los Angeles, and thousands wondered before the games were finished why these modern Amazons have been classified as the weaker sex.

China, Turkey and India still cloister their womenfolk, but there was a sprinkling of entrants from European countries, and Japan, marshaled a formidable array for the feminine activities. The United States has lagged in its development of women's sports, aside from swimming, but the rise of such a superstar as Mildred Didrikson, of Dallas, Texas, promises to make up for lost time. Miss Didrikson, who prefers to be called "Babe," qualified to compete in three track and field events—the 80-meter hurdles, javelin and discus throws.

And yet there is a physical side to the women's track and field competition at Los Angeles which arouses serious doubt as to the wisdom of their participation. Olympic rules are strict, and no alternates are allowed. Thus the three girls chosen in the various events could not be expected to step aside, even though the rules of health and common sense should dictate their withdrawal. Regardless of the physical side, however, it is quite clear that women's athletics have come to stay, even though some of us would have it otherwise.—Boston Transcript.

POISON in Your bowels!

Poisons absorbed into the system from souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied constipation for over forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drugstore sell.

"DRAKE HEIR" MYTH GIVEN DEATH BLOW BY AUTHORITIES

Fraud Order Issued Against Ancient Swindle Worked From London.

Washington.—Dreams of easy fortune, cherished for years by thousands of persons throughout the United States, received a death blow here when the Post Office department after a lengthy investigation, branded the "Sir Francis Drake fortune" in England a myth and issued a fraud order against seven persons alleged to have taken more than $1,500,000 from dupes in the last ten years.

Much of this amount has been taken from victims in the Middle West where "operators" have been particularly active recently.

Worked From London.
The seven are said by investigators for the Post Office department to be agents in this country for Oscar M. Hartzell, former Iowan, who for a decade has been working the swindle from London, England, with great profit. Following representations by the United States government and an investigator by Scotland Yard, the British government has taken steps to deport Hartzell back to the United States, where he probably will be arrested as soon as he lands and prosecuted in federal courts.

Hartzell and his aides are the latest to renew what probably is the oldest and most profitable of such confidence games—that which hold out promise of obtaining and splitting up a supposedly unclaimed inheritance of Sir Francis Drake, buccannier who has been dead 337 years.

The "Drake estate" as a lever to pry money from the gullible has been used since 1700, according to an official statement from the British government.

The basis for the Drake hoax is a fortune in loot taken and supposedly buried by Sir Francis Drake, who was England's naval hero in the time of Queen Elizabeth and later a privateer, which is a polite way of saying that he was a pirate who preyed upon the Spanish gold ships from South America when he wasn't achieving legitimate fame by being the first man to circumnavigate the globe.

There is No Fortune.
The hurried loot is supposed to have been found by means of directions left in writing by Sir Francis Drake himself and to have been placed in escrow by the British government pending the finding of legal heirs of the old admiral, particularly one heir who was missing at the time Drake dropped dead on his ship in 1596.

Now for the facts in the case, established by joint investigations of the British and American governments in an effort to stamp out the hoary old confidence game once and for all.

There is not, and never has been, any undistributed Drake estate. When Sir Francis died he possessed property worth about $200,000—immense wealth in those days—located in Devonshire. It passed to his wife and his brother at that time and has remained in unbroken succession since then.

Barrel of Beer Offered Finder of Lost Pistol

St. Louis, Mo.—Lost: A A caliber Colt revolver. Reward: One barrel of real beer, when and if legalized. The advertisement is that of the president of the world's largest brewery, August A. Busch, of Anheuser-Busch, Inc.

Forty-five years ago Busch, son of a wealthy St. Louis family, purchased the pearl handled revolver and a cow boy outfit and set out for the "wild west" to become a real cowpuncher.

Six months on the lonely range with nothing but jack-rabbits and antelope at which to shoot the pistol convinced Busch he had misjudged his ambition.

Since then the revolver has been one of his most prized possessions. Some one recently removed it from a drawer of his desk. He immediately offered a "liberal reward and no questions asked."

Convicted of Stealing Cat; Gets Three Months

Plymouth, Mass.—Convicted of stealing a cat, Frank J. Nunes, thirty, former doughnut salesman, was given a three-month jail sentence here.

He appealed and District Judge Elmer Briggs released him in $500 bail. Nunes had pleaded not guilty to the charge of stealing the animal from Jack Andrews'. The courtroom was crowded, with many anti-vivisectionists among the spectators.

While Nunes admitted having had Andrews' cat, he contended it had followed him home. Judge Briggs adjudged him guilty, however, and imposed the jail sentence.

Nunes was arrested during an investigation which disclosed that 97 cats and three dogs had been "kidnaped" here recently and sold to the research department of Harvard Medical school for a total of $53.10.

Fire-Fighting Puppy Likes His Chewing, Too

Oneida, N. Y.—King, police dog pup attached to Troop D, state police, is a natural born fireman—he puts out fires and chews tobacco. The dog has become expert in extinguishing burning bits of paper and cigarette stubs by jumping on them. But he doesn't stop there; he chews the charred fragments, and seems particularly fond of the tobacco remnants.

J. Ney Miles, Miami mortician, was elected chairman of the Arizona industrial commission when members named recently by Governor Moour held their organization meeting.

The state senate has confirmed Governor Moour's appointments to the Arizona industrial commission. They are: J. Ney Miles, Miami; Howard Keener, Tucson, and Carl Holmes, Phoenix.

Elliott Roosevelt, son of the president, and his friend, Ralph Hitchcock, are en route to Tucson, Ariz., where they will be guests of Mrs. John Greenway, ranch owner. The young men said they plan to find work in Arizona.

Twenty years of efforts by Kean St. Charles, aged senator from Mohave County, to enact legislation providing old age pension, materialized when Gov. B. B. Moour signed the venerable senator's bill providing pensions for pioneer Arizonans.

Fear that the Arizona Children's Home might be forced to close its doors if funds for its operation are not obtained immediately was expressed by the executive committee of the board of directors at a meeting in Tucson.

During the month of February assistance totalling $26,576 was given 10,258 persons in Gila County, Arizona, by the Gila County RFC committee, according to a report made public by T. H. O'Brien, both state and county chairman. This was at a rate of approximately $2.60 per person.

Gov. B. B. Moour offered medical aid and nurses of Arizona to the Southern California earthquake area. In a telegram to Mayor John G. Porter, Los Angeles, the chief executive extended to the citizens of that city and surrounding territory Arizona's sympathy in "this hour of dire need."

A campaign to eradicate coyotes in Dona Ana County has been opened in Las Cruces following the recent discovery of rabies on the Mossman ranch near Mesquite. Cattlemen have expressed the fear the disease if given a chance to spread will result in serious loss of livestock and possible danger to human beings.

Freight trains operated as local freight, regardless of number of cars or class of equipment, and trains of more than forty cars must be manned by six-man crews after March 10, 1933, the Arizona corporation commission has ordered. The order was handed down in an investigation of train operating conditions in the state begun by the commission on its own initiative.

The New Mexico state legislature has passed an emergency banking act, Senate Bill 245, granting Governor Arthur Seligman the same authority over state banks that is held by President Roosevelt over national banks. The measure was introduced by special message from the governor. The bill was not read in either house and was passed under suspension of rules.

Chandler M. Wood, director of the Depositors' Protective Association of the defunct ARIZONA BANK, has announced that negotiations for the sale of the institution, with the resultant payment of 50 per cent to depositors, will be completed shortly. Passage of the mortgage moratorium bill by the eleventh legislature with an amendment excepting loans of defunct banks, made the transaction possible.

Apache County, Arizona, schools will be kept open throughout the remainder of the year under plans reached by the county commissioners at St. Johns, this week, according to word reaching Winslow. Expenses of the Apache schools will be drastically cut next year, it was said. Full details of the program are not yet completed. All schools where Indian pupils attend will be aided by government funds, it was said.

Pinon nuts grown in the Gallup area are more suitable for commercial trade because they store better, according to K. Pitschner, manager of the Pinon Nut Co. of Albuquerque, who is making a detailed survey of the supply in the southwest. In the survey he is being aided by the U. S. forest service. Nuts are found in New Mexico, Arizona, Texas, Colorado, Utah, Nevada and California, the survey has disclosed, but those in New Mexico, Colorado and Arizona are best suited to commercial use.

An Arizona wilderness has yielded what archaeologists believe was the birthplace of the Apache Indians, the last tribe of red men in the United States to be conquered. The ruins of an ancient city, larger than Pueblo Bonito, N. M., which up to now has been classified as the most populated prehistoric center, has been discovered by Dr. Byron Cummings, dean of archeology at the University of Arizona. Fearing an invasion of treasure hunters and souvenir seekers, Dr. Cummings is concealing the exact location. The city is on the present Apache reservation.

Two parties made inspection-trips to the mine of the Arizona Coal Mine, Inc. recently, to gain first hand information regarding the only commercial coal mine in the state, it was reported by the owners of the mine, Evans Brothers, and Enoch Sellburg.

Completion of twenty-two miles of oil surfacing of the new grade completed last fall will provide a paved highway between Flagstaff and Holbrook, Ariz. Work on this oiling project and on new construction through Truxton canyon near Peach Springs, has been let.

FOUND! the hidden quart ...Mechanic Elder Schaffner Found the Hidden Quart... Also that Without it, Motors Show 50% to 60% Greater Wear ...So He Switched to Conoco

THAT STAYS UP IN YOUR MOTOR AND NEVER DRAINS AWAY

* The Germ Process (exclusive Conoco patent) imparts to this motor oil that peculiar ability to penetrate and combine with metal surfaces. Of the first filling about one quart will "hide" itself up in your motor's precious working parts. This hidden quart never drains away. It becomes a part of the motor itself, worth its weight in gold.

MECHANIC SCHAFFNER REPORTS ON DISCOVERY:
"I never did believe what Conoco Germ Processed oil would do; not until an Essex owner, with 25,000 miles on his speedometer, asked me to check his motor and put in new parts where necessary. It surely surprised me; clearance of pistons was only four 1-thousandths; of bearings only three 1-thousandths of an inch."
"This owner said he had used Conoco Germ Processed oil since the car was new. I have overhauled many another Essex at 25,000 miles, which has not used this oil, and found the wear 50% to 60% greater. Now I recommend Conoco Germ Processed Oil to my friends, and have changed to it in my own car."—Elder Schaffner, Highland, Ill.

Stop Cruel Motor Wear... Escape its Painful Cost
Don't Wait Another Day to Drain and Refill With Conoco Germ Processed Motor Oil

To a motor, lack of lubrication is cruelty indeed. You are too "humane" to permit it, if only you knew the truth. But motors suffer in silence till costly damage is done. Then you pay... and pay... and pay.

This is proved. Even with the crankcase empty, due to accident, users of this oil have driven many miles, without damage, on the "hidden quart" alone.

50% of motor wear occurs in the moments following a cold start. Ordinary oil drains back into the crankcase and leaves the motor dry, till it is pumped back up again. Not so, with Conoco's hidden quart. It stays up in the motor and never drains away.

Isn't it smart and thrifty to have a "hidden quart" up in the parts of your motor, where you are sure it cannot fail? It is so simple to be safe so foolhardy to be in doubt. Tend to it today. Go now, drain and refill with the "hidden-quart oil. Do it for safety's sake.

Economic Highlights

There is a new attitude abroad in the land. This began to be seen some months ago, and came to culmination with the bank holidays and their subsequent reopening. Where the average citizen was once frankly dubious as to the future of the country, he now believes that recovery in the process of starting—that bottom actually has been reached, and that we are ready for the up-comb. Partisan politics has been forgotten. Practically unanimous support is being given the Roosevelt Administration by newspapers and individuals of all shades of political opinion.

The Administration's stand on gold hoarding is producing even better results than were anticipated. When the banks opened queues of people stood in lines at tellers' windows—not to withdraw money, but to deposit gold coin and certificates. Hundreds of millions of dollars of gold has been returned to circulation.

Under the present banking plan, no bank can issue gold or gold certificates without express permission from the Treasury Department. However, gold is coming out of hoarding so rapidly that it is even forecast this stipulation may be removed within a short time.

The President expects to have his $500,000,000 economy drive actually in operation by the end of March. Savings are to be made as follows: $280,000,000 from reduced veterans' compensations; $120,000,000 in lowered salaries; $100,000,000 through governmental reorganization.

Economy is the first step toward a balanced budget. Other aids, in the President's belief, will be about $125,000,000 in the new revenue from beer, and $150,000,000 from a renewal of the federal gasoline tax.

The number of men who will be put to work by legalized beer and the amount of taxes accruing to the government, are moot, much-debated subjects. Even taking the lowest figures, a considerable amount of employment and taxation will be provided. It was certain that if beer were overtaxed, and a price of fifteen cents or so a glass made necessary, sales would be small. Under the Administration bill, it is forecast that beer will be sold at its old price of 5 cents a glass, 15 cents a bottle, unless, of course, states and municipalities over-tax it on their own account.

A large and appreciative congregation attended the Young People's service in the Methodist church last Sunday evening. Next Sunday our Presiding Elder, the Rev. S. E. Allison, will be with us. He will preach at Capitan in the morning; at Angus in the afternoon, and in Carrizozo in the evening. The second quarterly conference will be held after the evening service in Carrizozo.

Our Easter service will be held on the Mal Pais at sunrise Easter morning, April 16. The Sunday School and Epworth League as well as the Church will participate. That will be the only service for Carrizozo that day. Plan now to attend and reserve that sunrise hour. Infants as well as adults will receive the rite of Baptism at that service. Remember the time and place—Sunrise Easter morning on the little rocky hill on the "island" as you enter the Mal Pais. A good road. You can drive to the hill in your car. A large chorus of singers will be there. Come and swell the chorus and let us commemorate the Resurrection of our Lord together.

One route goes by way of Galina and the other by Lindbergh, Gavilan and Tapicito.

Highway Dept. to Work Four Days a Week

State Highway Engineer W. R. Eccles said that the department is working on the four-day week plan for highway employes but it would be several days before a plan would be completed.

Declining gasoline receipts made the move necessary, according to the chairman of the highway commission who announced the four-day week. He said only those workers on federal aid projects would be excepted and the order would affect about 1,200 employes.

Your Horoscope

If Your Birthday Occurs March 19, 20, 21, 22, 23

You are naturally affectionate, but dictatorial and sometimes impatient with your children. Demand obedience from your children, but prefer that it come from love rather than enforced. You like good living and plenty of it. You can live on close rations, but it is from necessity rather than choice. You have much keenness of perception and some fire in your composition.

You want to enjoy yourself and have others enjoy themselves, even at your expense, financially, if you can afford it. Your mind is mathematical, shrewd, positive. You are not over poetical, but courageous and apt to accept only proven facts. What you know, you know with all your might. You are somewhat fond of show and finery. If you are an employee, you are faithful and enthusiastic, but must do everything according to your own methods. If you are a woman, you will be fond of having man admirers, but will not be strongly drawn toward marriage, unless a man wins your affections by his worthiness, then he becomes your god. If a man, you will be more strongly drawn toward marriage. You are very warm hearted but not a creature of impulse. You are generous in wanting to share your happiness with those you love.

Monday afternoon, Dr. Blaney's office was the scene of an explosion when his vulcanizer blew up. The two upper window glasses in the laboratory and the lower sash in the operating room were blown on to the side walk below. The loss was around $85.
