CARRIZOZO, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY MAR. 22, 1935

NUMBER 42

Business Men's Club

Carrizozo, New Mexico,
March 18, 1935.
Mrs. Era B. Smith, Editor,
Lincoln County News,
Carrizozo, New Mexico.

Dear Mrs. Smith:-

I am enclosing a copy of letter addressed to the Carrizozo Outlook covering the matter of a federal building for Carrizozo.

This letter shows the present status of the matter and apparently there is nothing further that we can do as the revenue derived from the Carrizozo post office does not meet the legal requirements and consequently the post office department will not recommend a survey at this time.

The recommendation has to originate with the post-office department afterwards which each department of the government concerned enters into the investigation and survey. Then finally the project is considered by a committee consisting of officials of the post office and treasury departments.

Unless some one can offer another course to pursue. I do not think there is any use of taking the matter up any further.

Yours very sincerely,
Business Men's Club,
F. L. Boughner, Sec.

March 18, 1935.

Mr. A. L. Burke, Editor,
The Carrizozo Outlook,
Carrizozo, N. M.

Dear Mr. Burke:-

Your article in last week's edition of the Outlook under the heading: "How About Carrizozo" has been noted with interest.

Before going further, however, the writer wishes to state that the matter has already been taken up with our able senator, Carl A. Hatch and this was long before the Alamogordo proposition was thought of, in fact Carrizozo started the ball to rolling and Alamogordo fell in behind on their proposition.

I quote below a letter dated February 21st 1935 addressed to the Honorable Carl A. Hatch and signed by S. W. Purdum, fourth assistant postmaster general.

"This will acknowledge receipt of your letter dated February 18, 1935, requesting that consideration be given the provision of a federal building to house the post office at Carrizozo, New Mexico. We have looked into this matter and find that Carrizozo is an office of the third class with receipts for the calendar year 1934 of $7007. Present legal authorizations in connection with federal building construction limit consideration of government-owned facilities to offices where receipts are at least $10,000.00 per year and the department would not, accordingly, be justified in conducting a federal building survey at Carrizozo at the present time.

Your interest in the project at that point is appreciated and we are sorry that we cannot advise you more favorably."

It is unfortunate for Carrizozo that these restrictions and requirements cannot be liberalized to permit the construction at this time. But if you will increase your subscription list to bring the receipts of the Carrizozo office up to ten thousand dollars per year, then the post office building might be forthcoming. See what you can do.

Very Sincerely,
Fred L. Boughner, Sec.

Barbeque at Cattlemen's Convention

Albuquerque, N. M., March 21.
All work and no play makes a dull livestock convention, so the Roswell Chamber of Commerce believes.

So there will be plenty of entertainment to enliven the stay of New Mexico cattle and sheep growers during the three day convention at Roswell March 25-27.

Because of the joint convention of cattlemen and sheepmen on the 26th, entertainment features will be concentrated on that date. At noon there will be a genuine, old-fashioned barbeque for all the visitors. Those two famous cowboy chefs, Elza White and Harry Thorne, will prepare the feast, so visiting stockmen may be assured of some of the most tasty barbeque into which they ever sunk their teeth.

The barbeque will be held at the Eastern New Mexico State Fair grounds.

Visiting ladies will be guests at a tea at the home of Mrs. J. J. Lane at 2.30 p. m.

At 4:30 p. m. cadets of the Military Institute will put on a special dress parade after which the visitors will inspect the Institute grounds and buildings.
- Committee.

"Liberty or Death!"

Henry Making His "Treason Speech" in the House of Burgesses at Williamsburg

St. John's Church in Richmond, Va

Bust of Henry in the Hall of Fame at N.Y.U.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON MARCH 20, 1775, a group of Virginians gathered in old St. John's church in Richmond. They were delegates to a convention which in the future would be known as the "second revolutionary convention of Virginia," and they were assembled there in spite of the objections of Lord Dunmore, royal governor of the colony, to consider ways and means of safeguarding their liberties as British subjects. On March 23, Patrick Henry, a young lawyer from Hanover county, offered a resolution ending thus:

"Resolved, therefore, That this colony be immediately put into a posture of defense and that a committee prepare a plan for the embodying, arming, and disciplining such a number of men as may be sufficient for that purpose."

Henry then moved the immediate adoption. "This," says St. George Tucker, an eye-witness of the scene that historic day, "produced an animated debate in which Colonel Richard Hland, Mr. Nicholas the treasurer, and I think Colonel Harrison, of Berkeley, and Mr. Pendleton, were opposed to the resolution, as conceiving it to be premature." In opposing the resolution as "premature," these men, patriots though they were and devoted to the cause of liberty, were giving a convenient excuse for their opposition but one which probably was not the real reason. These men were conservatives and some of them, at least, considered Patrick Henry a "dangerous radical."

Ten years before, he had been elected to the house of Burgesses at Williamsburg and had gathered about him a group of younger men and men from the discontented frontier counties of the colony. In May, 1765, he had presented a series of resolutions condemning the Stamp tax which England had imposed upon her American colonies and these resolutions had resulted in a hot debate in which Henry had been opposed by Hland, Pendleton, Randolph, Wythe and other conservatives from the Tidewater aristocracy.

It was during this debate that Henry had ended his speech with the words "Tarquin and Caesar each had his Brutus; Charles the First had Cromwell; and George the Third—Hercules here as the speaker and other members of the assembly cried out angrily: "Treason! Treason!" he had gone on—"may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it!" Brave words, those—as were the words which he was about to utter in reply to the statement of the conservatives that his resolution of March 23, 1775, was "premature."

As a matter of fact, his resolution, rather than being premature, was tardy, when compared to action taken weeks and even months before this time by other colonies and even by some of the counties in Virginia which had already armed and begun drilling their men. But because this "dangerous radical" proposed it, these conservatives opposed it. The other factor involved, however, was this: the colonists had talked of the possibility of war with England but so far no public body in America had spoken of its inevitability and, in calling upon the convention to adopt his resolution, he was asking it virtually to declare war.

No wonder, then, that these conservatives should oppose it. They were prudent politicians; they did not see the necessity of taking such decisive action and for that we cannot blame them. After listening to the "animated debate" on his resolution, Henry arose and began:

"Mr. President, it is natural to man to indulge in illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth and listen to the song of that siren till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not, the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst and provide for it.

"I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging of the future, but by the past. And judging by the past, I wish to know what there has been in the conduct of the British ministry for the last ten years to justify those hopes with which gentlemen have been pleased to solace themselves and the house? Is it that insidious smile with which our petition has lately been received? Trust it not, sir. It will prove a snare to your feet. Suffer not yourselves to be betrayed with a kiss.

"Ask yourself how this gracious reception of our petition comports with these warlike preparations which cover our waters and darken our land. Are fleets and armies necessary to a work of love and reconciliation? Have we shown ourselves so unwilling to be reconciled that force must be called in to win back our love? Let us not deceive ourselves, sir. These are implements of war and subjugation; the last arguments to which kings resort. I ask gentlemen, sir, what means this martial array, if its purpose be not to force us to submission? Can gentlemen assign any other possible motive for it? Has Great Britain any enemy in this quarter of the world to call for all this accumulation of navies and armies? No, sir, she has none. They are meant for us; they can be meant for no other. They are sent over to blind and rivet upon us those chains which the British ministry have been so long forging. And what have we to oppose to them? Shall we try argument? Sir, we have been trying that for the last ten years. Have we anything new to offer upon the subject? Nothing. We have held the subject up in every light of which it is capable; but it has been all in vain. Shall we resort to entreaty and humble supplication? What terms shall we find which have not been already exhausted? Let us not, I beseech you, sir, deceive ourselves longer.

"Sir, we have done everything that could be done to avert the storm which is now coming on. We have petitioned; we have remonstrated; we have supplicated; we have prostrated ourselves before the throne and have implored its interposition to arrest the tyrannical hands of the ministry and parliament. Our petitions have been slighted; our remonstrances have produced additional violence and insult; our supplications have been disregarded, and we have been spurned with contempt from the foot of the throne! In vain, after these things, may we indulge the fond hope of peace and reconciliation. There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free—if we mean to preserve inviolate those inestimable privileges for which we have been so long contending—if we mean not barely to abandon the noble struggle in which we have been so long engaged and which we have pledged ourselves never to abandon until the glorious object of our contest shall be obtained—we must fight! I repeat it, sir, we must fight! An appeal to arms and to the God of hosts is all that is left us!"

It is easy to imagine the intensity of that moment in the little white-painted Richmond church as Patrick Henry's fellow-Virginians listened to him utter the words which they knew in their hearts were true but which, so far, they had been unable to bring themselves to use—"We must fight! I repeat it, sir—we must fight!" Up to this time, according to the eye-witness already quoted, Henry had spoken with great calmness and restraint. But now, as he drew near the conclusion of his speech, his passionate earnestness mounted to this stirring climax:

"They tell us, sir, that we are weak; unable to cope with so formidable an adversary. But when shall we be stronger? Will it be next week, or the next year? Will it be when we are totally disarmed, and when a British guard shall be stationed in every house? Shall we acquire the means of effectual resistance by lying supinely on our back and hugging the delusive phantom of hope, until our enemies shall have bound us hand and foot? Sir, we are not weak, if we make a proper use of those means which the God of nature hath placed in our power. Three millions of people, armed in the holy cause of liberty, and in such a country as that which we possess, are invincible by any force which our enemy can send against us. Besides, sir, shall we not fight our battles alone? There is a just God who presides over the destinies of nations, and who will raise up friends to fight our battles for us. The battle, sir, is not the strong alone; it is the vigilant, the active, the brave. Besides, sir, we have no election. If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late to retrocede from the contest. There is no retreat but in submission and slavery! Our chains are forged! Their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston! The war is inevitable—and let it come! I repeat, sir, let it come.

"It is in vain, sir, to extenuate the matter. Gentlemen may cry, 'Peace, peace,' but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale that sweeps from the North will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it the gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

Such was the speech which, according to one of Henry's biographers (Moses Felt Tyler in the "American Statesman" series, published by the Houghton Mifflin company), "has been committed to memory and declaimed by several generations of American schoolboys, and is now perhaps familiarly known to a larger number of the American people than any other considerable bit of secular prose in our language. The old church at Richmond, in which he made this marvelous speech, is in our time visited every year, as a patriotic shrine, by thousands of pilgrims, who seek earnestly the very spot upon the floor where the orator is believed to have stood when he uttered those words of flame. It is chiefly the tradition of that one speech which today keeps alive, in millions of homes, the name of Patrick Henry and which lifts him, in the popular faith, almost to the rank of some mythical hero of romance."

New Mexico's share of federal relief money for February was $289,865. For general relief purposes $260,000 was granted. The transient service received $14,000, the emergency education program's share was $12,500, and $3,465 was assigned to the student's aid.

Appointment of Britton Diller as editor and publisher of the Arizona Weekly Gazette, has been announced by the Arizona Publishing Company. Diller previously published the Chandler Arizona. He replaces Robert Denton, Jr., who has resigned to accept a position in Los Angeles.

How waters of the Colorado, now held in storage by the Boulder dam, will probably be disposed of as revealed in a preliminary engineering report, has been adopted by the Colorado river commission. The report assumed that Arizona would receive annually in acre feet 3,377,000 and New Mexico 30,000.

Most of the cotton contract forms necessary for carrying out the 1935 cotton adjustment program in Dona Ana county, have been received, according to A. L. Williams, assistant in cotton adjustment. Actual work, however, is delayed until printed regulations are received from Washington on the procedure which must be followed.

Takiguchi and E. Takehara, widely known Japanese farmers, are enjoined from possessing or cultivating agriculture lands in rulings handed down by Superior Judge M. T. Phelps of Phoenix in two alien law actions. The suits were among a number filed shortly after many white farmers of the Salt River valley protested against what they termed an "influx of alien farmers."

Within three months time each county in New Mexico is required to make a one-mill levy for health purposes, at the same time the new ten-health district officer law becomes effective. The new law was so amended that counties now having health service may retain such, though their officers are to be designated as assistants to the ten officers created by the state. The cost will be $48,000 a year.

Arizona's unemployables number 7,231 persons, D. B. Wiley, comptroller of the state welfare board, stated recently at a public hearing in Phoenix, held to discuss the merits of the administration's proposed new sales tax. Under the new policies adopted by the federal government, the load of carrying these indigent and persons who are unable to work will be shifted to the state and counties at an expense of about $450,000 a year, Wiley said.

Howard S. Reed, PWA engineer for Arizona, announced a public works program involving approximately $75,000,000 has been prepared in Arizona since Feb. 1. Practically every county in the state has filed applications for appropriations for purposes ranging from improving educational systems to construction of streets and public highways. A survey shows $9,789,833 would be used for city streets and highways, $1,590,770 for public playgrounds, parks and recreation facilities, and $1,195,450 for schools and education system improvements.

SYNOPSIS

Prudence Schuyler comes to Prosperity Farm to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, his health broken by tragedy. The second day Prudence falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, a neighbor. There is at once a mutual attraction, but Prudence suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife, Len Calloway tries to buy Prudence's timber, but she contracts with Rod to dispose of the trees. David comes to the farm. Prudence's companion Rod and Jean, Rod's thirteen-year-old niece, to a circus, Chicago, an old clown, is accidentally killed. He was the grandfather of Milly Gooch, one of the circus riders. Rod became friendly with Milly when she lived on Prosperity Farm. Calloway intimidates laborers so that they cannot be hired to cut the timber for Rodney Gerard. After Chicago's death Rod calls on Milly to see if he can be of any help. Prudence sees in a newspaper a flashlight picture of him with Milly. Rodney goes to New York for timber cutters, taking David with him to help select men from among the Rescue Mission hangers-on. Rod sends word of his coming with a crew of laborers. To keep the knowledge of the workers' arrival from Calloway, Prudence enters her timber tract with him on the pretense of bargaining on the lumbering. He confines her in a cabin. An escaped convict appears and robs Prudence of her pearls. Then Rod arrives and holds a gun on Calloway and the convict, recovering the jewels. Escorting Prudence home, Gerard assumes something of a domineering attitude, which the girl resents; and in a spirit of defiance she tells him she is engaged to Jim Armstrong, Rodney's closest friend. Twenty-five men are brought to the forest and put to work.

"Sure, an' ye're sayin' little about the chance ye took," he growled.

"Three cheers for the Big Boss!" someone shouted.

In the midst of the deafening response Prudence started down the trail to her car parked on the road. Body and mind were in a tumult. When Rodney Gerard had flung himself under that falling tree, the world had stopped for her. Nothing, nothing mattered, if he were safe, she had vowed passionately.

As she stepped from the car, Jean flung herself upon her.

"Oh, Miss Prue! Miss Prue! I'm so glad you've come!" Her breath caught in a sob. "I've got something cagy to tell you!"

Prudence laid an arm across the fur-covered shoulders.

"Don't get jittery, dear. Come into the house and tell me about it."

Jean closed both doors. "Can anyone hear?"

Impatient at her temperamental response to Jean's histrionics, Prudence shook her head vigorously.

"All right. Come over by the mantle."

Standing close, she whispered:

"Len Calloway's got something up his sleeve."

The information coincided so exactly with what Prudence had been suspecting that her response was immediate.

"I thought so. What have you found out? Quick! Tell me!"

"About an hour ago I was looking round the gun room at home—I had a hunch that I might find your jewels there—I thought—well, I thought perhaps I might—I might have walked in my sleep when I was visiting you—you know I was nuts about them—and have taken them—not knowing it—understand?"

Prudence nodded. She understood perfectly. Loyal little soul. Jean drew a long, relieved sigh.

"You would. I was poking round when I heard someone coming. I was scared! My father uses that room. I knew he'd be mad if he found me there, so I slipped behind one of the window hangings. He opened the door softly. Said to someone:

"Come in!"

"My heart was pounding as if its engine was running on high. Two people! I thought, 'I'll never get out.' My father growled:

"Come across, Calloway. What's on your mind now?"

"What did Calloway want?"

"I don't know. I remembered that I'd promised you that I wouldn't pry, so I stuck my fingers in my ears hard."

If only the child hadn't taken that vital moment to keep her promise, Prudence wished fervently.

"Go on, Jean. You must have heard something."

"Sure, I heard something. After I'd kept my fingers in my ears for—it seemed hours, I pulled them out. I heard Mr. Calloway say:

"I'm going."

"He didn't see you, did he?"

"Gee, you're pinching!" Jean rubbed her shoulder as Prudence quickly removed her hand. "Guess you're as excited as I am. Mr. Calloway didn't come to the window. His voice sounded as if he was at the door, for he said quite loud:

"Tonight at the old smithy. Eight. Repeat there. Safer than here. Too many doors and windows in this house."

"When he said that I almost died, but I was live enough to hear my father say:

"It's a payment on delivery proposition, Len? Sure?"

"Sure. Does know me to break my word? I may be a hard man, but I'm just Milly Gooch in at the Puffers. I suppose she's come to see Rod."

"Milly?"

"That was all I heard Father say, for the door closed. I waited till I was sure they were gone. Then I sneaked out and made Patch drive me over here."

Prudence crossed to the window. So Milly Gooch had arrived on the scene. Now what would happen? She thrust the thought of the circus rider into the back of her mind and said without turning:

"Repeat what Calloway said about meeting your father, Jean."

"Tonight at the old smithy. Eight."

"Eight o'clock? Are you sure?"

"Yep."

"Where's the smithy?"

"He meant the old blacksmith shop. When Grandfather ran a big farm he had the horses shod there. Uncle Rod keeps it in repair because he thinks it's interesting."

"Perhaps Mr. Calloway has engaged your father to boss a lumber crew for him."

"Payment on delivery doesn't sound like that kind of a job. Father boss a crew? Don't be dumb! It's something else. You don't think it is anything that will hurt Uncle Rod, do you, Miss Prue?"

"Of course not. Perhaps they're planning a party for—"

"Sure, an' Ye're Saying Little About the Chance Ye Took."

That's just what it is. Weren't we foolish not to think of it before? By the way, Jean, tell me again where to find that blacksmith shop."

Before the mirror in her room Prudence zipped the jacket of her skirt over the orange shirt. She pulled on warm oversocks, fastened heavy boots, while her thoughts ran on:

"What luck that Dave phoned he was dining at High Ledges. He would go into the air if he knew what I am about to do. What he doesn't know won't worry him. I suggested that Macky go to the early movie with the Puffers, and presto, the way was cleared for my personally conducted expedition to the smithy to find out what the rendezvous of Calloway and Walter Gerard means. I can't get lost. The snow is marked with ski-tracks. No danger of meeting anyone. Eight o'clock is zero hour. How soon should I start? I ought to be parked long before the conspirators arrive."

She counted the strokes of the old clock in the hall. Seven. Better get going. She thrust a flashlight into the pocket of her trousers. In the back hall she frowned appraisingly at the collection of impediments hanging and leaping against the walls.

"Skis or snowshoes?" She visualized a steep declivity. "The skis have it," she decided, and shouldered a pair. Poles in hand, she stole around the house to the road.

With frequent pauses to listen, she entered the old lumber road that wound up to the sky line. She looked back. What was that? A shadow across a patch of light! She waited. Held her breath. Would it come again? No. Must have been a vine swaying.

Resolute, she turned her back on warmth and security and slipped and stumbled over the rough road whose hidden pitfalls were tricked out with spots of snow. Was she doing a crazy thing to try to find out what Walter Gerard and Calloway were scheming about? She was not. In spite of her reassurance to Jean, she was convinced that they were conspiring against the lumber firm of Schuyler and Gerard. That being the case, it was her job to find out what it was all about, wasn't it?

She adjusted her skis, picked up her poles, and slid on between screeled, phalanxes of evergreens. She had a prickling sense that she was not alone in the woods. Had a shadow stopped behind that large pine, or was it a ghostly illusion?

"Don't be foolish," she scolded herself. "Everyone you know is too busy with his own affairs to be stalking you."

She proceeded cautiously. The clasp of a ski snapped open, the leather binding slipped from her heel.

"Damn!" she muttered, and readjusted the ski. Upright, she rested on her poles until she could collect her breath. A little afraid? What was there to fear now that the convict was behind bars? Didn't every minute count? She looked over her shoulder. She had shaken off that skulking shadow. Of course, it had been but a creature of her always superactive imagination. Just the same, she was glad to have left it behind.

She stopped on a little shelf of level land on the hillside. Was that shadowy blotch the blacksmith shop?

Her heart caught and raced on. Was she becoming infected with fright? She wouldn't turn back now. Time was flying. Calloway and Walter Gerard might reach the smithy first. Then where would she be? She couldn't see herself listening at cracks and windows. She must get inside before they came.

She frowned at the slope which, until it neared the road, was almost clear of trees. White. Hard. Dry. A jump would save time. Dare she try it? She had been good once. Why not? It was a short jump. Suppose she fopped? What was one fop in the day's work?

She dropped her poles, skilled back on the level, rounded up all the instructions she could remember.

She turned. Raced forward. She was in the air! She landed. Was she going over? No. She clasped her hands behind her. Not too bad when she had been so long without practice. Steady on her skis again. They barely etched the hard surface. She was going like a thousand race horses merged in one.

The smithy! Not so far away as she had thought. Straight ahead. She would crash into it. She must stop! How did one stop? She had forgotten. She would drop.

Stars rained in a golden shower. The world rocked. She opened her eyes. That crash ought to have broken every bone in her body, she reflected, as she rolled over on her side. She pulled herself to one knee, floundered upright on her skis.

The blacksmith shop was barely two feet away. Its one window stared at her like a lidless eye. No light! That meant that she was the first arrival at the "conference."

In a pool of purple shadow at the foot of a giant spruce, she removed her skis cautiously and rested them against the tree. No sound but the whispers among the dark green boughs and the chime of fairy ice bells. No shadow could stalk her down that alide. She had better get under cover.

She tiptoed to the shop.

Soundlessly she pressed her fingers against the door. Noiselessly it swung in. Too easy. She peered into the dim interior. Swallowed the lump in her throat.

"Anyone h-ere?" she inquired softly.

Quiet as a tomb and cold as death. Cheery comparison! She stepped over the threshold and closed the door, crossed the floor, which broadcast a creak with every cautious step, and appreciated the narrow space between forge and wall. Should she slip in there? No. Too near the conspirators. Did that opening at the left lead into a shed?

The glow of her flashlight illumined the corners of a lean-to. That high pile of firewood would serve as a screen if either of the conspirators felt moved to investigate. She pulled off her mittens, glanced at the illuminated dial of her wrist watch. Five minutes before eight.

She leaned against the door frame. Why didn't the men come? How long should she wait? It would take longer to go back than it had to come. If she weren't at home by nine-thirty, when the movies were out, David would be wild with anxiety.

Crunch! Crunch!

Someone coming! This time her heart refused to be swallowed; it parked in her throat and thumped deafeningly. Calloway or Walter Gerard? As a companion in a lonely shack there wasn't much choice between them. Of course, the fiery Len was a "just man."

A light! It flickered. She crouched behind the wood pile. A door closing? The sound as of a lantern set down. The lean-to doorway framed a soft glow. The door again!

"I beat you to it, Calloway."

"That was, Walter Gerard's silky, assured voice."

"Come across with the money, Len."

"How do I know you've done the trick, Walt?"

"If you don't believe me, go and look at the truck. It laid down and died almost at the door of the cattle barn. Neatest trick of the week."

"What time did it crack-up?"

"Didn't you set the time? Just as the crew had finished supper. They got the full effect of the crash. I hung around for a few minutes to make sure they were on; then I beat it. No chance of a fop now, the cart's backed up, you win. Don't stall, Calloway, come across with the money you promised—when you wrote asking me to come to High Ledges to do a little work for you. Cash on delivery, remember—but, of course, you won't stall, you're such an honest man."

There was a sardonic, wirth-in-Walter Gerard's voice and a hint of hatred.

"Oh, all right. I'll pay. Here's your money."

Prudence crept on hands and knees to the doorway. She must watch the passing of that money. Someone would pay for the destruction of the truck belonging to the firm of Schuyler and Gerard, and it wouldn't be either of the partners.

Crouched in the dusk, she watched the two men standing within the radius of light from an oil lantern on the forge. A knitted cap was pulled low over Calloway's ears. Facing him, Walter Gerard counted the bills in hand.

"Okay. Now I'll light out. I'm not going back to the house. I'll catch a ride."

A tap on the window! Another tap! "Put out that light!"

The harsh whisper was Walter Gerard's. The shop went dark. Prudence tiptoed to the wood pile. She misjudged the distance, struck it. With sickening moderation and rumble the sticks began to slide.

She held her breath. Now what would happen? Someone was breathing hard at the lean-to opening.

"Find out who's at that window, Walt." It was Calloway's hoarse low voice; she couldn't mistake it. "If take care of the snooper hiding in here."

CHAPTER XI

Dusk in the living room at High Ledges. A glowing fire on the hearth. A vague sense of tension in the air. A coffee table with empty Sevres cups. Jean in a gay little frock behind it. Jim Armstrong sprawled in a big chair. David Schuyler, chin in cupped hands, frowning at space. Two black field spaniels prone on the rug. Rodney Gerard, arm on the mantel, staring at the licking flames.

"I know as well as I know that I'm standing here that someone's working on the crew," said Gerard. "That's why I persuaded you to stay for dinner, Dave. Wanted to talk it over. Two of my men stacked today. They were surly when I asked why. Said they had a pain. 'Something they'd eat, they guessed.' Have either of you noticed anything to make you uneasy, or am I having a bad case of the jitters? What do you think, Jim?"

Armstrong rose "precipitately to knock his pipe against an andiron. "I agree with you, Rod. Something is working on the crew. Via the grapevine route. In fact I'm so uneasy that I'm going back to my cabin now."

Rodney Gerard threw his cigarette into the fire. "I'm going with you."

David Schuyler rose. "I haven't seen the inside of the cattle barn since it was made into a bunk-house. I'll drop in on my boys."

Armstrong stopped on his way to the door. "Better not tonight. I may be having the heebie-jeebies, but I have a hunch we'll find things in a mess."

"All the more reason I should go."

"What's the matter, K. K.?"

Rodney Gerard's sharp question focused attention on Jean, who was standing in the geographical center of the room twisting the gayly printed crepe of her skirt between nervous fingers. Her brow was as furrowed as a thirteen-year-old brow may be. Her eyes seemed enormous as she looked at Gerard.

Clean Spark Plugs Will Insure Best Performance

Motorists who get the best performance from their automobile are the ones who give proper attention to the cleaning and readjusting of the spark plugs among other important details.

This observation was made, by a prominent engineer, who has given much study to economical operation of automobiles.

A spark plug, he says, fires more than 5,000,000 times during every 8,500 miles of car operation. The spark plug firing points, therefore, must be kept at proper adjustment.

If they are not the engine will miss. This means uneven engine performance although the driver may not be aware of it. On the other hand, a coating from the combustion gases forms on spark plug insulators usually after 8,500 miles of operation, which also causes missing and a waste of one out of every ten gallons of gasoline.

It is quite natural that the motorist who twice a year has his spark plugs cleaned and adjusted gets more miles per gallon of gasoline; gets better car performance; and reduces repair expense to a minimum.

POULTRY

MODEL PULLET SURE TO BE WORTH MORE

Marked Advance in Feed Is Cited as Reason.

By F. H. Branch, Extension Economist in Farm Management, Massachusetts State College, WNU Service.

A well grown pullet in 1935 will cost about $1.50 or approximately 10 per cent more than last year. The increase over last year's costs is caused by a marked advance in feed prices and a moderate increase in labor charges.

In making calculations, it was estimated that in order to obtain 100 healthy pullets, the poultryman must buy about 250 baby chicks. About half of these will be cockerels, and some losses probably will be sustained during the brooding and rearing season. The cost of the chicks amounts to about 35 cents per pullet. Feed costs for six or seven months will amount to about 90 cents. The labor of taking care of one pullet in a flock results in about 25 cents' worth of labor being charged against each pullet. Overhead costs, including depreciation and interest on buildings and equipment amount to about 20 cents, and miscellaneous cash costs, such as fuel, litter and grit, come to about 18 cents, bringing the total cost to $1.95 for each pullet.

But a by-product of the business of raising pullets is a supply of cockerels which may be sold as broilers, and the return from broilers is a credit, in calculating the cost of raising pullets. Broilers should be worth about 45 cents each, thus reducing the cost of each pullet to $1.50.

These calculations may serve as a basis for poultrymen in computing the cost of establishing flocks this year.

Sanitary Feeding Urged by College Poultryman

Feeding grain and mash in troughs is the cleanest and most accurate method of supplying the poultry flock with their daily grain ration, says O. W. Knox, Jr., extension poultryman, University College of Agriculture, Fayetteville, Ark., and it has largely taken the place of the old method, both unsanitary and uncertain, of feeding it in the litter.

"The grain is put in troughs and night into a V-shaped trough, constructed of one by six-inch material. This method is sanitary, and the exact amount of grain the hens consume can be regulated, Knox pointed out. A light feed is given in the morning, and a heavy feeding, all the hens will eat, is given at night. "Some poultrymen prefer to hopper feed their grain, keeping it before the hens at all times. This method is sanitary, but the amount of grain fed cannot be regulated as easily as in trough feeding," he says.

"The exact amount fed varies with the breed and the season of the year, and the poultryman must learn to regulate the amount of grain his birds will eat."

Ducks Are Sensitive

Ducks are far more sensitive than ordinary fowls, and mistakes in management frequently lead to a complete moult. Do not imagine that free-range ducks can secure half their living during winter months. Ducks in full lay will consume about five ounces of food daily—approximately two ounces of grain and three of wet mash. For grain use wheat, or equal weights of wheat and corn, fed in troughs in the morning, and they love to shovel it out of a trough containing a small quantity of water.—Montreal Herald.

Do Not Overcrowd

The poultryman who places too many layers in the laying house is headed for small profits and trouble. In small buildings 5 square feet of floor space should be allowed for each bird and in larger ones 3 square feet. If the birds are crowded they will be uncomfortable, competition for feed at the hoppers and for water at the fountains will be keen, they will be more susceptible to disease, and mortality is sure to be heavy. One should aim to have the laying houses not too full and not the opposite.

In the Poultry Yard

The surest way to prevent frozen combs is to provide heat during zero weather.

Turkeys, especially when kept in confinement, require ample supplies of water and grit.

Fowl paralysis did not respond to feeding treatment at the Iowa experiment station. Neither the cause nor the cure for this chicken disease is known.

Hens lay their largest eggs after having reached maturity or after becoming "hens" after their period of pulthood.

Fowl pox is more serious this winter than in previous seasons, according to reports received by the poultry department of the Ohio State university.

The rooster with swollen head and closed eye has the roup, and should not be in the flock with healthy birds, as this disease is highly contagious and cured with difficulty when present.

AVOIRDUPOIS IN DEMAND

Current prices for wives in Cyprus, Mediterranean Isle owned by Britain, range from $100 for a slim wench, to $500 for a buxom girl with plenty of curves. The buying and selling of girls for marriage is, of course, legal. The girls are the daughters of Turkish parents, who sell them to the highest bidders, usually Arabs from Palestine. A document has to be drawn up and stamped, and duty is paid. In the case of divorce, full recompense must be given; but in virtually every case the girls are contented.—Grit.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT "Acid Indigestion"

A WAY THAT RELIEVES THE CAUSE IN A FEW MINUTES

Many people who think they have "weak stomachs" or "indigestion," doctors say, suffer in reality from nothing more serious than acid stomach. And this common ailment can usually be relieved now, in minutes. All you do is take familiar Phillips' Milk of Magnesia after meals. This acts to almost immediately neutralize the stomach acidity that brings on your trouble. You feel like a new person!

Try this just once. Take either the familiar liquid "PHILLIPS'" or the new "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets." But watch out that you get the Genuine PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets are now on sale at all drug stores everywhere. Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

Emphasis on Appearance and Beauty

Beauty of exterior appearance, and quality of interior appointments have never been more evident in any car yet built by Chevrolet than in the new 1935 Master De Luxe models.

Credit for the greater part of this emphasis on appearance and beauty is ascribed to woman's increasing influence in making the selection of the automobile, according to William E. Holler, general sales manager of Chevrolet Motor Company.

"The mechanical perfection of the automobile gave women the confidence in their ability to drive and drive well," said Mr. Holler. "Mechanical features are no longer a mystery to the majority of feminine motorists. But whether or not mechanical features are a more potent factor in selling the ladies, remains in doubt.

"Beauty in appearance and quality of appointment transcends every other factor in appealing to the feminine buyer. That is why the new 1935 Master De Luxe Chevrolets are offered with sparkling colors, fine appearance and attractive convenient interiors. These cars also have the snap of outstanding performance with consequent ease of handling because women are much more motor-wise today than the men were ten years ago and they demand performance along with beauty.

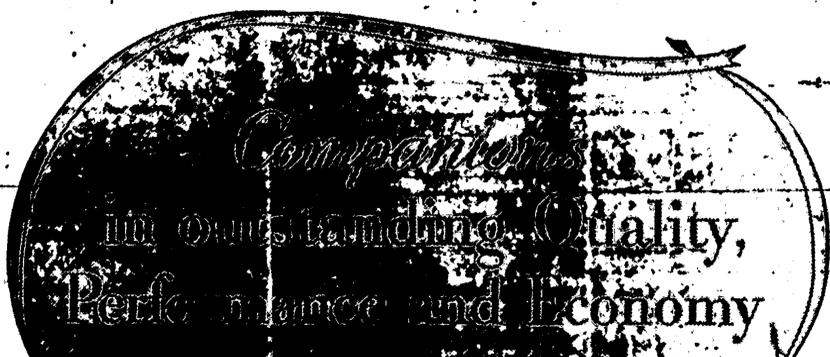

"Chevrolet's 17 1/2 to 1 steering ratio—making it easy to turn the car—was incorporated for the dainty feminine hand. The powerful cable-controlled brakes which respond to the slightest touch of the pointed slipper, were designed for the light feminine foot. Likewise it was for the ladies with their delicate gowns that wide doors and spacious interiors were designed.

"Chevrolet beauty and ease of operation," Mr. Holler stated, "are no chance creations, rather they are the result of painstaking attention to the expressed desires of both women and men alike."

Develops New Vaccine for Bacterial Diseases

ONE of the most promising developments in recent years in the field of vaccine therapy was recently announced by the University of California on the basis of research results obtained by Dr. A. P. Krueger, associate professor of bacteriology.

the cell contents of disease bacteria which have been killed by heat or chemicals. It is Doctor Krueger's conclusion that the consistent failure of many of these preparations is due to alterations in the protein of the bacteria induced by the heat or chemicals used to kill them.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

FOR THE BUSY HOUSEKEEPER

IN MANY homes fresh cookies are so much more enjoyed than a large amount baked at one time. Here is the ice-box cookie which may be kept many days and when a tin of fresh cookies is wanted, slice off a few, put them in the oven and bake them as brown as you like.

Ice-Box Cookies.

Take one cupful each of butter, brown and granulated sugar, two eggs, one teaspoonful each of salt and soda, one cupful of nutmeats, one teaspoonful each of almond and vanilla extract and four and one-fourth cupfuls of flour.

Another food so much liked in all our homes is fresh rolls. It takes time to prepare a light and crisp roll. Here is a recipe which will keep for a week or longer in the ice chest and a pan of biscuits may be baked any time one cares to serve them:

Ice-Box Rolls.

Dissolve two compressed yeast cakes in one-fourth of a cupful of warm water, adding two teaspoonfuls of sugar. Add two tablespoonfuls of shortening, one tablespoonful of salt, one-half cupful of sugar to a pint of boiling water. Beat two eggs and mix all together made him forget young frogs. A fat meadow mouse would be much better eating than a young frog.

Reddy became more careful than ever. He crept along almost on his stomach in the direction from which that scent came. All the time Danny Meadow Mouse was having pleasant dreams in that comfortable place on the banks of the Smiling Pool, wholly unconscious that danger was anywhere near.

QUESTION BOX by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn: I have a boy friend who always says: "Life would be great if it were not for two things." He never tells me what the two things are. Do you know?

Truly yours, P. ROXIDE.

Answer: The two things he refers to are "Blonds and Brinnettes."

Dear Mr. Wynn: If a gentleman had trouble with his voice and can't talk good, what is wrong with him? Has he a horse in de troat or has he a colt in de head?

Yours, A. WEENER SCHNITZEL.

Answer: Maybe both.

Dear Mr. Wynn: I am engaged to be married and my intended husband gave me an engagement ring with a diamond in it. My father says it is an imitation diamond and I say it is genuine. Will you please

DICK TAPPITT put down his glass of applejack and looked across at Garrison with eyes that shone.

"Maybe you've heard of grander, crazier guys than Sam," he said; "I never have."

"And you mean to tell me," the publicity man asked, "that he deliberately broke his leg so you and Mollie would take this job? Man, what a story!"

He pulled a scratch pad toward him and began scribbling notes on it. The two were alone in his office, near the west end of Zenith studio's administration building. Dick Tappitt lounged back on the big leather davenport and approved!

"Good! This is something I'd really like to see played up. It might help Sam get a better break, and that's what I want more than anything else. He's the best honest-to-Pets pal a man ever had, and I—well, I feel as if I'd given him kind of a raw deal."

"You see, Sam, and I've been hoofing together for about three years—five-a-day routine on the small time back East. Six months ago we met Mollie; she was on the same bill with us in St. Joe. Well, right away Sam wanted her to join, so, after the show he looked her up, they had a talk, and next day we were rehearsing a new trio song-and-dance act."

"Mollie did worlds for us," he went on; "she added the sex appeal and the touch of class our stuff had been needing. What's more, we all got along well together. In a way, though, that was the rub: before long both Sam and I were nuts about Mollie."

"She wasn't the sort of a girl to bust things up by being partial, so she handled us with kid gloves. Still, Sam could guess what I knew: that Mollie really cared for me. Understand, I'm not taking anything for granted; Sam talked to me and offered best wishes the day before we left to come out here. That's the kind of 24-karat boy he is, and ever since then he's tried to help us along and ease himself out of the picture. But I wouldn't have that."

He lit a cigarette, rose, and commenced to walk about the room. It was evident the situation affected him deeply. Garrison wore a look of encouraging interest and kept pencil poised above paper. This, he knew, was first-rate material on a subject worthy of attention. Mollie Hoppe and Dick Tappitt were certain to become as famous as any dancing team in pictures. The screen test of them had been today established that.

"We were getting up in the game," Dick resumed; "making a hit on the bigger circuits. But we all knew there wasn't much further to go; vaudeville's a very sick business these days. So we pooled our dough, bought a flivver, and steamed West. We had some fancy ideas about what we'd do when we hit Hollywood; but a month of pounding the pavements and chasing agents after we got here cured those."

"That was when Sam began to do his stuff. First he took an uber's job to keep us going, then he landed Mollie and me a tryout in a cabaret downtown. And now—now he's pulled this. What a d—n fool—and what a prince!"

"Just how did this leg-breaking business happen?" asked Garrison. The dancer grinned to hide his emotion.

"Well, when we clicked in the beach job, we wanted to have Sam back with us, but he stalled and said he guessed he'd stick with what he had. Of course I knew the answer: by that time Mollie and I weren't hiding our feelings much, and Sam thought he'd be in the way."

"Poor guy—he sure had the wrong slant! Mollie felt bad about it, and naturally I did too. I mean, after losing her to me and then with all he'd done for us, it seemed just plain lousy to have him cut out of the act. That's why when this offer came along, we said nothing doing unless Sam's included. It was Mollie's idea, and I backed her up strong."

"Well, sir, Sam goes out to the ABC plant, tells 'em he's an experienced stunt man, and gets on as a parachute jumper. They sent him up to ball out at a thousand feet, and he on purpose doesn't pull the cord until he's two hundred feet from ground. See the scheme? He knew if he had an accident that laid him up, we'd sign on here."

"Mollie went over to the hospital to visit him; that's why she's late for this conference. I wanted to go along, but—Gee, what can you say to a bird like that? First I let him support me, then I glum onto all the good breaks, and finally I grab off the girl he loves—and this is how he hits back! Lord, it sure gets me!"

As he dropped down on the divan again, a bell rang. Garrison picked up the phone at his elbow, said: "Yes?"

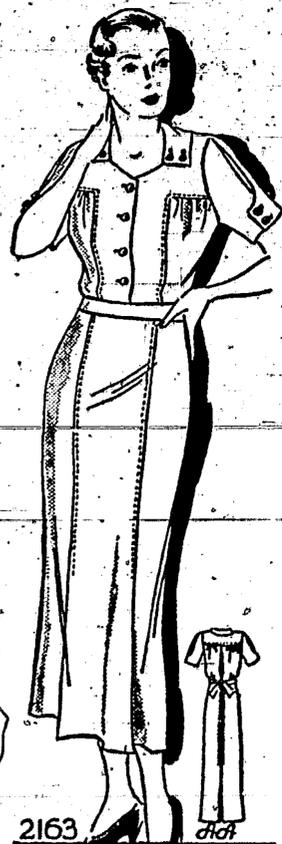

"McSweeney of the Journal," a crisp voice announced; "what's the lowdown on this thing the dancer you were raving over just pulled?"

"I haven't," said Louis after an instant, "the cockyest notion who or what you're talking about."

"Come on—cut it, will ya? You know d—n well what I mean. That Mollie Hoppe you claim is due to be a wow phoned the license bureau from Good Samaritan hospital ten minutes ago; she wants to file notice of intention with some bird named Sam Trotter. One of my boys called her and asked for details, but all she said was she'd just found out how close sympathy is to love. Now what's the g story?"

HOUSE FROCK ON TAILORED LINES

If you are a little tired of the general run of house frocks you'll enjoy the trimly tailored lines of this design, with its unusual buttoned-down collar and buttoned-over sleeves. For it's one of those casual shirtwaist styles—so very popular nowadays—and it has a slenderizing panel up the front, to make it very becoming to the larger figure: The way the bodice is gathered to the youthful yoke and slanted at the back is not only very smart but it gives the comfortable fullness that women demand of house frocks. Made of cotton broadcloth, or printed pique this dress would be charming and every bit as chic as a sports frock!

Pattern 2163 is available in sizes 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 30 takes 4 1/2 yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Monte Cristo's Famous Prison for Sale

THE famous Chateau d'If, off the coast of Marseilles, France, is now for sale. The prison on the island is the one in which the storied Count of Monte Cristo was incarcerated for so many years before he finally made his escape as the dead abbe. After being cast into the sea the count (Edmond Dantes) was saved from death when picked up by river pirates. The owner of the chateau is desirous of selling it and anyone seeking one perfectly good prison can have it at a bargain.

Heavy Fighting Reported as Greek Government Seeks to Put Down Insurrection—Senator Robinson Scores Huey Long in Heated Senate Session.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union

THE Greek government is making a grim effort to stamp out the fast growing revolt which started in Crete and has spread to the mainland. Greek government planes bombed the home in Crete of former Premier Elgutherios Venizelos, and also struck at five naval vessels manned by rebels standing off the shores of Crete. Venizelos is openly heading the forces of sedition, and reports say, has seized $1,000,000 from the Canea treasury to finance the revolt.

Martial law prevails throughout the country; rail, telephone and telegraphic communications have been cut off and normal activities suspended.

Heavy fighting with serious losses on both sides have been reported in the Struma valley, and in the Macedonian city of Kavalla. Fear has been expressed that the country will be plunged into a fractional civil war of unestimated proportions. The government has offered amnesty to the rebel troops if they capitulate peacefully.

Saloniki harbor has been heavily mined in preparation for an attack by the rebel fleet, and land batteries have been reinforced by heavy caliber naval guns. Eight additional classes have been called to the colors as wounded troops pour into Saloniki from the battlefield. The government claims 100,000 loyal troops, 60 airplanes and a quantity of heavy motorized artillery are ready, although good part of this equipment is said to be old and defective.

A report from Alexandria claims that Venizelos has abandoned Crete and fled toward Egypt.

The rebellion had been plotted for a whole year, and broke when 20 naval officers, both active and retired, seized the Salamis arsenal. As the revolt spread, rebels boarded the five warships while the crews were ignorant of the plan, and put under steam. Government planes were dispatched to the scene and pursued the rebel ships down the Aegean sea. The cruiser Averoff was struck by an aerial bomb while the vessel lay in Souda bay, near Crete, and two other ships were reported to have been overtaken and bombed near the island of Cythera with undetermined damage.

Diminutive King Prajadhipok of Siam has renounced his throne, relinquished his claims to being known as "brother of the moon and possessor of 24 umbrellas," assumed the simpler, if still unpronounceable name of Prince Sukhodaya, and retired to the simple life of an English country gentleman. By his action, the ex-monarch set a record, for it is probably the first time in history that a ruler has abandoned power because his government rejected his demands for greater freedom and democratic control for his people. "My intention that the people should have a real voice in the policy of the government has been ineffective," the ex-king wrote in his message of abdication. "Since I realize that now there is no longer any way of my assisting or protecting the people in the future, I hereby renounce all rights which I had as king or rights of succession, but I reserve the rights which I had formerly enjoyed before accession to the throne."

Prince Ananda, nephew of Prajadhipok, has accepted the throne, reports state. The prince, now eleven years old, is attending school in Lausanne.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, jurist, scholar, soldier and gentleman, is dead. Two days before his ninety-fourth birthday, the beloved "great dissenter" succumbed to the ravages of pneumonia. The next day in the somber Supreme court chamber, the court led by Chief Justice Hughes paid tribute to the man whose career, he said, had been one of "unique distinction." Justice Hughes' voice choked as he spoke. The grand of legislation and the disputes of the day were forgotten in congress as both the house and senate paused while glowing words were said in memory of the retired justice. Funeral services were held in Washington, attended by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, and members of the Supreme court. After the ceremony, Holmes was given military burial in Arlington National cemetery, as befitting one who had served his nation so gallantly. Justice Holmes was born in Boston, the son of the noted American poet of the same name. He entered Harvard and was in his senior year when the Civil war began. He enlisted as a lieutenant, was promoted to a captaincy and retired with the rank of colonel. He was wounded three times. After the war he returned to study and obtained his law degree. In 1852, Holmes was elevated to the Supreme court of Massachusetts, and in 1902, President Roosevelt appointed him to the United States Supreme court. On October 4, 1928, when he was eighty-seven years old, he became the oldest man ever to sit on the bench of the Supreme court. He retired in January, 1932.

SENATE administration leaders have decided to virtually abolish NRA when it expires in June, and set up in its place a plan of self-government in business, eliminating present coercive measures, and giving over administrative functions of the new program to the federal trade commission. This would end one of the administration's most spectacular and far-reaching experiments. In its general form, the plan calls for permission to join in voluntary codes regulating trade practices and eliminating unfair competition. Price fixing will be outlawed. Business and industry will agree to minimum wages and maximum hours, and only when these standards are violated, can the government apply compulsory codes.

At the same time United States District Judge W. G. Borah, in New Orleans, denied a government petition to compel a box manufacturer to comply with the maximum hour and minimum wage provisions of the lumber code, ruling that the national industrial recovery act is unconstitutional. The ruling is expected to bring before the United States Supreme court the constitutionality of the interstate commerce clause of the lumber code.

THAT "ancient repository of dignity," the senate, has been treated to an exhibition of personalities, vituperation, barely avoided flaccid encounters, and general uproar centering about Senator Long that should set a record for even that august body. Goaded into action by the almost daily tirades of Louisiana's Kingfish, majority leader, Joe Robinson of Arkansas arose white with rage and let loose a castigation designed to blast the irrepressible Long into submission. Robinson appealed to the senate to assert itself and put Long, whom he called "Aunt Sam," in his place. Vice President Garner and more than a dozen senators shook hands with Robinson when he closed, and galleries applauded until the chair threatened to clear them. It had no perceptible effect on Long other than to cause him to rush back to the senate chamber, and renew his attack on Robinson.

The next day Huey precipitated another verbal free-for-all when he resumed his one-man campaign against Postmaster General Farley and the New Deal in general. Long charged that Farley was instrumental in quashing an indictment against a bank in which Norman Davis, "ambassador at large," was interested. For his trouble Kingfish received a liberal supply of ridicule. He also sent to the senate post office committee a letter in which the accusation was made that Farley is "profiting" from 25 business concerns in New York city, involving violation of four criminal statutes. When questioned, Farley said he had no statement to make.

CLAY WILLIAMS, head of the NRA, tendered his resignation to the President, starting what is expected to be a wholesale housecleaning of the recovery administration's high command. Chairman Williams explained his action by saying that he had to return to his job as head of one of the country's largest tobacco companies. Three of the four remaining members of the board, Arthur D. Whiteside, Walton Hamilton, and Sidney Hillman, are known to have their resignations ready. Rumors say that the President will not fill the vacancies, but will return the NRA to a one man command.

MONEY markets of the world reacted violently after President Roosevelt declared his administration would seek further jacking up of commodity prices. Stocks rallied in New York, government bonds sagged, and the falling British pound rose four cents. The President hurriedly issued another statement explaining that his advocacy of higher prices did not mean further devaluation of the dollar, at least not for the present. The first statement was made by the President at a press conference, when he was asked if he believed prices had now risen sufficiently to warrant stabilization. He replied that they had not; that they were still too low in relation to debts.

ITALIAN government officials state that nearly 1,000 aviators and several squadrons of planes have sailed for East Africa, and that a second wave of troops has been started to join the 20,000 already massed in Somaliland. General Graziani has been named governor of Somaliland and commander of the troops.

THERE seems to be no doubt about the "pink slip" clause in the income tax law being repealed. Overwhelming sentiment for its abolishment has been expressed in both houses of congress, and the house ways and means committee has already approved the resolution offered by Chairman Doughton. Polls taken disclose a heavy majority in the senate favor repeal, and both Democratic and Republican house leaders are pledged to lend their strength to prompt passage of the measure. Congressional decision on the "pink slips" must be registered before March 15.

BY A vote of 23 to 1 the house ways and means committee approved the Vinson bonus bill, and gave the rival Patman bill a possible edge. The committee instructed Chairman Doughton to ask a wide open rule permitting inflationists to move the Patman measure as a substitute on the floor. Patman supporters claim the house will pass the first bonus bill brought up, but conservatives are working to jockey the "printing press money" measure out of preferred position. The Vinson bill is favored by the American Legion.

DONALD RICHBERG, executive director of the National Emergency council, and one of the closest advisers of the President, "guaranteed" that there would be no monetary inflation as long as Franklin D. Roosevelt is President. His statement came in answer to a questioner at a lecture in Boston.

"If we are to assume that President Roosevelt will be President for the next six years, I can tell you this: I can guarantee there will be no inflation while Franklin D. Roosevelt is President," Richberg said.

He dodged further discussion of the subject, and refused to comment as to what was being done by the government internationally and nationally on monetary policies. However, Richberg did touch on the Townsend plan for payment of $200 monthly to all persons over sixty. He said:

"If everybody over sixty is to get $200 a month, you can be certain it is going to come out of the pockets of everybody between eighteen and sixty. When those under sixty have arrived at the unselfish attitude where they are ready to dig to pay everybody over sixty the $200 a month, there will have been a tremendous spread of real Christianity. But the government can't get the money out of this air."

Richberg flatly denied that the government was issuing baby bonds because bankers had refused to lend the government money, and asserted that several billion dollars more could be borrowed without endangering national credit.

THE American Federation of Labor proposes to find out immediately what are its chances of fully organizing the workers employed in the automobile industry—and if Doctor Wolman's figures are correct it is likely the federation is doomed to be greatly disappointed. The method adopted is the calling of a secret strike vote among members of the 170 federation locals in the industry. Organizer Francis J. Dillon explained this did not necessarily mean there would be a strike, only the federation's national officers having authority to order such action.

"Now is the time to find out, once and for all," he said, "whether the workers in the automobile industry want the American Federation of Labor. If they want the union, we will find it out through these strike votes. If they don't, well . . ."

The automobile industry is in the midst of the busiest season it has had since 1930. The great majority of its workers are not in the federation ranks and probably would not strike; but its plants could be seriously crippled by strikes in allied industries. Perhaps the American Federation of Labor leaders have some way of explaining how all this would help on the cause of national industrial recovery.

SECRETARY OF STATE CORDELL HULL encountered his third success in carrying out his policy of restoring foreign trade by concluding a series of reciprocal agreements with other nations, when a trade treaty with Belgium was signed. Although not entirely satisfactory to Secretary Hull, it was nevertheless a step along the way. The Belgians gave as a tariff or quota concessions on a number of our exports, including automobiles and parts, calculating machines, radios, grapefruit, pears, oatmeal and corn starch. We cut tariffs on plate glass, glass sand, iron and steel mill products, linen fabrics, lace and cement. Reciprocal agreements have been previously concluded with Cuba and Brazil.

THE United States and Great Britain remain unconvinced of Japan's high purpose in China, although Eiji Amagu, foreign office spokesman, declared that Japan is not trying to persuade China to leave the league, and is not urging China to discuss foreign advisers. He also insisted that no attempt is being made to force China into an Asiatic bloc in return for financial assistance. In Washington, William Phelps, acting secretary of state, and Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador, went into conference. Twenty-four hours later it was announced from London that Great Britain together with the United States, France and Japan was "exploring proposals" to help China financially.

By WINNIE LIGHTNER
Actress

"SUDDEN gusts of wind are dreadful to me," confessed Winnie Lightner. "They bring to me the ghost of a man who was always fleeing from the wind, a man who one night, in the middle of a vaudeville skit, confessed to me that he was a murderer. 'From the day this man, who was called 'Sloe,' joined our company, gusts of wind seemed to sweep across the theater whenever our company played."

"This man had a habit of entering doors suddenly, as though he had come on a run—propelled by a power greater than himself—and of slamming doors behind him so that windows rattled."

"We always know when he arrived through the stage entrance because of the slamming of doors and a rush of air which seemed to sweep across the stage and to rush down the halls and through the dressing rooms."

"He never left a door open behind him. It seemed that, almost without his help, doors slammed behind him. People in the company who crossed his path declared that he seemed always to walk in a wind; and that when he would rush away from them, they all agreed that the wind would seem to die away as if it followed him, and that, moreover, the sweet odor which seemed to fill the wind which followed him would die out, too."

"Every one around him grew to dread and fear his presence."

"One night, when he was to give one of the poor little lines against which I was to crack my silly little jokes and smart comment, I was suddenly terrified at his intensity. 'He was to say, 'You wouldn't go back on a chap like me, would you?'"

"Instead, a sudden swirl of air filled with a strange unpleasantly sweet odor blew across the stage, he shuddered and, brandishing his arms before me, cried in terror-stricken tones: 'You wouldn't go back on a murderer like me, would you?'"

"Then he flew off the stage with a great slamming of doors and the rattling of stage fixtures."

"I don't know what comments I made on the stage. I was completely baffled until a few hours later, when the police telephoned me to say that a man who worked in my company had killed himself, and that I should come to identify the body."

"Sloe had made a full confession. It seems he had killed his young wife in a sudden burst of fury over some trifle and had buried her in the garden of their small home on the outskirts of an Illinois town. He then fled. No one had missed them, because they were a strange couple, who made no friends."

"After his confession they found her grave. Across their little garden, police reported, was a wide row where the trees and the lilac bushes and the grass were pressed flat toward the east, as though a great and continuous wind had been blowing across that place for many days and nights."

"The thing that impressed me about his confession was the final sentence. It read: 'The wind blew all night.' 'That's why I don't like to hear the wind at night. Can you blame me?'"

By LAWSON ROBERTSON
Olympic Coach

LAWSON ROBERTSON remembers a weird and ghostly happening at a motor cycle race in 1912. "The night before the race," he narrated, "the racers met at Brighton Beach, N. Y. They had come from all parts of the country. There was a circuit of motor cycle racetracks—one in Buffalo, one in Brooklyn, St. Louis and Newark. The men met at Brighton Beach for a jolly get-together dinner before their race in Newark."

"Before the dinner Arthur Chappell lit a match, gave it to John Albright to light his cigarette, then to Eddie Hasha to light his and then raised the same match to his own cigarette. 'He jumped from his chair so abruptly that he startled every one around him. 'I lit three cigarettes on one match,' he exclaimed. 'I'd give anything not to have done that.' During the race something went wrong with Albright's motor cycle and Albright, Hasha and six spectators were killed."

Menus Are Endless
The menus in French are endless; the variety is overwhelming. The basic foodstuffs are abundant in this land. It is simply a matter of knowing how. And savoir faire applies to your French chef. He takes such a jowly worm as a snail, or such a croaking amphibian as a frog, or such a slimy snake as an eel, and delivers a plate of resistance that makes your mouth water.

Pekmez May Be Called Maple Sirup of Turks

Fully six months before the New England farmer brushes up his sugar camp and begins hanging his pails on the sugar-maple trees, the Turkish villager in the grape-growing province of Gaziantep is producing sugar, for home consumption, by a very similar process, says Herman A. Kreider of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions in Istanbul, Turkey.

Gathering as much as 300 pounds of grapes from a single vine, the growers fill a natural-rock wine press to a depth of 2 feet and sprinkle on this mass of grapes a coating of crushed limestone from the surrounding hills.

While two or three men tramp the press for several hours, the juice flows into a 75-gallon copper kettle which never cools from the beginning to the end of the season.

After the first boiling the juice is dipped out as rapidly as possible into one or more wooden troughs having plugged holes at various heights in the end board. The grosser impurities are here precipitated by the action of the limestone, and at the proper moment the hired "pekmez" specialist, locally spoken of as "The Professor," draws out the upper, and later the second pulp, allowing the cleared liquid to flow back into the original kettle.

During the second boiling the surface impurities are skimmed off and at the proper stage the sirup is ladled out into empty kerosene tins or into small wooden drums especially made for the purpose. Here, after some hours, the sirup sets to the consistency of very thick molasses, which state it is transported and stored.

The market price of pekmez varies according to the abundance of the grape harvest, but the best sirup is usually available at about one-third the price of granulated sugar. A still cheaper quality, used by the producers themselves, is the product of a special pressing of the shells and husks at the end of a "run," this being done by means of an antiquated type of screw press.

The presses and boilers are permanent establishments in the villages and are operated day and night during the grape harvest season, but the kettles are so expensive that they are owned only by city men, who rent them to the village press owners for the season.

A special chewing sweet is prepared by introducing starch in the course of the second boiling. While still soft this sirup is painted in a very thin coat on blankets and left on the hearstap to dry to a quite leathery consistency.

Blissfully ignorant of physical laws and chemical equations, the villager pours into his pekmez a liberal portion of superstitious and sentimental incantations. The itinerant drummer is on tap, night and day during the season to announce to the community that Hadji Baba's run is finished and Hussein Aglia's first kettle is boiling. Equally deplored upon, even if less evident, are the muttered prayers and "Bismillahs" of the village patriarchs, who gather around the steaming kettles to swap yarns of the bumper crops of pekmez history. —Boston Globe.

Savings-Banks Gains
Mutual savings-banks deposits in 18 states increased in 1934 by $103,080,002 to $9,787,000,037, and total assets of these banks gained by $109,407,834 to $11,055,408,000, both deposits and assets being only slightly under record figures for 1932, according to Phillip A. Benson, president of the National Association of Mutual Savings banks.

There also was an addition of $25,700,000 to surplus, bringing that fund to $1,102,029,224, or 12.2 per cent of deposits. New York state's mutual savings banks led the nation in gains and assets, their increase being $109,715,244.

They also led in deposit gains, the increase being $81,245,170. —Literary Digest.

Doctors Know!
... and they use Liquid laxatives
You'd use a liquid, too, if you knew how much better it makes you feel. A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Just ask your own doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular the liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help—and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take regularly and thoroughly without aid. People who have experienced this comfort, never return to any form of help that can't be regulated! The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains renna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit. It relieves a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset.

To relieve your occasional upsets safely and comfortably, try Syrup Pepsin. The druggist has it.

Find President

Safest Bulwark

"Annual reports of corporations often contain bits of philosophy bearing upon economic and political conditions that are worthy of a wider circulation than they receive," remarks the Dayton Herald. (Ind.) "The annual report of Harvy D. Gibson, president of the Manufacturers Trust Co. of New York, is such a document. Mr. Gibson says: 'The administration is showing admirable courage in its attack upon the problems facing it, yet with regard for the reactions of business to its various efforts. The President is the safest bulwark we have against the rising tide of extremism. Our best resolution is to strengthen his hands.' All that Mr. Gibson says here is true. If business men will remember that, they will at least be more temperate in their criticisms of Mr. Roosevelt."

Public Health Column

By Dr. J. R. Kay
Waste

The United States spends $3,535,000,000 annually on curing or trying to cure sickness and only $121,000,000 on preventing it. An ounce of prevention may be worth a pound of cure and so you might say we do not need to spend so much on prevention. But while we go on paying $3,535,000,000 for cure surely it might prove cheaper to buy a little more prevention? We are not now discussing the humane side of the subject. It may be better to have had tuberculosis and recovered than never to have had tuberculosis at all. Most victims would say not. But we are leaving all that on one side. Would it not pay us in cash dividends to invest more money in the prevention of disease?

Sooner or later the victims of tuberculosis are numbered among the unemployable. Then we have to pay for keeping them and their families in food and shelter and for the "costs of medical care." (A few of them may be capitalists and whether we pay for these or not I will not venture to decide. But in any case they are a small minority.)

A certain Miss Ruth Seder has done some cost accounting with actual records of 361 patients in New York and New Jersey. When tuberculosis was diagnosed within six months of the development of symptoms the average cost (including loss of wages) of their illness was $2,750. When there was delay of six months to a year the average cost became $3,125. When more than a year had elapsed between onset of symptoms and diagnosis the cost rose to $3,950. The average cost of the diagnosis was less than $2.50. Compare this with the proved cost of delay.

Is it worth while to spend money on health education, on immunization against disease, on routine examination for detecting illness in the early stages? And while we spend so little on prevention is it fair to suggest that some of the $3,535,000,000 that we spend on curing or trying to cure sickness might be classified as waste?
