Enrol's Special Program

The special program given at the Enrol, theater last Wednesday evening by Ernest Prater and husband, was complete success from the first effort to hit the grand finale. Ernest was accompanied by his orchestra and supplied with musicians. A full house greeted the performance with an enthusiastic applause. Ernest presented, as usual, his own musical numbers. Every performer was well versed in special manner, and we knew what we were hearing, each having thought it about as much to the audience. The electric light was well maintained.

Beall Suggests "Budget Balancing Week"

In view of the desirability of having all old accounts of individuals and communities settled, and it is reasonably possible to do, from both a financial standpoint and an ethical one, Beall suggests the establishment next week of a "Budget Balancing Week" throughout the state and all the people who possibly can, and who have already taken advantage of the means of settling old accounts, will pay over to the county or whatever paymaster possible. June 2nd is the last chance for taxes to be paid without interest and penalties and many who do not have the money will take advantage of the day's offering of old accounts.

The session of the legislature will probably extend through the week, and send out the appropriations and other new measures at that time. Beall believes that the session will probably open on Monday or Tuesday next, and he has been informed that the measures of the session will probably be based on the new tax laws passed last year.

The weekly column of Beall's "Budget Balancing Week" will continue to be published in the newspapers of the state until the end of the session. The column will contain information on new measures and appropriations, as well as comments on the state of affairs in the legislature and the state of the state.

The column will also provide information on how to pay old accounts without interest and penalties, and how to take advantage of the special opportunity to resolve outstanding financial issues.

The Livestock Situation
J. A. McLaughlin

Los Angeles, May 31—Actual proof of the influence of buying conditions may still be difficult for the Los Angeles livestock market, but it is not difficult on the great central livestock markets, where changes are almost immediately reflected in the trade. Beef and demand are existing at work on the open market, with the result that breeders and killers are immediately affected by the conditions in the market. The cattle market in the Los Angeles market this week was higher for practically all costs at prices in the Los Angeles market this week are higher than for the same period a year ago. This is the same true of the hog and lamb market. Those who sell livestock on the great central markets are quick to gather all news of important information which assists them in buying and selling for better prices. The estate situation is characterized by a moderate improved of buying prices; any improvement in sales and prices is immediately reflected in the retail market trade. A well-managed demand for equally good carcasses which are available on the market. Most of these are quickly filled, if available, and make a good market for stock at a range.

-During the present upward swing in values, it has been nothing unusual for one or more large buyers to wait several hours after the market opens for a herd of cattle or hogs. It is an exaggeration of fact to state that advances were made and that much interest was not as for the manner in which livestock is handled on the open market. Probably this is the reason that the majority of sales are still the biggest to reflect the lowest prices and demanded improved buying power, for the reason that the virtual gold of the nation are now sold on the open market, but the most of the sales are still the biggest to reflect the lowest prices and demand for improved buying power, for the reason that the nation's gold is now sold on the open market.

-It is certain that on an "up" market, the price will be paid the producer who wants to trade and will make more money on the broader border.

-Mr. and Mrs. Horace Landrum left the market for a trip to the Agricultural Fair in Chicago and are now on their way to New York.

STORAGE

On her eighteenth birthday, Harriet Brown, the New Englander, returned home to find her parents had made a surprise for her. In addition to the usual gifts, there was a sturdy, well-built storage shed, ready for use.

"Thank you, Mom and Dad," Harriet exclaimed, "this is wonderful!"

"We knew you'd like it," her mother replied, "it's perfect for storing all those things you've been collecting." Harriet smiled, knowing her parents had thought of everything.

"Do you think they'll like it?" Harriet asked, still unsure of her parents' intentions.

"Of course," her father reassured her, "it will allow us to keep everything organized and easy to find." Harriet nodded, relieved to know she had made the right decision.

Valuable Herd In

The Silver Flute

By Edna Larrimore

The Silver Flute, a rare and valuable breed of herds, was recently donated to the local museum. It is known for its distinctive silver coat and graceful movements.

The donor, Mrs. Brown, explained, "I have been collecting these beautiful animals for many years and thought it would be fitting to share them with the public." The museum staff was thrilled with the donation and promised to care for the Silver Flutes with great attention.

People were all too eager to see the Silver Flutes, and the museum was filled with visitors. Mrs. Brown watched with pride as her beloved herd was appreciated by the crowd.

CHAPTER II

People were all too eager to see the Silver Flutes, and the museum was filled with visitors. Mrs. Brown watched with pride as her beloved herd was appreciated by the crowd.

"Father's Dream," Mrs. Brown said, "is the last of the original herd, and he has always been my favorite."

"What's his story?" a little girl asked, fascinated by the large, majestic creature.

"He was rescued from a farm when he was a young colt," Mrs. Brown explained, "and has been with us ever since."

The children were captivated by the Silver Flutes, and Mrs. Brown knew she had made the right decision in donating them to the museum.
