Skonsen Bros. asked for 36 men for the Hondo road work which began this week. Eighteen hard working men who were in real need were sent over by the committee, only 6 of whom were hired. Some worked one hour some two and were laid off; they hadn't had either supper or breakfast; this was unfair on the part of the contractors and subcontractors and a committee will investigate the matter.—G. # Canada's "Mounties" Now Sixty Years Old

Efficient Police Force Observes Its Anniversary.

Washington. — Canada's romantic and efficient police force—the Royal Canadian mounted police—is observing, this year, its sixtieth anniversary. A band of men, small in number, but strong in courage, experience, and hard training, have maintained law and order over a vast territory, reaching from the great plains north into the Yukon, and across the Arctic to Hudson bay and Baffin island.

"In 1870, when the government of Canada gained control over the unexplored lands of the great Northwest, it was confronted with the problem of protecting pioneer settlers," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society. "Warfare between powerful Indian tribes roamed the plains, discouraged the westward march of the white man. Whisky runners whose concoctions crazed the Indians also disturbed peaceful progress of intrepid pioneers. Two tin cups full of 'fire-water' bought a buffalo robe, and three gallons a good horse.

Covered Vast Territory.

"It was in answer to the need for curbing these unruly elements that the Northwest-mounted police was organized in 1873 at Stone Fort, just south of Lake Winnipeg. An official bulletin issued to the first recruits tersely stated that 'the government will make use of any person connected with the force of any work that may be considered desirable.' The government has kept this promise through the years.

"After only a year's training 300 members of the police marched over 2,000 miles of unknown territory, restoring law and order from the Red river to the Rocky mountains. Treaties were made with the Indians, horse stealers and murderers brought to swift justice, and Fort Whoop-Up, stronghold of whisky traders, raided. Winter caught the 'Mounties' before they could make a return march, so a permanent camp was set up at Macleod, oldest town in southern Alberta. Calgary, another fort which they founded that year, has grown to be one of the most important towns of western Canada.

"As the work of the force increased, it became evident that a central station was a necessity. An uninhabited strip of prairie along 'Pile o' Bones Creek' was selected and inappropriately named Regina. For over half a century Regina served as headquarters for the Northwest mounted police. It was also for years the capital of the Northwest territories and today, as the capital of Saskatchewan, is one of the most important industrial centers of middle western Canada, with a population of over 40,000.

"The Klondike gold rush of '89 brought a new emergency. Dawson grew up overnight, a stampede town with the usual number of saloons, dance halls, and gambling houses. It promised soon to rival Skagway, then controlled by 'Sonny Smith' and his gang, who robbed incoming tenderfoot and departing miners with equal success.

"A Yukon post was promptly established by the Northwest mounted police, and Dawson speedily transformed into a respectable and law-abiding town. A detachment was stationed at Skilkoot pass and White pass, two main gateways through which prospectors thronged, and the lawless soon learned to leave their revolvers behind. Month after month millions in gold were conveyed and never a dollar lost.

Served in Boer War.

"The force was 'knighted' in 1904 in recognition of its services in the Boer war, becoming the Royal Northwest mounted police. In 1920, when its jurisdiction was widened to cover enforcement of federal authority throughout the Dominion, and all laws in the Yukon, Northwest territory, and Dominion parks, the title was changed to Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

"Today the mounted police patrol Canada's last great frontier, the chain of islands stretching from Greenland to Alaska. There are posts on such isolated islands as Ellesmere, North Devon, Baffin, and Victoria. The station on Bache peninsula is within 11 degrees of the North pole. At Herschel island post was held the first court in the Arctic, when an Eskimo was sentenced for the murder of a constable.

"Although they have been given little notice in the daily news, the long winter patrols performed by these officers deserve a high rating in the record of Arctic exploration. In 1923, for instance, one inspector with a constable, one Eskimo, and two dog teams traveled 1,700 miles in 81 days, and considered it only an ordinary part of the year's work. From Devon island to Ellesmere island the inspector covered the entire northern part of the Canadian Arctic archipelago.

"There is one rule inflexibly obeyed by every 'Mountie.' Whether he is protecting the rights of the migratory duck, the Blackfoot Indian, or the Eskimo trapper, he shoots only as a last resort—the real secret of the success of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police."

Observatory Is Mecca for Many Thousands

Visitors Crowd Lick Memorial in California.

San Jose, Calif.—Although isolated on the summit of Mt. Hamilton at an altitude of 4,200 feet and accessible by driving 27 miles over a circuitous mountain highway, Lick observatory has become one of the most alluring trips for tourists in this section of California.

More than 10,000 visitors will journey to the summit of Mt. Hamilton this year to see the costly instruments through which astronomers nightly peer heavenward, seeking knowledge from the stars.

If visitors chance to climb the mountain on Saturday evenings, they are privileged to gaze through the 36-inch refractor, which magnifies the aureole of the astral bodies.

Despite its isolated location, Lick observatory has developed a model village atop the lofty mountain. Its population has grown during the past five years to fifty. There is a public school, owned by the observatory, with a teacher provided by the state. The observatory proper, which is maintained and operated by the University of California, consists of a main building, containing the telescope domes, offices, computing rooms, a library of 8,000 books and 5,000 pamphlets; detached buildings containing safe deposit rooms and photographic dark rooms, houses for the workers; instrument shops, pumping stations, and several workshops. It was completed in 1888 at a cost of $61,000.

James Lick, who donated funds for building and maintaining the widely known observatory, was born in Frederickburg, Md., August 15, 1798, and died in San Francisco, October 7, 1870. His remains are buried in the supporting pier of the 36-inch equatorial telescope, which was the largest telescope in the world at the time it was constructed.

Cook Has Fed Condemned Murderers for 14 Years

New Orleans.—Twenty-five men who partook of Steve Elliot's cooking never lived to tell the tale. They were men condemned to death at parish prison, where Elliot was cook. He served breakfast to condemned men for 14 years, and just recently was promoted to the wardenship of the attorney's room at the prison.

Elliot said good food always helped the men who were scheduled to die. "It bucked up their courage and made them walk to the gallows with firmer step," he said.

Asked about the most unusual breakfast for a condemned man, Elliot recounted the following tale:

"Um, now, let's see," he said. "Yes, there was a negro who popped a hard one on us at the last moment. We always tried to satisfy, you know, he wanted 'possum and 'possum he got. We didn't know where it was to be had, but some kind citizen sent one to us. You should have seen that negro eat!"

"He went upstairs to his death with a grin, wiped his mouth, happy that his appetite was satisfied."

Condemned men were given more consideration than other prisoners, Elliot said. "For instance, if they wanted to eat between meals they only had to say what they wanted. Sometimes it was a sandwich, flapjacks, milk or toast. Most of them liked fried chicken and ice cream for their last meal."

Elliot said his wife taught him how to cook.

Nurse Won War Honors; Now Without Homeland

Buffalo, N. Y.—Mrs. Henriette Khoury, British war nurse, who is decorated for bravery under fire, is "a woman without a country."

She has been barred from Canada after living there seven years. She is living here now, but as she has no legal standing in the United States, she is facing possible deportation.

Mrs. Khoury, who was born in Beirut, Syria, entered Canada seven years ago and became operator of a beauty shop in Toronto. Last January she visited friends in New York. She became ill, and when she finally tried to enter Canada again she was halted because she had overstayed her leave. Although she had been naturalized in Canada, it was discovered that the naturalization had been illegal.

She has tried in vain to receive permission to stay in this country and her case has been referred to the Canadian legation at Washington and the United States immigration authorities there.

Judge in Traffic Court Fines Self on Birthday

Chicago.—Under the Chicago system judges take turns sitting in the various courts, and it was Judge Eugene P. Holland's first experience in the traffic division. Immediately after Holland took charge, the clerk announced the first case as follows:

"City of Chicago vs. Eugene P. Holland."

Judge Holland sat up very straight and very suddenly.

"What's this?" he asked of the clerk. The clerk explained that the case involved a parking charge which was several days old. Holland then recalled that he actually had received a ticket.

"Well," he said, smiling, "this is my first day in traffic court. It also is my first case here. This also happens to be my birthday. So I'm going to give myself a break. I therefore fine myself $1 and $1 costs."

Points for Pastry Makers

Above All Things, One Matter of Importance Is to Be Remembered, and After That the Rest Will Be Found Comparatively Easy.

The "fine art" of pastry making is succinctly set forth in the following article, by an acknowledged expert:

The other day a woman said to me: "I just can't make pastry—I can make good cake, but I just can't make a decent pie!" "Well," I answered her, "I can guarantee to teach you to make pastry, in ten minutes, at the most." She took me up on my offer. We left the bridge table for the kitchen and within ten minutes the pastry was chilling in the refrigerator.

You know pastry really is one of the easiest things in the world to make. There is only one point which is very important, and that is not to get it too wet when you mix it. Perhaps I had better begin at the beginning, however, and tell you just exactly how I do it. I use three times as much flour as I have shortening. I prefer bread flour, myself, for pastry because it is easier to handle, but I can make it with pastry or cake flour. If I do use this kind of flour I use four times as much flour as shortening. I mix my flour and salt together in a wooden chopping-bowl, add my chilled shortening and, with a double-bladed chopping knife, I cut the fat into small pieces, at the same time, of course, mixing it into the flour. Some people can mix pastry satisfactorily with the hands, but my hands are too warm. The fat should be actually in small bits throughout the flour, not thoroughly blended into a smooth mixture. Fat need not be cut as fine for pastry as for biscuits. If you prefer to use a wooden bowl you may use two knives or a fork or a wire whisk to cut in the fat. After you have cut for a few moments shake the bowl and the larger pieces of fat will come to the top and you can tell when it is thoroughly mixed.

Now you are ready to add the water, which should be cold. In warm weather ice water is preferable. Make a hole at one side of the flour, add one tablespoon of water and with a stiff knife stir in as much of the flour mixture as the water will take up. Do the same thing two or three other places in the flour mixture and then with your hands press the balls of dough and the dry mixture left in the bowl together into a smooth ball. Put in the refrigerator to chill a few minutes. Then roll out to line your pastry pan. Pastry may be rolled on a slightly floured board or directly on a metal table top. Roll from the center each way. Roll lightly and pick up your sheet of pastry after each rolling, to prevent sticking.

When I make fruit pies I mix a tablespoon of sugar with a tablespoon of flour and sprinkle over the bottom of the lined pan. I then put in my fruit and sugar in layers, dampen the edge of the lower crust, put the other crust on top, press the crusts together and cut them evenly with a scalloped edge. If you like you may bind the edge with a thin strip of pastry or you may leave the lower crust a quarter inch larger than the upper crust and turn it back on top of the upper crust. Press the edges together tightly with your fingers or the prongs of a fork. Be sure to cut slits in the top of the pie to let the steam out and thus prevent the slump from making its way out at the edges.

I like to bake a pastry shell on the outside of a pie pan, as it keeps a better shape. After the pastry has been trimmed around the edge with a sharp knife it should be pricked all over with a fork to prevent cracking during the baking. Pastry should bake in a hot oven, but after ten minutes the heat should be lowered for a fruit or custard pie. Fresh fruit pies and tarts are very popular just now. Pastry shells are filled with the sliced fresh fruit or with berries which are then covered with whipped cream or with a "glaze." Sometimes pie shells are filled with a custard filling and fresh fruit is beaten in the whipped cream which is used to cover the custard.

Pastry.

1 1/2 cups flour.

1/4 teaspoon salt.

1/2 cup fat.

Cold water.

Sift together the flour and salt. Cut in the fat with two case knives. For a large quantity a wooden bowl and chopping knife may be used. When fine, add at one side of the bowl one tablespoon of cold water and stir in as much of the flour and fat as the water will take up. Continue this until you have four or five balls of dough and some dry flour left in the bowl. Press together with your fingers. If all the dry flour is not taken up add a little more water. Chill and roll.

Quick Meal.

Lamb chops.

Boiled sweet potatoes with brown butter.

Corn on the cob.

Lettuce and tomato salad.

Peach tarts.

Coffee.

Here is a quick meal for that cool night which comes upon us once in a while at this season, and even for a hot night it does not take a large amount of time in a hot kitchen. Sweet potatoes, as you know, boil more quickly than white potatoes and need only to be scraped before they are put in the boiling salted water. When they are cooked peel off the skins and dress them with brown butter, or black butter, as the French say. Corn on the cob, if the ears are small, will take only five minutes to boil, and the chops will cook in eight to ten minutes, depending upon their thickness. You may use either a french dressing or mayonnaise with the salad. Should you not have time to bake a pastry shell, stop at a nearby bakery on your way home and select any of the many delicious fresh fruit tarts now offered.

Order of Preparations

Prepare pastry and chill.

Boil water for potatoes.

Scrape potatoes and boil.

Light oven.

Prepare salad and chill.

Prepare and sugar peaches.

Boil corn and boil water for it.

Cook chops.

Bake tart shells.

Cook corn.

Cool potatoes and dress.

Make coffee.

Raisin and Nut Pie.

1 cup sugar.

1 tablespoon butter.

3 eggs.

1/2 teaspoon nutmeg.

1 teaspoon cinnamon.

1/2 teaspoon cloves.

1 tablespoon vinegar.

1/2 teaspoon salt.

1/2 cup seeded raisins.

1/2 cup chopped nuts.

Cream the sugar and butter and add the beaten egg yolks. Stir in the spices, vinegar, salt, raisins and nuts and cut and fold in the beaten egg whites. Pour into a pie plate lined with pastry and bake at 450 degrees for ten minutes, then at 350 degrees for about 25 minutes longer.

Lemon Apple Filling.

2 lemon juice and grated rind.

2 cups sugar.

Pare apples and grate into saucepan. Add the juice and grated rind of the lemons and the sugar. Cook for five minutes, stirring constantly. Cool before spreading.

Best of Philosophy in Old Negro Sentiment

It is more or less generally known that the old time darkeys of the South always faced things hopefully, even against the greatest odds. And many of them are still that way. Just the other day some of our southern friends called to our attention a striking bit of old southern darkey philosophy that we learned in our boyhood days.

No advice could be more appropriate just at this time when the whole country is enjoying the first upswing from those awful four years of depression. It seems that one old darkey whose motto was "keep going, don't give up" rimed it out like this:

If it rain o' ef it blow
Keep on gwine.
If it sleet or ef it snow,
Keep on gwine.
Taint no use to sit an' pine
Ef de fish ain't on de line
Jes' batt yo' hook u-rin an'
Keep on gwine.

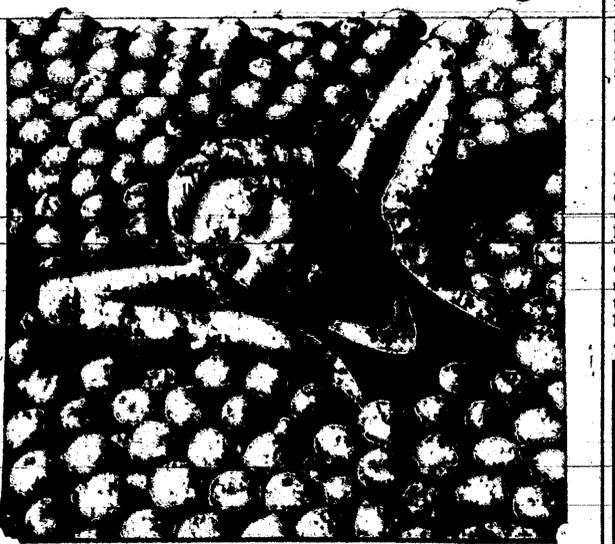

Simple, but well expressed. If we "keep on gwine" we are bound to get out of the mire. So let's all "keep gwine," folks.—Fathinder Magazine.

Apple Tree Honored

In Eastwood, Australia, a monument is to be erected to an apple tree. It will commemorate the discovery of what is considered to be Australia's finest dessert apple, the Granny Smith. And thereby hangs a tale. Seventy-five years ago a widow known as Granny Smith had a small apple orchard at Eastwood and there, from some discarded pit there was grown the first Granny Smith apple tree. The tree and its offspring earned a fortune for the widow and the apple has since risen to front rank amongst Australia's eating apples.

Things passed very quietly here Labor Day. Outside of a ball game between the local boys and the Forestry boys there wasn't any excitement.

Mr. Ben S. Buras returned last Sunday from the S. P. hospital at San Francisco. He is very much improved, but will not return to work for a few days yet.

Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Meagher and daughter, of El Paso, came up Thursday and visited Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Strauss. They returned home Friday, driving by way of Ruidoso.

Mr. Adams' subject was "The Effect of the Proposed Constitutional Amendment No. 4 to be voted on by New Mexico Citizens Sept. 19." Mr. Adams handled the subject in a manner which showed that he had given a great deal of thought to the tax question.

Mrs. P. C. Reaves and sons, John and Dan, who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Paul Reaves here for three weeks, returned to their home in Fort Worth, Texas, last Wednesday. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Reaves accompanied them home, having leased the bakery temporarily to Mr. Anderson. They expect to return to Carrizozo when Mrs. Reaves has entirely recovered from her recent operation for appendicitis.

Mrs. L. C. Klasner, of Roswell, is here visiting her niece, Mrs. Ola Jones, for a few days. Mrs. Klasner has just returned from Albuquerque, where she took a special course in Spanish at St. Francis College. This college is a branch summer school of St. Francis College, of New York. She also took a correspondence course from the Normal University, of Las Vegas. She says she took two courses in Spanish, getting ten term hours credit. She already had 5 hours extension course and four years of convent work in Spanish while a girl in San Antonio, Texas. Mrs. Klasner was one of the translators in the last legislature.

Farm Loan Application Procedure Simplified

In an effort to simplify and speed up farm debt refinancing in Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado and New Mexico, the Federal Land Bank of Wichita has been given the added responsibility, as have all the other federal land banks in their districts, for making direct loans to farmers out of the $200,000,000 fund made available to the Land Bank Commissioner at the last session of Congress.

Heretofore agents of the Land Bank Commissioner have been in charge of disbursing this special emergency farm relief fund. Under the new plan they will become officers of the land banks and the administration of the fund will be under the direction of the boards of directors and presidents of the land banks. All secretaries-treasurers of National Farm Loan Associations, who function as the Wichita bank's local representatives, were notified August 24 of this regulation from the Farm Credit Administration effective immediately.

Previous to this simplification of application procedure, a separate application had to be made to the land bank for a loan not to exceed 50 per cent of the appraised normal value of the land plus 20 per cent of the value of the permanent, insured farm buildings, and a separate application had to be made to the Agent of the Land Bank Commissioner at Wichita for a loan on farm real estate and personal property for not to exceed 75 per cent of its normal value. Now, only one application and one appraisal deposit is required for the maximum loan obtainable on the security offered.

According to officers of the bank, the difficulties which have prevented the giving of the usual prompt service to applicants during recent weeks have already been largely overcome through a greatly increased number of land bank appraisers and the expansion of the bank's staff. It is hoped that the present accumulation of applications for loans will be cleared within 60 days, and after that time all applications will be handled promptly upon receipt.

Ancient Monument

One of Japan's most interesting monuments of antiquity is the Bridge of the Brothers Garden, built in the 1500's, a mass of pegs and crude joints—not a nail of metal in the entire length of 750 feet, and as good today as when built.

Japan Is Young

Baseball is Popular in Japan.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—W. H. HERRICK.

WHEN occidental man first thinks of the Far East, China and Japan are envisaged as being much alike—indeed, almost as twins. But time enables him to discriminate.

Historically, China is old and ethical. The burden of all her literature is, "What ought I to do?" Japan is young and esthetic. The burden of her thought, as recorded for a thousand years, is, "What is beautiful?"

Geologically, China is pre-ancient; Japan is recent. Long after Mother Earth had settled down to rear her earlier brood of lands, Japan, the youngster, arrived. Only about three-score years ago Japan shocked her elders in Asia by departing politically and socially from the ancient ways and turning toward those of the western barbarians.

In nature, also, Japan has changed within our remembrance; Bandai san, one of the eruptions on her pretty face, misbehaved. For hundreds of years, so far as known in human records, perhaps during the millenniums of unrecorded time, it had been entirely dormant. As suddenly as the discharge of a cannon, it blew off its rocky cap in 1888 and killed more than 400 human beings. Curiously enough, in Japanese the same sound, san, serves to the ear for either "mister" or for "mountain."

The one-time medieval village, Yedo, and the swift-growing national capital, Tokyo, which it became, was leveled in 1855 and again in 1923 by destructive earth adjustments. Of old, the rest of the world knew not of these earthquakes. In the era of electric wires, even a tremor is news.

Like some vast factory town in which the blazing furnaces take a Sabbath rest, to begin again on Monday, Japan has some 200 dormant volcanoes. How pretty, flower-covered and of graceful figure, they seem! Yet these mountain forms are liable at any moment to become unruly, and when in these fits of deadly temper they often devastate vast areas of human habitation and alter many square miles of landscape, as we saw in 1923. At least 50 of these sleeping, fairylike cones have the promise and potency of continued activity.

Loves as their outlines often are, their breath may be sulphurous to the point of danger. Even graceful Fuji, seemingly as demure as a virgin in her teens, cannot be trusted.

Lies on a Bed of Fire. Garments of green forests, of grand firs, the walls of bamboo thickets, a tapestry of flowers, or even a mantle of winter snow—provide no insurance against direful outbreak. But, if Japan acts often like a fury, we must excuse her, because the bed on which she lies is one of fire.

Go down to Beppu, in Kyushu, for example, where the daily rice is cooked by subterranean heat, where people resort to bake out or broil out their various ailments. In the hot seashore sand, thousands of men and women for hours, even days, lie covered with the pulverized volcanic debris. By wet baking or parboiling, even to scorchification, the patients seek to expel their many ills.

Beppu is a delightful place for a patient with rheumatic or other miseries. While there is a fair chance of being swallowed up and changed to a cluder by some fresh outburst of melted rock, such as only a century or two ago filled the valleys with scoria and lava, who cares, when no one can foretell the hour? Does not the man of fair Japan may be visited long before his turn comes?

Did not Sakurajima at Kagoshima, of old supposed to be solid rock, erupt and bury a whole town of 10,000 people? Moreover, how welcome the sequel to these earth's outbursts—fertile soil covered with a carpet of lovely flowers and plants and easily coaxed into luxuriant production of food for man! "Shigata ga nai" (Don't care) is the usual verdict on the unknown, with the merry-hearted sons and daughters—how fair are the latter!—of Nippon. One who had known the sons of the Land of the Gods for more than half a century classifies the two kinds of men into "Don't cares" and those who, after every repulse of nature, cry "Let us rebuild!" Then, Caleb-like, these hearthen others by declaring, "We are well able to do it."

once fiery scoria, the maidens know how to add to their physical charms through the witchery of raiment. In his ideas of beauty, and especially of dress patterns and whatever is applied to bodily wear, the Japanese artist-designer excels. For variety and originality—he possibly leads the world.

Men and women in their garb lovingly copy nature's moods. When a maiden adds to her faultlessly graceful costume a "Fujiyama neck and shoulders," with a superb collar, who can do less than admire? Was it lackadissical in the native poet to write of her: "One glance, and you would give your province; another, and you would barter your kingdom?"

Love Their Land's Beauty. Yet, as of glamor for their women, as expressed in strains of admiration, so also—and more—have their poets written of the beautiful scenery and the special features of their native land. They reckon even clouds, mist, sunrise-glow, and sunset-glow as part of their country's life and adornment.

Yet it is not they, but we, who say "her" of nature, for personification is rare in Japanese literature, art, or language. Of a thousand figures of speech in poetry, many of which refer to the moon, scarce a dozen bear any resemblance to the description of that luminary as "a fair maiden with white fire laden."

Nevertheless, apart from literature, in Japan all nature is alive with personality. The mountains, especially in the beauty spots, are inhabited by gods and goddesses.

To the average native, these personalities in the realm of imagination seem as real as the virgin priestesses at the Shinto shrines.

Every year, at the invitation and under the direction of the imperial court, thousands of the short, 31-syllable poems are sent, for oblivion or glory, by the people, from beggar boy to noble, to the court's staff of literary appraisers and censors. After due scrutiny and appraisal, rewards are meted out, not to rhymesters, for there are none, but to the poets.

But let us come down to facts and figures of area and population and of facilities of movement by land and sea.

Travel today in the Japanese empire is one of luxury and detailed convenience as compared with what existed 60 years ago. Japan proper is now threaded with 16,413 miles of railways and trolleys, rivers are crossed by countless bridges, and the ocean paths to all continents are traversed by ships that move with an alacrity and punctuality that are akin to the movements of the heavenly bodies.

Intellectual preparation for change had been in progress a century or more before the arrival of President Fillmore's peaceful armada of 1853. Japan's modern history is truly as much one of interior discipline as of any reinforcement from the outside.

On the other hand, America's intervention under Perry was really an extension and fresh application of the Monroe Doctrine. It came at an opportune time. The old mikado, or emperor, Komel, was nearing his demise, and his son and heir, Mutsuhito, who was destined to rule the New Japan in the longest reign (1867-1912) known in the nation's history, was soon to take the throne.

During his reign the compromise between the personalities and energies representing war and peace resulted in shattering forever the Chinese claim of sovereignty over the Ryukyu (Nansel) Islands and Korea and rolled back the tide of Russians and European aggression.

Honshu the Chief Island. The present-day empire consists of the four large islands of Japan proper, with nearly 4,000 smaller ones; Taiwan (Formosa); Karafuto, the portion of Sakhalin below the fiftieth parallel of north latitude; and Korea. The country's life centers on Main Island, Honshu, the chief theater of its history. Here is the bulk of the population; and here are the chief cities; towns and villages are thickly clustered. Hence, in the minds of foreigners, this large island, with its 84,300 square miles of area, is practically Japan.

To risk a further computation, one estimates that 90 per cent of all visitors to Japan "do" Honshu only. Nevertheless, Kyushu, with busy Nagasaki on its southwest tip, being the historic home of the Dutch who, for nearly three centuries, kept the world informed concerning the hermit nation, is far from unknown to the world at large.

CHAPTER X—Continued

"I know," Bruce wiped away the tears. "I didn't really doubt you. But I've wanted you so. And this house. It's just that I've been so afraid of losing you. Will you forgive me, sweet?"

The wide brown eyes forgave him. "Quarrelling has its advantages," she said, standing on tiptoe to press her cheek against his. "It's so much fun to make up."

Emily and Stephen sat before the library fire. They were alone except for the little professor, pottering among the books at the other end of the room. Emily had looked forward all day to this interval with Stephen. She had tried not to be disappointed because his gift to her had been books. She would have liked something more personal. She kept hearing Barbara's voice. "Uncle Stephen! Don't you know that you shouldn't have given me seventeen Christmas presents!"

The interval alone with Stephen was not proving to be all that she had hoped for. She found it increasingly difficult to find subjects for conversation that were of mutual interest. She had never experienced that difficulty before—well, yes—before the children came. Conversation with Stephen had been easy and delightful. Now nothing seemed to interest him except the children. Emily was heartily sick of the Thornes. But because that was the only way to hold his attention, she spoke of them kindly with a show of humorous affection.

"Is this young Mr. MacLain a special friend of Barbara's?" she asked, hoping that such was the case.

The question coincided with the question in Stephen's mind. "They are all fond of him," he said, resenting the curiosity in Emily's low voice. "He has spent his summers in Provincetown. He was their father's friend."

"It wouldn't be surprising if he was interested in Barbara," Emily said, wanting to please Stephen and hold his attention. "She is a very pretty girl."

"Barbara is a child," he said with a note of impatience in his voice. "She's just past eighteen."

"But, Stephen," Emily said, nettled by the impatient tone, "a girl may be a woman at eighteen. She's old enough to be in love with the boy." Stephen moved restlessly in the armchair beside the hearth. Emily, he thought, was right about it, perhaps. Why should he mind? Why should he refuse to admit that Babble loved this boy?

But he did refuse to admit it. She had come to be so dear to him. He loved her as though she were his child. Did he? He didn't know.

"Stephen," Emily said, after an interval of silence, "Aunt Ada Fairchild, my mother's sister, has asked father and me to make our home with her. She lives in Winchester, Va. Do you think it would be a sensible plan?"

"Excellent," Stephen said, before he had considered what might lie behind the suggestion.

Emily looked down at her hands folded quietly in her lap. Stinging tears filled her eyes. She had hoped that the suggestion would make him realize that he wanted to keep her here. It wasn't working that way.

"Would you be happy there?" Stephen then asked, feeling that his immediate reaction to the suggestion had not been what she had hoped. His conscience troubled him vaguely. What had Emily expected? How far had he gone that evening in the conservatory before the children came? He had never been quite sure.

She forced back the tears to save her pride. "Shady Lawn" is a lovely old place," she said trying to sound enthusiastic. She painted, for Stephen, a lovely picture of "Shady Lawn." He should know that she had ancestors, too. Her gallantry was entirely wasted on Stephen. He believed in the picture of "Shady Lawn." He thought it would be an excellent idea. His conscience ceased to trouble him. Emily seemed to be delighted with the arrangements. Too delighted. He felt a little hurt as well as greatly relieved.

"I'll miss you," he said so gently that the tears spilled over her cheeks. The tears distressed him. He felt guilty and embarrassed. He knew, all at once, what she had expected him to say. Pity for her lay like a weight on his heart.

"Don't decide at once," he said, watching her fingers twist a long string of crystal beads. "Take a little time. I'm not sure that we can spare you."

The gratitude in her eyes increased his feeling of guilt. Why didn't he ask her to marry him? He had wanted to once. The children, soon, would be gone. He didn't suppose that he had changed fundamentally. Emily loved him. That was obvious. People expected it. Why didn't he do the decent thing?

There was a moment when he might have asked her the question she ached to hear. But the moment passed. Barbara, her cheeks tipped pink by the frosty air, her eyes shining like stars, came into the room.

"Bruce told me to thank you again," she said, "for being so nice to him."

"That's all right," Stephen said, happy at the thought of her pleasure. He did not look at Emily. He looked at Barbara's vivid face framed in tendrils of soft brown hair.

"I thank you, too," she said. "You're nice, Uncle Stephen."

There was a rattling sound. Emily's chain had snapped. The crystal beads, like small bright tears, scampered across the floor.

Christmas was over and Kit was well. Stephen no longer had an excuse for keeping Barbara and the children. But he was reluctant to send them away. He did not like to think of missing that hour before dinner in the schoolroom. All of life seemed savories when he thought of sending the children away.

But he realized, as the January days passed, that he must do something about them. The children should be in school. He looked up schools for Gay and Jamie. Kit should have a tutor at home and go in to art school twice a week. He had not made up his mind to keep them. But it gave him a certain satisfaction to be thinking of schools and tutors and music lessons. He wondered if, after all, he had been meant for a family man.

Did he want to become responsible for them? That was a question he asked himself many times without finding a satisfactory answer. There were times when it seemed absurd, when he went home in the evening determined to pack them off the next day. He never succeeded. Seeing them, hearing their voices, feeling the warmth of their affection, he knew that he could not do it then. "Tomorrow," he would think. "Tomorrow" never came.

Aunt Edith expected Stephen to do something about the children. She did not speak of it because, as she told her friend Mrs. Beach, it was Stephen's house and she had made it a rule not to meddle in his affairs. But Stephen felt her disapproval.

The children wondered and waited. Would Uncle Stephen let them stay? They invented a game which they called "Straws to Show Which Way the Wind Blows," from one of Martha's sayings.

"He had a school catalogue in his overcoat pocket," Gay would report at a secret conference in the schoolroom. "It was a girl's school. I guess that means me."

Or Kit would tell them, his eyes bright with excitement. "He asked me if I'd like to go to art school. Wouldn't it be great?"

"Uncle Stephen thinks boys' camps are a good idea," Jamie reported one evening. "We talked about them this afternoon. Do you suppose dogs are allowed?"

Barbara said Uncle Stephen had asked her if Gay ought to join a dancing class or was it more important to concentrate on the spelling?

"Dancing class!" Gay squealed, bouncing up and down on the sagging springs of the sofa.

"Spelling!" Kit decreed, looking sternly at Gay.

"A little of both, I think," Barbara said with an air amiably maternal. "If Uncle Stephen will let us stay."

There were straws to show an unfavorable wind as well.

"Uncle Stephen says I can take his 'Moby Dick' when I go," Kit was obliged to report.

"He told his Aunt Edith he wants us to be happy while we're here," Gay said on another occasion.

"He said he'd send me a toboggan," Jamie reported, "when I told him how much snow there is in Maine."

"But he hasn't really decided," Barbara comforted them. "I can tell by the way he frowns when he looks at us sometimes."

So they swung between hope and despair, never entirely sure which way the wind was going to blow. If Uncle Stephen would keep them, was the beginning or the end of every waking thought.

A Little Bit Humorous

A CERT.

A dear old lady from the country was attending her first race meeting, and had backed her first horse.

After placing her bet she returned to her grandson.

"My dear," she said excitedly, "I'm so glad my horse is going to win."

"But why are you so sure, grandma?" asked the boy. "Nothing's a certainty, you know."

"Oh, but this is," said the dear old thing. "The bookmaker said that my horse was starting at twenty to one and the race isn't timed to start until two o'clock."—London Answers.

"I'm," he sniffed, bringing them out empty. "I'd think I had somebody else's clothes on."

An insurance agent had found a new life to insure.

Taking out his notebook and pencil he commenced to ask the usual hackneyed questions.

"Now, sir," he said, "how old are you?"

The simple-looking little man scratched his head thoughtfully. "I was forty last birthday," he said, "and I'll be forty-two next."

The agent gasped, "But, my dear sir," he smiled, "you've got things a bit mixed. If you were forty last birthday you'll be forty-one next birthday."

"Oh, no," said the man. "I'm forty-one today."
