Eastern New Mexico State Fair at Roswell

While many new and novel features are being added to the Eastern New Mexico State Fair to be held in Roswell October 18, 19, 20 and 21, there is one event which will be largely as it has been—except bigger. That is "Old Timers' Day" on Friday, October 20. Those men and women who have been in New Mexico 30 years or longer run this day's program and incidentally they run it to suit themselves.

It was suggested this year that perhaps it would be better to use automobiles and motor trucks in the big Old Timers' parade instead of horses, chuck wagons, hacks, buggies, carriages and burros. But the Old Timers laughed that off quickly. Were there trucks and automobiles when they came to New Mexico? There were not. So there will be none in the big parade on Old Timers' day.

But the first day's parade—that's different. Every float, a queen's float if you please. And every community, every organization, every individual and every business house in New Mexico is privileged to enter the competition to name the queen by producing the winning float.

The livestock show at the fair this year will be on a bigger scale than ever. Beef cattle from the Texas state fair at Dallas may be here. The rodeo each afternoon will bar professionals this year so every cowboy in New Mexico will have a chance.

Jones-Pfingsten

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pfingsten whose marriage took place at Nogal on Oct. 1 have gone to El Paso to spend their honeymoon. Rev. John L. Lawson performed the marriage ceremony at the home of the groom's mother Mrs. M. E. Pfingsten, last Sunday in the presence of thirty guests. The bride was the former Miss Mildred Jones of Nogal. The groom is a ranchman and their many friends are rejoiced to know they will continue to live at Nogal.

High School Notes

Last Friday our football team played Weed. We were the victors with a score of 14-7. Saturday the team goes to Alamo. Let's have a crowd of home town people there to yell for them.

Tuesday evening the side of Willow Hill was lighted by numerous bonfires. All fires were in use to roast wienies for some 75 or 80 High School students. After supper a large group gathered about the fire and air was filled with the music(?) of well known songs. We all came away thinking it was one of the best picnics yet given.

We are privileged to report that the following students have been elected by the teachers to the Honor Society this semester: Helen Straus, Leo Sanchez, and Thelma Shaver.

Thursday it fell to the Sophomores to entertain the assembly. A unique "one word" play was presented accompanied by some mysterious (A Sophomore contributed the adjective) dialogues.

Sandoval-Uderos

Mauricio Sandoval and Miss Ester Uderos were married last Saturday evening at the home of Judge Herdo Chavez, who performed the ceremony in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Juan Morales.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Sandoval went to the home of Mrs. Chonita Martinez where a crowd of about thirty relatives and friends greeted and showered them. The couple were recipients of many beautiful and appropriate gifts.

Both bride and groom are members of families that have lived in Lincoln county many years. A large circle of friends wish these young people much happiness.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Ferguson are the proud parents of a son born last night at the Johnson hospital.

Mrs. E. T. Collier is visiting her sister, Mrs. S. M. Wharton, in Tucumcari this week.

The Fish, Game, and Forest Protective association are having a cottage built as winter quarters for the caretaker. Mr. M. U. Finley spent the first of the week at Eagle Creek overseeing the work.

Mr. and Mrs. M. U. Finley returned Monday from Clovis where they visited their two daughters, Mesdames Pilant and Lyman the past week. Mr. and Mrs. Pilant have lately moved to Clovis from Roswell.

Mesdames Miller and Warner who were visiting Dr. and Mrs. F. H. Johnson from Orange, California left Monday for Kansas, where they will visit their children, some sisters and other relatives. Mrs. Miller is Mrs. Johnson's mother, while Mrs. Warner is her aunt.

Messrs Melvin Franks and Hilario Gomez, county commissioners were here Monday on official business.

"We Have a Telephone Again"

The home without a telephone lacked quick communication with friends and relatives. Errands here, there and everywhere had to be run in person.

Now that school has started the children can also use the telephone to keep in touch with their friends.

And only with a telephone can aid be summoned instantly in case of emergency.

'The Seven Cities of Cibola'

An entertainment based on the glorious history of New Mexico and the great southwest, presented by the Reverend James A. Brady of Carrizozo, N. Mex. Over one hundred beautiful slides in color are used to illustrate the subject matter of New Mexico's wonderful story from the time of the ancient cliff-dwellers until the arrival of the Covered Wagon and the coming of the first English-speaking residents of the state. During the course of the program Indian and Spanish folk music is demonstrated in keeping with the general theme of the presentation.

Part I

A discussion of New Mexico's oldest known human inhabitants—the Basketmakers and the Cliff-dwellers of prehistoric times with special attention to the ruins at Puye and Frijoles Canyon on the Pejarito Plateau. The life of these ancient peoples is described as accurately from the archeological resources and relics found throughout the southwest.

Part II

The legend of the seven cities of gold supposed to be at Cibola in western New Mexico forms the general subject of this part. This legend was directly influential in bringing about the famous expedition of Coronado and his army in 1540.

Part III

The effects of the Spanish conquest on the Indians of the southwest. The Indians continued their peaceful life in the Pueblos and were taught many useful arts and crafts by their conquerors who in turn encouraged the natives to preserve their indigenous culture which continues down to the present day. At this point the audience is entertained with glimpses of the present-day life in the Indian pueblos and among the desert dwelling Navajos and Apaches of our times.

School children and all who are interested in the geography and natural wonders of the southwest will be delighted with the excellent views of the cliff dwellings. The Grand Canyon, The Petrified Forest, The Painted Desert, Shiprock, Inscription Rock, Acorn, The Frosted Mesa, The Rio Grande, and the Gran Quivira. All of these slides have been prepared by artists who have lived at these places and studied the peculiar topography and landscape coloring of the Southwest.

This entertainment will be repeated at Carrizozo on the evening of Monday, October 9, 1933 at the Lyric Theatre at 8:00 p. m. Admission: Adults 25 cents, children (including high school pupils) 10 cents. All who were unable to attend last year, now have an opportunity of being present at "The Seven Cities of Cibola" with the addition of Indian and Spanish music as special features.

The Rainbow Girls gave a fish supper at Community hall last Friday evening. They did fairly well, but not so well as they should considering the menu and the price.

The hunting season is upon us again. Be sure to read Mr. Kelley's ad in this week's paper. Mr. Kelley gives away a fine gun each hunting season and has given away several in the last few years. Last year's winner was Mr. V. L. Thompson who killed a 217 pound buck.

"Babbie," he called very gently. She lifted her face, small and white in the moonlight, framed in silky tendrils of soft brown hair.

"Oh, it's you, Uncle Stephen," she said.

"Who did you think it might be?" "That sailor."

"The boy from Annapolis?" "I ran away from him."

"Why?" Stephen asked, seating himself beside her on the grassy rim of the pond.

"I don't like his hands," she said.

"They paw."

"I'll spank him," Stephen seethed with indignation. "I'll spank him, but you and all."

"Oh, no, you won't, Uncle Stephen." Her hand slipped into his. "I was glad of an excuse. I wanted to run away."

"Don't you like your party?" "It's a lovely party," she said quickly, afraid that his feelings might be hurt. "But boys aren't amusing. Not very young boys like that."

"Do they seem very young to you?" "Young and silly." She turned from him with a choked little sob.

"Babbie! You're crying, Babbie." She did not try to deny it. He drew her into his arms, felt her turn, felt her arms around his neck.

"Can you tell me, dear?" he asked. "It hurts me to see you unhappy. Can't you tell me, Babbie, dear?"

Stephen felt her trembling in his arms. He was trembling, too. Had all of this unhappiness been about him? He couldn't believe it. The thought turned the world upside down.

"Barbara," he said brokenly.

It was strange that he should call her that. She could tell him now about Bruce. But he must know that she was grateful.

"I do love you, Uncle Stephen," she said.

And then she knew that she couldn't tell him. He kissed her, not as he had kissed her many times, but in a different way. She knew what the kisses meant. She knew about being in love.

CHAPTER XIV

Barbara lay on the beach, her arms folded under her head, her eyes dreaming up into the cloudless blue of the sky. Kit sat beside her, sketching. At a little distance, Gay in a brief green bathing suit was the center of a noisy chattering group. Jamie and the Parrish twins, freckled and brown as gypsies, were building a miniature golf course. "Chips" and the Parrish Atridae were engaged in a friendly tussle, their frisky feet flinging up showers of sand.

Barbara had forgotten Kit and the children. She lay very still, thinking of many things. Summer was over. This was their last day at Lily Head. Tomorrow they would return to "Thornhedge." What then? "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said.

She thought, with a faint confused feeling, of what that might mean. "When the summer is over." She knew, now, that she had tried to hold the days, to keep them from passing too rapidly. Each of them was precious, sunny days, gray days wrapped in blankets of fog, stormy days when the wind blew from the northeast and the breakers pounded against the shore. Another day. Something might happen. Weeks ahead, passing, passing too rapidly, sunny days, cloudy days, days when the stars wind blew. She could not hold them. They were gone. "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said.

She remembered the day he had said it, the day after her party when Uncle Stephen had kissed her beside the lily pond in that new and brightening way. It was late in the afternoon. She had sat in the library alcove, hidden by the hangings, trying to write a letter to Bruce, a sad difficult letter, a letter to tell him that she must stay with Uncle Stephen. She was tired, so dreadfully tired. The rain against the window had been soothing. She had gone to sleep, tired, so dreadfully tired.

Voices had roused her, Uncle Stephen's voice, the plushy fat-sounding voice of Aunt Edith's friend, Mrs. Beach. She had meant to come from behind the curtains. It wasn't polite to listen to a conversation when no one knew you were there.

And then she discovered that Mrs. Beach was talking about her. She couldn't come out then. She had been too shy and hurt and abashed, too sorry for Uncle Stephen.

Russie Monroe, she had heard, had seen Uncle Stephen kiss her beside the lily pond. She had told her grandmother and her grandmother, a friend of Aunt Edith's, had told Mrs. Beach. Everybody was talking. Mrs. Beach reported. She felt it her duty to tell Stephen.

Uncle Stephen had been very angry indeed—angry but very polite. He had said very little. Barbara knew, by the tone of his voice, that he was angry and hurt. She had been so sorry for Uncle Stephen, hearing Mrs. Beach talk. He had been kind to her and the children, so wonderfully gentle and kind. She wanted to help him, somehow. There was nothing she could do.

Uncle Stephen, at last, had rung for Henry. Mrs. Beach had rustled out of the room.

Barbara had not meant Uncle Stephen to know that she had overheard the conversation. She waited until she thought he had left the room. Then she stepped out from behind the curtains. He was there, standing beside the hearth, his brows drawn over his angry eyes. He had looked sorry when he saw her, sorry and angry and hurt.

"You heard?" he had asked.

"I'm sorry, Uncle Stephen."

"D—n them," he had said, meaning Mrs. Beach and Russie Monroe and Russie's gossiping grandmother.

"I'm so terribly sorry." He had looked so sorry and angry that she had wanted to help him. "People will talk, Uncle Stephen. There's nothing you can do."

"There's one thing," he had said.

"She know what he meant. She could tell by the expression in his eyes. A welt had settled into her heart. If he hadn't kissed her the evening before in that frightening sort of way she would have thought that he meant only to protect her. But he had kissed her. She knew about being in love."

"Barbara—" he had said.

She had wanted to stop him. Thinking of Bruce, she had wanted to run away. He must have seen that she was confused. He had not touched her.

"We won't talk about it now," he had said. "When the summer is over."

Uncle Stephen had taken them to Bay Head with Sarah and a brown cook named Eliza. He had come down only for week-ends. Barbara was grateful for that. Since the evening beside the lily pond, since Mrs. Beach had swept out of the library, it had embarrassed her to be with Uncle Stephen. It hurt her to feel that way. But she couldn't help it no matter how hard she tried.

He had been as kind as ever. But his manner had changed. He treated her like a grown-up young lady. He never kissed her as he did Gay or tumbled her hair or ducked her under the waves. He never called her Babbie. He called her Barbara now, all the time.

She might have thought that she had imagined that evening beside the lily pond except that, sometimes, he looked at her in a wistful sort of way. And now it was September. "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said.

"Do you know where Bruce is, Babbie?" Kit, lounging beside her, asked.

"No," she said, turning her head to avoid Kit's eyes. She didn't know. He had not answered the difficult letter she wrote him, the letter which told him that she must stay with Uncle Stephen. Her following letters had been returned unopened. Bruce had disappeared without telling her that he understood, without a consoling word, Bruce who had loved her so much.

"I should think he would write to us," Kit grumbled. "I thought he liked us a lot. Remember how he used to take us swimming?"

Barbara nodded, unable to speak because of a lump in her throat.

"He was afraid to tell her how deeply he loved her because she was a little girl no higher than his heart and he wasn't sure that she knew about being in love."

"And how nice he was when Father died?" Kit asked, remembering Bruce.

Again Barbara nodded, her lashes wet with tears which Kit could not see.

"The suite knew only one song. 'I love you, pretty gypsy girl with the roses in your hair.'"

"Haha," Kit said, after an interval of silence.

"Yes?"

"This is sort of a funny question I'm going to ask."

"What is it, Kit?"

"Well, I was thinking—" Kit flushed and looked embarrassed. "I mean, wouldn't it be funny if you should marry Uncle Stephen?"

"What put that idea in your head?" Sarah told Eliza you are." Kit's flush deepened. "Of course I don't listen to servants' talk. But Gay told Sally Parrish."

"You know how Gay is, Kit."

"Yes, I know." Kit rolled over on his side. "But I was just thinking—wouldn't it be sort of funny, Baber?"

"Would you like it?" Barbara asked.

"I think it would be well," Kit answered promptly. "Then we could all stay together. You have to marry somebody, I suppose."

WAS HIS FACE RED?

The reporter had just submitted his manuscript to the editor. Leaving the editorial room, he began to reflect upon what he had written, and decided to go back and change something in it.

"I have a few changes to make in that copy I submitted," he said.

The editor reached into the waste-paper basket and fished out the great work.

"All right, but make it snappy; the waste-paper baskets will be emptied in five minutes."—Kansas City Star.

Gussed It

"They tell me you have been buying stocks?"

"Yes," was the response of the sad hearted. "I made a purchase on a margin a few weeks ago."

"Was it a good buy?"

"Yes. That's exactly what it was—a good buy."—Washington Star.

STUDY AHEAD

A New York lawyer tells of a conversation that occurred in his presence between a bank president and his son who was about to leave for the West to engage in business on his own account.

Banker Father—Son, on this, the threshold of your business life, I desire to impress one thought upon your mind. Honestly, ever and always, is the policy that is best.

Son—Yes, father.

Banker Father—And, by the way, I would advise you to read up a little on corporation law. It will amaze you to discover how many things you can do in a business way and still be honest.—Border Cities Star.

Suits Him

"I spent my vacation in a very out-of-the-way place," W. G. M. writes. "Shortly after my arrival I remarked to my host, 'You say you've lived here twenty years. I can't see what on earth you can find to keep you busy.'"

"Neither can I," was the reply. "That's why I like it."

No Profit

Bill Collector—Well, sir, at least you can let me know on what date my firm can expect payment.

Business Man—Do you take me for a prophet?

"No. Up to the present my firm always regarded you as a loss!"—London Answers.

Man's Proud Supremacy in the Bearded Field

In all the accounts of the visit of the Italian flying fleet the commander has been described invariably as the "young, bearded General Balbo," as if wearing a beard was like appearing at breakfast in a swallow-tail coat. Yet, if rumor is to be believed, observes the Boston Transcript, the fashion of growing beards is coming back, as that fashion has had a way of doing every little while since the Assyrian monarchy pictured on its bas-reliefs the curled and permanently waved beard of Ashurnasirpal. It is only little more than fifty years since the last full-bearded President sat in the White House, and beards in some form or other had then been generally worn by our Presidents back to John Quincy Adams, the Picoadilly weepers of Van Huren having enjoyed the greatest reclamation, for they were snow-white, ambrosial, by no means drooping to indicate dejection, but standing out like gaspalsos in a stiff wind.

All in all, there should be no sadness in this contemplation of the beard's return, for though women have invaded man's field in so many quarters, cutting off their hair, wearing slacks, competing with him in the business world, going to congress, he can here make a last heroic stand with his whiskers.

Let Your Light So Shine

Add a candle to a room full of candles and the light is not appreciably increased but bring in a 200-watt tungsten and the candles become dull and yellow. The world is full of people who give out only a candle glow, and that is why the opportunities for those of the electric light type are so promising. There is a great shortage of students in schools of all kinds. This means that the uneducated boy or girl will be just another candle added to a world already full of candles; it also means that those who have the good judgment to equip themselves with the proper type of education will be comparable to the electric light in the room filled with candles.

For more than thirty years our school has been bending its efforts to convert the human candle into the human electric light bulb, taking youngsters out of the mediocre class and raising their earning power and placing them on the road to a successful business career. How well we have succeeded is testified to by more than fifty thousand office workers distributed all over the English speaking world, many of whom are at the head of large business enterprises. What we have assisted others to do we will be glad to do for you.

Cars Furnished To Legion

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 30.—When the American Legion Convention gets under way here, next week leading officials of the organization will find at their disposal fifty special automobiles provided by the Chevrolet Motor Company. The cars furnished by Chevrolet all will be Master Six Sedans finished in dark Baker blue with gold wheels and appropriate lettering. Each car will be provided with its own driver wearing a white uniform and sailor cap. Cars will be dispatched from a central point at the call of designated Legion officials and will transport them to any point within reasonable limits of the city for the duration of the Convention.

On the doors of the cars will be the Legion seal carrying the lettering: "National Legion Convention." Tire covers in the rear will also have the designation: "Official Legion Chevrolet."

The company decided to provide cars for the Legionnaire, officials said, following the success of a similar venture when the National Convention was held at Detroit two years ago.

Public Health Column

(By Dr. J. R. Bary)

Many cases of infantile paralysis occur without any paralysis. A better name for the disease is poliomyelitis but it is less well known.

There was an epidemic of poliomyelitis in New Mexico in the year 1927 when 200 cases were reported to the State Bureau of Public Health. Since then the largest number of cases occurring in any single year was in 1930 when 37 cases were reported. Last year we had ten cases and so far this year we have had five cases. Children are most liable to this illness at two years of age. After ten years of age the danger diminishes, though it is possible to contract poliomyelitis at any age. Boys are somewhat more susceptible than girls. On the average 65 per cent recover without permanent injury though some epidemics are more severe than others.

Early recognition of the disease is important because there is good evidence that serum treatment will protect those exposed and perhaps help the patient too if given at the beginning of his illness. This illness comes on suddenly. Parents or teachers should be on the watch for the following symptoms: (1) headache, (2) constipation, nausea, vomiting, (3) slight fever, (4) prostration, (5) drowsiness, (6) sensitivity of skin, muscles and joints, (7) inability to urinate, (8) sweating, especially of the head. Whenever two or more of these symptoms are detected a doctor should be called. He will test the responses of the nervous system.

More effective methods of protection await the results of medical research.

A good pamphlet on infantile paralysis has been written for the public by Dr. E. V. Cowdry of Washington University, St. Louis, and is offered free of charge by the International Society for Crippled Children, Elyria, Ohio.

EXERCISE AND REST

VACATION time is a period when many people whose daily work does not involve physical effort try to catch up on exercise. Some of them do about it in a way that they do themselves more harm than good.

Choose some exercise that will keep you out in the open air and sunshine. Golf, tennis, swimming, baseball and hiking are beneficial in moderation. Don't try to play thirty-six holes of golf or go on a ten-mile hike the first few days of your vacation.

If unaccustomed to strenuous exercise, do not begin too vigorously. Exercise should leave one pleasantly fatigued, not exhausted. Persons who take little exercise during the winter, especially adults over forty, should be extremely careful to exercise only moderately.

Don't force yourself to the golf course or to the tennis court when you are already physically tired. Many of the sudden deaths of middle-aged men apparently in good health, during or immediately following a game of golf, show the danger of this. Exercise should be a recreation and a pleasure, not a duty to be performed irrespective of the condition of the body at the time. Avoid strenuous exercise during the heat of the day.

Sleep and Rest

"Early to bed and early to rise" is a good rule to follow the year round, and especially on your vacation. Get at least eight, and preferably nine, hours sleep every night.

The rooms in which you sleep should be well ventilated, particularly during the summer time. By getting plenty of sleep and breathing pure air you lessen the possibilities of exhaustion during excessively hot weather.

Go to a movie, read, or sit around and chat in the evening before retiring. Relax for at least a quarter hour before eating, and for at least an hour after meals. Don't go swimming for at least two hours after eating, or you may have an attack of muscle cramps or indigestion and drown.

Plenty of rest and relaxation is essential to getting the most out of your vacation. Banish business worries and get outdoors in the sunshine. Rebuild your mental and physical resources for the next year's work.

This is the seventh of a series of 12 articles on Vacations and Health. The eighth, on Swimming, will answer the questions:

1. If you are pushed into deep water and can't swim, what should you do? 2. Do good swimmers often drown? 3. What are cramps and how can they be prevented?

GIRL LIFER AGAIN SEEKS NEW TRIAL IN DEATH GAMBLE

Stakes Her Hope on Confession of Mate Who Died on Scaffold.

Kingston, Ont.—Doris Palmer McDonald, Valleyfield "tiger girl," is preparing to gamble with death in an effort to win her freedom from the "Big House."

Rerieved from the gallows by a margin of forty-eight hours, after being convicted of the murder of Adelard Bouchard, taxi driver, Doris is now appealing for a new trial, declaring herself willing to face the possibility of a second death sentence in an effort to win acquittal.

The girl's husband, George McDonald, was hanged for Bouchard's slaying and his widow contends that a confession which he made a few hours before going to the scaffold exonerated her of any complicity in the crime, beyond that of being a reluctant witness.

In Prison Five Years. Doris, American-born, was sentenced to life imprisonment after the death penalty was commuted. She has now served nearly five years and her friends in both Canada and the United States are said to be subscribing to a fund with which to finance a second trial.

They challenge the validity of her first trial, on the ground that the crown prosecutor addressed the jury in French, a language of which Doris understood little or nothing. They further contend that the last-minute confession made by George McDonald is sufficient ground to set aside the conviction against his wife.

In other quarters, however, strong opposition to any further commutation of Doris' sentence is developing. Public opinion in Lachine and other districts of Quebec is against it, on the ground that the slaying of Bouchard left a widow and seven small children almost penniless.

Ralph McFullen, a companion of the McDonalds, who has evaded the police for nearly six years, is still sought on a charge of murder, and it is contended that Doris should be kept in custody in order that she may be available as a witness against him, in case of his capture.

Doris McDonald, prison officials admit, is no longer the "tiger girl" who was arrested in Denver, Colo., in 1927 and extradited to Canada with her husband. Soon after being sentenced to death she turned to the solace of religion, and it is said that she attributes her escape from the gallows to her prayers.

Is Model Prisoner. She has been a model prisoner, it is admitted, since being transferred to the federal penitentiary here, and now occupies a position of trust in the women's section of the "big house."

Police declare that at the time of her arrest, Doris McDonald admitted that she was the one who had actually shot Bouchard. She later repudiated this, however, and her counsel charged that it had been improperly extorted from her.

The McDonalds and McFullen chartered Bouchard to drive them from a Montreal hotel to the United States border on the night of July 17, 1927. On the way one of the trio fired four shots into the driver's body and hurled him out to die in a ditch at the roadside. The car was found abandoned near the United States border the following day, with a woman's blood-stained clothing in it.

The McDonalds were arrested several weeks later in Denver. Police at that time stated that George McDonald had a long criminal record in both Canada and the United States, but his bride of a few months disclaimed any knowledge of this.

Find Lost Sisters Live 18 Miles From Searcher

Bucyrus, Ohio.—For six years Herbert Rupe, of Bucyrus, has been living within 18 miles of the sisters for whom he has been searching for 20 years.

A chance remark of an acquaintance led Rupe to Mariott, Ohio, near here, where he found his sisters, Mrs. Emery Davis and Miss Beatrice Davis, whom he had not seen since the old home in Gallipolis, Ohio, had been broken up 20 years ago after the death of the mother.

Rupe and his sisters now are attempting to locate another brother, Everett Rupe, who separated from his family at the time all left Gallipolis.

"Car No. 403102 has robin's nest on rods stop please arrange for supply of worms at terminals stop the mother is in charge."

Dresses of Spun Glass Now Costume Novelty

Glass slippers are not new, but it has been left to 1933 to produce an evening gown of the same material.

Dressmakers like to experiment with new fabrics, and this latest one certainly gives them plenty of scope. But it requires careful handling. It is spun glass, and the very delicate threads would be broken if a sewing machine were used in making garments from it. Everything must be done by hand. The stuff can, however, be cut with ordinary scissors.

And the dresses made from it! They are no heavier to wear than a good taffeta, and their shimmering surface makes them fascinating to look at. They can even be washed, though naturally not quite in the ordinary way. They are cleaned with a cloth soaked in petrol, or rubbed very gently, with soapuds.

Will they catch on? That, perhaps, is not so easy to answer. Women are always interested in dress novelties, but that doesn't necessarily mean that they want to buy and wear them. On the other hand, if a few prominent people lead the way, there may be a keen demand for the glass dresses.

KEEP IN THE OPEN

It is no use for one to stand in the shade and complain that the sun does not shine upon him. Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is the best laxative for everybody. Senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It has the average person's bowels as regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time.

You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore, ready for use. Member N. R. A.

CHEAP FERTILIZER

Phosphoric acid is one of the world's most important acids—used in the preparation of baking powders, self-rising flours, water softeners, fertilizers, rustproofing compounds, soft drinks, etc. It is now being produced to the extent of 170 tons a day in a plant at Nashville, Tenn. The plant closely resembles an iron blast furnace and uses as its raw materials phosphate rock, sand, coke, and water. By this method it is said, a concentrated fertilizer can be manufactured which will save much money to the farmers. A synthetic rock suitable for building roads is obtained as a by-product.
