Visiting, music and singing occupied the morning hours until a delicious barbecue and picnic dinner was served outdoors. Horse racing, calf and goat roping, bronk riding, wild cow riding and foot races filled the afternoon until supper was served. The evening was spent in dancing with Pat Carg and Woody Payne furnishing the music. At 10 o'clock the crowd dispersed tired but happy and all thanking Mr. and Mrs. Payne for a wonderful 4th.

One of the biggest crowds of the season witnessed the ball game last Sunday at the local diamond between the White Oaks Miners and Fort Stanton, the score was 17 to 5 in favor of the Miners.

The Cobras were to play the same day but the Black Socks failed to come, so they took White Oaks for a five inning unofficial game—the score was 5 to 1 in favor of the Cobras.

Next Sunday 14th the Cobras and the White Oaks Miners will meet here. This game has been looked forward to by baseball fans for a long time and so far as we know it's an even bet—no predictions can be made as to the outcome of this game—but one thing will be assured, the fans will get their money's worth. ## 4th of July Baseball Game

With both teams, Camp Capitan and White Oaks, playing real professional baseball, Camp Capitan won by a close score of 5 to 2, the game being a part of an old-fashioned July 4th. celebration at White Oaks. Pitching by "Red" Ozburn, who allowed only four hits, and double plays featured the game. Four of these doubles were made by White Oaks and one by the Camp Capitan boys.

The game was close throughout and hardly fought, holding at all times the close interest of some 200 spectators.

Slugging stars of the day were Tommy Cook, who got four hits out of five times up and Ross Sergeant, who ran him a close second with three out of four times up.

Preceding the game a big dinner was served in the hills just outside of White Oaks, the menu consisted in part of fried chicken, cake, pies, hot dogs, potato salad, sandwiches and coffee. The dinner was prepared by the ladies of the White Oaks neighborhood, Mesdames Cook and Semple being in charge, and to realize that it was very much appreciated and enjoyed one would have to watch those boys eat. Today only words of praise can be heard of White Oaks and her people.

Nye Committee Points Need of Protecting Defense Funds From Shipbuilders—Congress Divorces Tax-the-Rich Bill From Nuisance Tax.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union

SENATOR NYE of North Dakota and his committee on nominations do not have a very high opinion of American shipbuilders and they feel that strong legislation is needed to keep them from confusing "public defense needs, with their private pocket-books."

Senator Nye

- 1. Prevent "collusion" in bidding for navy construction jobs.
2. Prevent American patents from getting into the hands of foreign powers.
3. Limit profits to 5 per cent of the total cost to the government...

The committee finds, in the matter of collusion, that there was "telepathy" among shipyard officials so that in bidding for many contracts each concern was able to get the contracts it wanted at profits that ran as high as 80 per cent.

Construction of naval vessels is declared to be more costly in private yards than in government yards.

"While the evidence is not all in," the report says, "the indications are that the private yards cost the government from one to two million dollars more per cruiser than the navy yards."

The committee charges big shipbuilders with breaking up the Geneva naval limitation conference in 1927 and immediately launching a price-increase campaign that "made profits of 75 and 20.4 and 30.9 per cent on the cruisers."

LEGISLATIVE administration leaders, for a while in a frenzy of anxiety to hitch the president's tax-the-rich program to the resolution extending the so-called "nuisance" excise taxes, thereby speeding it through the Washington legislative factory in four days, suddenly discontinued any intention of such procedure.

This program is expected to produce some $100,000,000 in new revenue, principally from inheritance and gift taxes, increased taxes on the highest income brackets, and corporation taxes graduated from 16 per cent to 17 1/2 per cent.

The program has been held up as a sweetener to placate the sugar planters of Louisiana's Kingfish. Actually, a wealth of $30,000,000 shared among 120,000,000 Americans would amount to about $2.53 a head—all of which would be applied to a public debt of $20,000,000,000 and a budget of $3,500,000,000, anyway.

The net taxable worth of the 133 estates which paid taxes based on a valuation of $1,000,000 each in 1933 was $284,000,000. If the government had taxed these estates 100 per cent, seizing them entirely, they would have been worth only $2.37 a head to the American population.

YOUTH between sixteen and twenty-five will be served $30,000,000 for a nation-wide job hunt and further training of young men and women to hold jobs after they get them, through President Roosevelt's new "national youth administration."

- 1. Find employment in private industry for unemployed youth.
2. Train and retrain for industrial, technical and professional employment opportunities.
3. Provide for a continuing attendance at high school and college.
4. Provide work-relief projects designed to meet the needs of youth.

The average payment for youth on relief work will be $15 a month; those going to high school would be given $5 a month, and those attending college $15 a month.

The problem of what to do with the youth who finish school, supposedly equipped to make his real start in life, and find what few jobs there are are given to older and married men and women, as well as the youth who are unable to finish school because a poor circumstances, has been one of the most discouraging aspects of the entire depression.

LIKE most Utopians, the new ops in Alaska's Matanuska valley has been reported "nest of discontent"; the disillusionment apparently was manifest even quicker than usual in this case.

Many of them said the project was misrepresented, that the land is poor and that, holding it is not what they were led to believe. Neither are medical service, school facilities, seeds disbursed for planting, the climate and prices for groceries measuring up to advance word-pictures.

GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON, once ambitious to direct the $3,000,000,000 public works program, was named to direct a comparatively small part of the President's new $4,000,000,000 work-relief schedule.

Gen. Johnson

He will get no pay, only $7,500 for a year's expense, plus $3,000 a year for this purpose during most of his time as keeper of the Blue Eagle. His job will end October 1, unless he and the administration agree that it shall continue.

NEW YORK'S Harlem and its kindred negro populations throughout the land resounded in jubilation, with chicken an' ham to every fryin' pan and juniper juice flowing freely, as Joe Louis, the first great brown hope of pugilism since Jack Johnson, established himself as a real threat to the world's heavyweight boxing championship.

Showing ring generalship far beyond his brief professional experience, boxing ability conspicuous by its absence from the heavyweight ranks since the days of Corbett, and a wallop like the kick of a cotton-belt mule, the dusky Detroit cut Primo Carnese, the dusky human skyscraper, for ribbons for five rounds, knocked him down three times in the sixth, and was declared the winner by technical knock-out in a bout at the Yankee stadium.

LABOR policy in a democracy is not a program conceived by a government. It is a program of action which the people who earn their living as wage earners and those who employ them in profit-making enterprises must work out together.

So asserts Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins in her annual report to congress, and she sets forth these six specific duties of the government in this respect:

- 1. To do everything in its power to establish minimum basic standards for labor, below which competition should not be permitted to force standards of health, wages and hours.
2. To further peaceful settlements of controversies and relieve labor of the necessity of resorting to strikes in order to secure equitable conditions and the right to be heard.
3. To encourage such organization and development of wage earners as will give status and stability to labor as a recognized important group of citizens having a contribution to make to economic and political thought and to the cultural life of the community.
4. To encourage such organization and development of wage earners as will give status and stability to labor as a recognized important group of citizens having a contribution to make to economic and political thought and to the cultural life of the community.
5. To arrange that labor play its part in the study and development of any future economic policies.
6. To encourage mutually between labor and employers, in the improvement of production and the development in both groups of a philosophy of self-government in the public interest.

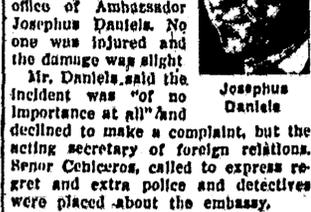

OF SPECIAL interest to the criminal-lawyer who is more criminal than lawyer will be the news of Atty. Gen. Cummings' conviction in Chicago. He was found guilty of having harbored and furnished Homer Van Meter, right-hand man of John Dillinger, during the summer weeks of 1934 before both these public enemies were slain by "G-men."

DESPITE Germany's promise never to engage in unrestricted submarine warfare, France entered an immediate and strong protest to the Reich's bilateral pact with Great Britain, permitting Germany to increase naval tonnage. Capt. Anthony Eden was hurried over to Paris to explain the British action and justify it.

Capt. Eden then went to Rome and Mussolini told him flatly that he sided with France and could not approve the manner in which the Anglo-German accord was reached without consulting Italy and France.

No more success did Capt. Eden have in trying to get Il Duce to submit to a compromise allowing Italy certain concessions in Abyssinia in return for the guarantee that there would be no war with the African monarchy. Mussolini refused to talk about it.

For some reason, that isn't entirely clear an attempt was made to blow up the American embassy in Mexico City. A bomb made of dynamite and percussion caps was hurled from an automobile into the embassy garden where it exploded, tearing a hole in the garden wall and breaking a window in the private office of Ambassador Josephus Daniels.

Josephus Daniels

CONGRESSMAN MARTIN DIES of Texas has before congress a bill the enactment and enforcement of which would evoke cheers from millions of tax-wary citizens, for it provides for the deportation of about 900,000 aliens who are receiving dole or holding jobs that should be held by citizens who are on the relief rolls.

"First, it bars immigration of pioneer immigrants who do not have relatives in this country.

"Second, it makes mandatory deportation of 3,500,000 aliens estimated of illegal entry.

"Third, it gives about 4,000,000 aliens legally in this country 12 months in which to become citizens, or go home.

"Fourth, all aliens must secure Labor department permits to work and permits would be issued only when employers show they can't find United States citizens to do the job.

"Fifth, it provides for gradual reunion of families not likely to become public charges when the economic situation is improved."

CITIZENS everywhere were urged by Atty. Gen. Cummings to assist the federal government in "cracking down" on bucket shops which are swindling the public out of millions of dollars.

Atty. Gen. Cummings took co-operation of both the public and legitimate brokers to put them where they belong—behind the bars.

Most of the victims believe that they have lost their money legitimately, he said, and are afraid of complaining to federal officers because they are in debt after they have been "cleaned."

SECRETARY of the Navy Swanson asked bids from private yards on 12 vessels and was prepared to negotiate for 11 more, launching the navy's 1935-36 construction program within 24 hours after receiving the required funds from congress.

HERE is something to make the men chuckle. At a conference in Atlantic City the National Women's party adopted resolutions advocating equal rights before the law for men and women, equal pay for equal work, equal domestic property, and equal alimony rights, and equal custody in cases of divorce and equal consideration for men in cases of breach of promise.

DEATH of one of the leaders in the Spanish revolution of last October was decreed by the military tribunal at Oviedo. Thirty-six others were sentenced to life imprisonment and seven to twelve years. Fifteen were acquitted for lack of evidence.

Asked his age, the major will point to the distant hills and mumble, "Oh, hundred years, maybe hundred two, maybe more—long time."

Astonishing Founban

Big Task for a Cameroun Hairdresser.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—W. N. Service

FOUNBAN, mandala of Cameroun, Africa, is astonishing. The city stands upon a hill and is surrounded by an elaborate system of ancient, trench fortifications dating from the years of the Fulah raiders. The trees, which have been planted along every street, give it a wooded effect wholly absent among the neighboring grass meadows. One has an immediate impression of order, prosperity, civilization.

Many of the houses of Founban are of sun-dried brick and are roofed with native tiles or grass thatch. The compound fences are neatly constructed. The market, made of brick and tile, is modern in type and perfectly clean. At the center of the town is an imposing three-story structure set in the midst of elaborate gardens.

It is the palace of Njoja, sultan of the Bamoun and overlord of Founban. Everything—order, bricks, and garden—is indigenous. Founban existed when the white man was no more than a myth. Even now outside influences have touched it only slightly.

The sultan and the majority of his people are Mohammedans. In accordance with the curious rule that people of the African deserts and prairies readily adopted Mohammedanism, and that the people of the African forests almost invariably did not, the Bamoun scarcely recall a time when their life was not strongly influenced by the Abrahamic belief.

In the center of the town, facing the sultan's palace, is the mosque, a frame building of strongly Moorish type, even to the vertical stripes of red and white paint. Here, every Friday, the elite of the Bamoun gather.

Subchiefs Are a Proud Lot.

The many n'gi, or subchiefs, of the tribe, some of whom exert far more real power than the sultan himself, come in from their districts, bringing with them a string of dependents. They make a striking picture. Nearly all ride horseback and dress in immense flowing robes covered with bright embroidery. Some swathe their heads in white or blue turbans; others wear the characteristic floppy straw hat of the Fulah cattle herders. All have an air of faintly contemptuous majesty.

They, the rulers, they fondly think, are the pure-blood conquerors from the North, and therefore the superiors of the indigenous peoples with whom they have merged. As a matter of fact, little trace of the Arab strain remains, certainly so far south as Koumban. The Bamoun, except for unusual stature and the occasional appearance of an isolated straight-featured type, are distinctly negroid.

The n'gi, when they come to town, are followed, according to their rank, by greater or less entourages. Several male members of his family usually accompany the n'gi, also mounted. The horses are richly caparisoned in red and green leather. The men carry elaborate spears, with shafts of hardwood and tips of silver or malva brooms. Behind comes an inconspicuous rabble of wives, usually well-laden with produce for sale at the week-end market, and several depressed-looking burros, not quite so heavily laden as the women.

While the ceremony at the mosque is in session the women and burros sit respectfully about outside. When the men come out, Founban stir with unaccustomed activity, an activity which continues until the country people stray away home late the following day.

Markets Are Picturesque.

All sorts of produce are spread out in the market. There are leather boots, scabbards, and decorated harness; superb pieces of Bamoun embroidery; rolls of home-spun cotton cloth; carved wooden household articles of every description. Hardly less picturesque is the food market. First of all, there are thousands of ears of fine Indian corn. It grows everywhere on the plateau. More special delicacies range all the way from roasted, termites' eggs to crocodile steak; things of considerably less interest to a white traveler.

More than a thousand people attend the market. The songs, fights, and smells of vigorous native trading give an impression of thriving, continuing African life such as one scarcely senses among the less developed forest types, particularly among the dreary, half-invaded structures of the jungle of southern Cameroun. The favorable climate, the mixture of types, and, above all, the remoteness of the corner.

ruptive influences of white civilization clearly show their effect.

By Sunday morning the peasants have for the most part gone away, their produce sold or favorably exchanged. The aristocrats, however, remain. At the slightest provocation they will arrange a parade, a sham war, anything to vary the monotony of isolated tribal life.

Even the presence of white strangers, for whom the rules of the plateau have great toleration but very scant respect, will serve for an excuse.

One Sunday noon recently a traveler learned that word went forth that a "play" had been arranged. The eight whites then in Founban, only three of whom resided there permanently, sat with Sultan Njoja in chairs at one end of the town square. The riders, musicians, singers, standard-bearers, and buffoons made ready at the other.

The "play," running true to the type of innumerable similar displays that take place in the larger towns of the high prairie, began with an orderly procession of all the unmounted men. Drums, fifes, horns of many kinds, and stringed instruments came in the first rank, playing warlike refrains. Before them danced, somersaulted, and grimaced several clowns, royal jesters attached to the sultan's court in much the same position held by the court jesters of medieval Europe. Standard-bearers and a rabble of singers brought up the rear.

The end of the square reached, the marchers formed irregular lines at either side, and, spears and standards lifted, shouted greeting to the horsemen who followed.

Charge of the Horsemen.

The square of Founban is narrow and a little more than 200 yards long. It was midafternoon of a golden, tropical summer. The vividly green-tinted thatch that skirted the plaza and the bright red earth peculiar to the Founban district made a perfect setting. The horsemen numbered more than 100, and each was gowned in flowing robes embroidered in every imaginable bright color. All carried either spears or long fintlock rifles lifted menacingly above their heads.

There was a great shout, and from the distance the spurred horses bore down upon the spectators at full gallop. The dust, the flashing spears, the wild cries, and the blazing colors made a thrilling sight.

In another instant the small, helpless group of whites were cold with terror, for the charge neither turned nor abated. There was no time to move.

When less than 6 feet away, each man shouted, stood up in his stirrups, and reined in. Every horse rose up on its hind legs, forefeet kicking, pronged, and the line swept away at the right angle. The cruel Hausa bit, an iron circle that rings the horse's tongue and holds in its upper side a sharp prong that gouges the animal's neck when the reins is pulled, had proved its effectiveness.

Later in the afternoon, the "play" took the form of a series of weird traditional dances performed in masks. These masks, a fine collection of which may be seen in the private museum of Sultan Njoja, are of copper or wood or a combination of the two materials. Many, though deliberately grotesque, show rare sculptural ability. Some are enormous, some ridiculously small; others have the shape of animals' heads—horses, baboons, crocodiles, etc.

Sultan and His Museum.

One of the most unusual things in Founban is the museum of Sultan Njoja. But Njoja, a magnificent, 6-foot, black chieftain, with the smile of a baby, is an unusual man. He is himself, for one thing, the inventor of one of the only two written alphabets known to have been produced in negro Africa—a phonetic alphabet which apparently has nothing in common with any other on the earth.

The museum occupies a long room at the top of the palace. It contains a collection of carving, bronzes, spears, beadwork, brass jewelry, embroideries, and textiles for which the curator of any ethnological museum would give an arm.

Njoja has gathered the things because he admires them and because he takes pride in every tradition of his people. In other words, civilization has not penetrated with its teaching that all things not manufactured in Europe are therefore contemptible. It must be added that the French government resident at Founban, M. Quer, devotedly and charismatically upholds Njoja in his point of view.

SYNOPSIS

The luck that brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the family home in Clipperville, Phil, now twenty-five, has gone into the iron works, Gall to the public library and Edith to the book department of a store. Sam is in school, and seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem. Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" girl, Casey, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Marcheson, son of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gall has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to his sisters' consternation, that they invite Lily Case to the house. Gall goes with Van for a week-end with the Chippis, his uncle and aunt. She is resolved to stay. At a roadside cafe, she meets Ariel, who is riding with Ariel's father. She is at the place, and displays no remorse. Gall again accompanies Van to Los Gatos for a week-end visit. A policeman brings Ariel home, announcing that a child has been killed in an automobile smashup. Ariel was driving one of the cars.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

In the icy grip of horror and fear they all ran together up the kitchen steps, across the dark porch.

Ariel opened the door of the inner passage as the others rushed in from the porch, and stood at bay, facing them. She spoke impatiently, a note of reproach and complaint in her voice.

"Where were you, Gall? I've been hunting—I've been all over everywhere!"

"You're hurt!" Gall whispered, beside her.

"No, I'm not hurt at all, and for heaven's sake don't make such a fuss!" Ariel said quickly.

"Oh, it's you, Fargo?" Dick said to the policeman. "I didn't recognize you out there. Been an accident, eh?"

"Hello, Mr. Stebbins," the policeman said with a sort of deliberate solemnity. "Yes, sir. There's been a bad smash. There was a little girl killed. Mr. Lawrence. They took her to the hospital, but later we heard she—"

The officer coughed respectfully. "She passed out on the way," he finished simply. "Miss Lawrence and the feller that was driving the other car are booked on a charge of manslaughter, Mr. Stebbins. The judge is going to see them in the morning. I presume—"

"I cleared his throat. "I presume for an investigation," he added mildly. "It was a question of bail."

"I see," Dick said. "I'll be right down. I'll take care of everything. I'll be right over."

"Why, take your time, take your time," the officer, departing, said in a faintly protesting note.

"Manslaughter," Phil said slowly, in the dead silence that followed his going. "What happened?" he demanded, sitting down heavily in the old kitchen rocker, his eyes never leaving Ariel's.

"Why, just this," Ariel began, in a voice she tried to make sound easy and natural. "A drunken idiot drove his car out into the middle of the traffic and forced our car over against the other side of the road, and we hit the car this little girl was in. That's all."

"I had no more to do with it than—well, Sam, here! This man—he was drunk—cut in from behind a bus, and came straight at us. They said he was going fifty an hour. He headed right at us and we averted to the right, do you see?—and this child was in the car we hit. It sort of swung round, and all the cars jammed, and every one shouted."

Dick, who had followed the policeman out of the room for a few private words, had returned to the kitchen.

"It looks to me, from what Fargo says, as if it was up to the other fellow," Dick said now, sitting down beside Gall on the end of the table.

"Whose child was it, Dick?"

"Moss. A little girl named Janet Moss. Five years old."

"Five years old. My G—d!"

"I don't know why you all look at me. I agree with you that it's simply terrible!" Ariel said quickly and hotly. "But you don't think I'm—I'm enjoying it!"

"Oh, shut up," Phil commanded her, brushing the little spurt of temper aside, his dark look not brightening.

"But—Ariel wasn't to blame, Phil! It wasn't her fault, Dick. Why—why should they—why should they want to take her to jail?" Gall demanded, turning from one of the men to the other.

"It's what they call a technical charge. Now, let's keep cool, everybody," Dick said, "and find out just where we stand. In the first place, what time was this, Ariel?"

"Ten minutes to six."

"And you and Buddy Ralsch and the Sarchi boy were in the car?"

"In Buddy's roadster."

"Was Dorothy Camp there?"

"No. Not then."

"Where was she?"

"Left you?"

"If you'll give me a chance," Ariel interrupted the interrogations with bitter patience, "I'll try to tell you. But I can't go anywhere if you keep looking as if I'd done all this as a joke."

There was no answer to this. But

Phil said drily, as if thinking aloud, "God knows it's no joke!"

"You weren't driving, Ariel?" Gall asked in a sick tone.

"Yes, I was."

"You don't know how to drive!"

"Oh, yes, I do!"

"Good G—d! Phil whispered under his breath.

"Ariel—not when it happened—you weren't driving then?"

"I say I was, Gall." Ariel's weary, colorless face cracked with an unnatural smile; she looked about the circle scornfully, almost menacingly.

"You all look so funny!" she gasped, shaking, trying to laugh. "You all take—things—so d—n seriously!"

Gall tightened an arm about her shoulders.

"Pull yourself together, Ariel!" she said sharply. "You've gotten us all into horrible trouble, and been partly responsible for a little girl's death, and if you can't take it seriously, why, we can, that's all. What were you doing driving Buddy Ralsch's car? Are you crazy?"

"I've told you what I was doing. We were coming back from Monterey, and Buddy was sleepy, and so was Larry, and I was driving. We were in the middle lane, where you have a perfect right to go on that hill, and the bus was coming up—and I saw it perfectly well, and I knew the line on the right was where it was, and I was driving along, about twenty-five, I guess, when this drunk came lunging out from behind the bus—straight into my face, and of course I had to jerk right—I couldn't jerk left into the bus, and I couldn't stop because of the cars behind me. The car—the car this drunk Miller was driving—came head on, and hit our guards and smashed the headlights. They said it was badly smashed, but the man wasn't hurt, and at first I don't think they thought anyone was hurt. And then they saw this little girl on the grass."

"Why wasn't Buddy driving, Ariel?" Gall asked, very gently, in a silence.

"He was sleepy, I told you. We were all up late last night, dancing. We were over at Monterey. We just went there for dinner, Buddy and Larry and Dorothy and I. And then we stayed, and danced. We were going to come home last night, but it was too late, so we stayed. Buddy felt sort of sick, anyway. He had some oysters or something."

"After Gall went to Los Gatos you said you were going to Santa Cruz to have lunch on somebody's yacht, and stay with Dot over night," Edith put in, anxiously accusing.

"Yes, well, we did; we had lunch on the Howards' yacht, in Santa Cruz. We were coming right back, and then afterward, when we were starting home, we saw the sign at Sequel—'Del Monte 25 miles'—and Larry said he dared us to go down there and have dinner and dance. We started for Del Monte but then we thought that was too smart—we weren't exactly dressed for it—so we went to a place in Monterey, a nice place, too, and we all wandered up and down the street, and bought things and had fun."

She fell silent on the word.

"Go on!" Phil said.

"Well, then we cleaned up for dinner, and dressed—our suitcases were in the car—and we went over to the hotel and had dinner, and fooled around. But then the boys got sort of silly," Ariel explained, scowling, "and we didn't know what to do with them. Then Buddy said that if we'd go over to Del Monte and dance he'd rush us home right after, so we agreed. But at the hotel he disappeared, and I didn't know where he was. Dorothy was dancing with Larry—I think they're engaged, Gall."

The forlorn attempt at diversion fell flat. Gall's face was stern.

"I don't know what I would have done," Ariel went on, "if Van Marcheson hadn't come up. Of course he said that I oughtn't to be there so late, and that you and Edie would be wild, and we went out and sat on the porch waiting for Buddy to show up. Van took me home about half-past one, to the Monterey hotel," Ariel said, "and Dorothy was there."

"And what had happened to Buddy?"

"Well, he'd eaten those oysters, Phil, and he felt sick."

"And then, Ariel?"

"Dorothy and I were so scared we cried, and she was going to telephone her mother. But we thought that wouldn't do. So we locked our door and went to bed. Dorothy and I went to sleep; I don't know when the boys got in; they were on another floor, anyway. We got up early this morning, and walked around Monterey. And we met the boys—they were all shaved and dressed and sober, of course, and they felt so sorry that we sort of forgave them, and we all went to breakfast, and then we were coming straight home. We packed and we got started at about eleven, but we stopped at the Del Monte links to see some of the golf."

"We had some sandwiches at Los Gatos, at about three, and we came on over the Dumbarton bridge, and Buddy kept feeling sicker and sicker, and Larry was half asleep. Finally Dorothy said to stop the car for a minute, and she jumped out and said she was going to take a bus. She said the way Larry was driving we'd have an accident."

"No bus goes by there, anyway. But after a few minutes Dorothy signaled a car with a man and woman in it, and got in—I didn't think she really meant to, and Larry didn't, and I made us pretty mad."

"You were alone with the two boys, then, Ariel?"

"Yes, and Larry kept getting sleepier and sleepier."

"Then what happened?"

"Then Larry asked me, to take the wheel, and said he'd sit right beside me and help me out if I got into a jam. I've had the wheel lots of times. So we changed places. We were only seven miles out, and all I wanted to do—"

Her voice thickened, stopped.

"All I wanted to do was get home," she said. "I drove along—you couldn't go fast in that traffic—just keeping my place in the line, when the car ahead of me jumped forward and got clear, and this crazy drunk lunged up in front of me."

"There was the—most—awful—crashing of tires and wood," she whispered, putting her head back, closing her eyes. "Every one began to shout and scream. They saw the little girl, and a man asked me if my car had hit her, and I said—I said I didn't know. I saw a man pick her up, and her hat sort of dropped back."

"Oh, my G—d!" Edith whispered in the pause.

"My car was jammed against theirs," Ariel said. "But there didn't seem to be much harm done. The police came up and they asked to see my license, and Buddy said that it was at home. But afterward at the station I told them I didn't have any. That was right, wasn't it, Dick?" Ariel asked with an appealing look.

"Well, of course!" Dick answered impatiently.

"They held us on a manslaughter charge," the innocent, hoarse young voice went on. "They wanted me to telephone home, but I wouldn't."

The recital was over. There was silence in the kitchen; no Lawrence could speak.

"I'll go right around," Dick said, glancing at his wrist. "Now, don't take this too hard. It happens all the time. If they can hang it on him that he was drunk and that Ariel had the right of way they'll not hold her."

Gall's heart went to him, the big, homely, gentle, adequate friend and champion of the family, with so passionate a rush that she felt an emotion like a physical pain in her breast.

Ariel came, white and weary and young, and stood before Dick and put her hands on his shoulders.

"Will you get me out, Dick?" she faltered.

"Why, sure I will!" he said, a little gruffly, smiling down at her as a big dog might look down on a puppy.

"I didn't mean to do it!" she whispered, her mouth trembling, her face crinkling into tears. And then in sudden irritation and disgust she exclaimed, "Gall, Gall, I'm going to be sick!"

"I thought so!" Gall sprang across the room. She and Edith had an arm apiece about the convulsed, slender little figure as they rushed it to the familiar sanctuary of the upper rooms.

Ten minutes later Gall went with Dick to the police station.

"I think it would look—better, to have one of you girls along," Dick suggested. Sam was left with Ariel; Edith and Phil went to call at the stricken home of the dead child.

"I'm—I'm terribly sorry about this," Dick presently admitted reluctantly, "I ought to warn you, This Miller, the man who was driving the other car, might ask for a jury trial."

"Oh, Dick, no!" Her voice was weak with terror.

"He might. If he can exonerate himself, or prove that Ariel was—sway partly in the wrong."

Her heart pounded, raced—pounded again. They were getting out of Dick's car now at the City hall.

"Dick, will they find out that she was at Monterey with those boys?"

"They might."

"They shan't. I'll have her lie," Gall said fiercely. "Dick, don't you see that with every one here—every one in Clipperville—she'll be ruined! They'll think she's the sort of girl who runs around to hotels with boys," Gall began, in an agony.

"If the case against Miller is strong enough they may dismiss the charge against Ariel," Dick pursued after a moment. "Shall we—"

he moved his head toward the building—"shall we go in?"

"Just a moment!" Gall had caught at his hands. "Are you sure we can't save her—can't say that Buddy was driving?" she stammered, delaying him.

to an continuation.

"Well, he'd eaten those oysters, Phil, and he felt sick."

"And then, Ariel?"

"Dorothy and I were so scared we cried, and she was going to telephone her mother. But we thought that wouldn't do. So we locked our door and went to bed. ## Wise Treatment Ended Child's Stubborn Fits

By HARRIET LOVEJOY

National Kindergarten Association, 3 West 74th Street, New York.

One morning a mother entered my kindergarten leading a little girl of five by the hand. She was pulling the child along against her will.

"I would like to enter Mary in kindergarten," she said, "I can't do anything with her at home."

"What seems to be the trouble?" I asked.

"She's so stubborn. She won't do anything I want her to."

I enrolled the child, and giving her a chair, said: "You may sit anywhere you like Mary."

As the mother started for the door, she turned to me and said: "When you want Mary to do anything, just ask her to do the opposite."

Mary stood for a while, then picking up her chair proceeded to seat herself by a wall. She sat there all the morning. No one paid any attention to her. When we had games, I asked her if she would like to come and play with us.

"No!" she replied in a spiteful manner.

Mary sat in the same chair every day. She kept it up for a week or so. Then I think she became impressed with the idea that it made no difference to anyone else whether she joined us or not.

One morning when we were having games, I saw that Mary was standing. After a few moments' hesitation she came slowly up to the group. I smiled at her, saying nothing. Soon she added up beside me and stood there watching the game. When we returned to our chairs, she went over to hers and picked it up.

Oh, goodness June—Is he very spoozy? June—Dear me, he's as spoozy as an eight-course dinner.

up. I made a place next to me at the table, saying: "Here's a place for your chair, Mary, if you would like to sit here." Mary came over and sat herself down.

That was the last of Mary's stubbornness at kindergarten.

I related my experience with Mary to her mother, and I think she probably changed her methods, for some time later she informed me: "Mary is so different since she entered kindergarten."

Sun-Time Unreliable

Contrary to general belief, our most accurate clocks do not correspond exactly with the sun, for the truth of the matter is that sun-time is accurate for only about four seconds each year. For the remainder of the 365,242 days of the year, says Pathfinder Magazine, the sun is either ahead of or behind time. Of Sol's greatest variation occurs about the beginning of November when he crosses the meridian about 16 minutes before noon and again around the middle of February when he crosses the meridian about 15 minutes past noon. Consequently, scientists have been forced to set up a mean standard of time by which to regulate our clocks.

LOWER COST PER TON MILE DUE TO FIRESTONE EXTRA CONSTRUCTION FEATURES

QUESTION No. 1—"Will the non-skid tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

ANSWER—The patented construction feature of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread makes it possible for Firestone to use a wider, flatter tread with higher shoulders, that puts more rubber on the road. This, combined with the scientific non-skid design, gives greatest non-skid safety and traction ever known.

QUESTION No. 2—"Is the tire body protected against destructive internal heat, the chief cause of premature tire failure?"

ANSWER—Every cord in Firestone Tires is soaked and saturated in pure, liquid rubber by the patented Gum-Dipping process. This process, not used in any other tire, soaks every cotton cord and insulates every strand, preventing internal friction and heat, giving extra strength, longer life, greater dependability.

QUESTION No. 3—"Will the tread give me long wear at today's higher speeds?"

ANSWER—A new and tougher tread compound developed by Firestone gives you longer wear at lower cost per mile, even at today's higher speeds.

Call on the Firestone Service Store or Firestone Tire Dealer in your community today. Let him tell you about the exclusive construction features of Firestone Truck and Bus Tires which will give you lower operating costs and greater safety.

Wood Without Warp

A new process of treating wood, developed by the Forest Service, is said to be the answer to the age-old demand by craftsmen for a better working material. Wood treated by the new process will not warp or shrink.

While the new process has not yet been applied on a commercial scale, it is believed that this may come soon. In that case an entirely new standard may be developed for high-grade wood products.

Sporting goods such as tennis rackets and golf clubs, says the Forest Service, would be free from the hazards of warping; parquet floors would take on new life, smoothness, and permanent polish; cabinets, panels, and table tops would stay for years in 'new' condition—all the while preserving a natural finish to reveal the beauty of the wood grain.

With You I Am Content

I HAVE been happy All summer through, On the veranda Sitting with you.

We have been nowhere, We've had no money! But we're contented... Isn't it funny?

Winter is coming; No more we'll share The trees' green splendor, The summer air.

But you are near me, And my desire Is to watch with you An open fire;

Is to share with you Home's sacrament! Winter or summer, I am content! Copyright—WNU Service.

A FEW DESSERTS

THERE is nothing that goes to the spot with the ordinary individual like fresh hot ginger bread, right from the oven. Serve it with cream cheese, apple sauce, or topped with whipped cream, and it is always a welcome dessert. The following is an old recipe which is always good:

Hot Water Ginger Bread.

Beat one egg, add one cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of sweet melted fat, one cupful of good dark molasses and three cupfuls of flour with a tablespoonful of ginger. Mix and stir well, then add a cupful of boiling water to which a teaspoonful of soda has been added, stir until smooth, then pour into a good sized dripping pan and bake 40 minutes in a moderate oven. The Bat's Wings

The surface of a bat's wing is furnished with a multitude of nerve-ends of almost incredible delicacy, by which, it is believed, the animal perceives the presence of something unseen, but to be avoided, by the varying of the air caused by its slight and reflexed back. This theory explains the ability of bats to fly and fly about in pitch dark caves, or when experimentally blindfolded in a room containing tangled wires that remain un- touched.

QUESTION BOX

by ED WYNN, The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn: A young man, has been annoying me for some time because I refuse to marry him. Whenever I go he follows me and asks me, time and time again, to marry him. I do not love him and he would never give up and would follow me to the end of the earth. Please tell me how to get rid of him? Sincerely, IVY FOXSEN.

Answer: Let him follow you to the end of the earth and when you get him there push him off.

Dear Mr. Wynn: I met a man yesterday who says he knows another man who was married for 23 years and then shook his wife when she was forty-five years old. What do you think of that? Truly yours, GOODE N. KLEVVOR.

Answer: That's not a bad shake.

Dear Mr. Wynn: I am taking an examination to join the police force. One question puzzled me. What I want to know is this. Suppose I arrest a man and while we are waiting for the patrol wagon to come, a gust of wind comes along and blows his hat down the street, should I let him run after it? Truly yours, T. BISKITTE.

Answer: Of course not. Don't you see if you let the prisoner run after the hat he will keep on running and escape? What you want to do in a case like that is to let the prisoner stand on the corner and you run after the hat.

Dear Mr. Wynn: I have been wearing glasses for about six months, and yesterday, through carelessness, I dropped my glasses and they broke. I must get a new pair. So what I want to know is will I have to be examined all over? Truly yours, I. LIDDE.

Answer: Of course not, only your eyes.

Dear Mr. Wynn: There isn't certain man who pamed our house every day and I notice no matter how hard it rains he never carries an umbrella. How do you account for that? Truly yours, I. C. HIMM.

Answer: That is very easily accounted for. He most likely eats a lot of salt mackerel, and that keeps him dry.

Golden Phantoms

FASCINATING TALKS OF LOST MINES

SPANISH BULLION

ONCE upon a time there were two young prospectors. They had been tramping the New Mexico mountains for some time, and as winter was drawing near they were short-cutting across the ranges toward home. They were somewhere in the rough country which comprises the southwestern corner of the state.

Late one afternoon snow began to fall. "We'll have to stop for the night," George said one of the men to the other. "First likely-looking cave we come to, we'll call it a day."

"Looks like one ahead, there," said the other, and they quickened their steps. The cave proved to be a fat-sized cavern, but they built a fire near its mouth to keep warmth in and wild animals out, and soon they were comfortably frying bacon and boiling coffee.

After supper, relaxed before the fire, they looked about them. At the far end of the cave a second, smaller hole appeared, some 10 feet up the rocky wall. The show had stopped falling, and everything was peaceful. "Figs!" was heard. "And stay hidden, treasure this trip," said the man called George.

"No, and we never will. There isn't any, that's why." "Oh, I don't know. I've heard—listen, Bill—did anyone ever tell you about the lost treasure of the Golden Giant?"

"None; sounds like a fairy tale. I suppose the giant ate up all the—" "No, this Golden Giant is a mine at Pinos Altos, south of here. It has been gophered just under the surface, and from the extent of the workings I'd say that a lot of ore was taken, only that mine, one time and another. It's supposed to have been worked by the Spaniards who lived at Santa Rita. The local legend says that the Spaniards got out a fabulous fortune, whatever that means, and the next thing to do was to take it over to Santa Rita, where the fort was. So they loaded it on burros and set out.

"Santa Rita is about 25 miles southeast of Pinos Altos as the crow flies—but burros don't fly, and they had to go around. The got up above where Hurley now stands, and I suppose they were congratulating themselves that they were on the last lap, when—"

"When the Golden Giant woke up and came after them?" politely inquired Bill.

"No, you dummy! Nothing like that. It was Indians that showed up about then, good old horse-tie Apaches. The priest in charge of the pack-train just had time to get them up on the mesa and hastily turn the pack. Then the Apaches got too near for comfort, and although the Spaniards put up a brave fight, they were all killed."

"I'll bet that right in these very mountains there's treasure cached away, if a person could know where to look."

"That's a big 'if,'" moralized BILL. "What do you say we get some sleep?"

The next morning Bill, looking about him with a practiced eye for traces of ore, noticed again the small cave in the rear of their lodging. It was an ordinary-looking hole, but for some undetermined reason he felt a lively interest in it.

"I'm going to look and see what's in that 'light-cave,'" he told his partner, who was ready to start on.

"New who's got funny ideas about hidden treasure?" jeered George. "Come on; no use climbing up in that hole."

"I'm going to look, anyway," replied Bill. "Here goes!"

He managed to scramble up the rocky wall, and landed safely in the darkness of the little cave. It was hard to see anything; he lit a match and another "Hey, George!" he called, urgently.

George, who had started on, heard the summons and came back. "What do you want?" he demanded, rather crossly.

"Give me a flashlight, and hurry up!"

"What's the matter now?" He unpacked the flashlight and handed it up to Bill, whose hand trembled a little. "What have you got?"

"For answer Bill threw down a dusty, heavy, small oblong that fell with a thud on the floor of the cave; George bent over to pick it up, but he straightened up again and looked at Bill as if he were seeing a ghost.

"G-gold!" he stammered, weakly. "G-gold b-bars!"

"You will talk about Golden Giants, will you?" roared Bill. "Well, here's hidden treasure for you—more than you and I can carry!" He jumped down, went over to the door of the cave and looked out. Then he turned back.

"Or am I going crazy?" he mumbled. No, he was not crazy, though the two beheld like idiots for a while in the excitement of their emotions. Finally they calmed down long enough to plan that they would take the gold home, then return to the spring and hunt for the mine from which it came.

And here "Bill" and "George" pass into the valhalla of legendary heroes. No one knows anything further about them. And whether they ever returned and found the mine remains a secret. Not even a legend remains to explain the source of that hidden treasure.

Clipper Ship, Marvel

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY THE world, with America in the lead, is entering a new and glorious era of transportation. It might be called the Era of Realization of the Fantastic. Not so many years ago—in fact within the memory of children still in school—covers of magazines of the so-called "science" and "invention" type were filled with artistic conceptions of great flying machines, then weird in appearance, which were to tie together the far ends of the earth in the future. These passengers were shown reading newspapers, playing chess or even shuttle-board while their great winged carriers cleaved the clouds far above the vast expanses of ocean.

None of these imaginary notions, typified by the "Mars" stories of Edgar Rice Burroughs, hinted our hopes with high links on other planets where the members of scientifically superior civilizations few about the faces of their respective planets in spectacular hops of thousands of miles at a time.

Such wild literary entertainment we were wont, of year of appearing too silly to our neighbors, to leave in upstairs bedrooms, reserving the space on the library table for Dickens, Thackeray, Edgar A. Guest and the family Bible. And while deep in our hearts we thought it was "swell" reading, we knew that it was really "impossible."

Yet, before the year is out, regular scheduled passenger service will be in effect between the United States and China. Not flying planes, perhaps, but at least flying boats will soon link the newest and most progressive of the great powers with the oldest and most mysterious of nations on another side of the world. Surprising enough, the giant ships of the air look very much like the artistic conceptions which graced the sensational press of a few years back. Most surprising of all, we accept the real thing with less amazement than we did its imaginative forerunner.

Now that the New Era is actually upon us, we accept with little wonder the fact that German engineers are planning the construction of a transatlantic air liner that will carry 1,500 persons. This flying boat will be literally a hotel on wings. It will sacrifice none of the comforts of the great ocean liners, with their sport decks, entertainment facilities, etc.

Ship Cars by Air. There will be staterooms from deck to deck. There will be room for travelers to take their own automobiles across the sea with them. Garages will be provided for these special traveling machinery will lift the cars up into the plane.

The ocean steamship has its supply of life boats to turn loose from the mother ship in case of emergency at sea, and the proposed flying boat will not be devoid in this respect, either. For rooms will be provided to house weather auxiliary planes. These will take off from the surface of the body of the great plane, being speeded on their way over the sea by a powerful catapult which will assure their getting into the air.

This ship may sound a little fantastic to us, but by this time we are used to having fantastic new contraptions accepted as practical facts almost overnight. The German designers promise us that such a flying ship as this will be ready for travel over the ocean in the very near future.

Hardly less spectacular is the American marvel of the skyways, Flying Clipper No. 7, which is now completed. The first ship ever designed specifically for transoceanic service. It will begin service, probably on the route across the Pacific, some time this summer. It is a flying boat, which, as far as proved if to be equal to the bulkiness of the elements and the sea forbidding distance between continents. With its inception into service the period of pure experiment will be over.

None of the comforts of rail travel need be sacrificed aboard the clipper. Soundproofing of all passenger compartments reduces motor noise so that it is no greater than the annoying noise of a pullman car. The passenger deck, 43 feet long, has a ceiling six and one-half feet high, so that even tall men need not stoop in walking.

Thirty passengers and a crew of five can be carried. The spacious lounge and dining room seats 30 at a time. For sleeping, the passenger seats can be converted into 32 single and 16 double berths; in case of a "trouble" there are four double berths available in the lounge.

So far it has not been decided how to apportion the available space to passengers and cargo. This may depend largely upon the popularity of inter-oceanic air travel. For example, it will be possible with this scheme of distribution to carry 1,500 passengers, the crew and a cargo of 2,000 pounds of non-stop flights 3,000 miles.

The clipper has four engines, which 3,200 developed horsepower can climb 1,000 feet a minute with a load of 5,000 pounds. The plane's cruising speed at 12,000 feet is 163 miles an hour, but it can do 180 and more if necessary. It can soar more than four miles high.

Safety Clipper Watchword. Safety has been the watchword of the design of the clipper. If one of the engines should fail, the other three could finish the flight, carrying the 11,000-pound burden. Even if one of them should go dead at the same time, the remaining two would maintain the altitude long enough to allow the captain and his men an opportunity to make ready for any emergency.

The sea holds no terrors for this remarkable ship. It could make a forced landing in a stormy sea with more ease than the gray gull in a fog. It can land or take off in a bay with waves running five feet high. Former clipper ships have been swamped in the water by posthumous suspended from the wings. No. 7 has a supporting device, new to American design, which is called a "spoonson," and might be likened to an additional wing. This sticks out a short distance from each side of the body at water level. It serves to house the fuel tanks, also.

Pontiacs are Accurately To Give Service

Accuracy, precision. These are by-words of the automobile engineer...

It were not for such a high degree of accuracy, motor cars would not stand up or continue to give the service they do at high rates of speed over thousands and thousands of miles.

It is true, no doubt that precision of from one thousandth to one-hundredth of an inch is found in the production of scientific instruments and certain small electrical and physical machinery and appliances. However, know of nothing of the size, massiveness and general use of the motor car where the limits of precision are held so close.

As an example, there are many parts of a Pontiac car that are manufactured to limits that hold within one thousandth of an inch. In the case of wrist pins which fasten the connecting rods to the pistons, there is more pounding than in almost any part of an engine.

Gauges and inspection instruments in the wrist pin department take measure every one of the 2000 to 3,300 pins that are built daily, are calibrated to a twenty-thousandth of an inch accuracy. These gauges and instruments are checked and re-checked in Pontiac's tool and inspection department by a special instrument known as a Zeiss optometer. The Zeiss optometer records measurements accurately to a twenty-thousandth of an inch, that is, it will divide an inch into 50 thousand parts.

Ten-thousandths and twenty-millionths of an inch are almost infinitesimal figures, but a high degree of accuracy such as that makes certain the satisfactory performance of the finished Pontiac engine.

Letter to the News

Camp Capitán, N. M., July 10, 1935.

Dear Editor: We have a problem and wish to enlist your cooperation in its solution.

You've probably heard a fire-side discussion of the question, "What books would you take, knowing you were to be marooned on a desert island?" We are in a position to speak with authority on that subject. Camp Capitán has all the isolation of the proverbial desert island. The answer is, "All the books we could get."

At rare intervals during the past several months certain agencies have sent reading material to the camp. It has been welcomed with open arms and read to the last period. For some unfathomable reason the bulk of all material received has been made up of such literary gems as "Wild West," "True Romances," "True Confessions" and similar tripe of the pulp magazines. Not that they haven't been read in sheer desperation we would welcome the "Rover Boys" or even the Congressional Record.

The point of this letter is an appeal to the residents of Lincoln county for reading material. Almost every family has some box or so of half forgotten books tucked away in the garage, or up in the attic behind the old hair sofa and that red plush davenport that's been there since Uncle Elby passed away.

There is probably an old set of Shakespeare and a dozen or so volumes of English Classics that no one has read since the kids grew up and moved away. Could we persuade your readers to dig these old books out and leave them at your office - or we will call at their homes?

Here is a sporting proposition - if any resident of this community has a collection of books (of any nature) and needs a job of work done, we will trade the labor for

Union High School Loses

Judge Numa C. Frenger, District Attorney Martin A. Threest, and court stenographer Miss Winifred Riley were here last week holding a district court trial in connection with the Union High School which was voted for last April. Judge Meachem was attorney for the plaintiffs, Messrs Floy Skinner and Snell. The High school lost on a technicality in regard to the number of districts which voted.

Five districts petitioned the commissioners to form a Union High School. Later Jicarilla asked to join with the five and was permitted to vote when the election was called. For the reason they were not on the original petition the election was declared illegal.
